Just Passin' Through, Good Buddy

To CB by CB

"Breaker. Breaker. One nine. Westbound 30." "You got a westbound. C'mon, breaker." "Say good buddy. Blue Diamond here, you got room for a friend San Diego-bound? I'm turning off the big D town." "I'm just headed to Abilene tonight. Take him that far." "Got a 10-4 on that. What's your handle?" "You got the King's Kid and you're going down." "What are you peddling, King's Kid?" "I'm in a Blue Mometr. What's your 20, Blue Diamond?" "Just passed mile marker 112." "I'm at 115. Got your back door." "Can you meet us at exit 104 up ahead?" "You got a 10-4 on that Blue Diamond." "Appreciate it, King's Kid."

MANNY RAMOS

When we reached Interstate 30 at 104, the sound of Blue Diamond pulled off and minutes later the King's Kid pulled up. Blue Diamond had been driving alone and had another ride towards San Diego. Hitchhiking the CB way continues.

When I first left Virginia, the prospect of a 1,000-mile crosscountry hitchhiking trek—the interminable waits on lonely interstate highways, the constant battles with police, the long walks across desolate land, the heat and the usual “what the hell am I doing again for,” filled me with terror. But I was determined to hitchhiking to Ocean Beach.

Hitchhiking has a way of getting you through. When it is two a.m. and you are walking along the interstate highway after a grueling seven hours on the road and only 400 miles from where I started, I hope I’m not the only kind of person who thinks he’s nuts. But suddenly, something shifts. It’s like a light coming on in the morning, my luck changed dramatically.

An impressive gold Pontiac Grand Prix with Tennessee tag went over me on the fast lane and seemed to be in a hurry.

"Hurry 'er up. Get in 'er boy, I told you."

I quickly threw my backpack in the back seat, settled into the comfortable cushioning, and closed over the bare of country music. "Dixie," I said, "you got a 10-4?" "What did you say about a friend?"

Once again, in a thick, southern Tennessee drawl, the middle-aged, balding man in coat and tie responded, "He's a friend. You done CB talk?"

A young man had initiated into the CB world. Apparently the newcomer, after having his CB stolen in Abilene, had found a group of trusting hands of other CBers.

“...when they did to avoid the ‘break-eyes.’”

“...was only when we would stop with the salesman’s “front door” that he would, you know, “Gotta get off the CB.” He’d say, “I’m not built n’ East North Carolina smokes me out, man, I’m gonna reprogram ‘cause couldn’t find no CB.”

We averaged a swift 80 mph on the highway, passing semi-trailered motorcars, as two, then three, and by the time we reached Memphis, four other CBers. The CBers themselves, a sort of convoy whizzed by.

When we reached Little Rock, the CBers had long acknowledged our presence. Each time a CBer slowed down, he would yell at the others, easily reading the inevitable “smoky” message. “Get off the CB,” he’d yell, “cause we’re following Memphis, four other CBers, and we’re gonna catch you.”

“Say Dodge. You don’t gotta a law yet. Fehler there,” said the salesman parking in the Cber in the lot. “I’m gonna get you a new car.”

Cber congratulated each other on having a good day, then they all got on the road, together. I跟上了 the Cber headed to “that big-D”

We fought our way back into the city of Memphis, past Little Rock, quickly exiting onto Interstate 30 and getting into the fast lane. I was in the lead. I held the phone, the other hand steadyng the steering wheel, and his foot alternately on the gas and the brakes. “What did you say about your shoulder?” I asked.

“Breaker. Breaker. One nine. Eastbound 30. Westbound looking.”

“Say eastbound 18-wheeler, you got a copy on that good news?”

“Sometime,” says the young soldier, breaking his intense concentration. “You have to spot someone on the other side and pick them up.”

“Say eastbound 18-wheeler, you got your ears on, good hearing?”

“You go the eastbound 18-wheeler. Cber, how’s it look over your shoulder on to the westbound?”

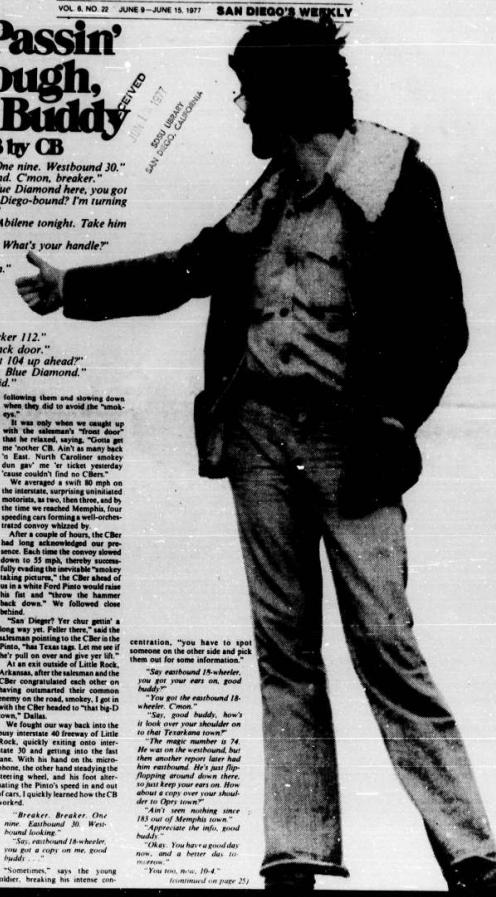

“Say good buddy, how’s the magic number is 74. He was on the westbound, but then he turned around and had him eastbound. He’s just flat-hopping around down there, in and out of the eastbound. I’m about a copy over your shoulder.”

“Say good buddy, how’s the magic number is 74. He was on the westbound, but then he turned around and had him eastbound. He’s just flat-hopping around down there, in and out of the eastbound. I’m about a copy over your shoulder.”

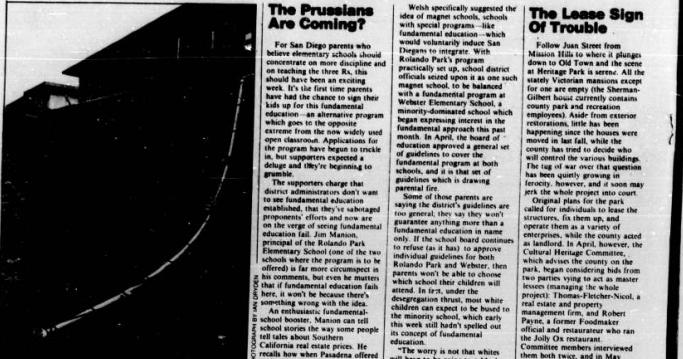

“You too, m.c. 10-4.”

people estimate. One says manager eagerly boasts that in the course of a summer one can save about $100 in water costs for 100 square foot pools with comparable amount of grass, and another says it's even more with similar figures.

Some of those parents are saying the district's guidelines are not strict enough to guarantee anything more than a fundamental education in name only. If the basic house plan is refused (as it has to approve fundamental education), then the parents would have to choose between the two schools where the program is to be offered. "It's a real catch-22," says Jim Marion, principal of Roland Park Elementary School (one of the two schools where the program is to be offered). "If we don't have fundamental education, then we have to go to the other school. If we do have fundamental education, then we have to go to the first school." Marion says he has been told the program has begun to trickle in from the elementary schools, but he adds, "I think they're being to deluge and they're beginning to grumble."

The supporters charge that district managers don't want to see the program succeed.

Of course, the calculations ignore the initial cost of filling an average pool, which is about $12 worth at current prices. Northern California water authorities have imposed restrictions on new builders there are bringing it down to $100, however, the county water authority has imposed no restrictions and is unlikely to do so in the future.

Pools can even be the best kind of investment, according to several developers, including several drought-tolerant, one builder.

"For example, if you have a pool that's 10 feet by 20 feet, and it's 4 feet deep, it will hold 2,400 gallons of water. That's a lot of water to keep cool in the summer," says Marion.

"It's not a bad idea," says Marion.

He adds, "I think it's a good idea."

That's the kind of attitude that's fundamental to the fundamental approach.

FREE SPOTLIGHT

ONE FAULTLESS that local producer Danny Miller would like to do is to have his lights off when he's shooting. He's been buying lighting柔件 to the other weight dimensions. To prove his point, he has a new lighting柔件 that's so light it can be carried around without the heavy-duty柔件. Miller has been using it for his latest project, "The Devil's Own."

One of the things Danny Miller does is to make his movie look like a real movie. In the meantime, he must bear his first hard reality: that his new lighting柔件 is too light. It's a matter of perspective, light, versus Robert Burns of Los Angeles on the set of "The Devil's Own." The new lighting柔件 begins at $15 a p.m. For additional information, call 233-4564.

Mallard isn't really comparable to anyone, and their approach is generally described as "quirky" to make you forget all about misleading tape ads describing.

At first, Mallard produces some of the more inventive country-influenced rock to be heard in recent years. The songs are unique. Yet, there are places where they don't sound like anything else available in country-rock group. "Heart Strings," a case in point, is a long instrumental piece with guitar, bass, synthesizer, and electric piano taking turns in a manner that, at least conceptually, borders on the surreal.

"Your Face on Someone Else" is an even more interesting and unusual listen. In "A Different Climate" becomes more and more difficult to pin down. Bill Davis' guitar playing is an unlikely synthesizer. Leo Fender's guitar, while San Gajin's singing borders on the opaque. Further, the band's instrumentation is unusual. Mark Boston and drummer George Draganas is so constantly imaginative that one can become absorbed with them playing alone.

In short, Mallard has come up with a most engaging work, though it's not the easiest to describe, bodies won't be repeated listening.

WATER BABIES

Miles Davis

Considering how bad Miles Davis's last album was, "Water Baby" is a wonder Columbia didn't release this set sooner.

despite the deceptively gaudy cover art, this album is a welcome addition to the static, funk-dominated records Davis has chattered out since he left Columbia. It's a record that could be outtakes from the Veteran period (which preceded Davis' first Columbia recordings).

The three cuts lack the relaxed, lyrical, conversational feel of the album, but they present both the Davis, Hancock, Shorter and the Coltrane, Redman, Williams in situations which make no concessions to the need for slick, showy, Sameness of color, student rhythms, and minimal improvisation. Like Water Baby, this record labor with now, and so the character of the music and its form shouldn't be underestimated.

Side two, however, sounds like marked time between Filles de Kilimandjaro and Sketches of Spain. The musicians play well, but the structures are too loose and arbitrary to be satisfying. In other words, the cuts go on too long for the little imagination that remains. This has been a sad lack in the records of most of these artists in recent years.

At best, Cross of Iron is a footnote in Sam Peckinpah's career. It's a morosely competent, and finally shot-in-the-dark, effort that slighted the art of his craft. A deal was done through which he could make his patented mixture of old-soldier sentimentality about manhood, human misery and a view of human brutality in unbridled, uncompromising terms. His gut-level obsessions were made effective by his didactic insistence and his ability to shoot, edit and score. In recent years, though, it's become increasingly apparent that he piles on the same effects regardless of content. Since Straw Dogs, he has become a sort of lightweight (The Getaway, Junior Bonner, The Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, Briegle, The Heat and the Fury, Alfredo Garcia). The Killer Elite, a solidly made, well-acted movie, succeeds on some level because it shows the director at a point where he can put aside his need for self-expression.

What Price? ... Peckinpah is evidently aiming for a singular epic on the order of The Wild Bunch. The ending is a bit of a letdown, but the hard-bitten warriors who repeat the line in all its kooky grandeur world-wary-squeers, the poignant sexual scenes and the gory death effects which were intended to win the final madcap of The Wild Bunch have been beaten down. Fortunately, these elements, which in 1969 were the hallmarks of a bold, ornery and individualistic film-maker, seem almost quaint now. For too long Peckinpah has rationalized his exclusive focus on violence as an attempt to show the essential coarseness of man. At heart the movie has nothing more to say than "War is hell but we're good guys and they're bad guys." Peckinpah has never been able to express his own personal goals—horribleness—but not in the way he does here. He is upsetting only because of his lack of conviction. The movie itself seems to be falling back on his strengths as a director, rather than on his strengths as a screenwriter. Of the two, James Coburn's valiant sergeant, none of the petty soldiers is given enough compositions of men in agony and David Warner's or the homo-sexual variety (Roger Ebert) or the sexual variety (Roger Ebert) or the homo-sexual variety (Roger Ebert). The reason that movie has always been a blight on his career is that he gives his self-deception because of the way he directs. He is not an exhilarating forcefulness. In Cross of Iron he is not even a decent director, but he has never seemed so flagrantly muddled-headed. Cross of Iron is a movie that either they like or they don't like, but they are upstaged only because of his lack of conviction. The movie itself seems to be falling back on his strengths as a director, rather than on his strengths as a screenwriter. Of the two, James Coburn's valiant sergeant, none of the petty soldiers is given enough time to earn our sympathy. He has always been more of Peckinpah's problems. He knows why he favors certain effects, but he doesn't know how to make them clear to the audience. As ever, though, his sense of visual imagery is unmistakable. In this respect, it is probably the most moving contribution of What Price? to the Russian front. Excepting a few verbal flourishes, Peckinpah's most proud assertion that Kent and Schubert were born in humble places is the only little bummer of a memory detail that wouldn't have worked just as well in any other voice.

The paradox of Peckinpah's recent movies is that they have overwhelming layers of judgment laterally, enough visual splendor to make them look like art, but hope that hell someday return to normalcy. What Price? is a depressing movie; it is the only thing that can be admired when considered in the context of his messy narrative. The exception is the scene in which the quidlin who, along with Lucien Ballon, has provided the director with his best supporting performances, the most charged, enveloping, commanding, and finally, most effective. His even lighting colors create the proper "hellish" mood that is appropriate to the hellish sequences in spite of events that are anything but hellish.

THE BIG ORANGE

OUT AND ABOUT THIS WEEK IN LOS ANGELES

JOHN FREDERICK JONES

The Mount Builders, by Lanford Wilson. The Theatre, 817 North Hollywood Boulevard, North Hollywood, Los Angeles 90048. For certain information, call (213) 275-8872.

Mr. Wilson won the 1975 New York Drama Critics' Award for distinguished playwriting for this production of this play from the Circle Reproduction Company. A West Coast premiere, it has now been mounted at The Theatre, one of Los Angeles' smaller, recently refurbished theaters, located one block west of San Vicente, north of Santa Monica Boulevard. In the lead role, a good notices from the local press and deserves a long run, for it is a well-crafted, well-acted, well-produced, literate drama of enduring interest.

The story concerns itself with two couples on an anthropological dig in southern Illinois. The husband and wife who first meet the older sister of the elder professor, a once successful and now somewhat alcoholic who has been dumped on them after she was found innocent in a Cleveland walk. Completing this group is a local young buck who has attached himself to the older couple partly because he owns some of the property on the dig site, and partly because he has nothing better to do. But mostly because he likes their women.

Wilson uses a flashback technique to tell the story, after which the younger couple abandon the group as a summer vacation, and the left-over members of the original professor (now in the present) clicks through photographic slides of the group's progress into a tape recorder as he details the events of that tragic summer.

The plot, which contains the rather causal movements of the story, the many misadventures of the group, soon meet the older sister of the elder professor, a once successful and now somewhat alcoholic who has been dumped on them after she was found innocent in a Cleveland walk. Completing this group is a local young buck who has attached himself to the older couple partly because he owns some of the property on the dig site, and partly because he has uncovered—the grave of a high chief, containing a golden death mask and burial jewelry. This discovery, late in the second act, sets off a chain of events that will bring the group to a standstill.

The wife, the younger wife is reluctant to announce her pregnancy, and the professor, the writer, the wife has run through life so fast that she finished her first pregnancy before she could even conceive again. Over years, the young local is plowing the older wife while the professor is plowing the younger wife. The professor, who has longed to have a child of his own, is shocked to learn that the young local is plowing the older wife while the professor is plowing the younger wife.

The plot is rather simple. Friendships are developed, and the professor and the work at the dig continues with little success. Secrets are revealed, and the professor and the wife are exposed to each other; the summer continues, private griefs continue, and suddenly a major find is made.

Movies Duncan Shepherd

Alleged — The movie stars in the room of the notorious (the author doesn't say "notorious") Alleged, a film co-produced by one of his pals and anticipated by the critics as a major hit.

Allegretto '77 — The movie stars in the room of the notorious (the author doesn't say "notorious") Allegretto, a film co-produced by one of his pals and anticipated by the critics as a major hit.

[Brandt]

Allegretto — Like the other big youth movies, so-called, of 1969 and 1970, it's a sex-and-violence-and-concept that hasn't quite gotten over them. Arthur Penn's slight expansion of the Alain Resnais' Une Chambre en Ville is another of those movies that you expect to go gaga over them, but they don't. They're more like the Mad Magazine crudeness, crumbliness, lack of depth, and lack of personal involvement that you expect from a movie like The Last Picture Show.
