According to His Needs

ACCORDING TO HIS NEEDS

In the lower northeast corner of Mission Park, Hemingway has the familiar image of the literary man. He is seated in a shaded corner, his face in profile, with a cigarette in his mouth. A white sheet with red letters is draped over his shoulders, and his wrapped hat is on the table in front of him. The image is one of his most famous, and it has been repeated many times in various forms. The words "According to His Needs" can be seen in the lower right corner, and the paragraph continues on the next page.

Suggestive Gesture

By Gina Arnold

The Golden Hall on the night of Bank's publication, the usual loud and talkative crowd had settled down in their seats. The lighting was dim, but the stage was brightly lit with spotlights. The audience was attentively watching the performers. At the far end of the stage, a group of dancers was performing a routine that consisted of swift, precise movements. The dancers wore elegant costumes, and their every move was synchronized. The music was a blend of classical and contemporary sounds, creating a captivating atmosphere.

The choreography was intricate, and the dancers moved with grace and fluidity. Their expressions were focused, conveying a sense of determination and dedication. The audience was captivated by their performance, and the applause lasted for several minutes.

The main dancer, who was clearly the star of the show, approached the center of the stage and began to dance alone. Her movements were mesmerizing, and she seemed to be in a state of total immersion. As she danced, she paused and looked directly into the eyes of the audience, creating a powerful connection.

The performance ended with a grand finale, and the dancers took a bow. The audience erupted into applause, and the performers walked off the stage, leaving the audience with a sense of awe and admiration. The performance was a testament to the hard work and dedication of the performers, and it was a truly memorable experience.
