Habla Cadabra

Several new e-mail programs are not yet available to all users, but those that are will be useful. A group of programmers and designers have created a new Web-based browser, called "Habla Cadabra," which allows users to communicate in real-time with each other using text, images, and audio. The program is currently available to a limited number of users, but the developers hope to expand it soon.

I. Do I Hear Three Dollars?

JANEANNE DE BRIEVE

As a child growing up in Chicago, I knew of a vibrant world of Northern European culture that I found fascinating. My parents were both from Norwegian backgrounds, and they spoke Norwegian at home. They instilled in me a deep appreciation for their heritage, and I became interested in learning more about the culture and its traditions. One of the things that attracted me was the idea of traveling to Norway to see what it was like in person. I had heard about the beauty of the Northern Lights and the picturesque landscapes, and I wanted to experience them for myself.

My parents suggested that I might consider taking a more serious interest in art, given my love for painting and drawing. They recommended attending a prestigious art school in New York City, where they had both received their education. I was hesitant at first, but eventually agreed to take the plunge. I was accepted into the program and began my studies.

During my time at the art school, I immersed myself in the study of art theory and practice. I experimented with different mediums and techniques, pushing myself to improve my skills. I also took advantage of the opportunities to travel and see new places, always looking for inspiration.

Years later, I was able to make the trip to Norway that I had always dreamed of. The landscapes were even more beautiful in person than I had imagined. I explored the countryside, visiting small towns and villages, and admiring the natural beauty of the surroundings.

As I walked through the streets of Oslo, I couldn’t help but notice the vibrant community of artists and creatives. I decided to stay for a few more weeks, exploring the city and immersing myself in the culture. I was inspired by the energy and creativity of the locals, and I felt a deep sense of connection to this place.

Eventually, I returned home, but the memories of my trip to Norway stayed with me. I continued to be inspired by the art and culture of the region, and I often returned to the paintings and sketches I had created during my trip. I realized that my passion for art had grown even stronger, and that I wanted to pursue it as a career.

I decided to apply to several galleries and museums, and was accepted to a few. I worked hard to improve my skills and refine my style, always striving to create something that was unique and meaningful. I exhibited my work in galleries and at art shows, and began to gain recognition for my contributions to the art world.

Through it all, I never forgot my love for the culture and landscapes of Norway. I continued to be inspired by the beauty of the region, and I am grateful for the opportunity to have experienced it firsthand. It has been a source of inspiration for me throughout my career, and I hope to continue exploring the art and culture of the region for years to come.
