Keep An Open Heart To Santa’s Visits by Joy Rice

An unusual gift if you are tired of reading the same old Christmas stories. This is a true account of a Christmas gift that was given by Santa to a very special child. It happened in a very special way. It is a story that will touch the heart of every reader. It is a story that will make you think about the true meaning of Christmas.

Jello Mold Opening Thanksgiving in my dining room is a large, shiny silver jello mold. I have used it many times over the years. It is still in perfect condition. I am willing to sell it for $20.00. Reg. $50.00 Sale price $20.00

Letters

City Lights Visit to Skid Row. On a recent visit to Skid Row, I was impressed by the number of homeless individuals I encountered. They were kind and friendly, and I left feeling grateful for my privilege of living in a place where I have access to so many resources. I believe that we should do more to support and help these individuals.

Tales of Loss and Devotion (Merry Christmas!) by Mary Ann

I lost my dog last Christmas, and I was extremely sad. I found solace in reading this book, which tells stories of people who have lost pets and how they coped with their grief. It was comforting to know that I was not alone in my grief.

READER’S PAGE

In the “Letters” section of the paper, a reader expressed concern about the lack of support for small businesses in our community. They wrote, “We need to support our local businesses, and we need to do it now.” I agree with this reader and believe that we should be doing more to support small businesses in our community.

Love Is The Law, Law Under Will by John A. Bailey

A fascinating book that explores the legal implications of love. The author delves into the history of marriage and the laws that govern it, and he discusses the implications of these laws on our society. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the legal aspects of love.

"It's not dangerous out there. We've had our own architects and engineers there, and it's safe."
The corporal had previously assured us that Al Capone had indeed built the old hotel and that some of the goats drank seawater.

After the corporal's assurance, we started drinking the seawater from the goats. The corporal told us that the goats were used to drink seawater in their natural environment. We found out that the goats were very used to drinking seawater and that it was a natural part of their diet. We were fascinated by the way the goats drank seawater and how they coped with the salty taste.

On our return to the hotel, we found that the corporal had built the hotel using materials that were locally available. The hotel was built using natural materials such as wood, stone, and sand. The hotel was a beautiful structure that blended seamlessly with the surrounding landscape.

The corporal also showed us the old hotel, which had been in ruins. He explained that the hotel was a historical landmark and that it had been abandoned for many years. The hotel was in a state of disrepair, but the corporal had started the process of restoring it. He hoped that one day it would be a beautiful place for people to visit and enjoy.

In conclusion, our visit to the Capone territory was an eye-opening experience. We learned about the history of the area and the role that Al Capone played in it. We were also able to experience the natural beauty of the area and the culture that had been left behind. It was a trip that we will never forget.

My father unwraps my mother's gift to him: it's an alarm clock. My mother unwraps his gift to her: it's an alarm clock too.

Christmas dinner this year was like no other. The house was empty except for my parents and me. They had invited all their friends to spend Christmas with them, but no one accepted the invitation. We had a quiet, intimate dinner, just the three of us. After dinner, we sat in the living room, drinking hot cocoa and talking. It was peaceful, almost surreal.

Christmas in my family is always special. We have a lot of tradition and the decorations are amazing. But this year, we decided to make everything more intimate. We didn't invite anyone else, just my parents and me. It was a way to slow down and appreciate each other's company.

A Bellyful of Buddha

BY JEFF SMITH

The Laughing Buddha, Orange County's premier Buddhist temple, is known for its charismatic leader, Master Kwan Chi, who has become a beloved spiritual figure in the community. His teachings are centered around the principles of mindfulness and compassion, which he imparts with humor and grace. The temple is also renowned for its beautiful architecture and serene gardens, creating a peaceful retreat for visitors. With many meditation classes and workshops, the Laughing Buddha offers a unique spiritual experience in a modern setting.

Imagine that I am a novel that has been translated into English from a different language. I contain a mix of dialogues, descriptions, and personal reflections. My core theme revolves around the exploration of human emotions and the complexities of relationships. Throughout the narrative, I challenge the reader to question their assumptions and confront the realities of life. My characters struggle with their own identities and the expectations placed upon them. They seek love and understanding in a world that often seems unforgiving. The setting is a city that mirrors the inner landscapes of its inhabitants, with its vibrant streets and quiet alleys serving as metaphors for the characters' journeys. The language is rich and evocative, weaving together elements of fantasy and reality to create a world that is both familiar and foreign.

THE PRINTS AND THE POPPER

BY JONATHAN KAYE

There is a note to me in the San Diego Tribune: "The prints are just like the paintings of van Gogh. The poppers are just like the paintings of Rembrandt." I am not sure who wrote this, but it makes me think of the day I met the couple. The prints were so great, and the poppers were so great, that I couldn't help but think of the day I met the couple. I was in a museum, and I couldn't believe how great the prints were. The poppers were just as great. The couple was great, and I was so happy to meet them.
