Do you believe in ghosts?

RAGSDALE GRANSBURY MADISON Del Mar

Yeah, I guess so, I used to have a ghost acquaintance when I a ghost acquaintance when I was a little kid. Her name was Rose. We had a song that we sang, and whenever we sang it, she came around. The name of the song was Poloce. It was a song we learned in aged. She had red hair and long fringermais. She was kind or ugh. We were scared of her, but well conjurt. Her up anyway, to scare our feireds. were scared of her, but we'd conjur-her up anyway, to scare our friends. We would sing the song, and then we'd think we could feel her around us—her presence. After about a year of conjuring her up, we pretty much gave her up. Rose always came-tout during the day, It was too scary at night to even think abcat her.

PICTURE STORY By the San Diego Historical Society

Isaac Palmer, grand marshall of San Diego's City Guard Band in 1889, strikes an appropriately authorisative pose. The band was available to play stirring marches or popular ballads at a moment's stotice, and virtually every grand or almost-grand occasion in the city during the latter years of the 1800s was accompanied by tunes from the ensemble. San Diego still has a City Guard Band.

A PRESIDENT BILLES the design of the Vietnam Memorial. I despised the groups who proposed adding tacky flags and statues to it, which would ruin its artistic integrity. However, as a former peace activist, ! was disappointed that the memorial honored only the 58.000 U.S.war-dead, an echo of the country's wartime xenophobia. Then, we worried only about "our boys," ignoring the massacre of Vietnamese civilians Luckily, as a politically enlightened artist, I was qualified to make a small correction that would not compromise the memorial. *
