Zeroed In On Meltzer's Bad Words I just finished. I can't say "reading" the article because I really didn't want to read it, really didn't want to read it, but it caught my eye as to the type of language that was in it. I scanned over three to four pages and zeroed in on the bad words that were in the article by Richard Metzer (Idly 30). It is probably the biggest piece of trash I ever read. I have lived with Marines all of my life and construction men, and I don't think I heard that kind of trash. Executive consenses of the second trash I ever fine for the second trash. Bay of

(continued from page 1) Les Earnest, who's now 87, went to work for the city in 1947, just as the city fathers were looking for something other than war production on which to base the local economy, and city planner Glenn Rick was dusting off a 20-year-old plan for dredging Mission Bay and transforming it into a tourist mecca. Earnest worked in the city's budget office throughout the 1950s, while the park's mas-ter plan evolved, the bond issues were passed, private property around the bay was purchased or condemned, and piece by piece the park took shape. After completing a six-month assignment to integrate the nascent park into the city administration, Earnest became acting Mission Bay director in 1959. The next year, he was also made director of the city's park and recreation department.

Earlier this summer, Earnest agreed to give a waterborne tour of the park he helped create. As we cruised in a small boat around Mission Bay, he told stories of how the park came to look as it does today. Inspecting the area with him was like test-driving a lovingly restored jalopy while the man who did the job rode shotgun.

As we floated into De Anza Cove, Earnest explains that the northeast corner of the cove's shoreline was filled in with mud and sand dredged from the bay. Once that was done, in about 1950, city workers began trucking sewage sludge and dumping it there as fertilizer. The main sewage treatment plant was then located on the shore of San Diego Bay, near the foot of 28th Street. The city had tried to dry the sludge at the plant and market it commercially as fertilizer, but that idea fizzled when the wind blew away most of the product. The city's plan B was to use the sludge as fertilizer in its parks. But some local citizens objected to the notion of dump ing sewage residue around Mission Bay.

"One day a guy came out to where the sludge was being dumped here and pushed the truck driver out of the way. He says, 'You're not going to dump that here,' and he tries to shut off the valve. The sludge was hauled in wet and spread out in furrows to dry. But as the guy tries to shut off the valve, he slips in the sludge and goes down in it." Earnest chuckles. "He never bothered us again "

Once the new sewage treatment plant began operating on Point Loma in 1963, the sludge fertilizer had worked so well in Mission Bay (the whole east side of Vacation Isle was fertilized with sludge) that an eight-inch pipe was extended from the plant down Rosecrans to empty on the south side of the San Diego River flood-control channel, where two settling basins were located near the end of West Point Loma Boulevard Later the line was extended across the channel to the newly created Fiesta Island.

The island's sludge beds were supposed to have been a temporary staging point for another attempt to dry the sludge and bag it for commercial use. That half-hearted effort died when the need for fertilizer in city parks could not keep pace with the sludge production of the fast-growing city. "I kind of thought we could keep up with it, but it didn't work out that way," Earnest remarks. "I never envisioned those mountains of sludge taking up such a large part of the island." In the new Mission Bay master plan, now in

fought us taking Another semi-permanent feature of Mission that bridge out, Bay - the De Anza mobile home park - also devolved from a good idea into a civic embarrassso the city had to ment. Now the dwellings are recognized as a draw up plans and violation of provisions the city agreed to when the State of California deeded its 2900 acres of Mission pay for the bridge Bay tidelands over to the city in 1945. The agreement prohibited any permanent residences on dedicated parkland. As we churn around De Anza Point and view some of the comically palatial "mobile" homes, Earnest relates how they came to be here.

In about 1950, he says, a Mrs. Marian an adout 1930, the says, a Mrs. Martant Marchant from Beverly Hills arrived at city hall and presented her idea for building a trailer park on De Anza Point. She had just completed a nationwide tour of mobile home parks, "and she decided this is what she wanted to do." One morning at nine a.m. she arrived at the council coning at nine a.m. she arrived at the council con-ference in which the city council members, the city manager, the city attorney, various staffers, and the press met to discuss that day's council docket. Earnest recalls. He remembers that her see-through blouses lended to rive the attention of the city fathers, as did her credit rating. When city personnel checked with the Beverly Hills bank, they were told that her credit was "unimited." It was the only time in my life "I eve ever seen a standard of the control of the control of the control "She made her pitch to the whole council, saying that leasing out this area for a trailer park would bring tourists to San Diego from all over the country. The connecti saw it as a way to get the bay off and running. She made a hell of an impression. But the council though she was talk would bring tourists to San Diego from all over the country. The connecti saw it as a way to get the bay off and running. She made a hell of an impression She the council though she was talk become permanent bousing."

Whatever impression Mrs. Marchant made on the council, it worked. She received a 50-year lease on 68 acres of parkland But as early as 1932, as the mobile home sites were being com-pleted, she indicated to the local care to persons who are interested in year-round residence here, not just a holdsky. Mrs. Marchard epslained." In subsequent years, the mobile home park be-came an tritant to many citizens, and the city made sure one section off it was set saide for only four-month recipiences. When the final exten-sion on the lease expires in 3005, the houses are

But several commercial leasees such as De Anza, Campland on the Bay, and Sea World ended up blocking public access to the shoreline. And even to-day, several homeowners along Sail Bay treat the pub-lic beach in front of their homes as private property. The contiguous footpath idea was a victim of private

Off to starboard is Campland, the pricey shoreside campground (as much as $50 a night to park an RV) that paid the city $772,000 in lease fees last year. In 1960 this area spent most of a year as a settling pond for raw sewage. "We called it Bean's Pond," Earnest explains. George Bean was San Diego

On that point, Earnest has some strong opin-ions. He has kept up on recent efforts to create a new Mission Bay master plan, and he doesn't like some of what he's seen — like the possibil-ity that De Anza Point and the Rose Creek outcity manager from 1957 to 1961. When the main sewer line serving the beach areas broke in the northeast comer of the bay, Bean decided that the effluent should be diverted into settling ponds on the mud flats at the end of Olney Street until the sewer main could be fixed. Decrepit sewage pipes continue breaking in the beach areas to-day, periodically rendering a waterski outing in bay waters a flirtation with hepatitis. Parts of the

Virtually all of the sand and silt dredged from the bottom of Mission Bay was redistributed elsewhere within the bay. Earnest says the only sand that was piped out of the park was a relatively small amount dredged from San Juan and Santa Clara Coves and dumped on Mission Beach.

n 1926 the state harbor board controlled the area covered by Mission Bay Park. In that year, the board made several 50-year leases around Sail Bay, then known as Crescent Bay, theorizing that the best way to develop the park was to let private property owners do it. The leases extended from the high tide line into the water a couple of hundred feet. "But all they did was use the leases to provide themselves pri vate access to the water," Earnest says of the leaseholders, About 1920, John D. Spreckels re leascholders. About 1920, John D. He also dredged a narrow channel from Bonta Cove south to where the San Diego River trackled into the ocean. Shortly after that, the private lease-holders extended the channel north into Sail Bay so they could sail their boats out to the sea. "I was the grim reaper," he recalls. "There was one guy in there who had about 17 acres, with pigs and a dog track. He never had clear title. And if your taxes were five years in Nobody really lought it."

And the Crown Point leaseholders were talking about building a hotel on the western shore, facing Sail Bay, Eamest says a hotel there would have caused a serious traffic problem and did not fit into the plans for the park. Like many of the leases, the Crown Point lease had not been kept current in payments to the state. The lease was held by Mr. CZ. Pease. The state of the plans for the park is the plans for the park. Like many of the leases, the Crown Point lease had not been kept current in payments to the state. The lease was held by Mr. CZ. Pease. Crown Point property owners. In 1945, as the city was endeavoring to pass the first $2 million bond issue for development of the bay, city staffers requested that the state refuse to accept. staffers requested that the state refuse to accept past-due rental payments on that lease. was notified that his lease was canceled for non-payment of rent.

According to Les Earnest, Pease sent in his back rent to the state anyway, and an unknowing clerk deposited it and brought the lease cur-rent again. Glenn Rick's book has a slightly different account. "[Pease] went to the State and different account. "Pease) went to the State and convinced it to accept payments bringing the lease up to date," Rick wrote. "In the meantime, the city had served notice on Mr. Pease that his lease was canceled. A court case decided in favor of Mr. Pease. It was reported that the mayor, on a visit to Sacramento, had a near fistfight with the state official who took the renal payment and put state official who took the rental payment and put the lease in good standing. "Earnest says that would have to be Mayor Harley Knox," as hort, stocky guy who' dru an dairy farm all his life." So the city was trumped. Eventually Pease Torottage around Crown Point, to Tuscon based hotel magnate Del Webb, the one-time owner of the New York Vankees, but by then only 17 years remained on the lease. Webb was determined to build a major hotel on Mission Bay, so the city cut a deal with him. He would get a 30-year lease in the east bay, and the city would byy out his in the east bay, and the city would buy out his Crown Point lease for $125,000. Webb agreed to the deal on January 21, 1960 — coincidentally, the same day Les Earnest was named Mission Bay Park director. Three years later he opened Del Webb's Ocean House, which was later sold to the

He believes that Point Loma and North Island were origi-nally islands, and the shoreline scalipoet back all the way along what is now the eastern edge of Mission bay and across the river to the area around Rosecrans and Sports Arena Boulevard. The ocean current circulate southward off what is now La Jolla, Pacific Beach, Mission Beach, is now La Jolla, Pacific Beach, Mission Beach, and Ocean Beach, and over time enormous sand bars accumulated in front of the sprawling San Diego River delta. When Junipero Serra arrived to establish the mission in 1769, the river was then emptying into False Bay. A major flood that these contents of the state of the that year carved a channel into San Diego Bay and diverted the river in that direction, demonstrating the alternating outflow that must have gone on for hundreds of thousands of years. Even-tually the buildup of river silt helped the ocean currents to find a foothold for creation of a strand of deep sand trending south from about where Pacific Beach Drive hits the beach. Similarly, the northward circulating currents outside San Diego Bay piled up sand that became the Silver Strand and turned what had been North and bays of Mission Bay Park, "We wanted to start with the best material we had to work with." Earnest explaints. So soil samples were taken throughout the bay, Testing revealed that all the good sane was deposited west of Ingarham Street, and everything else to the east was fine, muddy stil laid down by the San Diego River. Rose Creek, and Tecolose Creek, which drain 57 square miles of watershed. The first deeding contract was for the construction of Bahia Point, where the Baha Hotel is now located; creation of the western end of what is now Vasation list; and the purpose of the construction of De Anza Point. By that time the Army Cops of Engineers had completed construction of the south and middle jetties of the San Diego River flood control channel, using granite boulders from Mission Gorge. The north jetty, forming the entrance to Mission Bay, wasn't completed until 1950.

By 1956, when the third Mission Bay bond issue was passed by the voters, Earnest says people were starting to complain about having spent so much money just to move mud and water.

"All you could see was some fishing boats and "All you could see was some fishing boats and the dredges — there was no landscaping." The $5 million bond issue was originally intended to be spili, one half for more dredging and the other for landscaping. But with the end in sight for the dredging — the completion of Fiseta Island and the eastern shoreline — city engineer Ed Gabrielson had another idea. "Ed said, 'Let's do no bids." Eamest recalls, "titis job — what we can get for two and a half million — and a pro-posal for completing the rest of the dredging." A company from Sloust City, Jowe, that wanted to get a foothold on the West Coast, turned in a bid to do all the dredging, the whole thing, for a little over $5 million. So we took the bond money, added two or three hundred thousand more from capital outlay funds, and gave 'em the whole job. It saved the city several million follars." The city had paid 75 cents a cubic yard for dredging some parts of the bay, the $5 million bid worked. erty nad paid 75 cents a cubic yard for dreeging some parts of the bay; the S5 million bid worked out to about 35 cents a cubic yard, even though the Iowa company had their dredge towed down the Missouri River, the Mississippi, and through the Panama Canal to get to the job site in San

The dredging was completed by the end of 1961, but the park's landscaping was still missing. However, the next time the city went to the electorate for bond money, the $12.5 million request was defeated. This was 1962. "And several people weren't convicted we were making a park of it." Earnest remarks. "After spending 9 million, it still looked a mess." Four years

39 milnot, it still iooked a mess. Four years later, bonds were passed for improvements in all of the city's parks, including Mission Bay. Concurrent with the park's money troubles, the hydrodynamic patterns of the new bay began to reveal themselves. Tidal action ate away at some areas, such as the north end of Carmel some areas, such as the north end of Carmel Point, and sittled up others, such as the channel between Bahia Point and Vacation Isle. "We learned that if you have a sand beach, you need along slope, not steep, otherwise it will be wathed away," says Earnest. This was an early and coordinating problem with the beachfront behind the Bahia Hotel, fainty Wacation Isle. Ever stime the bay was completed, and has had to be dragged back up onto the beach to keep the perimeter road and landscaping from being undermitted. In his problematical in such a narrow channel. Similarly it was discovered that tidal action could crode sand from behind rock revertments. As we ease our boat along the western shore of could erode sand from behind rock revetments. As we ease our boat along the western shore of Vacation Isle. Earnest gestures toward the gray boulders lining that side of the island. "When the sand started disappearing from behind those boulders, we realized you couldn't just dump big boulders to protect a beach. You had to start with boulders to protect a beach. You had to start with smaller rock, like gravel, then bigger rock, then the boulders. The same thing happened when the north jetty went in alongside South Mission Beach. The sand started seeping through the jetty from South Mission. Eventually a large part of that beach would have been washed away, so in about 1961 we had to go in and pump grout and concrete down into the jetty."

Another kind of scouring resulted from the ricochet of wave and tidal energy as it bounds down the Mission Bay channel and strikes Hospitality Point, just below the lifeguard head quarters. This wasn't a serious problem until the channel was reduged to a depth of 20 feet in the late 1960s (it had originally been only 8 feet deep from the mean low tide line. like the rest of the bay), and the breakwater was constructed to protect Quivira Basin. Since then, he wave energy has bounced back toward Mariner's Point and eaten away at the beach on the inside of Mariner's Basin. A large amount of sand was lost from the western edge of Mariner's Point, but the crossion seems to have ceased now that the currents have reconfigured the point. quarters. This wasn't a serious problem until the reconfigured the point.

In the Mission Bay channel, we watched as a sportfishing boat bristling with rods churned out toward the sea, then we turned back and faced Hospitality Point (continued on page 22)

Right there is where we wanted to out a restau Right there is where we wanted to put a restau-rant, "Earnest declares, indicating a vacant plot of land at the terminus of Quivire Way. "The only person interested was George Joe, the Chi-nese restauranteur who'd had a Chinese cessau-rant at the "33 Exposition. He'd owned several restaurants around town, but he didn't have the money to build one here. Plus, there's an access

One early idea that was discarded was to make different areas of the park conform to some overflow parking) and convert living marine animals into major revenue producers for the city. (Sea World's lease payments to the city last year totaled about $4 million, almost one-third of all the lease revenue generated in the park; it will be $5 million in the year 2001.) But when be $5 million in the year 2001.) But when proposals for the theme park were solicited, one idea had obvious possibilities: "The Sea World proposal included dolphin reces with monkeys as jockeys," Earnest recalls.

The most intense pressure for the lease car In most intense pressure for the rease came from a group of local developers who wanted 75 acres of land for their theme park. "Bit we said that was too much land." Earnest recalls now, chuckling. The group that was awarded the lease was headed by George Millay, who was born in Ocean Beach but raised in Long Beach. He spent time in the Wavy, attended UCLA, and had the properties of the properties the properties of the properties the properties of the properties the propertie established a successful restaurant on Terminal Island. One of the weirder brain-storms came from Bill Evans, owner of the Bahia storms came from Bill Evans, owner of the Bahta and a major stockholder in the Catamaran, who wanted to build a floating island that would shut-tle between the two hotels and would feature a 30-foot-tall volcano spewing steam. The island would also include a waterfall, palm trees, and a grass hut cocktail lounge and would be manned by a crew dressed in pirate garb. Although the Mission Bay Park Commission was receptive to the idea, Evans had second thoughts and acquired paddlewheelers instead.

bay west of Fresta Island. "We sweated it out and finally conned the government into putting it on that little island."

A marine aquarium had always been in the plans for Mission Bay, and it was believed that such an attraction would only need 15 acres of land. The park planners never imagined that Sea World would gobble up 150 acres of the park (and it's lobbying for an additional 50 acres for while they ate, but poor underwater visibility off Long Beach made that impossible. When Millity Long Beach made that impossible When Millity Long Beach made that impossible was 100 to 100 their original architectural plans were horrible, says Earnest. "Structurally it was ideal, but it was not assthere: They had haved a firm in Long Beach that specialized in waterfront construction, specifically piers and docks. When the city had written a report for the city on architectured around Mission Bay, and Millay was considerably enlightened. He hird architects from back. East to do the design work. The only thing that group didn't design was the Japanese garden, and all the lumber was cut and shaped over there, wrapped in paper, and shapped to San Diego. There was a Japanese Ph.D. landscape architect George wanted to do the planting but he couldn't come over unless he was requested by the government. So I wrote them a letter, and they let him. while they ate, but poor underwater visibility off ernment. So I wrote them a letter, and they let him

Our boat pulled up alongside Fiesta Island, which isn't really an island because of the causeway connecting it to East Mission Bay Drive. Earnest says that early plans called for bridges to be built at the northern and southern points of the island, allowing access to the island for an auto-mobile racecourse. The spectators would have watched the action from grandstands on the island, inside the racecourse. "This was at the same time when we built the Torrey Pines golf course. when we built the Torrey Pines golf course.

Earnest explains. "There had been a racecourse up there, and it had to be removed, and the people who ran it thought we should put it in Mission Bay. But we thought everything in the bay should be water oriented." The racecourse idea met the same fate as the seaplane landing that area plan-ners had imagined nearby, just off the beach from what is now the Hilton. Fiesta Island was the next-to-last feature to be constructed (the fill beneath Sea World was the final job), and by then traffic patterns and land-

The police usually approach these fammable and possibly lethal situations slowly and, as it were, from the rear. An argument is actually a state of extreme delicacy because its scales can suddenly dip one way or the other—towards amicable and nervous rec-onciliation or towards immediate death.

The city rapidly loses its topographical identity at night, and from the inside of a police car in constant motion, the disorientation is at its greatest. The names of streets are quickly forgotten. There are merely "zones" delimited by their degree of danger, the type of crime practiced in them, and the dim but (to the cop) instantly recognizable faces on the sidewalks.

National City's gangland is like this. The streets appear resolutely ordinary until the markings appear on the curbs. Espiritu occasionally leaves the relative safety of the main suburban streets and coasts through the narrow alleys covered with graffic, where gangs melt like tiny sea-fish into an alveolate coral. That night he went in for a casual look at a Bloods' lair — a disused garage area sandwiched between flimsy houses whose lights were on.

"Some of them live in those houses," he "Some of them live in those houses," he said, very obviously whispening. "You can see where they make their fires. They come here to get high. They may have been here just a few moments ago. They have their spie looked a round here. This is the enemy when it comes down to it. And they're increasingly organized, getting bolder. We catch kids walking brazenly down the street with weapons hidden in socks and grocery bags. They have no fear of us at all. No respect and no lear. It's totally insane. At some point, someone is just going to have to go in there and disarm them. Because as they begin to control the drugs and make money, they turn into organized crime. And what are we sup-posed to do, arrest them all?" Back on the street, odd loping figures darted in and out of the lights with the rapidity of startled sharks, and the officer was moved to point out that any innocent taking a walk at night in this part of National City was guaranteed an unpleasant surprise. The next call Peopeople hauled over for a speeding ticket. People forget that we are not scapegoats for their own lunary. If people want to behave like beasts, we have to deal with them, that's all. Not many people realize that cocaine cannot be manufactured in the U.S. It has to be manufactured some-where else, then brought in. But crystal can be assembled from materials here. It's a home-

As these gloomy things were being ex-plained and the drug-crazed pedestrians wild gazes flashed in and out of the beam (giving their faces the tortured look of Fusel's mad horses), a strange call from the National City force's only woman officer interrupted the sinister chain. There was no explanation of sinster chain. I nere was no explanation of the call for assistance. Just a demand that Espiritu join her in a deserted parking lot where she had encountered a problem she was unable to resolve herself. It concerned a wounded bird. When we arrived, we saw nothing at all in the lot but the officer's car and an enormous in the lock out the officer scar and an enormous seaguli sitting with a smashed wing on the tarmac. The officer had come across it acci-dentally, had no idea what to do with it, and was distraught. "Don't laugh," she kept saying, as if cer-seagul? Should it be taken in a plastic or-nitrib loody-bag to the all-night animal emer-gency clinic? Should she call an ambulance? The absurdity of the discussion that followed (mitigated only by its compassionate dimen-sion) threatened to coilide with everything that had precoded it. Methamphetamines and seagulk? Bird handlers and primps? Fortunately, there was another call on the car radio. An armed robbery at a Fexaco gas station on Highland. Thus, within minutes we have a bird drama to a possible shootout at a gas station. It is a shame that policemen do not turn frequently into novelists. Or perhaps, on the whole it is a relief.

When Mary was eight years old, in early summer Colonel Durham let her accompany him all the way to New Orleans. She got to blow the horn and wheel the spotlight, to read the depths off the bow and question the pilot about how he knew when to turn from snags and shoals, even in clouds and misty dark.

At nights when they swerved around float ing trees and passed wrecks of steamers gone down over the last 50 years, through the portholes in her cabin Mary saw the ghosts of river pirates on black ships with sails made of clouds, thunderheads that boomed messages of wars in heaven. Soldiers in mail galloped around the moon.

The river was swollen and brown with mudslid banks capped in high green corn. When towns materialized — Muscatine, Burlington — the bells rang, people shouted and waved. Some days for hours they would lass no settlements, only barges, or rafts rur ning downstream or poling up the shoals, and dense forests to the shoreline until a mansion appeared in a grove of willow and magnolia. In a cotton field, black infants rode their mother's backs. Mules pawed the dirt while people whipped them, riding carts and plows. New Orleans, at nightfall, electric lights surrounded the harbor. Windjammers were dropping their sails. On the dock, boys sold oysters and shrimp. Frenchmen, Spaniards, Mexicans, Cajuns, Indians, black men in red bandanas and trousers cut off at the knee shouted gruffly, pulling the ropes of giant

At their hotel, Colonel Durham ordered room service dinner and wine. He let her drink a glass. While she washed and changed to her nightclothes, he dressed in full uniform. He waited until he thought she was sleeping soundly before he tucked the covers unde her chin and slipped out.

Mary got up and dressed in her fanciest, then lit a candle and sat on the balcony. Across the street, rose-colored lights blinked, cast-ing ceric shadows. Women wearing bustles strolled unescorted. crowds. Blind and crippled beggars competed with the ragged children.

Mary was frightened, but there are forces stronger than fear. Leaving the door unlocked, she ran out of the room, along the Turkish carpet, down the circular stairs, and dashed outside. On the narrow sidewalk, men bumped her aside, women pushed her along. She walked close to brick walls, soiling the lace of her yellow dress, and turned up an alley that led to a graveyard where tombs floated in mud She lifted her skirts and ran to another alley hoping to find a broader street, but the for ther she ran the darker the alleys became un-til even the star lights disappeared. Mary bunched up her skirts and sat down, praying that someone would help her.

When nobody real came, she imagined a band of brawny pirates with dark flashing eyes. They rowed their dinghy upon mist up the alley. The one with a curly black beard picked her up, carried her on his shoulders wide as a sofa, while the others rowed toward the beach to show her the waves that rolled like clouds to crash on the shore. They delivered her over the breakers into the open sea. Mary grew into a pale, slender beauty with ebony hair and an ethereal smile that could make people wonder if she had loyalties outside this world.

You would love this little city. and its people, every one. Grandma wasn't Milton, But neither did she devote her life to poetry. Painting was another of her avocations. She could make portraits, but landscapes most pleased her. She would go to the Cuyamaca forest and streams, sit in meadows along the Sweetwater River, walk the base of Mount Soledad searching for the perfect angle. In Yosemite she sketched Half Dome. She belonged to a group of artists people call the California Plein Air school, of whom Mr. Fries, her pal and mentor, was arguably the best. She might've grown into an esteemed painter if she'd dedicated herself to that work. But there were things she valued more. Wade, Ada, Harry, Fenton, Tod. Mary, Harriet, Jimmy, my cousins, and me. In the hills and forests, Grandma made her sketches. She turned them into paintings in her studio behind the big house where my mother, my aunts, uncles, and I grew up. Our place sat on a hilltop acre, a few city blocks up a hill from downtown La Mesa, which Grandma painted as a church with red tile roof, scattered shops and houses, a citrus orchard, dirt road, and a view of Cowles Mountain to the north. Looking off the front porch, to your right were the olive, mulberry. and loquat trees, beyond them a jungle of agave and prickly pear cactus. The brick path, bordered in goldfish ponds, led to Hillcrest Street and separated the forest of pines from the grove where silver dollar eucalyptus sparkled.

The ground floor included a formal dining room and a library filled with Grandma's trea-sagebrush, and manzanita. There was a green-house, broken down and abandoned by the time I arrived. Our garage, about large enough for a Model A and cut into the granite hillside, also made the foundation for Grandma's stu-

the dishes then leave them stacked and walk out to her studio. While she painted, children squirmed around her feet until she quieted them with a poem or story. She told of storms on the Mississippi, dances where all the young officers courted and her father paced nearby gripping his cane like a bludgeon. She cor densed Tale of Two Cities, Les Miserables, The Fairy Queen, The Last Days of Pompeii The Party Queen, The Last Days of Pomperinto hour-long versions fit for children. At 70 years old, she could rectie "The Song of Hiawaha," all 50 or so pages, for my cousins and me. While she spoke, Grandma would stand at her easel, dabbing layers of color. Often she'd pause to ask a child whether blue or green would go best on a certain piece of sky. What the child suggested, she'd apply.

Grandma's first art wasn't making pictures, writing poems, or telling stories. She used those materials in the art of creating people and honored her creations in paintings and verse

I wonder if Grandma had disched us and ved to Paris, run with a highbrow crowd, er poems would've become as cryptic as T.S. Eliot's or egrily glorious as W.B. Years's I.s. Still, though the world surely needs painters, it might need in spired mothers as much, or more

During my ninth year, Grandma invited me to help her build a barbecue. My folks called her nuts. First, they said, just clearing the manzanita would take us a week. Then we'd have to collect rocks from all over the yard and neighborhood. Grandma was about 75, losage her sight. begapping its tiere. See and I were about the same size. Neither of us was an architect of barbecues. It must've taken half a summer just to clear the brush, level the earth, build a retaining wall. I gathered and carried most of the rocks while Grandma mixed the mortar, slopped it on, and together we fitted the rocks in place.

My mom, dad, and I were preparing to move to a place of our own. Seven years had passed since the house in Rolando, where we'd lived when I was born, got sold to repay the debts that remained from my dad's last business, a cabinet shop he'd opened in 1946. When the shop went broke, rather than face bankruptcy, my mom and he chose to move in with Grandma and spend years writing checks to creditors. Now, I'd get a larger bedroom, a bathroom of my own. Raindrops wouldn't seep through the roof of our new place. We wouldn't need to huddle around e turnace to keep warm. A loud wind or slight carthquake wouldn't terrorize our fine house the way it did that rickety old one. Nei-ther would Grandma be waiting in her studio when I got home from school, to tell me ste ries, feed me crackers and cheese, or lead me on mushroom bunts in springtime.

We used to tramp across the valley, through Collier Park, and up the hill to another de-serted granite quarry, along the railroad tracks below Eastridge, about where the Spring Street trolley station now resides. Grandma needed a walking stick and sometimes grasped it with both hands, so I carried the shopping bag that we'd stuff with mushrooms. On our way to the quarry, the bag was heavy with lunch sacks. roast beef or chicken sandwiches, potato chim and loquats or olives. We'd place them on a cliffside ledge where dogs couldn't reach four or five lunches with a Spanish phrase of each sack, written in crayon. "Bienvenidos Grandma would write. "Vaya con Dios," "Buen viaje." Because they were meant for the wetbacks who followed the railroad tracks

I have a psychologist friend, Charlie, who contends his job is simply to help people cast out the misapprehensions and fears that've stunted their growth. I'm fascinated by observing in older people whom I've known for years that some appear to expand, become ever more generous, open minded, and wise while others contract, shrink, get miserl whine a lot. I bet Charlie would agree with a suspicion that people who expand have a suspicion that people who expand have accepted the terrifying stuff fate hurls at them while the ones who contract have cringed unided. Some people hold still and let fate smack them. Others try to dodge and run. They swill liquor, gobble obsessively, over work. They hide behind anger, self-right temperature of the property of the object of the contract. teousness. They refuse to love. There are thousands of ways to dodge. But not a single way to escape.

When I was 16, I wrote my first story Three pages or so, a mystical tale about young fellow who's attempting to cross a forbidding range of mountains when he discovered to the control of the con ers there's a fearsome dragon on his tail. He keeps running into the mountains but always gets caught in a box canyon or blocked by a sheer cliff or bottomless chasm. Finally, in exhaustion, he lies down to sleep in a meadow Whereupon the dragon picks him up and carries him gently over the mountains.

I read it to Grandma. She reached for my hand and squeezed proudly. "The Grim Reaper."

Your dragon, he's Death, isn't he?"

Your dragon, he's Death, isn't he?

Yeah, I guess."
A couple of years before, after somebody's funeral, I'd gone to visit at the old house. We were walking to the quarry, I carried the shoping bag, so it must've been springtime. Al Collier Park, Grandma wanted to rest on a bench. I lay on the orisos at bee foot. For a longbench. I lay on the grass at her feet. For a long time, her lips pursed thoughtfully.

"Not leng ago," Grandma sáid, "you got plucked out of childhood. Suddenly you didn't know who you were anymore. Now, piece by piece you're discovering yourself. The process will take your whole life, but always you're fitting more pieces, you're getting sturdier, so when life hurls stones at you, they aren't going to rattle you as bad. You might even catch some and find gems imbedded. Anyway, the more you get knocked, the better you learn who you are. The better you know yourself, the more you're able to love. The more you love, the less you fear. And as the fear ebbs, you can abide things that once ter-rified you. Even death. You see?" Grandma's eyes had gotten too blurred to the paint anymore. Her bones ached. She wore a hearing aid. Her shoulders were round, her skin looked rubbery. For 80 years, fate had been walloping her. I don't know all her tribulations. Only a few. Tod had a breakdown, tried to hang himself, and became for-ever another person, an awkward recluse. Ada spent a year in bed with rheumatic fever. Harry died at 30 of a mysterious seizure. Jimmy re-turned from the war with tuberculosis. Can-cer took Mary at 47 and Fenton at 51, soon after it tormented Grandpa for three years.

My friend Charlie contends that if we're brave enough to keep our minds and hearts open, we'll grow so big we can accept all out my features, Grandma smiled winsomely, "Have you ever wondered if it bothers me that I'll die soon?

She reached for my hand and grinned

A while later she was gazing out across

"Have you ever wondered if it bothers me that I'll die soon?"

kinds of pain and infirmity and eventually our own death. We don't need to rage against the dying of the light.

In my 17th year, I was too cool to ask Grandma to tell me stories, so we usually chat-ted about my cousins and me, about our lat-est crises. I had to shout while she leaned closer to hear. One day, staring hard to make the neighbor's yard at a gigantic pile of rub-bish and trash. "It's a castle," she said. "The Roman legions are plodding up the steep hill-side, to wage battle against the Carthaginians." Mary Garfield has 27 live descendants — plus any my cousins are keeping secret. Though Grandma's children are commonly way through jungles of mystery, each is a per-son of goodwill. Most of us have gone adventuring and returned with marvelous stories—every one beginning with Grandma. Because she endowed us with courage. Taught us that life's magical. That even tragedy has splendor. That our hearts are the most pre cious element, and our task is to keep them beating true. That to make art, you need to sketch, then brush on layers of color, or clear sketch, then brush on layers of color, or clear the weeds, gather the rocks and morar, fit them in place, until the final work emerges. Wherever the richest spirits go, my grandma lives. I imagine that if Homer, Michelangelo, Joan of Arc, my mother, Aunt Mary, or Uncl. Fernton lapse into fright or de-spair, they rush to Grandma's studio, where it rests between wispy clouds, and she's stand-ing at the window creating a white moon. They watch her paintbrush sweep and dab at the canvas, while her other hand pats tears of amazement from her eyes. They sit hushed by her radiance. Softly, she gives a miraculous story.

But Between Them They Paved Every Damn Street in Town

t was a very small group that built most of the roads and bridges in San Diego: Henry Fenton, George Daley, and Roscoe Hazard. They were the heavy-material people. Between the three of them, I think they practically paved every damn street and alley in town. They were very active in politics too; they were members of our group that supported Republican candidates in the 1940s and '50s. Daley's wife was an assemblywoman.

Daley and Fenton specialized mostly in heavy roadwork and dams. They also created the materials, the rock and the gravel. Fenton was involved in quarrying in Mission Valley, and Daley was there for a while, and Hazard was the longest lived there - his son, I think, is still busy there. The sand pits and gravel pits started in the early 1920s in the valley. The three of them supplied the material for their own jobs.

They competed with each other, but they also helped each other. They were very co-operative. And they tried to help in civic projects, like the development of Mission Bay. Roscoe Hazard owned a tremendous amount of acreage down then that was taken over and dredged out. He gave the city a large part of it. He was very generous with his property at the south and east end of the bay. Mission Bay was a great big murshy.

I probably knew Pappy Hazard best, because he was quite a horseman. He was in all the parades in and around San Diego, and he had a lot of horses down in Mission Valley, near our horse farm. One time we had a very heavy flood. This was before we had the channel dredged out to let the river water flow out to the ocean. In the heavy rains, the water would begin to back up into the valley, and it covered a bridge we had on our own farm there at the foot of Sixth Street. Roscoe came down, and he was very concerned about our place, and he cranked up his asphalt plant, which was close by, and ground out a whole bunch of asphalt that we could put around the stables there to form a dam. He didn't charge us anything for it, which I thought was just Hazard was one of those people who.

yon couldn't tell his age, he always looked the same for as long as I knew him. He was very hard of hearing, and he had a hearing aid that he could turn on and turn off. He'd get in a heated argument with somebody say something very blunt, and then turn his hearing aid off and look at you. You wanted to kill him! He'd just look at you and smile There was nothing you could do. When he wanted to break in, he'd turn his hearing aid back on and talk again. He won every ar-g-ment. I used to marvel at him that he sn't knocked on his fanny. Everybody going to bid very hard but he expected the usiness. We gave it to him, of course.

The pad under that building is a huge ete brick. It had to be poured contin uously for a week or ten days. We had practically every contractor in town mixing concrete and pouring it. It goes way, way deep. We had water problems there; we had to pump it out, that far back from the bay there at Second and Broadway.

George Daley and his family were sure farsighted in the land they picked up around here. They owned practically all of the Otay Mesa and all that area where Rancho walked up and that building looked so fawalked up and that building looked so fasked miliar to me, and when I got in there I asked who the architect was. They laughed and said, "To tell you the truth, we copied the of-fice building at National Steel." The same kind of colonial design. Don Daley, George's nephew, is running the business now, still building roads. Fenton's and Hazard's businesses have remained in the family too.

George Daley was a real colorful guy.

Hazard would get in a heated argument, say something very blunt, and then turn his hearing aid off. He won every argument.

Roscoe was great on parades. He showed his horses up in the Rose Parade and every parade in San Diego. And he built that museum down in Old Town [Seeley Stables] to house the old rigs and the equipment he'd collected. He built it and gave it to the city. that museum behind the theater over there He had quite a collection of old saddles, gear, and carriages, which he donated to the

I think Daley started out as a cattleman, then as a small ontractor, and just kept building and building. He was running cattle down on the Otay Mesa and up in the hills to the north. I think he didn't really know how much land he owned. He just felt that land in California

There was a substantial cattle business in San Diego up through the 1950s. We fi-nanced cattle herds, from calves on up, in the Cuyamaca Mountains, and we had several families, customers who were big cattle peo ple. Most of it was for the local market.

The three of them were just all-around good citizens. They could argue like a bunch of panthers, but they all believed in the same was much like a family.

We miss people like that today. There really aren't any local activists with the money and name in the community I could compare them to today. Ernie Hahn come close. But these guys were really pioneers, and they loved this city and really wanted to make it go. This was their range, so to speak. None of them played golf. They were too

Your recent article "Tainted Blood Brothers" touched an issue of which is a concern to us all. Pharmaceutical compa-nies, health care institutions, and medical professionals and medical professionals need to be held responsible for the products and care they are prescribing for their patients. I find it appalling to realize that a blood product considered "suspect" such as that which was given to the hemophiliac community was not IMMEDIATELY removed from the market. Why did the pharmaceutical companie hospitals, and physicians drag their feet on this issue? Their inexcusable lack of decisive ac-tion has resulted in untold

Guilt Complex

As a former resident of the in-famous La Mesa Penitentiary in Tijuana, Mexico, I highly resent the implications in Scott Coffer's recent letter (July 16). n referring to the author o The Big Casa "(June 25), he says: "Obviously he did something." The implication is that he is deserving what he is getting and has no right to complain because he is clearly a criminal. In America this assumentian result results have been seen that the same than the complain because he is clearly a criminal. In America this assumentian result results have been seen that the same than the sam sumption would probably be correct, but in Mexico this assumption cannot be made so easily.

Several facts seem to have escaped M: Robinson's notice that she should be made aware of: First should be made aware of: First of all, "Caucasian imperialists" did not invent the institution of slavery, nor did it originate in Colonial America. Slav dates back to Biblical times. It is also true that blacks were capturing and holding other blacks as slaves long before any of slavens there is a very large of slavery, there is a very large proportion of blacks living in the U.S. whose ancestors im-migrated here because, for all its faults. America offered a better future than they per-ceived was possible in their homeland, be it Africa or elsewhere. Lastly, not all whites owned slaves when slavery was local in this country, and not legal in this country, and not all whites approved of it. In fact, many whites abhorred the practice of slavery and fought hard to get it abolished. I am not in denial that slavery existed — I feel it was a de-plorable institution that has left a deep and ugly scar on history. Nor am I in denial that blacks have been mis treated since then. I am some-what offended, though, by the assertion that because I am white I am somehow to blame and responsible for all the ills affecting blacks today as a re-sult of slavery, an institution abolished almost 130 years ago, one that none of my ancestors took part in. I do not want to trivialize the horror of slavery and of the effects it has had on the black American psyche. But neither do I want to be directly blamed for it. I brought these facts up as a way of giving some insight into the mindset of many white Amer-icans. What Ms. Robinson perceives as denial is often a desire not to be unjustly

I don't think there are many white people who fail to realize that black Americans have been and continue to be mistreated. I got the impres sion from Ms. Robinson's let-ter that she believed that the problem would go away if "white America" would just "white America" would just "collectively stop" mistreating black people. Racism exists not only between blacks and whites, it exists anywhere people of different races and cultures try to live together. The reasons for racism are many and varied: ignorance, fear, intolerance, economic dispar-ity...the list goes on. It is not a problem that is easy to under stand or remedy. It is very easy to oversimplify it and to fix the blame. Spending time and effort trying to determine whose "fault" racial tension is in counter-productive. There nothing we can do about the past except try not to repeat it, but we can do something about the future if we focu our energy and attention in the right direction. John Fitzgerald right thing. I met Barbara one day in the grocery store buy-ing a shopping car full of stale bread. When I questioned her about the bread, she told me it was for her squirrels. She feeds approximately 200 squirrels that live in her back yard. Most squirrels have to forage for their food the way I believe na-ture intended, but not Bar-bara's. They just have to come out of their little holes and eat bread. Bread that contains things like calcium sulphate and ammonium sulphate (I) put that on my lawn to make is green). Generations of squir-rels being taught by their mothers to just wake up and go eat bread. None of them, after a couple of generations, even know how to forage for food. I hope Barbara never moves from where she lives, because those squirreds will starte to death because the bread. Bread that contain starve to death because they

I am writing in response to Barbara Cleve's letter (July 23). My comments in the July 16 article ("No Visitors for the Gnatcatcher") were in response to an environmental impact report (EIR) on the Mission Trail's Visitor's Center. The proposed site is on coastal sage scrub, a rapidly declining sensitive habitat, home to California gnatcatchers, which are expected to be listed this year as a Federal en-dangered species.

I am not opposed to a visitor/interpretive center at an appropriate site, sensitive to the resources that are being inthe resources that are being in-terpreted. I'm sorry that Mrs. Cleves feels that only native San Die gans have a right to be con-cerned about Mission Trails Regional Park (MTRP). My grasp of "the situation in Mis-sion Trails Park" comes from over 11 years of active com-munity involvement in San Carlos and citywide. As far as I know. Mrs. Cleves' only interest in MTRP until now ha been lobbying for the removal of a fence at Lake Murray.

My concern is to keep the park a place for all citizens to enjoy, while at the same time protecting the natural habitat and wildlife that makes MTRP the wonderful asset it is. REVIEW

It is a bit of an irony that Clint Eastwood is widely regarded as the last in the line of great Western movie stars, tracing back to William S. Hart and Tom Mix. The irony could be removed, together with much of the factuality, by revising the assessment to the last great movie star willing to while away a significant part of his career in Westerns (nine of them prior to the current season, scarcey an impressive number next to those of John Wayne, Randolph Scott, even nonspecialists like Robert Mitchum and Burt Lancaster). dolph Sott, even nonspecialists like Robert Mitchum and Burt Lancaster). The Wettern themselves are something else again, Not counting his second-busan arise in the 1'vene Ranésich his association with the agreement of the imported "spagheth Wettern," that carnous hybrid of grizided chin, buzzing thy renism and fancial kiddle-Western sharpshooting. He is an expect to so, but he is no angel. His closest relation to one of those is to the August cost, but he is no angel. His closest relation to one of those is to the August cost, but he may be a considered and the cast opposite of his humble farmer in Angel Wales, miraculously transformed into a perfects marksman when the need artises, he is now a "known hief and mundered" who, by the time we meet him, has retreated into the life of a reclusive "pig farmer." Under the influence of his buried wife, he has sworn off whisky, hand' shot at a man in eleven years, and has only those visits from the Angel of Death, along with recurring nightmares and alcohologged memories, to tie him to his former self. But although his skills have deteriorated — a point made comically clear in a session of target practice during which he must away his sub-shoote for a scattergum in order to hit anything, and in a running agg about his inability to mount a horse—it his experience of killing and his willingness to kill that set him apart and defined him as a mare a man "a cool as snow."

These are qualities hard to come by. Killing — or, to look at it from the other end of the gun barrel, dying — does not come easily. And the first continued on next page continued from page 46

Unforgiven retells the classic tale of the reformed bad man ("I ain't like Onlongiver rectisis the classic tale of the reformed bad man ("I ain't like that anymore" is a continual refrain pulled back into the world he left behind. It is an unremittingly harsh world, bluntly established as a "man's world" in the opening scenes in which a prostitute is disfigured by a drunken cowboy, and the town sheriff, exercising such Wisdom of Solomon as has made the trek to the American frontier, decides that the fitting punishment for Prop-erty Damage (who would want to fork over for a scarred whore?) is a fine of trek to the American frontier, decides that the fitting punishment for Prop-try Damage (who would want to fork over for a scared whore?) is a fine of seven horses payable to the brothed owner (male). To say it's a man's world is not to say that Eastwood is insensitive to the pain and powerlessness of the women in it. Quite the reverse. Notice, in addition to the hierarchy at the brothel, the look or non-look on the face of the Indian woman when the hero comes to round up her husband (Morgan Freeman) for a return to action. The sorority of prostitutes, to get the plot rolling, pool their assorted nest eggs and set up a $1,000 reward for the murder of the disfiguring cov-

It is from the lawman's lips that we learn the essential lesson about gunfighting which will unscramble and illuminate the thrilling action of the finale.

Final thrills notwithstanding, this is a slow and autumnal Western and not a dose of "revitalization" or "revivalism," a Western made for posand not a asset of treatmandant of retrivation, a vessel induct of po-terity and not for the clattering publicity mill. a Western to shore up Eastwood's occurr and not his annual "box-office." All of which is entirely as befits a star and director who will never again see the green side of sixty. The assurance and economy of his style, both in front of and behind the camera, befit such and economy of his style, both in front of and behind the camera, beft such a man, too, though his behind-the camera style has taken a while to catch up to his in front-of style. The latter, of course, has not stood still but has tept moving omwards and upwards through his increasing interest in portraying, however stoically, the tainted and tormented protagonists see the aforementioned White Hauter. Black Haurt as well as Honkytonik Man and Firefox as well as, among movies he elected not to direct. Tightrope (as well as, among movies he directed without starring in, Bind). And here might be the upon to mention another sexual groundbreaker for Eastwood, maybe not use as stounding as his ravishment by a woman in The Rosokie his parrying of a query from an old pal about his proclivity for masturbation." I don't really miss it all that much." really miss it all that much.

really miss it all that much.

A couple of minor misgivings: the blended brownness of the color is a somewhat arty affectation, not to mention a carry-over of the genre's descent into "revisionism"; and the stock figure of the pants-wetting Eastern scribe gets more space than normal without revealing anything new (though his opus The Duke of Death is hilariously lampooned by the sheriff as The Duke of Death.) These and any other misgivings could not afford to be major. In the circumstances, nothing less than the fullest maturity would suffice deep-the death of the de the circumstance, nonling sets unit and unit many most owner coepest gravity, highest integrity. And anyone still unaware of how serious a Western can be — how serious a man making a Western can be — has here a prime opportunity for an epiphany. As its title might suggest, the movie can most usefully be thought of as an act of contrition, a making of amends, for the casual and carefree litter of bodies in Eastwood's earlier Westerns a perfect parallel to the litter of bodies in the hero's own past. This time it is the director and not the main character who is rubbing shoulders with

"At a certain speed, personality starts to disintegrate."

The theme of the La Jolla Playhouse's two current productions could come from "Hotel California" by the Eagles:
"We haven't had that spirit here since 1969." Both the Who's rock opera, Tommy, and Joe Orton's magnificent farce, What the Butler Saw, were first produced in England in 1969. Both take an unblinkered fin-de-60s look at the world. For either work, no subject is taboo; in fact, both Tommy and Butler want work, no subject is tanoos, in fact, out a termina and other want to open people's eyes to actualities. Tommy, at the Mandell Weiss Theatre, has been extended into September and deserves to run a lot longer than that. Just across the way, however, at the Mandell Weiss Forum is a production of Butler that merits similar treatment.

"I'm a great believer in the absolute logic of Alice in "In a great believer in the absolute logic of Alier in Winderland." Orton sverte in a program note to his Loc." I's the kind of logic I put in my plays." And every incident in Burler makes logical sense, at the time. I follows, for example, that when Dr. Prentice's wife almost catches him attempting to seduce Geraldine Barlacy, the bumbling doctor would want to hide Geraldine's clothes from his wife. It also follows that Mrs. Prentice, having lost her dress and wig at the Station Hotel, where she algot with a bellboy named Nick, would find Ceraldine's dothes quite useful. A leads to B. Xe is four attemption of the Ceraldine's dothes quite useful. A leads to B. Xe is four attemption of the control of th spot. But he chooses to cover up and, like Macbeth, finds that one deviation from the truth sends frantic events his way in what seem like multiples of 50.

Geraldine tells Dr. Prentice that his troubles spring from a lack of candor. And that's true about the first batch. After a while, though, three different agents—each with a different take on reality—sit things up so webenmently that intentions lead to the opposite results. Dr. Prentice is trying to repaint reality. He wants to blur a lone fact, his failed seduction, from callity, He wants to blur a lone fact, his failed seduction, from reality. He wants to bur a fone fact, its failed sectuction, from history, but every new daulo on the canwas plunges him into deeper depths of ignominy. Where Dr. Prentice wants to alter reality, Dr. Rance wants to pin it down. At once the highest-ranking person at the clinic and easily the most dangerous, Rance is a labeler armed with answers. He uses a warped species of

The Theatre in Old Town is presenting an encore production of a very popular show that played earlier this year. The title of this innocuous musical revue, based on the female groups and vocalists of the '60s, is a misnomer. Beshives were monstrous turbans of human hair that flourished in the early '66s. The recuse, however, traces the A Joyful Life-Journey har that flourished in the early 1600. The revue, however, traces the flods, styles, and changes of the entire decided. What the Butler Saw is a terrific farce, one of the finest and fun-niest ever written. Over and above its sheer speed, combined niest ever written. Over and above its heer speed, combined with a floor plan so bette. it resembles watching all three channels of a tripfecast at once, looms Orton's style. Although his subject matter is calculated to offend, his characters speak a prose so eloquent it feels sculpted. And much of the play's humor comes from the contrast between what is being said and how it is being said. Some examples. Dr. Prentice (about his wife-she's an example of in-breeding among the lobelier, growing classes. A failure in cugnities.) The La Jolla Playhouse's is at feast the fifth production I've seen of What the Butler Saw, and it's by far the best. One reason is that, after five or more viewings and two or three readings, the play has few surprises. You know when the jokes are coming, how the sight-gags will unfold, and where the ele-gant lines will land — and yet the playhouse production, in spite of all this, had me in stitches. I felt I was seeing the play for the first time. Direc-

The play must move fast enough so that, in John Lahr's phrase, "personality starts to disintegrate." And yet the language, written to be savored like vintage wine, must not be slighted in the process. Among many achievements with this production, Greif's direction honors these antithetical demands superbly: the pace is as frantic as the speeches

Along with creating a balance between the visual and the verbal, Greif has achieved another balance among his cast, In most productions of Buller, once Dr. Rance arrives, he dom-inates. The rest of the cast merely reacts, and their encroaching lunacy is forced, not felt. In the La Jolla Playhouse's rendition. Bill Raymond's quirky Dr. Rance is quite strong. doesn't dominate the stage. Kate Mulgrew's harried Mrs. Pren-tice and especially Max Wright's wonderful work as Dr. Prentice have equal footings. This balancing de-pawns the cast, freeing them to experience the chaos around them rather than merely blend into it. The performances of Joel Brooks (Match), Kellie Waymire (Geraldine), and Don Harvey (Nick) also con-tribute greatly to this sense that the show isn't something being done for us — butlers peering through a keyhole — but rather something profoundly crazy that is actually happening to them. museum, a museum of postal communications. These are subjects you may have only a mild interest in to begin with, or no interest at all. But since you are there, you might as well take a look—and sometimes you end up with a surprising appreciation for an aspect of social and economic reality to which you may never have given any thought.

Such, for example, is the Tobacco Museum in Bergerac, which by means of interesting exhibits and interricive labels traces the history of tobacco from the New World (where it was remarked on by Columbus), through its introduction into Europe, to its eventual domination of the world. Catherine de Medicis smoked it in the mid-16th Centruy to cure her migraines: Pape Urban VIII excommunicated smokers who brought their habit with them into clutch: King Louis XIII made tobacco into a source of governmental income by taxing it. These absurd reflections may be accompanied with a curious doubt about the purpose and value of art in general. If it is ridiculous to make a railroad station out of sugar, why is it any less ridiculous to make a David out of marble?

There is a similar sense of absurdity in the Automaton Museum in the city of Souillac. The animated search as some of abstractly in the Automaton buseum in the key of comments. The animated scuptures of this primitive Disneyland, operated by programmed mechanisms, represent a Negro jazz band, a magician performing magic tricks on a girl, fairy tale figures, acrobats, dancers, jugglers, a busy railway platform.... It is interesting to find out that such automata have been produced since the Renaissance, and that they were particularly favored in the 18th and 19th centuries.

But there is also a disturbing surrealistic quality about the museum, with the numerous mechanisms as a disturbing surrealistic quality about the museum, with the nunerous mechanisms are all around roun at unexpected intervals, their limbs jerking grotsuquels, and the on-whole pre-enting at most properties of the p

Merely the title of Carolyn Whyte's song recital at St. James by-the-Sea, "Love & Longing," might have been enough to attract a concert-goer who knows that those two universal experiences constitute some of the most powerful subjects of art. A look at the program performed by the supprass owith plaints! Janie Prim would make the concert even more treeistishe; not Schobert and Toot, thut rarer componers, all of the late 19th or the 20th Century, and represented by songs many of which would be completely new even to the most ardent of art-song lovers. Finally, the soprano herself was a drawing card for those who have heard her before, for she has a sweet, lovely, floating voice, well produced, along she has a sweet, lovely, floating voice, weil produced, along with an engaging manner and stage presence. As it turned out, the program was really a splendid one, filled with interest and ediple. Its unity was provided by the pervasive themes indicated in the concert title, as well as by a general late. Romantis emosphere. Within this unity-there was great variety, of languages (Whyte proved hersifi dept at negotiating German, French, Bussain, and Spanish, as well as English): of styles (from the Austrian as well as English): of styles (from the Austrian Expressionism of Alban Berg to the wryly enhanced cabaret style of Francis Poulenc, and from the heart-on-sleeve Russian Romanticism of Sergei Rachmaninoff to the sturdy diatonic American simplicity of Samuel Barber and Aaron diatonic American simplicity of samule about a modern Copland; and of expressive moods.

It was only in this last category that Whyte's singing sometimes seemed not quite as persuasive as it might have been. Her stylistic understanding, beautifully underlined by Janie Prim's expectedly authoritative playing, could not be faulted; nor could her understanding of the meaning of the texts in all those languages. However, certain limitations in the voice and her approach to art-song singing took a toll (slight, marginal, but not negligible) of the vivid variety continued on page 76 songs? trained and innately musical singer. Whyte is certainly aware of this way of giving spontaneous life to the music, and she made intelligent and discreet use of it. Too discreet, perhaps. Her respect for the integrity of the printed core, and a general disposition to avoid excess of any sort, often seemed to dim the possible effects of rhythmic work hard to maintain the flow of the vocal line, and it may run against the grain for them to recognize that in certain circumstances something a bit different is needed. In particular, good singing of the bet came school tends to de-comphasize the consonants; but in art songs the consonants sometimes need to be brought out with clarity, even exaggerated, in order to give full value of meaning and compliance of the words. An effective art-song singer ought to be able to recite the text of his or her songs without the music, speaking not singing, and making use exclusively of the devices of dramatic recitation. These devices must then be transferred to the sung performance, with due modification for the singing medium, so that the song takes on the dramatic qualities of the recitation while at the same time maintaining its own integrity as a musical form. At times, the singer must compromise certain principles of good singing so as to achieve a good performance — by which I mean the full realization of the specific qualities,

Whyte seems reluctant to do any such thing (or perhaps the notion is so alien to her ideas of good singing that she never even thinks of it). Something similar applies to her use of tone color. Soubrette or not, I do not believe her voice is so narrow in its timbral range as a listener to her song recital might suppose. Her effort to keep the beauty of sound unblemished, admirable in itself (and quite successful), at times seems to interfere with certain expressive possibilities suggested by the poetic text and the musical setting. In the performance of art songs, prettiness and purity of sound are not enough. Sometimes, something less (or more) than that is demanded — chet voice, for example — for the sake of the song as a whole.

I do not mean to give the impression that this was an unrelievedly dull concert, or that everything Whyte sang sounded exactly alike. That was not at all the case. She was

But it was only rarely that she did any of this to the depth 1 think she is capable of. Her sense of decorum, her reverence for the seamless vocal line, and her desire to keep her sound pure and lovely — all seemed to impede her ability to explore the total experience of some of the songs

Former Contact Lens Wearers

The only thing you have to lose is your glasses The technology in the manufacturing and fitting of contact lenses has improved a dramatically over the last several years that the wearing and caring for contacts is easy, confortable and affordable. An example of these new lenses is Durasoft Optif which corrects astigmatism.

Drs. Gelfen, Hall and White have built their reputations on fitting people of all ages with comfortable contacts, even the so-called "hard to fit." In fact, several of the major manufacturers use them as their clinical investigators and to help educate other doctors around the country.

So, if you want to experience the ease and convenience of contact lenses, call the office

most convenient to you for an appointment. If they don't work out, you owe nothing (except for the examination see).

This is a Free lens trial - you pay for the lenses only if you decide to keep them after a 30-day trial period.
Call our Refit Program Coordinator today for more information.

You're Single. We're Free. Why Wait?

Introducing Reader PHONE MATCHES, a Great Place to Meet Single People. You are provided with a free personal matching ad in the Reader Classifieds. You also receive a free "voice mailbox"— a phone service that allows you to record and receive messages from any touch-tone phone.

coupon below and mail or FAX it (233-7907) to us. (If faxing, please photocopy the coupon first and then fax it. The newsprint doesn't reproduce well.) The deadline for receiving free Phone Matches ads is Saturday at 7am. Free ads are 25 words or less and run for two weeks. No free ads will be accepted over the phone or in person. Ads with more than 25 words cost $1.20 per additional word. We'll or in person. Ads with more than 25 words cost $1.20 per additional word. We'll send you a 5-digit mailbox number (to be printed in your ad) and a 4-digit security 24 hours a day, and follow the easy instructions. You code for exclusive access to your responses.

You may also place a late ad until 6pm Tuesday by phone (235-8260), in our office (1703 India St. at Date St., downtown), or by FAX (233-7907). The charge office (170) finals at Date St. downtown), or y PAX (233-7907). The charge for these late ads is $20 for the first 25 words plus $1.20 per additional word. Ads placed by phone or by FAX are with Visa or MasterCard only. Limit one Phone Matches ad per person per two-week period.

HOW TO USE YOUR VOICE MAILBOX: After you receive your mailbox number and private security code, you can record your personal introduction. Call 527-1966, 24 hours a day, and follow the easy instructions.

Use your introduction to tell more about yourself than your ad does (see below for guidelines). Give your first name; but DON'T give your last name, phone number or address. Make sure you ask your callers to leave their names, phone numbers and the best times to call them. You can re-record your personal introduction once per 24-hour period. All introductions are reviewed by the Reader and go on-line within 24 hours.

can replay any response or move ahead to the next one. If you choose to move ahead, the previous response will be erased, so have a pencil and piece of paper ready! You must have a touch-tone phone to record a personal introduction or listen to responses.

Custom-Crafted Eyeglasses In About An Hour

Unbeatable Value

Guaranteed Quality

The Liz Claiborne 9 frame featured above makes a strong fashion statement for the woman of the 90's lit's lightweight and extremely comfortable.

We Deliver!

Comfort-Crafted Eyeglasses In About An Hour

Comfort Makes The Difference

At LensCrafters you get more than just quality lenses custom-crafted in about an hour – you get a wide selection of first-rate frames specifically designed for a comfortable fit. From soft flex-pad nosepads to FeatherWates' to non-slip comfort cable temples, LensCrafters delivers the features that make a comfortable difference.

In-House Lab Means One-Hour Service

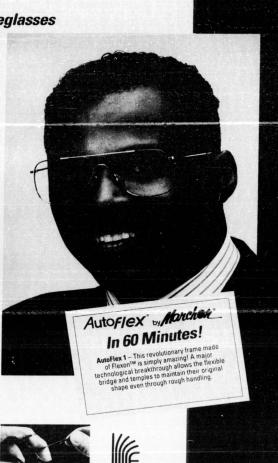

A state-of-the-art lab is right in our optical center, so you get your top-quality eyeglasses in about an hour – not days. Every lens is individually crafted with care by highly skilled technicians. And, special comfort feature frames are available in every optical center, so you can have the most comfortable glasses you've ever worn in just about an hour.

Difficult Prescriptions

Our in-house labs offer glasses in about an hour crafted to standards that exceed those set by the American National Standards Institute. This even applies to bifocals and trifocals IS o even if you have a difficult prescription you can wear your new glasses home. Plus, LensCrafters offers all the important special lens treatments: prescription sunglasses, light-sensitive lenses, sports glasses, tinting, UV protection, scratch-resistance – you name it, we have it!

Exceptional Selection And Service

We have thousands of frames in hundreds of individual styles, shapes, sizes and colors, including our special comfort feature frames. There's a frame to comfortably fit every face, personality and budget. Trained LensCrafters opticians will help you select the best frame for your facial shape, skin tone, hair color and ultimate comfort.

Thorough Eye Exams (from EYEXAM2000* Doctors of Optometry)

The Doctors of Optometry at EYEXAM20008, conveniently located next to LensCrafters, offer professional examinations and a broad selection of all types of contact lenses.

The LensCrafters Guarantee

If you are dissatisfied for any reason you may return your glasses within 30 days of your purchase. We will work with you to find a replacement of equal value that totally satisfies you.

Lowest Price Guaranteed

If, within 30 days of your purchase you find a lower price for the same glasses (frame and lenses) in stock at any other retail store, just present a written estimate or copy of the advertised price and we'll gladly refund the difference.

One Year Breakage Protection

Should your frames and/or lenses purchased at LensCrafters become broken or scratched during the first year, we will protect your investment by replacing them with identical frames, frame parts and/or prescription lenses for only a portion of the full replacement value.* If identical frames are no longer in stock, we will help you find a suitable alternative of equal value. *See store for details.

Free Maintenance For Life

We will help you maintain the fit and comfort of your LensCrafters glasses with free cleaning and adjustments for the life of your glasses.

Experience the LensCrafters Difference Today!

Use the coupons on the next page for any frames in stock, and quality lenses custom-crafted in about an hour. Come to LensCrafters ... for a greater fit and better comfort. Ask about our special comfort feature frames.
