ANTONIA

I come from very poor people, but when I was a baby, a neighbor girl took care of me while my mother worked and went to the market. I think most people in Mexico have maids or servants in the house, even many of the very poor. It seems

I seems natural that younger women with no children would help with the families of older women who have many. What the families of older women who have many. What the fast possible properties of the properties

I was in the middle of 13 children, and we lived in three rooms with harmmocks on the porch for sleeping so there was no privacy at all. In my uncle's house I was older than his six children and had certain respect and obedience from them. They called me "Tin," though I was really their cousin, not their aunt. I even had a little space, a sort of curtained closet that had been my aun't, where I could ham go where who so his in the mirror, be abone. Now, here of the comming a woman would not have privacy to dress up and to know here boody, but then and there it so med normal enough.

Well, I didn't see anyone I wanted to marry. The boys were all a bunch of burnes, and the boys from bigger places like Hosamarado were not to the second of the second

There were advertisements sometimes, looking for young girls to come to the frontier and work in houses. I wanted to do that, because they always the source of the source of the source of popular districtions of the popular to the source of the source, and they would always tell the same atories; the Contailer sisters.

I'll never forget stepping off the bus, that huge station full of men looking us over and coyotes offering us rides to Los Angeles. I was very excited and glad that I had come. We have to be quiet when we have fun. It seems strange in this country to be young and have money but have to enjoy it carefully. If we enjoy ourselves enough to attract attention, we could lose it all. Sometimes it's like living as a

I think the same might be said even of David Burnet's splendid, architectonically arranged group portrato of Jairlies American soldiers relaxing in Grenada. If you compare it with Paul Strand's famous The Family, Luzana, Indy's some 30 years before, which is similarly composed, you will notice how the Lod of soft, warm, sensually appeding color in Strand's stark black and white perton Eccuses our attention more pointedly on the individual personalities. Furthermore, the curator's selection of photographers, while unexceptionable, can make no pretense of including any but a small sample of the first-rate photojournalists who have flourished during the past 13 years. Last Sunday's fulnon-Tribune included a section on Somalia with astoundingly beautiful and moving photographs (in color, let it be said!) by Robert Gauthier of the newspaper's staff. These are the equal in artistic quality—and in historical elevance—of the newspaper's staff. It was to me to find

Itahak Perlman's recital at the Civic Theatre was preceded by an inauspicious prologue. On a rainy night, ticket holders who had arrived early found themselves forbidden to enter any further than the two lower lobbies. As time passed, the overheated lobbies became densely packed with damp people forced to stand around and wait. Many of these concertports were elderly, some leaned on canes or walkers. They were not allowed to proceed to their stast until 2733, at-which time a good number of them had been on their feet under highly uncomfortable conditions for more than half an hour.

Once in their seats, they were forced to go on waiting Once in their seals, they were forced to go on waring until—with no announcements made, no apologies given — Perlman finally appeared on stage 20 minutes late. While enduring all this, I thought longingly of places in the world where audiences would not stand for such

The program consisted of two Beethoven sonatas. Foremost among the strengths is the famous Perlmantone, at once dark and sweet, with all the warmth and chiness of sound one could new worst or a visite. The most richness of sound one could ever want in a violin. The most extravagant collection of similes — melted chocolate, crème fraiche, deep-pile velvet, antique ormolu — cannot convey continues from previous page the sension beauty of this sound. But it also needs to be said that there is relatively little variety of coloration within it: never an intentional roughness, never a piercing glitter, scarcely a change in the rate of vibrato. Perlman 's is a gorgeous tone, and his technical achievement in maintaining it so uniformly is awesome. But can there be too much of a good thing! Then there is his phrasing. Itzhak Perlman has never played a phrase that was not perfectly shaped, with breathtaking sensitivity and grace — and his recent concert provided no exceptions. Furthermore, the phrases are related to each other with such a sure sense of balance and reacted to each other with such a sure sense or dualnee and proportion that they are inevitably perceived as parts of larger and larger passages, lines, and sections, each of these as exquisitely contoured as the shortest motif or embellishment, all the way up to the total architectural shape of a whole movement. This is playing of impeccable intuitions about the way a living musical discourse mobilism of compose accordance areas in the property of the prope intuitions about the way a living musical discourse embodies and conveys structural meanings. With these virtues at the violinia's command, it was disconcerting to me to find myself somewhat borred by Perlman's performance of the Beethoven Sonata No. 6 in A. This is, admittedly, not one of Beethoven's more spectacular works, even among the violin sonatas. It makes no claims to monumental generates. It storms no heights. But for me to experience buredom while listening to it, in a sectionarse, be some of the world's foremore violinists. performance by one of the world's foremost violinists, indicated that something was wrong somewhere. nuance — and also the same aura of charming, tender, relaxed dullines. The Grumiaux-Haskil recording, in contrast, sounded like an entirely different piece of music. Instead of relaxed tenderness, what I heard was intense happiness. Instead of gentle whimsy, there was driving energy and brilliance. What was sweetness for Paris energy and brilliance. What was sweetness for June 1997, and the state of the contrast of the state of th more incisively outlined: the total were softer, the arches were softer, the arches were lofter, the accents were sharper, the contrast were livelier. Even in single notes, the expressive swelling and subsidence singers call a messa disore was regularly more extreme in Grumiaux's playing than in Perlman's. The result was more tension, more drive, more varied (and stronger) emotion, more drama throughout. If Perlman's performance sounded a bit dull by itself, it came off as positively soporific when juxtaposed with Grumiaux's.

The contrast in the C Minor Sonata, an inherently The contrast in the C Minor Sonata, an inherently more passionate work, was less striking, but it was audible there too — and not in Perlman's favor. At least, not from my point of view. There are doubtless many music lovers who prefer Perlman's suavely proportioned byricism in these works, or who can comfortably accept both ways of approaching the Beethoven scores. My own notion of approaching the Beethoven scores. My own notion of Beethoven, developed and instructed by performances such as Grumiaux's (or Heifetz's, or Szigeti's, or Szeryng's), makes this otherwise wonderful musician's Beethoven performances seem ultimately disappointing. If only Perlman would ply Beethoven with the dazele he imparts to Bazzini's La Ronde des Lutins ("The Dance of the Goblims')!

THE SPORTING BOX by Patrick Daugherty

It must have killed him, being a second stringer, standing on the sidelines in his squeaky clean, red- and white uniform, watching his term go under, watching the time tick down; a championship game, and they still word put him in.

You won't find any stats on be Montana after last Simaly's 30-20 loss to the Coowbeys, loe didn't play; he rode the bench.

Young is a very good quartechack, good enough to start for any team in the NEL, but he's not the greatest. There's only one greatest, and he didn't play. It's hard o's blaime the Niness for that. Young is elague NIVE belt is beam to 15 victories, and is the future of the franchise. It would be unthinkable to yank him, inconceivable after his accomplishments this seaon.

But I don't think Joe cares about that. I think Joe knows in his guts he could have won't hat game.

But I don't think Joe cares about that. I think Joe knows in his guts he could have won't hat game.

They will have the greatest by taking other people's advice, Joe thinks he can play two more years. He has said that it he can't start for the Niners, he wants to be traded. The club says they won't trade him.

They will trade him. Joe will last at somewher next year.

They will trade him. Joe will last at somewher next year.

They will make that kind of trade will probably he a team in trouble, which means a team that has a mediocre line, mediocre receivers. Playing behind that, Joe could appear to be mortal, to even he. .ordinary. And every time he takes a hit, every time a 300 pound lineman sacks him. many of an wall remember his back operation and will wrince as he goes down, hold our breath until he gets up.

But when you are the greatest, you make that call. An did almost everyone that has come before you — from Muhammad Alt to Babe Rath — has made that same call wrong, well. Link was then, this is now, Just please, Joe, for god's sakes, don't play for Tampa Bay.
