How did San Diego Opera general director Tita Capobianco cotton to the recen cancellation of the 1983 Verdi Festival? He furrows his evebrows, which shoot up like flames on his creased forehead. "It was like a deep wound," he says through his nearly impenetrable Argentine accent. "Like killing one of your babies. Capobianco obviously took it hard. And in one slice of the budgetary axe, his seemingly endless future with the concerned with opera now renowned San Diego Opera is knows Verdi has been uddenly not so endless Whether Capobianco will stay with the newly troubled opera company is now a topic of discussion among opera lovers Revealingly, that's news to Elsie Weston, opera board president. "You can't look at this from an emotional point of view," says Weston. "You have to look at the facts and figures. Which, without drastic action, would add up to a projected deficit of $600,000 this year. The drastic action was lopping off the expensive and money-losing Verdi Festival. Unfortunately, the facts and figures might include the subtraction of Capobianco. "Whether the board wants to return to [being] a small, regional company is not my decision," says Capobianco, and in the same breath he acknowledges that the prospect holds no interest for him. He was an internationally famous opera director long before he came to San Diego six years ago. "Coming here, I gave up ninety-nine percent of my personal career [guest conducting worldwide] to give my life to the San Diego Opera. You have to remember that. And I did it happily." As the summer Verdi Festival blossomed in stature, so rose Capobianco's already high visibility and prestige. "In Europe now, everybody knows where San Diego is," he says. And surely, everybody

For the opera as a whole, and Capobianco in particular, this poses serious problems. For instance, "We sent ten Gs to the opera at the end of June." says one disgruntled donor, "and if I'd known [about the impending Verdi Festival cancellation], I either would not have given the money or I would have specified that it be given only to the festival." This is the nub of irritation for some major donors and board members: the board kept this potentially catastrophic decision to itself, instead of opening deliberations to a much broader forum. "I know a couple of other major contributors who are just livid, and say they won't give the opera another nickel," continues the donor, who asked not to be identified. "The opera was the major first-class institution in this town, and right now it's going backward. And I don't want to going backward. Do you know how many forward-moving groups are hitting me up for

For Capobianco, who deals personally with artists and their managers, the loss of the festival has brought about a big change in negotiating for talent. "It'll be the first question managers ask me now 'What happened?' 'he says. 'Mainly, the reason all the artists came to San Diego was my personal friendship. The artists are all insecure, because they're dealing with the most insecure instrument - their voices. If they have a choice between coming here and going someplace they have more confidence in, they may not come here." And some artists won't come at all unless it's for the Verdi Festival opera comn

Capobianco says darkly.

So what's he going to do? "I am not looking for retirement," he says. "I'm an active person, I have to build, create." He's not making any decisions now, he': just working on the current winter season, which opens Saturday night. He's cagey about it, but he admits that about it, but he admits that offers to work clewhere have rolled in. He's going to lie low for the three or four months it'l take to see clearly whether a massive appeal for funds will bear fruit and restore the Verdi Festival in 1984. And if it doesn't work? "I am a positive person. I believe San Diego is proud of the opern. Nobody can predict the future. Nobody."

That thick swordfish steak you bought at your local hole-in-the-wall fish market could have been a piece of shark, and their fillet of snapper may in fact be perch from northern California. These are just some of the examples of substitutions that you may be subject to in frequenting fly-by-night fish markets or untrustworthy restaurants said Joe Busalacchi, a local fish purveyor. This collection had grown from a whirmsical purchase that Steve had made three years before in the company of Bill at the Santee swap meet, where they often went on weekends. They were a team: Steve the talker, with an intuitive seems for a bavarin, with an intuitive seems for a bavarin. They were a team: Steve the talker, with an intuitive sense for a bargain, and Bill with a head for figures and a skill at negotiation that seemed to arise from his not being awed by bluster or authority. On this last point the family has a favorite story. During the Nixon Administration they lived briefly near Washington, D.C., where father Schanes was the assistant director of policy for the commerce department. One Sunday Bill answered the phone. It was the White House calling for his father. Bill told whoever was on the phone that his father was asleep, and then he hung up. Steve's particular skill, his glibness, appears to be his compensation for a childhood ailment — dyslexia, or word blindness, which

They hired Steve a tutor, but for years his progress in school was slow. Baseballs hit him in the face. Life thurt. But he continued to develop the aptitudes that his family found in him. He was always the buyer in family enterprises, as when they went to the Christmas-tree for every year. Once Steve came home with two trees—he could not pass up a deal. They trimmed one and broke the other up for wreaths.

Steve amounted to a single hobby, to an otherwise normal child with words Steve amounted to a single noody to search for large amounts of anything whose price was cheap, and to bargain for a price yet cheaper. At the swap meet they came upon 900 comic books on sale for fifty dollars. Steve had read on sale for firty dottars. Then Schanes turned to Bill and said. "You'd better show him the cheeks." He did; the banker took him away to a room, and that was the last Schanes saw of them until Bill came out with his new checkbook in hand.

It can't be surprising that an adolescent should prompt little respect from a banker, nor that comic books, typi-cally considered kids' stuff, should have so little value for most adults. They may nonetheless have money behind them. The comic books in the size and shape with which most of us are familiar were first published in 1933 by the Eastern Color Printing Company of New York. Two of its salesmen, Harry I. Wildenberg and Max C. Gaines, noticed that a news-paper syndicate published a sheet of Sunday funnies from seven-by-nineinch plates, two of which could fit on a standard tabloid page, which, when folded, produced a book of about seven-and-a-half-inches by ten inches. The salesmen collected several reprints of popular comic strips, such as Mutt and Jeff, Joe Palooka, and Reg'lar Fellas, and included them in the first edition of Funnies on Parade, which they sold to Proctor and Gamble as premiums. These were so popular that Max Gaines in the following year began to publish a monthly series. Famous Funnies, which sold for a dime and ran through 218 issues in twenty years. Other companies rose to compete; one of these was Detective Comics, whose initials, D.C., came to stand for its owner since 1937, National Periodical Publications. D.C. produced the most famous series of all, Superman, written by Jerry Siegel and penciled by Joe Shuster, the latter discovered by Max Gaines. Selling for a dime in its premier issue, Superman No. 1 is valued in the current Overstreet's Price Guide at $9000 in mint condition, $4500 fine, and $1500 popular in the last two decades, owing to a cultural interest in the mass arts (collecting Coca-Cola bottles and parcontecting Coat-Coat abortes and par-aphernalia rose in popularity at the same time), and also because comic books, like stamps, were within the means of any hobby ist. Cheap to begin with, comics stayed cheap even when they soared in price. Thus they were easy to collect and profitable to sell. Steve Schanes said that during the first few years of the operation of Pacific Comics, he and his brother literally bought truckloads of comics that pull-ed up to their door. He said they might buy one lot of comics for a dime apiece

- $300 for 3000 comics - and after culling the lot, find individual issues worth two or three dollars each. Few of the issues could carry such a markup. the issues could carry such a markup, of course, but the store on any of its best days brought in $200 gross, almost gone of which was subject to sales day, from which periodicals are exempted. With little overhead in labor, equipment, or rent, Pacific Comics was profitable enough to help put Steve through college (he attended the Cleveland Institute of Art for one year but left, disliking the weather and the neighborhood, and completed his bachelor of arts at the Otis Art Institute in downtown Los Angeles, with hi primary interest in sculpture), and moreover the business made enough money to fund the establishment of more stores, all the while increas ing its inventory to the point where its mail-order service for used comibooks became what Dave Scroggy, the stores' general manager, reckoned to be the third or fourth largest in the country. In 1979 the Schanes brothers owned half a million comics, which that year brought a real-market price o $200,000.

The first branch store was near State College (on Montezuma Road), the second in Clairemont, and the third in Oceanside. Of these only the Claire-mont store was profitable. In Oceanside Steve Schanes felt he was being blackmailed by a building inspector who demanded petty improvements before granting the necessary permits, and he was obliged to fire a crew of shop employees on the suspicion that one of them had led a burglary on his inventory. The State College store was far too expensive for the money it brought in; Steve estimated a cost of $150 a day versus an income as low as fifty dollars. In a shopping center with a McDonald's franchise, the store's location was good; there was plenty of foot traffic. But the inventory was not abundant or varied enough for the clientele. "People walked in and saw

College students were not interested in old comic books, they wanted up-to-date fantasy material: posters, science-fiction paperbacks, color portfolios, foreign comics, comic trade journals (called "fanzines").

Mr. Natural and other underground comics, art anthologies, cartoon his tories, calendars, the Marvel and D.C. all the inventory that might be called the illustrations of popular imagination. No lack of these materials was evident in the suppliers' mar-ket, and the demand was there in the buyers' market as well. As the Schanes brothers saw it, their problem was a failure in the distribution system— called the "LD." system, for independent distributor

Traditionally an independent distributor buys printed materials from all kinds of publishers and distributes them to all kinds of retailers. What the retailer doesn't sell goes back to the distributor, who either shreds it or returns it to the publisher; either way the retailer gets a credit toward the pur-chase of new issues from the pubsity, an important factor in the re-tailer's business. Not being out-of-pocket for issues that don't sell, the new line of magazines. The store rack always looks alive with new titles and compete for about the same reader ship. Scroggy, who was the general manager at Pacific Comics, said most customers for fantasy material are be-tween the ages of eighteen and thirtyfive. Some children and adolescents buy comics, but these groups appear to be more interested in video games. Scroggy said that since the 1950s, when the comic-book industry nearly expired under the bad press of a bestselling book. The Corruption of Inno-cents, which attacked the content of comics in the same way that consumer ups have attacked the prevalence of violence and sex on television, the industry responded first by writing a self-imposed code of ethics (immediately circumvented by the comic books that switched to the magazine format, the most famous of these is Mad), and secondly by changing the emphasis of comic book stories, downplaying bloody violence in favor of character development. The superheroes of comic books today are softer than the old-time men of steel. Shel Dorf, the president of the Comic Convention, said comics "used to present everything in pure black and white - pure good guy, pure bad guy. But then in the 1960s there came to be tremendous shades of gray" - as when Spider Man, a college student, felt wounded because is, wasn't as popular as a football player. Said Scroggy, who grad-uated from Kent State University in 1972 and was a poetry fellow at the Provinceton Foundation in Mas-sachussetts, "I'm constantly amazed at who reads comics. I mean = 1 do."

collegiate readers, and to improve the profitability of Pacific Comics while incidentally forgoing the hassles of doing business in Oceanside. Steve Schanes one night proposed a new ar-rangement to his brother. They would liquidate all four retail stores and go into wholesale distribution. The idea made sense: They knew the fantasy distributor who carries hundreds of magazines of all kinds. With the credit and goodwill they had long established as retailers, they could buy directly from the comic book publishers and distribute materials to fantasy shops in exactly the quantities they required. There would be no more wasting of unsold issues on the shelves. They would mail catalogues to the fantasy shop owners, as they had always done to customers in their mail-order busi ness, and the shop owners would call for the delivery of as many issues of Brain Fannasy, Fannasic Four, and Superboy as they felt confident their customers would buy. Absorbing no loss on unsold copies, the Pacific Comics Distribution Company could offer a sweet incentive: a forty-percent profit to the retailer instead of the usual for the delivery of as many issues of twenty. "They make money, we make money, and there's no waste - no unsold issues, no shredded paper, no chopped-down trees," said Steve.

saw promise in the idea. Although the four stores as a whole made enough money to pay the overhead with some left over for increasing the inventory of old issues, which supplied the high-profit mail orders. the actual profit for the business, on which he declined to be specific, was only marginal. But the risk in becoming a distributor was based on whether the retail market would grow. Aside retail market would grow. Aside from the State College store, the marfrom the State College store, the mar-ket seemed strong in San Diego; there were fantasy shops in Hillcrest, Poway, and Santee. And judging from mail-order sales to other retailers and from information gathered at comic conventions, the national market seemed to have grown from about 400 fantasy shops in 1974 to 1200 in 1979.

Also, as a distributor the Schaneses would once again be able to group their inventory and employees in one location, and stop the expensive driving they'd had to do in recent years.

"It was an easy decision," said Steve. "I was in bed one night, totally bummed out about the store in Ocean side and thinking about the State Col-lege store. Distribution seemed like the logical move. The next morning I the logical move. The next morning I talked to Bill about it"—they shared at this time, 1979, a duplex property owned by their father on Felton Street in North Park—"and he agreed right away. We'd been in the business a while and we just felt it was time to change." Steve was twenty-five years change. Steve was twenty-five years old that year. Bill twenty-one. As Steve says, they "imploded" the business, selling all four stores for slightly more than $200,000, most of that in inventory, and established the new business in 2200 square feet on Ronson Court, Kearny Mesa. The transition was gradual, taking about a year, and not very difficult since as anticipated, the retail trade continued to expand in San Diego and elsewhere. These fantasy stores were single, in-dependent businesses that responded to the specialized attention of distributors such as the Schanes brothers. In a year Pacific Comics had taken another 2200 square feet of warehouse, and had a gross income of $750,000

At the same time, the business was moving into publishing, slowly at first, starting with the production of art portfolios, which were signed and numbered reproductions of full-color paintings by popular artists, commissioned by the firm of Schanes & Schanes. A portfolio contained from four to six reproductions and sold for thirty-five dollars at most. Expensive, limited, the portfolios gave the Schaneses the means to publish in a small portion of the market; in effect it allowed them to learn something about publishing, about dealing with artists and printers, without exposing them-selves to much loss.

Distributing comic books, portfolios, fanzines, and other kinds of materials showed them further that the fantasy market was capable of absorb-ing more products. In fact, the more popular comic books were always in short supply, since Marvel and D.C. were now feeding two distribution sys-tems: the independents, and the socalled direct-sale distributors, of which Pacific Comics was only one of about fifteen in the country that had come into existence during the previous few years. In 1980 Steve shrewdly suggested a way to increase the supply of comic books. At the San Diego Comic Convention he stood up in a meeting with representatives of the Marvel Comics Group and asked if the company would create a comic book for sale exclusively to fantasy stores, and excluket, a bona fide market. Dazzler's success had another sively for distribution by the so-called direct-sale companies such as his own and others represented in the room. "Ten thousand dollars," he said, "that's all you guys have to lose. A multimillion dollar company; come on! You can handle it. Let us show you that we can sell the product. I mean — let us make a profit for you. We want to make a profit for you. What's ten thousand dollars?"

The following March the Marvel company produced Dazzler, a science-fiction adventure comic whose first issue sold an astonishing 400,000 copies in fantasy stores alone. This was twice the number that normally rings up as a hit. Of these, Pacific Comics sold about 28,000. "The real impact of Dazzler was sort of like what happened at Woodstock," said David Scroggy. "You had all these directsale stores [fantasy shops] all over the country: one in this town, two in that town; and they were just out there, you know, like hippies, functioning but strange. Then came Woodstock and all the hippies looked around and said. 'I never knew there were this many. When Duzzler sold 400,000, suddenly all the direct-sales stores were a mar meaning for Steve and Bill Schanes. It showed that a new comic book, it if was good, could immediately become a hit. Direct-sale distribution elimi-nated any need for the publisher to persuade the independent distributors to carry a new magazine. Pacific Com-ics and other distributors like them

So it seemed there remained only for the Schaneses to publish their own comic book and see what happened. But how to attract pencilers and writers away from New York? As with the distribution system, here again the helped to create, and some of them resented it.

Jack Kirby, whose work began to appear in 1935, and who co-created such Marvel heroes as Spider Man, the Hulk, and Captain America, quit working for the company in 1977. He said on the telephone from his home in Thousand Oaks, "I don't think you can deal with the so-called mainstream producers of comics because you are going to get cheated in some manner Where's the incentive?" he asked. "If you're not allowed to share in the profit, the incentive is taken away."

About two years ago the Schanes brothers announced to acquaintances in the comic business around the coun-try that Pacific Comics would allow writers and artists who worked under the P.C. label to keep the rights of their characters for licensing in television, film, or any other medium. Early this year P.C. announced further that it would pay a royalty of eight cents on the one-dollar cover price of a P.C. 'Sparta book' - the industry standard, so named because nearly all comics are printed in Sparta, Illinois - rising to ten cents after the sale of 100,000 copies. A book could be ex-pected to sell at least 75,000 copies for royalty of $6000. A book selling 150,000, which is about the average for a Marvel comic, would return $13,000 in royalties. And one that sold as well as Dazzler's first issue would pay more than $30,000.

The first to sign with Pacific Comics was Kirby. In November of 1981 P.C. published his Captain Victory, which has since been licensed for reprinting in seven foreign countries. (As an op-tion Pacific offers to represent the artist in foreign sales for a thirty-five per-cent commission on revenues.) This year with the addition of royalty pay-ments, Kirby received about $6000 for stallment, which sold 85,000 copies. Kirby has since produced five more installments, and this month comes out with a new series, Silver Star. Other comics now published by P.C. are Ms. Mystic by Neol Adams. Starslayer by Mike Grell, The Rock eteer by Dave Stevens (from National City: he moved to Los Angeles in 1977), The Missing Man by Steve Ditko, and beginning in October, Groothe Wanderer by Sergio Aragones, the cartoonist for Mad Magazine.

These P.C. comics are hardly visi

(continued from page 15) ble in the throng of competing titles in a fantasy store. Comic Kingdom on University Avenue in North Park, for example, carried Starslayer and Captain Victory in mid-September, but one had to ask for help in finding them amid the titles from Marvel and D.C. Pacific Comics nonetheless has affected the industry in a different way with its new line of comics. Last year for the first time. Marvel and D.C. agreed to begin paying royalties to their artists — about five percent of their sixty-cent cover prices, after the first 100,000 copies sold. Bruce Jones of Coronado, who writes the scripts for Marvel's Conan the Barbarian comic books, said that if not for the innovation of Pacific Cornics, he would never have been offered a royalty from Marvel. Pacific's royalty has also attracted ones and his co-writer, April Campbell, to produce a thirty-two-page anthology of horror stories called Wisted Tales, which will be distrib-uted by P.C. in December. During the

In the coming year the Schanes brothers hope to achieve the publica-tion of twelve comic book serials. The sale of these comic books, together with the sale of hundreds of items the with the sale of hundreds of items the company distributes for other fantasy publishers, should bring in a gross of five million dollars, compared to $3.5 million this year and $1.2 million last year. In July the business moved to a 17,000-square-foot warehouse on Production Avenue in Kearny Mesa, within sight of Miramar Naval Air Stat was a Clark Anthony day in San Diego. Squeaky nice. The kind that makes you want to stroll barefoot along the seashore, seek poetry in mundane things, and gener-ally bless your lot. So why I chose to seend it with Shanks Green — trusted local courses, all of which we have played without distinction (to put it played without distinction (to put it euphemistically), he interrupted. "Nah. We need someplace where the condo monster hasn't already gobbled up the countryside. Someplace where Reality won't grab us by the lapels. Someplace, far away, like, how 'bout Rajamare'".

I flinched. We only knew about the course by reputation. Located on the coast seventy-seven kilometers south coast seventy-seven kilometers south of the Mexican border. Bajamar has sent north as many tales of duffer hor-ror as Hussong's has T-shirts. It is said to be an "eight ball" course, meaning the average golfer will lose a minimum of eight golf balls during a single round over its severely sculpted terrain. Definitely no place for weekend hackers of our dubious skills and unbalanced budgets. But Shanks was insistent, and his tone of voice carried an ureney I had to respect. "Okay," I said, envisioning the debacle between an imposible course and two of golf's worst strikers of the ball, "but I'm only doing it for the margaritas we'll savoi

"Thanks," I commented, "but we've made other plans."

My response was not without prece-dent. Playing golf with Shanks, which I have done for the last decade, is like tailgating the Pequod. Something always seems to happen when we step onto a course. "We may have to close soon for thirty to sixty days," he said, "but when we get refunded, and we will, it'll be back on its feet. In the mean no clubhouse facilities, and the back nine, quite frankly, is in bad shape since we only have enough water fo the front side. The green fees are six dollars if you still want to play."
"Hail yes," said Shanks, his glass becoming half full. "Where's the first

Without hesitation, or even a warm-up. Shanks walked straight to the tee on the first hole — a 485-yard par five. "Hot dang, that's a long ways away," he gasped, motioning toward a Gobi-like, 200 yards of desert bea Goot-like, 200 yards of desert oc-tween us and the beginning of the fair-way. "I'd say the guy that designed this course was into Early Punitive." Pretty close. Architect Percy Clifford intended Bajamar to resemble the seaintended Bajantar to resention the sea-side courses in Scotland and England, with fairways and greens like slender islands amid otherwise natural terrain. Thus the tee shots at Bajamar, which opened in 1974, must fly in some cases length of two football fields before they reach green turf. From the rear tees, known as championship tees and painted blue, the course is just short of 7000 yards long. From the regular, white tees, it's a modest 6000

Before I could recommend that we humbly play from the shorter tees, thus ng acres of terror and desola-

He twitched his knees and elbows, shook his shoulders, and, clenching his teeth ened his grip. Finally he cocked his left eye down at the ball, a signal that we were about to commence - be it the start of a splendid journey, or

St. Jude, natron saint of lost causes saint of mental illness. Eventually both Shanks and I tossed a ball onto the fairway and hacked our way to the green. When the divots had cleared. we had lost three balls in the process. "A mess," Shanks grouned as we left the putting surface.

clockwise arc, but his downswing betrayed his mignty intent to air-mait that pill all the way to the green. He swung ferociously, a hurried whoosh that sideswiped the bell and sent it slither-ing off to the right, about fifty yards of mongrel vegetation short of the fair-way. "Got it marked?" he asked, slowly picking himself up off the ground.

'Sure. Over by that brown bush." "Yeah. But which one? Must be twenty of 'em out there."

It seemed to help that my shot landed a few yards short of his. But when we reached the general vicinity. our search was like working on an enormous puzzle of a pizza, where all the anchovies are identical. Brown Indian tobacco bushes sprung up everywhere, and even though the dry grass was well matted down from preus forays, trying to locate the balls took ten minutes. de decided to play from the less forbidding white tees, but the next twelve holes were still more Easter egg hunt than golf. We left many a shot in arid, open-air graves, to the point that, by the thirteenth tee, our supply of balls was running low. So were our hopes. Shanks drove his last ball — a faded, lime-green thing he found a few holes back — tentatively down the right side of the fairway. His next shot skittered due left. It banged into a lump of auburn-colored lava and then into something else — a dark. slow-moving object that, on closer inspection, suggested that he may have nothing to hit for the remaining six

To which Harriet replied. "It doesn't seem to make much difference one way or the other, dear."

The siege continued, punctuated by gaggles of voices. Then another group came to the tee. We waved them through. Three burly men in flaming red football jerseys busted long drives far down the fairway. Shanks didn't mention the snake to them. They looked as though they'd make quick work of the sad old beast, which lay on the ground, frozen into four and a half feet of semiconcentric circles.
"Well sir." Shanks said after the Shanks mudged his ball away from the serpent, whose head tilted like a ship listing to starboard. "This one's for us, Bud," he whispered, taking a firm swipe at the ball with his two iron. It was the best shot he'd hit all day. A keeper — at least for the first 150 yards. Then it curved hard to the left in a sweeping parabola. It peeled away from the fairway, over the chaparral,

The place is a Noah's Ark of beady-eyed, stuffed animals (some of which, after a while, appear to be watching intently), plus furnishings appropriate to the period — and, of course, ten small figurines on he mantie that, one by one, have a way of the mantte tast, one by one, have a way of disappearing (a few before our very eyes). The unacknowledged sound effects—tempestuous storms and spidery music, like fingernalis clawing their way across a blackboard—effectively sustain the mood of the play. As do the somber lighting designs of David Thaver. When he shut the lights off, in act two, Thayer converts the small theater into a theme park for paranoids.

The highest paid stars, the profile motive are generally the prime candislates. In the production at Lamb's, by contrast, all ten memiless of the cast are equally solid — and thus equally worthy of our tunnos suspicion. Well directed by David Young, every actor communicates a delineate bend of possible innocence and some probably proclivities for truly vengeful behavior. As the list of suspects narrows — do check that list twice, by the way; it's slippery — the performance levels of the remaining actors increase, building to a genuinely gripping, program-gawing sions of mysteries often is made easy if one inventive exploration of its possibilities. The tale is familiar. Douglas Roberts is the cargo officer aboard AK 601, a supply ship that delivers "toothpaste and toilet paper to safe areas of the Pacific" during the Second World War. The square-jawed, common-sensical Roberts finds his duty intolerable, especially after V-E day is declared and the war in the Pacific begins to wind down. Roberts wants action, but the wind down. Roberts wants action, but the only things resembling combat on the ship are an occasional flare-up among the bored members of the crew and the dictatorial habits of Captain Morton, an ambitious jerk with an inferiority complex, who parasitically manipulates Roberts to further his own advancement.

The Coronado production has strong ac-tors in the lead roles. Navarre T. Perry plays an insidious Captain Morton, the breathless manue whose ambitions are matched only by his love of cruel edicts matched only by his low of cruel edicts. Bill Mass is capable as Ensign Puter, the boyish, antry Everyman figure who carries on the tradition of humanizing the ship after Roberts has left for his last WestPac. And David fordan is emotionally moving as the straight-shooting Roberts, though there are times when his responses lag be-hind the beat. Even with strong actors in the leaf roles.

First of all, it should be noted that the works of Shakespeare are far from involable for adaptation into any other medium, style, gene, or milles. It 's a testament to the enduring popularity of his plots and only countless straight versions of his plays, but shoved his plots into such un-likely settings as the London Underworld (Joe Macbeth), backstage Broadway (Kiss Me. Kate), the world of New York street-gangs (West Side Story), and, of course, outer space for Forbidden Planet, the 1956 sci-fi version of The Tempest. And just as Shakespeare borrowed his stories from contemporary literary and historica sources, writer-director Paul Mazursky has never hesitated to draw his inspiration from the work of other artists. his Harry and Tonto contained more than an echo of King Lear, and his Willie and Phil was a themes that Hollywood has ground out not

Aing Lear, and its wittee and ran was a Sixties counterculture reworking of Truf-faut's Jules and Jim. With his new film, Tempest, he fits the mechanics of Sha'e-speare's piot to a very modern tale of per-sonal disintegration and renewal. While the elimination of The from the title may the elimination of The from the little may seem as arbitrary and pointless as the sev-eral other minor deviations from the origi-nal narrative, the emotional core of Shake-speare is retained, though at times it seems Mazursky is working harder than necessary to do so Mazursky's Prospero is Phil Dimitrious (John Cassavetes), a world-famous ar-chitect in self-imposed exile on a rugged Aegean island, in the company of his fifteen-year-old daughter Miranda (the enifficen-year-old daugnter Miranda (the en-gaging newcomer Molly Ringwald). Ariel becomes Aretha (Susan Sarandon), Phil's lover, a restless "free spirit" increasingly irritable, as is Miranda, at her "imprisonirritable, as is Miranda, at het "imprison-ment" on the India. And the week.hed Caliban is transformed into Kalibanos (Raul Julia), he Island's randly gondherd and the India. I doozy of a storm that brings everyone together for a neat, satisfying resolution.

At two and a half hours, Tempest could act two and a nan notice; tempers could use a little trimming; in some places it looks as if Mazursky is straining Shake-speare's original to conform to his chosen Mid-Life Crisis theme, and in others he seems to be doing just the opposite. In many ways, Tempest gives in to the pull, so prevalent in Mazursky's work (partic-larly Horry and Tonto and An Unnarried Woman), toward Issue-of-the-Week trendiness. But if he sometimes draws his subjects from the TV-movie bin, his aim is to give them an elevated treatment — a de-finitiveness and a comprehensiveness, not to mention an intelligence, better suited to the big screen than the small. One can sense in Tempest the writer-director's urge to make the "ultimate" male menopause movie; also one can sense that, with the Shakespearean structure and its requisite supernatural elements, he just might be supernatural elements, he just might be overreaching himself. But it's certainly permissible, and often revitalizing, for an artist to stretch in a new direction, especially someone like Mazursky, who was an actor and writer Mazursky, who was an actor and writer before turning director and who obviously cares about the people in his story and respects the intelligence of his audience. After a movie summer of mind-numbing special effects and cutesy star vehicles, it's special effects and cutesy star vehicles, if's refreshing, at the very least, to find a film of genuinely adult sensibility in which character and dialogue predominate Mazursky has an unerring feel for the comedy inherent in the desperation of conconedy innerent in the desperation of con-temporary life, and though he might set up Phil's breakdown in somewhat conven-tional terms (a friend dies of a heart attack; he envisions himself toppling from the roof of one of his buildings), he follows its ne envisions anisoti topping from the cool of once of his buildings), he folious its cool of once of his buildings, he folious its consympathy. Mazursky's characters are consympathy. Mazursky's characters are consistently treated with an openness and inderence reminiscent of Remoir; all are fallishe and imperfect but never intedemably so. Even the "worst" character in Tempers, the greedy Alexan, is a mun of such he can't help but become rather endearing, the carefully chosen cast falls perfectly into Mazursky's scheme. At its center, Cassavetes is especially impressive in what his first role in years with any depth and actor turned writer-director, but Locking Mazursky's commercial appeal, he has taken the thunkless route of performing in other people's inferior films (a string of chesp action and horror products) in order to make his own. Here, though, free of the unchallenging strictures of third-rate vehi-cles, as well as, for that matter, the discorcies, as well as, for that matter, the discor-dant harshness of his own films, he gets a chance to loosen up and portray a real and complex human being. Actually, Phil is a real human being who happens to be a genius, and a mad one at that, a demanding genius, and a mad one at that, a demanding task for any actor (the role was originally tailored for George C. Scott). Cassavetes certainly invests the character with the obnoxiousness of genius, along with the hint of repressed passion and the threat of in-stability we remember from his earlier work (his lopsided maniacal grin serves him well here); but he also brings Phil considerable symphathy and humanity, a relaxed likability, and, toward the end a sort of astonished innocence when Phil sees that the vengeful cosmic forces that seem to do his bidding aren't as solidly under his control as he'd like to believe.

It is in introducing these cosmic ele ments that Mazursky puts himself on thin ice: the climactic storm — a tumultuously beautiful piece of special-effects work — as well as a small prefigurative one earlier as well as a small prefigurative one earlier in the movie, runs the risk of ripping the carefully woven naturalistic fabric. Not that Mazursky doesn't stretch the fabric here and there to allow or small flights of whimsy, as when Miranda and Aretha break into a water ballet while singing "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?" and, better yet, when Kalibanos' goats are sent into acrobatic ecstasy by Liza Minnelli's rendition of "New York, New York." The film's comic concept is open enough to allow for the small magic; it's the big magic that seems uncomfortable and out of place. This uncomfortableness brings into muestion the entire Shakespearean framequestion the entire Shakespearean frame-work: it seems limiting rather than liberat-ing for Mazursky. For this reason, Tempest may not be among his most artistically successful films, but it's far from unsatissuccessful films, but it's rar from unsatis-fying and never uninteresting. Even Mazursky's less than satisfying movies (chief among them Willie and Phil and his 1976 Next Stop, Greenwich Village, a forgivable lapse into autobiographical rem-iniscence) are merely misconceived and never, from moment to moment, without the warmth, engagement, and attentiveness to emotional detail that put him al-most in a class by himself among Amer-ican filmmakers. (Who else in Hollywood makes such sharply observant comedies that find laughter behind the pain of mod-ern life? Woody Allen grows more inward and detached with each film: Elaine May, Joan Silver, and Claudia Weill are hardly Joan Silver, and Claudia Weill are hardly given the chance to work; Alm Alda has a long way to go. Who else is there?) Mazursky's are the kinds of moyies for which we have lately come to depend upon the French cinema: suffused with an honesty and an intimacy that transcend story esty and an intimacy that transcend story mechanics. For this reason, it's a shame he feels he must sometimes borrow those mechanics from other people; but also for this reason it doesn't really matter.

"It's a once-in-a-lifetime experience," Aunt Bertha explains as she bursts through my door. Her smile is rueful. "I can't believe I did it." It's been weeks since I've seen my Aunt Bertha, and lie change in her is marked. She's gained weight again, and she sports an overblouse that reaches to her chubby knees. Her hair is listless and an air of absent-mindedness hangs over her, as if she's had an otherworldly encounter. This sne's had an otherworldly encounter. This is made evident by the fact that she arrives wearing her kitchen apron, one with print-ed letters that reads, "Chef for all sea-sons." With other people I would attempt to guess at the experience's omysteriously alluded to. With Aunt Bertha, never.

"I've been writing a book," she admits breathlessly. "The whole summer, day and night, writing, scribbling, thinking. Would you believe this, your auntie, a

It's been impossible for me to stop this monologue, and a sigh escapes my lips. She takes this as a sign of soldarity. "You see how philosophical your Aunt Bertha is? A sigh is the perfect answer to our mobilems.

Abruptly she breaks off and begins leading me to the door. "Creativity is like cating, and eating is like making love. If you say away from it, you forget the whole thing even exists. She spent the longest time in front of the lone male in the room before close to the pita bread, and they gazed down at their plates waiting for the dancer to pass. The fahini spaste made of sesame seeds) was as gray as the fish and as tasteless. Actually, two ap-petizers and one combination plate are more than enough for two people. The best item on the combination plate was the kibby. The barrak was disappointing. I had expected it to be prepared in pastry shells the way they had been at Bazzi's. I realize that an alternate version is to make them long and thin, but these were scant on both meat and cheese. Aunt Bertha toyed with her shish kebob. #### JONATHAN SAVILLE

Ten years ago it was the brilliant idea of pianist Alicia Schachter and her husband, Sheldon Rich, to make use of the grand beauty of Santa Fe, New Mexico as the beauty of Santa Fe, New Mexico as the setting for a summer festrated of chamber music. This past summer — typically— they assembled a group of first-rate musi-cians, whose talents not only blended har-monicously but were in fact rehanced by their blending. What was amazing in the group performances of Ida and Ani Kaya-fian, André-Michel Schub, Edward Auer, Kenneth Cooper, Nathaniel Rosen, Heichiro Ohyama, Dale Clevenger, and several other outstanding instrumentalists reticinto Onyama. Date Clevenger, and several other outstanding instrumentalists was how often a single spirit seemed to move them, a single mode of interpreta-tion, a single musical attitude. This at-titude was one of extreme intensity, of passion just contained within formal bounds, so that performance after performance was characterized by a tremendous motoric drive, an extremely broad dynamic range, and a remarkable facility of the performance was characterized by a tremendous motoric drive, an extremely broad characterized by the performance was the second technique, mussiannship, and insect making its special splender was remarked to the performance and the mussicans were enjoying each other, learn succians we

has always been one of the chief strengths of the La Jolla organization: parties.

This group has taken a long time to discover its identity. It has traditionally sponsored its own chamber orchestra that in fact, is how it began. A devoted that, in fact, is how it began. A devoted following from La Jolla and elsewhere has for years attended the small series of con-certs in Sherwood Hall, basically because it was pleasant to meet the same people season after season; the concerts offered a nice opportunity to dress up and to socialize, while participating in an event that at least on paper had something to do loved. Unfortunately, the social pleasures were really all there was, for it did no knowledgeable audience that the chamber orchestra itself, an insufficiently rehearsed the concerts were — judging by profes-sional and big-city standards — at best the concerts were — judging by profes-sional and bis-city standards — at best marginally acceptable and often a lot worse than that.

Under LeeMaster's guidance, the series began to changer adically, More and more, the emphasis was placed on visiting chamber groups of world renown — the and the like — while the role of the local and the like — while the role of the local chamber orchestrar gradually lessened. This gave the loyal concert-goers the chance to enjoy the music as well as the social event, and it continued to give the board, now with a firmer sense off musical conscience, the occasions for those fine receptions they were in the habit of enjoy-ing after virtually every concert. The acceptions they were in the habit of enjoy-ing after virtually every concert. The acceptions they were in the habit so foiety knew nothing about. They recognized that the control of the control of the control that a fine concert followed by a lively and well-catered party constitutes a much richer and fuller human experience than either a concert or a party by tiself, fo both are expressions of gratified appetite, of that in the arts boldness, responsibility to-ward the muses, and the willingness to try ward the muses, and the willingness to try out something new are more important than caution and cost-accounting, the La Jolla group decided to take the risk. An artistic triumph was already assured, for the musical nackage had been assembled the musical package had been assembled and fully tested elsewhere, year after year, to critical acclaim. But to increase the likelihood of financial success as well, LeeMaster and the board turned to what emotions contained within an orderly so-cial structure, and of inner happiness. Consequently, the musical function of the Chamber Society may have changed — from local manufacturer to international importer — but the parties went on, giving this group a solidarity, and a particular quality of friendliness, not to be found in many another arts organization.

When it was decided to bring in not only a series of guest artists but an entire prepackaged festival for this summer's concerts, the Chamber Society immediately set to work using its social imagination set to work using its social imagination. Where would the performances take place? In Sherwood Hall, some of them. But why not branch out and make use of other playing spaces in San Diego — the Old Globe, for example, or even the San Diego Mission? This would give an outer Diego Mission? This would give an outer variety to the concerts to match the great inner variety of their inventive programming. It would also — and this, I think, is the most important insight the recent festival has offered us — turn San Diego (at least in small measure) into a music festival city, making use of the environment as a setting for the music, and bringing together the network of the contraction.

a setting for the music, and bringing to-gether the pleasures of sound, sight, locale, and season in the way that gives any authentic summer music festival its special irreplaceable flavor.

Moreover, Lading a hint from Santa Fer Musice Society decided to combine the music making with what it steel fload al-ways done best. Along with the twelve concerts (at Sherwood, the Globe, Mandeville Auditorium, the mission, the San Diego Art Museum, and ECPAC) San Diego Art Museum, and ECPAC) are also also also a pread in aumber. Some of these were more-or-less private parties, in the sump-tuous homes of some board members, to which only the musicians, the board itself, and major financial contributors were in-vited. Others (this was the crucial innovation) were open to the public — at a fee, to cover the cost of food and service and to cover the cost of food and service and to help make up the festival deficit that was bound to remain in spite of good ticket asks. These parties discovered (or redis-covered) beautiful areas for outdoor par-ties, where food, the anticipation (or memory) of fine must, pleasing surround-ings, and the delights of San Dego's vaca-tion climate could be suitably combined. There was 2 wonderful late aftermson

"Mini-Cafe" in the spacious area in front of the La Jolla Museum of Contemporary Art: a buffet of Mexican food, wine, ta-bles, candlefight, vigorous conversation between two superb concerts in Sherwood bles, candlelight, vigorous conversation between two superb concerts in Sherwood Hall next door, and a spectacular sunset over the Pacific timed precisely to lift the spirits by the power of nature to the same heights they had been exalted to by the power of music. And there was full-scale dinner — also Mexican, which may have been overdoined a model this, conference been overdoing a good thing - outdoors in front of the Old Globe, with the loveliness of the cucalyptus, and another im-mense sunset providing the prelude to a glorious concert of works by Haydin (the D Major Horn Concerto, with Clevenger as the superb solosis), Stravinsky (the Duo Concertant, Iringing together Schub and Ida Kavarlani in an exquisite performance), and Mozart the erchanting Strag Diver-timento, & 505, enchantingly played by Aai Kavarlani, Certaldine Walther, and Timothy Edyly. This is exactly what summer music festival should be — high art and vacation fun fused so that they are inseparable. The visit of the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival, as organized by the La Jolla Chamber Music Society, showed not only that such a thing is possi showed not only that such a thing is possi-ble in San Diego but also that our city offers an ideal setting for a festival — a setting as good as that of the Aspen Music Festival, and one considerably better (in terms of climate and natural beauty) than that of the Minneapolis Someticits, both of which I have described in recent weeks.

The question remains, however, as to whether the success of this one-week im ported festival can be repeated, expanded, and extended to other series of musical and extended to other series of musical events. It is sobering to realize that all the musical preparation — choosing the art-ists, arranging the programs, providing rehearsal time, creating a unanimity of ap-proach to the works played — was done elsewhere. Are there individuals and or elsewhere. Are there individuals and or-ganizations in San Diego capable of doing (and doing so well) what Alicia Schachter and Sheldon Rich have been doing in Santa Fe over the last decade? It was wonderful to have this festival here, but artistically it to have this festival here, but artistically it was in no sense a San Diego festival, and a community cannot be thought of as a cul-tural center if it is merely a consumer of cultural goods from somewhere else and incapable of producing anything of its

The local organizing of the festival was indeed skillful and imaginative, but there too one is left with a feeling of uneasiness. Sharon LeeMaster has been the making of the La Jolla Chamber Music Society for several years, and it was her organization-al skills—ably supported by the board— that gave the festival last month its logisti-cal perfection and refinement of detail.

Now that she has moved on to COMBO, will the Chamber Society be able to do things as efficiently and inventively without her? Even more disturbing, will the out ner? Even more disturbing, will the board decide to bring the Santa Fe Festival back at all? Good music is not a money-making proposition, and it is always left to the generosity of patrons to make up the deficits. In the present case, the Santa Fe visit has left a deficit of some $25,000, and have the courage to try the same thing next year, with all its inherent financial risks. The festival, it need hardly be said at this point, made a signal contribution to the musical life of our community, it also the musical life of our community, it also gave us the sense that we might — one day — be in the major leagues musically, the way Minneapolis, Aspen, and dozens of other comparable cines are. But our only significant local music festival — Tito Capobianco's Verdi Festival at the San Diego Opera — has just been eliminated for the summer of 1983 because of finan-cial problems (see Neal Matthews' article in this issue's "City Lights" section) There can be no doubt that, throughout its history, San Diego has been content to be artistically second-rate and worse, unlike many places of its size and wealth. There have been certain hopeful indications that have been certain hopeful indications that his contentiolly negative self-image is changing (David Atherton at the symptomy, the new professionalism at the Old Globe, the Verdi Festival, the Santa Fewitzil But some personality disorders are incurable, a syndrome that has been around long enough becomes to introduce the contention of the property of

I Like Trikes

Few people - even my most Few people — even my most intimate friends — are aware that two decades ago i was tricycle champion of France. When I won the Dijon-Marseilles 600-kilometer tricycle Grand Prix, there was a front-page picture of me in the Paris edition of the Herald Paris edition of the Hendd Tribune, with my hand being kissed by André Malraux. Much of the race had taken place during one of the terrifying monsoons that periodically assail the south of France in springtime, yet I had managed to cover the distance in the record-breaking time of nineteen days. "By her gallantry nimeteen days. "By her galluntry and grace under pressure," the Trib editornalized, "Miss Rosenbboum has done yeoman's work in giving free, cle acting the dignity it so richly deserves, "Many people still think of the tricycle as a child's toy. It was not always so. Before the Revolution, the French royal close to the peasants," as he says in his memoirs. And in our own country it is a breame but little known fact that an entire regiment of Robert E. Lee's army fought on tricycles, which were found to be the ideal mode of transportation in the dense swampland of Virginia and Georgia; when Lee surrende at Appendition, his honor guard tode up to the place of ignominy proudly erect on tricycles decotated in the Confederate colors. Today, however, serious cyclists turn up their nose at the little three-wheelers, and there ause I fail off. In any case, my in a mass ride on my battered but loyal ten-speed trike, when I discovered that this very weekend there will be a bug ride (up to 5000 cyclists) in Sun (continued on page 5, cot. 2) is not a serious competition they are allowed to enter.

I have, on these pages, occasionally communicated my distaste for topical songwriters. My complaint is not that the concerns voiced in issue-related songs are unworthy of expression, although I do believe that most of us are believe that most of us are already convinced of the inherent evils of war, poverty, oppression, and the like. But the possession of a keen sociological perspective and the noblest of intentions is not automatically accompanied by creative talent, and many tonical sondwriters set so creative talent, and many topical songwriters get so caught up in the process of important message that the musical content and quality of their efforts are all but irrelevent. Judging such songs from a purely musical point of view, then, would be as fruitless an endeavor as reviewing the incidental score to a hard-hitting documentary. On the finest quality cotton batting. We use thirty tufts rather than the usual twelve to twenty-four to insure that the batting does not shift under you during the night. Sleep in health on the floor or mate the cotton fund to our beautiful futon.

The innovative Zen bed is more supportive and comfortable than conventional bedding, but it's the creative genius of the Zen bed design that guarantees its acceptance in our homes. Lightweight, washable, fully warrantied and available in a variety of sizes

Familiar with the three-fold sleeping mat? By splitting the third fold in two, our sleeping met has an aesthetically pleasing as well as practical back for use as a couch when it's not being used as a comfortable, yet firm bed. Clever, eh? Zippered cotton panels, of course!

THE READER PUZZLE

By Don Rubin

There are thirteen instruments in the one-man band at the right: a piccolo, two French horns, a basset horn (tenor clarinet), two bass axophones, a corner, two

Not in that order, of course that's what's going to make you dizzy

Using the clues provided, try to identify each of the instruments, in order, from the mouthpiece (lower left) to the bell (upper right).

Please note, arggh, we have taken some liberties with the construction of the instruments

Rules of the Game
1. Prizes for solving the Reader Puzzle will be Reader

T-shirts.
2. All entries in the Reader All entries in the Reader Puzzle contest must be received by the Reader (addressed to Reader Puzzle, PO. Box 8803), San Diego, CA 92138) by 9:00 a.m. Friday, eight days following the issue date.
 All entries must be accompanied by your name, putters, and shirt size (S, M, L.

A. Employees of the Reader and their immediate families are not eligible.

5. In the event of disputes or tes, decisions of the judges will be final, and arbitrary. We've only got five T-shirts a week to give away, so if there are more than five winners, we'll have a
