I Ran Drugs For Uncle Sam

Map Points and Secret Moves of the Contra War

The DC-3 airplane, heavily guarded by ununiformed Panamanian soldiers, sat on the far side of the jungle clearing at Poonome, 60 miles southwest of Panama City. Its cargo doors were wide open and chained tight against the foliage. The right engine idled slow and rough, the left engine was shut down for the loading operation. Soldiers in two Jeeps outfitted with 50-caliber machine guns guarded the plane five and all. One gunner trained his weapon on the loading crew; the other 30-cal was pointed at the cockpit and the unarmed American flight crew.

BAG DOG AT WELLS PARK?

By Joel Callen

It's summer time, and the smell of burnt meat wafts through the neighborhood. A black dog is lying on the ground, seemingly asleep. But as you get closer, you notice that the dog is actually dead. How did it happen?

Some neighbors believe that the dog was hit by a car. Others say that it was killed by a group of kids playing with a stick. No one really knows for sure.

The neighborhood is in mourning. People are gathering around the dead dog, offering words of comfort to each other. The police have been called, but they are not expected to do much. This is a typical occurrence in the area.

The next cloudy moment, the gun was fired and a noise friendly, beautiful, swiftly, perpendicularly far away...

The once heavily guarded and fenced-in Wells Park is now a free-for-all playground. Children and adults alike can be seen running, jumping, and playing in the grass and on the playground equipment. No one seems to mind, and the park has become a new community gathering place.

The once isolated and neglected Wells Park is now a thriving community center. People of all ages come to the park to relax, play, and socialize. It has become a symbol of renewal and hope for the community.

THERED AND THE RED HOOD

By Paul M. Smith

At first glance, the Red Hood seems like a typical superhero. He has a cape, a mask, and a trusty sidekick. But as you get to know him, you realize that he is much more than that.

The Red Hood is a man of great integrity. He never breaks his word, and he always does what is right, even if it means sacrificing his own happiness. He is a true hero, and people love him for it.

One thing San Diego has always been known for is the excellent quality and price of its beaches. But how do you decide which one to visit? Here are a few tips on how to choose the right beach for you:

1. Consider your budget. Some beaches are more expensive than others. Look for places where you can park for free and where the food and services are relatively inexpensive.

2. Think about the activities you want to do. Some beaches are better for swimming, while others are better for surfing or fishing. Choose a beach that offers the activities you enjoy.

3. Consider the weather. Most people prefer to visit beaches when the weather is warm and sunny. Check the forecast before you go.

4. Think about the location. Some beaches are closer to home than others. If you prefer to avoid driving long distances, look for beaches that are easily accessible.

5. Consider the amenities. Some beaches have facilities such as restrooms, showers, and playgrounds. Choose a beach that has the amenities you need.

A glass of milkshakes, a bag of义, and the accommodation of getting along with others seem to be the secret to San Diego's success. San Diego has always been a city that values community, and its people are known for their friendly, welcoming nature.

While the North Park neighborhood has always been a popular destination for visitors, the area has experienced some challenges in recent years. The city has been working to improve the neighborhood, and it is now a thriving community once again.

The electrical system is being upgraded for the installation of a solar array, a money-preserving plan that will reduce the energy cost for the community and create jobs for local residents. This is just one example of how the city is working to improve the quality of life for its residents.

The city is also working to improve the safety and accessibility of its streets. Bike lanes have been added to several areas, and the city is working to improve the safety of pedestrians as well.

The city is taking the lead in the field of sustainability, and San Diego is one of the greenest cities in the country. The city is also working to improve its public transportation system, making it easier for people to get around without relying on their cars.

San Diego is a city that values its community and its environment. The city is working hard to make sure that everyone has a place to call home, and that everyone has access to the services and amenities they need.

On Easter Saturday afternoon, I would clench my jaw in what I thought was a grimace -- or maybe it was a grimace of pure terror. But whatever the case, I would hold my breath and try not to cry. I was 8 years old, and I was afraid of the dark.

My parents had just moved into our new home in suburban San Diego. It was a large house with lots of rooms, but I didn't feel safe in it. There was something about the house that made me feel uneasy, and I couldn't put my finger on what it was.

One day, I was playing hide-and-seek with my new friends. We were running around the big living room, laughing and shouting. Suddenly, I heard a noise coming from the basement. It was a deep, eerie sound that sent shivers down my spine. I froze in my tracks and listened intently.

I couldn't bear to think of the dark basement. I knew there were monsters down there, waiting for me. I ran back to my parents and told them about the noise. They tried to comfort me, but I was too scared to listen. I wanted to go back down to the basement, but I knew I couldn't.

I hesitated to tell you, but it's true. How hurt we are when you are late, or if you call to say you can't make it.

I begged my parents to let me sleep in their room that night, but they wouldn't hear of it. They said I was a big boy now and could handle it. I didn't believe them, but I didn't argue. I just went to bed early and tried to forget about the basement.

The next day, I still couldn't shake the feeling that the dark basement was watching me. I couldn't stop thinking about it, and I was afraid to go down there alone. My parents tried to reassure me, but I knew they didn't understand.

I woke up that night with the fear burning inside me. I couldn't sleep, and I was too scared to go down to the basement. But I knew I had to, or I would never be able to face my fears.

I finally worked up the courage to go downstairs. I turned on the light and saw nothing but darkness. I took a deep breath and slowly made my way down the stairs. I was about halfway down when I heard a noise coming from the storage room.

I turned on the light and saw a small, dark figure moving slowly towards me. It was a monster! I screamed and ran back up the stairs, crying for help. My parents heard me and rushed downstairs.

They found me huddled in a corner, crying. They hugged me tightly and promised to never leave me down there again. I knew they were lying, but I was too scared to say anything.

I didn't have a night like that for a long time. I slowly started to overcome my fear of the dark. I learned to go down to the basement, and I even went down there alone sometimes.

Now, when I think of that basement, I smile. It was a scary time, but it helped me grow up. I'm glad I didn't let my fear control me. I'm a better person because of it.
You do not likely feel that aloneness as keenly as will an only child, a person born and reared in an only child's peculiar solitude.

When I was a child, I recall the feeling that I was an only child. It was a feeling of independence, of being unique and special. I had friends, but no siblings with whom I could share experiences. My parents were my only companions, and I was the center of their attention.

In contrast, my friends who were not only children often felt a sense of loneliness. They had to share their parents' love and time with siblings, and they sometimes felt jealous of their brothers or sisters. They wished they had a sister or brother to play with, to share secrets with, to help with homework.

As an only child, I could make up games and play alone. I could explore the world around me without fear of being judged or criticized. I could be as loud or as quiet as I wanted, without worrying about disturbing anyone.

But there were also drawbacks. I missed having someone to talk to about my day, someone to confide in. I longed for a friend to play with, to share my joys and sorrows. I felt isolated and alone, even though I was not.

In the end, I realized that being an only child had its own set of advantages and disadvantages. But it was a time in my life that I will always cherish, for it taught me the value of independence and self-reliance.

Northwest, Cody, Bob, Northern, and Western North...
Concertizing

BY JOAN D'AGOSTINO

Wearing clothes were too much of a hassle for me, so I tended to keep things simple. I'd wear jeans and a t-shirt, walking around in a bit of a daze. But one day, I met a group of people who were doing something different. I was amazed at how they could pull off such a simple outfit. I decided to try it out myself and was really impressed by the results.

In the Bandbox, Johnson looked at his clothes. He had a pair of jeans with a ripped knee, a t-shirt that said "I Love Rock & Roll," and a pair of Converse sneakers. He was wearing his hair in a messy bun and had a beard. It was clear that he was a rock musician.

The walls of the concert stage were covered in posters and flyers. The band was playing its first show of the tour. Johnson was on stage, playing his guitar. The audience was cheering and clapping. Johnson smiled and nodded in approval.

"I've been playing guitar since I was a little kid," Johnson said. "I started playing with my dad in the basement when I was ten. We'd just jam out and have a good time."

Johnson's music was a mixture of rock and roll, folk, and blues. He had a strong voice and could play the guitar with ease. The audience loved his performance and gave him a standing ovation.

"I'm just a regular guy who loves music," Johnson said. "I've been playing for years and it's my life."

Johnson's music was a hit and the band was invited to perform in many more shows. Johnson continued to play music and his name became famous at the concert venue. He would go on to have a successful career as a musician. His music would continue to inspire and bring joy to people for many years to come.
Small World

BY DUNCAN SHEPHERD

The American landscape is a big place. It is a place of vast deserts, towering mountains, and windswept plains. It is a place of great beauty and diversity. And it is a place of people. People who live in the cities and towns, and people who live on the farms and ranches. People who work hard and people who play hard. People who are connected to each other in ways that are sometimes unexpected.

Just when you think you have got a pretty clear picture of how strange Kay is, along comes her younger sister.
