“I’m going to die, and you’re not,” he said. “I love you — but I hate you.”

“I hate you,” she replied. “I hate you — but I love you.”

As they spoke, the room began to shake. The walls were crumbling, the ceiling was sagging. The two of them tried to hold onto each other, but the force was too strong. They were being pulled apart, their bodies stretching and tearing. They screamed, but no sound could be heard over the roar of the collapsing space. The room was consumed by darkness, and with it, the two souls that had once loved each other. The images of their former reality faded into nothingness, leaving only the memory of a love that had been love but was now forever lost.
REQUIEM

Lois, it was a day she had never known nor could ever have imagined. She was the only one who knew of the place. It was on a beach near the mouth of the river where the water was shallow and warm. Lois had been there before, sometimes to swim, sometimes to walk along the shore. But today was different. Today was her birthday, and she wanted to do something special.

Lois had always been fascinated by the idea of the beach. She had read about it in books and seen it in movies, but nothing could prepare her for what she saw as she stood there in the shallows. The water was crystal clear, and you could see the sand beneath it. Seals played in the shallows, their bodies glistening in the sun. And then there was the noise. The sound of the waves crashing against the shore was like a symphony, a melody that filled her ears and lifted her spirits.

Lois sat down on a beach towel and took off her shoes. She kicked her feet in the water, feeling the coolness against her skin. It was so refreshing. She closed her eyes and let the sun warm her face. She could hear the sound of the waves in the background, and it was as if she was the only person in the world.

Lois smiled to herself. This was exactly what she needed on her birthday. She was going to spend the day at the beach, just her and the waves. She felt a sense of peace wash over her, a sense of freedom. This was her day, and she was going to make the most of it.

Lois leaned back against the sand, feeling the warmth of the sun on her skin. She closed her eyes again, letting the waves wash over her. She could hear the sound of the seagulls in the background, and it was as if she was on a different world.

Lois opened her eyes, and she saw something that made her heart skip a beat. There was a group of people gathering on the shore, and they were carrying surfboards. Lois had never seen anyone surf before, and it looked like a lot of fun. She watched as they took turns riding the waves, and it was as if they were dancing with the water.

Lois stood up and walked towards the group. She couldn't help but smile as she watched them. She was going to surf, she just knew it. She was going to make this her birthday gift to herself.

Lois walked up to the group, and they welcomed her with open arms. They showed her how to put on her wetsuit and how to get on the surfboard. Lois was a quick learner, and she picked it up right away. She rode her first wave, and it was like nothing she had ever experienced before.

Lois rode wave after wave, feeling the rush of the water as she cut through it. She was in heaven, and she didn't want it to end. She rode her last wave, and she felt a sense of peace wash over her. She had never felt so alive.

Lois walked back up the beach, her hair wet and her clothes clung to her skin. She was exhausted, but she was happy. She had found something that made her heart sing, and she knew she would come back for more.

A Catholic hospital is bad enough, but going out in a fleur-de-lis-patterned nightgown is no class at all.
I saw no point in crying, but quietly — no sob, no visible anguish — I was crying.

As for his ashes, just say you're emptying the car ashtray.

"For the most part, they're just people, and they can't carry the only symbols of the dead. All of us, in our time. I am only a ghost girl, not a real person."

I understood, and I felt sad. I wanted to say something, but I knew I couldn't. I just held her close and cried with her.

I wondered what it was like to be a ghost girl. I wanted to be a ghost girl. I wanted to be part of something bigger than myself. I wanted to make a difference, to be seen, to be heard.

I knew I would never be able to fully understand the pain of being a ghost girl, but I wanted to be there for her, to offer her a shoulder to cry on, to be her friend.

I looked up at her, and I saw the light in her eyes. I saw the hope. I saw the pain. I saw the love.

And I knew that I was going to be okay.

I was going to be a ghost girl.

LAST CHANCE BEFORE PRICES INCREASE!

For had I been alone, my shock and rage and despair would have been acute because my friends, my companions, a hand placed on my shoulder. But I was not alone.

It is not that no friend is to me more necessary, or indeed to any man, than I would be present when a human being is about to commit an act of treachery or cruelty. But what if I were the only one to speak? How much I would prefer to be present in that crowd of people, to have someone besides me to care for me, to have someone besides me to care for her! But it is not necessary to be present in order to have someone beside one...
Dr. Kenneth Gross is in the tattoo-removal business, and many of his patients are juvenile offenders.

By Jacqueline Shevlin

What are you looking at?

Seventeen-year-old Dan Brown is the boy who removes tattoos. His friends call him "Mr. Skin," and his digs are in a converted garage in the city's south side.

"Nothing," he squawks, dropping the open book down in the trash can. "I'm just waiting for my next tattoo."

"What's next?" I ask him.

"Ah, that's the secret," he grins.

"tattoo-removal surgery."

Dr. Kenneth Gross is a 51-year-old dermatologist with a tattoo-removal business. He's been in his field for 30 years, and this is the only work he's ever done.

"It's not a job," he says. "It's a passion."

"What's a tattoo-removal surgery?"

"It's a surgical procedure to remove tattoos. It's like a tattoo but it's done with a laser."

"How does it work?"

"The laser is used to break down the ink in the tattoo. The ink is then absorbed by the body and the tattoo is removed."

"How long does it take to remove a tattoo?"

"It depends on the size of the tattoo. Some tattoos can be removed in a single session, while others may take several sessions."

"How much does it cost?"

"The cost varies depending on the size of the tattoo. The procedure can cost anywhere from $500 to $5,000."

"Are there any risks involved?"

"Yes. There is always a risk of scarring, infection, and pigment changes."

"Are there any other tattoo-removal methods?"

"Yes. There are other methods, such as dermabrasion and laser tattoo removal. However, these methods are less effective and can cause more long-term complications."

"What is the demand for tattoo-removal surgery?"

"It's growing. More and more people are looking to get tattoos removed."

"How do you feel about the tattoo-removal business?"

"I love it. It's a great way to help people."

"What do you think about the tattoo industry in general?"

"I think it's great. It's a way for people to express themselves."

"What do you want to be when you grow up?"

"I don't know. But I do know that I want to continue helping people."

"What do you do in your free time?"

"I like to paint and play golf."

"What's your favorite tattoo?"

"I don't have one. I just like them all."

"What's the most interesting tattoo you've ever seen?"

"I don't know. There are so many great ones out there."

"What's the most challenging tattoo to remove?"

"It depends. Each tattoo is different. Some are easier to remove than others."

"What do you think about tattooing in general?"

"I think it's a great way to express yourself. But it's important to think about the long-term consequences before getting a tattoo."

"Go ahead, lend me, I'm afraid I'm not being read as a poet..."

"But... but..." she stammered, her eyes glistening with unshed tears. "I didn't mean to intrude. I just..."

"I'm sorry," the poet interrupted, his voice filled with compassion. "I didn't mean to hurt your feelings. It's just that..."

The poet closed his eyes, his hands clasping the pages of his manuscript. Then, he looked up, his gaze meeting hers. "I understand what you're going through. I've been there myself."

"What do you mean?" she asked, her voice barely above a whisper.

The poet hesitated for a moment, then spoke. "I've written about love and loss, about the pain of rejection. It's not easy, but it's a part of life."

"But..."

"I know what you're feeling. I've been there before."

"But you're a poet..."

"And I've felt the same pain."

"But..."

"I've been hurt, just like you."

"But..."

"And I've written about it."

"But..."

"I understand what you're going through."

"But..."

"I've been there."

"But..."

"I'm sorry."
It's Oral Roberts Night. And if the Padres aren't on top by the first inning, all the bases will be called home.

BY TOM AGOSTINO

San Diego Padres fans, it's time to wake up and smell the baseball. This is Oral Roberts Night. The Padres have awoken at last after the July 4th break to give our community a much-needed jolt. This isn't your typical Memorial Day break; this is Oral Roberts Night, the Padres' annual event to remember Oral Roberts, the legendary basketball coach who mentored the Padres to greatness.

Odds are, you're not too familiar with Oral Roberts, the man who led the Padres to their first World Series championship in 1984. But let me tell you, Oral Roberts was a man of many talents. He was a basketball coach, a teacher, a writer, and a lover of life. He was also a man who loved the Padres and wanted to give back to the community that had given him so much.

Oral Roberts Night is a night to remember. The Padres will be wearing special uniforms, and you'll see Oral Roberts' name all over the ballpark. The Padres will be playing their best game of the season, and you'll see Oral Roberts' spirit all over the field.

The Padres have been in a funk lately, but Oral Roberts Night is a night to remember. The Padres will be playing their best game of the season, and you'll see Oral Roberts' spirit all over the field. This is a night to remember, and you won't want to miss it.
