why?
The article triggered again all the empathy, frustration, and inner rage I've experienced over the growing number of injustices and violent crimes women have suffered recently at the hands of our male-dominated society: Anita Hill vs. the "Good Ol' Boys" on Capitol Hill; that doubly on Capitol Hill; that doubly unfortunate woman in Glen Ridge, New Jersey; those hapless young girls in Lakewood, California; and every brave woman who has ever had the courage to bring rape charges against her attacker only to find she has now become the victim of a second crime—that of being a woman expecting qual treatment under the law.

or the past 30 years, Gen-eral Atomics scientists have been conducting nuclear been conducting nuclear energy experiments in research laboratories at their La Jolla com-pound. At a U.S. Department of Energy meeting in Oakland last month, the company announced plans to close the labs and decontaminate the area. The proposed cleanup, sure to cost millions, raises questions about what type of radioactive material is in the facility, where the waste will be disposed, and who will fund the project.

The experiments began in 1960, when General Atomics signed the first in a long series of contracts with the energy department. GA scientists were asked to fabricate fuels for "test" nuclear reactors. Since that time, they have tried to develop energy sources for space vehicles, exper-iment with a substance called tritium (which is used to trigger nuclear weapons), and develop a procedure for recycling irradiated fuel rods, a process that some anti-nuclear activists have called "the largest mistake humans have ever made."

"General Atomics has handled radioactive materials in La Jolla for years," says Greg Cook of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the federal agency that monitors nuclear energy companies. The work was sanctioned by the Department of Energy, the State of California, and the NRC, he says. According to Cook, most of the radioactive experiments took.

STRAIGHT THE HIP

Dear Matthew Alice.

Due to recent painful and expensive losses of family members. I'm wondering if it would be legal to construct my own coffic in anticipation of my passing. Also, may I place the bone of dearly departed pets in the box with mee' Finally, cam more than one person (death) occupy the same coffin so that my loved one (human) and I may share our external rest!

Your eternal rest will be preceded by endless cajoling, negotiation, and paperwork, I'm afraid. But if you're determined enough, perhaps you can realize your dream. The law won't stop you, as long as your coffin meets certain construction standards. At one time there were companies that sold kits for home handypersons to build their own. But none of those enterprises seems to be in business anymore. So much for the popularity of plan-ahed interment, at least at the home hobby level. If you have the proper permits, theoretically you and your pals could cory up in your handmade casket when the time comes. There are instances in the country of more than one person burief in a single coffin. For example, a mother and child were burief together in one local cemetery. There's also a woman burief with her pet dog that had died years before and been stilled and key around the bouse for estimental reasons and perhaps, as a surfer conversation starter. Cremated remains of the previously departed are also sometimes burief in a loved one's casket.

Environmental laws restrict what can be placed in a gravesite outside the coffin. One local man was refused the right to be buried with his Harley-Davidson, though that was a decision made by the cemetry management. State law would not have prohibited it, as long as environmental hazards were avoided.

All such requests are very rare, according to most of the mortuary and cemetery managers. I talked to. Each tacfully said they try to accommodate a family's wishes. But one can safely assume they lijus at satefully try to talk you out of anything that pares their profit margin to the bone, as it were. Aside from being a bummer, of course, death is also a business.

Dear Matthew Alice:
What language contains the greatest number of words? I say our very own English language does.
However, a sour co-worker of mine insists that the Arabic language is, in fact, composed of the greatest number of words. Am I happy and smart or is he crabby and correct?

e're sitting in the greenroom at KMEX-TV, on the Paramount lot on Melrose. It's actually a raunchy little lunchroom with a television atop the Coke machines showing Star Trek. Taping for a Mexican talk show is go-ing to begin in about a half hour. The as-sembled young men eat bag suppers and

Suddenly, Mexico's Official Bombshell. Olga Briskin, totters in on an absurdly tall pair of stiletto heels. Actually, in true Mex-ican Sex-Goddess fashion, everything about Olga is somewhat absurd: she is shoehorned into a white late-period Elvis jumpsuit, and she moves as if she were a barely contained explosion of buttocks and breasts. My part-ner, Victor, and I look at each other in disbelief. Olga maneuvers her Leatherette wiegle directly in front of us, then she turns and stares at herself in profile in the wall-length mirrors. We are then treated to an amazing sight: Olga clenches her butt-muscles and m watches, as if in reverie, her naleas rise in

I wrote a book about Tijuana, about the garbage dump-dwellers and the street kids. Incredibly, it was published by Anchor/Dou-bleday. In three months, my little book will oecusy, in turee monns, my intre book will go into three printings, shocking everybody at Doubleday, but mostly shocking me. I'm still reeling from being dumped by my wife, and the media blitz that follows publication is confusing to me, at best. I'm feeling like Mr. Worthless while 30 radio and television shows in a row gush about what I have done.
One morning I do a radio interview on the phone — naked. I lie on my bed and think of the thousands of listeners completely unaware that they're darned lucky I'm on radio and not TV.

I'm on a book tour, and one of the stops on the journey is KMEX. I have just returned from Boulder, Miami, Chicago, San Antonio, San Francisco. I am about to go off to Denver, Tucson, D.C., Boston, Miz San Antonio again. Lafayette, El Paso, upstate

New York. All along the way, I am booked into fabulous rooms in pretentious hotels. In San Francisco, I'm bunked in the Four Seasons; my room has a small office attached in case I need to write, and the bathroom is appointed in gray and rose marble, with a phone beside the toilet. I've been ordering room service for the first time in my life. And I think, lying in my king-sized beds, watching HBO and drinking goodies out of the rooms' wet bars, drinking goodies out of the room's wet have, lam here to talk about starring people on the border. I watch the doormen snag $5 tips for carrying some lazy bastard's bag from the cab to the front desk, and I know that if my friends in Tijumas knew about this, they'd all come across the border on masse: two all come across the border on masse: two descriptions of the control of the control of streets of Amgout doormen wandering the streets of Amgout of the control of the explosive Tina Turner 'do add at least three feet to her presence. She has traded in her jumpsuit for a skin-tight sequined ner jumpsuit for a skin-tignt sequines evening gown with a see-through panel that plunges toward her navel. She never looks at me. Not once, even when we're being made up. Then she further amazes us all by grab-bing her breasts and wrestling them into a more cleavage-deepening attitude.

We wait in a grimy news studio next door to the actual taping. Olga has taken over the set. I stare at her on the monitor. She is complaining about sexism. She lays into men for heir ridiculous interest in her bosoms.

I am distracted by a newsman rushing in and sitting behind the news deck. Are flight goes on, and he's reading the "news at lorgo-in on pie air." I'm about ten feet my complete the start of the start of Toys from the latest "91Xmas" drive are still holding together, though conditions in these dirt barrios are hard on things. The dolls have a sort of leprous skin condition, their arms and legs tattooed with a mysteri-ous patina of gray-brown biological smears. All the dolls are naked.

We munch Taco Bell burritos — Negra's favorite food. Lately, I have subjected her to a spate of enthusiastic media-types, eager for a touching photo-op. She endures their attentions with aplomb. In fact, she has become adept at interviews and photo sessions.
When I pull up with a van-load of gringos, she doesn't even blink — she puts her baby in my arms and heads inside to get spruced

She asks me if Olga Briskin was a cabrona. Victor, one of the old hands of the mis-sionary group I wrote about in my book, alWe bring them through town, to Negra's house. Then Negra takes over, walking them through her barrio as they furiously snap shots of shack, dogs, wrecked cars, the fab-ulous view of San Diego, the picturesque dirty children. We hop into the van, and Victor pilots us to the Tijuans garbage dump. Dante and Bosch are often cited as references when the newsguys get a look at the dompe, the many little graves on the hills, and the outer ring of shacks. They are also surprised at We bring them through town, to Negra's

But how are the and grimy people are working? How could you know that trash picking is a skilled lalor, and it is passed down from generation to generation? That the garbage-pickers are not embarrassed in the least — might even be proud? That this work feeds children, clothes families, buys gooreine, brings in small but fairly steady amounts of money.

Visiting the Tijuana dump is no different from visiting a friend at work. It is, after all, a factory. And the trath-pickers are busy—dering about. And most of them are Work-

One fascinating event came from this cul-ture-clash of gringo visitors and dump-dwellers, and it illustrates perfectly what I'm talking about.

for my book, is a Harvard professor of pho-tography. The dump-people have come to know and value him. After having been subjected him. After having been subjected to his photo-safaris (over 10,000 pictures taken on four visits), they jokingly refer to him as the terrorist with a camera." One day, Booth was shooting the dompe when a clay cliff some 50 yards away collapsed, burying a woman alive. He dropped all his equipment—cameras, lenses, film, vest—and ran to the landslide with several

The cameramen can't resist getting a shot of me looking off in the distance. Often, I'm standing with Negra, and we stare out at the sea through billows of predatory dump gulls. Actually, it's a rather beautiful sight, all those hundreds of gulls swirling like a living cloud of log. Sometimes, there seem to be thousands of them, and their shrill chorus oversands of them, and their shrill chorus oversands of them, and their shrill chorus over-arches the dompe, a high note above the tidal sound of tractors and crashing glass. seniors are trying to live on their Social Security income, too proud to seek SSI assistance, which to them has the stigma of welfare. These seniors have given up trying to "live" and are attempting only to survive. These survivors are liv-ing in downtown San Diego. What is their life like?

Let's consider housing, specifically the Golden West Hotel, lo-cated at Fourth and G Street. This Quarter site with spacious lobbies and stained-glass skylights, offers private rooms with sink and telephone beginning at $75 a week or $255 a month. The hotel is clean and well managed. Its upstairs area has been recently repainted and recarpeted. The front desk staff, with one exception, is courteous and helpful. Most tenants seem to be seniors, with a sprinkling of unemployed men looking for jobs and trying to stretch the little money they have. For some of these men the next step will be one of the shelters, and then the streets.

Some among the Golden West residents appear to be loonies or talking and laughing, their loud-mouthed "shits" and "motherfuckers" overheard by everyone Certainly, any respectable woman considering tenancy, upon enter-ing the hotel and seeing and hearing these undesirables, would immediately withdraw from the ore than any restaurant meal 1 love picnics.

Toss into a basket almost any sandwich, chicken leg, deviled egg, celery blade (with its pale hollow and strings to pull), and cool juice to sip, take me away to loll somewhere quiet, green, and shaded, and I'm daffy with pleasure. Picnics are a relatively recent develop-ment. Western man had to put many centuries between himself and his Paleolithic forebears, had to suffer increasing formality at the dinner table before he could permit himself to carry food outside in pretty baskets. Pique-nique first appeared in a French dictionary in 1692. The word then referred to what we would call a potluck. It was a meal eaten indoors to which everyone present had contributed food or paid a fee to Jean Anthelme Brillat-Savarin, who died in 1826, wrote about hunting luncheons in The Physiology of Taste, the first book that treated gastronomy as Art. Mest often these treated gastronomy as Art. Mest often these luncheons were men-only affairs. But occa-sionally ladies ("our wives, our sisters, and our pretty cousins and their equally pretty friends") were invited. Brillat-Savarin's ladies, "decked with feathers, and with flowers," pleted until the 1860s. (Margaret Visser: The Rituals of Dinner) By then, the French Rev-

I he peter days of restaurant dining and the rise of great days of restaurant dining and the rise of great days of restaurant dining and the rise of great days of restaurant dining and the rise of great days of restaurant dining and the rise of great days of the rest of the res straight boulevards and the great park at Bois de Boulogne where picnickers dappled the grounds. (Peter Watson: From Manet to Manhetten)

At about the same time time barron relaxi-mann was remaking Paris, the invention of the collapsible tin paint tube and portable easel made possible landscape painting in the open air. Painters began to fill canvases with picnics and picnickers. The most infawoman wearing the slip recedes into the painting's distance, where she bathes in a shallow stream; she seems more lawn ornashallow stream: she seems more lawn of mannent than picnicker. The second woman — model Victorine Meurent — leans to the left of the painting's dead center. (Friedrich believes Victorine also posed for the painting's second woman.) She sits next to her pale blue frock and straw skimmer. Near her bare hip are an open picnic basket and peaches, cherries, and a round loaf. The beautiful Vic-torine, wearing only her opalescing birthtorine, wearing only her opaiescing birth-day suit, stares out boldly at the viewer, her smile ironic, amused. (Not long after posing here, Victorine served as model for Manet's Olympia, where again she gazes out at the viewer with this self-assured, mesmerizing

Viewers considered Dejeuner sur L'Herbe scandalous when it was exhibited in 1863. Victorine's nudity was not specifically the Victorine's nuclity was not specifically the issue. Parisians casily accepted the studio-made allegorical history paintings afluter with half-clothed mythical subjects and summing up a moral lesson. (And in his picarating Manter 'quotet' 'older, long-accepted paintings by Giorgione and Raphael in which nudes were focal points.) But because Manet's figures were sketched out of doors, and the men garbed in contempodors.

At these hunting lunches, wrote Brillat-Savarin, "The world is our dining room and the sun itself is our light." As for food and drink, "Everything that can well be carried away from the most knowing culinary lab-oratories" (plates of turkey in transparent jelly, paté, salad) was served, together with

"potent champagne."

The change in the meaning of piquenique, from "everyone bringing food" to "everyone eating out of doors," was not com-

The men wear dark jackets, light-colored trousers, and black caps. (According to Otto Friedrich's Olympia, Paris in the Age of Manet, Manet Srothler Eugen, or perhaps his brother Gustave, or possibly a combination of the two served as model for one man and Manet's brother-in-law, the other.) The ing and nothing at all, the public declared itself shocked and disgusted. There was nothing to be learned here, no battle between Spirit and Flesh in which Flesh is overcome. There was only flesh and the peaches and cherries, fruit that next Victorine's milky skin appear rather shopworn. We were not a picnicking family. I first learned about picnics when my father read to me from The Wind in the Willows, Winnie the Pooh, and Johanna Spyri's Heidi, the story of the little orphan sent to live with her grandfather in a hut high in the Swiss

Alps. (Anyone who knows Heidi only as the travesty filmed with Shirley Temple in the title role, please read the book.) It is Heidi's first day in her new home. Peter the goatherder is to take her with him while he moves goats to new grass.

Grandfather packs Heidi's food into Peter's leather bag: bread and crumbly goat cheese.
He adds a bowl, telling Peter, "The child cannot drink the milk as you do from the and drink. A friend, or, friends. A place.

The basket need not be one of those thou-sand-dollar fitted Fortnum & Mason won-ders. Even a good-size Easter basket will do, lined with one pretty cloth napkin and cov-ered over with another.

As for food, a picnic can be as simple as good bread, sweet butter, Brie, fruit, and a sweet. But it's not a matter of just tossing peanut butter sandwiches and Diet Fresca into a paper sack (although it can be when two people are newly in love).

A picnic rule that I think makes sense is that the lunch picnic should be able to be eaten with fingers; the dinner picnic may re-quire silver. Lunch can be narrow finger quire silver. Lunch can be narrow inger sandwiches, roast beef-wrapped gherkins, deviled eggs, stuffed celery sticks, cornichons, radish roses, olives green and black, lemon-ade, iced tea or iced coffee, and oatmeal cookies. Dinner is poultry, white soft rolls, rice salad with ginger and chopped Brazil nuts and green onion and tiny chunks of dried apricot, a green bean and button mush room vinaigrette, or papaya and asparagus salad. For dessert pack berries or melon balls salad. For dessert pack berries or melon balls or Bing and Queen Anne cherries, lemon curd bars, pecan squares, or lacy cookies. For me, any pionic, lunch or dinner, must include deviled eggs, I am all for the simplest preparations side the boiled egg on the horizontal, mash the yolk with Best Foods mustrad, a pinch of celery seed, and no slid and II have tasked deviled egg lillings massed. with deviled ham, liverwurst paste, chopped chives, green olive, even vile curry powder. Pure egg taste, particularly now that eggs are forbidden in so many diets, seems the best. Each egg half can then be cradled in its own lettuce or spinach leaf and packed tightly into a dish, like candy in a candy box.

The picnic feigns informality. Like one of those pretty women who gives her blonde hair a windswept tousle with careful blow hair a windowest toule with careful blow-drying, the piene a trive after the appearance of casual are shucks ease. dmirer, I must report that the admirer, I must report that the conductor's approach to the "Jupiter" Symphony struck me as misjudged. This "Jupiter" was, without doubt, graceful, shapely, carefully detailed, and beautifully played. But it came off as rather small and dra-matically limited, like the composer, early or bestral

A tendency toward small-ness or toward understating drama is certainly not charac-teristic of David Atherton, so I must assume either that he chose this approach to the "Jupiter" as more suitable to the size of the small orchestra, or that he was experimenting with a potentially intriguing perspective on the music. In contrast, there was not the slightest touch of miniaturiza-tion in the brilliant, explosive, which — coming at the very end of the concert series — capped the festival magnifi-cently with the affirmation of a strikingly different approach: unequivocally major Mozart, and unequivocally major Atherton.

formances of great interest were Barber's Adagio for Strings (flamboyantly slow, as though to underline the orchestra's per-fect intonation and absolute fect intonation and absolute unanimity, a performance as intimate as that of a string quar-tet, with incredible pianissimi) and the Boccherini Cello Con-certo in B-flat. I point out these facts not to diminish Long's collages but simply to emphasize their special flavor. Using a medium common to modern artists for much of the last century, she has firmly impressed it with her own personal sensibility. O'Brien and his designers have given the show a primitive, even primordial look (and then bring it forward in time, as if the oft-told tale were being re-told in successive eras). Throughout, one isn't aware that the show is being directed at all. The story, told so clearly is too engrossing. It's only af-ter the play is finished that one realizes how effectively O'Brien has organized Shakespeare's vi sion of chaos.

we're engrossed in what is being done, not how. But there's an exception. No actor playing Lear cas shake the mystate of the state of t mentators have said the part's too big for the stage. And there are portions of Hal Holbrook's performance where this is the case. His is no Promethean Lear bringing fire to mankind on a burning wheel. He's far less apocalyptic than the part needs, and there are even times when his Lear slurs his lines so much he seems more drunk than mad. In short, if the role were wouldn't reach all the high ical size needed to bellow Lear through the storm and match it verbal joit for lightning bolt. But when Holbrook's in the middle and lower ranges — i.e., the more human-scaled — he's something to behold. Harley Granville-Barker, a glited director-critic, once said, "at best, the actor can be but a token of the ideal Lear." When token of the ideal Lear. When token of the ideal Lear. When token of the ideal Lear. The token of the ideal Lear. The token ical size needed to bellow Lear an ash tree than an oak — meaning flexible, not plodding, whippetlike. Holbrook's Lear also has these qualities. He also has these qualities. He never just plants his feet wide apart and orates his lines to the back row. Holbrook gives the part what you might call a wide "lateral range," an admirable ment that shifts easily from folly to cruelty (in acts one and two, where Lear is actually the vil-lain) and even to wit and spry sexuality in the later scenes. There are times — and this is less — when Lear is funny. And in Holbrook's final scenes, in Holbrook's final scenes, when the character resembles a bundle of old rags, there is no denying Holbrook's Lear all the empathy we can muster. The large cast is one of the strongest ever assembled at the Old Globe. Richard Easton plays Gloucester as if he's living in a universe parallel to Lear's, and his powerful performance suggests that someday, Easton should essay the role of the king. Robert Sean Leonard and Jonathan Walker play Glouces-ter's sons, Edgar and Edmund. Leonard is first-rate, especially when Edgar assumes the guise of homeless, crazy Tom O'Bed-lam. Walker's mugging Edmund, by contrast, appears to be playing more for audi-ence approval than for any high stakes within the play itself. His indefinite mix of acting choices results in some comic antics. but where is Edmund's evil in-tent? You can't ask that question about Kandis Chap-pell's Regan or Katherine McGrath's Goneril. Once things get rolling, both amble cooly through the Dark Side as if the irrational were now ra-tional. In Chappell's Regan and James R. Winker's Cornwall, violence has become a conditioned reflex. Ionathan McMurtry doesn't quite get Al-bany across the line from being an ineffectual, "moral fool" to an ineffectual, 'moral fool' to a harbinger of order. Jennifer Van Dyck gives Cordelia a re-gal humanity. William Anton gives Kent a rock-solid patience, the virtue Lear learns to appreciate most. What Patricia Conolly does as the Fool merits special men-tion. This Fool has been there. She has spent many a night on storm-blasted heaths. Humankind has no more surprises mankind has no more surprises in store, and her clowning never quite hides the pain she has known. Thus when Lear un-folds his scheme to divide up the kingdom and his eldest daughters begin their false praises, an immense sadne clouds across Conolly's face. It's as if, like Merlin, the Fool is living backwards in time and has already read the play. "Oh sionate look seems to say, "not this. Not to him!"

Like the cast, the design team is composed of Old Globe all-stars. Ralph Funicello's volve to change scenes, is a rocky, treeless terrain, at the rear of which is a large, ovalshaped stone no Sisyphus could roll uphill. But, one wonders, could it roll downhill? It looks could it foul advantage to the sa if it's perched up there pre-cariously. Just as Lear's upistakes endanger Britain, Funicello has created an arresting image of potential disaster—should that Jurassic egg shake loose and head our way. While Funicello's Learning to the country of the properties of the country of the properties of the properties of the properties nead our way. While runnello s excellent work points back to prehistory, Robert Morgan's magnificent costumes — ev-erything from golden opulence to the tawdry garb of poor Bed-lam beggars — come forward in time from the pre-Christian to the 19th Century, an into the 19th Century, an in-triguing layering of periods and places. David F. Segal's light-ing and Jeff Ladman's sounds are top quality all evening long, but when the script calls for as mean a storm as has ever been—for what Northrop Frye says is "a crossing of the Read Sea in reverse" — the lighting and sound combine, like an in-door fireworks display, to unveil the absolute core of

The La Jolla Phaybouse has un-leashed the energy of George

Once it gets going, the Lisa Peter-son-directed show moves with the speed of Sergius Saranoff's pail-legedly heroic cavalty charge just Prior to act one. The production Ballad of the Blacksmith Miseria Peralta is a humble peas-ant, a blacksmith by trade who works rarely and instinctively gives all he has to the needy. By the end all he has to the needy. By the end of this centuries old Uruguayan follitale, however, Mireria must deal with Jesuc Christ (called "Our Lord" in the pisce), a barried 5t. Peter, a corrupt politics, Gentleman Lili (i.e., Satan), and he has to outwoir Death, the boney one. The Raul Moncada's updated and up-beat translation — directed by the gifted Rene Buch — the simple tale of the simple ta refer to set use. The production has energy and a rich Ballan test-ture. It suffers, however, from lade-ophobias a dear that any but the sufficient strention paid to momentum to flater, Arms and the Man is "serious farce." Except for an eric opening, with young Bains wilding a jun during a steer skin-wing and strength of the companies. The serious farce is serious the exceed half of the oxymoron. By art three, the farcical elements are so over the chop manic that we are watching, in effect, a chase are watching, in effect, a chase are watching, in effect, a chase are watching in effect of the production of the characteristic and the characteristic are watching in effect of the production of the characteristic are watching in effect of the production of the characteristic are watching in effect of the production of the characteristic and th is a delight. In Buch's minimalist is a delight. In Buch's minimalist staging (which offers some very ar-resting mages), the acting is broad-ish, and the barrier between the actors and the audience is bro-ken down. Rob Neukirch, who gives Miseris impressive gymmastic moves, narrates the story and forges a round-the-campfire-like bond with the audience, Blackomini-tor's chacked with balde min scene. There is much debunking, in a broad acting style, but little sense of what is being debunked. True. Shaw's main targets, idealized love and war, have been hit hard since he wrote the play in 1894. But Shaw was after more than these. He and the skede with hidden mean-ings or main profundatives part of its charm, in fact, is the playful wa-ing poken from a filming selemin—e-pecially Death, which for a while is word to go out of wheck. About the only danger in the above is that someone will ally and fall down Robert Weber Federico's steeply Golden and the control of the con-trol of of the con-t isn't chocked with hidden mean poor of being an unappreciated world—in particular. The production, which takes place both then and now, is weakest when it comes to Shaw's targets. We see not not made to the start of th Miseria's sister Pobreza (they are misery' and 'poverty'), goes to some funny financial estremies. Ron Campbell's Gentleman Lili su, Miseria (the Miseria), some sevent sleaze as the governor. And Daniel Faraldo handles one of the script's most humorous conceptions with some of the most humorous acting in the show as a less than rocklike St. Peter. necessary Bryonism Shaw de-tested. Instead, Sergius is defeated too early and too easily and ends up little more than a buffoon. In other roles, Mario Arrambide and Ivonne Coll are enjoyable as Major Paul Petkoff and wife Catherine.

Even a faithful production, by the always capable ever: the ache of diminishing co-nomic horizons in Hadley and, by extension, in the country. Michilinda has things to say. He has yet to find a way to say them effectively. Traister has shaped the sound of the "ache" impres-sively—the play is actually one long, sometines screamine, some Florek's Chaser, who has declared war on the world, is a one-note volcano. Florek has to read clunky dialogue ("I hate myself for not be-ing rich"), and Chaser's furning tantrums grow tedious. As Mickey "the General," burly Wren T. the General, burly Wren T. Reissues Dave Clark Five finally anthologized he biggest news in reissues recently has been the impending release of an anthology by British Invasion group the Dave Clark Five. While the DC5 wasn't on the level of the Beatles, Rolling Stones, Kinks or even the Searchers musically for a couple of years the band was second in popularity only to the Beatles in the U.S., racking up a string of eight Top 10 hits and inspiring its own brand of mania.

Until now no DC5 catalog has appeared on CD. Clark, the group's drummer and leader, secured the rights to the group's recordings early and held out for the best deal he could get. The result is The Dave Clark Five Anthology (Hollywood), a two-CD compendium of the group's biggest hits and then some.

Not just parts of bodies, but whole jokes, got lost in the process. The new vogue for "restorations," rediscoverses, Golden Amwiersary revivals, and such, most have had something to do move, however, to look as little strange to see the bodikie irrage marooned in mow, however, to look as little strange to see the bodikie irrage marooned multiplex screens: the absence of an adjustable framing curtain has never been more actuely left. Which is one way of gauging how experimental a work, how groundbreaking a work, how trail-remember.) This is also an explanation of why it seems to me to go a little down in the middle, or why the middle seems to go a little fat. And why, moreover. I am not about to revise my first prefaction of the supper of the Rule Number One of local moviegoing is that if you can see it at Mann's Cinema 21 or Valley Circle, do so, even if you could much more easily see it at your nearest shopping mall multiples. Currently that means Hocus Pocus—though it pains me to think of anyone having to see that one—and Free Willy. Save the whales, by all means. But save the dinosaurs while you're at it.

Afterthought to my discussion of foreign-film titles two weeks back (or more exactly, afterthought to the parenthesis to do with English dubbing): it is doubtless difficult, possibly unpleasant, for some types of people to remember that Fistful of Dollars and Once upon a Time in the West, just like things by Bergman and Antonioni, are foreign films, that Barbarella and Spr-ins of the Dead are also foreign; that The Bird with the Crystal Plumage and Suprine are foreign; that Hercules Un-chained and The Ginnt of Marthan are foreign; that Godzlilu is foreign; Pists of Fury is foreign, Carmen Bay is foreign, Fewer and fewer people will of course remember such movies at all. The early-Seventies boom in hard core pornography obviated the hings by Bergman and Antonioni, are core pornography obviated the ooh-la-la stuff that we had been im-porting from the continent (including, in dubbed form, such things as Malle's

A Very Private Affair, Vadim's Cit of Love, De Sica's, Visconti's, Fellini's Boccaccio '70, De Broca's, Demy's, Godard's, and others' Seven Capital Sins); similarly, the likes of Norris, Seagal, similarly, the likes of Norris, Seagal.

An Damme, and Ides we forget Tom Laughlin chased away the Hong Kong martial artists. The Exorist and its prolific offspring drove out the dubbed equivalent, their Hollywood equivalents. English dubbing was naturally al-ways held in low repute by purists (though the visual distraction of sub-titles could hardly pass any test of purity, either), and yet in its heyday it purity, either), and yet in its heyday it opened also d'avenues since sealed off. To use a loaded term dubbing did al to to advance the cause of cinematic integration. And it was in that context that I expressed concern that the present trend toward the untranslated foreign-film title would widen the chasm between the import and the homespun. I can understand the desire of foreign-film distributors to separate—or segregate, as it were separate — or segregate, as it were — their product from the Hollywood vatheir product from the Hollywood va-riety, to stress that it provides an alternative to it. (An approach very milke the past practice of giving An-glo pseudonyms to the stars and directors of spagbett Westerns, for example, in an attempt to buffalo the American consumer.) But this sep-perature of the published of the sep-tence of the published of the pro-torious on all fronts of the film world. But that's a large subject.

Here we are, just over halfway through the movie year, and already the directors' names I have run into for only the first or second time, or can't recall having run into more than t have piled up to the following dimensions (not wanting to pad the list for dramatic effect, I have left off the for dramatic effect, I have left off the annes of directors of foreign films and documentaries, though I have in-cluded a few names familiar in descriptions of the control of the description of the control of the former, Robert Harron, Frank Mar-shall, Carl Schenkel, Alan Spencer, Patrick Habuppl, David Picc, Nicole Conn, Luis Ilous, John Turturno, Jon Annel, Goorge Sulzer, Gere Quin-man, Stay Cochran, E. Mas Frye. Thomas Carter, Robert Rodriguez, Thomas Carter, Robert Rodriguez, Robert Radler, Robert Lieberman, Robert Radler, Robert Lieberman, Robert Greenwald, Mikael Salomon, Luis Mandoki, Tamra Davis, Stuart Gillard, Matthew Meshekoff, Stephen Sommers, Alan Shapiro, David Nikeye Fenns, Marshall Herskowit, Jeremiah Chechik, Yurek Bogayevic, Michael Steinberg, Mike Binder, Fed Demme, Warton Light, Elli Pebble, Rocky, Morton and Annabel Jankel, Albert Hughes and Allen Hughes, James La-pine, Tom Flynn, Brain Gibson, Nora pine, Tom Flynn, Brian Gibson, Nora Ephron, Temistocles Lopez, Michael Lessac, Daniel Stern, Robert Klane, Lessac, Daniel Stern, Robert Klane, Kenny Ortega, Steve Barron, Jonathan Heap. (Anyone who can cite the ap-propriate film tile for each filmmaker is hereby appointed sergeant-at-arms of the Society for the Preservation of Auteurs.) That computes to some-where between three-fifths and two-thirds of the total field. Names like Taylor Hackford, Joel Schu-macher, Jim Abrahams, and Sam Raimi emerge as persevering veterans The rare Alan Rudolph, Joe Dante The rare Alan Rudolph, Joe Dante, and Steven Spielberg can be embraced as practically members of the family. The even rarer Sydney Pollack and Sidney Lumet loom as national institutions. New blood is all very well, but one hates to be made to feel like a member.

PICTURE STORY

by the San Diego Historical Society

he Thomas McConnell Peteet family of San Diego, snapped after the family's "Shame Suicide" in February of 1926. The story, given in a deposition by Peteet two days before his death, seemed the stuff of hard-boiled fiction: the elder Peteets, accompanied by their two daughters Audrey and Clyde (yes, Clyde), had journeyed to Tijuana on the last Saturday of January and taken two rooms in the Hotel San Diego with the aim of doing some light gambling and drinking. Their pleasure trip turned horrific the following Wednesday when the two girls were raped after allegedly being given knockout drinks in a Tijuana bar.

It was in the Oakland Cantina, Peteet claimed, that the bartender introduced him and his girls to Tijuana's chief of police and then slipped them a round of "Mickey Finns." (Mrs. Peteet had not accompanied them out that evening; she was feeling ill, and had. remained in the hotel room.) Peteet recalled, "The Chief asked me if he could dance with my younger daughter and I said that he could, they danced once, and I bought a round of drinks and then the chief did the same, after I had taken that drink remember nothing ... Two days after giving his deposition, Peteet, his wife and Audrey were found dead in their Arch Street home, unlit gas burners opened wide; Clyde was still alive, but died later at Mercy Hospital.

Terri Schorr and Mike Schaefer

MEXICO, FLORIDA, LAS VEGAS, the desert, forest, beach, Goodnatured, confident, adult fun, executive engineering career, 37. Libra to the max, clean and well mannered, nice looks, outdoors type, good health, spirited, play hard, play soft. Light smoker. Looking for white, 30-40, similar qualities, confident, competent, casual.

Mike: The first time she came over and met my daughter, it went so well

Mike: I tried to be as honest as possible in my Phone Matches™ ad. Because it made a difference as to who called me.

Mike: I wasn't looking for someone to go out and party with. I was looking for the right girl.

Terri: I was looking for someone to share my life with, so I ran a Phone MatchesTM ad too, but he didn't see it.

Mike: I had a lot of responses. I heard from doctors, lawyers - some real substantial people. I even met the vice-president of a bank.

Terri: We played phone tag for a while, but our first conversation lasted three hours. We talked about politics, kids, music, morals, values ... everything from A to Z.

Terri: Both being Libra, we are very much alike - the way we think, the things we say, even the way we raise our children. Mike: Everything is 50/50 with us. Absolutely no double standards.

Terri: I think it's more like 90/90. To each other we Terri: We've known each other ten months, but it seems like years. We're getting married on July 10th.

Mike: It took me a long time to find Terri. I wouldn't trade her for a winning lottery ticket.

Terri: We fit together well. Our relationship is like a tapestry; we weave a little each day and it's turning out quite beautiful.

THE SPORTING BOX by Patrick Daugherty

On August 1, 1992, the Padres were 4-1/2 games out of first place in the NL West. That was over 25 million dollars ago, the amount of money that has been "trimmed" from the 1992 payroll to date. The operative term is "trimmed", you know, "trimmed," as in the way General Motors "trims" assembly plants in the Midwest.

the seventh inning. San Diego Pad Phil Plantier trotted out to left field defend-ing against the Cincinnati Reds. A day like many others. But on that day, at that moment, Plantier was the most experienced Pad on the field. He has less than two years of major-league ball under his belt and was already club granddaddy.

Better, if you took up every patter better in an weak arteracy mon grandausty.

Better if you took up every patter better in a superior would be less than that of the Cincinnat shortstop, Barry Latkin. That is to say, less than 5 years and 40 days. That's right, all Patters players, combined, had less than 5 years, 40 days experience in the bigs.

Even better, much better for Tom Werner and his Ship of Fool, all nine

Padres Jump Gun, Institute Gays-In-The-Military Policy

And it makes sense; if you had Bounder the Dog as commissioner, sooner or later you'd wind up having to yay for dog food. Why get it started?

Although President Clinton's new gays-in-the-military policy has not been well received, it seems to be doing just fine for the Padres. The Pada got a jump and instituted Clinton's gays-in-the-military policy last fall. 'Don't ask, iff this is a major-league team), don't flet (the public that your plan is to hire cheap, lose games, and make money from shared league TV revenue), don't pursue (any player with lealthy?). Benember, here at the San Diego Padres, it's about putting more money into rich people's pockets.

Baseball in San Diego is getting to be more and more like professional boxing. You check out 5 or 6 championship fights a year and ignore the rest because they re to hopelessly corrupt or uncompetitive.

But of course this attitude begs the question, "What should we do with the Padres!"

And it makes sense; if you had Bounder the Dog as commissioner, soone the Padrest?

1. If, for some insane, sexually perverted, antisocial reason, you feel you must actually attend a Padres game, bring a can of vegetables for one of the players.

2. Pressure your city council personhood to have the Padres declared a public noisance and shut them down for the rest of the year. Believe me, no one will notice.

3. Ship Werner and general manager Randy Smith to Bosnia in exchange for future considerations, a buck-and-a-half cash, and two nights free at Madam Chee-Chee's House of Pleasure. This is a quality-for-quality trade.

Declare Jack Murphy Stadium possessed; perform an exorcism on the entire edifice. Just getting through the permit process will take six months.
 Keep chanting, "Football is coming. Football is coming."

The Vegas Line

If the Padres get in a deeper financial mess, will Werner sell players' first-born male children on the theory that the gene pool is worth something?
