SWEET, WET, UGLY, AND TOUGH

Life at the end of a lobster trap

Some people say that the only other thing a lobster fisherman does besides fish is drink. This image of the hard-drinking, hard-working, hand-headed fisherman is traditional, and it might even be true. At any rate, it's true often enough that one has to wonder whether or not it is the fisherman who is attracted to drink, or the drunkard who is attracted to fishing. Lobster fishermen themselves don't do too much to discourage that impression of their profession. My impression is that they don't much give a damn what anybody thinks of them. People who insist on spending their lives alone in a little boat 300 yards to the west of the civilized world are hardly preoccupied with their public image.

Set It Over There By The Pterodactyl Bones

Andreas Behrens of Architecture/Arts Planning and Technology estimates that his firm has only two weeks, at most, to complete the project. The architect, who is designing the building, says that the project was originally planned for four years ago, but due to financial constraints, the project was delayed. He also mentions that the building will be a significant addition to the city's skyline, with its modern design and innovative use of materials.

Let's Hear it for the PIANO PLAYER

By Mark Orwell

The applause died down as the last chord faded from the piano. The audience held its breath, waiting for the next move. The pianist, a middle-aged man with a distinguished air, arose from his seat and stepped onto the small stage. He was dressed in a black suit and tie, his hands clasped together as he surveyed the crowd.The room was dimly lit, with soft amber light illuminating the stage. The walls were adorned with paintings and musical scores, adding to the atmosphere of the performance. A journal sat on a small table beside the pianist, its pages open to show the notes of the piece he was about to play.As the pianist took his place behind the piano, a hush fell over the audience. The pianist began to play, his fingers moving with a practiced ease. The music flowed from the keys, a melody that was both familiar and new. The audience was captivated, their attention fixed on the pianist and the music he was creating.After a few minutes, the pianist paused, a slight smile on his face. Then, with a nod of his head, he continued playing. The music grew in intensity, the pianist's fingers moving faster and faster. The audience held its breath, the air thick with anticipation.Finally, the pianist reached the end of the piece, and the music faded to silence. The pianist lowered his hands from the keys, a satisfied expression on his face. The audience erupted into applause, their appreciation for the performance evident in their cheering and clapping.As the pianist walked off the stage, he turned to look at the audience. A smile flashed across his face, and he bowed slightly in acknowledgment. The applause continued, a testament to the performance that had just been delivered. The pianist, having satisfied the audience's hunger for more music, left the stage, his place taken by the next performer in the lineup.
PIANO PLAYER

from Margaret Price and the Old Dog... "Mama gave me the piano when I was five. She used to say, 'If you play the piano, you won't go hungry'."

Lola’s Little Dog

Christopher Schmidt

Good and honest people such as those who lived in the White Plains area around 1918-20 were commonly named by the play which is currently being performed here. William and Grace, who lived on a farm near the old railroad tracks, had a dog named 'Lola' which was the center of their world. When the track went through their property, bringing some relief to their lives, the dog was happy. It was a very happy dog and it loved being close to its master. The track was built in 1918 and it was removed in 1920. Lola's Little Dog played in one of the old buildings in the area and it was a real crowd pleaser. Lola's Little Dog was a happy dog and it loved being close to its master. The track was built in 1918 and it was removed in 1920.

Apocalypse

The word "apocalypse" means revelation, and especially the one during which the Judgement Day will be revealed. It is a concept that has been explored in various forms of literature, art, and religion. The image seems to depict a scene of destruction or end times, with a sense of impending doom.

Lola's Little Dog

The text mentions Lola's Little Dog and a picture of a dog. However, the context and meaning of the text are not clear from the image provided.

What I dislike is the predictability of Little Sheba's literary tone. It's almost as if there were a study guide at the end of each act asking, "just what did Inge mean to convey by the following images...?"

La Cage Aux Folles

Directed by Mike Nichols, this film is a delightful tale of a gay man who must keep his relationship with another man a secret from his mother. With a cast that includes Zero Mostel and Gene Hackman, it's a must-see for anyone interested in the LGBTQ+ community.

The Right Stuff

Based on Tom Wolfe's best-selling book, this film tells the story of the early days of the Space Race, focusing on the seven astronauts chosen to become the first Americans in space. With a cast led by Ryan O'Neal and John Cleese, it's a thrilling ride through history.

The Chateau

Set in a parisian high-rise, this film explores the lives of a group of friends who are thrown into a moral dilemma when they discover a body in their building. With a gripping plot and stellar performances, it's a must-watch for fans of psychological thrillers.

The World According to Garp

Based on the novel by John Irving, this film stars Robin Williams and was directed by Mike Nichols. It tells the story of a man who must confront his past and reconcile with the choices he made in his youth. With a cast that includes Meryl Streep and John Lithgow, it's a poignant and thought-provoking film.

Carnal Knowledge

A satire of the 1960s swinging London, this film stars Jack Nicholson and was directed by Mike Nichols. It explores the lives of a group of young people who are struggling to find their place in the world. With a cast that includes Peter Fonda and Mia Farrow, it's a hilarious and accurate portrayal of the era.

This week at the Strand:

The Tree of Wooden Clogs

A French film directed by Michelangelo Antonioni, it tells the story of a man and woman who move to a remote village in Italy and are faced with the challenges of rural life. With a cast that includes Jeanne Moreau and Pierre Etaix, it's a beautiful and thought-provoking film.

Next: Orchestral Rehearsal

A musical directed by Mike Nichols, it tells the story of a group of musicians who are forced to confront their differences and work together to create a masterpiece. With a cast that includes Barbra Streisand and Mel Brooks, it's a joyful and inspiring film.
