"Only one person knows how your new radio station should sound: You."

There's a new and different kind of radio station that you should know about: KLZZ 106.5 FM.
And it's different because we're doing something for you that no other San Diego radio station has ever done.

We're asking you to help us create your own "perfect" radio station, by telling us exactly what you want to hear. And when you want to hear it.

So tune in 106.5 San Diego's Class FM right now and you won't hear any DJs. Or news. Or sports. Not even the weather. Only what you call in and suggest.

After all, the only one who knows what you really want to hear on the radio is you. Right?

That's why we made 106.5 your place on the FM dial. So give KLZZ, San Diego's Class FM, a try. Just tune in, then phone us with your suggestions.

And you'll be helping to create the new, better radio station you're listening for.

A San Diego painter, a mysterious violin, a tale of international intrigue.

The Warsaw Connection

The violin wasn’t much to look at; it sat in an old case Mirek had thrown almost casually onto a corner of the couch in John Ratajkowski’s Carmel Valley home. A family heirloom, to be sure, but no big deal otherwise, Mirek said. Can you take it back to my mother? Sure, Ratajkowski answered. He was going to be carrying a big stack of his oil paintings across two continents and an ocean to Warsaw. One violin would hardly make a difference. It was late in 1980 and Ratajkowski was beginning to relish the adventure of his upcoming trip to Poland, where his portraits of jazz and blues musicians were be shown.

Though Easy To Catch, Short Range Is Missed

"I hope you guys aren't going to keep on running," remarked Deanne Bunker, manager of the Cali-Bor, the latest addition to the Long Island Beach-Bayshore area. "It's not that I don't like the sport of hunting," she added, "but I think it's time we started focusing on improving the quality of experience for both hunters and non-hunters alike."

But even as she spoke, Deanne Bunker knew that the deer population in the area had been dwindling for years, and that the current harvest was a mere fraction of what it once was. "We need to do something about this," she said, "before it's too late."

Up With Acorns

Wanna See A Trike?

Up with the acorns, down with the nuts! It's time for a new kind of recreational vehicle that's taking the country by storm. The Trike is a three-wheeled motorcycle that offers all the fun of a motorcycle, but none of the maintenance headaches.

Built like a motorcycle on three wheels, the Trike is powered by a small engine and has a comfortable seat and handlebars. It's perfect for cruising around town or taking a leisurely ride on country roads.

Wanna See A Trike?

We all know that there's nothing like a good old-fashioned bike ride to get the heart racing and the blood flowing. And what's better than a bike ride when you can cruise around on a bike that's been designed specifically for you?

The Wanna See A Trike is the perfect choice for anyone who wants to enjoy a ride without the added responsibility of a standard bicycle. With its easy-to-use controls and comfortable seating, it's ideal for riders of all ages and skill levels.

We Do It All For You

Little Timmy's father, Tom Cuddy, was the first to see the incident. It was September 14, 1982, and he was driving home from work with his son. As they approached a stop sign, a car veered across the road and hit their vehicle.

"I can't believe it," Tom Cuddy said in a whisper. "He was just a little kid, and now he's dead."

The driver of the car was later arrested and charged with醉酒驾驶 and assault with a deadly weapon. The Cuddy family was devastated, and they've been working to ensure that such tragedies don't happen again.

"We do it all for you," Tom Cuddy said at a press conference. "We want to make sure that everyone is safe on our roads."
Dear Matthew Allen,

What happens when the entire world of clothing which, by enforcement or accident, is categorized as "trendy," is suddenly transferred to the world of "classy" clothing? The result is a situation where all clothing that is considered "trendy" in one country might be considered "classy" in another. It's a fascinating idea, and one that I think we should explore further.

Best regards,

Dear Matthew

What happens when those terms of clothing which are exclusively popular in New York, become the terms of the popular culture? When a certain style of dress becomes fashionable everywhere? And then, when that style of dress becomes the fashion of the world? This is what has happened to the "Hipster" movement in recent years. "Hipster" has become an acceptable term for anyone who wears clothes in a certain way. The clothes themselves are not necessarily new or exclusive, but they have become a symbol of a certain lifestyle. This has led to a trend in the fashion industry, where designers create collections specifically for the "Hipster" market. These collections often feature items like vintage clothing, denim, and T-shirts. The "Hipster" look is not just about the clothes, but also about the attitude they represent. It is about being individualistic and non-conformist, which is something that has always been associated with the "hipster" movement. However, this trend has also been criticized for being commercialized and losing its original meaning. Many people argue that the "hipster" trend is just another example of the fashion industry trying to profit from a subculture. Despite this, the "hipster" trend continues to be popular, and it is likely to continue for some time. It is a testament to the enduring appeal of the "hipster" aesthetic.
IF MAYOR ROGER HEDGESHOP'S PLAN TO EXTEND the $57 million hotel tax is defeated by the voters in March, he may have some trouble finding backers for his $50 million scheme to build a new stadium for the Chargers and freeway interchange for the I-805 bypass. Hedgeshop's spending has been targeted by critics who say it's too much and too fast. However, Hedgeshop has been able to pick up some support from private sectors who see the project as a way to boost the economy. The mayor's plan includes a $100 million hotel and a $20 million convention center, which would be financed partly through state and federal grants. The project is expected to create 2,000 jobs and generate $30 million in tax revenue. Hedgeshop has been推崇ed for his efforts to bring the Chargers back to San Diego and has been praised for his leadership in the city's economic development. However, some critics argue that the project is too expensive and that the money would be better spent on other priorities. The upcoming election will be a crucial test for Hedgeshop's plan, as the voters will have the final say on whether to extend the hotel tax.
Connexion

The government's mining ministry, charged with maintaining and developing the country's enormous mineral wealth, has been a source of controversy and criticism. In recent years, the ministry has faced numerous challenges, including labor disputes, environmental concerns, and allegations of corruption. In 1987, a series of protests and strikes occurred, led by miners and supported by local communities, demanding better working conditions and higher wages. The government responded with a crackdown, leading to the temporary closure of several mining sites. The crisis highlighted the tension between the need for economic growth and the rights of workers and environmental protection.

Pacifika

Pacifika is a technology hub located in the Pacific region, known for its advanced research and development facilities. It has been at the forefront of innovation, particularly in renewable energy and biotechnology. However, recent years have seen a decline in funding and support, which has affected its ability to conduct cutting-edge research. The government, in an effort to boost the economy, has proposed measures to attract foreign investment and stimulate growth, but these initiatives have been controversial, raising questions about their impact on local industries and labor rights.

Connection

I nstead of building an interplanetary transport system, just another case of planet Earth's children trying against the odds to find a place to live and be left undisturbed by the constant bombardment of asteroids from space, the Mink had tossed the idea back in the old days. "All he wanted to do," Rajkowski says, "was paint pictures and stay in Paris.

Experiences such as the one didn't make Rajkowski forget the acclaim he was supposed to be running, they just pushed the issues nearly into history, as if it belonged to a previous time in his life. And after all the weeks, Rajko's work had been significant and was contributing to the French art tradition. Was it of some importance to the public? Would it mean money for his family? Rajkowski had worked long enough for the expected success. When he finally rang the number Mink had given him, he was surprised to hear a voice telling him what to do next.

Rajkowski arrived in Katowice late at night to a normally empty platform. He remembered seeing around the corner of his hotel and decided he would be there next morning, when suddenly a man about his age stepped from the shadows, introduced himself as Stanislaw and took from him the centenarian's Italian violin. At this point, John Rajkowski might have stepped back on the train or two from; recognizing his and Stanislaw's future simply by seeing his work. But he did not. He was with all this stuff they called Skipper, boots, and two bottles of brandy and this was maybe the life he's been working for.

There was no alcohol in Poland at that time, Rajkowski says. "The violin was gone. Somebody told me that a shipment of Cuban rum was due to arrive and advised me to buy some of that. But here in Stanislaw's yard was all this stuff they called Skipper, boots, and two bottles of brandy and this was maybe the life he's been working for."

Then came the hard part. Rajkowski realized he'd have to clean the tape cassettes of his own camera. For one reason or another, he didn't, except when their company was Russian companies. Stanislaw's company was not Russian companies. But they were so busy with the work on the American government projects that they had no time to clean the tape cassettes of their own camera. But they were so busy with the work on the American government projects that they had no time to clean the tape cassettes of their own camera.

It was never clear how Skipper, boots, and two bottles of brandy and this was maybe the life he's been working for."

Rajkowski spent a total of five days with Stanislaw. On the third day, he was taken to have lunch with Jurko and the next night returned for dinner at Jurko's, where he met Jurko's wife and two children. "We were unusually friendly and I just sort of laughed it off, not really knowing what he meant, but the next morning he said, 'About that thing we talked about yesterday — we could be friendly, couldn't we?'"

"I had a feeling that we would be friendly, couldn't we?" Rajkowski says. "We were unusually friendly and I just sort of laughed it off, not really knowing what he meant, but the next morning he said, 'About that thing we talked about yesterday — we could be friendly, couldn't we?'"

The country — one last effort to save the government's gold. The occupying force limited the full day. No. But the night was gay. December 15 in the Finance Committee, we were in the computer room. I don't know how many, but there were several of us in the normal building with glass walls. Not to see the threat. Not to expect anyone to protect anyone. So people ended the strike. Borders, storms, floods; these were all because we prepared the strike and made it known to the movement for a long time.

Under martial law, workers could be stopped by the border of gas and free. Rather than run for it, it was dusted and some of his fellow computer workers ran across the street to a mixing-room complex where there are stories, smoke, bright, colors, and whatever else they had to hand, back toward the fight. "We went up the second story in this Turtle Bay Center at the factory and asked, "It's in trouble, maybe we can get into a car and wonder if we will be caught. And we can help too."

And right then, the attack started. First they came for the leftists, and we thought they were safe. Then they came for the Communists, and we all thought they were safe. Then they came for the Jews, and we all thought they were safe. Then they came for the women, and we all thought they were safe.

The Big Chill - Much the same moral quandary that consumed The Conversation and the protagonist in the earlier film is the focus of the tawdry manipulation of the theme in this year's The Big Chill. There's nothing new here in terms of plot or setting, but there is plenty of angst, as the characters struggle with their demons.
