Construction timetables seem made to be broken, and the laters schedule-buster is downtown's U.S. Grant Hotel. An optimistic note in the city property department's file. The $2.4 million in federal aid was denied in July, however, because other projects seemed worther and because Sickels hadn't secured his new exilling deliverse. because Sickels hadn't secured his seven-million-dollar loan. City officials scrambled and convinced the government to reconsider the application this fall. But on October 4, Sickels's assistant, Pat Leone, informed the city that Crocker Bank had vettod a construction loan application, so Leone and the city agreed to withdraw th second application rather than risk another denial. That was quietly done last month. Leon requested the city not spend the additional $600,000 it had the additional $500,000 it has reserved, though that money has since been used on other projects. The ten million dollars in industrial revenue bonds languishes; a private consulting firm hired by the city to scrutinize such projects hasn't even reviewed the Grant Hotel proposal because none of the other funding has jelled. crossing the Cabrillo Bridge. Today the Administration Building's sand-colored stucco façade is flaking away in hundreds of places, and virtually all the big, gracious windows have been boarded up. The interior looks truly haunted: a carpet of rubble and bird droppings covers many of the rotting floorboards, and holes gape in large sections of the walls and ceiling. So rain pours in, but that's no deterrent to the burns who regularly break in and use the building as a shelter. Pigeons flap through the rafters, and a few bird

ABC. But how unlike Disneyland it is in front of the pool hall, with its litter and tolerers. One would think that a small and elderly woman, whose band had died five years before, would yearn to move away, and indeed, some merchants in the quarter have won-dered among themselves if Mrs. Yamada were a captive of the neighborhood, living in an apartment above the pool hall, guarded in back by a concertina of barbed wire atop her garden wall. den wall.

Joe swung onto a barstool and sat very still while I addressed my next shot and missed it. He then returned to the table, chalked up, and ran off six balls in a row, hitting them firmly into the pockets, finally missing on a ball that would have left him in position to sink the eight and win the game. I pocketed two striped balls before missing. Then Joe came back and with two shots finished it off.

I she will be more than the that for another game, and when she had finished I put a quarter on the table to pay for it. Meanwhile Joe and I talked about sports — the Angels that lost another that night to the Brewers. and thinking, "Oh, he's in the Navy," and feeling confortable with that—with placing him somewhere that I knew about,
Apart from the fact that I'd never seen him before in the ABC, he seemed out of place, more of a tourist, so to speak, than I was. I had lived in the neighborhood live, six years before, near the El Cortez Hotel. The ABC was a well-known hangout for hotel residents, but many of the other patrons lived in outlying districts, even not what one would suppose to be downtowners. As near as I could tell they preferred the ABC to newer and more comfortable pool halls because at that time it was cheaper (fifteen cents a game, now twenty-five cents), and because it was eminently casual. You could smoke a joint so long as you kept it at a respectable distance from Mrs. Yamada, who would order a flagrant smoker out of the room You could smoke a wide brown linoleum bedance on the wide brown linoleum be-tween the bar and jukebox, so long as not too many people danced, which would attract attention to the ABC's lack of a cabaret license. You could do, really, most anything you wanted ex-cept fight, which brought an aston-ishingly swift visit from the police. I would call the ABC Club the freest pool hall in town — not as comfortable as Chris's on Keamy Mesa, nor as competitive as the College Billiard Center near San Diego State or the Billiard Tavern at Broadway and Twelfth Avenue - but free, at liberty, Billiard Tavern at Broadway and Twelfth Avenue hat free, at liberty, if a little scary.

What has changed, though, and what made loe and I seem so much out of place, is that in recent years the ABC seems to have lost some of the customers that live in the suburbs, leaving more and more downtowners who, as the Coalisang Quarter atmers who, as the Coalisang Quarter atmers young Tennessean I happen to know, owns a half-share in the Stingare Building next a half-share in the Stingare Building next foot to the ABC Cub, He bought it two years ago with his wife's suncle George Hom, and restored the building to Victorian natiness. He said the patrons of the ABC 'might wander to a different place outside the Gaslamp where they would feel comfortable.' Newburn was in his cobby at the Tom Hom Real Estate offices in North Park, sipping his morning coffee. In defense of the ABC, he said, "They not definitely and the foot of the fo problem on the block, but I don't think you can point the finger in any one direction" — meaning other businesses attract down-and-outers as nesses attract down-and-outers as well, one of which is the eight-room hotel in his own building, where a room rents for forty dollars a week. Newburn said he likes Mrs.

Yamada, and said the pool hall, like the mission across the street, "serves a purpose," but still to protect his own interest and coincidentally to promote the development of the Gaslamp Quarter he once asked Mrs. Yamada if she were interested in selling. She replied, he said, with a quiet word about wanting to keep going for a year or two, as long as she enjoyed her work. "Ready," she said to Joe and mc, the balls racked.

"Cap-it-al-izing on the er-rant man-eu-ver," I said in my Cosell voice, bending for my shot. Joe laughed and said. "Yes, I know I shouldn't have done that. I should be a lot more careful."

At end-game I had two balls left on At end-game I had two balls left on the table, in addition to the eight, and Joe had one. And it was my shot. One of the object balls was in a position where a slow, meticulous shot would but it in the side pocket, leaving the case ball in place for an easy shot on the last object ball in the opposite side pocket, and a final winning shot on the eight. I wen thex to the har for a sip on my drink. (Momma had put out a bag of Friios for me on a white paper nap-kin.) Then I returned and addressed the shot.

Joe said, "Minimum. Atmost. I can see you really want to win this game." What he saw was my face screwed up in a ball of scorn for having blown it. "Me?" I said. "Oh no., I just. . . . should have made that shot." Then I sat at the bar and looked around, wait-

Three's Company brought the Martha Graham Dance Company to town last week in a program of three Graham dances at the East County Forforming, Arts Cen-sertation of Christ's passion, done in the similar of a sect of penients from the Southwest. Night Journey (1947) rectals the story of Codings from the point of view of his wife-mother, Jocasta. The most re-cent work was Acts of Light (1981), a non-narrative dance in three sections — and "Rinata for the sun" — in which the strict indicate the basic themsate content. The company, chosen and trained by Graham so that (as has always been the case) it is vitally an extension of herelf, danced with the precision of movement.

Gatania s was dencing and that comme to characteria her chorsopraghic imagina-tion. This dance concert thus gave San Degma rar and splendid goportunity to come into contact with one of the great artistic minds of our century.

One of the indispensable signs of a great artist is the creation of an unmistakable individual style. There is never any difficulty in recognizing a paragraph of control of the content, the style is that artist is own, a concrete manifests.
