North To Mira Mesa

Mira Mesa is a sign of real hope for our people in California. We need to take more Mira Meso.

I was driving home at night and I couldn't find my house. It just looked like every other house.

The police was looking for Mira Mesa.

President Johnson received a warm welcome when he arrived at Denver's McNichols Civic Center to vote in the Democratic primary. The president, who flew in from Austin, was greeted by a crowd of 2,000 fans. He was accompanied by his wife, Lady Bird Johnson, and their daughter, Lynda Bird. The president's flight was delayed due to a mechanical problem, but he arrived on schedule and cast his ballot at a polling place in the Civic Center. The president was expected to vote for his own re-election as the Democratic presidential candidate.

City Lights

With the sunset casting a golden glow, the streets of Denver were bustling with activity. People were out and about, enjoying the warm weather and the vibrant nightlife. In a coffee shop on the corner of 17th and Market, a group of friends gathered to discuss the day's events. One of them, a young professional, was sharing his insights on the latest political developments.

A young woman approached him, holding a small bottle of wine. "Excuse me, sir, may I sit here?" she asked. The man nodded and gestured for her to sit down. The woman opened her bottle and took a sip, then looked over at the man and smiled. "I'm watching the game tonight," she said. "Do you want to join me?"

The man hesitated for a moment, then nodded. "Sure, I'd love to. What's the game about?"

The woman laughed. "It's a local softball game, but I'm rooting for the visiting team. It's always more fun when a team comes from outside our area."

The man chuckled and took a sip of his own wine. "That sounds like a lot of fun. Let's go!"

As they walked out of the coffee shop, the woman asked, "Where do you want to go?"

The man thought for a moment. "How about the bar on the corner? It's always crowded and the music is loud, but it's usually a good time."

The woman agreed and they headed down the street. The bar was already bustling with people, dancing and singing along to the music. The man and the woman found a table near the front and ordered a round of drinks.

As they drank and talked, the woman mentioned a recent political event. "You know, the president is coming to town tomorrow," she said. "I heard he's going to give a speech at the civic center."

The man nodded. "That's right. I'm going to try and get some tickets. I've always been a fan of his."

The woman smiled. "I hope you do. It should be a great event."

The man and the woman continued to chat, laughing and enjoying each other's company. The night was young and they had no idea what the future held. All they knew was that they were alive and had the possibility of making the most of their time together.

From A Booth At Berrell's

With the sun setting over the city, the bustling crowd of people gathered outside Berrell's, a popular steakhouse in downtown Denver. The restaurant was renowned for its delicious cuisine and its lively atmosphere. The man and the woman sat at a booth near the front, watching the world go by.

As they sipped their drinks and engaged in conversation, the man mentioned the president's visit the next day. "I'm really looking forward to it," he said. "I think he's done a lot for the country."

The woman nodded in agreement. "I agree. He's been a good leader." They both took another sip of their drinks and continued to enjoy their time together.

The night passed quickly, and soon they found themselves walking back to the hotel. As they said goodbye, the man gave her a hug and wished her a good night. The woman smiled and returned the gesture, feeling grateful for the chance to spend time with him.

As they parted ways, the man turned to look back at the restaurant one last time. The lights were still shining brightly, and the music continued to fill the air. He knew that the next day would bring new adventures, and he couldn't wait to see what would happen.

Election Day

On the morning of the election, the man and the woman woke up early and got ready to vote. They drove to the civic center, where they encountered a long line of people waiting to cast their ballots. Despite the wait, they remained patient and demure, their hands steady as they filled out their ballots.

As they stood in line, the woman turned to him and smiled. "I feel good about the outcome," she said. "I think we're going to see some positive changes in the country." The man nodded in agreement, feeling a sense of hope and optimism.

Finally, they reached the front of the line and cast their votes. They watched as the ballots were counted and the results were announced. The man and the woman were overjoyed when they heard that the president had won a second term.

As they drove back to their hotel, the man turned to his companion and gave her a kiss. "Thank you for being a part of this," he said. "I feel like we both made a difference." The woman smiled, feeling grateful for the chance to stand together and make a contribution to the future of the country.

Election Night

On election night, the man and the woman gathered with friends and family at a local bar to watch the election results. The atmosphere was electric, filled with anticipation and excitement. As the returns came in, they watched with bated breath as the votes were counted.

Finally, the moment arrived. The results were announced, and the man and the woman erupted in cheers. They hugged each other, their faces beaming with joy. They knew that they had helped to elect a leader who would work hard to make the country a better place.

As the night wore on, they continued to celebrate and reflect on the hard work and dedication that had gone into the election. They knew that there was still much work to be done, but they were confident in the outcome and the future of the country. Together, they would continue to fight for the things they believed in and work towards a brighter tomorrow.

Dear Matthew Alice:

I had a 1971 Vespa 150 that I sold to you. I found out later that the Vespa did not have any paperwork, so I assume that you don't have any paperwork for the Vespa. I am writing to let you know that I have a 1971 Vespa 150 and I am not sure if it's the same Vespa that you sold me. I would like to purchase the Vespa from you for $695.

Please let me know if this is possible.

Mira Mesa

People who have never set foot in Mira Mesa seem to have an opinion—usually negative—or a remark—usually sarcastic—ready at hand. They have seen the place from a car window while traveling Interstate 15, and that's all they need to know.

As city planners plan the expansion of Mira Mesa, the community is divided. Some see it as a desirable place to live, while others view it as a sprawling, soulless suburb.

In Mira Mesa, the project has never been completed and the community remains divided over any business more than two stories high.

For many people living here, the biggest challenge is keeping to a tight belt and making a living elsewhere. They often commute long distances to work, sometimes taking public transit or driving solo.

Some businesses here are thriving, with a range of services for locals and tourists alike. Others struggle to attract customers or keep up with the ever-changing demand for retail space.

STAND UP AND SAY SOMETHING

TERRY MILLER

A brown, scarred index finger on his right hand is the only sign that shows the battle he has fought to be standing on the stage tonight. Terry Miller, who has been a stand-up comedian for 20 years, has been through many battles, both physically and mentally. But he never gave up, and today he is standing tall, ready to share his story.

His journey started in the 1980s, when he was a young man in Los Angeles. He was struggling to make ends meet, working odd jobs and doing stand-up comedy at any club that would have him. It was a difficult time, but he kept pushing and eventually found his way to the Laugh Factory, where he started getting booked more regularly.

But at the same time, Terry was battling a drug addiction. He was using every day, and it was affecting his performance. He remembers one time, he was so high that he forgot the words to a joke. The crowd booed, and he was humiliated.

But Terry didn't give up. He sought help and eventually overcame his addiction. It wasn't easy, but he did it. And now he is standing up and sharing his story with the world.

Terry Miller's comedic style is a mix of observational humor and personal stories. He covers everything from his time in the military to his struggles with addiction. He has a raw, honest style that resonates with his audience.

He has performed at clubs all over the country and even abroad. He has opened for big names like Jerry Seinfeld and Dave Chappelle. His Comedy Central special was a hit, and he has been a regular on late-night shows like The Tonight Show.

But Terry never forgets where he came from. He is always humble and grateful for his fans. He says, "Without my fans, I wouldn't be standing here today. They are the reason I keep going."

"Joe, you have a lot of work to do."

Joe looked around the room, trying to figure out what his boss meant. He had been working on a project for weeks, and he was starting to feel overwhelmed.

"What's going on Joe?" his boss asked.

Joe took a deep breath and tried to explain his situation. "I have so much work to do, and I don't know where to start."

"You need to prioritize your tasks," his boss said. "Make a list and tackle them one at a time."

Joe nodded and got to work, feeling a little more organized.

"What's going on with the project?" his boss asked.

Joe sighed. "I don't know. It's just not coming together."

"It's okay to make mistakes," his boss said. "Just keep working and eventually it will fall into place."

Joe smiled and continued working, feeling a little more confident.

"Joe, you need to come up with a plan," his boss said.

Joe looked at his boss, confused. "What plan?"

"The plan for the project," his boss said. "You need to have a strategy in place so you can complete it on time."

Joe nodded and got to work, feeling a little more focused.

---

"Joe, I'm proud of you," his boss said.

Joe looked at his boss, surprised. "Really?"

"Yes, you've been working really hard and it shows," his boss said. "Keep up the good work."

Joe smiled and continued working, feeling a lot more motivated.
Playing Cowboy

DUNCAN SPafür

"Playing Cowboy" is a popular book, but it's not as well known as "The Cat in the Hat." In fact, it's almost as popular as "Green Eggs and Ham," but that's just my opinion. So, who's to say what's more popular? The answer is, of course, "The Cat in the Hat." But, let's get back to the book..."Playing Cowboy." It's a book about a little boy named Jack who loves to play cowboys. He and his friends, the Goon Squad, spend their days on the ranch, riding horses and pretending to be cowboys.

But what happens when they're not on the ranch? Well, Jack and his friends have to go to school and do their homework. And, of course, they still manage to sneak in a little playtime. "Playing Cowboy" is a wonderful book for children of all ages, and it's a great way to teach them about responsibility and the importance of balancing work and play.

Dear Editor,

I have been reading your magazine for the past few years and have always enjoyed the articles and the way they are written. However, I have noticed a trend in recent issues that I find disturbing. The articles seem to be more about products and less about the people who use them. I find this disappointing because I have always enjoyed learning about the people who are using the products you write about.

Insults Understood

I recently attended a meeting with a group of business professionals and was dismayed to hear one of them make a derogatory remark about another person. It made me realize how much we still need to work on understanding and addressing the issue of insults. We need to create a culture where everyone feels safe and respected.

When I was in St. Mary, I went to a little house in a small village on the coast. I heard a woman who was playing the piano. I decided to go over and watch her. She was playing so beautifully, I thought I would stay a while. When I went back to the house, I found that she was the piano teacher. She invited me to stay and play with her. I accepted and we played every day. It was a wonderful experience. I think that sometimes we need to follow our intuition and let it lead us.

THE READER PUZZLE
No. 110. First Things First

By Dean Robin

This week's puzzle isn't broken, really — it just looks like it out of range.

What's the matter? Don't worry, you see, it's just a Virgilian mishap. . . .

The puzzle's a classic study of motion—fast, slow, and strange. . . .

But it's up to you to see if you can decipher the hidden message. Now all you have to do is figure out the correct sequence.

We've given you some hints about how it's done and created the graphic to help you get started.

It's your move.

2. All entries in Reader Puzzles must be received by the Reader (additional to Reader Puzzles, 750 Rose St., Berkeley, Calif., 94710) by 11th or 14th, eight days prior to issue date.

3. All entries must be accompanied by your name, address, and phone number.

4. 'Entries must be accompanied by an entry form on phone cards or slips in our office.
