KARL KEATING

This is not a manana neighborhood. Its people are tillers of the soil, hard workers even into the ripening of years. Grandpa Cruz worked in the fields until he was well into his eighties, and only a broken leg, occasioned by a fall from a tree he was trimming, stopped him. He may have recovered had his physicians known how to prepare stone-ground tortillas and given him his six-pack a day. It was the sterile hospital environment that brought his years down upon him with a vengeance, and in a few months he was felled by a stroke.

His neighbor two doors down still works and is a couple decades past retirement age. Pleased to point out that he has all his own teeth, even though some are mostly gold, he tends grape vines in his garden and raises several choice bunches yearly. Late afternoons he may be found with a cane in one hand and a hoe in the other, stopping on his property or his neighbors', shifting his weight to the cane, and digging up a recalcitrant weed.

Serafin Hurtado, son-in-law to the late Grandpa Cruz, is in his late sixties and still puts in six days a week in the fields. He would work indefinitely, but his wife Josephine has been coaxing him to retire. He will compromise and lay down his farm tools in a few more years, but he will do so reluctantly. He doesn't want to become an old man. Only old men retire, and there are few old men here, no matter how many their years.

Life has been good along Second Avenue, though admittedly modest. Most of the men are agricultural workers, and their leathered hands evince a strength both of body and of spirit. These are proud people, but they suffer from no braggadocio. Their pride is the pride of a man who has done his job well, knows it, and is content to rest as the sun rests.

California Split

A.W. Coggeshall's decision to purchase the California Theatre more than a year ago was just good business sense. A sturdy old building with a prime downtown location, it made a suitable addition to the elderly millionaire's real estate holdings. But when the Mann Theatre company, which operated the cinema at Fourth and C Streets dropped its lease this year, Coggeshall decided to stick it out. At 75, he took a plunge into the live theater business. He brought in the first of a series of performers this summer, spent $100,000 on renovations, and started negotiations to book the California and San Diego Ballets and the Symphonia into the 2,000-seat auditorium.

"Once you've got something, you don't give up on it halfway," Coggeshall said this past summer by way of emphasizing his commitment to live performances. "Things like this don't scare me a bit."

By last week, though, the script of this feisty businessman-refineer-to-let-aging-building-perish drama had changed considerably. Word had spread that Coggeshall was backpedaling, a rumor he quickly confirmed. "If I was younger, I'd stay with it. But I want to relax." The would-be entrepreneur had little in the way of explanation for his change of heart, though he did take a swipe at booking agent Frank Cadenhead. "I see him when he's at the theater, which isn't too often."

Short of selling the California, which should return a handsome profit on his initial investment, Coggeshall would like to find a producer to assume day-to-day operations and book shows that can enjoy long runs and big audiences. He hoped to interest the city's Convention and Performing Arts bureau in a deal similar to the one it has with the Fox Theatre. But the bureau has its hands full with the Fox, the Civic Theatre, and the Golden Hall stages. Coggeshall has also expressed an interest in meeting with Don Hughes, the South African promoter who brought successful runs of Jacques Brel and the Chinese Circus of Taiwan downtown. Hughes, who's talked with Jacquelyn Little told about staging productions on a regular basis at her Spreckels Theatre, said he'd "like to walk around" Coggeshall's building and hopes the two can talk it over soon.

Sandy Cold Facts

The eyes of America turned toward the Hotel del Coronado this week as the grand old structure basked in the honor of being dedicated a national historical landmark. But suspicion tinged at least a few gazes in the hotel's own backyard. Concerned Citizens for Coronado (CCC), the five-year-old citizens' group which keeps an active watch on development in the crowned city, is questioning recent transactions between the Del and the Coronado City Council, and the group is warning that the city beach located right in front of the hotel may one day be in jeopardy.

The history of that particular stretch of beach is more complicated than that of Gettysburg's battlefield. In the first four decades of this century the beach didn't even exist, then in the 1940s and 1950s sands built up the shore. Questions arose as to who owned the newly created and extremely valuable property, and California law said the answer depended on how it originated: if the sand accreted as a result of natural factors, it belonged to the upland property owner (i.e., the hotel), but if it accreted through human intervention with nature, the land would belong to the public. Finally, a court case in 1961 awarded the beach land in front of Coronado Shores (south of the hotel) to the property owners, and the State Lands Commission later acknowledged that the Hotel del Coronado had similar rights over its beach, even testified that the sand came from deposits which the Army Corps of Engineers had excavated from San Diego Bay and dumped on the Silver Strand in the early 1940s. In 1971 the city of Coronado considered suing the hotel to contest that decision, but in 1972 the two parties finally compromised and agreed that the hotel could claim the land upon which its 200-room annex now sits, while the city would acquire 8.78 acres of beach in front of the hotel.

That 1972 agreement is now bothering the Concerned Citizens. It contained a paragraph saying both parties would "use their best efforts in good faith" to obtain a court decree confirming the transaction, a move which neither party in fact sought. Early this October, however, the hotel asked the Coronado City Council to approve a new parcel map, the first such map to include the chunk of land acquired by the hotel through the 1972 compromise. The council approved it, over the Concerned Citizens' protests that legal titles to the properties involved still aren't clear. Ivalee Nicholls, a CCC member, charges, "By relinquishing their bargaining chip like that, I think the city is endangering its ownership of the beach....There's nothing to make the hotel stick to that agreement."

The hotel's owner, M. Larry Lawrence, practically shakes with indignation when he hears the group's allegations. "From a legal standpoint, these people are nuts," he sputters. He says hotel attorneys were the ones who added the clause about going to court, and they didn't follow it only because it was unnecessary. Lawrence says several other documents (including grant deeds executed at the same time as the compromise) confirm the agreement and make hotel encroachment upon the city's beach impossible. "You have to realize that group is just four or five people who don't represent the community at all," says Lawrence. "It's just a tempest in a teapot."

Though the Concerned Citizens (who claim about 100 members) stick by their guns over the legal question, Nicholls says the group isn't waging a vendetta against the hotel. "We're all sympathetic towards the hotel," she insists. "We want the best for the hotel, but I'm sure it's not getting the best with all this questionable activity."

Out Of Towne

Bill Doyle and his colleagues at the Hahn Property Management Corporation had high expectations for University Towne Centre, the new 800,000-square-foot shopping mall that sits atop the bluffs east of UCSD. So, long before construction began, Doyle was negotiating with UCSD officials and residents of neighboring La Jolla to perfect the physical layout.

Together they came up with an interesting concept. Doyle and his boss, Ernest Hahn, agreed to turn over 180,000 square feet of the center—some of it at a fraction of normal rent, the rest rent free—to a number of nonprofit groups approved by the community and university negotiators. Ideas began to surface: a theater run by the university's drama department, a student co-op, bike rental shops, and health food stores. But when the blueprints for the center moved off the architects' desks and into the on-site trailers of carpenters, roofers, and electricians, the "long saga of University Town Centre," as Doyle calls it, drew to a close. The myriad UCSD projects were abandoned.

Today, as space reservations for the "community" section of the center have been filled and final construction began, not one student-run store has a stake in the center. Doyle says the plans, which were first drawn up with "lower level" staffers, got "bogged down in red tape" as higher echelon officials became involved. "It all just blew up," he explains.

The prospective UCSD tenants weren't the only ones to back off from early negotiations for the subsidized or rent-free space. The Center for Photographic Arts, a four-year-old experimental "museum without walls," had hoped to find a home within Hahn's newest southland development. But center director Larry Urrutia underestimated the cost of constructing a storefront to complete the three-sided building and filling it with movable walls and proper lighting equipment. When the figures came in, Urrutia realized that the estimated $20,000 start-up fee would be prohibitive, especially when the costs of day-to-day operations were tacked on. (Hahn requires the community operations to remain open Monday through Saturday from ten a.m. until nine p.m.) So the center, which is currently trying to raise $5,000 to match a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, continues its search for a suitable building to house its periodic shows.

Another gallery that declined free space in the development is Gallery 8, a nonprofit group organized by eight UCSD faculty wives who staged shows for the benefit of the campus's International Center. Last year the group began to find the lack of on-campus parking a deterrent to the success of their shows and looked to the shopping center as a source of added public exposure. But faced with the financial burden of moving across the freeway and the shifting priorities of its organizers, the gallery closed, at least temporarily, last June.

But Doyle has had no problem finding use for the unoccupied community space. A group of meeting rooms are nearing completion, as are a discotheque, child care center, and health care facility. There is also a huge, multi-tiered ice skating rink which features fourteen mini-restaurants. Two galleries—the Mingei Museum of Folk Arts and the Main Street Gallery—will soon begin construction. In fact, the Mingei, which was homeless before taking the Towne Centre space, stands to profit from the decision of the other organizations to decline Hahn's offer. It has been given 5,700 square feet of rent-free space, several thousand more than originally proposed.

ED MILLICAN

PHOTOGRAPH BY BILL ROBINSON

Some Fund, Eh Kid?

Political candidates usually wait until after the election to survey the results of their campaign efforts. But Ed Millican, who wants to take a seat on the city council representing the Kensington-North Park-East San Diego area, isn't waiting for the final count before launching a postmortem.

Two weeks ago Millican had to confront a very bad situation. His opponent, Bill Lowery, was claiming a campaign bankroll of $45,420 for next Tuesday's city-wide general election. In an interview with Don Harmson of the Union, Millican, who finished a strong second to Lowery in the September primary, admitted that he expected to raise only $4,000, and that raised a few eyebrows. How could a man who had listed among his backers such accomplished fundraisers as the Hotel del Coronado's Larry Lawrence, building contractor Corky McMillin, attorney Paul Peterson, and San Diego Federal Savings vice-president Tom Carter fare so poorly? For Millican the explanation is bad timing and lack of experience. Carter was preoccupied with other projects and spent a part of September at a savings and loan convention in Hawaii. Peterson and McMillin were wrapped up with their own work, and Lawrence, who's done the most to boost Millican's candidacy, has been forced to curtail his fundraising efforts because of medical problems.

The fundraising party designed to fill out Millcan's bank account—a $100-per-couple dinner organized by Lawrence—was a bust. It netted some $3,000 much less than the five-figure sum Millican had hoped for.

In contrast, Lowery, a Republican, has received contributions from John Mabee (Bay Bear Market), Terry Brown (Atlantian Hotels), and GOP loyalist Leon Panma. "Bill has the connections," Millican admits. "He's spent many years planning for this campaign; I haven't." The 32-year-old Democrat also admits that his opponent has successfully crossed party lines in this highly partisan election and pulled support from liberals such as developer Harvey Furgatch. Lowery says simply that he has a broader appeal which translates into more money. He also harbors suspicions that Millican can be purposefully underestimating his contributions in an effort to bolster his image as an underdog. "I'm anxious to see what Ed's treasurer's report shows," adds Lowery.

Now, at forums throughout the city, Millican is emphasizing the difference in campaign spending and telling voters about Lowery's three chief aides four of whom is Brian Walsh, son of former county supervisor Jack Walsh) receiving salaries of up to $150 a week. And he's trying as best he can to make his final days look a little brighter. "I think," he ventured this week, "I have a very good chance of winning."

I Left My Heat In San Francisco

Police Chief Bill Kolender has learned that despite all their faults, San Franciscans can still come out swinging in defense of their city. The chief submitted to a request several weeks back for an interview with Clarence Zuttz, United Press International's local correspondent. The topic: why San Diego and San Francisco, with similar population figures (802,000 versus 650,000) have such disparate crime statistics.

"We were going to put together a tale of two cities," recounts Zuttz, who talked with Kolender while a fellow reporter in San Francisco queried Police Chief Charles Gain on the subject. But Kolender was in a loquacious mood and opened up on his feelings about the city by the bay. Our chief started by pinning the blame for San Francisco's crime rate (8,493 incidents per 100,000 versus our 6,699) on the abundance of "nontraditional lifestyles" and a philosophy that "lets people do their own thing." Kolender also indicted that city's lax enforcement of victimless crimes such as prostitution. "They have not had a squared-away police department," summed up the chief.

Kolender's counterpart, Police Chief Gain, came to his city's rescue, praising it as a "cosmopolitan city" enriched in ways San Diegans could never appreciate. Even Mayor George Moscone's press secretary got in on the act, claiming that Mayor Wilson was "using" Kolender to push his campaign for governor.

The little feud almost escalated to the airwaves when S.F.'s ABC television affiliate called down for a tape of Kolender to air on a nightly news show. But program directors changed their minds. Kolender also tried to calm Chief Gain by calling him with a message that there was nothing personal in the attack. "He told me not to worry about it," reports Kolender. "He figured it was just a media thing that would be over in a couple of days."

ONE WORLD FAMILY

Is That Anything Like The Waltons?

Remember the good old hippie communes of the sixties? Well, imagine that one had endured. You should envision its members continuing to share group sex and all worldly goods, but also getting haircuts, throwing away their beads and headbands, moving to a place in the suburbs, [illegible] what's happened with the One World Family, a northern California commune which has just established a branch in San Diego County.

The family started out unconventionally enough. It began with an artist and billboard painter in Long Beach named Allen Noonen, who began organizing communes in 1947 after extraterrestrial beings told him to do so. Noonen's early efforts didn't pan out, but he moved to the Haight-Ashbury section in San Francisco in 1967, and there his soapbox, bull horn, and convoluted ideas instantly attracted followers. That group flourished. Members operated a thriving natural foods store and by the time the group moved to Berkeley it included about 150 individuals. Two years ago members tired of constant "street hassles" and rent increases, so they moved to Sacramento and then to Stockton. About fifty persons still live with the family, and ten of them just settled down in Spring Valley.

That household, which includes seven adults and three children (a fourth is on the way), is renting a large rambling property up on a hill. Members like Tama, a seven-year family veteran, say they chose San Diego because "it's a wide-open area. San Diego already has a tremendous New Age consciousness. There's a high population of natural foods people here, and I've met with very little resistance at our ideas. For example, when we refer to something like the Galactic Command, people don't even flinch."

Like others in the San Diego branch, Tama dresses casually but neatly, her skin sparkles and her lean body reflects the vegetarian diet. Sitting together in their spacious living room, members look like they might be a classic singing group. Which is why they might start another venture in natural foods but all say they'll be available for lectures and educational programs.

"We're a group of people which has been living a communal experience for ten years," Tama says with excitement. "We can tell people 'Here's the manual. Here's the way to do it.' We can tell them how to work a commune, how to convert to natural foods. We don't want to lay our ways on people who don't want to hear it, but we're ready and willing to talk to people who are receptive."

Group members say a critical factor in commune success is a strongly felt, shared philosophical vision. In the One World Family, that vision is an elaborately articulated condemnation of the profit motive. They believe sharing brings abundance; the world ideal would be "an economy of giving and receiving," rather than buying and selling. Explained one member, "We are true Christians and true communists." Since they refuse to work for pay ("We, being spiritual people, could no sooner go out and get a job than we could cut our right hand off"), the family survives on sales of its goods and publications, on donations from friends, and on "government grants" (welfare and social security payments).

Although on rare occasions over the years members have been asked to leave the group, the family says that the shared philosophy tends to avert domestic squabbles. The family also has developed a thorough system designed to more mundane matters such as apportioning chores. Sex, however, has been a greater source of friction. Though members reject traditional monogamy, jealousy seems to be a stubborn problem. One solution has been the development of a discussion group. Another has been an odd ritual, a fleshy variation on musical chairs in which participants engage in something known as "cross catalyzation." They talk about that aspect of their lives with quiet respect. "That's just one little facet of our relationship with one another, like eating dinner together."

Members speak with the same quiet confidence about their superficial change in lifestyle two years ago. "You think of the traditional commune as being long-haired, free sex, and pot-smoking. But we're dealing with the masses, and the people we really want to reach are leaders and politicians, and so on," says Chris, an eight-year commune member. "We wanted to change our image. We're a public service group and we wanted to reach out to a number of sectors of the community."

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

MATTHEW ALICE

Dear Matthew Alice:
Have you ever noticed that TV commercials are louder than their bracketing programs? Surely there's a law against submitting viewers to that without their awareness and consent.
Carol Baker
North Park

Yes there is a federal law that says a broadcasting station cannot air commercials louder than regular programs. Most stations have automatic controls that let no audio program play louder than another. It happens, though, that commercials do sound louder than regular programs because commercials lack background noise and other elements that detract from the spoken message. A regular program or movie usually has sound effects or has two people talking--any number of activities to entertain the viewer. The commercial, though designed to be just as entertaining, concentrates more on giving a carefully worded message. Often it's a single voice talking to you--directly to you the viewer, and not to a screen character. The absence of interferences may seem to make the commercial louder than the program.

Your ear is the best judge of what's loud and what is not, and if you feel the station is trying to please advertisers at the expense of your nerves, call the Federal Communications Commission at 293-5640, and be sure to have noted the time and date that the commercial was broadcast.

Dear Matthew Alice:
I heard that the ancient method of classifying people according to their body fluids (sanguine, melancholic, etc.) was actually proven by research. Is this true?
Marne Threlkeld
Hillcrest

No. No modern theory says that a person with excess blood in his body has an optimistic or sanguine personality. It is true, however, that a modern system corresponds with the ancient one in sorting people into four personality groups. The old method says people are either sanguine, unexcitable, short-tempered, or melancholy, depending on the body's predominance of blood, phlegm, yellow bile, or black bile. In this century, the British psychologist H.J. Eysenck said after extensive research that personalities can be measured along two yardsticks: introverted-extroverted, and stable-unstable. Combining these descriptions, a stable-extrovert turns out to be somebody with a sanguine personality. A stable-introvert can be said to be phlegmatic or unexcitable. An unstable-extrovert is short-tempered, and an unstable-introvert is melancholy.

What? You say you don't fit in any of these? You're unique? No simplistic pigeon-holing for you? There's a category, of course, to fit: stubborn-individualist.

Dear Matthew Alice:
I was walking along the other night when I passed a new Fiat that was parked, locked, but sounded as though its air conditioning was running. In the middle of the night? Is the car crazy or am I?
Ray Yarbrough
Hillcrest

The new Fiats and TR-Triumphs have an auxiliary cooling system that runs when the engine is hot, regardless of whether the car is moving. That noise you heard was the system's electric motor; it uses battery power when the car is parked. Someone must have parked the car only a few minutes before you walked by it.

By the way, here in New York, the WNBC attempt at "responsible radio" seems to be coming out as "We can be more boring than the next guy, but less irritating" (still a long way to go before any entertainment becomes part of a format). Their Hoe-Down album also lacks a theme the way Homegrown did. They also aren't appealing for truly amateur efforts, which are sometimes totally refreshing in their non-professional approach. I am writing to comment on Paul Krueger's story, "Hearing Raids" ("Press Passes," October 20). I compliment him on what may be a journalistic first.

He's Positive Duncan's Negative

I enjoy reading the Reader every week, but there is one thing I'd like to clear up.

Recently, I stopped reading the movies column. I stopped because I was offended by the way Duncan Shepherd reported on movies. Every time I go see a movie and enjoy it thoroughly I look at Shepherd's movie column. His views are always negative. Hardly ever do I read a positive comment.

Perhaps Shepherd has seen so many movies that they have gone to his head. Maybe he's terribly bored with movies, thus he is only looking at the bad parts. Which of these reasons I don't know, but I'm sick and tired of reading negative comments about good movies.

Off the Cuff

QUESTION What would you like your epitaph to be?

Jamie Voss
Social Worker
University City

She saw things as they were, or at least she always tried to. She tried to be honest and clear about what she saw and was not deceived. This is not at any defensive kind of thinking, but what I mean is that I was always able to see clearly what I was doing or what was happening and really penetrated to the actual facts or what the actual problems really were. I guess this is saying that I had a good perception. Yes, that I was a perceptive person.

Wendelin Vallean

There's only one word I can think of: "rejoice." I feel joyful to be alive now and believe that death will also be joyous because it's the natural way. I would want my friends and family to rejoice for themselves in being alive and rejoice for me in the next stage of the cycle: being dead.

Michael Brooks
Mechanical Assembler

That I was a very kind human being who tried to understand people and tried to help and encourage friendships and finally that I was always a very equal human being. This means that I treated everybody fairly and being equally fair to all I'm sure I'd probably always be known as a fair person. And that I was always willing to listen--a good listener even though now I know I talk a little too much at times. That's all I could expect it to be.

Ann Fowler
Office Supervisor
El Cajon

I did everything I always wanted to do in life, and that I was successful. All I wanted to do means I always set a goal and completed it or as many goals as it took. One example of the many goals is I was a good mother and I gave all to my children that I wanted to give them or that they needed. I'm not necessarily thinking of just the material things, and although it's a part, it's not the main part.

Mike Shields
Student

I've scratched death from my appointment book as an obsolete concept. Theoretically, in molecular genetics it's possible to alter gene structure to live indefinitely, so I don't think in terms of dying anymore. If there was an accident I could live in the sense of surviving cells engineered in a way to be restored. I see death on television, but I don't see dying anymore, really. So no need for an epitaph for me.

REID CALCOTT

Chain Gang

For fifteen years Harold Taxel worked for the Texas-based Harte-Hanks newspaper chain. In 1973 he was sent west to manage the SUN group, a family of six papers that spans San Diego County from Coronado to El Cajon. Last week Taxel, who doubled as chief executive for SUN group and as publisher of the Pacific Beach Sentinel, was unceremoniously dumped from his post. Speaking from his La Jolla home, the former president told reporters that the decision to step down was "mutual." But it came without much warning, and Taxel was left without any specific plans for the future.

Several sources within the company said the management switch was prompted by concerns that the SUN group's revenues were not rising fast enough, an assumption that is hard to counter given the corporation's parsimonious reputation. In five years Harte-Hanks has grown from a privately held, family-run operation that controlled twenty-one newspapers and a single television station to a communications combine that oversees the workings of sixty-eight papers and three TV stations. Last year Harte-Hanks realized profits of more than $10 million on revenues of $116 million.

Locally, other publishers say the SUN group has held its own in the market and has convinced some major retail stores to advertise in all six papers. But one former employee says the papers have been hurt in the general shift to television advertising. The weakest link in the six-paper chain appears to be the Life News, which serves the East County. "The Life News may have all the grocery and chain stores," says Paul Clark of the competing Heartland News. "But we have the little advertisers, and they only stay if they get results." Another East County newspaper man who's watched the Life News since its inception says the publication has never really gotten off the ground. "It's easy to see that their ad linerage is down."

The concerns of the parent company for the direction of the SUN group are also evident in the choice of a successor to Taxel. He is Reid Calcott, a confident 39-year-old whose publishing experience is admittedly "very limited." Calcott, who received advanced degrees in economic engineering and business at Stanford before going to work for Pepsi Cola, arrived in town last Wednesday and announced that he'll be concentrating on the business end of things while overall editorial control of the papers remains in the hands of Sentinel editor Gilbert Moore. Calcott also predictably announced that there would be "no changes except where they are obviously needed."

How Many Writs Make A Wrong?

Last week an attorney for one of the defendants in the Hell's Angels-Mongols motorcycle cases handed some 30 local newspapers, television, and radio stations subpoenas requesting copies of all the information on the case printed, televised, or gathered by their staffs. The attorney, Fred Link, didn't get too far with his request. The media-backed at his blanket demand that they turn over everything "published or unpublished, written, taken, recorded, or preserved since August 1, 1977." But this week Link will be back with a scaled-down request for specific information he says is necessary to properly defend his client.

The city's newspapers and radio stations receive such subpoenas infrequently and aren't too upset with the request. The Copley Press plans to stick to its policy of supplying only copies of the printed articles and pictures, and will ignore any requests for reporters' notebooks or other unpublished materials. Joe Gillespie, news director at KSDO radio, grumbled about the "expense and time" involved in digging up the sought-after tapes, but conceded that such requests from defense attorneys are "quite normal in the industry."

Over at the city's three major television stations, though, tempers are flaring. Bill Peterson, Channel 39's news director, says the court orders for information flow through his office on a weekly basis and he wishes the county's superior court judges would be a bit more discriminating in the issuance of subpoenas. "The California courts hand them out like popcorn," he laments. "I think they have a mimeograph machine in the basement going nonstop."

Peterson feels the attorneys who use subpoenas to gather such information are asking the newsstaffs to do their research for them, and he promises that if it continues, he'll make a test case of the issue by refusing outright to comply with the request. The news director's concerns led him to talk with his colleagues at Channels 8 and 10 and organize a meeting early this summer with attorney C. David Herring, who heads the County Bar Association's Beach Bar-Media committee.

Herring and the three news directors kicked around several ideas aimed at taking the burden off the stations, but ended their session without reaching an agreement. Herring said the idea of having the station charge for collecting the needed information was dropped because a uniform fee schedule couldn't be worked out. He was also worried that it might impair the ability of indigent defendants to gain access to the materials, which are used by attorneys in requests for a change of venue.

Herring also rejected Peterson's suggestion that the bar association pull together enough money to buy a radio recorder and three television sets that would allow lawyers to build their own library.

Though he applauded Peterson's zealousness, Herring said the news director took a "moralistic" bi-ases and said it would be fruitless for television stations to attempt a test case. "The bottom line on this," Herring said confidently, "is that we'd win."

CHINESE MASTERS

JONATHAN SAVILLE

Anyone who saw the Chinese Circus Revue of Taiwan at the Spreckels last week will not soon forget this remarkable theatrical event. Another baby of fecund local impresario Don Hughes (who also brought us the Broadway Dinner Theater's excellent Jacques Brel revue), the Chinese Circus is one of those rare companies so perfect in their understanding of what they are doing that they themselves define the nature of the art they practice.

The Chinese have been enjoying the antics of expert acrobats for at least 2,000 years, so that the brilliance of this Taiwanese group comes in part from the august tradition that lies behind most of their acts. Diving through flaming hoops lined with daggers is something Chinese acrobats have been doing since at least the Han Dynasty (206 B.C. to 220 A.D.). Consequently, when the lithe young men at the Spreckels dazzled us with this feat, they were giving evidence not only of the rigorous training each of them must have undergone but also of a meticulously polished technique reaching back into antiquity. Each demonstration of courage and control was something utterly unique, for never before had that particular acrobat dived through that particular hoop on that particular stage: the absolute presence of the act, its existence in nothing but the present fleeting moment, was one of the things that made us hold our breath and clutch at our neighbor's elbows in fear and excitement. But at the same time, there was an added excitement in the realization that the skill and danger of what we were witnessing just then were the latest manifestations of an age-long series of moments in which the coordinated body and the agile mind had voluntarily courted cruel pain and disfigurement. The total present and the total past seemed to be indissolubly joined—a characteristic of all the traditional arts of that extremely tradition-minded culture.

The Chinese, of course, are not the only people to have developed a refined tradition of spectacular acrobatics. There is scarcely any culture, present or past, without its jugglers and tumblers, and if there is something very special about a whole crew of Chinese men and women balancing one on top of the other as though there were no such thing as gravity, this is only an exceptionally complicated example of the human pyramids that acrobats have built in all countries and in all times. It is therefore surely worth asking why our species gets so much pleasure from watching an activity so remote from our actual lives. What makes the acrobat a perpetual and universal hero?

For one thing, we take a great deal of delight in the fact that what the acrobat does is so essentially useless. An attractive young lady stands on her head on top of the head of another attractive young lady, upright; the bottom one of the pair then ascends a vertical ladder, with her upside-down human burden smiling cheerfully at the audience; and when they have reached the top of the ladder, the two of them extend all their available limbs and roll hoops on them. It is inconceivable that a circumstance would ever arise in real life where it would be necessary to do any of this. When ordinary people use their various skills, they do so in the service of some goal: the cook will produce a meal; the tree-surgeon will prune the tree; and the banker, juggling figures, will come up with a profit. The skill is attached to the result, tied down to it, made subservient to it. What a wonderful sensation of release it is to see someone doing something which requires an almost superhuman skill and which at the same time has absolutely no practical purpose—such as climbing to the top of a ladder with a lady balanced upside-down on one's head. The skill is liberated from any purpose; it is lifted out of the ordinary world of purposeful acts; it becomes something free and beautiful, to be valued for its own sake, a pure manifestation of the play instinct; it shows us, unalloyed, one of the prime components of all art.

CHANG YU CHING

If acrobatics constitutes one of the rare, unsullied examples of the totally purposeless in art, it is also distinguished by the fact that it does not express any emotions. However playful the other theatrical arts may be, they virtually always are to be taken as expressing some human need or gratification. The supreme technique of the ballet dancer is attached irrevocably to the tensions and relaxations of the music, to the longing of the Prince for the Swan Maiden, to the grief of the Forest Nymph at her human lover's betrayal. As in our daily lives, the movement and the gesture are masks for the emotional life within. Not so with Mr. Chang Yu Ching, rolling a frightfully fragile-looking Chinese vase around on his neck and shoulders and getting it to perch tremblingly on top of his head. These are movements and gestures that relate only to the thing being done; they do not communicate a complex world of feelings rolling around in the gentleman's heart; they are not a language trying to tell us something. Hence, they too are freed from the concerns of our real lives. The acrobat detaches us from the inner world of desires, conflicts, hopes for the future, regrets for the past. He shows us how soaringly liberated we might feel if our only thought were for the present moment, and our only concern the problem of keeping a precariously balanced vase from smashing to pieces.

But of course that concern is a real one, even if the activity itself has nothing to do with normal purposeful human activity. The two emotions the acrobatic performance evokes are fear of falling, of dropping, of breaking—and the sense of mastery we feel when we discover we can succeed at something so frighteningly difficult. When the daring Mr. Hai Ken Tsai mounted a tower composed of half a dozen chairs perched on four bottles, and then stood on his head, waving his feet among the electric wires at the very top of the Spreckel's proscenium, he was not only astonishing us with his bravery and his balance; he was also giving us the chance to re-experience some of the most exciting moments of our own lives. How fearful the world was when we were little babies—all those breakable objects, all those opportunities to fall down, all those immense challenges to our undeveloped motor skills. And what a heady sense of triumph we felt when we first grasped, or stood, or walked, or climbed a staircase. Having mastered all those skills, we now think nothing of them. We hold objects without breaking them, we walk without falling, we go up ladders to fix the roof, and there is no fear left in any of these actions. But there is no triumph either; in overcoming the fears of childhood, we have also lost the joy of achievement in negotiating the physical hazards of the world. To bring that joy back again, we have to devise feats as difficult for us now as simply walking on two feet was for us at the age of nine months: hence our penchant for such useless and wonderful activities as mountain climbing, surf-riding, hang-gliding, and racquetball.

The Chinese Circus of Taiwan enabled us to reach back to that infinitely exciting period of our childhood in a less strenuous way. Without leaving our seats, we were up there with Hai Ken Tsai, looking down that immense distance to the stage, feeling the rickety tower of chairs creak and sway beneath us, fearing for our lives, calling up all our courage, staying up there in spite of everything, mastering gravity, mastering our bodies, mastering our world. A one-year-old, tottering his way up a two-step stepladder could not have been more scared, or more triumphant. An experience well worth having, and another of the many reasons this marvelous visiting troupe of acrobats deserved the ecstatic applause the audience at the Spreckels accorded them. □

Special Events

ETHNIC FESTIVALS TEND TO ACCOMPLISH two seemingly contradictory things: they reinforce an ethnic community's sense of identity and separateness from other groups, and they offer the larger community an opportunity to gain knowledge of certain ethno-cultural characteristics, thereby aiding assimilation. An example of the latter is the fact that the annual Greek Festival in San Diego, to be held this weekend in Mission Valley, has become a popular attraction over the past several years.

As always, this year's festival will be highlighted by the variety of Greek foods available, including such delicacies as dolmathes, which are grape leaves stuffed with rice and meat, and spanakopitta, a spinach and cheese pastry baked with filo, a very thin Greek dough. Other goodies that have gained favor with non-Greeks in recent years are baklava, a triangular pastry filled with honey, nuts, and sweet butter, Greek cheeses and sausages, nuts, and dried fruits.

Entertainment will be provided by the Bouzoukia Players, who will perform traditional Greek music, and three dance groups—the Aegean, Panhellenic, and Ionian Dancers. Audience participation will be encouraged in each of these presentations.

The Eighth Annual Greek Festival will take place on Saturday, November 5, from 10 a.m. to midnight, and on Sunday, November 6, from noon to midnight, at the Scottish Rite Temple, 1895 Camino del Rio South, in Mission Valley. For more information, call 565-8399.

LOCAL GRAPHICS, San Diego's printing/graphic arts industry will salute its heritage at a benefit variety show, featuring 12 professional acts such as pantomime, musical comedy, banjo music, country and Western singing, and magic, and a collection that includes examples of the city's first lithography, four-color printing, photography, and hand-set type. Saturday, November 5, 8 p.m., Casa del Prado theatre, Balboa Park. 278-3830.

"WOMEN'S WILDERNESS WEEKEND," the Boojum Institute will offer a weekend in the wilderness for women with common interests in the outdoors, and who want to spend some time with other women. Friday, November 4, through Sunday, November 6, Sierra Juarez mountains of Baja California (the group will leave San Diego Friday at 3 p.m., and return Sunday by 10 p.m.). 272-3331.

ROCK SALE, amethyst nuggets, petrified wood from Arizona, garnet and jade necklaces, baby spheres, Vanadinite variety endlichite from Arizona, tumbled pieces, slabs of cacoxenite, and geodes from Wiley Wells will be included in a sale of rocks arranged by Curator of Minerals, Josephine Scripps, Sunday, November 6, 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Natural History Museum, Balboa Park. 232-3821.

COMBO CONFAB, a gourmet dinner and casino games will precede the 1977 Gala Auction, sponsored by COMBO, the Combined Arts and Education Council of San Diego County, which will offer a floor show-style presentation of auction items for the benefit of the 18 cultural organizations that are members of COMBO. Saturday, November 5, 5 p.m., Vacation Village Convention Center, Mission Bay Park. 231-6979.

BAZAAR BIRTHDAY, the Bazaar del Mundo's sixth birthday will be celebrated with a three-day Mexican fiesta, at which an authentic Mexican marketplace in the Bazaar's courtyard will be filled with imported serapes, rebozos, huipils, dresses, Mexican hot chocolate, coffee, tortillas, fresh flowers, toys, entertainment by mariachi bands and Mexican dancers and demonstrations by Mexican potters and weavers. Friday, November 4, through Sunday, November 6, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Bazaar del Mundo, Old Town. 296-3161.

DOG SHOW, more than 100 breeds recognized by the American Kennel Club will be judged in conformation and obedience plus junior showmanship in a show ring, when the Del Sur Kennel Club All-breed Dog Show and Obedience Trial takes place. Saturday, November 5, 8 p.m. to 6 p.m., Wells Park, El Cajon. 299-6690.

MASSING OF THE COLORS, a commemorative service for those who have died in United States' wars will be held at the 23rd Annual Massing of the Colors. Sunday, November 6, 1:30 p.m., Spreckels Organ Pavilion, Balboa Park. 475-3613.

FISH SHOW, the San Diego Tropical Fish Aquarium and Koi Pond Show will be held Saturday, November 5, 1 to 7 p.m., and Sunday, November 6, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., Majorca Room 101 and Patio A, Casa del Prado, Balboa Park. 232-5762 or 234-8901.

ICE CAPADES, the popular and long-running ice variety show will be in San Diego for performances Tuesday, November 8, through Friday, November 11, 8 p.m.; Saturday, November 12, 2 and 8 p.m.; and Sunday, November 13, 2 and 6 p.m., Sports Arena, 3500 Sports Arena Boulevard. 224-4176.

"THE HAPPY HAVEN," the controversial comic farce by John Arden, which blends comedy, poetry, and pathos to make a comment on the treatment of the elderly by our society, directed by Sam Woodhouse, will be presented through November 27, Thursdays through Sundays, 8 p.m., San Diego Repertory Theatre, 1620 Sixth Avenue. 231-3585.

Dance

SOVIET DANCERS, the Soviet Georgian Dancers will appear with the Tbilisi Polyphonic Choir for a concert Saturday, November 5, 8 p.m., Civic Theatre, 202 C Street. 236-6510.

SQUARE DANCE, as its name implies, has long suffered from its image as a pastime reserved for hayseeds and old-fashioned church bazaars. But while the dance form itself has not changed appreciably in recent years, it has benefitted by its gradual recognition as an American folk art (it was recently adopted as the official state dance of Oregon).

This weekend, nearly 3,500 colorfully costumed square and round dancers will gather in Balboa Park for the 27th Annual Fiesta de la Cuadrilla, a three-day event.

Friday, November 4, festivities begin with adult square and round dancing, 8 p.m., Balboa Park Club and the Conference Building.

Saturday, November 5, a special "clogging" workshop (square dancing with tap shoes) will be held from 10 a.m. to noon, Conference Building; brush-up workshops for square dancers will be offered, 10 a.m. to noon, and 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., Balboa Park Club; the "Grand March," in which callers lead dance couples in a parade around the inside of the building, culminating in a grand finale of dancing, will take place at 8 p.m., Conference Building.

Sunday, November 6, dance workshops, one for more advanced dancers at 10 a.m., and one more for fun at 11 a.m., will be given in the Balboa Park Club, a public "Exhibition Fashion Show," featuring about 32 couples from local square dance clubs modeling a variety of old and new dress styles, will be held at 1 p.m., Balboa Park Bowl (Starlight Bowl); the last fling of the weekend will see dancers either stepping for fun in the Balboa Park Club, or attempting more challenging twirls in the Conference Building, 3 to 5 p.m.

The 27th Annual Fiesta de la Cuadrilla, sponsored by the Square Dance Association of San Diego, features callers Elmer Sheffield Jr., from Florida, and Lee Hensel, John Walter, and Bill Davis of California. For further information about related events, call 273-5696 or 279-0830.

"SAILS"

WITH SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY finding new and more numerous ways of utilizing various metals, it is only natural that artists should reflect an increasingly metallic environment by turning to the element as a medium. A current display at Grossmont College exhibits sculptress Claire Falkenstein's use of aluminum and sheet metal.

Entitled, "Topological Investigations," the sculptures are intended by the artist to be statements of mass and the time/space continuum. The sheet metal sculptures roll and turn, occasionally projecting into space and returning to themselves, while the aluminum pieces are meant to encourage the viewer to consider the object/space relationship, rather than merely concentrating on the sculptures as static masses.

Falkenstein is considered by many to be one of the West Coast's most prominent and successful artists, as she is responsible for the Pignatelli Gates in Rome, the Guggenheim Gates in Venice, Italy, and many works in museums on both seaboards.

Her "Topological Investigations" will be exhibited through November 13 in the Grossmont College Art Gallery, 8800 Grossmont College Drive, El Cajon. For more information, call 465-1700 x450.

RUFFIANS THAT THEY WERE, the whalers and seamen of 150 years ago would undoubtedly have blanched at the idea of being mistaken for artists. Yet many of them spent their spare time engraving pictures of ships, whaling scenes, battles, faces, and other subjects, on whale teeth and bone. This practice, known as scrimshaw, is now considered an authentic American art form.

While most remaining examples of earlier scrimshaw are tucked away in maritime and other museums, a current exhibit in Old Town shows that scrimshaw is not only alive and well, but possibly on the verge of becoming more readily available than ever before.

The display, made possible by the Alaskan Silver and Ivory Company, consists of pieces of scrimshaw that are uniquely Alaskan. Rather than whale bone, the medium used in these examples is fossilized ivory, which comes from prehistoric mastodon and walrus tusks. Although the technical reason for this switch in traditional materials is the illegality of obtaining whales' teeth and bones, aesthetically the ivory may be more suitable anyway, since it absorbs minerals from the earth that produce interesting patterns and colors. Generally smaller than the scrimshaw of a century ago, and set in jewelry form, these examples of scrimshaw are designed to appeal to human vanity, as well as to the Jack London lurking in many of us.

The Alaskan Silver and Ivory Company's exhibition of scrimshaw, which will include demonstrations by a modern-day scrimshander, will be on display Friday, November 4, through Sunday, November 6, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., The Gallery, Bazaar del Mundo, Old Town. For additional information, call 296-3161.

A STRING QUARTET, like a good wine, is said to improve with age. Years of performing together will often bring a balance, a unity of expression and interpretation, that can transform a skilled group into a great ensemble. This weekend in the North County area, a string quartet from England known as the Chilingirian String Quartet will hope to display what many believe is an impressive degree of balance and skill for so youthful an ensemble.

The group, named for violinist Levon Chilingirian, made its American debut last April in New York, in a concert at which the musicians were honored as the winners of the 1976 Young Concert Artists International Auditions. In a field where the slightest inadequacies can be exaggerated by critics into gross incompetence, the Chilingirian group has impressed observers from two continents with their poise, balanced sound, and musical maturity.

The Chilingirian String Quartet will perform two concerts on Sunday, November 6, with the first at 2 p.m., in St. Mark's Lutheran Church, Encinitas, and the second at 7:30 p.m., in the Oceanside First Presbyterian Church. For more information, call 757-2121.

JANE FONDA

FLAWLESS FRIENDSHIP

RICK GEARY

A quick perusal of the movie pages these days tells us we're in the midst of a boomlet of Hollywood films about women. Already we've received I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, You Light Up My Life, Looking for Mr. Goodbar, and now Fred Zinnemann's Julia (upcoming are The Turning Point and Paul Mazurski's An Unmarried Woman). Unlike the women's pictures of the past, which saw female problems mainly in terms of romantic relationships with men, this new cycle tackles dilemmas of success, self-definition, sexual independence—women as people rather than adjuncts of men. Of this bunch, Julia would seem to be the classiest, with the highest pedigree, made with care and sincerity. Basically, it's an old-fashioned "prestige" picture—the kind to which Hollywood unfailingly awards Oscars—with noble characters, an easily digestible "statement" about friendship and courage, and sumptuous color photography. But beyond these qualities—and the general refreshment of a film that focuses on the bond between two intelligent women—Julia, unfortunately, has little to offer.

Not to say that the basic material is without possibilities. It's the story of a tragic friendship between Lillian Hellman (Jane Fonda) and her childhood companion Julia (Vanessa Redgrave), a young woman of wealth and genius who, studying in Europe during the turbulent 30s, devotes her life to anti-fascism. The screenplay by Alvin Sargent (a busy man these days, he also scripted the current Bobby Deerfield) has much sensitivity. Fashioning his script from a brief reminiscence in Hellman's memoir Pentimento, Sargent has seen fit to flesh out the narrative with additional anecdotes from the personal life of the authoress—her difficult long-term relationship with Dashiell Hammett (Jason Robards), the difficult birth of her first play, The Children's Hour. The story is constructed complicatedly on about four different time levels, beginning with the "now" of today, from which point the aged Lillian narrates the tale, and jumping back to moments between her and Julia as teenagers and then as young college women. But we spend the bulk of our time in France, Germany and Austria in the mid-30s, where Julia has gone underground in her fight against the Nazis. Here, the dramatic high point comes in a rather conventional suspense sequence as Lillian, at her friend's request, smuggles $50,000 by train into Berlin to aid the underground. These mechanics of storytelling are well realized by Sargent and Zinnemann as far as they go. Where the movie falters is just where it should be strongest: in the central relationship between the two women.

We are asked to accept their friendship at face value, without being provided any real basis for it. The scenes of the two as teenagers are especially insubstantial, establishing only a silly word game as explanation of their closeness. From there they proceed through the years with nary a conflict or a discouraging word to mar the perfection of their sisterhood (in an enigmatic later scene, Lillian floors a drunken wag who suggests that she and Julia shared a physical relationship—as if their intimacy was above that somehow). As a result, Lillian and Hammett become the more interesting duo because their pairing, sketchy as it is, at least admits some tension. The character of Julia, as presented here, is a well-nigh flawless human being: learned, wise, unselfish (colored, we assume, by Lillian's memory) and the role would probably be absurd in the hands of any other actress than Vanessa Redgrave. She is at once completely convincing, and her relatively few moments on screen can frankly be described as radiant. Lillian, though, is a much more complex, contradictory person: tough yet dependent, timid yet assertive, seemingly apolitical, though it's hard to believe that by the mid-30s an educated person would be as politically naive as Lillian is drawn here. Jane Fonda does some remarkable things with the role both vocally and physically, especially in her scenes with Robards, and the two actresses together, manage to convey the attraction between artist and intellectual, sideline-sitter and high-roller, that the script fails to convey.

Of the remaining performers, there is little to be said. Jason Robards is merely adequate in his familiar crusty-lovable bit. Rosemary Harris and Hal Holbrook show up ludicrously as Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell, Lillian's companions in Europe, two brilliant people reduced to glorified walk-ons with maybe five lines between them.

Director Zinnemann handles the proceedings with his usual calm assurance, treating intimate moments and suspense scenes alike with gentlemanly restraint. Julia is a likable enough movie, but its very polish and elegance, its over-explicit intelligence, its good intentions seem more than a little anachronistic. Zinnemann, who began directing in 1937, is at age 70 one of the last surviving practitioners of this "Tradition of Quality" in American movies. A look at some of his titles: High Noon, From Here to Eternity, The Nun's Story, Behold a Pale Horse, A Man for All Seasons reveals a serious, supremely civilized sensibility—one that feels movies should address momentous subjects. And if, in this case, the tale is unfolded against the pre-WWII Nazi threat (a time when good and evil were clearly etched if there ever was one), how can it help but be an "important" film?

In the end, it seems, Lillian Hellman's slight memoir is asked to carry a little too much weight. In content and approach, Julia might have worked better as, say, an hour-long drama for Public Television, the present-day reserve of such high-mindedness. Still, movies of such flagrant integrity are hard to come by these days, and since the filmmakers elected to give the story the deluxe treatment, they hardly could have done better than the two actresses and overall production values involved. In view of the mindlessness of most current Hollywood product, they could have done a lot worse. □

SERAFIN HURTADO

dents of this enclave were the people who built North County and made its sweating lands flourish.

They want nothing more than to be left alone and to be allowed to do as they wish with their meager holdings. They know their neighborhood will change, more rapidly now than before, and it has been their wish that any changes would accrue to their children's benefit. They had once planned on leaving their descendents the small properties along Second Avenue, but now they fear their land will be taken away from them by the city, and for the first time in half a century these people are flexing their political muscles. They say at becoming involved in public controversies, but they realize the alternative is to see their old homes disappear into the maw of the bulldozer.

Their story is complex in its turnings, but simple in its outline, and its outcome will be a sign for other cities which plan to use police powers to renovate older sections of town. Escondido is no longer a sleepy little hamlet, and its problems are no longer the inconsequential problems of a fork in the road. What is decided here will affect people elsewhere, and the decision will come on November 8, when the voters of Escondido determine whether redevelopment through condemnation proceedings will come to their central city area, an area which contains, in its southeast quadrant, this Mexican-American enclave.

The city fathers want Escondido to be the site of a major regional shopping center, and most people in Escondido seem to welcome such a lucrative tax base. What may turn into North County's largest dispute in years revolves around where the shopping center should be and how land for it should be obtained.

Three sites have been under consideration by the city council. One is an undeveloped seventy-acre portion of Kit Carson Park, at the southern end of town. The suggestion that this city-owned land become a haven for cars and crowds met with vigorous opposition from environmentalist groups and from those upper-income homeowners whose sundecks overlook the park. The Kit Carson proposal has been unceremoniously shelved.

Second on the list of possible locations is the El Norte Parkway area at the northern end of Escondido, where a large tract of vacant land is in the hands of private developers. Alan Skuba, who has political stars in his eyes, opposes the El Norte location, claiming a shopping center there would encourage a northward expansion of the city. Businessmen in the downtown core fear the El Norte complex may draw customers away from them, and the powerful auto dealers, who are looking for new sites for their dealerships, say the El Norte area has poor accessibility from the freeways. Further, some major department stores – May Co., Broadway, J.C. Penney, and Robinson's – have told the city council they have no interest in locating so far north.

The location with the greatest support and potentially the greatest opposition – is what is known as the Centre City site. It lies between what used to be the downtown section of Interstate 15 (now called Centre City Parkway) and the new Interstate 15 bypass which swings around the western side of Escondido. Unlike the Kit Carson and El Norte sites, this area is already developed. Light industry occupies most of the acreage; there are two oil distributorships which serve farmers, a lumber mill, a granary, a newly constructed bakery, and other businesses. The southernmost part of the Centre City area, the land flanking Second Avenue, is residential. This is the Mexican-American enclave.

A shopping center can move into Centre City only if the present businesses and residents move out, and none of them are inclined to leave. The city council has decided to give them no choice and has cast itself up as a redevelopment agency empowered to condemn the buildings and pay bottom dollar for the land within the affected area, which has officially become Escondido's redevelopment zone. The council came to this decision because it was made an offer it could not refuse. The offer came from Ernest Hahn.

Hahn's development company drew up plans for a regional shopping center, one designed to "revitalize" Escondido's dead central core, and laid the plans before the city council. Three of the five councilmen found in the plans the city's and their own politically salvation. Hahn's plans are for more than just a shopping center, although his firm will be responsible only for the construction of the retail stores. The remaining acreage will be devoted to a city-county complex (home of the new city hall), a large auto park – something like National City's "Mile of Cars" – and new residential housing, intended for low-income families who can afford high rent.

The Centre City proposal immediately received the blessing of the auto dealers, the Chamber of Commerce (which is generally regarded as an extension of the auto dealers), merchants whose stores are within a few blocks of the redevelopment zone, and even some environmentalists who, while not liking the prospect of 40,000 cars visiting Escondido on weekends, realize that a redeveloped Centre City will mean an untouched Kit Carson Park.

The businessmen who face the prospect of losing their livelihoods have banded together in what they think is appropriately called the Save Our Businesses (SOBs) organization. They have found ears in the local press, have gone door to door, and have been instrumental in getting on the November 8 ballot a measure designed to quash the redevelopment scheme. Although the city's leading lights are arrayed against them, they think they have a good chance of winning. After all, in only a couple of weeks they had their initiative petitions signed by fully a fifth of Escondido's 23,000 registered voters, and the Centre City businessmen consider that a good sign.

Most press coverage, both in Escondido and in San Diego, has been of the wrangling within the city council chambers, reports on Ernest Hahn and his intentions, and commentaries about the plight of the Centre City business community. Virtually nothing has been written about what is perhaps the most poignant story of all, that of the Mexican-American residents who live along Second Avenue, the key artery through the redevelopment zone.

These couple dozen families have lived as an insular community for decades. Some have been in the same houses since the First World War. Many of the families are related by blood or marriage, and nearly all the working men are employed as agricultural workers.

One who is not is Jess Lopez, since 1954 the owner of the Lopez Market. His store is at the corner of Second and Centre City Parkway, and a large portion of his clientele consists of farm workers who live near the border or in Mexico and who work around Escondido. "This is the only store they can feel comfortable in," explains Lopez. "When they go to a big shopping center, they feel embarrassed, they're simple people. If my store is taken away from me, there'll be no store at all for them."

About 40 or 50 farm hands each spend an average of three or four dollars a day in the Lopez Market. Jess Lopez relies on their patronage, and they rely on him. A neighbor recounted a story that one time an old man came into the store and asked for a pouch of Prince Albert pipe tobacco. He requested that it be put on his tab, and Lopez wrote out a credit slip. But he didn't spear the slip on the spindle. Instead, when the old man left, Lopez tore the slip and threw it away. "Why did you do that?" asked his neighbor. "That old man," said Lopez, pointing to the bent figure ambling along the street, "is not actually a Mexican, he is an Indian and very poor. He could never afford to pay me back, so..."

Lopez, for actions like this, is known as the local saint, an appellation he eschews, but one his friends all agree is accurate. He looks after the people around Second Avenue, and because of his work the area has become one of the centers of Latin culture in Escondido.

When Jess Lopez built his store he got a variance from the city's zoning department. The original zoning was light industrial; it remains that today. He has long waited to expand the store and add a small parking lot. The city will allow him to tear down the two old houses he owns on the local lots, but he would have to put up something that fits the designation of industrial. A grocery store is not an industry, so Lopez can do little with his property.

He has been told his land is worth two dollars a square foot so long as it is zoned industrial. This is what the city would pay him under condemnation proceedings. A couple blocks away, under commercial zoning, is an undeveloped lot for which the owner is asking $300,000. True, the lot is several times as large as the 2,000 square-foot lot on which the Lopez Market stands, but most of the price disparity is the result of different zoning and, particularly, the fact that the Lopez land is within the redevelopment zone.

Julian Villalobos purchased property on Second Avenue in 1942. He still owns the land, though he lives in Poway now, he is one of the few "expatriates." Forty-seven years old and retired from the Navy, he sees a lot of potential for his land, if the city doesn't take it first.

On his property are three old houses he rents out. He would like to tear down one and put up a new rental unit, but he is prohibited from doing this because of the zoning restrictions (which were passed long after the present houses were constructed). For four months the city had a building moratorium on top of the zoning ordinances. Under the moratorium only $1,000 could be used to repair or keep up each parcel around Second Avenue. The improvements needed by Villalobos's houses would cost considerably more than that, so he was forced to let the buildings deteriorate. The city now claims the area is blighted and needs to be redeveloped.

"What the city wants to do is subsidize a private developer to the detriment of the present owners, who want to improve their lot but are prohibited from doing so. To my knowledge, there is not one person living here who owes anything on his property," says Villalobos. "If forced to move, these people will have to take on large mortgages at their new homes, and they just don't have the money to handle that.

"When the land is appraised for redevelopment, that appraisal will end up being close to the present assessed value, which takes into account both the industrial zoning of this area and the condition of the property. It's not going to be based on potential value, which is many times the assessed value." Villalobos notes that this Mexican-American community occupies what is now perhaps the most valuable land in the city, land bordering Second Avenue, which is the main offramp from the new freeway bypass. "If we could develop this land on our own, we and our children could be secure." Development through redevelopment, he contends, would only mean security for Mr. Hahn and for those city council members who want to ride redevelopment into higher offices.

Serafin and Josephine Hurtado moved to the area in 1928. "The longer we keep the land, the better future we will have," he explains, eyeing his wife, who returns a wink. "We think we have a good opportunity to lease our land to some developer on our own." What the Hurtados and the other residents of this enclave would like to do is agree among themselves to build a mercado-like plaza. It would straddle Second Avenue and would be architecturally and functionally a unit. The various families would first receive cash from the developer – enough cash to buy good housing elsewhere, with no mortgage. Then they would grant the developer a long-term lease, the income from which they could live on and then will to their children. But these plans are contingent upon the redevelopment scheme being repealed at the polls and on a change in the area's zoning from industrial to commercial.

While Serafin Hurtado talks about the possibilities of renovating the land on their own, his wife's main concern is her mother's health. Although she and her husband now live outside the redevelopment area, her mother still lives in the house on the corner of Second and Centre City Parkway, across the street from the Lopez Market. "She has lived most of her life here," she frowns, as dad left her. I would like her to come to my house, but she says no, she wants to be in her own house. It's old, but it's hers – at least for a while."

When news of the redevelopment plan first arrived Mrs. Hurtado's mother, who is known as Grandma Cruz, became ill. She is eighty-seven. "She now has great-grandchildren, and they and her children and grandchildren all live in the neighborhood. If we had to move they would all be scattered around. At first the redevelopment people told us we could stick together, but later they stopped saying that. Who could believe such a thing?"

Grandma Cruz's property might end up being part of the proposed city-county complex. This building would have about 60,000 square feet of office space, most of it for the new city hall. With its surrounding landscaping and parking, it would take about seven acres. City Manager Kenneth Lounsbery was reported as saying that the acquisition costs for the acreage would be $500,000. That works out to $8.33 a square foot if he meant the land immediately under the complex, if he meant all seven acres, which is more probable, that would be $1.65 a square foot. This would be in payment for both the land and the improvements.

Grandma Cruz gets $170 monthly from

Once upon a time...

Stories starting out that way are usually FICTION, but the FACT is, we are right now in danger of losing our right to vote on the use of our park lands.

The FICTION is that the will of the people (as expressed in the Charter) can be circumvented by the Council.

The FACT is that Section 55 of the Charter requires that any change of park land to a non-park use MUST be approved by 2/3 of the voters.

The FICTION is that the only acceptable site for a new Naval Hospital is Florida Canyon in our Balboa Park.

The FACT is that the Defense Department now owns over 150,000 acres in San Diego County. This land offers several practical sites. Much undeveloped land is available for trade. The Navy until recently strongly preferred a different location.

The FICTION is that Balboa Park is the only site with both central location and public transit.

The FACT is that alternative sites in the center city or on centrally located, federal lands are now served by public transportation.

The FICTION is that if the Department of Defense doesn't get its way it will force San Diegans to turn over Balboa Park land.

The FACT is that Congress, which alone can authorize condemnation actions for federal projects, has been reluctant to enter into such proceedings against the will of the local voters.

The Biggest FICTION Of All

is that we, the People can do nothing!

The FACT is that five Council members, committed to upholding our City Charter can turn this whole thing around.

We currently have four votes: O'Connor, Hare, Williams and Morrow. We need at least one more to join them after election next Tuesday, if you believe that it's a FACT this issue should be decided by the voters of San Diego.

A telephonic survey reveal the candidates' views:

(1): Do you believe the current plan to change the use of Balboa Park for the Naval Hospital should go forward without the vote of the people?

YES: Johnson, Schnaubelt
NO: Lowery, Millican, Mitchell, Morrow, Schulte, Stirling

With a 5-4 vote the Council approved a Memorandum of Understanding with the federal government which would change the use of park land in case the Navy gets Congressional approval to condemn Balboa Park land.

(2): When elected, will you vote to rescind the Memorandum of Understanding?

YES: Millican, Mitchell, Morrow, Schulte
NO: Lowery, Schnaubelt, Stirling
NO ANSWER: Johnson

FOR THE FUN OF IT AT BOOM'S

Boom's proudly presents the Bill Brackett Show featuring, not surprisingly, Bill Brackett . . . San Diego's number one funniest person. Brackett's guitar and banjo are all you can be sure of . . . what he sings and says is usually a surprise (often to Brackett himself). And all you have to do is sit back and enjoy the sound of your own laughter. The East/West Band makes the sounds you love to hear. A little bit country and little bit rock . . . featuring the top forties sprinkled with a generous supply of original material. Bill Brackett and the East/West Band—the perfect accompaniment to Boom's new SUPER BOOMER! Now your favorite libation at Boom's is a SUPER BOOMER (also known as a "double" at less sophisticated establishments). Come see and hear Brackett and the East/West Band. Now appearing Wednesday through Sunday 9:00 PM 'til 1:30 AM.

American Protestants are singularly blessed in not having religious restrictions placed upon the food they eat. Until recently, Catholics ate no meat on Friday, and up to the present, orthodox Jews will partake of neither pork nor hard-shelled seafood. Forbidden foods represent a curiosity in contemporary times; the reasons for the taboo have blurred or vanished. Charles Lamb's delightful allegory about the Chinese man who continually burned down his house so that he could savor the wonders of roast pig finds few counterparts in our day of relaxed religious practice and the ready availability of every sort of ethnic food to tempt us.

Still, food and its preparation continues to exist as a noble reminder of our past, and long after "thou shalt not" has disappeared, custom and tradition continue. This applies particularly to dishes which originate in foreign lands. In Middle Eastern countries, pork is frowned upon, and lamb remains the meat when it is available.

The style of Middle Eastern cooking has its origins in aged nomadic customs when lamb, fish, or vegetables were roasted on skewers. These roasted tidbits called kebabs, proved as popular with yesterday's nomads as they are today. Another favorite method of utilizing lamb was to combine it with rice (the staple of the diet) and wrap it in grape leaves. And of course, the simplest dishes found enhancement with the use of pine nuts. This proved particularly true in the case of the eggplant which seemed to thrive in the Arabian terrain. Affluent people could stuff eggplant with lamb, but more often rice and pine nuts added interest to that ubiquitous vegetable.

Ten years ago, if you wanted to taste Middle Eastern cookery in San Diego, you found yourself restricted to Antoine's Sheik. At present, you may try, among others, the Hajji Baba in Pacific Beach, the Cafe Mediterraneo in the Grossmont Shopping Center, and the Shish-Kebob Kitchen on Engineer Road for Middle Eastern goodies. Two places, the Old Jerusalem and the Phoenecia, have vanished, but a brand new one has sprung up. It's called Scheherazade, and as its name implies, it offers cuisine for your Arabian nights.

The physical plant of the Scheherazade is charming not as campy at Antoine's and more intimate than Hajji Baba. Many of you may recall it as Roger's Seawolf, but the sea motif has now been cast overboard in favor of walls decorated with cut-outs of mosques. The tablecloths are red and black, the napkins red, and the fake roses a delicate scarlet. The hostess wears a heavily embroidered gown, and (ah, Wittgenstein, here is thy sting!) Arabic music drones on continuously. When it ceased for the barest moment I was relieved—it has a grating, whining quality—but a beat later it went on its relentless, irritating way.

What can be said about the Scheherazade that distinguishes it from other Middle Eastern restaurants in San Diego? It has the poshest physical plant and the most expensive prices. True, all dinners come with hommus (garbanzo bean dip and sesame seed paste) as well as tabbouli (chopped parsley with cracked wheat, tomatoes, and onions) and pickled turnips, as well as tossed green salad and pita bread. These appetizers are all tasty, and while one can't eat too many pickled turnips, the variety does whet the appetite. However, the cost of the entrees is too high. For example, grape leaves costing $6.50 leave me gasping; these aren't bulging, stuffed rolls, but effete, delicate versions. With them you are served rice and a handful of string beans. It may seem petty of me to quibble over a dollar and fifty cents, but even with the appetizer, grape leaf dinner should cost no more than $4.95.

Consider the cost of the meal to the proprietor: some canned hommus, some chopped parsley, turnips, lettuce, some grape leaves, rice and chopped meat, more rice, string beans. I don't wish to appear uncharitable, but there's not a single ingredient in that entire meal which is expensive. At La Chaumine or L'Escargot you get a beautiful fish dinner with four fresh vegetables, excellent soup and salad for $6.75, and fish costs a great deal more than the meat in stuffed grape leaves. I always seem to be arguing about a few dollars, but to some people just that margin means the difference between dining out or eating at home.

The same would apply to the baked eggplant, surely the most tasty dish at Scheherazade. But Lebanese natives would unanimously lament to hear that their humble vegetable dish sells for $6.50. (At Hajji Baba, it costs $2.50 at lunch.)

As it happened, I ordered the Scheherazade specialty for $7.50. This is a huge platter, containing lamb kebob, baked kibbi (lamb meatloaf), stuffed grape and cabbage leaves, kafta kebob, broiled tomato, green pepper, and onion. This meal will accommodate two, and as such would be reasonable. My friend had the stuffed eggplant, and I supplemented her dinner with offerings from my plate. (I don't wish to imply that she would have gone hungry with just her own entree, merely that the portion was moderate.)

The food had a pleasant appearance, was freshly prepared, and had good flavor, though I found the baked kibbi a bit dry and the lamb kebobs somewhat tough. The owner, hostess, and waiter tried to be thoughtful and considerate, and they succeeded. The meal included a free dessert, a thin roll of baklava. Since Lebanese coffee cost ninety-five cents we did not order any.

The best dishes are the stuffed eggplant, which is too small to be adequate for two people, and the combination special, which provides the greatest variety and quantity.

As you doubtless remember, Scheherazade, a character in The Arabian Nights, was the wife of the sultan to whom she nightly related such interesting tales that he repented his sentence of doom and spared her life. If she could whisper one little tale to the current owner of the restaurant named for her, she would do well to remind him that Carmel Valley is hardly the Taj Mahal, and that we would prefer not to pay a queen's ransom for a tasty, if simple meal. □

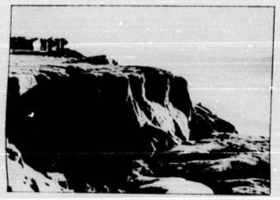
SELF-REALIZATION FELLOWSHIP, 1938 (TOP), 1941

It's All Downhill From Here



JEANNETTE DE WYZE

Midwesterners and Easterners joke about California breaking off and falling into the sea and we laugh and shrug it off as nonsense. The cliche is a myth that amuses most of us residents of the Golden State. But wait'll you hear what they're saying about the cliffs.

"They," in this case, aren't ignorant flatlanders, but local people: geologists, cliff observers, some community activists who are predicting that part of San Diego's coast is going to disintegrate. And they're not talking about some uninhabited stretch, but about a section of Solana Beach which holds million-dollar condominium developments, swimming pools, tennis courts, and tanned young tenants. They're saying this is going to happen not in a hundred years, but in two to ten. Some say the condominiums never should have been built, and that even if anything can be done, probably nothing will be done to stop the calamity.

These kinds of predictions, even from locals, aren't exactly novel. County residents got a taste of cliff disaster on a big scale in the winter of 1941. The Self-Realization Fellowship in 1938 had built a temple on the bluff just south of J Street in Encinitas, and the four-story structure was reputed to be the largest thing on the coast. Set back about forty feet from the cliff's edge, the temple was flanked by two pools, and leakage from them contributed to the disaster, but the final straw was a particularly violent storm which lashed much of the coast. The storm soaked the ground, severe waves tore into the cliff base, and one day the entire $40,000 structure sagged and heaved as the earth beneath it gave way. No major projects were built on the cliffs for a long time after that, not until the late 1950s, by which time we'd acquired a full-blown government bureaucracy to keep an eye on things. As the projects went in, the geologists collected data, and lone voices occasionally were raised urging greater caution. Finally, one of those lone speakers this year pulled together a lot of the related information, and in so doing, he ignited the current controversy.

That voice belongs to Gerald G. Kuhn, a young staff research associate at the Scripps Geological Research Division. Kuhn lives in Cardiff and when he was an undergraduate at San Diego State University in 1973, he started studying the North County cliffs and taking photos of them for a class project. He noticed changes [illegible] ever, so he continued documenting cliff erosion and collecting data. At Scripps, he won two Sea Grants (state and federal funding) to help support the work. Last spring the board of supervisors authorized paying him $9,000 to organize the information [illegible]. Kuhn worked on it from June to September of this year, "putting four years' work into that three months," he says.

Kuhn [illegible] the report September 23 and the county released it to the public a week and a half later. The hefty document analyzes erosion up and down the entire Solana Beach coast; it reaches some general conclusions and makes recommendations. Most explosive, however, is Kuhn's discussion of one section of south Solana Beach where condominiums crowd up to the cliff edge and stand sentry over the surf below—the 1,000-foot section between Via de la Valle to just north of the Del Mar Shores development (actually located in Solana Beach). Kuhn writes, "The slope face has reached a critical angle of repose. At present it varies from near vertical to vertical and even overhanging . . . the structures located directly on the bluff top will be threatened in the near future," he warns, "if stabilization measures are not taken immediately."

Kuhn discusses a number of factors which make the stretch of condominiums particularly vulnerable. First, he says when developers graded (in some places leveling the land all the way to the slope edge) they broke a protective crust and weakened the cliff structures, setting the stage for increased erosion. Then they plunked down massive structures, in many cases just a few feet from the drop-off. Surface water runoff from the top of the cliffs over the face further aggravates the problem, Kuhn says, as does pedestrian and animal traffic over the bluff faces. Natural factors such as tides, storm wave action, wind, and the formation of sea caves further compound an already hazardous situation.

Just how fast are things deteriorating. Kuhn says it's very hard to specify but he attacks another common geological notion, that of "average rates" of seacliff retreat. Erosion commonly occurs instantaneously and episodically, he points out, dislodging tons of rock at a time, rather than steadily wearing down a small amount of the cliff each year. "Seacliff erosion is the result of many factors: rain, wind, waves, biological activity, geological conditions, and especially man's intervention," he writes. "This variation makes the concept of establishing average erosion rates for a region impractical at specific sites: the sea cliff at the study area was found to have retreated a maximum of five feet between 1973 and 1976. At other sites in the study area the retreat in the same period has been negligible."

Although Kuhn won't guess when the walls will come tumbling down, he does cite one study done for the homeowners association of the Del Mar Beach Club development (located in Solana Beach). The Southern California Testing Laboratory in the summer of 1976 concluded that erosion at that development would eat away the lateral and vertical support for the buildings (including the residential structures) within a maximum period of three to five years. In other words, it would destroy them unless protective measures are taken.

What kind of measures would protect the cliffs? Consultants' recommendations for the Del Mar Beach Club were elaborate: a permanent concrete seawall which would serve as a base for concrete crib work, which in turn would rise up to protect the sharply angled cliff walls. Though expensive (such protection would cost an estimated $650,000), it would satisfy even fairly conservative local geologists like Kuhn's boss at Scripps, geologist Jeff Frautschy, who says he's not sure it will work, but "if I were a property owner there, it's something I'd be willing to invest in." Kuhn's report makes broad recommendations ("Stabilize the slope face, bluff-top edge, and sea-cliff toe at the sites of the Del Mar Beach Club, Del Mar Shores Terrace, and Seascape Five (Chateau) developments"), but the young geologist protests he's not qualified to recommend precise measures. Cautious, he insists he's steered away from sensationalism. "I'm sure something can be done," he says, "if it's all done together."

Kuhn sounds guarded; he's already taken a lot of flak from other geologists for publishing the report and he's anxious not to overstep the limits [illegible] authority. In contrast, B[illegible] blunt and angry Vice-[illegible] the Solana Beach Town [illegible] Melvin has been fighting [illegible] development for years [illegible] watched the erosion [illegible] perspective of an in[illegible] man. "We fought the develop[illegible] of those condominiums [illegible] times. "We lost every [illegible] every battle, and finally we [illegible] the war." Melvin mentions [illegible] simple but outrageous solution [illegible] the cliff erosion problems. "[illegible] course I know it will never [illegible] done. But the county could [illegible] up all the property and just [illegible] all those buildings. . . . It could very well be cheaper in the long run rather than waiting for them to fall into the ocean."

A forceful [illegible] Melvin strides up and down the narrow beach, pointing out places of obvious erosion with a kind of grim relish. "Look at that!" [illegible] exclaims, indicating one development where a stretch of [illegible] now hangs unsupported in [illegible] salty air. "Now you know [illegible] didn't build it like that!" He [illegible] visitors down to the far south [illegible] of the beach, below the last condominium, where the remains [illegible] previous property owner's [illegible] against the elements can still [illegible] seen. Concrete blocks intended [illegible] reinforcement sit as rubble; [illegible] wooden staircase ends in mid-[illegible] demolished; a gunnite surface (the stuff swimming pools are made of) once plastered over the cliff wall has been destroyed. What's left of it resembles the fragments of a tattered curtain. "There's only one way the bluffs can go," Melvin warns, "and that's back."

On the far north end of the condominiums Melvin points [illegible] bulldozers clearing yet another site on the bluffs. He says the site sat untouched for months, but in the wake of recent talk about a cliff-building moratorium, the dozers began to roll. "That developer is confident that no matter what he does there, the county will approve it." He grew impassioned when he presents his view of the underlying causes for the bluff problems. Developers, he says, consistently ignored building procedures and requirements, but when county supervisors were confronted with the violations they granted variances rather than ordering the offending structures altered or removed. As a result of that, Melvin expects to see suits in the coming years filed against the county as well as the developers. "The county is going to be the scapegoat. And well the county should be the scapegoat. They put their seal of approval upon these things."

[illegible] ises the town council will try to make sure that maintenance of the bluffs "won't fall on the taxpayers. . . That affects everyone's taxes, whether you live in Jamul or whatever." The council has been fighting the condominiums long before bluff safety was called into question. Many community people bitterly resented the private developments coming between them and their patch of ocean. [illegible] and the rest of the community are split into two distinct camps. Melvin admits staring up at the half-mile-long procession of condos. "We call it the great wall. They walled us off from the beach and it walled them off from reality."

Cliff dwelling may isolate the condo owners from the rest of the community [illegible] the developers who built the precarious-looking structures are getting support from another quarter: many local geologists and engineers who are critical of Kuhn and his work. One individual familiar with the report and the Solana Beach area is Louis Lee, an engineer with Woodward-Clyde Consultants, a consulting engineering, geological, and environmental science firm. [illegible]

[illegible] challenge the dire implications of Kuhn's report, the developers who built the condominiums are even more emphatic. Again at Del Mar Shores, developer B. J. Adams leans back with a confident smile and says, "I know this building is safe and I hope that no people [illegible]"

Bananas — Woody Allen's movie humor tends to be not very visual, nor very verbal, but very conceptual ("Wouldn't it be a scream if . . .?"). He must be terrific at the coffee table. So far he has not been the happiest director of his own material but this giddy mix of Latin American revolution, Howard Cosell, the Jewish Defense League, J. Edgar Hoover, etc., proves often funny despite Allen's absent-minded plotting and directing. 1970.

Bugsy Malone — A novelty act: an all-juvenile cast, dolled up with double-breasted suits and slicked-down hair, re-enacts the underworld passions played out on the Warner Brothers lot in the 30s by Cagney, McHugh, Blondell, et al. The kids break into periodic song-and-dance routines, and the guns are loaded with lethal whipped cream. The whole show has a disorienting effect, something like those old kiddie movies in which midgets would dress up in cowboy duds and ride Shetland ponies. Once you adjust to the concept, though, there aren't many surprises forthcoming. Alan Parker, who masterminded the project, seems rather patronizing of the children as well as the gangster genre (juvenile moviegoers, if they had their druthers, would probably choose to see the new Clint Eastwood movie). But there is a redeeming amount of aficionado affection in the reproduction of sleazy underworld settings and hard-boiled lingo. With Jodie Foster, Scott Baio, Florrie Dugger, Martin Lev; music by Paul Williams. 1976.

awkward adolescent, as a Carnegie Hall entertainer—and it's asking a lot. The time and setting of 1932 Germany contain an inherent moodiness. And it was a good idea to use the painted face and nihilistic jokes of a vaudeville emcee (played detestably by Joel Grey) as a reaction to all the personal and societal decay. It was a bad idea to allow the entertainment in this sleazy downstairs cabaret to be so smashingly Broadway. 1972.

Cannonball — The star and director of DEATH RACE 2000—David Carradine and Paul Bartel—team up again, possibly thinking that things couldn't get much worse. But this encore cross-country race has one idea less than the one-idea DEATH RACE, and is completely confused as to what mood to operate in. Several peekaboo appearances (Scorsese, Stallone, etc.) are put in as a sop to film "buffs", but the cognoscenti, who are expected to appreciate these guest spots, are the very people who will appreciate that this movie is a stinker. 1976.

Cousin, Cousine — Jean-Charles Tacchella's overpraised love story is a profusion of casual, cursory observations of family life, and in the abundance there are plenty of amusing moments, and many more that are smug, lazy-minded, and banal. It seems a nice idea to do a movie whose entire, large population is tied together by blood or wedlock, and whose major events are red-letter-day gatherings of the clan. But reality Tacchella is concerned only about two family members, a pair of cousins-by-marriage who defy propriety and blithely carry on a big romance under the very noses of their respective spouses and relatives. (There is a tough-looking tomboyish, misanthropic adolescent who seems interesting, but she eventually succumbs to the movie's wry knowingness when, growing up at last, she burbles, "Last week I had sex with a boy, and it was terrific!") It is difficult to see what the two supercilious lovers, Victor Lanoux and Marie-Christine Barrault, have to be so proud of. But their mates are portrayed as such nonnies that they certainly have nothing to be guilty about. The view of romance in the film is determinedly down-to-earth; further than that, it seems to be rooted in soap slogans: "You only live once," and "Get it together."

and "Do your own thing" and "Let it all hang out." (Le Paloma)

Crist — A melancholy juxtaposition of childhood and death. Carlos Saura's claustrophobic chamber piece adopts the point of view of a nine-year-old girl (the heart-breakingly somber Ana Torrent, from SPIRIT OF THE BEEHIVE) whose intimate acquaintance with death is highly colored by fantasy, ignorance, and cold-bloodness. She, despite being thoroughly captivated by a catchy pop song, has very little knacks for fun, even a backyard hide-and-seek game with her two sisters is chilled somewhat by the tag line, "Come out and be dead," and on command the game's losers must stretch out in coffin postures. The various adventures of a Spanish Catholic childhood—getting into auntie's bras and high heels, marveling at the maid's mountainous breasts—are for the most part pretty unimaginative. But Saura is a supremely skillful moviemaker, and he can pursue a line of action with a fluid, unhurried clarity that is a pleasure to watch. The only real weakness here is his tendency to fool around with the time sequence and his tolerance for the anguished monologs spoken directly into the camera by Geraldine Chaplin (Saura's wife). 1977  (Cove)

Damnation Alley — Although the story comes from a certified science-fiction author, Roger Zelazny, and has been adapted by a couple of good hands, Alan Sharp and Lukas Heller, this post-WWIII adventure is an unplotted sightseeing tour through stereotyped nuclear wastelands (i.e., the serviceable Southwest desert, covered over by Kool Aid skies). It has one worthwhile episode with "armor-plated cockroaches," and it also has some of the phoniest process shots ever turned out of Hollywood. George Peppard delivers a stalwart performance in what he doesn't seem to realize is a second-banana role. The priggish commander of a group of survivors who are driving a futuristic Winnebago to Albany, N.Y., and, on route, pick up a Las Vegas showgirl and a teenage boy who's a dead shot with a stone at a distance of 50 yards. Jan-Michael Vincent, Dominique Sanda, Paul Winfield, directed by Jack Smight. 1977.

* (Fashion Valley, Parkway 3, Plaza Twin 1, University Towne Center)

Death Wish — A nightmare of New York City streets swarmed over by hopped-up muggers who fist and slither like rejects from a WEST SIDE STORY audition. In effect, this Michael Winner exercise picks up from the hateful curtain line of his previous movie, STUNE KILLER: "You've got five more minutes, Christine." Winner tries to keep this movie within the tiny, ill-defined area of justifiable rage in order to congratulate Charles Bronson, waging private war on the entire species which assaulted his wife and daughter, whenever he cuts down one of the menaces, insect-like, who pester him in conveniently empty streets, parks, subways. It is a definite missed opportunity that the techniques of accosting were not shown in more of their variety. And the devices used to manufacture emotional heat and lather often groan noisily. Yet it is fairly intriguing to watch a movie that approaches its editorial points—on urban rural living conditions, on police politics, on gunmanship and the cowboy mentality in America—with stealthy, whispery, indefinite insinuation. 1974.

 (Balboa)

The Deep — "I can't afford to pass this up. It's an experience" entrusses the sun-bleached jock to his fainthearted girlfriend, who only wishes to return home safely from her Bermuda holiday. The so-called experience is a Tom Swift-an adventure involving sunken loot, sure, a giant moray eel, and voodoo villains. Its underclause excitements are of the rude, low-blow type that make you leap in your seat, and they are mostly gratuitous, not to say extraneous (the unfortunate girlfriend has her abdomen smeared with blood by masked tormentors using a chicken leg as a paint-brush). Nothing in the movie sets your heart pounding quite as justifiably as the sight of Jacqueline Bisset in a wet T-shirt. With Robert Shaw, Nick Nolte, Louis Gossett, directed by Peter Yates. 1977

* (Century Twin 1, Parkway 1)

Enter the Dragon — Under the American Robert Clouse's flashy direction, this kung-fu psychout kicks a little higher than most of the pure Hong Kong creations. But still the efforts to inspire moral outrage and to pile climax upon climax lead to some typical, insincere hutting-and-puffing. And still the heroics of the hand-to-hand combat comes mainly from some typical comic-book sound effects (smack, crunch, whoosh) as the gorgeously muscled Bruce Lee flings himself around the Cinemascope screen. 1973.

* (Balboa, Flower Hill Cinema 1, Parkway 2, Frontier Drive In)

Family Plot — The first score, backed by a chorus of angel voices, has a fake spiritualist named Madame Blanche communing with the deceased loved ones of the filthy-rich Mrs. Rainbird. It's a cut of talk—first one face then the other, back and forth, interminably. The second scene has Blanche, in the backseat, reiterating the entire first scene to her cabdriver boyfriend. More talk—first one face then the other, back and forth, interminably. None too soon, the cab nearly bumps into a pedestrian in a blinding wig, dark glasses, black trenchcoat and Garbo slouch hat, and the narrative switches to a second storyline, something out of BATMAN, about a suave mustachioed kidnapper who hides his victims behind a false brick wall in his cellar and hides the diamonds he collects as ransom in the chandelier over his front hall. Things scarcely pick up in this apathetic Hitchcock thriller, until scriptwriter Ernest Lehman, renovating a bit from NORTH BY NORTHWEST, points a car, without brakes, downhill on a winding mountain road. Bruce Dern manages somehow to maintain his regular persons and make his lines sound like his own (his trustiest gimmick is to tack a "my dear" or a "darlin'" onto the end of a line whenever possible). With Barbara Harris, Karen Black, William Devane. 1976.

Fantasia — The Disney studio's experiment, setting cartoon sequences to a few standards of classical music, doesn't do too much for the music (it's rather like a creative writing assignment in the 6th grade okay, class, what do you picture in your mind when you listen to this record?), except that a mass audience is corralled to hear the music. The real show, of course, is the animation, especially the dinosaur fight (to "Rite of Spring") and the Mickey Mouse nightmare (to "Sorcerer's Apprentice"), which show off one of Disney's fortes—frightening little children. Leopold Stokowski conducts the music. 1938.

 (Cinerama)

Fists of Fury — Just as well might be called LIPS OF FURY, in honor of the snarly master of martial arts, Bruce Lee. When he is provoked beyond human forgiveness, every muscle in his body responds. 1972.

* (Balboa, Parkway 2, Frontier Drive In)

Freaky Friday — A fantasy premise having to do with a 38-year-old housewife and her teenage daughter swapping bodies, through an unexplained pool of hocus-pocus, so that they can each view the world from the other side of the generation gap. The titillating possibilities of the Tnorne Smith-ian TURNABOUT idea are scarcely touched in this muddle-headed comedy, though. The Disney studio's rigid code of conduct pretty well prohibits them from being touched. The screen's newly self-caring emphasis on love, sex and the third sex, the single life, the married life, the extramarital life, the pot life, the free class, are treated in our view coyly. The fact that Friday nights from 6:30 to 9:30 are interminable. 1977

* (Fashion Valley, Parkway 3, Plaza Twin 1, University Towne Center)

Gumball Rally — A lobby for the repeal of the 55 mph speed limit on U.S. highways. With Michael Sarrazin, Tim McIntire, and Raul Julia; directed by Chuck Bail. 1976.

* (Cabrillo, UA Cinema 2, Vogue, from 11/4, Plaza Twin 2, Campus Drive In)

Help! — The Beatles' second movie and first in color (the color is inspirationally introduced by way of some brightly-feathered darts peppering a black-and-white movie image). The premise this time—a fat cry from the surrealistic slice-of-life, A HARD DAY'S NIGHT—is an inane clock-and-dagger plot. And the Beatles' comfortableness with this vehicle suggests that, had they wanted, they could easily have become the biggest comedy team in British cinema since the "Carry On" gang (some competition). The real stylistic force in the movie, of course, is director Richard Lester, whose delivery of visual gags is as rapid-fire and undiscriminating as the Marx Brothers' delivery of verbal ones. 1965.

 (Roxy, 11/4 and 5, 10:45 p.m.)

Heroes — It's nice, for a change, to see a Vietnam veteran treated as something besides a crack-brained character in the action-movie genre (BLACK SUNDAY, VIGILANTE FORCE, etc.). In this instance, he's treated as a crack-brained character in the road-movie genre. Jeremy Paul Kagan, the director, wants to have it two ways. He wants to cash in the vet's lunacy for its value as screwball comedy and also its value as political commentary. To make the switch from one mood into the other, he depends upon the charisma of the star, Henry Winkler, and Winkler's ability to lead the audience around by its collective nose. Sally Field, on the run from her own wedding, just as she was in SMOKEY AND THE BANDIT gives a performance of spunky independence in what is basically a one-man showcase. 1977.

* (Grossmont, from 11/4)

I Never Promised You a Rose Garden — Kathleen Quinlan in a blessedly unsentimental and unsymbolic characterization, is a pretty tough nut, possessed by a secret society of demons and sworn to serve as their protectress, and Bibi Andersson, who has a pair of pale green eyes to match Quinlan's, is the heroic nutcracker, a psycho-analyst with a useful penchant for detective novels. It's a fairly scary mental-ward movie, complete with a hissably insidious orderly and with tangible, audible bogeymen costumed like the Visgoths in an Italian spectacle. Two big names, Gavin Lambert and Lewis John Carlino, adapted Hannah Green's novel; Anthony Page directed. 1977.

 (Center 3 Cinema 2)

Jabberwocky — A practically unexportable English comedy, one which takes its pleasure in the common schoolboy practice of farnasizing about the pigpen conditions of life in the olden days. Even for viewers who've received a proper English education in Arthurian legend, it is probably not terribly intelligible. In the slough of messy atmospherics and murky lighting, you have to fish around for the jokes, and what you dredge up, more often than not, is a handful of dung, garbage, or gore. The funniest bits have to do with a country-side-terrorizing dragon that's sprung out of a bottom-drawer Japanese monster movie. Starring Michael Palin, and directed by Terry Gilliam, both of the Monty Python group. 1977.

* (University Towne Center)

Jonah Who Will Be 25 in the Year 2000 — Swiss political comedy by Alain Tanner, starring Miou-Miou and Jean-Luc Bideau. 1978. (Unicorn)

Joseph Andrews — Tony Richardson's pastel-colored retreat to the works of Henry Fielding, whose TOM JONES gave him his biggest box-office windfall, has a few spots of knockabout comedy (the country parson sits upon a chocolate pudding, etc.). For the most part, though, the sense of humor is the narrow-minded sort that finds hilarity in antiquity—the extravagant hairstyles, the ghoulish make-up, the frou-frou clothes, the scatological wit ("The only thing moving in these streets is the horses' bowels," hollers an irate nobleman, stuck in a London traffic jam). Nearing the end, the movie degenerates into badly-timed, badly staged, and badly edited action scenes. With Ann-Margret, Peter Firth, Michael Hordern. 1977.

* (College)

Julia — Vanessa Redgrave as the title character, Jane Fonda as Lillian Hellman, and Jason Robards as Dashiell Hammett, directed by Fred Zinnemann.

(Fashion Valley)

The Last Remake of Beau Geste — Marty Feldman, making his directorial debut, borrows heavily from others (especially from Mel Brooks, whose fervent love of old movies drives him to rape and pillage them), and he borrows from himself as well (once he uses a joke, he is more than likely to use it again). If he didn't feel obligated to squeeze a laugh out of the audience every ten seconds, he probably wouldn't have forced himself into such thievery, such redundancy. He does get some good service out of some of his players. Michael York is light-handed and understated as the faultless gentleman hero; James Earl Jones is perfectly ridiculous as a chic sheik with shoe polish on his hair, a smart mustache, a cultivated British accent, and late-victorian gentlemen's club manners; and Ann-Margret, usually a bit broad, executes an elegant slow-take to an indecent suggestion from poppy Roy Kinnear. 1977

CURRENT MOVIES

Lenny — Dustin Hoffman's diligent impersonation erects an unlikely naive Lenny Bruce, uncalculating and imperceptive. And, odd for a former dancer-choreographer, Bob Fosse, the director, robs his actors of movement and body. Instead he prefers to hound them with tight closeups in arty Bermanesque black-and-white, which bluntly underscore the crassness of everybody but luckless Lenny, and he creates movement only with occasional flurries of cut-cut-cut montage. In freely jumping about in time, from nightclub routines to private life, Fosse fractures the refined LADY SINGS THE BLUES fame-and-heartbreak formula, in order to establish some feeble Freudian links between Lenny's raging words and his agonizing experiences. With Valerie Perrine. 1974.
* (Bijou)

Let's Talk About Men — Primarily, this conformist Italian comedy is an acting vehicle for Nino Manfredi, who appears in four skits and four disguises; and only secondarily is it a Lina Wertmuller movie, an early effort. All four parts dish up masculine vanity, but the drollest illustration of the theme is an aging, wildly erratic carnival knife-thrower, whose wife displays her enduring devotion in her multiple facial scars, her peg-leg, and her eyepatch. The movie is one skit too long, and none of them is more amusing than the framing anecdote about a naked man covered in soap suds and locked out of his apartment. 1965.
* (Ken, 11/4 and 5)

Looking for Mr. Goodbar — Judith Rossner's best-seller adapted to the screen and directed by Richard Brooks, starring Diane Keaton, Tuesday Weld, William Atherton, and Richard Kiley.
(Loma)

Love and Anarchy — Lina Wertmuller's political low comedy about a bumpkin-ish, anti-Fascist assassin who takes extended refuge and relaxation at a bordello in Mussolini's Italy. The dominant point of view seems to be that of a thoroughly disgusted dermatologist, drawn irresistibly to facial quirks—freckles, moles, warts, and freakish Fellini-esque makeup. The saving grace, amid the hubbub customary for Italian comedies, is the finely controlled performance, coiled tightly like a watchspring and threatening to fly off at any instant, of Giancarlo Giannini. 1974.
* (Ken, 11/4 and 5)

MacArthur — Gregory Peck pegs his impersonation of the WWII hero on a few static elements of his makeup—his sunglasses, his monk-ish bald spot, his jutting jaw, his corncob pipe the size of a pump handle. In most everything else, he wisely remains Gregory Peck, and his distinctive, straight-arrow rigidity suffices for the five-star general's famous egoism. As biography, the movie is pretty cursory: the characters often speak as if they're summing up large issues on an American History essay test, and at one point the script suggests that MacArthur was single-handedly responsible for the post-war Westernization of Japan. There are some stirring speeches, in the Old Hollywood manner of eulogistic biopics starring Paul Muni. But in a more modern manner, there is always a hint of abnormality about the Old Soldier: in his farewell address to a West Point graduating class, he pledges that his final thoughts on this earth will be of "the corps, the corps, and the corps," as his loyal wife, standing in the wings, beams approvingly ("You are my best soldier," he complimented her earlier). With Ed Flanders, Dan O'Herlihy; directed by Joseph Sargent. 1977.
* (Casino, Flower Hill Cinema 3; UA Cinema 1; Alvarado Drive In; Midway Drive In; from 11/4)

A Man and a Woman — With this, his sixth feature, the previously unknown Claude Lelouch became the Grand Prize recipient at the Cannes festival, an Oscar winner in the Foreign Film category, one of the most financially liberated of filmmakers, and a stylist — shooting quickly, fluidly, on the road, off the cuff — with a worldwide influence. His style is too often classed with advertisements of the take-a-puff-it's-springtime sort; in fact, it is many things, no more partial to the romanticism of footloose, rain-dampened weekend outings than to the mundanity of stagnant, amorphous, improvised chitchat. The solidest area in this enormously flexible, free-form romance between a Grand Prix racer and a withdrawn, widowed script girl is the sober chronicling of the love affair — the mechanism of wooing, from the chance meeting through the first restrained get-togethers, phone calls, carefully worded telegram; and the gradual erosion of the woman's resistance by outside pressure and internal weakness. Lelouch allows the characters considerable space to express themselves, through their casual manners or their memories or fantasies or vocations; and he, operating his own camera, audaciously alters the approach to fit the situation. Jean-Louis Trintignant and Anouk Aimee, responding admirably to the task, flesh out the characters with body and detail and veracity. 1966.
 (La Paloma)

JONAH WHO WILL BE 25 IN THE YEAR 2000

Midway — A milestone of U.S. Naval history is re-created as if specially for buffs of Avalon-Hill war games: a timetable account of all the guesses, gambits, and lucky breaks, as they fell in place, fatefully, in the North Pacific. The father-and-son subplot shows that human interest isn't necessarily as interesting as, say, Chinese checkers. With the interpolation of actual combat footage and footage from an anonymous Japanese war movie, the visual texture of this penny-saving production is pretty choppy. The soundtrack creates most of the excitement, not so much with the Sensurround booms and screeches, but with the radio transmissions of the airplane pilots, screaming like Chick Hearn into their headphones through the action ("Four o'clock! Four o'clock! Get the bastards off me! Help me! Help me!"). Charlton Heston, Henry Fonda, Hal Holbrook, Glenn Ford and Toshiro Mifune; directed by Jack Smight. 1976.
* (Casino; UA Cinema 1; Alvarado Drive In; from 11/4)

Mr. Scarface — Italian-made gangster film, with Jack Palance, directed by Fernando Di Leo.
(Aero Drive In; Big Sky Drive In)

Oh, God — The almighty decides to reaffirm His presence in the universe (the last time He intervened in earthly affairs was to assist the Mets in the 1969 World Series), and selects an agnostic grocery-store manager to be His messenger. Discourse between mere mortals and the deities has been a comic convention of long standing, at least from Aristophanes to Brigid Brophy; but it is seldom practiced on such a rudimentary Sunday School level as it is in this Larry Gelbart script, directed by Carl Reiner. All the impieties in this movie are reserved for trifles (e.g., God's displeasure with His design of avocados, "I made the pits too big"), while God Himself, materialized in the grandfatherly figure of George Burns with fishing cap and plaid flannel shirt, is the object of great fondness, if not exactly adoration. John Denver is perfectly believable as the grocery man; Terri Garr is a fetching Shirley MacLaine soundalike as his wife; and Paul Sorvino does a maliciously funny turn as "God's Quarterback." A generation past, this benign movie might have been made by Frank Capra, with James Stewart and possibly Guy Kibbee as God. 1977.
* (Fashion Valley)

A Piece of the Action — Not an out-and-out farce like the two previous films which united Bill Cosby and Sidney Poitier and were directed by the latter. Rather, a more-or-less straight caper picture, with social consciousness and a light touch, about a pair of con artists who are blackmailed into social responsibility by an ex-cop (niftily played by James Earl Jones). UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT and LET'S DO IT AGAIN never got near the sort of scene in which a Mr. Big monster persistently addresses Poitier as "boy," and Poitier, his eyes flashing, retaliates with the epithet "Titty sucker!" Even if the tone of the thing wavers uncertainly, Poitier's swell-chested humaneness bulls its way into every scene. 1977.
* (Cabrillo; Center 3 Cinema 1; UA Cinema 2; University Towne Center; Vogue; Frontier Drive In; from 11/4; Plaza Twin 2)

Rolling Thunder — First half-hour develops a sharply-observed contrast between the erect public postures and the disheveled private lives of POWs returning from Southeast Asia. Paul Schrader, the angry young screenwriter, obviously has something to say about the lingering aftereffects of the Vietnam war, but he is not going to come right out and say it. Instead, he takes refuge in the teeth-gritting, muscle-flexing bravado of the traditional action film. Director John Flynn does some good location shooting around the Tex-Mex border, although some of the scenery is lost in the muddy color processing. And Linda Haynes, wonderfully natural as the self-declared "groupie" who attaches herself to William Devane's tortured war hero, is an unexpected bonus in this pig-headedly masculine movie. With Tommy Lee Jones, Dabney Coleman, Luke Askew, and James Best. 1977.
 (Plaza)

The Ruling Class — This British social satire seems to be all fads and fluctuating interest in its attempts to pamper the youth audience, which, according to director Peter Medak, must have a taste for bits of everything: operetta, psychology, religion, sex, monster murder, comedy, antiques, interior decoration. The only apparent accuracy this movie has about its Lincolnshire location is the beguiling pretty pink complexions of the people. With Peter O'Toole. 1972.
• (Ken, 11/6 through 8)

Scenes from a Marriage — An Ingmar Bergman soap opera transferred from Swedish weekly television to American art theaters. It has soap opera's virtue of airing private and domestic questions and beckoning the audience into the argument. Very spare; in fact, nothing much to look at except for the exchanged intimacies, the discomforting revelations, the unstifled pains on the faces of Erland Josephson and Liv Ullmann; all of life is reduced to talk, philosophical, trivial, brutal, all kinds. 1974.
* (California School of Professional Psychology, 11/4, 7 p.m.)

Silver Streak — Innocuous take-off of the LADY VANISHES-NIGHT TRAIN railway thrillers, executed without any sense of the style of the Hitchcock-Reed prototypes, and replacing the sophisticated fun with a more sophomoric type. The poppycock plot has a movie buff's sure feel for standard cloak-and-dagger situations (the funniest gimmick is having the innocent hero—Gene Wilder of the gullible eyes and the distraught hairdo—ejected from the train at regular intervals), but the only participant who appears to understand the proper tone for this sort of thing is Patrick McGoohan, in the role of the suavely sinister art curator from Chicago. Richard Pryor, Jill Clayburgh, Ned Beatty; directed by Arthur Hiller. 1976.
* (University Towne Center)

Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger — Ray Harryhausen's animated beasties (triplet demons, a brass robot minotaur, a monstrous walrus, a 15-foot troglodyte, an oversized saber-toothed tiger) are enjoyable as ever, but Sam Wanamaker's discombobulated direction (a How-Not-To handbook on composition and editing) renders all the minutes in between Harryhausen's show-stoppers unendurable. With Patrick Wayne and Taryn Power. 1977.
• (Century Twin 1)

Smokey and the Bandit — With characters called The Bandit, Mr. Big, and Sheriff Buford T. Justice, you might anticipate allegory, but you get nothing more than Southern-fried Keystone Kops. Sally Field, as a chipper chorus girl fleeing from a shotgun wedding, has a natural sense of humor that gives her role an air of improvisation (her doing tap-steps on the inside of the car windshield is a lovely touch), and she also generates some honest sentiment, in between tire squeals and fender bendings, as she reaches out across cultural barriers to a redneck outlaw who speaks of fun and Waylon Jennings while she speaks of "genius" and Stephen Sondheim. With Burt Reynolds, Jerry Reed, and Jackie Gleason; directed by Hal Needham. 1977.
* (State)

The Spy Who Loved Me — A scrapbook of earlier Bond escapades. It takes the skiing chase from ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE, the underwater stuff from THUNDERBALL, the fight in the train compartment from FROM RUSSIA, WITH LOVE, the supposedly unassailable criminal fortress and the commando take-over of same from YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE. It even stoops to borrow a gimmick involving a giant crane-operated magnet from the Matt Helm series—one of James Bond's idiot offspring. Lewis Gilbert's direction is smoothly efficient, and Claude Renoir's color work consistently fine—it has the light, luscious look of French pastry. But in general, this simpering, featherheaded, imitative installment continues the series' trend toward emasculation—this Bond ought to have his double O's removed. Roger Moore, Barbara Bach, Curt Jurgens, Caroline Munro. 1977.
* (Center 3 Cinema 3; Spring Valley; Strand; Ace Drive In; Tu Vu Drive In)

A Star Is Born — The twice-told (first by William Wellman in 1937, second by George Cukor in 1954) fame-and-heartbreak tale is told once more, minus the fundamental narrative facility of the earlier versions. The rising star's hungry aspirations and the falling star's artistic ego are established so negligently that the ensuing spectacle of love, anguish, and sacrifice makes very little sense. The circus-y rock music milieu is done reasonably well, but the movie retains plenty of old Hollywood cliches about the music-making art (she picks out a little melody on a piano, and he, hearing it for the first time, immediately chimes in with off-the-cuff lyrics). Kris Kristofferson struggles manfully with the voice-straining musical arrangements and the cuddly stuff with his overbearing co-star, Barbra Streisand, and he emerges, unbruised, as one of the eminent Sex Symbols of his day. Streisand, her Jon Peters frizzed hairdo sitting atop her head like a lampshade, her lips writhing with a worm-like life of their own, has a more arcane appeal. Directed by Frank Pierson. 1976.
* (University Towne Center)

Star Wars — George Lucas's homage to Flash Gordon embraces, too, some of the beloved cliches of cowboy, swashbuckler, and aviator movies. The story is set in a remote galaxy in the remote past, so that it can't be mistaken as a reflection of anything in modern-day society except Hollywood hokum, and it can be recommended warmly to anyone with a mental age of under twelve. The miniatures and special effects are the best that money can buy; the wholesome heroes, Mark Hamill and Harrison Ford, look as though they've been recruited from a volleyball court on the California coast; the anthropomorphized robots, especially the crotchety one who talks in the voice of a prissy British valet ("I've got such a bad case of dust contamination I can barely move"), are as adorable as your household pets; and the narrative, despite a bewildering prologue three paragraphs in length, is not so complicated or imaginative as an average Captain America comic. Should Lucas be thought primarily benevolent for giving the audience such blissful, innocent, simple-minded thrills, or primarily cynical for deciding the audience requires nothing more? With Alec Guinness, Carrie Fisher, Peter Cushing. 1977.

The Bling — The BUTCH CASSIDY gang, Redford and Newman and director George Roy Hill, regroups for a MISSION IMPOSSIBLE-like caper (you can never be sure that even the snafus aren't part of the fake-out scheme), set in the urban 1930s. Re-creation of the period is pretty thorough in terms of interior decoration and clothing styles, but in terms of cinematic style it is done absent-mindedly, a dash here, a pinch there. The movie's main concern, though, is that you like the stars and pray for them to come through unscathed. Newman by now presumes you like him or no longer cares, while Redford keeps on pushing, pushing. With Robert Shaw. (PG) * (State)

Swashbuckler — The olden days of the buccaneers are revived by out-of-trim actors in slushy, churning action scenes. The irresistible camera seems to be never in the right place. It's conceivable that Hollywood simply doesn't know how to make this type of movie anymore, even at the luxurious budget of ten millions; it's a certainty that this director, James Goldstone, doesn't. With Robert Shaw, James Earl Jones, Genevieve Bujold. 1976. * (South Bay, from 11/4)

The Swiss Conspiracy — One of those humdrum caper pictures, filmed on automatic-pilot, whose only excuse is the opportunity it affords its participants to do some European sightseeing. With David Janssen, Senta Berger, Elke Sommer, directed by Jack Arnold. 1977. * (Aero Drive In; Big Sky Drive In)

Valentino — Ken Russell lets you know soon that he will be operating at his customary level of crassness (he shows you the funeral parlor employees boarding up the windows with spare coffin lids in order to protect Valentino's body from the crush of admirers). The chief difference between this and his earlier artist biographies is that Russell has never before felt so free to belittle the artist's creative—in addition to his personal—life (he shows you a full house watching THE SHEIK, every patron a woman). The casting of the Slavic Nureyev as the premier Latin Lover of silent movies proves to be as misbegotten an idea as it initially sounded. His Russian-ness alters the very basis of Valentino's appeal, and the inevitable exploiting of Nureyev's special talent fosters the impression that Valentino was really in his element only when he was a vaudeville dancer. With Michelle Phillips, Leslie Caron, Seymour Cassel. 1977. * (Bijou; University Towne Center)

You Light Up My Life — Joseph Brooks wrote, produced, directed, and scored the music for this film about the world of pop music. With Didi Conn and Joe Silver. (Clairemont; UA Cinema 3)

Social Security. "Do you think she can afford to buy a new house on that? Or even rent a small apartment?" asks Mrs. Hurtado. "If she loses her land, she'll be condemned to a rest home." Mrs. Hurtado fears what they would do to her mother.

Next to Grandma Cruz's property is the vacant Micromanipulator building, which has three large doors and was at one time intended to be a garage. Fifteen years ago it was purchased by R.D. "Stan" Hancock, and in those days Second Avenue was not even paved. The only Anglo on the block, Hancock notes that only two people in the area are not bilingual. One woman, Sara Cruz, does not speak English, and Hancock does not speak Spanish.

"There are a number of things I can tell you about these people that they probably won't tell you about themselves," he confides. "The thing that impresses me most of all is the close family ties they have. Take the Cruzes next door: when I moved here there was Grandpa Cruz, Grandma Cruz, and a brother-in-law who, at that time, was well into his eighties. And then you take Anglos like ourselves: by the time we reach the age of the Cruzes we're in rest homes and don't have but occasional visits from relatives. But the Cruzes have been bathed in a constant stream of children.

"They're unique. They've got the only house in Escondido with both a gas stove and a wood stove. I talked to Grandma Cruz about the stoves a few years ago. She said the gas stove is fine if you're going to make coffee or just boil water. But if you're going to cook enchiladas, you need a wood stove." At Christmas time, Hancock confesses, he is particularly nice to Grandma Cruz, for it is then that she makes turkey tamales. Hancock gets a dozen of them.

The tamales start with backyard cages holding live turkeys, which are slaughtered and thrust into scalding water. The feathers are plucked, and the birds are then cooked and sliced. Grandma Cruz's backyard is noted for more than just the yearly turkey feast. The place contains choice mulberry trees and the city's only outhouse, which has a flush toilet. Hancock says the women use the bathroom in the house, while the men make the trek to the outhouse. Perhaps that little walk has something to do with their longevity, he muses.

The backyard is often filled with the cooing of Grandma Cruz's doves. Over the years she has kept several varieties, and Hancock thinks the present ones sound like soft, woodwind instruments. At one time there was a dove that used to sing along with one of Hancock's machines, and for quite a while Grandma Cruz had a parrot which would say "Kitty, kitty, kitty." The parrot was so large no cat ever took up the offer.

Hancock says the city fathers would like to run bulldozers over the houses because they are old and not up to present building standards. But the city, he contends, fails to realize that these people are self-sufficient, that they're earning their own livings, that they can redevelop the area themselves and maintain their own integrity and their residents' security. They're particularly frugal, too, he points out. When Second Avenue was widened a few years ago, before it became the main offramp for the new freeway, each property owner was assessed about $1,000 for the improvements. Hancock let his assessment go to bond so he could pay it off over several years. More than three-fourths of the people on the street paid cash. "This is significant considering all these people were agricultural workers."

Hancock points with pride that there is no fence between his property and his neighbors'. He would sometimes forget to lock his building, but he never lost anything, not even the smallest tool, to one of the local children. "In Los Angeles you wouldn't get caught after sundown in a neighborhood with this kind of appearance. But my wife would often work here alone until eleven at night." He says there has simply never been any crime in the area, a fact seconded by Jess Lopez, who explains that he has never had any trouble at his market.

Most large trucks used to get through Escondido by using Grand Avenue, the main east-west thoroughfare. But the merchants complained about the noise which was admittedly bothersome. They petitioned the city council to reroute the trucks along Second Avenue, which is one-way eastward, and Valley Parkway, which is one-way westward. An environmental impact report was filed which said there would be no adverse effects from having the trucks go down Second, a residential street, even though these were the same trucks that caused too much noise on Grand.

Because of the redirection of the traffic, Hancock had to move his company elsewhere. The vibrations from the trucks and the sodium in the exhaust fumes prevented his people from building semiconductor devices. All the residents on Second were hurt when the curbs were later painted red, thus eliminating on-street parking, and the strip of grass between the sidewalk and the street was removed. The area is no longer considered safe for children. Then came the building moratorium and the $1,000 ceiling on repairs.

The average lot here is 7,000 square feet. If given two dollars a square foot under condemnation proceedings, the owners would get $14,000. Even if they were then given the greatest relocation expenses allowed by law ($15,000), the $29,000 total would still not pay for a home anywhere else in town. No one expects the relocation expenses to be more than a few hundred dollars per family, and this means any new home, no matter how dilapidated, would carry with it a burdensome mortgage, the payments for which these people could not meet.

Hancock says if the area were rezoned commercial, the financial advisors he has spoken with estimate each 7,000-square-foot lot would be worth between $75,000 and $100,000, which means the mercado could be a real possibility. "These are the people who built this community and we owe them the profits of their work. They aren't speculators from the outside; they've lived here for forty, fifty, or sixty years. And keeping their land is a small reward for their service to the community and to their country. Just because they're old or speak Spanish they shouldn't be kicked off and have their property handed over to Hahn. This is a moral battle," he says, "which we'll win because we have morality and truth on our side."

Each Monday night the Second Avenue residents meet in Stan Hancock's vacant Micromanipulator building, where they discuss how best to employ their meager resources to insure the success of the November 8 ballot measure. In this matter they are led by a young attorney, Gary Knopp, who has made their fight his own.

Hanging from the walls and ceiling of Hancock's building are full-size reproductions of old American flags, and there is in their presence a certain irony in that the government these people and their fathers adopted now plans to take away what little they have. To the homeowners along Second Avenue that seems wrong. The land was watered with their sweat for more than half a century, and they feel the first fruits should be theirs. □

If all guitars looked the way they sound...

...you'd have no problem picking the right guitar. Unfortunately, most look alike and sound different. At Gary Music Co. we know: there can be as many sound variations between two identical guitars as there are differences between a cigar box and a finely crafted flat top.
So if you're shopping for a guitar, see Gary Music Co. The guitar that captures your ear will capture your eye as well.

Our average patient loses 2 pounds a day.

This is not a claim, but a fact based on a clinic of 1300 New York patients who have used PSMF (Protein-Sparing Modified Fast).

This new and exciting method of shedding pounds is designed for use under proper medical supervision. You will experience no feeling of hunger, nor any energy drain.

Once your weight loss has been achieved, our behavior modification program will help you eliminate diets throughout your life.

Your welfare is in the balance.

Omelets!

Fluffy four-egg omelets. So fresh they're almost insulting. There's ham and cheddar cheese. Avocado and bean sprouts. Mushroom and sunflower seeds. The traditional Denver. Or our classic Bistro omelet, with onions, peppers, tomato, cheese and Spanish sauce. So lovingly prepared our friends say they're the best in town.

Find out for yourself. And save money too. Fifty cents off with this ad on any omelet in the house through Nov. 30. What a deal. And what a meal!

Re-Elect Julie Fisher
San Diego Board of Education

WINDOWLESS SCHOOLS ARE COSTING TAXPAYERS $100,000,000 IN EXCESS OF THE COST OF COMPARABLE TRADITIONAL SCHOOLS
Windowless schools cost over 50% more per square foot to build. In addition monthly gas/electric bills are 2 to 10 times greater!
The cost to maintain the new air conditioning systems is over $300,000 per year. That is more than twice the total yearly cost of window breakage ($145,000).
GAS ELECTRIC BILLS (Dec. '76 thru Aug. '77)
Schools With Windows / Schools Without Windows
JULIE FISHER IS THE ONLY SCHOOL BOARD MEMBER FIGHTING AGAINST THE CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL WINDOWLESS SCHOOLS
JULIE FISHER SUPPORTS SPENDING LIMITS
San Diego School Board Candidates have traditionally conducted low budget personal campaigns emphasizing public forums, coffees and debates.
Julie has kept this tradition. She won the Primary with a low cost (less than $2,000 - 15 cents per vote) personal campaign.
Her opponent spent over 7 times as much as any candidate has ever spent in San Diego Board history (over $15,000 - $1.50 per vote).
Three of the four School Board finalists have agreed to campaign spending limitations.
JULIE FISHER'S OPPONENT IS THE ONLY ONE WHO REFUSES TO LIMIT SPENDING
Vote for Julie Fisher!

Breakfast—
Is San Diego Ready for the Eggless Breakfast?

We are now serving breakfast on Saturday and Sunday mornings from 8 am - noon, while maintaining the same uncompromising standards we've always had. No eggs, no sugar, no coffee, but look what we have:
1. Scrambled tofu with home fries & toast (that's our homemade bread, folks)
2. Bill Gordon's No. 1 hot cereal
3. Pancakes with fresh fruit
4. Cinnamon Rolls
5. Fresh squeezed orange juice (carrot too)
6. Lots of hot teas and more

The Third Dimension:

DEPTH!

Have you ever had one of those pizzas that's like a saltine cracker with ketchup on top? You know the kind—it seems big, but when you look at it from the side it disappears. We'd like to offer you the chance to discover a new dimension in pizza.

DEPTH! at Chicago Bros.

We'll serve you a pizza that's an inch thick, and dripping with cheese. So when you get hungry, drop by Chicago Brothers for the finest Sicilian Style Pizza in town.
