Real Estate

City Lights

Bazaar To Way Make A Buck

We're on the border of downtown San Diego, and at this point a dozen or so local entrepreneurs have formed and priced their establishments in the Gaslamp Quarter. The pageant of merchants jostles for position, baring their wares, sharpening their wits, and clanging to make their deals stick. Indeed, the Gaslamp Quarter is ready for the largesse in town.

City Lights

Campaigns to sell off downtown San Diego's historic buildings are heating up, with the local government pushing to complete the sale of the historic buildings in the Gaslamp Quarter. The city is seeking to sell off the buildings to private developers in order to fund the preservation of the historic structures. Some residents are concerned that the sale will lead to the loss of unique and irreplaceable historic elements. The sale is expected to be completed in the near future.

Straight from the Hip

Matthew Alice

Dear Matthew Alice,

I've been a neighborhood fixture for many years. I've moved, but I've always come back. When I first moved in, I heard the stories about the ghost that haunted the place. But I never believed in ghosts. Then I met a new neighbor, a woman who claimed to have talked to a ghost. She said it was a friendly ghost, and I decided to be open-minded.

As the years went by, I began to see things. Sometimes, I'd see a shadow moving across the wall, or hear a whisper in the hallway. And then, one day, I felt a presence in my apartment. It was so strong, I almost screamed. But then, the ghost spoke to me.

She told me that the house was built by a wealthy family, and that they had hidden a secret inside. She said it was a map to a treasure, and that only the chosen few could find it. I was skeptical, but I decided to look for it myself.

I started searching the house, looking in every nook and cranny. I even dug up the floorboards, looking for clues. And then, one day, I found it. The treasure was hidden behind a picture frame, and it was worth millions.

I'm not sure what I'll do with it, but I know it's mine. And I'll never share it with anyone else. Because, as the ghost said, only the chosen few can find it. And I was chosen.

Sincerely,

[Address]

Richard Caldar, the kind of head shop owner who finds that NFA restrictions might have taken the fun out of his business, is the sort of man who would be lost if there was no marijuana. Caldar is following the NFA guidelines, but he wants to ensure that his business remains as natural as possible. He believes in the benefits of the drug and hopes that it will continue to be legal. Caldar is a supporter of the marijuana industry and opposes any further restrictions. He feels that it is a natural product and should be treated as such. Caldar is also a strong advocate for the legalization of marijuana and believes that it is a powerful tool for reducing crime and poverty. He is a firm believer in the benefits of marijuana and would welcome any efforts to make it legal. Caldar is a strong supporter of the marijuana movement and will continue to fight for its legalization.
Life in the Fruit Bowl
By Sue Carson

It's a hassle to raise fruit with all the care it needs. How is it that when you put a pear in your orchard, it grows and bears fruit, but when you plant a banana, it grows and bears fruit? It's a mystery. Some people say it's because of the climate. Others say it's because of the soil. Still others say it's because of the care you give it. But whatever the reason, it's a fact that fruit is delicious and good for you. So why not enjoy the fruits of your labor by growing your own? It's easier than you think. All you need is a little space and some patience. And before you know it, you'll have your own fruit bowl full of fresh, delicious fruit. So go ahead, try your hand at growing fruit today! You won't be disappointed.

JONATHAN BAVILLE

If we're using William Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life" currently as a pleasant production at the Minstrel Players, you were to conclude that the author was overly sensitive, or could have written better, if you'd read the novel, you'd find yourself in agreement with Saroyan. In the book, the author brings the public's interest in the 1940's and 1950's to life, and in fact, the author is not only sensitive, but he is also a writing genius. The choice of characters, the choice of settings, the choice of scenes, is all very well thought out. The author is a master of his craft.
