STORY BY Judith Moore
Dear Matthew Alice:

I hope you had a successful day of shopping. I must admit, the Westfield UTC mall in San Diego is quite a place! I've been there a few times and it never fails to impress. It's great to see so many different stores in one place. Are you enjoying your day out or are you feeling a bit overwhelmed by the choices?

Best regards,

Dear Matthew Alice:

I have decided to take a break from work and go for a walk on the beach. It's such a beautiful day out and I think it's important to take some time for oneself. I hope you're enjoying your day as well. If you need any help with anything, feel free to call me.

Best wishes,

Dear Matthew Alice:

I hope you're having a good time in the mall. It's always fun to see new people and stores. I'm sure you'll find something interesting to buy. If you need any recommendations, I'm happy to help.

Best wishes,

The place is kid heaven. They roam around in packs from one house to the next, stay over, forage, run mostly naked in the summertime, cruising up and down the lake and back. So it didn't take long until the whole idea got globalized. You get one kid, you get 'em all; what counts is that they're all fed, reasonably clean, and loved.

Your产生, text, and setting is...
I ran inside, into the kitchen, where two feet of blue flame danced atop the stove. I grabbed the saucepan by the handle and swung the works, fire and all, into the sink, flipping the pan over to smother it.

It's a generous flip of the spatula that lands our sitter, a stew as thick as stew, and any of the plates that would have been broken with a solid blow to the floor. And yet, with a mere flick of the wrist, the contents of the saucepan are flung into the sink, where the fire is snuffed out. The saucepan is a weapon, or so it seems to me. The woman who owns it is a warrior, a fighter, a survivor—just like me.

The saucepan is a weapon, and it's mine. I use it to defend myself, to protect my family, to keep them safe. It's a powerful tool, one that I never thought I'd need to wield. But now, with my life in danger, I turn to it for refuge.

Out on the driveway, I stood with my wife and child, realizing, as if for the first time, just how tenuous these things we call homes really are.

Anything done to improve the appearance, structural soundness, or livability of this house will eventually be far too much. Someone, don't you see, will someday order the property razed. The land is worth too damn much.

And yet, even as I write these words, I feel a sense of relief. For in the end, it doesn't matter. What we have is gone, but we are still here. Together, we will find a way to survive, to thrive. And in the end, it will be enough.
"The Marine Corps had a rule that its officers had to be at least 6 feet 8 inches tall. Krulak . . . got a friend to whack him over the head with a board, hoping to raise a 1 1/2-inch bump."

"Was this tale true?"

"It's true. It was an oak board. I remember it very well."

Under enemy fire, [John] Kennedy's boat came alongside the craft and held the torpedo boat fast to allow Krulak's wounded Marines to board. "And Geney took the boy who was badly wounded aboard. He died in Kennedy's bony on the PT boat."

"You must realize that for the boys at the very bottom, war is a very hard thing. There is no such thing as lighting halfway. They light flat out when they light at all."

"The contemporary Marine is] good. No question, good. All that we have to do is to validate his quality is a war. I don't hope there will be a war . . . But you can't be dead sure about what you say about a fighting man until you see him fight."
