LIFE IS LOOKING UP
The pride and the pain of little people

As Judith Wilson opens the front door of her Chula Vista home, a miniscule Yokohama terrer barks and runs to her side. Next to Wilson, the terrier seems big as a Great Dane.

Wearing a girl's three-piece Adonie sweatsuit, marron skirt, and child's sandal, Wilson walks across the carpet and boosts herself into her husband's wing chair. The dog hops up and cuddles next to her. Blonde hair rolled in soft curls and her face visually levels, Wilson looks far younger than her fifty years.

HOMELESS WHERE THE HEART IS By PAUL GRENN

By 7:30 a.m. Wednesday, the last client is up and on his feet with a hot cup of coffee and a Seat of Salvation breakfast.

Tina McKee, 31, is a 17-year resident of St. Mary’s House. She’s been living there since she was 15, when her mother died of breast cancer. She had nowhere else to go, so she ended up at the Salvation Army and eventually moved to St. Mary’s House.

Tina now works part-time at a local fast-food chain and helps out at the shelter whenever she can. She’s been there for 17 years and says she doesn’t want to leave, because it’s her home.

SWIM HERE OFTEN?

By HEAL ANDERSON

As the sun sets over the Pacific Ocean, the waves roll in and fill the air with a gentle roar. For some, it’s a relaxing break from the chaos of daily life. But for others, it’s a place to escape and clear their minds.

Maya, 23, has been swimming in the ocean since she was a child. She says it’s a way to connect with nature and find peace.

Maya’s favorite spot is the beach near her home. She says she goes there every day, no matter what. She’s been swimming here for as long as she can remember.

BUILDING BUCKS

By KATHERINE ARNOLD

Construction crews are finally beginning to turn the stony, rocky lot of the old Bank of America into a bustling new office complex.

The project, which is expected to take two years, will feature a mix of office and residential space.

The first phase of the construction is scheduled to be completed in the fall of 2018.

MTBV’s troubles in the real estate market have not dissipate the demand for office space. The company continues to seek additional office buildings and the addition of new offices is expected to increase.

Specific proposals for the office buildings continue to be discussed, but no decisions have yet been made.

Check back for updates on the project.

THE INSIDE STORY

THE SPIRITED DEBATE AMONG ENVIRONMENTALISTS, HISTORIANS, AND OFFICIALS OVER THE FUTURE OF BALBOA PARK’S ADMINISTRATIVE BUILDING AND ITS POTENTIAL AS A CAFE AND NIGHTCLUB HAS BECOME A FOCUS OF LOCAL DISCUSSION. THE DISCUSSION CENTERED ON THE ISSUE OF WHETHER THE BUILDING SHOULD BE PRESERVED OR DEMOLISHED. SUPPORTERS argued that the building is a valuable piece of history and should be preserved. CRITICS believed that the building is outdated and no longer meets the needs of modern usage.

THE BALBOA PARK COMMITTEE WAS HELD DOWN TO TWO VOTES ON JANUARY 30, WITH ONE VOTE IN FAVOR OF PRESERVATION AND ONE VOTE IN FAVOR OF DEMOLITION. THE DECISION WAS MADE BY A SIMPLE MAJORITY VOTE, WITH AN ADDITIONAL VOTE TO BREAK A TIE.

THE INSIDE STORIES FEATURES INSIGHTS INTO THE HISTORY AND EFFECTS OF THE DISCUSSION ON LOCAL COMMUNITY.

“When you first meet another little person, you ask yourself, ‘Do I look like that? Is that really what I look like?’”

LOOKING UP

A Chiricahua, New Zealand native who is childhood friend, sings, tells stories, and created the Native American arts and cultural presentations, Wilson tells this story. "We went down to the river (New Zealand), and then went on a hike. We were eight years old. We had gone a long way, and then we saw this little girl who was laughing in the river and said, ‘Hi, what’s your name?’ She said, ‘I’m going to go home and eat some popcorn and see if I can find you.’"

Wilson, who now teaches at a school for the deaf, says she is grateful for the experiences she had growing up in a community that valued diversity and inclusivity. "It was a special place, and I hope they continue to be so," she says. "But it’s important to remember that everyone has a story to tell and that we all have something to contribute to society."

You must press the lever to get water. Your hands must be wet to get water. Your hands must be wet to get water. The sink runs into the church.

Martha was almost twenty-five years old, the first-born child of her parents. Her parents had lived in the Castro Valley for years. Martha was the oldest of their two children, and her parents had always been very proud of her. Her parents had raised her to be a strong, independent woman, and Martha had always been very grateful for their support.

Martha was a teacher at a local school, and she had been teaching for five years. She loved her job, and she was very good at it. Her students adored her, and she always felt a sense of pride when they did well in school.

Martha was planning to go back to school after her vacation, and she was excited to see her students again. She knew that they were all eager to learn, and she was looking forward to a new academic year.

Martha's parents had lived in the Castro Valley for years, and she had grown up hearing stories about the area. She had always been fascinated by the history of the place, and she was determined to make a difference in the lives of the children she taught.

Martha was passionate about her work, and she was always looking for ways to improve her students' learning experience. She knew that education was the key to a better future for everyone, and she was dedicated to helping her students achieve their full potential.

Martha was a kind, thoughtful person, and she was always willing to lend a helping hand. She was a role model for her students, and she was proud of the way they had developed into strong, confident individuals.

Martha's parents had always been proud of her, and they were looking forward to seeing her this weekend. They knew that she was going to be busy, but they were excited to spend some time with her.

Martha was happy to see her parents, and she was excited to spend some time with them. She knew that they would be happy to see her, and she was looking forward to sharing some stories from her adventures.

Martha was a remarkable woman, and she was proud of everything she had accomplished. She was a true inspiration to her students and her family, and she was a shining example of what could be achieved with hard work and dedication.

Mexico's two tequila dynasties have been bitter rivals for generations

BY NANCY CLEELAND

The 1927 romance of Maria Negri and Jean Negri-Mora led to a marriage and the birth of their sons, José and Emilio Zunda, who would later become the founders of the famous Zunda tequila dynasty. The marriage was not without its ups and downs, as Maria and Jean often clashed over their different approaches to business. Maria was more conservative, preferring to keep the family business small and profitable, while Jean was more ambitious and eager to expand. Despite these differences, the family remained close and eventually thrived under the guidance of their sons.

Jean Negri-Mora was the driving force behind the expansion of the family business. He was a master at making tequila and quickly gained a reputation as one of Mexico's best producers. His success allowed him to purchase a large estate in the heart of the tequila region, where he established a distillery and began producing his own brand of tequila. The Zunda family's success attracted the attention of other tequila producers in the area, and soon rival brands began to emerge.

One of the most prominent of these rivals was the family of the late Don Juan Suarez. Don Juan was known for his aggressive business practices and his willingness to use any means necessary to gain an edge over his competitors. He was not afraid to use his influence and connections to gain an advantage, and his reputation as a shrewd businessman quickly earned him the nickname "El Cazador" (The Hunter).

The rivalry between the Zunda and Suarez families reached a fever pitch in the 1950s, as each family worked to expand their business and gain more market share. The tension between the two families was palpable, and many in the tequila industry feared that a conflict between the families could lead to a devastating loss of business for all.

Despite the tension between the families, there was also a sense of camaraderie and respect for each other's success. The Zunda and Suarez families often collaborated on projects and shared information about the latest trends in tequila production. Their rivalry was not without its moments of friendly competition, as each family tried to outdo the other in terms of quality and innovation.

In recent years, the Zunda and Suarez families have worked to bridge the gap between their rivalries and build a more collaborative relationship. They have joined forces on several projects, and there are signs that the once-feared rivalry may be softening as the families work together toward a common goal.

The story of the Zunda and Suarez families is a testament to the power of tradition and family in the world of tequila. Through their ups and downs, they have continued to produce some of the finest tequila in the world, and their legacy will continue to inspire future generations of tequila producers.
Tequila

Tequila is one of the most popular alcoholic beverages in the United States. The production of tequila is concentrated in the state of Jalisco, Mexico, where the blue agave plant grows abundantly.

In the Casa de Cultura, a two-story tequila museum and winery, visitors can learn about the history and production of tequila. The museum features interactive exhibits, a tasting area, and a restaurant that serves dishes made with tequila.

The Intimate Distance Of Stanley Fried

Q: You've been published in the world-renowned theater magazine South Atlantic Review. How did you come to be a writer for it?
A: It's a long story, but I'll try to keep it brief. I started writing articles about the theater in college, and then I began to write for various local theater publications. Eventually, I was asked to contribute to South Atlantic Review.

Q: What are your upcoming projects?
A: I'm currently working on a book about the history of American theater, and I'm also planning to write a play about the early 20th-century theater scene in New York City.

Q: You're known for your vivid descriptions of theatrical performances. What's the secret to capturing the essence of a play?
A: It's all about observation and empathy. I try to put myself in the shoes of the audience and the actors to understand their experiences and emotions.

Q: Your writing appears to be very emotional. Do you base your style on your personal experiences?
A: Yes, very much so. I believe that the personal experiences of the writer are the foundation of great storytelling. They bring depth and authenticity to the writing.

Q: How do you maintain a balance between entertainment and criticism in your reviews?
A: It's a delicate balance. I strive to be informative and entertaining at the same time. I want my readers to enjoy themselves while also learning about the theater and the performers.

The New York School

Q: What's the secret to becoming a successful playwright?
A: First and foremost, never stop writing. Keep experimenting with different styles and techniques. And don't be afraid to fail. Failure is a necessary step in the creative process.

Q: You've written about the influence of European theater on American theater. How do you see this connection in your own work?
A: I've always been fascinated by the history of theater, and I've drawn inspiration from many different sources. The influence of European theater on American theater is evident in my work, as I've sought to incorporate elements from different traditions.

Q: Your plays often have a strong political message. How do you balance this with the entertainment value of the performance?
A: I believe that art and politics are inseparable. The best art is always political, as it reflects the society in which it is created. I strive to make my plays not only entertaining but also thought-provoking and socially relevant.
