ou definitely don't forget," Diane Galley says. Time body dad in sky-blue pajamas, she's curled up in a "papuan" chair in the living room of her La Mesa apartment. Watery eyes, huge in her pinched face, rest perusing on yours for long minutes. "I'd say 80, 85 percent of people don't forget." Her voice, a child's soprano, stops and starts. Chardon lobby Wins Converts During Four-Day Pork Fest

By Melinda Pawlewich

San Diego turned out to be the location of a "walk and talk." For several days, a mix of lobbyists, politicians, and government officials gathered at the annual National Rifle Association's Pork-Fest, with the aim of influencing legislative decisions. The event provides a forum for discussion and networking among elected officials, industry representatives, and various interest groups. The National Rifle Association (NRA) lobbyist group was among the participants, offering various incentives to win over politicians. This year, the grand prize was a rifle, adding an element of excitement to the proceedings. The week-long event, featuring a range of activities from meetings to exhibits, offers numerous opportunities for influencing legislation.

Dealers were notified that if they did not sign the new contract by July 31, they would no longer be provided with newspapers and newswrack locks would be removed.

The Union-Tribune's Midnight Massacre

by Thomas A. Arnold

This isn't exactly the best time of the year for the San Diego Union-Tribune. After years of cutting costs, the company has to find a way to cut more costs. The latest round of layoffs was announced last week. The Union-Tribune's staff, which had been forced to work long hours due to budget cuts, was hit hard. The layoffs didn't just affect editorial staff, but also those in the circulation and production departments. The newspaper's circulation has been declining, and the company is struggling to come up with a new plan to turn things around. The financial situation has prompted the Union-Tribune to make tough decisions in order to stay afloat.

Sea Grass for the Soul
By Rick Heller

There were Native American clans, little houses, and copses of pines. The place was a thawApril, almost like the country of my childhood. The whole thing was kind of magical, and the people seemed to be part of it, living in harmony with the land.

The grasses on the beach were so beautiful—long, slender stalks that swayed gently in the breeze. I couldn't help but stop and admire them. They were a reminder of nature's beauty and how we should cherish and respect it.

I decided to take some of the grasses home with me. I knew they would make a wonderful addition to my garden, and I was excited to see how they would grow.

As I was walking back, I noticed a small sign that said, "Buy One, Get One Free." I couldn't resist the temptation and bought a few more bunches of grasses. I was happy with my purchase, and I knew my garden was going to look amazing.

Later that day, I planted the grasses in my garden. I was thrilled to see how well they were doing. They added a touch of green to the landscape, and I was already looking forward to the next season to see how they would grow even more.

The experience of finding these grasses and bringing them home was a wonderful reminder of the beauty of nature. I was grateful for the opportunity to appreciate and enjoy their beauty, and I knew it would be a memory I would cherish for a long time.
When Adoption Leads To Obsession

by Mary Lang

When adoption leads to obsession, it can be a source of great pain and suffering. In this article, we explore the true story of a woman who became obsessed with her adopted child.

The woman, who will be referred to as Jane, was adopted as a baby and grew up in a loving family. However, as she grew older, she began to suspect that her adoption was not legal, and that her biological parents were seeking to reclaim her.

Jane's adoptive parents were surprised by her suspicions, and tried to reassure her that her adoption was legal and valid. However, Jane was not satisfied with their explanation, and began to research adoption law on her own.

She discovered that her adoption was indeed illegal, and that her biological parents had been騙された。Jane's adoptive parents, who were in their 60s, were shocked and devastated by this revelation. They had never imagined that their adopted daughter would become so obsessed with her biological identity.

As Jane's beliefs grew stronger, she began to isolate herself from her adoptive family. She stopped attending family gatherings and started spending more time alone, reading books and researching adoption law.

Her adoptive parents were concerned about her wellbeing, and tried to intervene. They offered to help her find her biological parents, but Jane refused their help. She wanted to do it on her own, and to uncover the truth for herself.

After several years of searching, Jane finally tracked down her biological parents. They were in their 80s, and lived in a distant state. Jane was overjoyed to reconnect with her biological family, but also felt guilty for the way she had treated her adoptive family.

Jane's adoptive parents were heartbroken by her actions, and felt betrayed by her decision to choose her biological parents over them. They had always been there for her, and had provided for her needs, but Jane had chosen to ignore their love and support.

In the end, Jane was left to face the consequences of her actions. She had to deal with the emotional pain of losing her adoptive family, and the legal repercussions of her adoption.

This story serves as a reminder of the importance of understanding adoption law and the complexities of identity. It also highlights the importance of open communication and support in any family, regardless of its structure.

Sally Speelman envies artists who make sensible, practical things, like beautiful pots or plates.

"It's a completely different thing for me. You have to do things practical things. I can't just do an abstract form or something. I have to do it and sell it as a product."

(First In A Series Of Ads On How To Get The Home You Want)

If You Think You Need 20% Down, You Could Be 15% Off.

For a lot of us, a down payment for a house seems like an insurmountable task. Therefore the idea of taking the first step toward buying a house seems out of reach. But it's not as bad as it seems. A lot of people are getting into the housing market with less than 20% down. Here's how:

For example, if you plan to buy a home with a $500,000 loan, you need to come up with $50,000. But if you can only come up with $75,000, you can use that money to your advantage. By putting down even less, you can still buy a home.

If you can only come up with $75,000, you can use that money to your advantage. By putting down even less, you can still buy a home.

There are many developments in Southern California that are making it possible to buy a home with less than 20% down. Here are three that are currently available:

1. The Del Mar Plaza development in Solana Beach.
2. The Carlsbad development in Carlsbad.
3. The Carlsbad development in Carlsbad.

Reader Skates Sharp Edge Of Obsession

This issue of the San Diego Union-Tribune features an article on the dangers of skateboarding and the importance of safety gear. The article highlights the story of a skateboarder who suffered severe injuries and stresses the need for awareness and prevention.

Let's go to the gym...

A few weeks ago, a young skateboarder was a victim of a severe accident while riding on Half Moon Bay. The skateboarder, who was wearing protective gear, lost control of his board and collided with a metal railing, causing a severe head injury. The accident was captured on video and went viral, sparking a conversation about the importance of safety in skateboarding.

According to experts, skateboarding is a sport that requires a high level of skill and coordination, and it can be dangerous without proper safety measures. The article emphasizes the importance of wearing helmets, pads, and other protective gear to prevent serious injuries.

The article also highlights the efforts of local organizations like the San Diego Skateboard Federation to promote safety and awareness in the skateboarding community. The federation offers workshops and clinics to teach skateboarders about safety and proper techniques.

The article ends with a call to action for skateboarders to prioritize their safety and make informed decisions when engaging in the sport. It encourages the community to come together to support one another and create a safer environment for everyone to enjoy skateboarding.

Planes of Magic and Wonder in Sonoland - By Adam Pertuty

The Uplooters album promised a new song of groups and individuals to sacrifice animals. The results show that they cannot.

South America's primary tourist destinations are undoubtedly the Amazon and the Andes. But there is one more place that offers a unique experience of nature and culture. The Cuzco region of Peru is a must-visit destination for anyone interested in history, adventure, or simply exploring the beauty of the Andes.

The Inca Empire was at its height in the 15th century, reaching its peak under the leadership of the last Inca emperor, Pachacuti. The empire lasted for several hundred years, spanning from the modern-day countries of Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Colombia, and parts of Brazil and Chile. The Inca Empire is known for its engineering feats, such as the construction of the Machu Picchu citadel and the Inca Road System, which connected the various parts of the empire.

The Cuzco region is rich in Inca heritage, with numerous archaeological sites and historical monuments. Some of the most notable include the Sacsayhuamán fortress, the Q'inquasillo, and the Temple of the Sun. These sites are not only important historically, but also offer stunning views of the surrounding landscape.

In addition to the historical sites, the Cuzco region is also home to a diverse array of wildlife. The high altitude and varied landscape provide a habitat for many unique species, including the Andean Condor and the Puna Cavy. The Cuzco region is also a popular destination for birdwatchers, with over 1,500 species of birds recorded in the area.

Aside from the natural beauty, the Cuzco region is also known for its vibrant culture. The region is home to a variety of indigenous communities, each with their own unique traditions and customs. The local festivals, such as the Inti Raymi, offer a glimpse into the rich cultural heritage of the region.

Overall, the Cuzco region is a must-visit destination for anyone interested in history, nature, or culture. With its beautiful landscapes, rich heritage, and diverse wildlife, the Cuzco region offers something for everyone.
Four Tales of Fandom, Love, and Desperation

Only five years ago I was made to feel the ultimate shame for being an ex-Durannie.

The following piece was submitted in response to an advertisement in the Backstage seeking music stories.

The name game. Damon, Tamar, some of the tour's Orbit members. A familiar English pub—suds, scones, and a safe place to hang out. But was it the same? It was, and it wasn't. It was the same in the end. They had become something else. They had become a legend. A legend of their own. The music that inspired them and the music that inspired us. We were all part of it. The music that brought us together. That feeling of being part of something greater than ourselves. That feeling of being part of a world where anything was possible. That feeling of being part of a community that loved and supported each other. We were all part of something greater than ourselves. That feeling of being part of something that would last for generations. That feeling of being part of something that would be remembered for centuries. That feeling of being part of something that would be传唱. That feeling of being part of something that would be remembered for centuries. That feeling of being part of something that would be传唱.
Les Vegas, the incredibly talented drummer boy, looks like Barney Rubble.

Waiting for the alleged son of the 'Loud Liar' to appear at the Speedohead Theater, I could detect some of the same hairiness, though his hair was a little softer, and there were no horse mackerel in sight. The band also consisted of a couple of bald men who were just hanging around. They gave the impression of being a group of musicians who were just hanging around.

The daughter's world and "living for art" are now a thing of the past, for the world has come to realize the importance of science and invention. The combination of the two, however, has been met with mixed reactions. Some believe that art and science are mutually exclusive, while others argue that they can coexist and even complement each other. The daughter, now a successful artist, finds herself torn between her passion for art and her desire to make a difference in the world. She must decide whether to continue pursuing her dream or to give in to the pressures of society. Meanwhile, the son, still struggling with his inventions, must find a way to convince the world of the importance of his work. Will they be able to overcome the obstacles and fulfill their dreams? Only time will tell.

PICTURE STORY
by the San Diego Historical Society

San Diego aviation legend John J. Montgomery is pictured here in the town of Santa Clara with one of his glider designs in the early 1900s; an alleged, previous flight from an Otay Mesa hill in August of 1883 remains a topic of controversy among aviation historians. A German named Otto Lilienthal is generally credited with being the first person to successfully pilot a manned glider – but not until 1891. Montgomery's brother James later claimed to have witnessed the unverified flight that pre-dated Lilienthal's by eight years.

Historical controversy aside, hometown boosterism has nonetheless secured Montgomery's place in local history; you'll find his name gracing a local airfield, junior high school, and freeway. The single, upright airplane wing jutting out of the crown of a South Bay hill is a monument to him. Montgomery ultimately perished in a glider accident.

Introducing Reader Phone Matches, a Great Place to Meet Single People

You are provided with a free personal matching ad in the Reader Classifieds. You also receive a free "voice mailbox" - a phone service that allows you to record and receive messages from any touch-tone phone.

HOW TO PLACE YOUR AD: To place a free Phone Matches ad, fill out the coupon below and mail it to FAX, 223-6280 in San Diego or (800) 988-2333 in Los Angeles. (Maximum phone ad space is 26 words or less.) No free ads will be accepted over the phone or in person. Ads with more than 26 words cost $1.35 per additional word. We will send you a 7-digit phone number so you can call your ad and listen to voice mail messages. You may also place a paid ad under the ad heading "Paid Tuesdays" on FAX, 223-6280. In your office, 1195 South St., San Diego, California 92101.

HOW TO USE YOUR VOICE MAILBOX: After you receive your mailbox number and private security code, you can record your personal introduction. Call 557-1900, 24 hours a day, and follow the easy instructions. Use your introduction to tell more about yourself than your ads do (see below for guidelines). Give your first name, but DON'T give your last name, phone number, address, etc. You will be assigned a security code, phone numbers and the best times to call them. You can save your personal introduction for up to 2 months.

GET FREE: The Reader suggests that you check Matchmaker, a computer directory of coeds, coeds and the type of people you are seeking. Matchmaker ads are available for any single person who is seeking a career choice (if you are in the military, see your officer in command). The following is a sampling of this directory:

MEET YOUR MATCH! Use the form below to place your FREE, 5-week Phone Matches Ad and get your FREE Voice Mailbox.
