"Jeez, Pop, did you get fired or something?"

The speaker is 17-year-old Patrick Daugherty. He's six feet four inches tall, lanky, slouching, already e chainsmoker, with thin, delicate hands, thick black hair, and large blue eyes. He is standing in the driveway of his parents' home on Panchop Drive, midway down the Eastern slope of Mittelix, having just returned home from Grossmont High School, where he is a solid D- student.

This was one of many houses Patrick would live in with his parents. Some he remembered vividly, this one he would: the scores of rose bushes his anche would his parents.

Miss U. also seens to generate more good stories than the conservative Miss A. pageant. One early Miss USA was revealed to be a twice-married mother of two, first wed when she was 14. PRESIDENT BILL

By Wm. L. Brown @1991

A Merica's educational system was modeled after the mass-production through the institution on a virtual conveyor belt, were uniformly "assembled" at each station, and passed out the other end as complete products like so many automobiles. With its emphasis on regurgitating data and passing standard tests, the system made few concessions to individuality or analytical thinking. It squelched most children's natural thirst for learning, into overachieving sycophants. My first reform was to make school attendance optional.
