As the sun sinks slowly into the west...

the Lone Ranger rides off into the high-rise horizon

—John Holland—

The San Diego County Board of Supervisors has a lot of power here. It decides the fate of millions of dollars a year on everything from parks to highways. But the board is also a reflection of the county's image, and its decisions can affect the way people think about San Diego. The board is made up of five supervisors, each of whom represents a different area of the county. The supervisor from my area is Jack Walsh, who has been on the board since 1990.

In the past, Supervisor Walsh has been known for his tough stance on development. He has fought against big projects and has been a vocal critic of the county's growth. But in recent years, he has become more moderate, and some think he is softening on development.

One of the reasons for this change may be the recent election of Mayor Bob Filner, who is a strong advocate for development. Walsh has also been under pressure from his fellow supervisors, who want the county to grow and attract more businesses.

Walsh has announced that he will not seek re-election in 2012. This has led some to speculate that he may be setting the stage for a possible run for mayor. But Walsh has denied these rumors, saying he has no plans to run for any office.

Despite his change in attitude, Walsh remains a strong voice for the environment and has been a vocal critic of some of the county's biggest projects. He has been a key figure in the fight against the expansion of the San Diego Zoo, and he has also been active in the fight against the proposed development of the former Miramar Marine Base.

Walsh's legacy will be remembered for his strong stance on development and his dedication to the environment. He will be missed by many in the San Diego community.

San Francisco's American Conservatory Theatre

LOCKER ROOM BLAHS

The word is out on San Francisco's new American Conservatory Theatre: It's a real treat. The theatre, designed by world-renowned architect Richard Meier, is a modern masterpiece that has captured the attention of theater-goers far and wide. But what about the locker rooms? Are they as impressive as the theater itself?

The locker rooms at the American Conservatory Theatre are definitely worth a visit. The spacious and modern design provides a comfortable and practical space for performers and staff alike. The showers and changing areas are well-equipped and offer a refreshing break from the rigors of performance. Most importantly, the locker rooms are clean and well-maintained, ensuring a pleasant experience for all users.

In conclusion, the American Conservatory Theatre is a must-see destination for theater lovers. With its stunning architecture and impeccable locker rooms, it's a truly remarkable space for the performing arts.

THE PLAINS AND THE ROCKIES

lost cause press has published, on microfilm, every item we have found of the real frontier. the Wagner camp bibliography prints and microfilms are outstanding.

the true value of wagner's bibliography came out in 1952 after some 25 years of completeness. in 1971 a second edition was published. from 1952 c. l. camp shared the work with mr. wagner and mixed the third edition. included in the bibliography are books, newspapers, magazines, articles, federal documents, some compilations and newspaper news of personal experience written between 1840 and 1890.

the historical material we have assembled here on microfilm is essential to the student of pioneer history.
