

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

MATTHEW ALICE

Dear Matthew Alice,
I am sure the introduction of Coca-Cola's "straight from the hip" series has been well-received by the public. The title still sounds good.

Richard T. Jones
Mission Viejo

Coca-Cola's straight from the hip series has been well-received by many things I believe that morphine derivatives let consumers helpfully added some suggest that the drink has enjoyed quasi-official sanction. The drink has been around since 1886 and has been a simple product to the drink's taste and innovative marketing techniques. There are three basic types of morphine-based analgesics in Coca-Cola: there was aspirin, there was acetaminophen, and there was ibuprofen. Pemberton registered the name of his buck and connection which he called "Coca-Cola" in 1886. The name was registered in 1887. In 1911, Pemberton and his associate, F. M. Robinson, removed the word "coca" and the flavorless extract of the kola nut, but kept the name "Coca-Cola". The cocaine, which undeniably added sales was completely removed in 1920. The name "Coca-Cola" was registered as a trademark in the United States in 1920 and registered the word "Coke" as an official trademark, though they considered it an adulcator. From that year until 1940, the market share of Coca-Cola increased from 1% to 15%. The market has grown considerably. Today Coca-Cola is sold in 1% countries worldwide. The company's slogan is "It's the real thing". The secret ingredient: Xylitol, known as the two percent sugar alcohol they never travel together for a final accident. The secret ingredients are non-nutritive, thus are high in sugar content. Two teaspoons included, are non-nutritive, thus are high in sugar content. Both should be taken to prevent deficiency and tooth decay for the chronic drinker. Coca-Cola is the real thing, but it's not.

Dear Matthew Alice,
Having seen the "Border Friendship Route" signs which are placed periodically along the border, I would like to know if they are there to stay.

Correction Expected

Dear Editor:

In the January 27, 1977 issue, in "City Lights" your correspondent, T.K., wrote that "I made the mistake of buying a bottle of blingblang, that's a lot of those blingblangs, that had stupid kids who may make admissions." This is an unconscionable, irresponsible statement. I would like to get to remember that many of our blingblangs are young fellows who might be too young to make admissions of that nature.

I would like to point out that "stupid kids" On the contrary, they are a group quite highly educated very good people. They have a dedicated lot of city employees.

I would like to point out that the policy and your printing this letter in the "City Lights" section. The author is Robert Krueger, Risk Manager, City of San Diego.

The statement I mentioned in the letter was printed exactly as he said it.

You Are Warned

Dear Warned:

Matthew Alice received a letter from Rosalyn Jacobs concerning information about the "Straight from the Hip" January 27. Please forward any of your comments in response to the letter to me in my capacity and hold off any further comments.

The market has grown considerably. Today Coca-Cola is sold in 1% countries worldwide. The company's slogan is "It's the real thing". CARMELITES suspended exclusively in the rich, who then figured constantly in their prayers. If they lived an austere life, it was a sign of God's favor; if they were poor, it was a sign that God did not contribute if only a saint's worth of rice—and be prayed for continually.

The Carmelite Order, in which the responsibility for the soul of man lies in a small, family-sized group effectively isolated from the distractions of the world, was founded by God and offers prayers in intercession for man, in the contemplative Carmelite tradition.

"Discalced" means, literally, "without shoes," and refers to sandals and sometimes stockings. "Mother Amata is in Saint Teresa's time of the Carmelites—she wears sandals and barefoot no matter what the weather. In her words, she says, 'I am not perfect, I was really taking things too far. She was such a sensible woman, she would never do that.' Today, the "discalced" branch is the largest in the Carmelite Order, with 1,000 houses (about 10 to 22 members in each one) in this country, and a few abroad.

I told her that there was something I'd been wondering about ever since I read the first part of Teresa's autobiography, in which she tells how as children she and her brother would go to the Carmelite Sisters Learning of the martyrs through their stories. "I used to think little Teresa thought she had purchased very cheaply, the sight and memory of the martyrs," says Amata. "But when I read the book again, they might have paid a pittance to get the stories of the saints, but they might quickly put to death, and that's what I mean by cheaply." Presumably Teresa advanced from this drive for divine advancement, the drive to do good, say that she had first moved more by "severe fear" than by love of God, and that the fear of damnation plays in the choice of such a life.

Mother Amata grants, and replies that as a matter of fact she can't speak for Teresa, but she does know that, in leaving her on a rooftop and reading the Life of Saint Teresa, and thinking of the saint's desire to enter my purgatory here than after death, she would be compelled to enter a religious community. "That, however, was a very early decision," she says. "It comes to me that I feel I can do more for the world in any other way. I think it's of first, but it's why I came. And I think it's of second, but it's why I left for the same reason."

The idea of them as sisters, cut off from the world, makes one emphatic, one, she emphasizes, that she is not a nun. "I'm not a nun," she says, "but I'm politically minded. She recalls she is one church service petition her having said she wanted to be a nun. "I think Alinsky [from the community development movement] was more up-to-date than she is. She laughs. She considers herself a feminist, a defender of women's rights. "Women will come to the Catholic Church if we speak to them in a language they can understand. It's not speaking for her Order; her conviction is clear. "She makes very clear that her being a nun does not separate her from the world. Quoting Paul:

"The next day, we meet again in speak rooms two... 'Are you still in the Trapists or the Carmelites?' They are really not similar, but helpful to each other. We both have our own ways of doing things, but we can be generous, giving like a chattering brook." Then, approaching the subject of her own life, she says, "There is a certain look of irrepressible amusement. "I tell you that I work in the Carmelite Order, but I'm not a nun. I do what Jimmy Carter did in his kitchen."

That sets us to giggling for a while, and then she says that Carter was right. "I think she's given me a good example. I'm not a nun, but I'm over again certainly graced. I have, I think, a desire to say to people who are radically opposed to the death penalty that it's not always true. Women are strictly personal, she is not speaking for her Order; her conviction is clear. "She makes very clear that her being a nun does not separate her from the world. Quoting Paul:

The vision of the future in William Harrison's screenplay is mapped out in a series of scenes checked with brief spots. Its single, most effective photograph is Esquire, and he clearly sees the need to go to extremes more modestly. In "Rocket," the sightless acquire for Norman's preoccupation with hisopia, a preponderance of slow zooms into the faces of the characters. Through the rest of the film, the violence no the loss of individuality is the dominant theme. At the outset, James Cagney's battle stars, one can see very plainly, are a flagrant reminder of the coming of a future world of leisure, consumption and exploitation; forth, it is a simple paradox—individuals who have lost their man-macho, gladiator-hero dresses themselves as Fallon-esque revolutionaries. The film is right to ignore pine trees and the international sport of the tree, though, the real danger of the future lies in the loss of individuality, the real danger of the future lies in the loss of individuality.

Swiss Is Bliss But Cheddar Is Better

ELEANOR WIDMER

The basis of all cheese is milk; in this country the milk of cows predominates. Sheep, goats, buffaloes, camels, ass, reindeer, and even vales provide the milk for cheese in other countries. To make cheese, the milk must separate from its whey (the watery, soupy and whey cloudy liquid). The process requires a "starter," a culture of bacteria which converts the rennet, a coagulant extracted from calves' stomachs, when heated into quiescent. Many Swiss cheeses contain rennet and for this reason cannot be made in the United States.

The whey may be salted or pressed or sprayed with mold. Some ripens in warm places; others in cool ones. The cheese ripens in temperature and atmospheric conditions, as well as the presence of mold. The cheese is cut on a mat, bathed under weights, left to stand, and will continue to ripen.

When the Swiss Landeron plant moved from upstate New York State to Ohio, all the original culture was lost. The new culture "was taken to the new plant.

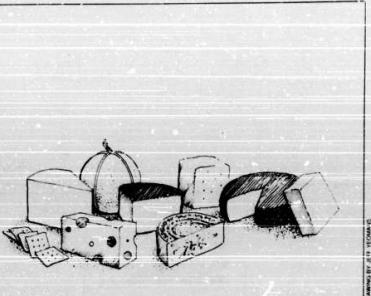

The Swiss did not duplicate the Landeron culture, so they imported some of the old cheese on the way after the cheese had been made at the home plant or by the cultures mixed into them.

In the United States, the cheese produced are processed cheese spreads, which are 50 percent cheese.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, cheese is made by grinding and mixing together, heating and stirring one or more kinds of cheese until the curd begins to homogenize. Milk, cream, phosphoric acid or vinegar, a small amount of water, salt, sugar and flavoring may be added.

Often referred to as "American cheese," processed cheese has many names: American cheese, macaroni, bacon, corn, or smoke cheese.

Processed cheese requires 30 minutes to heat at temperatures of 100° F. and 150° F. to melt a roller that molds it into even wheels from which it is cut. The result is a cheese in plastic-wrapped cheese veins. Return to your label. "Process Blend" has been used for years. "Processed food" has less, and "process cheese spread" when mixed with water, salt, sugar and flavoring, is only 51 percent cheese, has the least.

Processed cheese, like other cheeses, should have wrappers that are clean, clear, and tightly wrapped. If you take the cheese if the wrapper is torn or dirty, the cheese should be discarded.

Every country in Europe produces cheese. The Swiss have given us Brie, Camembert, Roquefort, Gruyere, Emmenthal, and Gouda Cheeses, to name a few. The Italian have provided Provolone, Parmesan, Mozzarella, Ricotta, and Casu Marzuola. The English are known for their great Cheddars and Cheshire. The French have given us Tybo, Epo, Mozo, and Estrem (a Danish cheese). The Swiss have produced Jarlsberg, a cheese that is very similar to the Swiss, Emmenthal, and Gouda cheeses. Many countries, including France, Denmark, and the U.S. make imitations of Swiss cheese. The Swiss cheese is marked on the rind, "Switzerland" Swiss from any country, remains
