On January 2 of this year sixty-nine-year-old Lillian Smith found herself handcuffed and seated in her Cherokee wenue apartment as a policeman lectured her to keep uiet and stay still. There had between her and her brothe a-law, seventy-four-year-old Harry Holborn, Roommeter for more than seven years, the two had gotten along well until two years ago when the relationship began to deteriorate. Their limited incomes would not allow them to leave a situation that had gradually become intolerable for them both, however, and minor squabbles soon escalated into shouting matches with canes brandished wildly in the air and fighting words exchanged. "I know what Harry says," fumes Smith. "He says I'm a crazy old lady who goes around hitting people with her cane. But he's the one

One type of green olive, known as the farm-style green ripe olive, is not allowed to ferment after curing, and so is packed in cams. Fermented green ol-ives are often put in large cans for com-mercial consumers. The special coating needed to protect these cans is expensive, and the shelf life is quite short, both of which make this type of packacing im-practical for home consumption. As a fin-nal example to dissuade your from using the word "always," black olives are sold in jars, especially up north in California's olive country. "He met all three of the criteria, plus he'd vioall three of the criteria, puts not the lated the restraining order," says Bea, still incredulous. "We thought the hearing was just a formality." Bea cried for days. Janis and Paul became outraged. The mental health system, in its zeal to protect individual civil rights, works in strange and often obscure ways. Actually, the issue of the restraining order was probably never prought up at the hearing. Billy was brought up at the hearing. Billy was taken before a superior court commis-sioner, not a judge, who was to decide whether there was probable cause to hold him against his will. In such a hearing, mattern relating to possible criminal violations are not considered germane to the question at hand, so it's unlikely that the commissioner ever heard that Billy had violated a re-straining order. Bea has been unable to discover whether testimony was given concerning Billy's violent and Though they asked that their identities be changed for this is tory, no other details concerning the family's struggle with chilophrenia have been altered. Billy is the oldest of four chil-dren, who range in age from thirty-seven down to twenty-seven. All were colucated in Cubolic schools in River-side and San Diego, and Bea zays that Billy was always her martest child. It wasn't until he was about thirty, and his wife saddauly left him, the he ch-gan aboving signs of mental illness. The Clarks (ccluding Bill, Sr. and Billy wasted to tell their story for reasons both clear and clouded. Cer-tainly they're afraid of what Billy is capable of, and hope that any action on their part, even just talking about the problem in public, might somehow bring about a return to The names Huberty and Hinckley come up often in their conversations about Billy. Their utter frustration about BHIY. Their utter frustration with "the system" also prompted them to talk, though they don't hold naive notions about somehow improv-ing the mental health care morass. Uling the mental health care morass. Ut-timately, they spoke out because they thought the details of their personal hell might somehow help others in similar, untenable situations.

Week of February 12, 1984 On Monday Feb. 13th a.m. I was called by the SD Police asking where-abouts of son Billy. They reported to me that his car was found vandalized and was at the Dana boat area parking lot. No signs of Billy. I went down to tot. No signs of birly. I went down to see the car as soon as possible— did not find Billy. His car was a total wreck. Nothing in car was intact, i.e., all windows broken, seat covers slashed, glove compa shift broken off.

shift broken off. A young man walked over to talk to me. Pete was his name. He had talked to Billy and said it was he (Billy) who wrecked the car. Pete said the police and Harbor Patrol had picked Billy up that night & took him to CMH. The following are he was released and ing a.m. he was rel back out at the car.

On Tues. a.m. I went out to see the car again & to see if Billy was around Car still there but no Billy. When I re turned home on Thes, around 4:30 Billy was in the house. He was dirty, tired, no possessions except a blanket. We got him to bathe & eat & I washed ali his clothes (pants, tee-shirt w/hood & a velour shirt). Nothing else. He stayed and is still there on Sat. a.m. Wed. a.m. Paul notified his conservator & she made arrangements to see Billy on Thurs. at 10 a.m. Wed. evening he went down to his car & did clean up some of the glass (I think). the also went to some stores and spent approx. $40.00 on brushes, leg hair shaver, body creams (rose milk),

Did not hear from conservator at a!! after that. Fri. a.m. son Paul called her & she said that Billy was quite ra-tional, looked good, talked well, & was dressed nicely.

That was probably the last time the conservator saw Billy. The conservator is appointed by a judge as a kind of trustee to handle a mentally ill per-son's financial, medical, and psychological affairs. (A person on a conservatorship must meet with the conservator on a regularly scheduled basis, at which time his lucidity and well-being are evaluated. He may be prohibited from signing contracts, driving a car, and even voting, de-pending on the individual case.) Each ycar the "conservatee" must be re-evaluated by a doctor to determine whether to continue the conservatorwhether to continue the conservator-ship, but in Billy's case, once he'd ship, but in Billy's case, once he'd taken a hammer to his car, he disap-peared and couldn't be located for the psychological evaluation, so the con-servatorship lapsed in May. He'd been living in the '76 Chevy Monza for the previous few months, a living situa-tion that, given his status as a conser-tor that, given his status as a conser-vatee, left the Clarks believing that the conservatorship was a farce. intense mortification she'd had to endure while testifying in court against her son in order to get him on the conservatorship in the first place. But if the conservatorship failed in keeping Billy on his antidepressant medica-tions and in stable living situations, part of the reason, according to his brother Paul, was because his conservator was a woman.

Before Billy's daughter was a year old. Anne took her and walked out. It was a complete surprise to everyone, cspecially Billy. His mother recalls, "I was there one Thursday visiting my granddaughter, and everything seemed fine, but Friday she was gone." In the divorce settlement, Billy was ordered to pay child support (which was later rescinded when he (which was later reschided when he became a conservatee), and Anne was awarded half of all community prop-erty. They split a total bank account of about $15,000, but Billy kept his part ownership (with his father) of several choice acres of avocado land near Valley Center. Since the breakup. Bea has seen her granddaughter sporadically, and Billy has seen the child even less. No one has really explained his diagnosed mental illness to Billy's ex wife; Janis says her mother is afraid that if Anne knew how bad off he was. the grandmother would never again see her granddaughter. tal at the time Both Billy and Paul had spent a hitch in the army in the late Sixties, Billy, despite his talent for electronics, as a cook, Paul as a medic. Paul became increasingly concerned for his brother, who seemed to wallow constantly in the muck of his broken marriage. Eventually Billy lost his job, and Paul began confronting his brother with his poor attitude At their parents' house one afternoon they came to blows, and Paul put his older brother on the ground and pinned him. Ever since Billy broke free, there's been had blood between Soon after the fight, Paul's father told him that Billy was deteriorating quickly. Bill, Sr. had been getting calls from Billy's landlady, informing him that something was wrong with his son. In October of 1978 Bill and Paul drove out to the apartment to see Billy one day, and the sight of his apartment "hit me like a hammer," says Paul. There were holes in the walls, the furniture was slashed, the windows were broken and everything electrical - light switches, wall sockets, radios, appliances - was disman-tled. Paul understood the implications much more clearly than his father did. "It was totally new to him," says Paul of his father. "He didn't know how to nd it and still doesn't He still hasn't accepted Billy's illness.

The landlady told them that Billy wasn't sleeping in the apartment anymore, that he was sleeping outside un-der a neighbor's window. They found "On Thursday, June 21, we were awakened by loud shouting outside our bedroom windows (Billy had started sleeping outside our house the end of April). out later that Billy couldn't sleep in their efforts to take him to the hospital. He swung at them and tried to re sist, but once he was overpowered he assented to going with them. During the struggle and on the way to the hos-pital. Paul felt as if his insides were being torn out, a sensation that has become communal within the family. Billy stayed in the hospital for three weeks in November of 1978 and was diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic. He was put on anti depressant drugs, started eating good meals, and quickly became more organized. His father helped get him a job at the same aerospace firm where problems." Billy was angry that the four men had come, and he resisted Bill, Sr. is employed, but Billy only worked there a few months. He'd stopped taking his medicine and refused treatment as an outpatient. Paul says that his brother did well at the job initially, but that he was forced to work closely with women, and eventually he couldn't take it. He was laid off and soon he destroyed another apartment and ultimately ended up back in the hospital, a cycle that has continued for five years.

June 23 1984 On Wed. June 20, Bill & I returned home to find our back door frame shattered again. Billy had done this several weeks ago but it was not as bad & was repairable. This time the door frame will have to be replaced. He also took a bath & cut himself, I do not know where, but there was much blood on the towel.

On Thursday, June 21, we were awakened by loud shouting outside our bedroom windows (Billy had started sleeping outside our house the end of April). He completely tore apart a screen on our camper smashed his radio, and took a big tree branch (approx. 8 inches in dia.) and broke it off. He left but as I was going to work I saw him on the street. He was very angry. I went shopping. I went back home but did not enter - 1 was afraid he was there. I went to friend's house & called police. They went back to the house with me but he was not there. If he had been, I would have signed him into CMH.

Fifty-nine-year-old Bea is a suc sick she's seen her family, include her marriage of thirty-nine years, buf-feted like a flag in a gale. Always the more assertive parent, she has had to stand before her whole family and absorb Billy's verbal abuse and physical threats while her husband has done nothing to defend her. For lack of his father's leadership, Paul has had to as-sume the role of family guardian more often than not. "There are times more often than not. "There are times when I really disilke my father for that," says sister Janis. "Not having the support of my dad is really a prob-lem, and it's been hard on their mar-riage. Mom's told me that this whole thing really opened her eyes to their relationship. She was the one who ac-ually had to take the stand and testify against Billy. I think she feels

The whole family has reexamined Billy's upbringing, in an effort to find some clue or reason for his sudden mental illness. Every one agrees that Bea was always the disciplinarian, the more dominant of the two parents, but Bill, Sr. was always there when the children needed him. Looking back, Bea has done a lot of second-g about the way she raised Billy, but tie about the way she raised failty, but 5 c children say they were raised the same way, and it was a happy, supportive at mosphere. They do agree that Billy was a loner, though he did have some close friends, and giftfriends. Paul says that his brother was always good in at and electronics that he uses a says that his brother was always good in art and electronics, that he was a perfectionist who had the capacity to become completely absorbed in what-ever project he was working on. had a bad temper," she says. "He would get enraged if things weren't working out his way. He and I never got along." But in all the reassessing, they haven't been able to come up with a clue as to one of Bully's strang-est adult traits: his cross-dressing. Oron Billy: illness could home his sing. Once Billy's illness cycle began, his mother noticed that he started wearing effeminate clothing — sheer shirts, slinky fabrics. Then, during the periods when he was living at home, Bea began to discover her own clothing in his bedroom, although she asn't yet seen him dressed in it. He took to shaving the hair off his arms (and presumably his legs), and became partial to skin creams. One

Christmas two years ago the family was to gather for dinner at Janis's house, but when his father arrived at house, but when his father arrived at his apartment to pick up Billy, Bill, Sr. found his scn. wearing feminine clothing and facai makeup. Bill told him to wash his face, but Billy prefased. The family had dinner with-out Billy, but his parents brought him food and presents afterward. Bea thinks her son is a transvestite. "I'm enough of a realist to realize this is the way he is," she sighs. "I feel bad, I feel unhappy, but it's not going make my world fall apart." Paul has done some armchair psychologizing on this point. He thinks Billy's cross-dressing is at ributable to a psychological mechanism in which sick person takes on the characteris tics of the person or people he de-spises. "I'd prefer to think it's that, rather than some latent sexual confusion," he says. It's not a subject he dwells upon.

Bea has also heard it all before, in the meetings she attends with the group known as San Diego Alliance for the Menas San Diego Altitance for the Men-tally III (formerly Parents of Adult Schizophrenics). Still, the remote possibility that Billy will get better as suddenly as he got sick is a real one to the Clarks, and his recent relative stability is encouraging. But they've learned to distrust encouragement, for it has misled them in the past. Bea has been careful not to let her family problems consume her. As she time over the summer in order to protries to maintain ties with her grandtect them from his brother, feels oblidaughter, as well as her own daughter gated to help. [1984], the violence was indirect, Paul says. "This year, for the first time, we witnessed it, we experienced it We're getting closer, and Billy is getting closer, to a breaking point. Either he'll be institutionalized, or this ther he is be institutionanzed, or mis-will be a pattern that we'll just have to live with. And there's always that hope that he'll get better, but that's be-ing pushed farther and farther back. But I'm more fearful of my parents' physical and mental health than I am about Billy's. They have to realize that he's writing his own book, and we can't change it much." Paul and his parents recognize that Billy needs intensive therapy, t ut so far that's been impossible because of his periodic de-nial of his illness. To this day the family doesn't know if any counselor has sat Billy down and explained to him that he's seriously sick. "Every time we've pushed him in the direction of long-term psychotherapy, he leaves," Paul explains. "It's very difficult to force that on someone who doesn't want it "

For herself and her family, Bea's hopes don't seem overly large, but given Billy's situation, she knows how vast the distance is between those hopes and her reality. "For Billy, I just want him to understand what his problem is, that he needs to take his pills, and that he needs an unstressful job," she says. "For me, I want to be able to sleep at night, without worry-ing about the house burning down. And I know I cannot live with Billy."

But wait a minute - subtlety couldn't be farther from the point here. After all, Bradley is nothing less than a symbol of hope and an inspiration to retired Class Clowns who long ago gave up the dream of someday loosing a chandelier-rattling belch in a four-star restaurant or offering a kinky proposition to Marie Osmond. Suddenly, with his comedic sense in full flower and his oncecaptive audience dispersing in all directions, he is faced with a paralyzing dilemma. He can spend the next five years at a two-year junior college taking and retaking music appreciation, introduction to theater, and practical math; he can get a job at a gas station and practice his gags on bilingual mechanics who only get half of them; or he can embark on a career in city government, where eventually his practical jokes can be underwritten by the taxpayers. Regardless of his choice, the Class Clown shuffles into the world with his tail between Into the world with his tail between his legs, his impish humor undermined by the ravages of maturity, his fundamental urge to make people laugh supplanted by the more fundamental need to make a living. By the time he has reached his thirties, the Class Clown has chucked his rubber vomit and fakenose-and-glasses and mired himself in mortgage payments. He has become (oh loathesome word) respectable, and his loss is everyone's loss. That's why David Bradley is so important. Bradley is a man who has beaten the odds, who has emerged from the car wash of maturation not cleaner, but only wetter and with a worsening wax build-up. In a world grown taciturn in the face of such perils as nuclear proliferation and international terrorism. Bradley international terrorism. Bradley lives by a simple credo: 1 have met the enemy — 1 just hope they're not staying for dinner. A musician (and I use the term very loosely) and comie. Bradley has for more than ten years been splitting the sides of San Diegans with his crudely fashioned musicomedy show, usually at Jose Murphy's saloon in Pacific Beach, where Bradley became, almost literally. a fivure in 1977. Fronting a literally, a fixture in 1977. Fronting a series of country-rock and rock bands with names like the O.D. Corral, the Wimps, Joe Bummer and the Assbites from Hell, A Flock of Haircuts, and, most recently, the Maniacs, Bradley over the years developed a performance style that is the musical equivalent of the insult comedy practiced by such entertainers as Don Rickles, Richard Belzer, Joan Rivers, Robin Williams, and the late Jack E. Leonard. In Bradley's hands and

Devid Deadley mouth, however, that assaultive brand of humor has been broadened and contemporized both by his insights into a society that gets its information fix from magazines like People and the National Enquirer, its audience in one swipe. Many have had their enjoyment of a particular tune ruined forever by Bradley, who will mangle a song's Bradley, who will mangle a song's familiar hooks and guitar parts, impaie its message on a skewer of rewritten, farcical lyrics (often with reference to people, places, and things San Diegan), and utter non sequiturs and malapropisms that range from the absurd to the profine. Yes, Bradley's fant low People and the National Enquirer, and by his innake irreverence for popular culture (especially pop music), an irreverence whose frequently vulgar application masks a kcen, subtle wit. But wait a minute — subtlety couldn't be farther from the point here. After all, Bradley is nothing. range from the absurd to the profanc. Yes, Bradley's fans love him, not only because he's funny, but more importantly because he stands as a living, breathing refutation of every sixth-grade less than a symbol of hope and an inspiration to retired Class Clowns teacher who every sixting rade teacher who every gripped a Class Clown by the ear and sang a variation on that familiar theme: "You may think you're funny, little who long ago gave up the dream of someday loosing a chandelier-rattling belch in a four-star restaurant or offering a kinky proposition to Marie Osmond. Class Clowns and those who admire them mister, but your clowning around will get you nowhere!" Clowns and those who admire then recognize the real thing when they see it, and they constitute a large percentage of the fans who have made Bradley the dean of San Diego's lengthening list of musicomics. THE GOOD, THE BAD. BRADLEY

Mesa Boulevard at three o'clock that afternoon. At three o'clock, Bradley and his pals watched from a distance, thoroughly entertained by the sight of the vice principal and several policemen crawling around in the dumpster, which, of course, contained only garbage. Another time, Bradley got into a bit of trouble at school, and anticipating that his parents would be telephoned, he called the school from a pay phone, disguising his voice to sound like his father's. "I listened with great concern to their complaints," recalled Bradley, "and said very firmly, 'I'll handle this.' Then I went home and gave myself a good talking to."

But Bradley's parents, who were under the impression that their son was a model student, eventually discovered otherwise. "I had been forging fake report cards, giving myself a straight 'B' average and good citizenship grades," he said.

"Then one day a counselor from the school called and wanted to talk about my straight 'D' average.' Bradley graduated from Madison High in 1968 the second lowest in his Thereafter, Bradley attended City College for two years, studying film, radio and television, and even produced a couple of radio documentaries that aired on local stations. But a week before he was to graduate from junior college. Bradley dropped out of school and formed his first rock-and-roll band the Outlaws from the Moon. That endeavor, too, ended abruptly. They fired me as a lead singer after I got drunk one night and threw up on the carpet at the drummer's house," he remembered, "IThe drummer's] wife insisted that I leave and I've had trouble with band members' wives and girlfriends ever since."

Corral broke up in 1974, but not before the band had played a series of engagements at Mulvaney's Saloon in Sun Valley, Idaho, where actress-to-be Margaux Hemingway (a descendant of Ernest) and world class surfer Mike Doyle waited on tables. When the group finally disbanded, Bradley became a solo act under the management of San Diego concert promoter Marc Berman and his then-partner, Jeff Carson. The Berman-Carson team got Bradley gigs opening for comedians Cheech and Chong in their concerts here, for which shows In 1972 Bradley, vocalist Dusty Bradley revived the song-spoofing routine that had given him his start as a Class Clown many years earlier. as a class Crown many years carrier. Cheech and Chong were sufficiently impressed by Bradley to ask that he open shows for them at the super-hip L.A. nightclub, the Roxy, but the duo's manager, record mogul Lou Adler, nixed the idea and instead hired the Persuasions, a rhythm and blues a cappella vocal group. That fleeting brush with fame had an effect on Bradley, however. During his days with O.D. Corral, Bradley had become friends with Jack Tempchin, a San Diegan who had written such Top Forty hits as the Eagles' "Peaceful, Easy Feelin' " and "Already Gone. Bradley and Tempchin had even collaborated on a send-up of the Roberta Flack song, "Killing Me Softly," titling their effort, "Killing Me Softly with Kung Fu": Strumming my face with his fingers Changing my nose with his foot Killing me softly with Kung Fu Knocking my block off with Kung Fu Changing my outlook with his shoe Killing me softly with Kung Fu Tempchin introduced Bradley to his manager, Eddie Wendrick, who soon replaced the Berman-Carson axis as Bradley's manager. Wendrick was convinced that Bradley could be a big star, given the right direction, and Bradley dutifully went about forming a back-up band, which became the infamous Joe Bummer and the Assbites from Hell. By 1976 the Assbites were ready to make their move, and Wendrick arranged for a series of showcases at L.A.'s

The audiences at these showcases went nuts, and people from the MCA and Arista record companies began negotiating with Wendrick for Bradley's anature "[The record execs] didn't know exactly what we were, but they liked us so much they said they'd sign us [to a recording contract] and then worry about what to do with us. But Bradley read the contracts and got cold feet. "[Signing them] would have been like getting married --

'You will appear where and when we say, you will cut so many sides a year.' I freaked. The whole thing spelled panic to me. So Bradley turned his back on both Wendrick and the music industry and headed back to Sun Valley, to which town his girlfriend

After playing solo in Sun Valley for a while, Bradley returned to San Diego in 1977 and called José Murphy's. When the club's manager agreed to hire him. Bradley quickly formed a band, the Wimps, with Glen McKinney and Greg White. Wanting to avoid the hassles involved in formal rehearsole, bradley told the musicians they'd rehearse at the bar just prior to performing. "I told them we'd pretend [the show] was a party and just go with whatever happened." The Wimps lasted only a year, but their lackadaisical performing style became a Bradley trademark

It went on to say that the band members would pledge their love as one, "together with our parents, Foodmaker, Inc., and Continental Restaurant Systems." Sanborn (who had earlier returned to San Diego from Sun Valley) introduced Dial-A-Brad, a pho number that fans could call to hear a different prerecorded message each day. One recording featured Sanborn reading a stock market report in which nearly every business term was a double entendre, her voice growing slower and suggestively breathier as the "report's" subliminal sexual message took effect. In another, Bradley unleashed a nonstop barrage of insults at the caller. But most of the "messages" were actually sketches played out by the couple: the gentleman diner in a beach-area seafood restaurant ordering the Baby Seal and Porpoise Combo from a dippy waitress: the

Soon after Dial-A-Brad was launched, Bradley was accosted on several occasions by people who had called the number and had found his called the number and had found his routines in bad taste. Before the year ended, Bradley closed the books on Dial-A-Brad, whose daily regimen was becoming "too much like a regular job." "I'd like another beer," said

Bradley as we continued our discussion. This next Michelob would be his fourth in less than an hour, a realization that made it seem an appropriate time to ask about his drinking, or at least his reputation for performing under the influence. His response partially debunked the myth. "You know, I really used to put it away," he admitted, "but I came to agree with Foster Brooks doing comedy is easier when you're sober. About 1977 I decided I was sober: About 1977 I decided I was going to stop drinking, and I staped on the wagon until 1982 or so." I found that hand to believe. "H's true," he said. "Most people who come to see me think that I'm totally 'faced,' but I'm usually not at all. Y 'see, I'll party like a monster, but as I get okler the hangovers get more nightmarish, so I seldom do that anymore, especially when I'm nightmarish, so i seldom do that anymore, cappcially when I'm working. I found that I did my best work when I wasn't drinking. When we recorded The David Bradley Story I was stone cold sober. To me, "You keep talking about work." I months, here you?" "No," he replied matter-of-factly, "Tho on my anneal vacation. But I'll be playing with O.D. Corral in a reunion concert on January 30 at the Belly Up Tavern, and I'll probably get back into regular work sometime this spring. In the meantime I'm getting pretty involved in my art." "Your art?"

"Yeah. This guy loaned me a book about drawing from the right side of your brain and it changed on ylife. I saw all these paintings he'd done and I decided I wanted to do that. So I practiced this right-brain stuff and started copying paintings in art books. Now I'm working on some paintings of my own." Bradley dug into a canvas bag and pulled out some snapshots, each of which depicted a different work-inprogress. Knowing Bradley, I thought that there was a good chance that I was being had until I saw his name printed in the lower right corner of a photo-realistic painting of a couple of beer-chugging teenagers poised defiantly on a rock jetty. The guy was (gasp) serious jeny, ine guy was (gasp) scroous about this. "Limited edition prints are big right now," Bradley continued, "so I'm going to do a series of really good paintings and have prints made. I'm still learning the language of the brush, but I think I can make a lot of money doing this." He caught the look on my face. "But don't worry," he added, "I'm not becoming an 'artiste.' I look at art as a means of making money at something fun." I was beginning to see the connection. "The [cornedy] shows, the Dial-A-Brad thing, the mailings - those were all just little ieces of art that I tossed out there I had fun and made a little money. And just because this stuff is m visual doesn't mean it's any different. The creative muse is always transferable." I had sought out Bradley because I feit that he represented the last of a dying breed — the indefatigable boor, the gross-out king, the playground trickster, the "bad playground trickster, the "bad influence" our parents were always trying to steer us away from, all rolled into one and gone public. And here he was talking politely about here ne was taiking poincy aroun sobriety, art, big money, and the creative muse. "Forget the beer," I said, the disillusionment welling inside me. "I think I'm going to need a real drink."

SAN DIEGO CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

The San Diego Chamber Orchestra continued its inaugural season last week with concerts at Sherwood Hall and Fairbanks Ranch. The program ted of David Diamond's Rounds for String Orchestra. the Beethoven Eighth the Beethoven Eighth Symphony, and Paganini's Violin Concerto No. 2, with soloist Eugene Fodor. This is a lready the best local chamber orchestra San Diego has had (though it is not yet in a class with the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, which with reached, or the Seint visits regularly, or the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra, which has been here oncr). Conductor Donald Barra, armed with money and good judgment, assembled a group of San Diego's best musicians from the San Diego Symphony the university m

Diego musicians as Diego musicians as concertmaster Igor Groupman, cellist Thomas Stauffer, bass player (peculiarly denominated "brass" in the program booklet) Bert Turetzky, flautist Tal Perkes, clarinetist Marian Liebwitz, bassconist Dennis Liebowitz, bassoonist Dennis Michel, and timpanist Jon Szanto, are first-rate. In an amazingly short period of time, Maestro Barra has given these players unity and coherence: they sound like an orchestra, not merely an occasional pickup group Particularly admirable are the fiddles, always the tender spot in a chamber orchestra, where every error of intonation o every error of intonation or unpleasantness of tone is nakedly evident. It was almost as if to show off the high quality of the string playing that Maestro Barra selected the Diamond nices to benin this latest piece to begin this latest concert. It is a delightful composition, melodious, bouncy, tonal, diatonic, lucid, and thoroughly accessible: Diamond composed it expressly to supply Dmitri ulos with something Mitropoulos with somethin cheerful to offset the angstcheerful to offset the angst-laden twelve-tone works that the conductor had been performing to satiety. "Make me happy," commanded Mitropoulos, and Roundr is a work that can do just that for any listener even forty wars any listetter, even forty years after its composition. With their rhythmic vitality, bright tone, and clear textures, the string players under Maestro Barra captured the freshness and vigor of the composition, its essential American flavor: and if much of the playing seemed locked into a rather ced mezzoforte, that was due to Diamond's eupeptic and unromantic score rather than to any insufficiencies in the performance. The quality of the string

OUARTER NOTES

The quarty of the string playing was excellent throughout most of the evening, with the exception of some passages in the Paganini concerto, where the violins occasionally went widely off the track. This was perhaps their reaction to the solo work of Mr. Fodor, who, although h exhibited no problems of intonation, scarcely provided an inspiring model of violin-playing. The former rkind, who once sassily proclaimed (in his recital at San Diego State about a decade ago) that his reason for playing the violin was to make money. appeared well-matched spiritually with the vacuous ostentation of the Paganini work, even if its gratuitous technical demands seemed to tax his abilities almost to the breaking point. The only breaking point. The only reason to play this stilly stuff at all is to show off, and the soloist can do that only by executing all the flashy Italianate double-stops, harmonics, spiccatos, and left-hand pizzicatos as though they were easy as pizza pie, the If there had been some pressing necessity to perform this work, one might have put up with it for the sake of the suave and leisure-time amusement of a consummate virtuoso. Such is the playing, for example, of shapely conducting and playing. But if Maestro Barra wants to do a classical Salvatore Accardo in his Salvatore Accardo in his recording of the concerto. Mr. Podor, in contrast, gave the impression of heroic effort against overwhelming odds, of victory won through blood, sweat, and the constant risk of failure. The effortful quality of the denire of the homework the home of wants to do a classical symphony, Haydn and Mozart offer him a choice of close to 150 such works, all but a dozer of which are relatively unknown to the audiences for unknown to the audiences for which the San Diego Chamber Orchestra performs, and most of which can be profitably played by a group of this limited size. Indeed, the chief problem with this ratice pengoins the failure. The effortful quality of the playing, the heavy bow arm, the raucous, edgy timbre, the habit of starting all extended notes with a deat tone and then revivifying it with a wide, loose vibrato — it was like listening to the breathing of a runner in the last stretch of with this series remains the programing. Why should a local chamber orchestra, even though a good one, play familiar works better suited to the San Diego Symphony? Why should something of such marathon. Mr. Fodor won the race, all right, but his Paganini performance was distinctly performance was distinctly lacking in sprezzatura, that aristocratic manner of doing the most difficult things with the appearance of a casual afterthought. The final work on the program was the Bethaven minuscule intrinsic worth as the Paganini Second Concerto be performed at all? And why need the necessarily limited resources of such an orchestra be wasted on glitzy and expensive guest soloists? That money would be better spent on paying the orchestra's musicians more and on powiding the orchestra's program was the Beethoven Eighth. This was an ebullient performance, with tempos and phrasing beautifully judged by the conductor and played by the orchestra. The violins were providing them with extra rehearsals (this last being absolutely obligatory if the San Diego Chamber Orchestra is nce more in good form, and the wind players outdid themselves: the trio of the third ever to be able to compete with its Los Angeles rival) And if there must be a soloist, there movement, scored mainly for two horns and clarinet, was especially charming for its wit and rustic grace. But for all its musical excellence, one must express some serious are plenty of highly gifted musicians here in town - many of them in the chambe orchestra itself - who could express some serious reservations about the performance. This is late Beethoven, however much its spirit may resemble that of the Eighteenth Century. It does not sound right with the limited forces of a chamber orchestra. Due strings as a whole set too do a far more musicianly job than Eugene Fodor did.

IEW MUSIC COLLOQUIM The Center for Music Experiment at UCSD continued its series of colloquia on contemporary music with a discussion last The strings as a whole are too weak to balance the wind and timpani; the lower strings (a mere three cellos and a single bass) are far too weak to balance the violins and violas.

composers and performers. David Antin was the moderator, and the other noterator, and the other participants were Roger Reynold (composer), Ed Harkins (trumpeter), and Phil Larson (vocalist); composer Robert Erickson could not attend because of illness. Mr Erickson was present in spirit, nevertheless, for Mr. Harkins offered a detailed analysis (and partial performance) of the composer's Kryl (1977), a work on which the two musicians collaborated in an intimate way The piece, which takes its ne from a famo player, originated in Mr. Harkins's demonstration to the composer of his repertoire of unusual sounds (the trumpeter is one of the current masters of his instrument's avant-garde possibilities). Structured improvisations by Mr. Harkins led to preliminary notation by Mr. Erickson, then to some fifty performances in the process of which the mu continued to change and develop, and finally to a ess of which the music precisely notated published score, in which the comp pitches and rhythms are supplemented by dynamic indications worked out by Mr. composing his setting (for live Harkins. A highly collaborative work, in short, and one which Mr. Harkins, and taped voice) of a poem by Borges, Mr. Reynolds kept constantly in mind the sounds of Mr. Larson's voice, which through repeated performance has made very much his own (only one other trumpeter has ever played it). The excerpts he had heard in various performances of avant-garde vocal music. But his aim in this performed by Mr. Harkins at last week's colloquium revealed a jazzlike bravura work was apparently not a demonstration of the singer's fabulous mastery of unusua sounds but rather a work with the air of improvisation, its center of interest the exploration of the dramatization of the poetic text and an elucidation of its inne and an elucidation of its inner meaning. The subject of Kryl is the trumpet itself, the subject of The Pulace is the Borgesian experience of vertigo in a vast, incomprehensible, mysteriously threatening world. The terrescience is instrument's technical resources: microtonal intervals, glissandos, interpolated vocal notes. rhythmic beats on the valves treated as percussion sounds, and the snorting low notes known as pedal tones. All this world. That experience is conveyed through the tapes recitation of the poem in a was in the service of a dazzling was in the service of a dazzling exuberance, mirroring in a new and experimental idiom the high-spirited gaudiness of jazz riffs or that old cornet favorite, Carnival in Venice. Mr. Harkins played the excerpts with - num intended voice virtually devoid of emotion, the background presence of drones or pedal points developed electronically out of the voice (like the cosmic hum of bleak interstellar space), the dizzying rotation of the sound around with - pun intended -breathtaking skill. The interaction of Mr. the performing space, and -above all - the keening lamentation of the singer, with Reynolds and Mr. Larson in the creation of The Palace was less complex and less a matter of its disconcerting leaps from direct collaboration. In elaborate ornamentation and its unintelligible treatment of fragments of the text until the very end of the piece, when words finally emerge from the almost consonantless ululat The effect, in Mr. Larson's ess ululation astonishing (and doubtless definitive) performance, is one of unspeakable sadness, loneliness, and hopelessness: loneliness, and hopelessness: the Arab father wailing over his slaughtered children and destroyed camp in the silent desert, or the human spirit wandering disconsolately through a never-ending palace of the impediate of the imagination that refuses any spiritual resting place. A stunning composition, stunningly performed.

and clarinet soloist in last week's San Diego Symphony concerts. He was more playing the Weber Concerto No. 1 with agility and vigor in a foursquare, brazen, but dramatically effective manner. This is a highly operatic work, and Mr. Pay's clarinet playing in it reminded me of tenor Mario del Monaco's singing in Italian opera: a bit coarse Italian opera: a bit coarse, lacking in nuance, but so strong and self-confident as to be irresistible (up to a point). The orchestra in the Weber was nominally conducted by the soloist, but in actual fact it was scarcely conducted at all. It is a scarcely conducted at all. It is a tribute to these fine musicians that they kept together with such discipline — but in the nature of things this meant mainly keeping strict time which added further to the performance's unsubtle quality As a conductor, Mr. Pay As a conductor, Mr. Pay proved dully competent, which was not enough to make the performances of the Mozart Serenade No. 10 or Copland's Music for the Theater come more than istermittently alive. The Mozart used the new citizen based on the edition based on the composer's autograph score, but the numerous interesting differences from what lovers of differences from what lovers o this masterpiece are used to were rendered more or less moot by the unimaginative conducting, which was short on resilience and wit. The Copland was welcome because it is so artfully crafted and so reliders reforment. The seldom performed. The orchestra played brilliantly, but Mr. Pay seemed somewhat at a loss when confronted with the composer's jazzy, playful idiom

If the Chargers are ever going to get anywhere near the Super Bowl, the changes need to start now, and they need to start at the top.

BY JOHN D'AGOSTINO

I received a Christmas card this year from Alex Spanos. Oh, I know that it wasn't really from the newest owner of the San Diego Chargers; it was a "form" greeting card identical to those computer-addressed and bulk-mailed to all 50,000-plus season-ticket holders. But it was a nice card, and it made me feel a mite with the season of the season feel a mite guilty because I hadn't even considered sending one to Spanos. Of course, if l had cared enough to send the very best, it would have been more appropriate to send that the Stockton-based developer a sympathy card, one of those somber-hued creations on which amber sunlight streams through a window to form a cross on a wall, and inside of which a verse begins with, "When words alone cannot console" You see, I'm feeling sorry for Spanos these days. A year ago at this time, the multimillionaire was close to realizing his ultimate adult fantasy - ownership of a professional football franchise. And now on the heels of his first, traumatic season as chief steward of the Chargers. Spanos must be feeling a little like the guy who won the catering contract on the Titanic.

the Titanic. Blinking through a veil of tears as he tries to cssess the 1984 season, Spanos has to wonder what he'd done to deserve has to wonder what he d done to deser-so much fun. A losing record, disgruntled players, confused coaches, team drug problems splashed through the nation's press, dwindling crowds at the stadium - could this be the same

Chargers team that had won onal championships in 1979, 1980, and 1981? Well, no. Spanos bought a Chargers team in de Klein, one so thoroughly dismantled by its previous owner that you'd think it had been left on a New York City street overnight. One can only hope that Spano's decision to purchase the Chargers was made from the heart, and not intended to demonstrate his business acumen. The sum Spanos paid to sit in the owner's box at the stadium was enough to secure title to several Bel Air mansions, but what he got for his millions was a fixer-upper in Mission Valley that's only a reprieve away from the bulldozer. In the aftermath of the team's second consecutive dreadful season, and taking a realistic look at the improvements that will be necessary if the Chargers are ever to regain their respectability, Spanos's $40 million purchase price is beginning to look more like a down payment. Spanos, then, can be excused the pained expression and somewhat testy temperament he displayed toward the end of the campaign just completed. In fact, both would have enabled him to vment, Spanos, then, can be excused end in rather nicely with tens of thousands of Chargers fans who by season's end had come to anticipate home games with the trepidation usually eserved for visits to the proctologist Long-time Chargers fans can view the team's problems from a slightly different perspective. Looking at the team that just finished a season with seven wins and nine losses, anyone who has been a fan for more than ten years feels. een waves of na between waves of nausea, an werwhelming sense of deja vu. In the early Seventies, the Chargers had an absentee owner (Eugene Klein was then living in Beverly Hills), a terrible team, widely publicized drug scandals, and a where public recording scaladars, and a growing reputation for making horrendous trades. To give you an idea of how had things were, for example, in 1973 — the year christened "The Nightmare Season" by the local press — the Chargers were coached by a man named Harland Svare, were routinely ourdrawn at the turnstiles by the San outdrawn at the turnstiles by the San Diego State Aztecs, and finished with a record of two wins, eleven losses, and record of two wins, eleven losses, and one tie. Things weren't quite as bleak a decade later, but in 1983 the Chargers did find themselves on the down side of what had apparently become a ten-year cycle – losing ten of sixteen games, outdrawing the lowly Aztecs only by default, having players' drug problems exposed in the national media, and reestablishing their penchant for making mind-numbingly bad trades. As to the last the worst had earlier disposed of All-Pro defensive end Fred Dean, who had been the cotter pin that held together one of the fiercest pass rushes in the NFL, and All-Pro wide receiver John Jefferson, who, in answer to a question about his former team shortly after his trade was announced, said, "The Chargers are talkin' Super Bowl, but hey ain't goin' nowhere." At the time, Jefferson's remark seemed like a textbook example of sour grapes, but his words have since fermented into what for the Chargers is the bitter wine of prophecy What lefferson had come to realize is that in contrast to such NFL owners as San Francisco's Edward DeBartolo, Jr. Pittsburgh's Art Rooney, the L.A. Raiders' Al Davis, Washington's Jack Kent Cooke, and Miami's Joe Robbie, Klein's bottom line was not winning, but net profit. Jefferson is no Rhodes scholar, but it didn't take a genius mentality to figure out what was going on when, after the championship seasons of 1979 and 1980, Klein began tampering with the merchandise Assured of capacity crowds at San Diego Stadium for years to come, Klein made the only moves that could improve his bottom line -- he traded away star players who wanted more money and he raised ticket prices to Chargers home games. Klein knew that if the suddenly games. Klein knew that if the suddenly compromised Chargers began losing their death grip on the division flag, their slippage could always be blamed on poor officiating, key injuries, and "the breaks of the game." Measurwhile, the breaks of the game." Measurwhile, and fans who had become hooked on the "Frightenin" Lightnin" would stick around ai teasa couple more years (or, and at least a couple more years (or. as it turned out, until Klein could make a 400 percent profit on his initial investment by selling the team). The hated, arch-rival Raiders had long boasted of their motto, "Commitment to c," and by 1982 the Chargers had one of their own: "Commit had one of their offs: "Communent to Mediocrity". This was Klein's legacy. Just how bad is the situation that Spanos inherited? Let me count the ways. Management. On each of those numerous occasions during the 1984 season when inept play on the field prompted fans at San Dir," or Stadium to juin in a heart, chorus of Lows. It. join in a hearty chorus of boos, it ned to me a clear case of misdirected antipathy. The boos should have been aimed not at the players, who at least were trying, but at the skyboxes occupied by the team's general manage tohnny Sanders, and his assistant, Pau Tank" Younger. Sanders and Younger, two-thirds of the management axis that once included Klein, have shown no signs of modifying the tight fisted, tightlipped methods they learned at Klein's knee. Their addlenated handling of top draftees such as Gary Anderson and Mossy Cade, their refusal to deal reasonably with underpaid eteran lineman Billy Shields (who performed in last Sunday's Super Bow wearing the 49ers' uniform), their isgraceful treatment of Charlie Joiner just prior to the 1984 season, their consistently faulty judgment in dealing with other teams, and their frequently caustic attitude toward inquisitive members of the press have cast serious doubts on their abilities to function on a par with other major-league manageria In his ill-conceived dealing away of front-line players either in return for athletes of questionable talent or motivation or for midlevel future draft picks, Sanders alone has given new caning to the term "trade deficits." It meaning to the term "trade deficits." It may take the team years to undo the damage wrought by Sanders's squandering of the Chargers' personnel and draft resources. And according to a former Charger player who remains close to the team and who therefore meaned and any the team and the terms of the team and the team and the terms of the team and the team and the terms of terms of the terms of the terms of te requested anonymity, there is almost no love or respect lost between players and management — many on the team reportedly feel management is much more committed to saving money than to more committed to saving money than to building a wigner. If Spanos is of a mind to begin pruning his staff, he might consider starting at the top. Coaching. Don Coryell is a very nice man. Perhaps too nice. The head coach's steadfast refusal to address the real problem facing this franchise — namely. nanagement's inability and/or unwillingness to supply him with high-caliber athletes — paints Coryell as too much of a company man. Just once I'd like to hear Coryell admit that Sanders and Younger expect him to construct a deluxe edifice with B-grade lumber. instead of mewing about officiating. injuries, jet lag, disloyal fans, and the like. There have been rumors circulating lately that Coryell is feeling none too secure about his position these days, and that's a shame. If he had more say in the that is a share. If he had more say in the trading, drafting, and signing of talent — as much, say, as San Francisco's Bill Walsh has, for instance — Coryell might own two or three Super Bowl rings by now. There's little doubt that Coryell is an innovative and enormously dedicated coach, but he's shown himself incapable both of surviving mismedre as the fea both of working miracles with the personnel provided him by Sanders and Younger, and of speaking his true mind on the subject. As for Coryell's assistants, they are largely bound by the same limitations that impede Coryell, so it is difficult to assess their true worth. Three things that plague a generally poorly coached team, however, are sloppy play, enthusiasm that is inconsistent and fleeting, and a tendency to incur penalties by the enand the 1983-1984 Chargers were goilty on all three counts. (While watching their slapstick performance against the Seattle Scahawks on the Monday Night Football telecast of last October 29, 1 accidentally hit the remote-control button and sat through several minutes of Bloopers, Bleeps, and Blunders before realizing I was no longer watching the Chargers). A shakeup of a coaching staff frequently follows a lousy season, so it wouldn't surprise me if there are some changes in the officer. there are some changes in the offing. But any coaching changes will have little or no effect on the team as long as the front office and its policies remain Chandler seemed alienated and disenchanted throughout much of the 1984 season, and word is that he'll be traded (what else?) during the offseason. Unless the Chargers manage to replace him with an equally adept wide out. Chandler's absence will be another cruel blow to Air Coryell, which is still reeling from the shock of Kellen Winslow's potentially career-ending knee injury. If Winslow is unable to return to form, and if the aging Joiner chooses to hang up the cleats next year. Fouts's receiving corps will consist of the undeveloped Bobby Duckworth and Jesse Bendross, tight ends Eric Seivers and Pete Holohan, and whatever bargain-basement jock the shrewd wheeler-dealer Sanders can get for the multitalented Chandler, Aud since nning backs Buford McGee and the tiny James are no better than backups and drug-exiled Chuck Muncie's and drug-extrement by NFL commissioner reinstatement by NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle is no surety, Fouts may again be handing the ball to only one top-flight back, Earnest Jackson.

Fouts himself seems to have lost non-of his touch, but he'll be thirty-four in June, so the Chargers had better start looking for an eventual replacement Current back-up Ed Luther isn't it. Too often, a deep pass by Luther has the trajectory and hang-time of a punt, with the predictable result that a confused defender will signal for a fair catch before intercepting it. Lutter still hasn't learned how to throw the "soft" short pass, either, nor has he demonstrated any real leadership abilities. Like many Chargers fans, I find it baffling that the team still considers Luther its quarterback of the future (Luther is so popular with the locals that when he went down with an injury in the recent gune against Kansas City, the crowd cheered). The guy is not a first-string NFL guarterback, and Corvell's insistent arguments to the contrary are more indicative of the strain the coach has been under of late than of his knowledge of Luther's hidden abilities. The fans. The best and most obvious litmus test of a team's health is its fan support, and fan support for the Chargers has been eroding in cadence with the team's two-year slide into last place in their division. A couple of years ago, you couldn't get a ticket to a Chargers home game, and the thousand or so ticket holders who failed to show up for any given game were roundly booed in absentia by those who came This year the average no-show figure was more than five times that high, and whenever the no-show total was announced over the stadium public address system, people cheered. Thi past December 16, a Chargers record was set when 18,965 ticket holders felt they had better things to do than attend the team's last game of the season against the young and improving Kansas City Chiefs. Those 40,221 dichards who showed up must have second-guessed themselves — the Chargers lost 42 to 21 (at one point trailing 42-0). In a recent item in this paper, Rick Smith, the Chargers' director of public relations and former Klein apologist, was quoted as saying that he didn't expect that many season-ticket holders would choose not to renew for the 1985 season. We'll see. While it may not have been the merriest of Christmases for Spanos, it merriest of Christmases for Spanos, it should be pointed out that the problems facing him with regard to his new toy are not insurmountable. But their solutions will be expensive. Great sums of money must be spent before the Chargers can again expect to challenge their division rivals (to whom they lost eight of eight games this season). The Padres' front office has proven that intelligent

Last week I had some critical things to say about George Kelly, whose The Show-Off demonstrates the compromise of a se-rious theatrical talent with the shallow derious theatrical talent with the shallow de-mands of the popular theater, and the week before that I was even harsher about Neil Simon's Biotal Black. Roger Kanhner's The Benchwarmers, currendy at the Fistes Jönner Theatre, is a piece of popular theatrical entertainment that makes one appreciate Kelly and Simon.
