He's hated and feared, but respected. Coyote lives.

Coyote was lying in focus watch E the moon come up over the
this was looking at what he would be for dinner. For the past few weeks he'd been living in an overlooking the San Elise houses. It was a nice neighborhood — quiet, with an ocean view, and he'd settled comfortably into an abandoned shop-ing car nestled under a pile of oak poop of the neighborhood so fiber-by the water. And he usually didn't have to wait long.

My hand shot out from the chair,
behind him and he stepped out of bed to catch the trash delivery come.

Lines of Love, Lines of Pain

By Judith Moore

I stood there in the shadows, a dusty old hat, a crumpled piece of paper in my hand, a sense of unease and uncertainty. We had been through this before, our relationship was strained. She was always looking for ways to improve, to make things better. But always, there was a nagging feeling that something was missing.

I thought about leaving, about walking away from her, but I could see the hurt in her eyes, the desperation in her voice. She needed me, and I couldn't bear to think of her suffering alone.

We sat in silence, the only sound the gentle rustling of the leaves. She finally spoke, her voice soft and gentle, almost a whisper.

"I'm just afraid," she said. "Afraid that we'll never find our way back to where we started."

I took her hand, squeezing it tightly. "It will be okay," I assured her. "We'll figure it out together."

Together, we walked away from the shadows, our hands entwined."

A Gathering of Gastropods

Seashells from the seashore

The tide was very low; one sunny Saturday, and the last line of surf was just in sight. At the edge of the water, a solitary figure could be seen, picking up seashells. It was John, a local beachcomber, who was known for his collection of seashells. He had spent many hours beachcombing, carefully selecting and preserving each one he found. The shells were a source of fascination for John, who spent hours studying their intricate patterns and unique features.

Each shell he collected was a treasure, and he took great care in preserving them. He had a special place for them in his home, a collection room filled with shelves and cabinets, each dedicated to a specific group of shells. John's collection was quite extensive, ranging from small, delicate snail shells to large, ornate conches. He had a passion for these creatures, and his collection was a testament to his dedication and love for the ocean.

John was always on the lookout for new shells, and he would travel far and wide to find unique specimens. He had even visited distant locations, such as the Galapagos Islands, to gather rare shells. His collection was not only a personal passion but also a source of inspiration, and he often shared his knowledge and collection with others.

John's collection was not just a collection of shells, but a representation of the ocean's beauty and diversity. Each shell told a story, a tale of the ocean's history and the creatures that inhabit it. John's passion for these shells was contagious, and he inspired others to explore the wonders of the ocean and appreciate its inhabitants.

THE NEST

Jon Voight
Table for Five

The Nest is directed by Michael Hauge, who also cowrote the script with Jane Fonda and John G. Avildsen. The film tells the story of a group of people who come together to form a community and live in a nest-like structure. The Nest is a haunting and powerful tale of friendship, love, and survival.

CALIGULA

December 4

A captivating, shimmering beautiful movie. A tragicomic tale of life in the midst of a chaotic imperial court. Costuming and acting are superb. A beautifully realized depiction of its subject.

A Bigger Splash

David Hockney

December 5-6

HBO Fri. 8 PM

Starring Tony Booth, a handsome, charismatic man who has just returned from a long absence, A Bigger Splash is a bold and imaginative work that blends elements of surrealism, abstract art, and contemporary culture. The film explores themes of desire, identity, and the search for meaning in a rapidly changing world.
