For customers, it seems a price to brag about. San Diego residents currently pay about $2.10 per month to have trash removed by one of the city's 139 trashmen. It's figured into property taxes.

While riding my bike on Harbor Island, I white raing my blue on Harbor Island, I saw a beautiful, square-rigged ship under full sail. I'm told the ship is called Ren-dezvous, and that aboard her one can take classes in old-style sailing. Could you give me more information about this? Cariyan Schmidt

The Harbor Island Sailing Academy charters the ship about once a month for a weekend class that includes five hours of sailing each day. The class costs eighty dollars. Most of the students are long-time sailors themselves, who want to learn how former long-time sailors would have handled this eighty-foot, two-masted wooden vessel. Rendezvous was built in Seattle in 1935 as a private yacht for Dr. Groneman Hjalmr. It is a scaled-down ver-sion of a British privateer, or privately owned warship. Today the ship plays its owned warship. Today the ship plays its part in a psychological war against whal-ing, since Greenpeace, the anti-whaling group, has booked the ship every weekend through mid-February for whale-watching cruises to the tip of Point Loma. (The four-hour cruise costs ten dollars a person rour-nour cruise costs ten dollars a person; reservations through Greenpeace at 274-4380.) In December I shipped with a crowd of reporters and cameramen on a whale-watching cruise aboard Rendezrous, and I can say the ship was lovely from stern to bowsprit. I made myself a cup of hot chocolate on the ship's electric stove, and that was lovely, too.

Dear Matthew Alice:

Last February I subscribed to Outside magazine at a special "charter subscrip-tion" rate of $7.99 for twelve monthly issues. Then six months later, Outside

The best you'll get is a refund of a couple of dollars, but be prepared to settle for nothing. I suggest you call the state attorney general's office at 237-7251 and ask for a complaint form, then fill it out and return it by mail. Al Shelden, an attorney in the cossumer protection unit, said ney in the consumer protection unit, said your complaint "certainly sounds like one we would follow up. "I called the toll-free subscription number for Outside, but that

Whether they get it or entitled to a retund, whether they get not not depends on the strength of the magazine's parent company, Outside was founded by Rolling Stone. And so the question is: Rock and roll journalism is great to read, but does it pay?

demonstrates this ability. The deposit from the bottles buys their lunch-time sodas, which they guzzle between bites of bologna sandwiches every day on their first trip to the dump. Plastic sacks have a tendency to weaken from the heat and break in the summer-time. If they break over the street, the trashman has to pick it up; if they break over the sidewalk, he can leave it there. Plastic garbage cans take a beating in the winter. "Plastic cans ain't no good," complains Coleman. "In the summertime they're flimsy, and in the winter they break if you put too much in them. If you bang em like this lhe smacks one against the back of the truck, trying to dislodge its contents lthey crack, and then they're no good anymore. Coleman has been hauling trash since the days plastic garbage cans and plastic sacks were a dream of the future. By the time he's able to retire, at the age of fifty time he's able to retire, at me age of my-seven and a half, he'll have given almost thirty-six years of service to the city. "Any man should be able to retire with thirty years." asserts Coleman. "I'll have thirty-five in by the time I retire. And I can't draw social security then either, I'll can't draw social security then enter, i'il be too young, and I can't live on retirement pay alone. 'He'll be drawing about half his $1200 monthly salary when he retires. Many city trashmen go to work for private disposal companies after retiring from the Coleman's partner, Willie Carter, is fifty-three and can retire in about four years. He'll have thirty years in a garbage truck by then, but the only apparent phys-ical effect those years will have etched on him is a taut, muscular body. Bony, knotty, and wiry, he looks thirty-five. But the years have taken their toll. When Carer nunches out in the afternoons, usually to go work on the ten rental units he own-just off Imperial in Logan Heights, he takes the scream of the trash truck's engine with him. He describes it as a constant static in his ears, and doctors have diagnosed hearing damage. He and Coleman have mentioned their truck's excessive noise many times to their supervisors, and

paid about $1/00 for his hearing loss. He hopes to get more money eventually. Coleman's ears also bother him, he says. The city uses General Motors trucks manufactured in 1971, and many are now in need of replacement (wenty 'ew models will soon be delivered). Still, not all ets will soon be cenvered. Still, not all trucks in the fleet are excruciatingly loud. Homer King and William Douglas can carry on a normal conversation (unlike Carter and Colenian) in the cab of their truck on the way to the dump or to the first can on their route, which this day begins can on their route, which this day negans downtown. King does most of the driving because Douglas, his partner of three years, hurt his leg in an accident a few years back and if he drives, the leg cramps. But King leaps from the truck, seemingly But King leaps from the truck, seemingly before it stops, at nearly every pick up site and loads about as much as Douglas. Yesterday, two days after Christmas, they loaded sixteen tons, dumping twice; today they expect to load about fifteen. King, forty years old, scrappy, with a reddish mustache trimmed down to the top reddsh mustache trimmed down to the top of his lip, nowder blue eyes, and big, yel-lowing teeth, is one of the few Caucasains working out of the city's central yard at Twenty-sixth and B streets. The father of two children, another due in lune, he gros-ses about $1100 a month. In between fre-quent stops (King and Douglas work at a furious pace). King has a chance to talk. "When I was in the service" in be save. "When I was in the service," he says, steering the truck down J Street, "I worked four years as a clerk-typist. I hated that, sitting at a desk all day. I hated that. Here, you work five hours, and you get a workout. I like the excercise. It feel workout. I like the excercise. It feels good." King hops out to help Douglas, who is big, husky, and sweating profusely. The trash from the downtown bars, hotels, and eard rooms is particularly heavy. Hundreds of liquor bottles and the dead weight of thousands of sopping cocktail weight of thousands of sopping cockitain napkins fill the garbage trough, and neither trashman looks for anything of value. Speed is more important to King and Douglas, and besides, they seem to get a lot of gifts from customers. A weaving black man hands them a six-pack of Coorat 7:30 a.m. downtown, and a Filipino woman on Nineteenth Street in Golden Hill gives them a bowlful of uncooked rice an hour later. "She gives us tomatoes in King worked at a dairy for nine years King worked at a dary for nine years before signing on as a trashman with the city nine years ago, and contrary to the feelings of some other trashmen, he doesn't feel stigmatized because of his job. "Nobody's better than me and I ain't no better than anybody else," he drawls in his Alabama accent. "I guess some people are smarter than me and make more money. and I envy them; but that's the way things

As King says this, Douglas is on the back of the truck, swamping and sweating and paying little attention to the trash he collecting. "You don't find anything anymore," he says later, placing an empty can back on the curb. "You used to find a lot more clothes. Times is hard. People are keeping it for themselves now." Douglas keeping it for memseries now. Dougras steps up on the truck and rides a few yards to the next stop, near the corner of Nineteenth and Island. With much effort he takes the time to empty four cans of the type he's not required to handle. They are sixteen-gallon drums, with two ribs run-sixteen-gainon drains, with two rios run-ing their circumference which hold the trash in and make it a devil to get out. "You don't have to empty those kinds of barrels, do you?" asks an observer. "We ain't supposed to," Douglas re-plies, reaching into a can to pull out its contents.

his eyes hardening as he gestures to the very modest house behind the cans. It's 10:30 a.m., three and a half hours after King and Douglas started, and time to make the first of two trips to the dump at Chollas landfill, our on Highway 94 just off College Grove Drive. Both men realize this is one of the last times they'll be able to rush as fast as they'd like in order to finish and go home early in the afternoon. In less than a week, the trashmen's supervisors than a week, the trashment supervisors are not going to allow their men to punch out before two o'clock, both in an effort to spread the dumping of the garbage over a longer time (to ease the congestion at the ever-shrinking Chollas landfill), and to cut down on injuries and accidents by slowing the men down. Some used to finish as early as 12:30 p.m. after getting underway about 7:00 a.m. Though accidents involving vehieles aren't that common, injuries to the hieles aren I that common, injuries to the men, especially back injuries, are a serious problem. It's a rare city trashman who hasn't hurt his back at one time or another. Due to the high rate of injury, and to the fact that you can't pick up trash if you're not feeling your best, there are about forty men who work part time for the city, ready to load trash (and hoping eventually to get on full time) any day on full times any day.

After weighing their track, Douglas and King drive down into the landfull, an area enclosed on flittee usides by a linge full composed of Sam Diego's trabe, man and a few maranding sequills. In the early fall of 1979 the Cholkas landfull is expected to reach its capacity, and the city hopes to shift is dumping activities across the street to what is called North Choltas. Residents in the area are determined not to have a in the area are determined not to have a new dump in their backyards, though, and much doubt exists as to whether the new dump will be realized. Even if the new landfill is opened there will be a gap in time between then and when the present dump is forced to close. In the interim, trucks would have to dump at either the Miramar or the Otay landfills. Considering the closure last October of the Jamacha dump in the east county and the Decembe closure of the Oceanside dump, it appears that San Diego is running out of room to bury its garbage. (The private companies, about a dozen of which service the areas outside San Diego city limits, are prohib ited from dumping at the city landfills, so they're already feeling the pinch from Jamacha's closing. Most of the privateenterprise trucks have to drive out to Otay to dump now.) If the North Chollas landfil is not built, the city estimates it would cost an additional $36,000 a month to pick up the trash and dump it at a more inconvenient site; the increased cost would presumtent site; the intereased cost woult presum-ably be passed along to residents. Through a combination of the city's ef-forts to slow the trashmen down and the specter of longer drives to and from gradu-ally disappearing dumps, one of the main attractions of the job of trashman—the short hours—is dissolving. Indeed, it's one of the few attractions the job ever had: one of the few attractions the job ever had, not counting the scavening privileges. There are plenty of detractions already, the main one being the fact that people look down on trashmen. Ernest Burton, who is been a city trashman eleven years and once found a color television in the trash heap that only needed twenty-six dollars in re-naise, despit, even tell people, wheth the that only needed twenty-six dolars in re-pairs, doesn't even tell people what he does for a living. "I tell 'em I'm a truck driver," he says sheepishly. "Look the two lowest jobs you can have are janifor and trashman, right?"

R.J. Coleman, working his Wednesday.

route in North Park between Adams and El Caion Boulevard, believes the trashman' Cajon Boulevard, believes the trasmian's image isn't as tarnished as it once was. "They used to look down on you, but not anymore," he says, standing in a wide, lifeless alley "With everybody looking for a job, they can't afford to look down on you. At least I'm working, making a liv-ing. But I can remember a time when people would put out the trash and hold their nose when you came to pick it up, like it was your fault it smelled, and it wasn't their stinky shit sittin' there." Coleman uncorks another high-pitched, resonant laugh that somehow seems out of place in the solemn alley. The laugh belongs in the zestful alleys of Southeast San Diego where groups of men gather to drink beer on back porches, children cavort and women chase them. The people one sees from the alleys of North Park are generally peeking out of back windows.

Coleman rides a few feet down the alley, thinking about his job. "It's the word, 'trashman,' that messes people up.'
he continues. 'They think trashman means you the trash. Shit, all I do is pick up the trash. I ain't no trash man."

Around the corner in another alley a friendly customer hands Coleman two six-packs of Michelob. It ups the day's take to twelve bottles of beer, an electrican opener (no visible damage), a waffle can opener (no visible damage), a waffer iron, two cans of soup, various pots, pans, and knives, a pair of Levis, and half a loaf of Holsum white bread. "I got a dog." Coleman explained as he picked the loa out of the trough and inspected it. "He'll

In contrast to the city trashmen's caution in divulging what they do with the mer-chandise they salvage, the trashmen who work for private firms readily admit that they sell a lot of what they find in the trash. It's looked upon as a legitimate way to augment their relatively low income. At Edco Disposal Corporation, the largest trash-collecting firm in the county, top wage for a veteran trashman is forty-five dollars a day. It works out to about $180 a week in take-home pay. Hank Berry, who's worked for Edco off and on for about ten years, knows the extent a man will go to in order to save something valuable from the trash heap. "One time we were picking up at a bank," Berry relates, "and my partner saw a fifty-dollar bill in the hopper. He jumped in to get it while the and Bolden were working from six in the morning to as late as eight-thirty at night.

It's a result of the county's efforts to get the dumps paying for themselves. Edco offi-cials acknowledge the inevitability of their rates rising again in the near future. For Berry and Bolden, any increase in rates is sure to bring increased abuse from the public. They have numerous stories of Nowadays Berry and his current partner getting the finger flown at them, people and cousin, Mike Bolden, salvage very little from the trash. They just got assigned to a brand-new purple-and-white truck, a pulling in front of them to cut them off and chew them out for leaving a garbage can lying in a driveway (one instance like this side loader, really a one-man truck, and resulted in a woman calling Berry and a partner niggers and black S.O.B.s, after which Berry refused to pick up her trash anymore unless she apologized. The com-pany later told Berry she said she was there is not room to store anything while they drive their route. As in the city crews' case, new equipment means more work for Berry and Bolden. The truck has slowed Berry and Bolden. The truck has slowed down their pace, since the hopper is less efficient, requiring two or three tries to pack the garbage through a small aperture and into the cavity. The garbage trough smaller, two, so only one man at a time can effectively empty trash into it, and many of the cans they empty have to be intied over the cans they empty have to be intied over tween Christmas and New Year's. [Berry doesn't like to wear gloves when he picks up trash], and I went to this lady's home and asked if she'd call the office. The next week she moved out. A neighbor said it was because I bled on her doorstep

Now what's that do to your head?" Berry, whose solid forearms and shoul-ders look like they belong on a man with a much bigger frame, is blind in one eye This has kept him out of the city's corps of trashmen. Bolden has also tried repeatedly to get on with the city, to no avail. Bolden, who is twenty-seven, says he had been working at a National City disposal firm for ten years before Edeo bought it out. He lost all that seniority, and now the firm's retirement program counts his time as three years. Berry officially has two years on the books. He is thirty-five and has two daughters. When Berry and Bolden reach Rancho San Diego they get right to work. From the lifting of the first can the pace is fast, the labor back-breaking. There is little talk while they hustle past the prim yards and load the upper-middle-class garbage, which is mostly paper and Christmas too boxes. Nearly all the garbage cans are shiny plastic, almost none of them are lying prone from dog rummaging, and the plastic garbage sacks are as numerous as the rotating TV antennaes. There are plenty of throwaway diapers. After about fifteen minutes the garbage.

the houses, the yards, take on a sameness that is almost hypnotic. The hard physical labor and potential danger keeps the men aware and saves them from stupefaction. The high points of the morning are waves from wide-eyed children and the discovery of a 35mm rangefinder camera in good working condition. Neither Berry nor Bol-den complains of anything, though Berry mentions the boredom almost apologeti-cally. They lose themselves in the rhythm and let their hours and days click by, and measure the passage with tons of garbage.

Asked if he's going to be swamping for the rest of his life. Berry shrugs and replies.

"Yeah, 'til I die or get fired."

JONATHAN SAVILLE

I saw the Old Globe's production of Toys in the Artic last week downtown at the Spreckels. There are some good things to be said about it, but all in all this was a disappointing evening.

It is not the production itself that is at fault. Everything about it is more than adequate, and certain elements are really adequate, and certain elements are really excellent Prominent among these is Nick Reid's splendid set—a big, sprawling, homely New Orleans house, with a meticulously realistic attention to detail The vivid realism extends down to the gar-den border, a miscellany of plants so con-vincing that you feel like leaping onstage vincing that you teel like leaping onstage to water them. Beyond the gateway there are evocative suggestions of the street the Berniers family lives on—a street lamp, and a darkened sky that blots out all the world beyond. (Oddly, lighting designer Steph Storer has chosen to leave the sky black even when it is supposed to be a bright summer morning, with light streaming through the house's windows—an effect appropriate to the weird atmosphere of a Magritte painting.

Attic.)
The actors, too, are technically and in-terpetively fine. The two spinster Ber-niers sisters, played by Valerie Snyder and Anne Archer Krill, are nicely charac-terized and effectively differentiated. Miss Snyder's Carrie Berniers is all sweetness. warmth, and generosity, with a perpetual undercurrent of petulance, possessive-ness, jealousy, and rage, it is no surprise when this hidden hysteria breaks through and takes over her actions. Miss Krill's and takes over her actions. Miss Krill's Anna Berniers, in contrast, its less intense, more stable, a solid, reliable, well-balanced person with a capacity for cheerfulness not un. uched by a resigned sadness. Miss Krill also has a lovely speaking voice (sale sings well; too.) there is a fault to be found in these two persons are some stable s times sounds like the real thing, but often as not she will subside into her native British, while Miss Krill, who tries less hard, at least has the virtue of consistency.

(The problem of accents is pervasive in this production, however, and there is no reason for singling out these two otherwise skillful actresses.) One might also object to the apparent ages of the two. Anna is supposed to be older than Carrie, but Miss Krill actually looks significantly younger than Miss Snyder, detracting from the realism that is so crucial to the production of a play like this.

The Berniers ne'er-do-well brother, Julian, is well played by Thomas Reiter, who many was seem sided for the part. He is good-looking and vital, which explains why Julian's young wife adores him and why his sister Carrie secretly lusts for him. His characterization manifests both the goodness and the weakness of this pampered younger brother—his reckless generosity, his longing for respect, his inability to keep from boasting when he thinks he has made a financial killing, the dependence on women he keeps falling lian, is well played by Thomas Reiter, who dependence on women he keeps falling back into after each fruitless effort to stand on his own.

There are also solid performances by Julia Frampton, as Julian's wealthy, pa-tient, cool, and distant mother-in-law; and by John Wesley Houston, as this lady's rather stolid and ironic lover. Perhaps most impressive of all in the cast is Marcy Mac-Donald, as Julian's shallow and unbalanced wife. Miss MacDonald brilliantly conveys the emotional frailty and vul-nerability of this girl, along with her hys-terical religiosity, her sudden mad changes of mood, her innocence, and her rapaciousness when it comes to safeguarding her possession of her man. This is a cur her possession of her man. This is a cun-ningly nuanced characterization that lin-gers in the memory.

As for Craig Noel's direction, it is just what you would expect: sensible, effec-tive, unobtrusive, always successful in its effort to bring out each dramatic tension and movement without calling attention to itself. What we have here, in other words, is a

What we have here, in other words, is a production steeped in the principles of stage realism. Set, acting, and direction all am at showing to real, ordinary people, living in a specific ordinary place, and undergoing the common griefs of ordinary life: frustrated love, frustrated ambition, the ambivalences of family relationships, though all intensified by their being compressed into two hours on a stage. There are a lot of realistic plays to which these techniques might be applied, and unfortutechniques might be applied, and unfortu-nately Toys in the Attic is not a very distinguished member of that group

The American playwright to whom such characters are the chief inspiration is Ten-nessee Williams. His heart lies with the victims of a crass world, those who always move among strangers. And it is not the aggressive drive that animates his most memorable characters, but blind Eros, mixed with a self-esteem built on illusions. Toys in the Attic is about spinster sisters whose longing for a fuller life is perpetu ally unfulfilled; about a sister who is driven by unconscious incestuous feelings towards her brother, driven to the brink of destroying him; about a weak-spirited girl testroying film, about a weak-spirited girl tossed about by sexual desire, fear of abandoment, and a sense of worthless-ness; about women who want their men to fail so that the men will remain helpless, dependent, childlike; about the love that stifles. In trying her hand at a specialized craft already perfected by another playwright Miss Hellman was not only being patently imitative, she was abandoning her own artistic strengths. She does a creditable job with her plot, characters, and theme, but Williams would have done it all so much better. Above all, Williams would have expressed the erotic urges and the sense of vulnerability and alienation in that beautifully expressive language that in his plays lifts dreary and sordid situations to the height of poetry. Miss Hellman has no command of this language whatever. Her characters speak a plain, flat, utilitarian dialect; or the few occasions when they try to soar stylistically, they fall flat on their faces. Lillian Hellman is too much a professional to have done less than a compe-tent job with the materials of Toys in the Anic. But for really compelling theater, more than competence is wanted. The play's most living moments deal with fi pray's most infing moments deal with in-mercial manipulations: the right of way of the railroad, the sale of property. Other-wise, what Toys in the Antic needs is an author who lives in that region of the heart where lust, fear, and loss are the reigning monarchs. And Lillian Hellman lives

Here's a game of my own invention which may get you through some rainy night. It's called "What Makes Your Heart Bear Faster?" and consists of a list of pleasures that causes your heart to accelerate with anticipation. The person with the most unusual list wins the prize, which consists of making one's heart beat faster.
Kinkiness may or may not be ruled out, depending on the players.
My own list of What Makes My Heart

why own ist of what makes say recar Beat Faster is fairly simple: finding a really good old movie on TV, chocolates, the first moments of rushing through the doors in the early morning to a Sax's F4th Av-enue sale, and checking into a hotel.

It is the last which may require some further elucidation. Lam one of those indifurther elucidation. I am one of those indi-viduals who likes nature, but not au naturel, and my idea of getting away from my routine is to find an interesting hotel where I can stay for the weekend. The prospect of being suspended in time, of not having to answer my phone, of being con-tined to a new and strange room invariably proves restful. Cut free from my daily compulsions, I watch television in the morning and have room service deliver

In San Diego, my heart also beats faster at the prospect of dining at hotels, a carry-over from my travels abroad. Though the food at La Valencia in La Jolla is rarely great and often a notch less than mediocre, l always enjoy dining there because of the service and the grandness of the rooms. While breakfasts in the Mediterranean Room at La Valencia hardly win prizes, the white cloths, the elegant china, and the coffee served from gleaming silver pots—not to mention the view—always make it pleasurable. When I emerge from that hotel, I have trouble adjusting to the everyday world, and when I visit the Sky Room, where the food never equals the Room, where the food never equals the stunning vista, I'm inclined to think that I have at last grasped a plausible definition of the American Riviera. The same applies to the Hotel Del Coronado. Breakfast in the Crown Room is as lackluster and standard as at Denny's. is as tacktuster and standard as at Denny s, but the vaulted ceiling and the chandeliers are so splendid that if one could eat the architecture, one would.

By contrast, Le Pavillon, of the Town and Country in Mission Valley, just doesn't make it. Situated at the rear of this find, and despite its mannerisms, the food, the service, and the cocktail lounge adja-cent to it are in accord with the motorized cent to I are in accord with the monorized concept behind it.

Still, my heart continues to beat with expectation. I have frequented the Islandia Hyart House only to discover marvelous scampi ruined by being sauteed in a beef sauce, and I avoid the Tradewinds at the Hilton, where all the dinners taste as if they were prepared by the same service that does airline neals. Most recently, there's been a visit to the Hotel San Diego on West Broadway, downtown.

This hotel has undergone major plastic This hotel has undergone major plastic surgery and now offers a fresh face to the public. Its dining room had been closed for two years, but since January 1st it has operated by the name of the Country Kitchen. Why my interest in this hotel dining room besides my usual love of dining in hotels? It's close enough to the Fox, Spreckels, and Civic Center to bear investigation. We've all had the experi-ence of being rushed and harried, wanting ence of being trusted and narred, wanting to eat before we attend a concert or show. Most of us flounder around, not having the money or the patience to dine at the Grant or the Westgate. If you're scruppious and fastidious about your dining tastes, then the Country Kitchen, conveniently close to the theaters, just won't do. But if you like lots of food at very reasonable prices, then the new room in the Hotel San Diego may

DUNCAN SHEPHERD

The almost unanimous consensus in the seldom harmonious critical fraternity seems to be that 1978 was clearly the worst annum for movies since 1929. Movie reannum for movies since 1929. Movie reviewers all over the map have warmed to the job of composing their year-end Ten Beat lists as though this annual parlor game had suddenly taken on the odiousness of a task somewhere between changing a tire and skinning a rabbit. Andrew Sarris, the well-known contortionist in the Village well-known contortionist in the Village Voice, even bent so far backwards as to introduce the semantic refinement of a ten "least worst" list, and then proceeded to obscure the meaning of this linovative concept by including on his list such mediocrities as California State. The Chess Players, and The Mediasa Touch.

Whether the year gone by was really as impoverished as all that, time alone will tell. As a condition of living in America's self-anointed Finest City, we San Diegans are obliged to withhold judgment on such matters while we wait for all the returns to trickle in. A grace period of five years generally works out about right. Case in point: Celine and Julie Go Boating, one of the best movies of 1974, only just made its first public appearance here last week, and at this same time next year, if the Fates allow, I will in all probability be finding a spot for it on my Ten Best list for the year 1979.

The upshot of this eternal time lag in the local movie scene is that our last year was not remotely the move between the contraints of the contraints of the contraints of the contraints was arguably the richest one in re-nt history. Consequently, I will show little tolerance toward rumblings from the natives. If anybody hereabouts how little tolerance toward rumblings from the natives. If anybody hereabouts had a right to be down in the mouth about the quality of first-run movies throughout the past year, it was me. Seeing as how had already the contraints of the contraints of the past year, it was me. Seeing as how had already the contraints of the co New York, Tankees have beated in years. Here they are, more or less in order of personal preference, prejudice, or myopia: Claude Sautet's Mado, Alain Resnais's Providence, Walter Hill's The Driver, Wim Wenders' Alice in the Cities, Akira Kurosawa's Dersu Uzula, Arturo Ripstein's The Holy Office, Jerry Schatzberg's Sweet Revenge, John Carpenter's Assault on Precinct 13, Claude Miller's The Best Way, and Wim Wenders' The American won, lost, or (more often) drawn, and it would be senseless to append more than a few words about any of them now. By way of insufficient explanation, then, I submit the following marginalia.

1. Sautet takes as his subject not an easily masticable silee of life, but rather the whole bologna. He has perhaps the largest appetite for Life of any movie director now at work, and he faces up to it just as he knows it, straight on, without salanting, commenting, or moralizing. The most consistent complaint 1 heard shouth its movie centered around the wild goose chase on which he takes his characters for a full twenty maintes after the story proper full twenty minutes after the story proper has seemingly come to its natural concluhas seemingly come to its natural conclu-sion. For my part, this detour is one of the things I like best in the movie. Even if I were not convinced of the emotional right-ness of this final Bacchanal in the rain and mud. I would still admire this stretch as a mud, I would still admire this stretch as a particularly gluttonous display of Sautet's aforementioned Gargantuan appetite.

2. Alain Resnais, who may be faulted at times for being a bit too reserved but at times for being too boorish, is both an elegant stylist and an inveterate intellec-tual, and, as either, he is a rare bird in modern movies; and his latest, which could be called his firs, somedy only at the risk of gross oversimplification, is among his most profound.

3. I feel no remone as yet for backing. The Driver, which as thing for the eye, a thing in the best of his profession of the control of measurable cut below Kings of the Road his crowning road movie, I think the seeds of what was to come are already perfectly apparent.

5. In the stiff-jointed Dersu Uzala.
Kurosawa has largely substituted a meditative panth ism for the headlong athleticism of his earlier outdoor movies; athleticism of his earner outdoor moves, but even so, setting sail in his mid-sixties for the forests of Eastern Russia, he retains the spirit of adventure that is often talked about but seldom witnessed in TV's travelogues and zoological documen-taries, and still more seldom in today's luxury-loving movies.

6. The Ripstein movie shows off a shrewd, subversive, caustic mentality going about its weasel-like business beneath the trappings of a conventional studio costume picture.

7. Sweet Revenge was deployed strictly

I play the Ten Best game by the rules, and my assembled favorites from San Diego's first-run offerings in 1978 constitute, to my mind, a stronger starting lineup and better bench strength than either I or the New York Yankees have fielded in years.

Which I four no even prefet to his IV move of the week. Someone's Watching Me, a skillful pick-ing of Hitchcock's pockets. 9. The Best Way is the first film written and directed by Claude Miller, and through and directed by Canade Stitler, and though his sensitivity, restraint, neatness, and thoroughness in dealing with what I be-lieve used to be speken of as a "Gide star-relationship" in a summer boxs' camp, he staked a claim as the most promising young filmmaker to come from France ince whenever the last "new wave" sub-

10. The American Friend suffered, 1 thought, from Wim Wenders' didactic at thought, from win websers, didn'te at tempt to politicize Patricia Highsmuth's already loony enough suspense story by dressing up Dennis Hopper as a psychotic Texas cowboy, but in this, as well as in the Wrong Move (the thard Wenders feature to debut in San Diego last year), he and hi regular cameraman, Robby Muller exhibit a coldly sensions color imege which is nearly as expressive as their black and white image in Kings of the Road and Alice in the Cities. What with three first run features plus an intriguin early short called Alabama to his credit, it was obviously a big Wim Wenders year in San Diego, and it seems well warranted to accord him two spots out of ten-

Harvest Time

It was unaccountably an abundant year fi was unaccountarily an abundant year for documentaries. I was quite partial to Barbara Kopple's stouthearted and humane Harlan County, U.S.A., Les Blank's comfortable, familial Chulus brank's comortante, raminate traitia Frontens, Werner Herzog's lofty, hyper-bolic The Great Ecstasy of the Sculptor Steiner, the Maysles brothers' charac-teristically snobby but (thanks to the sculptor Christo's immoderate sense of scale in his artwork) unusually picturesque scale in his artwork) iniusually picturesque Rioming Fence, Chris Marker's La Sol-itude du Chanteur de Fond, a tenacious, intimate portrait of Yves Montand pre-paring a benefit concert for Chilean refugees, and Martin Scorsese's chuckle ugees, and Martin Scorsese's chuckers some glorified home movies, Italian-American and American Boy. I was not among the foremost enthusiasts, however, for Martin Scorsese's mawkishly elegiac The Last Waltz, Marcel Ophuls' diffuse and doggedly provocative A Memory of Justice, Patricio Guzman's dogmatic, browbeating current events epic. The Bat-tle of Chile, the Mariposa Film Group's Word Is Out, an anthology of interviews with homosexuals which was so "poswith homosecuals which was so "pos-tive" and "supportive" as to border on a posmotional—if not quite a recruitive— film, and Last Mazara Strifuly informative but overly cute profile of painter David Hockney, A fligger Splant, mone of which movies, in spite of my abstinence, was wanting for enthusiants. I was also not an enthusiant for Jill Godmilow's The Popovich Brothers of South Cheege, a lukewarm imitation of sLes Blank movie, which as far as I know had none. I somewhich as far as I know had none. I some-how missed Robert Domhelm's and Earle Mack's The Children of Theatre Street as

Serious works whose cinematic sophis-tication managed to overcome their other shortcomings were Chantal Akerman's Feanne Dichman (incongruous as it may sound to speak of shortcomings with re-gard to this three-and-s-half-hour domes-tic epic). Walerian Borowezyk's The Beast, Agnes Varda's One Sings, the Other Doesn't, and Mauro Bolognin's La Grande Bourgerise. Serious works whose cinematic shortcomings failed to overcome their other shortcomings were Paul Schrade's Blue Collar, Paul Mazursky's An Unmarried Woman, and Richard Ben-ner's Outrageous.

And movies that struck me as passingly pleasurable rather than lastingly memorable were Howard Zieff's House Calls, Claude Lelouch's Cat and Mouse, Pierre Granier-Deferre's A Woman at Her Win-dow, Larry Peerce's The Other Side of the Mountain Part II, and Alfred Sole's Alice, Sweet Alice. The last named, which I was not swift enough to remark on while it was still in town, is a psychological thriller specially designed to meet the spiritual requirements of backshiding Catholics, spoiled priests, fallen angels, standards sponsor press, rance angest, village athiests, and assorted other repro-bates. Candidly, I would not have felt competent to explore the esoteric attrac-tions of this world of twisted Catholicism without the guidance of a Catholic imitate. and moral beacon as steadfast as, say, the late James Agee or Henri Age! In the moral vacancy left behind them in novie criticism, I would venture to recommend this mostly little movie, if it should come around again, only for reasons of the beautifully observed lower-middle class bleakness of its Paterson, New Jersey set-ting, for its accurate sense of familial bick ering and bitterness, and for the persever ence of its director this lost Sole in not allowing the limitations of his budget to hamper the complexities of his style

It was admittedly not easy in 1978 to find many impressive performances by actresses, on the other hand, in spite of the absences from the screen all year long of Elizabeth Taylor, Raquel Welch, Liza

On the made sake again, Lamence Otherer page two of the worst performances (The Betsy and The Buss from Biacil) ever given by any actor who has been dubbed the greatest in the world, but for undiluted badness he was probably nosed out by Donald Sutherland

Giving some support to the widely held contention that 1978 marked a new low in movies was what seemed to me an un movies was what seemed to me an un-commonly large number of uncommonly bad movies. For me, these were, in order of almost imperceptibly diminishing dis-agreeableness, Itwo Allen's The Swarm, Peter Watkins' Ldvard Münch, Michael Peter Wathus: Librard Mainch, Michael Cacoyamus: Patheram, Andrew McLag-len's The Wild Green, John Guillerman, Petals on the Wild Green, John Guillerman, Brian De Pallan's The Fusis, Jugman Alber, Justicia, Weiter Heisel, George Heart of Glass, Burt Reynolds, University Heart of Glass, Burt Reynolds, University Fusis, Cap-tarios Jugin Mindels, Peter Hyann, Cap-miorn One, and "Ean Paller's Malanda". more One, and clan Parker's Midmich wandered into an attorney's office on Clairemont Drive. He says the attorney called the school and was told that $1100 would be refunded. And again the school officials said they'd mail it back to Germany. "I was embarrassed, says Heger. "I couldn't have gone home to face my parents and say I lost a thousand dollars. He paid the lawyer fifteen dollars for his Later that same afternoon

Heger again met with Scoles and the school president. William Schlob, They, too were angry. They wanted a written statement, required by law, that Heger wanted to withdraw from the school. He obliged by writing the statement in German. "They said it wasn't good enough. They wrote one in English," recalls Heger, "They said, 'Sign this and we'll send you the money.'
I couldn't read it. I tried to get the attorney, but he was gone. I was very suspicious. They became very angry. I used my [English] dictionary. It was written something about this law by which refund is given. And I asked for a copy of this law and they said no. I know nothing of this law; I don't know the laws here in America. I was sitting beside Mr. Scoles. I didn't sign this statement so he said, 'Okay.' He wanted show me his power, and he phoned the Converse School [which Heger was and still i attending). He said I was : attending]. He said I was a longer a student and that Mr. Nioya [the director of the Converse School] should cancel my visa." (Rogelio Moya does not recall Mr. Scoles asking him to cance

Heger's visa.)
Heger eventually went to the district attorney, who advised him to take the school to court. He also wound up at the Legal Aid Society, which contacted EIC and found that Heger's refund would be $695. This was mid-November, and Heger had long since moved out of the school's housing and found himself an apartment near Balboa Park. As an explanation for the small refund, the school produced a refund policy stating that the room fee is nonrefundable, a policy Scoles nonretundable, a policy scores says he mailed to Heger in Germany and one which Heger says he never saw before. But prior to handing over the money, EIC wanted Heger to sign a statement. Disputted and low on funds, Hoger signed and took the $695. "They said if I didn't cause anymore bad reputation for them, they'd give me more money. I was never able to get hold of them after that. I lost the faith, gave up. I offered to be quiet only to get my money back. This was bad." The second statement, which Heger signed, differed only slightly from the first, the one he refused to sign. The difference was the one clause which stated EIC was to send a letter to Heger's military draft board in Germany notifying it that Heger was no loager in the school. "Rudi Heger is trying to avoid the draft in Germany plain and simple," says Barry Scoles. (In Germany all young men have to submit to conscription.) Heger scoffs at the contention that he's trying to stay out of the army, and claims that he actually wants to go in. On the subject of student and visitor visas, Scoles denies any wrongdoing in encouraging his students to lie about the reason they're coming into the U.S.

"If they were doing that to perform an illegal act, that would be different. Scoles "But it's totally for the benefit of the students. The student visa does not give them sufficient freedom to travel in the U.S." (Heger has traveled unfettered to Texas on his unfettered to Texas on ins student visa, and immigration officials counter a student visa is not restrictive.) To charges that he called the Converse School and tried to get them to School and tried to get them to 20 cel Heger's visa, Scoles responds obliquely. 'We called Converse and said Rudi was no longer fulfilling our requirement for the 1-20 [the form sent by Converse so Heger could obtain a student visa]. I had a responsibility to inform them. I have no power to cancel his visa. I don't understand Rudi at all. Where he got that impression, I don't know. I've been in this business five years

d I've never met anyone like Heger plans to return to Siegsdorf, which has a population of about 3000 people snug in the Alten mountains of Bavaria, where he will take over the operation his parents' small restaurant and pastry shop. If you're ever up that way you might want to think twice about mentioning San Diego. The city's reputation will have preceded

Nelda Everett, the nurse in charge of University Hospital's labor and delivery room, says the hospital has only supplied about ninety dollars worth of cords, with all the money being placed in a special medical education fund. Although University handles about 1800 deliveries a year. "only a very small percentage of cords are salvageable," she explains. Many aren't long enough (the medical supply firm requires a length of at least thirty inches), and some have been too badly flown back to the East Coast. All three hospitals say they began selling the cords after a visit last winter from Medox. Inc., which sent a representative to San Diego to seek suppliers. Medox apparently removes one of the three blood vessels in each cord, then treats the vessel with a chemical, a process which toughens the tissue and decreases its chance of being rejected by the recipient's body. The treated vessels then are used in vascular bypass used in vascular bypass operations, particularly those involving leg veins, whose size usually approximates the cord veins. Although San Diego babies may be supplying the cords, San Diego vascular surgeons don't appear to be

THE READER PUZZLE

No. 39 E.S.P.

By Don Rubin

In the fall of 1930, the Parapsychology Laboratory of Duke University, under the direction of Dr. Joseph Banks Rhine, began utilizing a special deck of cards to conduct a series of carefully controlled experiments in extrasensors perception (ESP). These cards, created by K. E. Zener, consisted of five different symbols: a circle, a square, a plus sign, wavy lines, and a

Winners of and Answers to Reader Puzzle #37, Ch'i Ch'ae

Out of the 198 entries we received, 156 were wrong. We haven't the space to go into much detailed explanation, but there was one fairly common mistake made with the figure on the bottom left of the puzzle page. Many of you were able to come up with the correct shape, but by using only seven of those eight pieces. Inscrutable? Not if you had a good ruler. The example figure was just a shade smaller than the figure to be filled in. The area of the black border around the example equaled, the area of a small triangle-and that was the piece you left out of the solution. No
