Downtown architect Wayne Donaldson may yet have something good to say about the south of Broadway Gaslamp Quarter, but for now it's just one big aggravation. Donaldson and other Gaslamp promoters worked for ten months to persuade Trust Services of America to spend $320,000 remodeling the Hill Building on Sixth and F streets (Donaldson is also the contractor for the building ovation.) But with the project well under way. Donaldson recently learned that he'll have to scrape together another $30,000 from building owners to purchase and install an electrical

San Diego Gas & Electric says the building's upgraded energy requirements can't be met with existing wiring, and a high-voltage source on Fifth high-voltage source on Fifth Avenue is too far away for lines to run the current efficiently. The utility could place the transformer inside the building, but that would violate federal rules governing historic structures. The equipment could be placed on a six-footby-six-foot concrete pad outside the Hill Building, but that would run afoul of a special Gaslamp ordinance that prohibits any switching boxes or transformers on the brick-lined streets. Last week Donaldson thought up a unique way to service the building's electrical needs without an underground vault: he would place the equipment across the street, in front of a building street, in front of a building also owned by Trust Services of America. The unit would be close enough for the current to be carried by underground wires, and no zoning laws or building codes would be broken. But SDG&E broken. But SDG&E representatives told Donaldson that utility rules require the transformer be placed ''on the premises,'' and across the street isn' ''on the premises. The Hill Building isn' Donaldson's only concern. He says SDG&E has worfully

It Oughta Be A Crime Commission

It's been nearly two years It's been nearly two years since outspoken attorncy Mike Aguirre dreamed up the idea of a San Diego Crime Commission. Modeled after the successful Chicago Crime Commission, which has been in operation since 1919.

Aguirre's local version ideally would have set priorities for large the commission of the control of the control of the commission of the control of the put a small staff of "investigators" to work rooting out white- and blue-collar crime wherever was found. The crime commission was incorporated as a nonprofit agency, but since then it's accomplished nothing. Aguirre got involved in local politics last year (he ran for

But organizer Carter has held just one breakfast meeting since. One founding member who wrote a check for the commission was told there would be a formal installation of officers last June, but has heard nothing else about the matter. Carter's been p.reoccupied with company business and a wild lawsui which sprang from claims by the Arizona-based Coalition for Decency Through Law that Oak Indus..ies is distributing hard-core pornographic films through its ON-TV outlets. Senior Calls Apartment Flat

C Walter Reed stands in the C. Walter Reed stands in the living room of his downtown apartment and asks, "Is this a $195-a-month apartment or a $661-a-month apartment?" In a sense, the answer is 'both, because Reed's dwelling is located within Lion's Manor senior housing projects downtown that share the block on the north side of Market Street between Third and Fourth. Here each of the onebedroom units costs $661 a month, but the federal government pays the majority of that amount for each tenant Reed's contribution is only $195. "But it's still a $661 apartment," Reed asserts. "I think that means I'm entitled to

I think that means I'm getting robbed and my uncle Uncle Sam is getting robbed." In terms, the Lion Young to the think that the same should be suffered to the same should be suff extra-wide doors.

But Reed isn't complaining about the physical plant. Instead, he cites things such as the perils of getting into and out of Lion's Manor. Tenants gain access by inserting a key into a mechanism which electronically opens the front door facing Market Street. However, the doors then remain open for several seconds — long enough to permit intruders to alip in with case. Legitimate visitors to the building are supposed to push a buzzer and identify themselves over an intercom connected to the building's front office. But the office is only open five hours a day, weekdays only. At all other times, outsiders are supposed to go to a nearby pay phone and telephone the tenant they wish to visit, asking that person to come down and open the front door (there is no intercom system in the individual apartments). lot of the people in the becan't afford telephones,

This arrangement stands in sharp contrast to the operation of Horton House, located next door to Lion's Manor. The surface similarities between the two buildings are difficult to ignore. Although the two are separate entities, built by two separate entities, built by two separate agencies, they not only occupy the same block but also were designed by the same architect and thus look almost identical. Both opened two years ago, and they serve the same clientele (low-income recone over sixtection, the people over sixty-two, the guard behind a desk in its lobby twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. In addition, one of the full-time Horton House employees also is on duty around the clock. Despite the security measures, the Horton House staff members say they've tried to reach out to the welcome the Guardian Angels group to use the building as a base; they've also lent their community rooms to the Gaslamp Quarter Theatre for rehearsals. About the only social activity detectable from the Lion's Manor bulletin board is a notice that free coffee is available to resi in the building's small library on Monday and Wednesday on Monday and Wednesday mornings. In contrast, the Horton House newletter is packed with notes about Saturday movies, band and chorus practices, and classes in shadowboxing, oil painting, and political science Horton House resident/volunteers staff a dally hot lanch program on the community, and they organize a twice-weekly "grocery store" in the building.

Why the difference? Reed claims it lies in 18.

claims it lies in the management of the two facilities. The San Diego Lion's organization (which sponsored Lion's Manor) sponsored Lion's Manor employs a profit-making employs a profit-making management company based in Pasadena to run Lion's Manor. A different approach is taken by the nonprofit Interfaith Housing Foundation, which runs Hotton House for the eight local churches that gonsored the project. Although the foundation's housing director, Hilda MacParland, eschews wiscing any criticism of the neighboring Lion's Manor, MacFarland does believe that the nonprofit structure is a key in Horton House's success. 'We are not here just to provide adequate, affordable, clean housing," she asserts.
"Beyond that, we have a ministry to improve the quality of life." Tom Chapman, president of the Lion's Manor board, does acknowledge that Horton House "probably has done a better job to date than we hav with activities." But Chapma doesn't put any blame on the company, which also run seven other senior residence facilities in San Diego. He also suggests that the majority of the Lion's Manor residents are more than content with their living arrangement. Even Reed, the Lion's Manor malcontent, doesn't dispute that Although he counts a few quiet supporter Reed says most of his fellow tenants think he's "a nut" for looking the federal gift horse is the mouth. He snaps, "They'n brainwashed — they think for $195 they have a good deal."

Dear Matthew Alice:

Dear Matinew Auce:
I use the dictionary a lot in my work, and it occurred to me: how does a word get accepted as a legitimate word? People tell me I'm creative, and I wondered what my chances are to see my name in print, even San Diego

Excuse me while I chortle over in the corner here. You want to invent a word and get it published in a dictionary? I suggest the word "adamsic," which we can use to define your chances of success. In other words, think of the odds as similar to that of a snowball in a place that is the ne plus ultra of warm.

The people who write dictionaries are very selective about what new words they'll publish (of course, there are many levels of persnickitiness in the dictionary levels of persnicktimess in the dictionary business). The typical staff of word sleuths is involved in a wide-ranging search for new words as well as new senses for ac-cepted words. The guidelines they follow are essentially that the word is accepted and understood by a broad spectrum of English speakers, that it is a word used by English speakers, that it is a word used by many speakers and writers, and that it shows stability. (This last requirement shoused loosened somewhat recently, seven years was the minimum period a word had to be in use before consideration, but now ad-vances in technology and communication have reduced this "watting" period.) Those word seekers will examine many documents in their search, from technical documents in their search, from technical journals to daily newspapers to menus, always looking for a wide distribution, which indicates it is well understood. The results of their endeavors will amount to over; he said he was new on the job and had never seen anything like it. He get a funnel from the garage and we begain slowly filling the tank with leaded fuel. Many minutes later, as I was paying for the gas, another attendant came up and atted fuel into my car. "You can go to jull for hat," he said." An man came in here less week and filled his tank with leaded, and a copy saw him and hauled him away." My question is, since when is it illegal to put leaded fuel in our that's suppose to run on unleaded! And why would it be illegal? Data Patterson. But it's not utterly impossible to see But it's not utterly impossible to see your invention make an appearance in N. Webster's tome. I used a factitious word in the first sentence, one invented in 1872 by the master of the created word, Lewis Carroll. "Boycott" is another familiar example of a coined word that is traceable to its source. Another word, whose creator is. source. Another word whose creator is known — surprising to me — is "gas." You could look it up (to quote another mas-ter of the language, Casey Stengel) and learn all about the immortalized Belgian chemist, J. B. van Helmont.

A few weeks ago I thought I'd treat my '76 Olds to some premium. I took the nozzle from the unfamiliar pump and tried to start filling the tank, but the nozzle wouldn't fit. I strained and groaned, cursed and mut-tered, all to no avail. I called an attendant knuckleheads like you, manufacturers have made the nozzles for leaded pumps incompatible with the opening to unleaded fuel tanks. The reason is quite simple. Since the 1970s catalytic converters have been used on American vehicles to reduce auto emission pollutants, especially hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide, and exides of nitrogen. Very simply put, it is a noble metal (such as palladium or platinum) in the converter that reacts with platinum) in the converter that reacts with emissions from the engine to convert these harmful by-products into more benign compounds. The lead in leaded fuel coats the catalyst and renders the converter use-less; the result is dirtier air, a sicker planet, and possibly a dead car — the back pres-sure will build up after a few tanks of leaded fuel, and your engine may be ruined.

Your action was punishable under the California vehicle code as a misfueling offense, a misdeunaon. The dimwitted attendant was potentially in more serious trouble—there is a $10,000 fine authorized by federal fuel regulations that prohibit a gas station ower. From allowing or causing this to happen. The other attendant was the contract of or causing this to happen. The other attendant probably made up his story, because the cop would (or should) have arrested the station owner as well as the car owner. Surveys have shown that about 1.7 percent of drivers nistuel their cars. Eventually they will pay the price, both in engine damage and when emission control inspections are instituted by the state in March

BECAUSE THERE'S NO LID ON THE COSTS?

The politicans are asking for a blank check. They want voters to approve an ADVISORY proposition which ocent't specify how much the proposed convention center would cort and down't set a limit on cost overruns and operating cost likes. Even the last convention centre proposal—be $224-million project rejected by the voters—set a cap on the amount for which the taxpayers would be liable.

BECAUSE IT'S A SWEETHEART DEAL?

The only clear beneficiary of the proposed convention cen would be the developers of a hotel complex next door to the proposed site. They are getting a sweetheart deal, including ridiculously low lease rates from the San Diego port district.

BECAUSE PRIVATE ENTERPRISE CAN DO THE JOB BETTER?

There is an alternative. Private enterprise has offered to build a completely privately-financed convention center which meets all the requirements of a first-clast actility for San Diego. It would create business and jobs at no risk to the public, and it would keep San Diego government out of the tricky business of making a convention center pay for itself.

SEDC's plans to bring industry to Helix Heights-Gateway. The fifty-four-year-old city water utilities employee says he'd comfortably share the promontory with any company SEDC could attract, and argue that his half acre and the rental units and family home he built on it could coexist with even a sprawling hospital next door But SEDC says it would be too costly to grade the parcel and leave Browles's parcel standing. The agency is convinced, too, that potential developers would be more enticed to build there if they could see a cleanly leveled site uncluttered by private residences. "It's obvious that Southeast San Diego is a harder sell [to relocating businesses] than downtown, Sorrento Valley, or North County," says SEDC attorney Larry Marshall. "It's even harder with people endanger negotiations with Kaiser. With Kaiser's absence. Broyles might get more votes in his favor.)

Broyles says he's 'not going to let down' on his fight to keep his property. He's hired attorney Michael Poynor, a who, ironically, filed the city' condemnation suits against the former Horton Plaza shopping center property owners. Poynor this week will file a response arguing that any Gateway East projects can be designed around the Broyles property.

He will also attempt to have the city council reconsider its initial vote to condemn the land. But there's little time left for Broyles to plot his strategy. Last Wednesday the city deposited $285,000 in a trust account — proof of its intent to pay Broyles that amount when it takes possession of his property on December 28. Broyles may remain in his house as a tenant of the city after that date, but the city might also go ahead and demolish the home and apartments. Either way, Broyles retains his right to a jury trial that could possibly determine a higher value for his departed for Washington, D.C. last year, he took a valuable souvenir of his time in city hall: a check for $18,617.99. That represented the 511 hours of vacation time that White elected not to take during his tenure here and twenty-five percent of the 977 hours of his unused sick leave. (In ten years on the job, White used about half his available vacation time and just seventy-three of the more than 1000 hours of earned sick leave.) White's going-away present isn't unusual; well-salaried caree city employees get even bigge checks, while those who work fewer years at lower pay take home less. (For example, former mayoral aide Ken Carpi collected a payoff check of $12,037,34.)

These whopping vacation sick leave reimbursements sick leave reimbursements won't continue for long.
Alarmed at the size of the payoffs and convinced that sick leave and vacation time are designed to be used, not hoarfed, the city council in 1981 decided to limit the payoffs to a maximum of 600 accrued hours of combined sick leave and vacation pay for any employee who has started his job since September 4, 1981.

Americans are now enmeshing in new foreign conflicts and perhaps do not like to be forcibly reminded of old, failed adventures.

When the Vietnamese cadres arrived at the west terminal, they were told to stand some thirty paces back from the podium and microphone where the rally would be centered. nobody had the time or inclination to reflect upon what the diminutive Vietnamese man had just said. The TV cameras caught the fire footage and then the rally broke up. The march back over to Harbor Island was uneventful but for one curious incident. The Vietnamese cadres were walking past a cluster of Marines sitting on duffel bags at the east termi-nal, and one of the few Vietnamese who wasn't wearing the United Front's uniform began calling to the American soldiers. Dr. Nhut had made sure I knew that his man was not a member of the Front. He'd introduced him to me as "an associate" of the Front. The man said he'd been a commando in the Vietnamese Special Forces during the war, and he showed me a small pin that signified his membership in a fraternal organization of his old unit members. As he marched along with the Front, he called to the Marines, "Hey man, let's go back to Vietnam and take it from the communists, okay?" The soldiers sat impassively and glared at him. "Come on, man, let's go win my country back!" When none of them responded, the man yelled, "Marines number one!" and he raised his fist to collective fist and skulked away in de-feat from what President Lyndon Johnson once called "that damn little pissant country," the Vietnamese people were left with four choices: sufthe communists, join them, continue fighting them, or give up and try to start a new life somewhere else. A "where do you stand?" imperative continues to shape the lives of Vietnamese everywhere. Those who've become refugees and have elected to continue the fight share a common agreements on the proper approach ("Hey, Marine, let's go take my coungoal: to return someday to a free Vietnam, a democratic, capitalist nation. They are still at war, and the deep try back!"). Their common ally is that improbable dream they have of finish-still plague them. Some want to muster the Marines and go back there and mow down more reds; others believe the only way to win their country back is to persuade the homeland Victnamese population to topple the gov-ernment from within, using ideology and minimal force; still others see the only hope in enlisting the support of another superpower to overthrow the Soviet-backed regime. This camp is divided between those who still see the divided between those who still see the U.S. as the savior and those who want China's backing. At this stage the freedom fighters' common enemy is lack of unity, which is fueled by spy-ing (those men who videotaped the United Front addres?), the indifference of American (Walcorne to California of Americans (Welcome to California Now go home), and intractable dis-

he San Diego chapter of the National United Front for the Liberation of Vietnam was formed in November of 1982; Dr. Nhut was elected president at that time. Just how many members there are here is kept a secret, but Dr. Nhut says the monthly meetings attract more than one hundred people. By all ac-counts, the Front nationwide is the largest organized group of Vietnamese freedom fighters, with chapters established wherever there are groups of Vietnamese refugees. According to Dr. Nhut, the Front's job is to recruit "cadres," raise money, and campaign to "make people understand our just cause and help us liberate Vietnam." Dr. Nhut, who is forty-five years old, with a determined, unyielding face (and who would not consent to be photographed for this article), was an ophthalmologist in South Vietnam was jailed for three years in a "re-education camp" in the city of Can Tho, south of Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon). His implacable hatred of the communists crystalized there. "First of all they tried to starve us," he says, "by feeding us only rice, few vegetables, and no meat or fish." When people died, Dr. Nhut says there was no effort made to contact their they were buried, were accordioned into tiny caskets because the shortage of wood precluded the luxury of fulllength coffins. Many died during the forced labor — digging ditches, constructing buildings, removing mines from old mine fields. For this last job there were no electronic mine sweep-ers, says Dr. Nhut, and many prisoners were killed and mained by exploding ordnance. "But because I'm a doctor, they spare me."

Self-sufficiency: Front members are asked to contribute as much money as they can on a regular basis. This is typically about $20 per month per member. No accurate financial figures are available because the Front is not chartered as a fundraising organiza-tion in any state; therefore there are no public records kept. Members accept it on faith that their money goes where the Front's leaders say it goes. Selftrust: Spies for communist Vietnam are alleged to be continually trying to crack the Front in an effort to undercrack the Front in an effort to undermine its effectiveness. These spies are invariably described as Vietnamese communists and agents provacteur.

memorize the Front's political program.
When Front members aren't at work — most are reported to hold regular jobs — they are either meeting to organize local rallies or to send members to participate in rallies and demonstrations in other cities. They often get together to discuss the latest attacks on them by other resistance groups and to talk about recruitment of new members, which, aside from the raising of money and the development of support money and the development of support from American citizens, is the Front's nighest priority in this country. Though it's impossible to determine how much support the group enjoys within the general refugee community, the nonmembers I spoke with corroborated the Front's claim that most Vietorganization's national leaders are Hoang Co Minh, whose title is chair-man, and Pham Van Lieu, who is overrated the Front's claim that most Viet-namese who are not members do sup-port the Front in principle. To an out-side observer, many of those non-members seem to be trying to'kcep an arm's length away from the "Where do you stand?" crucible. They are without question anticommunist and would definitely cheer the downfall of the Vietnamese communist govern-ment, but they live in a world in which commitment to one faction means disseas commissioner. Both men have deep roots in the South Vietnamese military establishment. When the communists took over, Minh was an communists took over, Minh was an admiral in the navy who sailed to the Philippines to evade capture. Lieu was a former colonel in the army who also fled one step ahead of the Vietcong. Eventually Minh settled in Arlington, Virginia, where he took a job as a commitment to one faction means disavowal of all others, and in a culture at war, that's dangerous. And besides, most refugees feel they're already doing their bit for their country by sending back supplies and money to family members. This more or less dehouse painter in order to have the time to travel and work on his plans for liberating Victnam, and Lieu settled in Sacramento. But now both men are constantly traveling, Lieu here and in other countries where refugees have settled, and Minh where the real batfamily members. This more or less de-fuses the Front's argument that if you don't do something for the Vietnamese left behind, then you are truly a desert-er, as the communists say all refugees tles are taking place — in Southeast Asia.

This is the direct action Dr. Nhut was talking about. Hoang Co Minh has returned to Southeast Asia to orchestrate the fight inside Vietnam. He has proclaimed himself commander-inchief of all resistance forces, and he professes to have a 10,000-man army at his command in and near Vietnam. Minh himself operates from his base in Bangkok but is said to move surreptitiously through Laos and Cambodia, and maybe even Vietman itself. The money raised by the Front here and elsewhere is said to buy weapons, food, medicine, and influence in the jungles. And though the Front has distributed flyers soliciting money for (check the box) M-16s, grenades, and ammo, Minh and his political program claim to be carrying out "psychological warfare," not military operations.

"Before 1975 we paid too much attention to military victory, counting how many bodies we got today," Minh told a group of reporters last summer when he visited Orange County, which has a very large Front chapter. "So now the strategy is based not on violence, but on winning people's hearts." Just exactly how this is being carried out remains vague. "Military victory is not our main goal," explained Dr. Nhut as we sat amid cheery plasticity in the Del Taco near his home in Clairemont. "We want to set up a political uprising within Vietnam. We have a propaganda unit working inside Vietnam. According to Chairman Vietnam. According to Chairman Minh, we send small groups of armed propagandists into border villages, and they pose as farmers. Many of the villagers know, but they protect our people because they haste the Vietcong. They hate the communists, who confiscate their will, their property, and send their children to fight in Cambodia. 'Dr. Nhut says that the Front's coldiers are armed only for defensive soldiers are armed only for defensive purposes. "They've already had small military encounters on the patrol level. They've been attacked by Vietcong on the way to propaganda missions." To bolster their propagandistic capabilities, the Front is said to be concapabilities, the Front is sale to be con-structing a radio station in the jungle somewhere along the border of Viet-nam. It's supposed to be operating within a few months.

Washington Post) to include 480,000

former members of the South Viet-namese army, about 72,000 administrative personel and police of the old Saigon regime, 3000 leaders and

450,000 members of disbanded politi-nunist insurgents are having an impact inside Vietnam today. Communist newspapers and broadcasts have referred to "counterrevolutionary" ac-tivities, spies, and anticommunist commandos working within the country. A senior Vietnamese communist official recently gave an unusually candid interview to a Polish newspaper (nicked up by the New York Times) in which he said the existence of "more than a million people formerly closely connected" with the old regime "complicates the social situation." A recent issue of the Vietnamese army iournal listed the government's Catholics who make up almost four-teen percent of Ho Chi Minh City's population, 60,000 Buddhist monks, and 480,000 Vietnamese-Chinese. The rticle did not mention the ongoing war between the government and several thousand Montagnards representing strongly independent hill tribes in the central highlands, nor did it speak directly of the 600,000 Vietnamese refugees in the U.S. But it did assert "reactionaries" backed by the U.S. and China had helped "establish secret bases to launch a guerrilla war in remote areas and foment rebellions. It went on to detail the discovery and capture of an enemy organization, among whose members were person from "the ranks of state personnel working in an important place."

Hoang Co Minh has admitted to his followers that a large part of his armed band has been recruited from the huge pool of Vietnamese army deserters. Given the political complexity of the area, it is questionable whether all the forces opposing the communists have even heard of Hoang Co Minh, much less submitted to his leadership. (He claims to have united thirty-six differ-ent groups under his command.) So how credible is Minh? Can his claims be accepted uncritically? One man who has made quite a name for himself urnalist Dinh Thach Bich. It's one thing for American State Department analysts to doubt Minh's claims (they do), but it's quite another matter when a fellow refugee and countryman disputes the Front's facts in print. Bich is a former lawyer and one-time friend of Premier Nguyen Cao Ky, and since 1977 he's been pub lishing and editing a Vietnamese magazine called Vietnam hai ngoại, which translates to Vietnamese Overseas. That also happens to be the name of Bich's particular resistance group. Ever since the spring of 1982, when the United Front held its first series of widely publicized and heavily attended rallies in Washington, D.C., Houston, Dallas, Denver, San Jose, and Anaheim Rich has relentlessly and virulently attacked the Front' leaders, motives, and plans, "The Front cannot play any role in the liberation of Vietnam " Rich says, "because that's not their real goal. Their real goal is money." Bich has excirculation of 5000. "The leadership of the Front] is not serious, but the followers are. They're being misled.'

It's just that kind of talk that may have brought law enforcement offi cials to Bich's door last year, as he claims, inquiring as to whether he felt he needed protection. Refugees familiar with Bich, his writings, and the United Front do believe he's in danger. Sitting in his East San Diego home/ office, amid a maelstrom of manuscripts, files, notes, magazines, and typesetting equipment, the fifty-yearold pamphleteer shrugged and pointed 'I've always been in danger here and in Saigon. If you want to do something you'll be in danger."

He keeps a photograph close by and he's proud of it: about twenty men in the traditional black-pajama uniform of Vietnamese guerrillas stand and kneel, surrounded by jungle. A very young Dinh Thach Bich is pictured with this cadre of nationalists, with whom he fought both the French and Ho Chi Minh's communists thirty years ago. He's fought against his own countrymen before, and he knows what kind of fate lurks here for those failing out of favor with certain factions of Vietnamese anticommunists. Bich was well acquainted with Houston journalist Nguyen Dam Phong, who was gunned down a year ago last August outside his home. Phong's friends in Texas accused the United Front of perpetrating the murder in retaliation for Phong's repeated criti-cisms of the Front and its fundraising activities. (Phong criticized many other groups also; he had many enemies.) When asked who he thinks committed the still-unsolved crime, Bich says he doesn't know but his rulation is that a Vietnamese gang did the job. English-speaking readers of his magazine say he's suggested in print that this gang was put up to it by the United Front.

Persistent rumors of a connection between certain anticommunist freedom fighter organizations - not Vietnamese gangs are well known to local law enforcement departments. The most common illicit activity engaged in by Southern California's Vietnamese gangs is the age-old protection/extortion racket. Vietnamese businesses are threatened with violence and forced to pay for "protec tion" by giving gang members goods services, and/or money. What little inormation law enforcement officials have gleaned from the extorted parties here and in Orange County reveals that gang members sometimes use the pretense of needing money for the anticommunist organizations. It's un-known whether this tactic is simply a ruse or whether some of the extorted money actually finds its way to the resistance groups. Here in San Diego, the gang linked to last winter's murder of a young man at the Cafe Ngoc on El Cajon Boulevard has also been rumored to be extorting money for some unnamed resistance group. Investigators in that case also heard of suc cessful extortion based upon gang members' threats to spread word within the Vietnamese community that a particular merchant is a communist. This is common throughout the nation and plays off the fervent and pervasive anticommunist feelings within the refugee culture. Being branded a communist isn't just grounds for ostracism; it can be fatal.

Another unsolved murder almost certainly committed by anticommunist

the tenderloin district of San Francisco. Twenty-seven-year-old Duong Trong Lam, who frequently printed communist tracts in his little newspaper and who was widely believed in the refugee community to be of communist persuasion, was killed by a single bullet to the heart. Two differentgroups claimed credit for the killing; one, the Anti-Communist Viets Or ganization, warned in its communique that ". . . those with Vietnam origin living abroad, who want to be the servants of the communist regime in Vietnam, should return to Vietnam to fulfill their crimes. They must stop taking advantage of freedom of the free world to lengthen the sufferings of Vietnamese people. . ' The other group claiming credit for the murder called itself the Vietnamese Organization for Communist Extermination

Dinh Thach Bich could not be considered a communist by any measure, but his personal safety wasn't bolstered by his affiliation with communist defector Truong Nhu Tang in 1981. Bich's critics, many of them in the Front, mark that event as the downturn of his formerly very popular magazine, when many of the best Vietnamese writers stopped submitting material, and the circulation nmeted (Bich says he has lost about thirty percent of his subscribers in the last couple of years.) Bich himself says his support of Tang has had nothing to do with the magazine's de-cline. "The real problem is the economic conditions," he explains Before, the refugees had more money from welfare and food stamps. Now they don't have so much, so they can't buy it. And there are a lot more free papers now

Truong Nhu Tang now lives in Paris. A former minister of justice in the Vietnamese communist regime, he has been a shadowy figure for decades. In the Sixties he was director of a stateowned sugar company in South Vietnam, and he was openly critical of the war. He came to be regarded as a communist, though that's questionable, according to Bich, and was jailed by the South Vietnamese. He was later exchanged for an American colonel who'd been captured by the communists. Bich says the communists told 'fang that since they'd saved his ever a sworn communist. But to many a criminal since the war, and the ones I spoke with in San Diego give the impression that once a person becomes a communist, he's always a communist.

Tang has been given access to the highest governmental forums in the world. He spoke in Washington before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and he gave the same message in Stockholm, Paris, and Peking: the best way to bring down the current communist regime in Vietnam is to enlist the support of China. "The only way to keep a superpower from dominating you," explains Bich, "is to bring in one more superpower." Bich reasons that, given the Soviets' massive military and economic support of com-munist Vietnam, and China's position along Vietnam's northern border, help from the Chinese is free Vietnam's best hope. But Bich is very clear about what kind of help is needed. "First we should organize and stand up by our-selves," he says. "Then we should ask for China's support, not her aid. Sup-port and aid are different. Aid is food, weapons, medicine; we don't need that. In a guerrilla war, you take the enemy's food and weapons, everything is already there. I want support.

What kind of support? Here's what I say to China: 'The Vietnamese overseas are stateless. The biggest support you could give would be to recognize us as a state. That would be all we need.' We get freedom of movement through China, and diplomatic influence. That's all we need." (The Front dismisses Bich as naive. Members say China would love nothing more than to replace the Russian-backed communist regime with one under Chinese

Like the United Front's Hoang Co Minh, Bich believes the liberation has to be effected from the inside. The idea get deeper and deeper into the political system, become a part of the government, and bring about its collapse Bich says this could take thirty years. Front leaders think they'll succeed within ten years. "This is where the Front is wrong," he says. "They believe that with money they can gain influence, buy their way in, and cut short the process. The reason I de-nounce them is if people think now is the time for uprising, they'll destroy the potential in the future. I want to save lives."

At one time Bich, Hoang Co Minh, and Pham Van Lieu were closely associated leaders of Vietnamese Overseas, the resistance group from which Bich's magazine draws its name. Bich says Minh and Lieu were kicked out of Vietnamese Overseas when they tried to take over the organization. Minh and Lieu have told other reporters that they left the organization voluntarily One local Victnamese journalist, who is not a member of any resistance group, who asked to remain anonym ous, and who has also written about these events, told me he believes Minh and Lieu were in fact given the boot. They went on to organize the National United Front for the Liberation of Vietnam, which now enjoys much popular success, and Bich gravitated to Truong Nhu Tang. Now Bich says he's trying to "liberate" himself from his magazine in order to devote more time to traveling in service of Vietnamese Overseas the various Vietnamese anticommunist groups are well-known within the refugee community. Not only is the gossip grapevine thriving, but there are numerous Vietnamese periodicals and newspapers that keep up with events in the growing resistance movement, and in many grocery stores frequented by refugees there are coffee cans on the counter along with entreaties to contribute spare change to the United Front.

Many refugees are themselves bewildered by the conflicting names, strategies, and ideas of the freedom fighter groups, but beneath that confusing surface a common yearning unites all the participants. "What they really want is some connection, some association with Vietnam," explained a local Vietnamese college professor who asked that his name not be used. 'The refugees want a social, personal family connection with Vietnam, but the only outlet for that desire is this military and political connection.
That's all they have." A less gentle way of looking at it — Bich's way — is that most of the freedom fighters feel a profound guilt for having escaped and for enjoying relative luxury while their friends and family continue to suffer under the communists. They're fighting as much for their own self-respect as for their lost country, their lost

"It's my life's duty," explained

thirty-two-year-old Loc Nguyen when I asked him why he was a member of the United Front. "The people say they hate communists, but they can't just do nothing but hate. They got to do something about it, they got to give money at least." Loc left on a boat with his family in 1977, after spending eight months in a re-education camp He's a typical Front member in that he left Vietnam after 1975 and therefore came away with direct experience of the communist regime. Loc worked as a welder here at the National Steel and Shipbuilding Company for four years, and then a year ago he became a real estate agent at a Century 21 office near San Diego State. He drives a late-model Audi. "Compared to communism, NASSCO was heaven," he quips, not really joking. He seems to have a permanently fixed smile on his broad, open face. "They talk about equal rights for all people in com-munist Vietnam," he continues. "You know what equal rights mean there? It means both men and women have the equal right to work for the government for nothing. Everybody, even the chil-dren, want to leave Vietnam. If the light poles had feet, they'd get out

Loc's infectious enthusiasm has nade him a natural leader in the Front. He was one of the six San Diego chap-ter cadres who flew back to Washington, D.C. last spring for a three-day conference at which United Front chairman Hoang Co Minh was present. It drew 6000 refugees from all over the world. "When I saw my ler, Hoang Co Minh, I just wanted to hug him," bubbles Loc, who was describing the excitement Minh creates wherever he goes. "I'd have jumped in front of a bullet to save

To the Front members, Minh is a national hero because he gave up the comforts of the U.S. and re-entered the underground war in Southeast Asia "After 1975," says Loc, "I didn't trust the Vietnamese leaders anymore. They'd run away and left us. I don't trust talk, I trust action. When I saw Minh return to fight inside Vietnam, I knew that guy was for me." As for a timetable, Loc doesn't think about it in terms of years, he thinks in decades. As he says, "It's my life's work."

In the end, it isn't the factional differences or the arguments for and against certain guerrilla tactics or the dynamics of geopolitics that provide the avenue for an understanding of the Vietnamese resistance movement. It's the timetable. For although the United Front's political program reads like an immediate call to arms, the individual members consistently speak of the decades separating them from a free Vietnam. The resistance movement has provided them with a future more durable and satisfying than their adop-tive one here in San Diego and elsewhere in the U.S., a vehicle for their hopes as a culture. And to thousands of them, it really doesn't matter that Dinh Thach Bich may be correct in saying, "Yes, and they'll die happily with those hopes."

WISTED CASE OF THE MAZATI DIAMONDS

Jack Divine: The manhunter who became the hunted man

ack Divine, the American bounty hunter who has worked out of a house in Tijuana for nearly twenty years, is in big trouble. Divine has retrieved stolen airplanes, automobiles, and other erchandise from Mexico in his long career, and he has tracked down numerous people who were hiding

Joseph Grassi: His money could only buy him trouble

from banks and other creditors. In recent years the burly, sixty-two year-old Divine, who possesses a rare private investigator's license issued by the Mexican government, has spent most of his time gathering information for American insurance companies that face lawsuits on product liability in Mexico. But last April Divine agreed to track down a San Diego man in a tangled case that is threatening seriously to damage

Irma Grassi: The ex-wife who knew what she had to do the investigator's reputation. The man, Joseph Grassi, has subsequently accused Divine of breaking into his motor home in Mazatlan, kidnaping him, and robbing him of diamond rings worth more than $147,000. A Mexican federal warrant for Divine's arrest has been issued in Mazatlan, and although Divine obtained an ampa (a type of restraining order) that delayed action on the warrant for several months, a federal court judge in Tijuana recently ruled that there were indeed grounds for the warrant to have been issued. Now the Mexican police are seeking Divine, the diamond rings have apparently disappeared, and Grassi has gone into hiding, claiming that his life has been threatened — but not by

The bizarre set of events was set in motion last April when Divine was hired by Grassi's ex-wife. Irma irassi, of San Diego. Irma Grassi aid recently she hired Divine to ring back to San Diego her -husband and as much of his cash and property as possible. Joseph Grassi was about $9000 behind in court-ordered support payments to his ex-wife at the time Divine was ared, and a bench warrant for Grassi's arrest had been issued by a an Diego superior court judge. rma Grassi also believed her husband to be in possession of veral valuable diamond rings which he allegedly had taken from Grassi explained that he ourneyed to Mexico in mid-March with his second wife Kathleen, his aughter, and his elderly punt. He was driving a motor home and towing a Chevy Chevette. Grassi said in a sworn statement to the Mexican court in Mazatlan that he had come to Mexico on a vacation but in the more recent phone call he claimed he entered the country to hide from his ex-wife, who allegedly had threatened to kill him or to have him killed. "That's baloney," Irma Grassi commented when told of her ex-husband's accusation. more than fifty years old, I'm five-foot-two, and I weight 120 pounds. There's no way I'm going to do anything that would make me Francis Warren.

spend the rest of my years in jail. If Mr. Grassi thinks I can dispose of him, he's even sicker than I think Grassi said that after he had been Mexico for several weeks his mother (who lives in Altoona. Pennsylvania) received a telephone call one evening from a woman who identified herself as Grassi's mother-in-law. The caller said she gently had to get in touch with Joe and Grassi's mother explained that her son was vacationing in San Carlos, a small town near Guayma in the state of Sinaloa. But Grassi's nother-in-law later denied making the call, and Grassi now believes the phone call was engineered by Divine o discover his whereabouts. At any rate, Divine flew to Guaymas in his Cessna 210 in early

April and then rented a light-blue ord sedan and drove to San Carlos sworn statements to the court in Mazatlan, residents of the Tetakawi Trailer Park in San Carlos said Divine drove up on the morning of April 8, showed them a picture of Grassi, and asked if they knew where he was. The residents, Don and Martha Shewman, admitted knowing Grassi but denied knowing where he was. In fact, Grassi had left the trailer park several days earlier and had driven to Mazatlan with his family.

Divine traced Grassi to the Las Canoas Trailer Park in Mazatlan, and on the afternoon of April 15 arrived there in the rented Ford with two Mexican men known only as Carlos and Tony. According to the statement Grassi made to Mexican authorities, Divine spotted him on authorities, Divine spotted him on the trailer park grounds and announced, "This is the man we are looking for," Then, Grassi claims, Carlos and Tony each pointed a .45 caliber pistol at him and showed cards identifying themselves as federal police agents. "I have .45s myself, so I'm pretty sure of the ID on the pistols," Grassi said over the phone. "Carlos's gun had silver inlay on the handle. My ex-wife had told me she'd hire someone to kil! me, and I thought sure as Christ it was this guy Divine."

The fact that Divine had brought along federal police agents (a fact Divine later confirmed) indicated the investigator expected trouble apprehending Grassi. In an interview earlier this year, Divine noted that he never put himself in the position of confronting a potentially dangerous subject while alone. Irma Grassi had told him that her ex-husband was nearly always armed and had a violent temper; in addition, Divine knew that Joseph Grassi was in Mexico under an assumed name,

In the telephone conversation Grassi said he used the assumed name because he was hiding from his ex-wife. He denied being dangerous or having ever been convicted of a crime, and said he was formerly a self-employed real estate investor in the San Diego area Grassi also said he had not worked for a company with any formal name. But court documents show that Grassi was a partner in Mortgage Correspondents, Inc., a La Mesa firm that bought and sold rental properties in Southern California. He and his ex-wife formerly lived in a house valued at nearly $400,000 on Mount Helix in La Mesa; as of their separation in 1980 they owned three Cadillacs and a white Rolls Royce with white leather upholstery. In divorce proceedings that same year, however, Grassi claimed that the real estate market had collapsed in recent years, leaving him deeply in debt. In support of his claim he provided the court with a list of debts, mostly outstanding loans on property he had purchased. Two years later the list had grown, and included many leathat were in arrears. At the time of his second statement of debt Grassi pointed out to the court he was in such a position that he had to borrow money to pay off his other debts. Irma Grassi contested both of her ex-husband's statements of debt through her divorce lawyer; she insisted her husband "is actually a very wealthy man who hides his assets behind a smokeyereen of sophisticated tax devices, multitudinous businesses, trusts, and various financial devices.

The couple was divorced on May 12, 1981, but the long, bitter dispute over property is still working its way through court. A major part of that dispute involves a set of valuable diamond rings. Irma Grassi has long contended the rings were given to her as gifts by her ex-husband; she claims he removed the jewelry from their Mount Helix home and ha never provided the court with a full accounting of the rings in his possession, even though he was ordered to do so. For his part, Joseph Grassi has argued that the rings are his and that he purchased them as

Court records also reveal that Grassi and his current wife, Kathleen, were sued in 1982 by a Solana Beach couple who, the year before, sold their condominium to a company operated by Joseph and Kathleen Grassi. The Grassis company put $35,000 down on the $260,000 condo, and the Solana couple financed the rest in a series of loans. However, the couple subsequently claimed in their lawsuit that the ten East San Diego condominiums the Grassis used to secure the loan were worth a total of about $200,000 less than the Grassis had claimed. The Solana couple also claimed that the same day the Grassis purchased the condo they used it to borrow an additional $152,000 (a transaction that encumbered the condominium legally and rendered it less valuable). The couple sued the Grassis and obtained a money judgment against them for $204,061 on March 14 of this year. That was about four weeks after Irma Grassi's son had driven to the Grassis' house on Vista de la Tierra in Del Mar, only to find the house deserted and the lawn turning brown. It was also about a week after Grassi said he left for Mexico, and about a week after a superior court judge here had issued a warrant for Grassi's arrest for failure to pay spousal support and failure to appear in court for a hearing on that charge. "I knew nothing about that hearing.

(continued from page 19) okay?" Grassi said over the phone. But Irma Grassi disputes her ex-husband's claim and says he was well aware of the court-ordered

Divine was armed with a copy of the warrant from San Diego when he confronted Grassi in the trailer park in Mazatlan, but he admitted later that he knew the warrant was werless in Mexico. Grassi gave his account of the events that followed: Divine, Tony, and Carlos took him inside his motor home at gunpoint and searched for a $25,000 collection of guns that Grassi supposedly had with him. The guns were not found, but Divine and the police agents forced Kathleen Grassi to open a safe and remove $5500 in cash as well as three diamond rings and other gold jewelry worth $147,200. Carlos then gave $500 back to Grassi's wife and escorted her (along with Grassi's daughter and aunt) to the highway in Grassi's Chevette. Carlos instructed Mrs. Grassi to drive to the United States or her husband would be thrown in jail, and she complied. When Carlos returned to the motor home, he, Tony, and Divine took Grassi to the Mazatlan airport, boarded Divine's Cessna 210, and flew to Ciudad Obregon, about 200 miles north, on the first leg of the journey back to San Diego. In Ciudad Obregon they rented a motel room and went out to a restaurant, where Grassi reportedly said he did not want to leave his motor home in Mazatlan and was willing to pay for the extra time and trouble it would mean to return to

to Grassi, Divine told him to deal with Tony and Carlos, and Divine subsequently gave the two police agents $3000 out of the remaining $5000 that had been taken from the safe in Grassi's motor home. The next morning the four men returned to Mazatlan in Divine's Cessna. Tony left for Mexico City, and Divine, Carlos, and Grassi drove Divine, Carlos, and Grassi drove north in the motor home. (Divine left his plane parked at the Mazatlan airport.) That night they stopped in Navahoa, and the next morning drove to Hermosillo, where Grassi says he talked Divine into letting him as in a contract of the co him go in exchange for $2250. Asked if he could have escaped at any time, Grassi said over the phone, "You kiddin' me? What am I going to do with guns pointed at me? I was scared of the guns . . . [and also] where am I going to go After driving to Divine's house in Tijuana, Grassi said he paid off the investigator and "drove the motor home across the border. I've been lookin' over my shoulder ever since I'm a good guy, damn it. I'm clean. That son-of-a-bitch Divine should rot in jail for what he did to my family. I would possibly forget a lot of things if my property and money was returned.

Divine, reached by phone in San Diego, confirmed much of Grassi's story. But Divine's version of the events differs from Grassi's on a number of key points. Divine denies that he took $2250 from Grassi in return for releasing him. He denies being present when Tony and Carlos negotiated with Grassi to return to Mazatlan. And he denies that any diamond rings were found. "I was sent specifically to look for those rings. If he had them, I never found them," Divine commented. "He [Grassi] claimed they were sold a long time ago. The only true part of his story is that I hauled him out of Mazatlan. I sure as hell did, and I got paid for it."

Divine claimed that if the Mexican government had known a warrant was out for Grassi's arrest and that Grassi was traveling under a calse name, Grassi never would have been allowed into the country in the first place. But once Grassi had a tourist permit, even under a false name, "to get him out of the country you have to extradite him, and that I did not do." Divine, however, insisted that the procedures he followed are the same ones judicial police in Mexico have unofficially used "for years and years." He told by those officials that the motor home never crossed into the United Interestingly, Divine learned of

The physical production of the San Diego Opera's recent Lohengrin was bor-rowed from San Francisco, where I saw it a year ago. Beni Montresor represented the story of the Grail knight and his overcuriwig II of Bayaria, Ludwig and his court appear during the prelude, in a pook, by Wagner's admirer and patron, King Lud wig II of Bayaria, Ludwig and his court appear during the prelude, in a palatial hall with his name inscribed on a wall plaque As the action of the first act begins, this scene dissolves to give place to a shimmering, rose-colored representation of a grove near the river Scheldt, where soon the

All this represents a legitimate—and, in its own terms, highly creative—view of Wagner's most problematic opera. But Lohengrin's need for an enhanced sense of lytical atmosphere and evocativeness is matched by its need for an intensification of its dramatic action. In this relatively early work, Wagner sometimes overindulged a taste for solemn, static ceremony, as well as his lifelong tendency to draw out a single action to unconscionable lengths The libretto is often slow and ponderous, and even the music sometimes tends to-ward a certain heavy predictability. There are, of course, splendid moments, when the composer's originality appears with considerable power, but it is only when the evil Ortrud is on stage that drama and music both rise to their full Wagnerian

The Ortrud scenes virtually play them-selves, and both Leonic Rysanek in San Francisco and Pauline Tinsley in San Diego demonstrated a firm grasp of the usual melodramatic acting style suited to the role. Miss Tinsley was especially exciting. On the other hand, neither of the stage - San Francisco's Wolfgang Weber and San Diego's Jay Lesenger had much success in making the more formal, courtly scenes seem anything but tedious. The dramatic low point in both productions was the entrance of the female chorus in the cathedral scene of the second act: they enter slowly, two by two, turn right, two by two, slowly descend the steps, two by two, turn left, two by two, proceed slowly to center stage, two by two, turn left, two by two, curtsy, two by

o, proceed slowly upstage, two by two till you begin to believe that there are an infinite number of these somnolent pairs and that they will go on entering from the wings forever. One cannot blame the direc-tors too much for this particular coma: it was, apparently, just the effect Wagner wanted. Besides, both had to contend with the lovely, luminous, but fundamentally antidramatic shape and tonality of the Montresor sets. Otherwise, Mr. Lesenger (rather more than Mr. Weber) managed to give much of the static action a more than usual dynamism. His handling of the crowd scenes was skillful, and he directed the principals so as to maximize dramatic tension and to minimize the sense of Lohengrin as a pageant with little human

It is a scene full of significant information, dramatic emotional confrontation, revelation of character, psychological truth, and thematic implication (Ortrud's anti Christian paganism)

But for an audience that cannot comprehend the dialogue except as a bunch of Teutonic sounds, all this intricate play of feelings, personalities, and ideas is reduced to a generalized emotional turbulence, without articulation or differentia-tion of meaning. Already in this scene, Wagner was the masterful dramatic composer who, in his later operas, so consum-motely fised words, music, and action. The music is inspired by the text and ilhummaies ir, but it cannot do without it in making the action's dramatic points. Not withstanding the strongly committed and intense dramatic singing of Miss Tinsley. and Mr. Justus, the San Diego audience would have had a clearer idea of what is great about Lohengrin, and they would have had a more meaningful theatrical experience, if the opera had been done in English — something that would scarcely have posed any major difficulties for the singers, since English - not German was the native language of all of them but that can be found today, we can turn to recordings - above all, the Keilberth Bayreuth recording (with Eleanor Steber Woltgang Windgassen, Astrid Varnay, Hermann Uhde, and Josef Greindl), and the bridal chamber scene on the Melchior-Flagstad record that also includes duets from Tristen and Parsifal. If we want to make optimum use of the siaging and acting talent currently available and if we want to experience Lohengrin as a living theatrical reality, we must have it in a language the audience can understand With the energy and talent that went into this admirable San Diego production, only the language problem stood in the way of a full appreciation of Lohengrin's potential as grand and compelling theater.

If we want to hear Lohenerin sung in German, and by singers better than any

JEFF SMITH

Beginning this November 2, the Old Globe Theatre will present a "San Diego Comedy Festival." It will run for three weeks and will feature thirteen wellweeks and will feature thirteen well-known comedians, among whom are George Carlin, Robert Klein, Phillis Diller, David Steinberg, and Don Novello (a.k.a. Father Guido Sarducci and author of the wonderful Lacio Letters). The festival, however, began unofficially last Friday night at the Old Globe, where two acts.

nation. As yet, anyway, But their show set a jeyous tone for the upcoming festival. It will also be one tough act for the heavy-weights to follow.

Now it's true that each act had a home-court advantage. Both Goldberg and the Hot Flashes have acquired rabid local followings, and the evening itself was as much any event as a performance. It began at seven a block with a newarte for when at seven o'clock with a parade from the fountain in Balboa Park to the theater. At ally a double celebration; of a place, Gold-en Hill, and of its talent. With territorial armada of local successes: as an actress, as one of the founders of the San Diego Rep (she picked up the name Whoopi during a production of A Chrismas Carol), and as a comedienne. In this last capacity, and because of her acting ability, Goldberg became known for a brand of comedy as multifaceted as her name and as elastic as better fees which obe non-amedal like also.

multifaceted as her name and as elastic as her face, which she can remold, like clay, sculpting vivid new characters before one's yes in an instant. In her act, she often resembled a tour guide through the comtions. And she was equally adept at showing audiences the sunshine and the shadows of a rich inner life. In the presence of her skill, her impaccable timing, and her uncanny hank for joutling the heart, it was always difficult to remain just a sightseer for long.

It still is. There were moments in Goldberg's outstanding, hour-long perform-ance at the Old Globe when she would speak a line and would step back, knowing precisely what the response would be: an explosion. On other occasions, as in the scene where she contorted her body in the scene where she contorted her body in the touching portrayal of a deformed woman who has found love ("Normal is in the eye of the beholder," the woman said with pride), Goldberg would freeze and Isstent to the pure silence around her. During the course of her spellbinding performance. Goldberg went through characters and states of mind faster than one can shuffle dock of fasee carts. Her creations — able to dock of fasee carts. Her creations — able to leap through age, race, and gender at a single bound — were all fully realized, and were never merely types. The scope of her themes and subjects was equally versatile.

And there was something else as well.
Goldberg seems no longer to be an actress

The show was also a homecoming. In the summer of 1981, Whoopi Goldberg left San Diego to seek — and clearly to find — her fortune in Berkeley, with the Blake

This impression was most evident in Goldberg's opening sketch, ar extended narration in which she played Fontaine, a funky, street-smart, but (in the beginning at least) culturally unsophisticated junkie who recounts her first trip to Europe. For most people, a flight to Europe would be a mix of excitement and sleep, with a dose of Dramamine for the vertiginous. For Fon-taine, and from her unique perspective (one of the keys of Goldberg's humor), everything is brand new, and mundane occurrences can assume menacing propor-tions. A well-meaning stewardess becomes a surrealistic nightmare, one of the wings of the plane can howl tales of woe. and a visit to the rest room resembles a trip into the Twilight Zone. In each of these situations Fontaine maintains a brusque façade. "I'm not a movable person," she says, curtly. Then she tours Germany and the home of Anne Frank, where she discovers the persecuted teen-ager's hiding place — a tiny room behind a bookcase — and the facade disappears. Possibly for the first time. Fontaine experiences a true Iffst time, Fontaine experiences a true fellowship with another human being. At this moment—one of the highlights of the evening—if someone were to have dropped a pin in the theater, the noise would have been ear-splitting. Goldberg concluded her act with a brief statement about wanting this performance to show what her ''progress has been'' since she left San Diego two summers ago. ''Considerable'' is the first word that comes to mind, fol-is the first word that comes to mind, fol-lowed rapidly by "inapiring."

At about the time that Goldberg packed her bags and left for Berkeley, Maureen Gaffrey, Robyn Samuels, Sheri Glaser, and Maggie Gillette began improvising akits together in Golden Hill. Calling hemselves the Hot Flashes, they began performing locally, in small clubs, and soon developed a following, in the last year, they toured California, like comic misstonaries, spreading their humorous missionaries, spreading their humorous and subtle approach to women's causes around the state. Thus, though they have been back in town for a while, the appear-ance of the Hot Flashes at the Old Globe was also a return, of sorts, and an indica was also a return, of sorts, and an indica-tion of their own progress. And while it would be unfair to compare them with. Goldberg (although their being the second act on the double bill did ask for such a view), it was clear from their performance that the Hot Flashes, a polished group ever a year ago, have also made huge

In their act, the Hot Flashes combine improvisation — about fifty percent — with scripted material, music, and dancing. The central theme that weaves through all their work is feminism. But through all their work is feminism. But rather than alienate those members of the audience they want most to reach -- rather placards of proselytization - the group a verbal musician. The audience is her placards of prosciyization — the group has a gift for creating an awareness of feminist issues without appearing to do so. The group makes its points accessible by always beginning with speaccessible by always beginning with spe-cific situations and recognizable charac-ters. An innocent slumber party, for exam-ple, begins with four young girls looking up forbidden words in the dictionary ("I just love that word 'wulva," one says. "I'm so glad we have it"). The sketch con-cludes with the four making a blood pact cludes with the four making a blood pact and a promise to reveal darkest secrets— some of which, when uttered, are harrow-ing. In another sketch, the birthday party of a single woman turning "the big three-oh," a familiar and funny scene leads to the disclosure that the woman is a lesbian. The varied reactions of the other three women, each of whom has been rattling off lists of available men, is an eloquen survey of the courage required for - and the consequences of — making such a

One of the high spots of the Hot Flashes show was a routine based on Collette Dowling's book The Cinderella Compiex. Dowling's thesis is that certain types of aggressive personalities are actually 'counterphobic." Beneath auras of confident independence, Dowling contends, the counterphobic actually longs for a life of sheltered dependence on another person. For men, about whom Dowling says little, this person is most likely a Jocasta substitute, a mother figure. For women, it is the image of a Prince Charming who will — in theory at least - Cinderella them away on a white stallion (or BMW) and will weatherstrip their lives from reality's

The skit begins like a rehearsal. The four women sit around, coming up with ideas for a routine. It is clear that they have been brainstorming for some time - and that generating new material can be a draining, even painful, process. Then someone suggests they do a bit on "Cin-derellas," like having a place for them to take the cure. Each eagerly makes con-tributions. Then creative entropy settles in. After a lull, a weary Maggie Gillette announces she's quitting the group. It's too tough, she says. And soon the decision takes hold. The other women begin to speculate about what their lives would be like without all the difficulties involved in a Cinderella-like haven of security. Her 'daddy,' Sheri Glaser claims, will sup-port her until she's thirty-five. Gillette and Robyn Samuels both agree they could spend more time with mates, and in far less demanding roles. And, feeling left out, Maureea Gaffney bemoans that, damn it anyway, at present she has no one to save her. Her relationship broke off last week It's a funny, touching, and possibly auto-biographical scene. It also makes one glad of two things: that the group has given this impulse an artistic shape; and that they are still performing it, and the other things they do so well, on a stage.

In case you're wondering whatever happened to good, inexpensive meals that are actually prepared by "Moni" or by "Pop," they fe flourishing in La Mesa. La Mesa, you ask? Look at it this way. They're both located on University As-eruse a short distance from the San Diego State University area. In fact, what led me to their discovery was not merely the pau-city of decent restaurants adjacent to the university, but the absolute horror of many of them. Neglected, dirty, foul-smelling some of the places on College Avenue are an insult to one's sight and smell, let alone taste buds. One day in desperation 1 thought I'd order a soft ice cream in one of these dens of misalliance. But the rank odors and the shoddiness sent me running. In fact, I brought my own food with me to his work on campus until 1 discovered J.K's Greek Cafe and The Unknown Di-ner, both within blocks of one another in nearby La Mesa. nearby La Mesa.

J.K's Greek Café is a wonderful find.

Mom really does the home cooking, and one of the sons in the family dishes it out. The food is very tasty and astonishinely inexpensive. The top price is $5.50, but the luncheon specials are $3.30 and under. And if you're not too hungry, you can order lunch specials at dinner. The only difference between the lunch and dinner entrées is the size of the portions This small cafe uses paper plates and plastic knives and forks. However, the atmosphere is so loving and the room so bright and inviting that you soon forget about the plastic forks. Besides, at those prices, who's complaining? The best dish in the house is the souvlaki, or marinated pork tenderloin, pre pared with a lemon marinade and served on a skewer. The pork is tender and well flavored. The price is four dollars for a plateful and $2.50 for a sandwich. The plate arrives with rice and salad, all in generous quantities. With it you get pita bread. Given the price and the quality as well as quantity, this Greek dish is hard to

Because I wanted to taste many dishes. my companion and I ordered far too much, but the prices were seductive enough to encourage this overindulgence. We had a half order of dolmades (stuffed grape leaves) for $1.50 and a half order of spana-kopita (feta cheese and spinach pie, $1.50). The dolmades are well worth ordering. While the size of the spanakopita is hefty, it's overloaded with spinach at the expense of the cheese. It's a decent enough spinach pie, but I prefer more feta che The best spanakopita used to be done by Fournos in Cardiff — all others appear lackluster by comparison. However, both the pastitso (Greek lasagna) and the moussaka are quite good at J-K's Cafe. I had a lunch-size order of both, accompanied by rice and salad.

Mama bakes all of her own Greek dessert, and her son kindly prepared a platter with a taste of each. The butter cookie, the baklava, the kataifi (shredded filo dough doused with honey and walnuts) were de-lightful, as was the custard pie. J-K's Cafe even offers a Napoleon, which it labels "Dessert of the Gods."

For all of that food our bill was about For all of that food our bill was about fourteen collars for two, but it's possible to dine here for approximately five dollars per person. A half order of dolmades plus the souvlaki would make a creditable meal, and a half chicken is only $3.95. Not only is the food good, but everyone con nected with this enterprise is eager to please, accommodating, and generous of spirit. For what it purports to do, it does well, and I left in high spirits. If you are in La Mesa and would like an inexpensive meal in a family atmosphere, do make a note of J-K's Café. Open daily, it closes by note of 3-K's Cafe. Open daily, it closes by 9,00 p.m. You may eat here early; the food is available for take-out.

The Uaknown Diner is worth going to for a special reason: it seems to have attracted ex-New Yorkers or people from New Jersey, and they sit around and talk to one another, remembering bagels and pot roast from as long ago as twenty-five years. By definition diners serve food that is similar to cafeterias but with a "home touch." It's not gourmet, nor is it intended to be. The emphasis is on quantity: lots and lots to eat, many starches, low prices. Diners usually serve gravies that are heavy with flour, and standard fare often includes turkey with white gravy that lies over the bird like a thick blanket. No matter. Once you get accustomed to diner food, you the Customers, who seem to know cach other, congregate there as if it were a meeting hall for ex-New Yorkers who have to live on a budget. High rollers you won't find here, only gargantuan portions at low prices. But you have to be able to get into the spirit of the place, because you may be astonished to hear the word "real" applied to the vegetables and to the apple pie. In describing the brisket of beef dish, the female half of this partnership informed us that it came with "real carrots and real potatoes." "Real" means fresh rather than canned or frozen. In the case of the apple pie it indicates that the apples haven't been dehydrated.

At The Unknown Diner, prepare your-self also for mothering à la New York:

"What, you didn't like the sour? How what, you don't like the soap? Tow come? It wasn't good?" I couldn't eat the daily vegetable soup because it had too much tomato sauce. "Too much temato sauce gives me heartburn," I said.

Hearburn we won't want you to have. Wait, I'll bring you a salad. With blue cheese dressing. Blue cheese dressing is good for people who have hearburn."

I.K's Greek Cafe and The Unknown Diner offer opportunities for fresh and good "cheap eats." The food at J-K's Cafe is more polished. The Unknown Diner has a printed sign on its uncurtained windows that reads, "Real Food For Real People." In this instance you have to translate "real" to mean simple people with simple palates. We had real apple pie and real rice pudding for dessert. As we left, the owner said, "Most people don't know what a real diner is." Maybe they do now. But both of these restaurants benefit from the fact that the owners are on the premises from opening to closing, trying to please the people they serve.

How do you teel about the American car versus the toreign car's

I'd rather work on an American car than a foreign car any day. You take a Chevy. There's room under there to work. There's so much stuff on foreign cars. Parts are more expensive and they're harder to get. Maybe foreign curs are built a little bit better, but for the money I'd stick with a Ford or a Chevy. Personally, I drive a Chevy. If there wasn't any competition, what fun would it be? I guess maybe if I was from Detroit I might get pissed off Maybe foreign competition is helping them build better cars helping them build better cars. I not only repair cars, I also do just about everything, including conversions. Look at this truck. I just pulled out a four-cylinder Isuzu engine cam went flat — and I put in this American six. It's going to be a real beauty.

Marvin Popkin Retired La Jolia

Foreign cars are superior any day. The American factory worker doesn't have pride in his own product. Esprit is developed in the factory in Japan and Germany. American workers don't have it. They want to get out of the factor and home as fast as possible. don't blame them. Look in the parking lot at Ford or GM or Chrysler. You'll see many foreign cars. If the guy making the car knows foreign is better, what does he have to complain about? I insisted my daughter buy an American car a few years back — a new Pacer. Six months later it developed trouble. Last week we bought her a Mazda. I drive this old '69 Pontiac. I bought it new. It's well built. I recently saw a new Ponitac — that's right, Ponitac, that's what it said on the car. That's American quality control for you.

Doni Stills Auto Parts Saleswoman

La Mesa I drive a '72 Pinto. It's half foreign when you start tearing it down. Some of the bolts are metric and some are standard, which makes it a pain. I just rebuilt the engine myself. The 2000's the best motor they ever made on this car. You could practically eat off the motor, it's so clean now. I had a Vega first and it shook, I took it back and bought this car brand new. It was cheap, it wasn't bad looking, and it was the first thing I ever bought by myself, for myself. I'm skeptical about new cars. They seem to develop trouble three or four months later. I think out of all the foreign cars, Toyota's the best looking and best built. I saw a Chrysler Le Baron convertible the other day nice pale lavender. I just keep thinking about that car.

North Park

I drive a foreign car, a 1980 Toyota Celica. They're better built. Everybody knows that. You don't find them up on blocks all the time. Every year you hear about another major recall of an American-made car. You just don't hear that car. You just don't hear that kind of thing about a foreign car. I wish they were made here. Foreign parts are more expensive. Harder to find. It takes money away from the American factory worker. I think part of the problem is that there are just from many there are just too many domestic models. Every year it's every kind of model you can think of. Foreign manufacturers seem to come un with a good design and stick with it for a while and improve on it. That's the way they develop a good reputation develop a good rep

I drive a big '77 Pontiac.

When I bought it, it was new. I thought a bigger car would be safer, and at the time I wasn't doing that much driving. As far as its safety record. I've read it's actually a dangerous car to be a driver in. According to Consumer Reports, it was one of the worst cars I could buy that year. I got it at a year-end sale, all loaded, and I was saic, all loaded, and I was supposedly getting a good price. Now that I know more about sales and salesmen — I'm not so sure anymore. The middle class finally caught up middle class finally caught up to what poor people knew all along — big American cars are gas guzzlers and get poor mileage. American manufacturers are finally responding. Maybe it's too late. We bought my husband a late. We bough.

As a native San Diegan, Back East has always meant for me, as far as I am capable of imagining, the Grand Canyon. Any place the Grand Canyon. Any place beyond is some vague region possessing such exotic trappings as weather, art, and truly terrifying crime. What I know of New York I have gleaned from television (Rode, Barrey, Miller), film (Midnight Cowbry, The Godfabre), and certain White Paper reports on urban violence.

White Paper reports on urban violence. It seems an interesting enough place, where daily life is filled with gallery openings, literary cavalcades, and welfare-mother-uses-daughter's-head-as-hammer-type horror stories. Further proof that the quality of life in New York is significantly different than it is here can be seen in the sheer number of different than it is here can be seen in the sheer number of authors and artists who call the city home. Our own contributions to the standards of American culture being, most notably, Dr. Seuss and Raquel Welch, it's always nice to have out-of-town company. Especiall when the company is well kr own, erudite, and genuinely

On Thursday, October 13, the San Diego Museum of Art will be host to just such company, a woman who has made her mark woman who has made her mark by not being nice — muse as dominatrix, if you will — Fran Lebowitz. She came to national attention in 1978 through the publication of her first book, a collection of humorous essar Metropolitan Life. This was followed three years later by another similar collection, Social Studies. In both books Lebowitz effectively trashed various icons and caprices of contemporary Americana ar New York high life in a fine, literate style that was both self-mocking and cruise-missile

Her work as social critic-cum-Joan Rivers is often self-betraying, and the targets of her criticism are sometimes extremely provincial (trenchant remarks about the cost and apartments carry less comedic weight in, let's say, Chula Vista, than they do in midtown Manhattan). Still, there's Manhattan). Still, there's something very engaging and refreshingly American about the daughter of furniture store proprietors from Morristown, New Jersey shredding up hullabaloo, press agentry, and liberalisms like so much cabbage.

Echoes Of Shakespeare

Shakespeare is, by common consent, the greatest of dramatists. It was only natural, therefore, that composers of opera should seek to use his plays as texts for their operatic compositions. In general, however, it has turned out that too close adherence to the Shakespearean script makes for unsuccessful operas; the text has to be transformed, sometimes radically, to make it fit the musical medium.

Hamlet is a case in point.

There have been tone poems on There have been tone poems on this subject — by List and Tchaikovsky — which discard the language of the text entirely turning it all into musical ideas. Verdi, who composed several Shakespeare operas, including shakespeare operas, including the composer's two greatest masterpieces (Otello and Falstaff), contemplated doing a Hamlet but never got around to it. There is a Hamlet by the Larvian composer Janis Kalnins which can scarcely be said to have found worldwide acclaim. And there is the Hamlet of Ambroise Thomas, the Ameroise I nomas, the nineteenth-century French composer best known for his opera Mignon based on a novel by Goethe.

Thomas's music is not of the

I homas's must is not of the sort that might seem well suited to a tragic drama about incest, fratricide, revenge, and madness. It has been characterized as "clear, correct, melodious, and elegantly expressive." Another critic, writing of the school of French operatic composition to French operatic composition to which Thomas belonged (he was which Thomas belonged (he wa a contemporary of Gound and the teacher of Massenet), has called the music of these opera-"undramatic. lightweight, genteel, and elegant." Grove's dictionary describes Thomas's music as "light and graceful." Obviously, no such comporer could be adequate to re-creating the crux of the matter lies.

Thomas's Hamlet may be based on Shakespeare, but it is quite intentionally far from its original when the San Diego Opera put when the San Diego Opera put it on here five years ago — it must be approached on its own terms, and not as a pale or distorted echo of its great in mood and meaning. The words of his opera, after all, are nor by Shakespeare, but by Jules Ba. r and Michel Carré, who also provided the very non-Goethean texts for Gounod's Faust and Thomas's

The year 1964 was a fateful one for both Linda Ronstadt and Marianne Faithfull. It was on a day in that year that a slightly plumpish, eighteen-year-old Ronstadt left a comfortable, middle-class home in parched Tucson, Arizona for the arid wasteland of Los Angeles, there to pursue a career as a singer. It was a bold move, but not an unwarranted one, since Ronstadt had been singing semiprofessionally with her musical family since childhood and had developed the best lungs of the bunch. It made sense for her to seek her fortune in the nation's music industry capital. But once in L.A., Ronstadt fell into a pattern that would just as easily describe the fives of a thousand other appiring musicians, doing odd jobs to buy frood and shelter and singing at night in funky clubs like the Troubador with a folkish trio. the Stone Poneys. blessed. In fact, when one realizes that her entrance into pop music was a matter of unreasonable luck to begin with, it's a wonder that Faithfull ever considered making a comeback at all. But in listening to the three albums she has released since 1979 (Broken English, Dangerous Acquaintances, and A Child's Adventure), there emerges a simple truth: Faithfull has a very personal tale to tell, and she tells it in taie to tell, and she tells it in bone-chilling, pointed terms that only the squeamish will find cause to avoid. Supported by musicians who apply just by musicians who apply just the right shadings of gray and black to her often bleak poetry. Faithfull has created a sound that reminds one of a Naugahyde-covered cushion — tough and impenetrable on the exterior, impressionable and resilient at its core. Not a and resilient at its core. Not a newcomer to lyric writing (she co-wrote the Stones "Sister Morphine"). Faithfull utilizes both veiled and direct references to her own life to describe a rather grim existence of which insensate sex, drug-induced spiritual paralysis, and a de facto rejection of hope for anything better outline the parameters. better outline the parameters. It is not, as they say, a pretty picture, but is is one so deftly painted, so compelling in its honesty, and framed in such well-wrought musical textures, that it brands Faithfull as one of the more original and original and original and thought-provoking song authors on the current scene. 'Steak-out' for a satisfying mealtime experience!

Some day you too may find yoursell driving down El Cajon Bird. looking for a place to eat. We decided to try Dookies.

The thing to order here is steak... any steak. Their beel is aged and unbelievably tender and the cook has the touch for cooking it exactly as you like it. All dinners include evon or said, notatore or math, any and should be. The onlon rings are a killer. The kiddie menu offers a Jumbo Dookie Burger, which is certainly truth in advertising. Take along a kid with a small appetite so that you can sample it yourself. The Clincher: their dress code is not black tie, but no lite.

THE READER PUZZLE

Don Rubin

According to our friends in allistics, it is relatively easy to etermine the order in which a s of bullets has passed hrough a plate glass window.
All you have to do is examine cracks. You'll find that the ractures created by the first ullet tend to be uninterrupte hereas those from a second or subsequent) shot should terminate at the fractures which ceded them.

In other words, if the cracks from one shot are stopped by those of another, it is safe to onclude that they must have ccurred later.

All of which will come as bad news to the character who left his autograph, in bullets, in the window at the right. cause all you have to do is figure out the sequence of shots, connect the holes, and read the admittedly rough first name of the culprit responsible

Rules of the Game

1. Prizes for solving the Reader Puzzle will be Reader

2. All entries in the Reader Puzzle contest must be received by the Reader (addressed to Reader Puzzle, P.O. Box 80803, San Diego, CA 92138) by 9:00 a.m. Friday, eight days following the issue date.

3. All entries must be accompanied by your name, address, and shirt size (S, M L, XL).

4. Employees of the Reade and their immediate families are not eligible.

5. In the event of disputes or

5. In the event of disputes o ties, decisions of the judges will be final, and arbitrary. We've only got five T-shirts a week to give away, so if there are more than five winners, we'll have a lottery.

 6. All answers must be entered in the space allotted on the puzzle page. And please, no phone calls or trips to our office. 7. One entry per person nners of and Answers to ider Puzzle #275,

Jeepers!
Nearly all of the errors involved jeeps 5, 29, and 27 (the last two twice), though none of the three needed moving (even once) to clear an exit for the trapped black jeep. Since the first cars had to be moved in pairs, we suspect people felt compelled to continue doing so. But check the solution and you'll see it wasn't necessary.

You had to move jeeps 22,
23, 30, 31, 28, 26, 19, 16, 9,
10, 11, 12, 3, 4, 6, 13, 16, 19, 26, 28, 30, 31, 22, 23, and 16

lack jeep out.

No. 277, Firing Lines

A little less than half of the 101 puzzlers came up with the correct solution. The T-shirt winners are: 1. Fred Binczewsk, San Diego 2. Renee Southwell, Encipitas
