The Saucer Eye Orphans Have Lost Their Father

Eyes. Enormous eyes, the size of headlights. They belong to a woman, a very waltz-like woman, buttoned, a large tear spilling down her cheek. The wall has evidently wandered into an archetypal waltz: haute, here, a claustrophobic alley, she looks at the viewer with a pronouncement of abase.

Wacky WACs

By Margaret Shortman

We both in WACs, Company Officer Rose Wagner of the Woman's Army Corps, who's in charge of the WACs and who's been here for years. Miss Wagner is your type of woman who's been here for years. She's a fierce, no-nonsense type who won't take any nonsense from anyone.

The WACs are doing a wonderful job in the Pacific, and they're getting the respect they deserve. They're not just washing dishes and sweeping floors, they're working on important projects, like the D-day landings and the invasion of Normandy.

Miss Wagner is a fiery woman, and she's not afraid to speak her mind. She's a woman who knows what she wants and she gets it. She's a real leader, and she's teaching the WACs how to be leaders.

The WACs are doing a wonderful job, and they deserve all the respect they get. They're not just women, they're soldiers, and they're proving it every day.

Citizen KEANE

Come July, Walter will be forced out of his rented La Jolla cottage to make room for the landlord's vacationing children.

Walter Keane, left, and his wife Margaret Keane have been in the public eye for more than 30 years, as Walter Keane's wildly imaginative and often bizarre portraits of famous personalities have been the subject of much speculation and controversy. The couple, who now live in La Jolla, have been married for nearly 50 years and have two grown children, Susan and Jonathan. Their portraits have appeared in countless publications and have been exhibited in galleries and museums around the world. Walter Keane's portraits are known for their vivid colors and his use of exaggerated features, while Margaret Keane's work often features her signature eye, which has been a signature element of many of their portraits. The couple's unique style has earned them a loyal following and has made them household names in the artistic community.

Autobiography of a Baseball Man

The following statement of the memoir by The Real Life of Walter Keane, written by Walter Keane's mother-in-law, shows how his marriage to Margaret Keane affected his artistic career. Keane's mother-in-law describes how she encouraged her daughter to pursue her art and how she supported her through thick and thin. The memoir is a poignant reminder of the importance of family support in one's creative endeavors.
In 1964, when Walter Keane hired Tom Wolfe to write the introduction to his vanity art book project, Wolfe wasn't yet the white-suit avatar of New Journalism.

Walter set up a gallery in the San Francisco, where he was the name of a world-renowned art critic. He had met Wolfe in New York and had been impressed by Wolfe's writing. Wolfe had just published his first book, "The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test," and Walter was looking for someone to write the introduction to his book.

Walter and Margaret Keane, seated by swimming pool. Walter set up a gallery in New York and San Francisco, and the couple traveled extensively. Tom Wolfe was a frequent visitor to the gallery, and the two men became friends. Wolfe was fascinated by Keane's artwork and his life, and he agreed to write the introduction to the book.

The result was a unique collaboration. Wolfe wrote a description of Keane and his work, accompanied by illustrations of Keane's paintings. The book was a success, and Wolfe's introduction helped to launch Keane's career as an artist and writer.
KEANE

Wayne Newton flies from South Dakota to deliver an impassioned defense of Walter Keane, who, apathy aside, has often been characterized as the Wayne Newton of the art world.

Magazines Keane has written an autobiography to rekindle interest. He has now been the subject of three public debates in the past decade and he is coming to New York in a week for another debate. The debate will be held at the New York Public Library on April 26th, at 7:30 pm. It will feature a panel of experts, and the audience will have the opportunity to ask questions directly to Keane. This event is free and open to the public.

The New York State Historical Society will also host a screening of the documentary film "Wayne Newton: The Man Who Saved Walter Keane" on April 27th, at 7:00 pm. The film explores Keane's life and career as an artist and his influence on the art world. The screening will be followed by a discussion with Keane and the film's director.

When he arrived by Life-Flight helicopter, the trauma team diagnosed him as having suffered a fractured pelvis, ruptured bladder and spleen, broken legs, broken right arm, skull fracture, broken jaw.

The doctors' reports were alarming. When the patient's diagnosis was confirmed, he was transferred to the ICU. His condition was critical, and the doctors were concerned about his survival.

The patient, a young man, had been involved in a car accident while driving his motorcycle. He lost control of his bike and hit a tree, sustaining multiple injuries. The impact force was tremendous, and the patient was thrown from his bike, landing on the ground with force.

Richard: I phoned into the San Diego Reader at 9 a.m. The San Diego Reader phone matches ads are reviewed out of 100 calls.

Ellen: The first I was called, I was told that the girl in the ad was hoping to meet someone who was honest and reliable, and I did not think this was the kind of person I was. In the end, I decided to meet her.

Richard: I didn't think it was the best idea for me to meet someone who was dishonest and unreliable, but I decided to go anyway. I met Ellen at a coffee shop after work, and we talked for hours.

Ellen: I was not sure if I wanted to see him again, but I was interested in knowing more about him. We went to the movies and then to the beach, and I realized that I was interested in him.

Richard: I was so happy to meet someone who was as open and honest as Ellen. We have been together ever since that day.

Dutch Treat

REVIEW

One of the passions of the contemporary American theatre is to bring together, in one setting, all the elements that make up the essence of a performance. This has been the case in the recent production of "Dutch Treat" at the San Diego Museum of Art. The production was directed by Michael Counts, and it featured a talented cast that included some of the most respected actors in the region.

The play, written by John Guare, tells the story of a group of people who come together to form a small community. The characters are all struggling in their own way to find meaning in their lives, and they come together in order to support each other. The dialogue is sharp and witty, and the performances are excellent. The set design, by Mark Adams, is simple yet effective, and it helps to create a sense of intimacy among the characters.

The production was well received by the audience, and it received critical acclaim from many reviewers. Overall, "Dutch Treat" is a powerful and moving production that is not to be missed.

Last year alone, over 25,000 men and women in San Diego were handcuffed, booked, jailed, humiliated, and censured as a result of drinking and driving.

If that’s not your idea of a good time, call SOBER CHAUFFEUR.

We have the life saving alternative. Maybe you wouldn’t mind being fingerprinted and going to jail. Or having your car impounded and your driver’s license taken away. Or paying up to three times as much for a complete lounger when you finally get back. And that’s the government supplied blobbing in an accident where people are injured, or killed.

The problem with that alternatives are limited. You can try to designate a driver. You can call a cab. Or you can take the bus. But all those options take your time, your hotel, your life and the lives of your passengers.

No ‘morning after’ stigma.

In the steering, both you and your car are in the same place, ready to go. No delays or cab rides to get back for your car. No wondering if your car has been damaged or stolen during the night. No embarrassing explanations to friends or neighbors.

And best of all, no overnight in jail. The amazing about SOBER CHAUFFEUR is so simple, economical and sensible it, and why it might, start working for you.

WELL, NOW IT IS!
