Self-Destructing Into Ollie Fever

It never ceases to amaze me every time I open some local fish-wrapper throughout the nation that there is some writing about the history of skateboarding from a stratospheric plateau ("Summer of the Airborne Poodle," July 29).

While the author of this mishmash of fear and loathing of skateboarding in San Diego documents his accounts from one eager skater's perspective, I have to pray the patient peruser does not take his account as the norm of the skateboarding world from yesteryear. I know, because I was there as a "professional skateboarder," i.e., making money legally from endorsing products and making some manufacturers known to the world by winning city, national, and world titles here in San Diego. I also quietly went to schools promoting safety and exhibiting the now lost art of freestyle skating. My circles were far from the anti-social norm, but I got involved with the skate scene to supplement my chronic, habit-forming disease of surfing, which back then was a big subculture as well.

Today, I see skateboarding self-destructing into ollie fever. A seasoned sport acrobat can spot this as a passing trend. It will be a footnote in the history of skateboarding, just like skiers who started flipping with twists as a religion. Eventually that resulted in waning interest when the stars woke up one day with chronic ailments. Many skaters who have ollied off of roofs and the like are beginning to find that cartilage and muscle tissue cannot be purchased like the skinny wheels that wear out after one day of hard use. There will always be a place for these incredible acrobatic feats for the young at heart, but like the gymnastic acrobats, they know their days are numbered. Meanwhile, back at the ranch with us older dudes who refuse to throw away our skateboards (like the chicken shit who wrote the article), we can rest assured that new technologies are allowing us senior skaters to enjoy carving out a few nice turns with boards designed without kicktails and trucks engineered strictly with mathematical genius for tilt and radical turns.

I'm back from a 16-year sabbatical from San Diego with an itching in my heart to help provide new technological developments in the area of wheels, trucks, and boards so that the nation can once again look to San Diego as the launching pad of fun on wheels from a boarding perspective.

Thanks For The Airborne Poodle

Thanks for a blast from the past in Evan Douglas's recent Reader article, "Summer of the Airborne Poodle." Very well written with a memory of facts, names, and places that could not be matched. I really do appreciate how fortunate we were to experience the skate era of the '70s. My first ride on Cadillac wheels, my first carve on tile, and the time spent at the concourse are all memories to last a lifetime.

Well, I have retired my skating days long ago; however, I have a collection of old skateboard magazines, super-8 films, skate decks, wheels, and trucks packed away for future nostalgic remembrance. Someday we should gather up all the '70s skaters from the past and have a giant reunion.

Evan, thanks again for bringing back to light what the good old days were all about.

Those Lips That Belong To Steven Tyler Are Too Beautiful To Flatter With Compliments

This letter is in response to the disrespectful, hare-brained "Of Note" about Aerosmith written by Gina Arnold in the July 29 issue of the Reader. Miss Arnold, I think you should do some research on the bands you write about before you put out such an unthought-out, fake report on a band! Your lack of knowledge about the band was really shown when you talked about the results of their newest album, Get a Grip, as lamer-than-lame. If you really looked into it, you would have found that the album skyrocketed to number one on the top 50 chart as soon as it came out, Post-sex scandal hits city hall A record number of divorced dads who work for the City of San Diego aren't making their child support payments, and taxpayers are feeling the pinch. When deadbeat parents don't come up with cash for their kids, courts order their wages garnished, and that gets expensive for the city payroll office. Such cases have more than doubled over the last four years, reports assistant city auditor Joe Lozano. The current average is 560 garnishments per biweekly pay period, 440 of them for overdue child-support. Lozano says each garnishment requires writing extra checks "to the wife, to the county, or to the I.R.S." As a result, he recently asked the city attorney for permission to begin charging employees whose wages have been garnished "just to recover the cost of the additional administrative work." Lozano wanted $4 per garnishment, per paycheck, but the city attorney ruled that the most he can charge is $1. Now Lozano isn't so sure he wants to go through with it. "With everything else that is going on in the city as far as cutbacks, we have to ask ourselves, 'Is this something we want to hit the employees with?' After all, they're the ones least able to afford it." — T.K.A.

Blue smoke express Passengers will really be coughing up their fares next month when a retired United Airlines captain from Ramona inaugurates the first-ever airline for smokers. Freedom Air begins operations September 28 with a roundtrip flight between Chicago and Los Angeles, aboard a wide-body L-1011. The roundtrip fare is $446; one-way tickets are $333. "This is my response to the ban on smoking on airplanes," says Freedom Air founder Edward Hall, who retired from United last February. "I guess I'm a little upset with the way our society treats people who smoke, and this is my attempt to change things a little bit." To get around the government rule that prohibits smoking on all domestic flights, Hall says, he got a permit from the Department of Transportation as a public charter operator rather than a commercial air carrier. In addition to the fare, passengers must also pay $20 for a lifetime membership in Hall's Freedom Smoker Club. "It's more or less an internal thing, so I can get a liability waiver signed," he says. "Then I don't have to worry about lawsuits, about someone getting on the airplane and saying second-hand smoke causes cancer." — T.K.A.

Rabbis' scarlet letters The scandal that rocked the local Jewish community earlier this year — in which Rabbis Michael Sternfield and Laurie Coskey of Temple Beth Israel resigned after publicly acknowledging their sexual liaison — has had far-reaching consequences. After these and other allegations of improprieties against rabbis in San Francisco and New York, the Reform branch of Judaism has made big changes in its handling of ethical misconduct charges. Violations now will be made public, with the rabbis' names printed in the monthly publication of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, the Reform branch's governing board. Rabbis can also be denied jobs until they undergo therapy. Conference spokesman Rabbi Elliott Stevens says his organization's ethics committee "has been aware, over the course of time," of scandals involving rabbis, and he maintains "it would be surprising if they did not respond." — T.K.A.

Fare contract unfair? San Diego-based Cubic Corporation is going to court over its loss of a lucrative contract to build ticket and fare machines for five new Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) district stations — even though Cubic's bid was nearly twice as high as the winner's. The BART board had awarded the contract to a German company, Scheidt and Bachmann, which offered to do the job for $7.9 million. Cubic bid $14.8 million. But Cubic vice president Stephen Shewmaker says his company's bid for the entire BART project — which includes replacing fare machines at all 34 existing stations and eight new ones — came in at $46.2 million, slightly less than Scheidt and Bachmann's $47.8. Shewmaker maintains "it is our understanding" that whoever got the first contract would get the other work as well, and he claims the Germans "shifted monies from the base contract and put it into the options" to gain an unfair advantage. Larry Davis, Scheidt and Bachmann's attorney, was not available for comment, but he told the San Francisco Chronicle, "We played by the rules." — T.K.A.

S.D. Taxpayers Fund $96 Million Sweetheart Loan to Deepen Downtown Money Pit

By Melinda Powelson

San Diegans have heard all about the sacrifices they'll have to make because of the city's financial crisis. Budget cuts have been substantial — vital services like police and fire have been threatened. City council members have cast around for ways to fill the city's coffers, including increasing parking fees, trash fees, and imposing higher business taxes.

But one source of easy money has been left untapped: the almost $100 million in unpaid debt owed the city by its own redevelopment agency. The council began making loans of taxpayer funds during the 1970s to subsidize various downtown redevelopment projects. Pete Wilson, then mayor, insisted that when the projects were finished, the debt would be paid off using increased property-tax revenue generated by downtown's new buildings.

The original loans, totalling about $38 million, were never repaid, and unpaid interest on that debt began piling up, bringing today's total to $96 million. Now, despite the fact that the city's bank account is scraping bottom, some council members say they're still not in a hurry to collect the debt. They even voted last month to cut the interest rate charged on the loans from 12 to 8 percent, reducing the payback to city taxpayers — whenever that should happen.

"The loans won't be repaid for a long, long time," declares councilwoman Judy McCarty. "We want to keep redeveloping downtown." Instead of asking the agency to repay the city's loans, McCarty says she plans to vote for a $40 million bond issue that would push the redevelopment project even further into the red. The bond repayment would take priority over the city's debt, postponing the day when the city general fund would get its money back.

McCarty's position has some critics fuming. "Repaying the city's loan should be a priority with the city now," says retired city auditor Bill Sage, who held office when the loans were originally made. "My God, they are hurting for money so badly. Somehow or another, [redevelopment proponents] seem to think that it's all their money, but it's not, it's the taxpayers money. There should be some choice by the taxpayers whether to continue to spend it downtown, or to use it for the schools. Taxpayers ought to have a vote in the process."

Dick Rider, past president of the local Libertarian Party, agrees. "This is insanity. It's tragic that people aren't aware of this. Basically, these are open-ended loans with no repayment plan and no performance records required whatsoever. These people have carte blanche."

Sage also contends the loans are long overdue. "The whole theory for the loans was that there wasn't anything happening downtown and there was no tax base. And Pete Wilson said in 20 years we will get this all built up, and we would have a nice tax base and lots more taxes coming into the city, which is true," explains Sage. "But the problem is that we've never stopped expanding the downtown [redevelopment] area. They keep making it bigger and bigger, and they shouldn't."

Bill Carlson, executive director of the California Redevelopment Association, says, "It is very common for redevelopment agencies to start out with a loan like San Diego's. Once the projects get going and are successful, the agency pays the loans back. Sometimes it takes 15 to 20 years." The City of Los Angeles, he says, long ago paid back its loans. "The repayment depends on how aggressive the agency is," says Carlson. "They have to decide whether it is more important to pay back the loans to the city or remove local blight, but those decisions get made on a local level."

Frank Alessi, an official with the city-owned Centre City Development Corporation, which runs downtown redevelopment, says the redevelopment effort was initially funded with $38 million in seed money from the city. Of that amount, $19 million was a loan of sales tax funds, $16.6 million from the transfer of federal Community Development Block Grants, and the rest from Transient Occupancy taxes charged hotel visitors.

Other money used to finance redevelopment has come from issuing bonds that are repaid from the increased property tax collected as the area improves, a process called tax increment financing. The agency expects to earn $20 million in property tax increments and interest this year, Alessi says.

But activist Rider argues that this tax money is being bled from city coffers. "One of the fascinating aspects [of this] is that the tax

Lynn Schenk ranks right up there with the Republicans. Prior to being elected to Congress last November, she earned $91,000 as attorney and consultant at the San Diego law firm of Lorenz, Alhadeff and Oggel, and another $39,000 as a director of the Long Beach Bank in Long Beach.

Local Pols' Disclosed Finances Raise Questions

By Thomas K. Arnold

Representative Lynn Schenk, along with her fellow members of Congress, will soon be considering the merits of First Lady Hillary Clinton's proposal for a national health care plan. But for San Diego Democrat Schenk, the upcoming deliberations may also pose some delicate questions about conflict of interest.

Schenk's latest financial disclosure statement, filed last month, reveals that last year she had an investment valued between $500,000 and $1 million in a San Diego company called Medi-Mail. The statemens also discloses that Schenk received between $100,000 and $1 million in capital gains on sales of Medi-Mail stock. The company is in the pharmacy business.

"I certainly see a potential conflict," says Nancy Watzman, a policy analyst with Congress Watch, part of Public Citizen, a national consumer group headed by Ralph Nader. "Everybody's going to have to vote on health care, and she has a large stake in the pharmaceutical industry, which would at least give rise to an impression, or an appearance, of a problem.

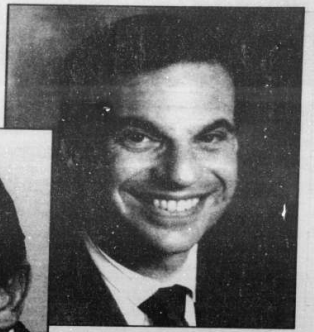

"There are guidelines on stock ownership for members of Congress, and it could very well be that she's perfectly legal. But I think you have to be very sensitive about these types of matters when you are in Congress, and that sounds like a pretty hefty amount of stock."

Medi-Mail, Inc., headquartered in San Diego since its founding in 1987, is soon moving to Las Vegas. The company is ranked 15th on Inc. magazine's latest list of America's Top 100 fastest-growing small public companies. Last year, Medi-Mail moved into the retail prescription business, buying the assets of seven Medco Drug stores in San Diego for $1.8 million. Earlier this year, the company spent $8.1 million to buy Mail-Rx, a mail-order pharmacy in Baltimore.

Schenk confirms she still has an interest in Medi-Mail, but she dismisses the idea that her heavy investment in the firm could pose a potential conflict of interest when the time comes to vote on health-care issues. "This doesn't have anything to do with health care," she insists. "What Medi-Mail is is a distributor of pharmacy goods by mail, so people who have chronic illnesses and need to get their blood-pressure medicine once a month can send in their orders.

"It is not a pharmaceutical company, it's a delivery service. And ours was a very small investment a few years ago and it just appreciated. We haven't invested heavily in it."

Besides, Schenk adds, "no matter what my investments are, I am here to do the work of the people. Whatever I have invested in has no bearing — it doesn't occur to me — when I vote.

Schenk's ties to Medi-Mail are not merely financial. A prominent board member and stock owner is wealthy Rancho Santa Fe investor Blaine B. Quick. Quick and Schenk go way back. Quick contributed a lot of money to former California Governor Jerry Brown's campaign war chests; Schenk held several high-ranking posts in the Brown administration. Between 1978 and 1980, she was deputy secretary of the California Business, Transportation, and Housing Agency, working under Richard Silberman; when Silberman left to become finance director of Brown's abortive presidential bid, Schenk replaced him as secretary.

In 1982, Brown named Quick a trustee of the California State University system. After Brown left the governor's mansion, Schenk joined the board of directors of Silberbase from property taxes goes to redevelopment agencies, and as a consequence, funding for local services dries up," says Rider. If the money wasn't dedicated toward redevelopment, he explains, it would go into the general fund.

On paper, the redevelopment agency makes regular payments to the city on its loans, according to Alessi, with most of the money going to the interest, with some toward the principal. This year, the amount paid toward the principal is $2.5 million, Alessi says.

But until recently, no cash ever actually changed hands. As soon as the city received its "payment" from the redevelopment agency, the city council voted to roll the money back to the agency in the form of new loans. This process explains why the CCDC's debt has grown to nearly $100 million.

Last year, CCDC paid the city $4.4 million. "Of that amount, the city kept $2.5 million," reports Linda Hammersmith, a city auditor. So far, there are no public plans to make a similar repayment this year.

"The weirdness of it is, ordinarily when a lender gets interest back, he keeps it," says community activist John Cheney of Linda Vista. "But according to Frank Alessi, the minute they get any interest on it, they quickly give it back as new principal. So, you have the city — the city being the taxpayers — not keeping their interest. They are just lending it back as new principal, so the debt keeps getting bigger and bigger."

In addition to the original loan from the city, the redevelopment agency has also accumulated at least $38 million in debt issued from a series of tax allocation bonds. Now the agency is proposing to sell another $40 million worth of bonds, also to be repaid by downtown property taxes. If it is approved, Alessi says, repaying the bond holders would take priority over repaying the city's loan. "We want to issue the bond right now because we have an opportunity to take advantage of low interest rates," Alessi says.

Councilman Juan Vargas says he will probably vote for the upcoming bond issue, but would like to see CCDC increase its loan payments. "I can see why people want the repayment done. The city could be using the money differently. On the other hand, there are a lot of things that the [redevelopment] agency can do, and a lot of vitality it can bring to an area, especially Center City East. I'm not saying we should raid CCDC and take away its money. What I'm saying is it's an agency that can be more generous than it is."

McCarty also says she understands why some taxpayers might think repaying the city's loan is a priority, but she stands by her commitment to redevelopment. "We need to clean up the blighted areas. Redevelopment is very important to the city." ■ man's mining company, Yuba Natural Resources. In 1989, when Silberman was facing federal charges of conspiring to launder drug money, he called on Quick to help him raise money for his legal bill.

Schenk is not the only federal lawmaker from San Diego whose business holdings are at least partially work-related. Representative Randy "Duke" Cunningham, a former fighter pilot, is a hawkish Republican who has campaigned to keep San Diego's military bases off the Pentagon's closure list.

According to his latest financial disclosure statement, his major asset is stock in Top Gun Enterprises, which he values at between $250,000 and $500,000. The company was originally formed to market computer software. It now distributes videos, military lithographs, and books, including Cunningham's autobiography, Fox Two, about his experiences as a fighter pilot in Vietnam. Last year Cunningham earned between $200 and $1,000 from Top Gun Enterprises.

The year before, he sold $2000 worth of videos to Ron Zimmerman, Inc., of Phoenix. The videos were copies of Top Gun: The Story Behind the Story, which Cunningham's press secretary, Frank Purcell, describes as a "real-life, behind-the-scenes look at Navy combat aviation."

The San Diego congressional delegation's financial disclosure statements offer other insights into the men and women local voters chose to represent them in Washington, D.C. The information is not limited to investment portfolios.

When Representative Ron Packard attended the Kemper Open Golf Tournament in May 1991, he accepted $200 in gifts from the tournament's organizers, including a tote bag, four Waterford crystal "old-fashioned" glasses, a logoed jacket, a designer golf shirt, and an argyle sweater.

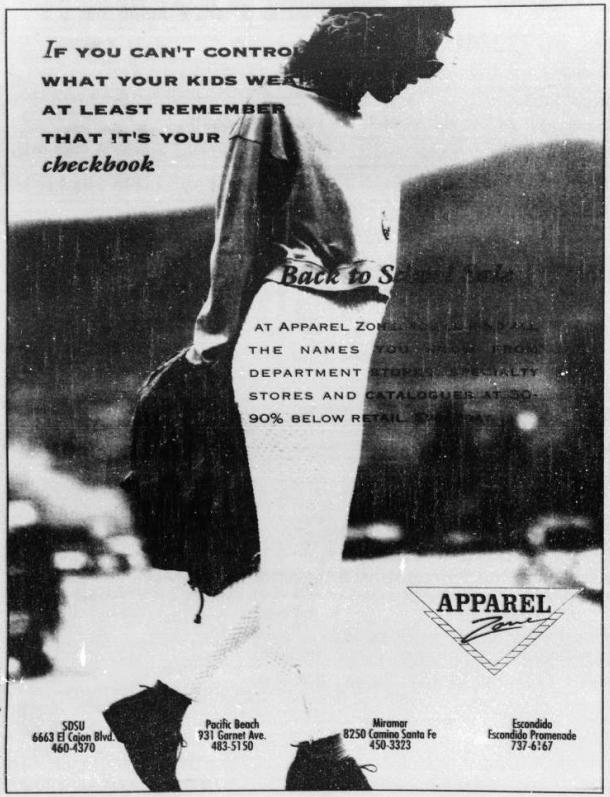

Packard owns between $50,000 and $100,000 worth of stock in the First National Bank of North County, a coin collection valued at between $1000 and $15,000, and an investment of $15,000 to $50,000 in diamonds.

Last year, Packard sold 180 acres of vacant land in San Luis Rey to the city of Oceanside, netting him between $15,000 and $50,000. He also accepted free airline tickets, each worth at least $250, from Mylan Laboratories to tour its Fort Lauderdale, Florida, facility; from the Western Coalition of Arid States to attend a day-long conference in Las Vegas; from the Sinclair Oil Corporation for a trip home to San Diego; from the American Dental Association for a meeting in Chicago; the Association of American Railroads for a policy conference in Jackson, Wyoming; and from Baylor College of Dentistry for a two-day sojourn to Dallas.

The North County Republican spent the ourth week in August on two more all-expense-paid "business" trips with his wife, one to Sun Valley, Idaho, for the Danny Thompson Memorial Golf Tournament, and the other to Salt Lake City for the Delta Airlines Congressional Challenge. Both trips were paid for by event organizers.

In 1991, aside from the golf gadgets, Packard accepted airline tickets from the Oregon Health Sciences University's School of Dentistry, the American Gas Association, and Techtrans (the latter for a flight from San Diego to Washington, D.C., which included a layover in Las Vegas). Packard was also given free food and lodging in Sun Valley from organizers of the Danny Thompson Memorial Golf Tournament.

Cunningham is also quite fond of golf. At the top of his 1992 gift list are two roundtrip tickets to Paris, valued at $5000, that he won at the Leader's Golf Tournament.

The third Republican member of the local congressional delegation, Duncan Hunter, owns a rental house in Coronado worth between $250,000 and $500,000; a $15,000 to $50,000 interest in a five-eighth-acre lot in Riverside; a $65,000 to $150,000 stake in a cabin and 27 acres of land in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia; and five acres of land, with horse stables and a barn, in Fairfax County, Virginia, in which his equity is between $15,000 and $50,000. He owes another $100,000 to $250,000 on the mountain cabin and Blue Ridge acreage and $15,000 to $50,000 on the Fairfax property.

Hunter's major source of unearned income is between $5000 and $15,000 in rent he took in on his Coronado house. He also took in between $1000 and $2500 from leasing out the mountain cabin and the horse stables and barn.

On the Democratic side, Bob Filner is a relative pauper — at least according to his disclosure statement. All he has is his salary and a tax-exempt family trust fund, valued at $250,000 to $500,000, that gives him less than $50,000 a year in capital gains and interest.

Lynn Schenk, by contrast, ranks right up there with the Republicans. Prior to being elected to Congress last November, she earned $91,000 as attorney and consultant at the San Diego law firm of Lorenz, Alhadeff and Oggel, and another $39,000 as a director of the Long Beach Bank in Long Beach.

She owns two houses in Mission Beach, at 820 and 852 Avalon Court, valued at $250,000 to $500,000 each; both are rented out and bring in between $15,000 and $50,000 per year. Schenk also owns a $1000 to $15,000 equity interest in ten acres of "raw land" in San Bernardino County and a house in Los Angeles, valued at $500,000 to $1 million, on which she earns $15,000 to $50,000 in annual rental income.

Aside from her investment in Medi-Mail, Schenk's other stock holdings include $1000 to $15,000 worth of shares each of Intel Corporation, IBM, the Price Company, Agouron Pharmaceuticals, AT&T, Southwestern Bell, Northwestern National Life, and U.S. West.

Schenk's financial statement also shows limited partnerships in Sequoyah Ltd., Fogelman Properties, and Gamemakers Limited worth a total of $31,000 to $115,000. Schenk says Sequoyah has investments in low-income, "Section 8" housing in New Orleans. Fogelman Properties is a Memphis-based commercial property management company with annual revenues of $61 million. And Gamemakers manufactures the popular adult board game Notable Quotables.

In addition, Schenk has investments of between $50,000 and $100,000 in the Putnam Growth and Income Fund, the Dreyfus California Tax-Free Fund and U.S. Treasury bonds; investments of between $16,000 and $50,000 in the Prudential Equity Fund, Huntington Funds, the Federal Home Loan and Mortgage Corporation, and the Franklin California Tax-Free Fund; and investments of less than $15,000 in the IDS Stock Fund, the Manhattan Fund, Citizens Utilities of Delaware, and the Zweig Strategy Fund, among others. ■

Sixty Feet Beneath Mexico

By John Brizzolara

Inside the tunnel

Where it emerges on the U.S. side

Photographs by Randy Hoffman

Robert Ward

There was a time, not that long ago, when the idea of crawling around in a claustrophobic dirt and concrete tunnel, 60 feet beneath the U.S.-Mexican border, with agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration — one of whom carries a machine gun in his c tr trunk — might have struck me as a nightmare. In fact, it was more fun than it's usually legal to have.

Something about tunnels brings out the wild, mud-smeared kid in us, especially when it's a tunnel this long — 1450 feet. But what put this brutally hot afternoon in early July over the top was that I got to do it with one of my favorite authors, novelist and screenwriter Robert Ward.

A former writer for Hill Street Blues and writer and sometime producer for Miami Vice, Ward had driven down from L.A. to see the "Tijuana Tunnel" and unfinished warehouse where huge quantities of cocaine were to have been received by conspirators working with drug kingpin Joaquim Guzman, currently in the custody of Mexican authorities. Guzman is the man for whom the late Cardinal Ocampo was fatally mistaken in the Guadalajara airport gun battle last May. For Ward, this trip was research for his upcoming novel, Cactus Garden, due out from Pocket Books in 1994. The novel "is about a DEA agent in a whole lot of trouble," says Ward, adding that some of the novel's scenes are set in San Diego.

Ward, 6'1" or 6'2", with a handsome, lopsided face, has a habit of running his hands through his hair and making wisecracks with long vowels and a slack-lipped delivery, like a Baltimore pool-room thug with an MFA. Ward was accompanied by Los Angeles DEA Director of Public Information Ralph Lochridge, who had not yet seen the tunnel.

In an industrial park on West 35th Street in National City (the DEA's San Diego HQ), Ward and Lochridge and I met up with DEA Special Agent Jack Hook, a burly man with a mustache, jet black hair, and an easy manner, and a petite, aggressive photographer from The Dallas Morning News named Karen Stallwood. We drove in two cars east and south to the tunnel site.

The warehouse had been erected in the middle of nowhere, not quite a half-mile from the border. Yellow tape was threaded through the hurricane fence, marking off the property as "seized" by U.S. Marshals. Across the road from the warehouse, a drilling team manning a crane was sinking holes at the shallow end of the tunnel where its roof is only 37 feet from the surface.

Lochridge left his badge on the dashboard of the car and put on his navy blue baseball cap with the letters DEA across the front. Lochridge is 50 years old but looks no older than 35. "The war on drugs keeps me forever young," he smiled.

Agent Hook pointed across the dry, wind-raked plain toward the border and sentry tower. "That compound they had has a dormitory that slept 20 people. We found kids' toys and clothes. Of course, they had a kitchen. On the right-hand side of the compound, where you see the corrugated roof, is the little warehouse. What they did is, they built a subterranean room beneath the floor of the warehouse. Once they established that subterranean room, then they started their shaft down about 65 feet — the equivalent of a six-story building. As soon as they got down to the depth they wanted, they headed north 1450 feet."

Hook's words were sometimes lost in the buffeting of hot winds across the mesa. He described the foiled plan to stockpile drugs in the warehouse. Drug entrepreneurs would have driven trucks in and out to load and off-load multi-ton shipments. "You see that orange rubber cone out on the field?" Hook pointed south again. "That's the end of the tunnel. A hundred twenty feet short. We think that they looked at a plot map that's on file with the county, checked the measurements of this tunnel against the measurements on the plot map, and found them to be the same. I don't think the plot map took into account the easement at the border, which is a hundred feet or so."

Walking to the hole at the far south end of the tunnel, Ward asked if the Mexican diggers had surfaced at this point. "I can just see them sticking their heads up, looking across the road at the warehouse and going, 'Oh fuck!' "

Hook corrected him. "No, the Judiciales in Mexico found out about it before they started digging up that far. They notified us right away. The Department of Defense workers sank a hole here. They went down alongside the tunnel. I think yesterday they went down with jackhammers and had to go in about four feet. They were four feet off."

Everyone was staring down the hole, which is about four-and-a-half-feet wide and has no apparent bottom, just blackness. After staring downward for a few moments, you could make out the faint hint of an electric light.

Why the Department of Defense? Hook was asked.

"They have expertise with tunnels, for one thing. They want to do some experiments. Oh, you won't be allowed to talk to any of the DOD people."

"Why is that?" asked Stallwood.

"Because," said Hook, "they've asked us to keep the press away from them. We need their assistance, so we cooperate."

Immediately, Stallwood marched through dust and weeds, camera bags slapping against her sides. She confronted the two workers at the crane sinking corkscrew drills into narrow holes and pulling up clay. They shook their heads. The workers looked back in our direction; members of our party spread their palms back at them and shrugged. When Stallwood returned, she said, "They're not DOD. They're private contractors." She sounded vaguely annoyed.

We walked south toward the border. "What we're gonna do," Hook said, "is block up the tunnel between the U.S. and Mexican side. We're gonna put our own electricity down there and our own ventilation so if the Mexicans want to fill up their portion of the tunnel, then they're able to do that."

"Why waste money doing that?" Stallwood asked. "Why not just fill it up?"

"We've got environmental concerns. A lot of people say, 'Why not just blow it up?' but that's the worst thing you could do. Because of the groundswell and everything else. That's why we brought the experts out, the DOD, the geologists, to determine the safest way to destroy this tunnel without screwing up the environment here in Otay Mesa."

I asked Hook if it were true that Border Patrol sensing devices were getting readings indicating movement before the discovery of the tunnel. Was it true that they thought their equipment was faulty and bought all new stuff?

"Yeah, something like that. They'd get readings and drive out here. No one was around, so, yeah, they thought their equipment was bad. No one was thinking about a tunnel."

At the tunnel entry, a man in jungle camo fatigues and aviator shades was operating the cable lift from the cab of a crane. A cigarette dangled from the corner of his mouth and he neither spoke nor smiled as he raised and lowered the metal yellow cage one person at a time. "Guy looks like he should be running a corrupt government somewhere in Central America," Ward cracked. When Lochridge, the photographer, and I broke up, Ward quickly hushed us. "We want to keep this guy happy. We don't want him to think we're laughing at him. Think about it. Still, he looks like Noriega's idiot son, doesn't he?"

Lochridge was lowered down first, but the cable got twisted. The L.A. agent was suspended about 50 feet from the bottom of the tunnel while agents — who remain anonymous and unphotographed ("What do you need my name for? Don't take my picture") — tried to secure the block and tackle with wire and nylon rope. Lochridge was being spun in a four-and-a-half-foot circumference about five feet down. He was wearing the one hard hat we all took turns using. Every time he looked up to ask what was happening, dirt, loosened by movement from the agents above, rained onto his face.

"That's never going to work," Stallwood said. "That rope's too thin."

"You know, Ralph," Ward looked up at the entwined metal cables and spoke in a stage voice. "When this happens, it's usually a sign of, you know, like, REALLY OLD CABLES."

The crew laughed. Below, we heard Lochridge: "Hah hah."

Once Lochridge was down, Stallwood insisted on being next, then another photographer, then Ward. It took five minutes to lower someone and retrieve the cage and hard hat.

When I entered the tunnel, I was completely turned around. North and south were determined by the short end of the tunnel (south) and the long end (north). The tunnels were lined with thick, gray plastic tubing along the top of the east walls; air was pumped through these conduits. Three-quarters of the tunnel was "air conditioned" in this way. "There are two huge air conditioning units in the compound warehouse," Hook had said.

The tunnel's ceiling was barely five feet tall and four feet wide. Electric light bulbs were strung along the top of the west wall every seven feet or so. The walls were chiseled clay and sand, the floors concrete and covered with as much as two inches of water.

"All the dirt was removed," Hook had said before we entered, "with these carts you'll see down there. They run on rubber wheels. What they did was take the dirt they'd jackhammered out, fill five gallon buckets with it, and place them on the carts. Then they'd run the carts back to the shaft beneath the subterranean room where they had a winch and pulley-type deal hooked up to a generator. They'd haul those buckets up one by one, and they had a dump truck in the warehouse. They'd fill the truck and dump the dirt somewhere and come back. It took a lot of hard labor," Hook said, sounding genuinely impressed. "A lot of people wouldn't work that hard."

Hook's description of how the tunnel was found was couched in diplomatic terms and Public Relationese. "The Mexican Federal Judicial Police found it. This was an outcome of the assassination of the cardinal in Guadalajara. The head of the Mexican Federal Judiciales brought a squad of agents out of Mexico City to Guadalajara. They 'interviewed' some people who got arrested. That led them to some safe houses here in Tijuana.

"Many of these safe houses had subterranean rooms with caches of weapons an d things of that nature. These houses belonged to associates of the Arrellano and Guzman organizations who were the warring factions in that shootout in Guadalajara. In one of the houses they found plans for a tunnel at this location. I think they thoroughly 'interviewed' the guy they got this stuff from because the subterranean room was hidden by the bathroom floor. They had cut a hole in the cement of the bathroom floor, then reconstructed the bathroom so that the cement floor was on wheels, flush with the flooring around it. You would have to know how to open that. You'd never know it was there in the first place just walking into the bathroom."

"Probably a code," Ward suggested, "You know, flush two long, three short. Open sesame."

Hook ignored that and went on to recount the DEA's involvement. "There is a treaty between the U.S. and Mexico when it comes to drug trafficking investigations; the MFIP deals with the DEA. We have a large office in the embassy in Mexico City. The director of the MFIP, as soon as the tunnel was discovered, wanted the DEA to walk the length of the tunnel. One, they're technically entering the United States. The first 50 feet of the tunnel is in Mexico, the rest of the 1400 feet is in the U.S. Secondly, they didn't know what, if anything, they would find in the tunnel. So the DEA office in Mexico City called the San Diego office on, I believe, the 28th [of May]."

In the tunnel we were joined by a white-haired man carrying a videotape camera mounted with a light. He was introduced as "Herschel"; he is with the Department of the Navy. Lochridge asked, "What's the Navy doing down here, Chief?"

"We go wherever there's water," Herschel grinned.

"There's not that much water down here," Lochridge laughed. Ward began speculating on the nature of the "interview" the MFJP held with the arrested drug cartel soldiers. A discussion of torture methods ensued. Sixty feet beneath Mexico in a cramped, half-lit tunnel, amid occasional flashbulbs, up to our ankles in gray water, we were discussing painful and grotesque methods for extracting information from someone. Herschel seemed to know a thing or two about it.

Ward began climbing the ladder into the Tijuana compound. After huddling with Lochridge and other members of the party, it was decided we would be unprepared to deal with anybody carrying guns at the top of the ladder. Even, maybe especially, Mexican authorities. "Batches?" Ward recited, "We don't got to show you no stinkin' batches!" Lochridge and Herschel cracked up.

"So what kind of writer is he?" Stallwood asked, disgruntled that she couldn't get shots of DEA agents actually digging or working on the tunnel — though Lochridge offered to pose with a camping shovel someone had left down there. I told her about the TV shows and Ward's 1993 novel The King of Cards. She hadn't heard of it.

"Ever see Cattle Annie and Little Britches?" I asked.

"No."

"Well, he wrote the novel and the screenplay."

Ward climbed halfway up the ladder and then back down. Herschel shot videotape. We were all climbing over the wooden carts on rubber wheels and edging past each other awkwardly in the small space with all the camera bags. To walk north, the length of the entire tunnel seemed an ambitious undertaking. Too ambitious. We decided that walking well over a quarter of a mile in mud and darkness hunched over like gnomes might be fun, but walking back might be a bitch.

Once everyone had been brought to the surface, the sun was lower on the horizon and we piled into cars and drove back to the DEA office in National City. Ward discovered he had a flat tire. "God, I hate when that happens!" While changing it, he asked Lochridge to show us the Colt 9mm submachine gun in his trunk. "It fires rifle bullets at full auto rock and roll."

Lochridge began to walk to his car and then paused. He turned and said, "I forgot to bring it today."

"Ranalph!" Ward admonished him. "You forgot your machine gun?"

Lochridge paused in the middle of the quiet industrial park street and looked apologetic. He shrugged, "Yeah, I hate when that happens." ■

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

Illustration by Rick Geary

Dear M.A. Dude:
This question is a serious matter. I have been here 30 of my 30-1/2 years on this planet. So between me and my friends, we total around 73 years in this city. Combined, we have been looking at this rag maybe 30 years. Now that I have set it up, here goes. Where are all the Reader T-shirts? If you do the math, five shirts a week for, let's say, 15 years — that's a lot of shirts. But alas, me and my friends have never seen one. Let alone two or three. Thanks for your time and effort in solving this dilemma for us.
— Mark Rossi (Ocean Beach), Paul Woodburn (Ocean Beach), John Bidleman (Encinitas)

A serious matter indeed, dudes. The same question has occurred to me from time to time. But of course, I'm always too busy dealing with all those lame queries from just about anybody capable of aiming a stamp at an envelope and making it stick, so the answer has gone unpursued. Until now.

I will admit that in all my 60, 70 years of pushing this particular rock up the Reader hill, I have seen only one Reader T-shirt being worn by what seemed to be an actual living person. (I'm not counting Reader T-shirts seen on Reader employees, their spouses, or their offspring. The person I saw inside the T-shirt was a stranger.) That was fully six years ago, which suggests to me that perhaps the average puzzle winner immediately incorporates his prize into the stuffing for his pet's comfy dog bed or stows it in the closet with the Armorall and Turtle Wax. Or maybe, just maybe, we don't get out enough, dudes. Could it be that by now all of San Diego is marching around in matching Reader T-shirts like a troop of parochial school kids, but the four of us have been home cleaning the crumb tray in the toaster and just haven't noticed? Unlikely. But we must consider all possibilities.

To that end, I made a quick survey of 20 current and former Reader employees, most of whom actually do go outside from time to time. Fully half the respondents, like you, have seen no one wearing free clothing provided by the Reader, a free publication. Another 25 percent or so have seen only one person willing to expose him/herself to stares and mockery by wearing the mark of the reverse R in public. Two employees claimed to have seen two T-shirts, but one of those respondents is in the financial office, and they fudge numbers all the time, so we'll throw that one out. And one person, well known here for her honesty and guileless ways, swears that over the years she's seen Reader T-shirts on three total strangers. So toss out the don't-get-around-enough theory. They ain't out there, dudes.

Asked to guess why we don't see the shirts, my fellow toilers at the R offered a hodgepodge of speculation, most of it cynical and insulting. One maverick believes people don't wear them so they can keep them as souvenirs of sorts. He swears he has actually encountered strangers who offered him money for his Reader T-shirt, willing to buy it right off his back. I'm skeptical. And one reason I'm skeptical is that the only other Reader T-shirt on the loose that I've seen was hanging on a rack in a downtown thrift shop. I will admit, though, the price tag for the hardly-ever-worn shirt was $3.75, versus $1.25 for its companions. In that vein, I'm waiting for the day that a Reader T-shirt shows up on a small child in a news story on the latest relief efforts in Bangladesh.

Let's get some historical perspective on the question. The first five shirts were given away for the correct solutions to puzzle number one, which appeared on January 12, 1978. Last week's puzzle was number 769. For a brief period in the late '70s, winners were given copies of a Reader-published book called Neighborhoods, and for a while winners could choose a T-shirt or a gift certificate for a hot tub place, so I can't say precisely how many shirts have actually been awarded. A conservative estimate is 3625. Not many, spread around a county our size. Of course, the average life expectancy of a T-shirt being what it is, the maximum number of shirts likely to be wearable at any given time is considerably smaller. At some point, that number must have leveled off as new winners received their prizes and old winners shredded theirs for dust rags. This would further reduce your chances of seeing one.

But don't despair, dudes. We have one final and unassailable source for our answer — the T-shirt winners themselves. So we turn to you, you clever folks who've solved one of our 769 brain teasers and received a cheesy poly-cotton garment as your reward. What did you do with it? Did you wear it? If so, where? If not, why not? Any heartwarming Reader T-shirt stories you'd care to share? You're our last hope. We'll keep asking until someone out there answers. Mail it, fax it, or phone it in on the line ordinarily reserved for letters to the ed. That's 235-3000 x460. And remember, particularly on the phone line, brevity is an endearing trait. In return you'll receive no more free clothing, only the sincere gratitude of three dudes and Matthew Alice.

Got a question you need answered? Get it straight from the hip. Write to Matthew Alice, c/o the Reader, P. O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803, or fax your questions to 231-0489.

Why Does Ivan Boesky Live There?

Life on Mount Soledad Has Always Been About Turning Back the Clock

by Lawrence Osborne

Photographs by Robert Burroughs

The villa high above the sea on the semi-wooded northern slope of Mount Soledad is typical of the houses that lie thick on La Jolla's rich man's private mountain. A garden carpeted with spongy ice-plant overlooks the blue arc of the bay. Adirondack chairs piled with cushions are placed around a pool trimmed with Portuguese azulea tiles. In one corner of the patio, a bronze parrot preens itself on a metal bough, and around it little bixia trees sit in yellow wooden boxes. This is the Muirlands, and the house's owner, a 62-year-old plastic surgeon, likes to come out every evening at six, drink a martini on one of the Adirondacks, and admire the view. Next to the chair will be a cedarwood box of 1987 Harvest Crop tabaras. A puff of smoke will go up from the master's patio parasol, and as the russet cicadas purr in the tufts of pampas grass, another day on San Diego's wealthiest hill will wind to a close. If it were not for the preposterous Frederick Remington cowboy statues on the balcony, it could be a scene from a Jim Cain roman noir.

Inside, the house is, perhaps, a plastic surgeon's dream of courtly, worldly opulence. The front room, with its sliding glass doors overlooking the sea, is filled with matching gray leather furniture, a 19th-century Iranian fringed silk sourog carpet, an igneous stone coffee table, and rows of John Bull china tankards. On one of the mantelpieces sits an ornate French lyre clock with coloured pastes and painted signs of the zodiac. It ticks away lugubriously. And overhead the cedar beams are decorated with painted red Mozarabic zelliges, star-shaped patterns, an Ibero-Moorish feature common to these Spanish Colonial villas from the 1920s.

"I didn't move here because of the area," the surgeon explains, tightening the cord around his quilted banjan, sinking into one of his gray leather armchairs, and lighting a tabara with a silver device in the shape of a tiny Alfa Romeo roadster. "I moved here because of the house. I wanted one of these Hollywood-Spanish places, with the tiles in the pool, the big fireplace, and the painted beams. I came here from New York, the Upper West Side, and I wanted something a bit, you know, Rudolph Valentino-ish. The Moorish feel. My wife had the parrots put in, and the cowboys. They go so well, don't you think? That was to keep us down to earth. To remind us that we lived in America, after all."

Most inhabitants of Mount Soledad don't like to see their names in newspapers. Instead, they prefer to go by anonymous letters, K, G, H, and so on, like the heroes of existentialist novels. Why? Because as owners of the most expensive properties between Los Angeles and the border, they know that they are a burglar's honeypot. Our surgeon, K, tells me how his late wife spent weeks scouring auction houses all over California for the few pieces of genuine Americana that dot the rooms. Like the wooden spinning wheel in the vestibule. Or the tin milk pails and the faded chintz curtains in the kitchen. What a struggle between them, he chuckles. The country girl's taste against that of the "sophisticated doctor" (as he puts it) from the Upper West Side.

"The difference between owning a house in New York and owning one in a place like Mount Soledad — and perhaps this is true of all of California — is that [in New York] you feel constrained when you do the inside. You have to be tasteful in one way rather than another. You can't mix everything up. Here, it's like living in an isolated ranch house. In a wide empty space. Those parrots, for example. I couldn't have those in a New York apartment. I mean, people would laugh. But I like them. And people here don't laugh at anything. If you have a bloody great bronze parrot in your front room next to an 18th-century lyre clock, it goes unnoticed.

"I suppose I'm laughing at myself somewhat. But it's my patch of mountain. If I want a 30-foot lime-green polyester statue of Marilyn Monroe over my swimming pool, I can put it there. And still nobody will say anything. They'll just say, 'Hah, how unusual, K. Are you going to keep her green?' "

Upstairs, rose curtains and eiderdowns with embroidered dolphin motifs in the main bedroom offset some garish china and gold-leaf antique lamps, and yet another lyre clock, this time sitting on an old French dresser. In fact, clocks are almost everywhere. Pendulum clocks, brass clocks, cuckoo clocks. A soft, unsynchronized ticking follows you from room to room.

"I sort of got obsessed with time here," says K. He muses and rubs his chin as he leads the way to a second salon lovingly draped with acrylic paintings of tropical beaches and tinkling glass-droplet lamps. "It's so quiet you can't help thinking about it. When I moved here, I was on the point of a nervous breakdown. I wanted to bow out. I became quite Oriental, actually. Bought all these Japanese screens and Chinese knickknacks. I didn't think they'd clash with my wife's Belgian china shepherdesses, and I thought it might inject, you know, a philosophical note into the place. The house itself encouraged me to be hermitic, and I hardly ever used to leave it.

"When my wife died, she [K uses the female pronoun happily to describe the villa] was my compensation. There was the garden, the clocks to look after, the period fittings I like restoring. Eventually, though, I snapped out of that mood. I saw myself turning into a house ghost. Now, this is really an old man's house. I think of it as the paltry illusion of a hacienda. A tacky fantasy, I suppose, but endearing in its way.

"And Mount Soledad, if you want to know, is tailor-made for the old. At least, the misanthropic old like myself. Nobody knows anybody else, so you don't have to spend hours yapping at the corner store with Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jones. You can just fade away with good weather. The only thing I plan to do is place a telescope on the roof so that I can explore Venus. Venus, you know, is very clear from the top of Mount Soledad."

Back on the faintly decadent patio, among the parrots, the bixia trees and the ostentatious thermometers, K lights up again and motions, with a rather imperial wave of the hand, to the other houses secreted in the side of the hill. "The only people I know here are old. Maybe that's me. On the other hand, it's possible we all came here to die. All the old doctors, I mean. It's an appalling thought, but Mount Soledad might just be the living graveyard of America's most successful doctors. Because everyone here is a surgeon or a doctor. Old surgeons in Spanish villas. Bloody atrocious, really."

He inhales ferociously and rolls his eyes. As twilight falls, you can see them, the old surgeons, gathering around their pools, their barbecues, their wagging Great Danes. Mount Soledad is their repose after a lifetime's hacking flesh and sewing up hearts. Or, in the case of K, stretching rich women's faces behind their ears. Apart from the cicadas, a deathly silence soon falls over the place, and Venus indeed rises in the sky. K takes out an immense ring of keys. Before going to bed, he says, he has to triple-lock 13 doors. "Make sure you don't print my address, or my name," he growls, nevertheless offering me a free cigar as if to seal a gentleman's agreement. "If you do, I'll be dead in my bed by the end of the week. Locks or no locks. And then I'll be a real house ghost."

> "Mount Soledad is tailor-made for the old."

The minute hand of the lyre clock suddenly touches 12, and a hellish sound of barely concordant bells crashes through the quiet. Looking closely, I can see that the hour hand, a bronze arabesque, has come to rest suggestively on the Scorpion. At the same moment, the great iron Spanish lamps go out, and a dog begins to bark. K locks the door. And the house suddenly looks like a fairy-tale castle sealed for a thousand years.

Until recently, I had never heard of Mount Soledad. Passing the huge sugar-white crucifix at its summit on Interstate 5, I would think that Carmelite nuns lived up there, or some Baptist commune looking down with hostility at the Hollywood-Gothic temple of the Mormons below. Then came a feature in a spring edition of Vanity Fair on fallen financier Ivan Boesky, with a series of photographs of his multimillion-dollar home at the top of Mount Soledad, maintained by a family of Iranian housekeepers. Since my New York apartment is one floor below that of Ivan Boesky's son, and I often spy the bedraggled white-haired Ivan loping up and down the stairs of 42 Bank Street, I had to wonder why, of all the places in the world available to a Master of the Universe, he would choose to live on Soledad. Surely not, as the article suggested, for the sake of his sun tan. And surely not for the privacy.

Mount Soledad, it is true, is one of the most haughty neighborhoods in the United States. And it's suffocatingly quaint. Small, cracked tarmac roads weave their way arduously up the crests of canyons and through slopes of chaparral, rising between walls of bougainvillea, flowering tipi trees, and carefully planted jasmine. Spanish Colonial villas, mock Chinese pagodas, fake Indian palaces, wooden modernist chalets, Tudor mansions, and pseudo-French Provincial cottages line streets with names like Mecca, Al Bahr, Amalfi, and Capri.

The hill first became a gold mine in the '20s. A real estate advertisement in the La Jolla Journal dated July 12, 1928, declares Ludington Heights, on one of the lower slopes, to be "Jewel City" or "The Gem Supreme," and the north slope of Mount Soledad in general to be "the most beautiful part of La Jolla, adjoining the City Park, the Country Club and Country Club golf course." It goes on, "The marine and mountain view is superb, unobstructable and free from sun glare." Down below, it says, you see "never ceasing breakers." And the estimable Mr. W.F. Ludington, the reader is told, is employing armies of engineers to make Ludington Heights "the most highly improved residential park in Southern California."

If K is correct about the physician population of Soledad, then Ludington Heights might provide the proof. A famous vascular surgeon does live here, and his abode is typical of the Spanish cottages built in the '20s. Intimate white-washed walls, carved fountainheads, black wood beams, and heraldic iron screens. On a small lawn — nothing too ostentatious — a sundial sits next to a statue of St. Francis, the whole enclosed by gnarled pine trees. A Mexican maid answers the door, using her foot to keep at bay a slavering dog. The vascular surgeon is away, doing vascular surgery, the maid offers, but his wife is home, and she doesn't mind showing someone around her house. For the sake of simplicity, call the lady of the house H.

The surgeon's wife is resplendent in a Paloma Picasso belt and has one of those beautiful, slightly rarefied faces sometimes seen in provincial English stained glass windows. We go into an austerely elegant salon configured with various pieces of Mies van der Rohe furniture. "We used to live in a Mies house in Chicago and simply brought all the furniture with us when we moved to La Jolla," she explains. "Then I mixed it with things I found locally, like that southwestern tiled table. The elephant we got in India. And the armchairs are European, of course. I love English tables. The Pembroke and the Sheraton there...couldn't live without an English table."

The room, whose high, uncluttered windows look out over the canyon into which the house is built, is actually a cave of cosmopolitan gewgaws: a rug in the shape of a piano, a Mexican Tree of Life, a black marble table with a chess set, and a large, glossy doctor's couch of black leather posed a little dramatically by the fireplace. It's an interior with the feel of the country retreat of a Spanish aristocrat. Black iron, white plaster, subtle touches of azure and yellow tilework. But also the feel of a house with only a tentative sense of its own domesticity. There is a strange starkness in its labored order.

Outside, the garden slopes vertiginously downward as it follows the side of the canyon overflowing with silver dollar eucalyptus and Torrey pines and with ugly, middle-rent wooden units.

"It's a disaster what they've done there. It really irritates me. Really."

She peers with disgust at the nondescript boxes clinging ignominiously to the far side of the canyon. Their vulgarity, not even faintly disguised, seems almost implausible. "I wonder who on earth lives there. It's completely baffling. And I'm sure they're not poor. But then, I suppose they don't have to look at their own houses, do they?"

We round a corner of the house to a flight of steps, and she points to cracks breaking open parts of the surface. "That's from an earthquake in the '30s. These old houses are like that. But then again, we had to have a Spanish Colonial place. It's the charm. Where else in this country do you get charm? Not many places. Charm is priceless. This could be the best place to live in North America simply because of the charm. And Spanish is the ultimate in charm. It's one of the few places in America that has a European feel. What's more, all the houses around here are owned by doctors. It's a doctors' neighborhood, and so we feel at home. I couldn't imagine anything unpleasant happening here. The only problem is the cost of tree tenders. That, and the odd — how shall I say? — tasteless neighbor." She contorts her face into an expression of what can only be called territorial exasperation. "I don't mean the doctors, of course."

"It's a doctors' neighborhood, and so we feel at home."

Back inside, the telephone rings constantly. La Jolla's bustling social circuit bursting into the carefully construed solitude; and the tree tender, the gardener, and the maid, all speaking the same language, collide constantly around the White Mistress. "Keeping these old Soledad houses is a vocation, it really is. Nothing less than a vocation. It's why many people on the mountain get obsessed with them. There's no time to do anything else. No time at all. That's why this house is not a house. It's a lifestyle."

Of course, the rich always complain that being rich is a full-time job. What with the antique door knockers to replace, the hedges to align, and the odd statue of St. Francis to maintain, time is on the short side. On the other hand, the houses of Soledad also seem to brim with a strange kind of excess time. Things stand still here. There's no rustle of ordinary life, no acceleration and deceleration. The nostalgic architecture of the houses induces a facetious impression of timelessness. Never do you see even a lone pedestrian nosing about here, or at least not one without a dog to walk. As if the whole point of this fantasy neighborhood were to escape from, and resolutely deny, the hustle necessary to pay for it all.

Because she is so busy at the heart of this utter calm, H cannot talk for long. We go out onto the front lawn, and she points out a sunken bungalow at the end of Ludington Place. "That's the house where David McWhirter and Oscar Madison used to live — you know, the couple who wrote The Odd Couple. That used to be the wild house of Soledad. Not anymore. And right next to it is the house where Victor Hugo's great-niece used to live — she only died a few years ago. The house belongs to a doctor now. You should go in. It's a curious place."

Number 7782 is pastichey and quaint. A carved wooden church door hauled back from a Tuscan village, stucco ceiling moldings, and a mysterious, terraced Finzi-Contini garden with junipers and bird-of-paradise trees. The son of Victor Hugo's niece was a movie producer who brought home icons for mother. And the Hollywood decor matches the architectural ethos of much of Soledad, which was bought up by producers as empty lots 70 years ago.

"In the 1910s and '20s," says Ray Brandes, a local historian, "studio heads sent architects to Toledo, Madrid, and even India to copy buildings for set designs. Soon stars and moguls began to build their own homes in the same styles — Iberian castles, Normandy-French Provincial, Moghul-Indian, and so on. The decor of the epic swashbuckler entered real life. In fact, movies were responsible for the Spanish Colonial style in Southern California, not Spanish colonials."

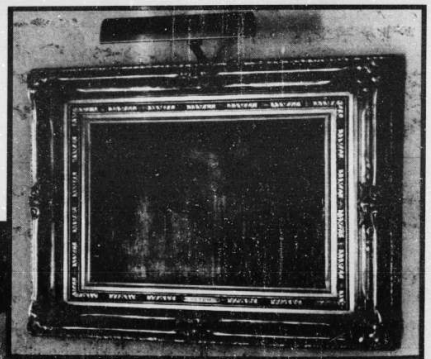

Where, though, did this curiously unreal style come from? The answer lies in large part with one man, the early California architect (and fantasist) Richard Requa.

In 1900 Requa emigrated from Nebraska to La Jolla and in 1907 was apprenticed to Irving Gill, the foremost San Diego architect of the early 20th Century. Requa opened his own practice in 1910, but it was his journeys to Europe in the '20s that gave him the materials to develop a fresh architectural language. Requa loved the Islamic designs of Ibero-Moorish and Andalucian architecture — the tile roofs, balconies, window grills, and wrought iron used inside and out. Back in San Diego, he began to put large windows into neo-colonial designs to lighten them and to pioneer landscaped gardens that would fuse with the building as an integrated whole. With such large windows, the landscaping became a visual part the interior space, changing the balance between interior and exterior that had pertained before. Soliciting the "People of Plenty" who had bought homes along the La Jolla shores, mostly wealthy mercantile families from the East who would use San Diego as a retirement or summer escape, Requa began to change the semi-urban landscape into one of decorous and sheltered Andalucian whimsy.

Eventually a circle of architects emerged, based in contract work in La Jolla, where they had the greatest freedom to experiment. As for Requa, his masterpiece is on Mount Soledad: the MacDonald residence, at 7329 Country Club Drive.

This mansion has a delicate interior courtyard with the typical Requa-esque Moorish fountain. A breezeway with doors that can be opened to the sea wind, a clever little fold-out chair hidden beneath a telephone stand. Wrought-iron handrails on balconies and inside staircases that subtly echo each other. Andalucian tiles on patio and steps. This 1932 mini-palace designed for mining engineer William T. MacDonald remains a perfect crystalization of early Southern California architecture. A style based wholly on idyllic historical fantasy and nostalgia. The relentless American quest for "charm."

A little farther up the hill, in the direction of Via Capri, lies yet another of these dreamy mansions, but this time in the mock-Tudor mold. These Olde England beam-and-plaster heaps were immensely popular in the '20s, and Soledad boasts several of them, some designed by Edgar Ullrich. Half-way through an English garden of Christman roses to match the mullioned windows and pointed gables, I am met by a plaster model of a white cat and, sitting next to it licking a paw, a real white cat indistinguishable from it. The two of them look up at me with cornflower blue eyes. Then a voice pipes up from one of the mullioned windows. "Vinegar! Come inside!"

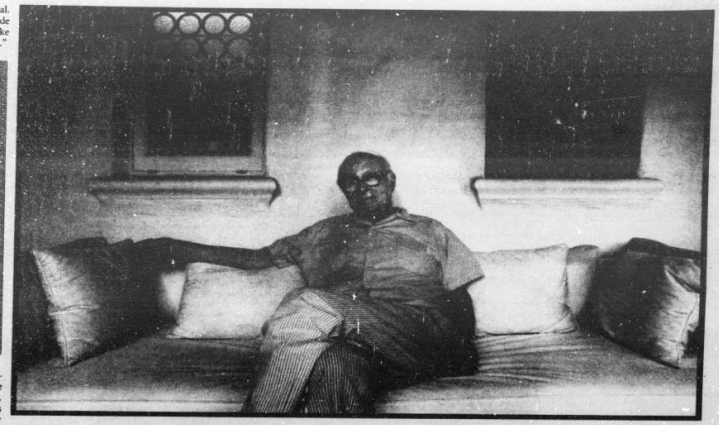

A 50-ish woman in what might well be a Laura Ashley apron appears at her outlandishly over-English beam door carrying, of all things, a scone tin. Vinegar suddenly looks very sinister.

The owner, who will have to be named P, bought her house after a two-year sojourn in England. It wasn't the actual 16th-century Elizabethan houses that impressed her, though, so much as the mass-produced imitations she saw everywhere in the doldrum middle-class suburbs of Surrey. They struck her as, well, charming. Charm without damp. "What I loved about the English suburbs was the historical styles of the houses. A whole street might be made up of Tudor houses, every one identical. But at the same time you could imagine being inside one of them and making it yours. They looked like real castles. Not like nondescript developments."

"Mount Soledad was always really about escaping from the present."

Winfield Durbin

The inside of this house on Soledad has a post-Victorian magpie plushness oddly similar to the houses of reasonably well-off English grandmothers. There are, for example, those beaten brass plates with embossed scenes from the English Civil War that I remember from my great-aunt's living room. And the ruby-glass fruit bowls. The orumulu candle snuffers displayed on a background of lilac wallpaper with vertical vine motifs. The vellum snuff box with a picture of Bellona, Roman goddess of war, on a mantelpiece. And, most of all, those slightly smelly, high-backed wing chairs with floral tapestry covers and tasseled cushions. All lit by tall floor lamps with parchment shades depicting bloody scenes of 19th-century fox hunts. The only strange note is the Dresden china model of the Last Supper sitting on the same mantelpiece and next to it the row of tiny china viola da gambas with painted gold pegs. I seem to recognize these items from the garish curiosity shops on Girard Avenue.

"I moved here," says P very politely, "from a city in the East [she carefully doesn't say which one]. La Jolla struck me as very nice. But Mount Soledad was the best place to live here because of the atmosphere of the houses. You see all the beams I have here? That's Old World detail. Americans don't know how to build them now. Same with the doors. It's such an un-American house...that's why it's charming. I think that back then the architects were giving Americans what they want, which is to not be Americans in some way. Not alien, but not American either."

The kitchen is a riot of pinewood and chintz, Fortnum and Mason tea boxes, and shiny, fire-engine red cracker tins. There are dough rollers, suet bags, and tea-pots with rabbits' ears. A neat shelf of herb pots and a jar of Liquorice Allsorts.

Upstairs, pink-and-white bedrooms doze in a sunlight filtered through assiduously pruned trellises of convolvulus. A teddy bear on one of the beds and a hot water bottle cover of chunky, multicolored wool on another. The simple pre-war bathroom is stocked with Body Shop lotions and nameless perfume bottles marked Lavender Surprise. The whole house radiates a feeling of some confident, self-contained wish to be elsewhere in spirit. "No," P replies, "I don't want to be elsewhere. I just like something in my roots. Because my roots are British. Distantly, but there nevertheless. So to live in a Tudor house is comforting. There was one house I saw in England that I loved...Anne of Cleves' house in Ditchling, in Sussex. Beamed houses have a definite melancholy about them. A feeling of being buried. And so sometimes, because I'm here alone, I think of Anne of Cleves. I wonder what she would have made of palm trees?"

We go into a tiny parlor with a wing table and painted china plates in wire brackets attached to the walls. Again, these evoke memories of other places. And there is a musty, faint odor, perhaps some disinfectant I have never been able to name that brings back to me the gloomy insides of English mansions. The china plates show Holman Hunt-style scenes of the Holy Land.

"I don't know where I'd move to from here. There isn't another American city with a place like this. The illusion here is so complete. It's not as if you had an American house or neighborhood with foreign influences. Here, it's the other way around. And it feels complete. Mount Soledad is not going to change for a long time."

A game of patience is laid out on the wing table, three or four cards turned up. P has a system, related to the mysteries of Christian Science, that enables her to see fragments of the future. She has a twinkle in her eye. "They told me yesterday," she says gaily as she leads me back to the door, "that if I stay here, I'm not going to die. If I didn't, I don't suppose anyone around here would notice one way or the other. Except Vinegar."

The white cat still sits by his model likeness. As I close the scrolled ironwork gate and look back up the red brick herringbone path, I am absolutely sure that it is the model, and not the other, that moves its paw.

The developers and real estaters have not finished with Mount Soledad, however. On Soledad Avenue, the mountain's newest palace has just gone up, a huge three-story

"Where quality is affordable" • 3357 Rosecrans Street, corner of Rosecrans & Midway in Loma Square • 224-2973

Italianate abode on the lot of number 1560, managed by the Willis Allen Company of La Jolla's Wall Street.

In many ways it typifies the ideal house imagined by the wealthy of Southern California. The first precondition, now as in the '20s and '30s, is the complex of references to the lost Old World, a world that is archly recovered with oodles of Mediterranean marble, French limestone and, in this case, a forecourt of Italian cobbles.

The agent is a charming Israeli fellow who meets me in front of an old barnwood door inset with panes of beveled glass. It is strange to go into a house in which no one has yet lived, trespassing on the future. But it is difficult to imagine much domestic intimacy within this cold, haughty mansion built on a 20,000-square-foot lot, with its dozens of bedrooms and bathrooms, its hushed elevator, 22-foot ceilings, and powder rooms with antique candle holders on the walls. The agent, though, is genuinely in awe of the level of accomplishment in the finish and in the modesty of the $4 million price tag.

"I like to think of this as the ultimate affordable dream house. I mean, a house is not just a possession. It says everything about you. Everything. It literally is your life. You don't buy a house in a place like Mount Soledad if you aren't totally absorbed in the house itself. If it isn't everything to you. There isn't a neighborhood here, in the urban sense. So the house becomes the major focal point of your life. What do people here want in a house for four or five million dollars? Well, a view of the ocean. Masonry fireplaces. A cherrywood library. Gaggenau ovens, a sauna and ballet bar in the gym. A whirlpool tub in the master suite. Marvin windows and 14-foot arched French doors. Solid oak flooring with herringbone center design. A grand salon like this. A wine cellar. The lot. Seen the 43-foot pool? A feeling of liberation...sky, sea, shoreline, mountainside. That, and the antique details that free you, if you like, from the present. That's what Mount Soledad was always really about — turning back the clock. Escaping from the present."

The imposing 1560, which some happy owner will probably soon rename Casa de something or other, encapsulates half a century of Riviera mimicry that has made the Mount the way it is. We go into the elevator and rise silently to the second floor. The experience is eerie. Upstairs, the place feels like a New Orleans plantation mansion straight out of Jezebel. You peer over an enormous balustrade into the gigantic, overblown salon with its limestone fireplaces and its vast arched window overlooking the Shores. Yet it is somehow impossible to imagine an actual ball taking place there. The place will never resound to string quartets and whirling couples, whatever the evocations of the deliberately anachronistic decor.

We wander through a dizzying array of bedrooms, bathrooms, and adjacent whirlpools, each as confusingly characterless as the last. "Basically," our man says cheerfully, "this is perfection. Utter perfection. In a house like this you can live like a prince. That's what it has been designed for, princely living."

Olde England beam-and-plaster heaps were immensely popular in the '20s, and Soledad boasts several.

As a matter of interest, has anyone yet made an offer for the princely abode? "Well, no, not yet. I mean, we're still in the recession. I suppose you could say there's a shortage of princes right now."

He laughs with a kind of nervous resentment and takes me back down to the ground floor, where we wander for what seems like an eternity around a kitchen the size of a football field. "Isn't it amazing?" he enthuses. "Look, two sub-zero refrigerators! A Jenn-Air Grill...A Thermador warming drawer! An Ise insinkerator! Task lighting! There's nothing better. It's a kitchen with everything mapped out from A to Z. It's the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Someone very lucky is going to be very happy here."

We go out onto the patio. Mount Soledad stretches up behind us, brilliant in the morning sun, the jacaranda trees and date palms glittering in a half-convincing simulacrum of the original Eden. In the distance is the Scripps pier and a curve of beach. The agent inhales with closed eyes, as if breathing in the purest air since Man stepped forth from the Garden. "For this location," he sighs, "four and a half million is a steal. Mount Soledad is as close to Eden as you can get in Southern California. Well, Eden with sewage, that is. That's why it was developed in the first place."

Eden with sewage? Or for that matter, Eden with vascular surgeons and Dobermans? Is 1560 the perfect house for San Diego's local top-tax-bracket luminaries? Local estate agents seem to think that Soledad is as unpredictable as a property market can be. Carol Carey, at Prudential California on Silverado Street, handles houses all over the hill. "The houses start at about $700,000, which puts them within reach of a wide spectrum of people. But as for the million-dollar homes high up, they've become legendary in the rest of the country. Maybe the rich like the idea of living on hills. It removes them from things. The houses are not all revival style or nostalgic. But I'd say that those are the best houses. The best built. And they go for the most money. The more money you're spending, the more you want out of the present day."

Farther down the hill, as it slopes gently toward the sea, is a spectacular curved street called Sierra Mar, a favorite of Hollywood tycoons in the '20s. As you take the road down, Alligator Point comes into view, and the ocean spans the horizon, an ingenious piece of suburban landscaping. Halfway down lies perhaps Mount Soledad's most beautiful period house at number 7755. A sprawling Spanish villa circumscribed by low stucco walls and landscaped gardens designed, it turns out, by the famous landscape artist Milton Sessions.

I seem to recognize items from the garish curiosity shops on Girard Avenue.

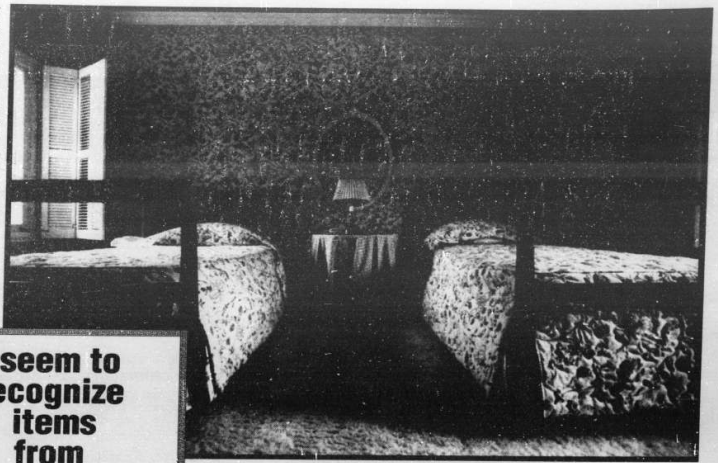

Four rings of the front door bell bring no response. But a minute later there is a sound of a hose at the side of the house, and the home's tall, elderly owner, in golf slacks, ambles out holding a magnifying glass in one hand and a pair of cutters in the other. He looks me down with no surprise at all and says, "This damn creeping fig. It's everywhere, and it's our own fault. We should have put ivy up, but no, we had to put creeping fig, and now we're being invaded. I hate creeping fig. It's disgusting. A scum plant. If I'm not mean with it, there'll be nothing left soon but a hill of creeping fig." He takes me inside with a few more expletives directed at the abominable plant.

Inside it is cool and shadowed, a spare Spanish interior with heavy shutters and iron chandeliers. There are original vents on the doors, which open in as the door opens out. Under a spiral staircase stands a Moorish column and alongside it a line of silver dog bowls and four china geese in descending order of height. The effect is a little peculiar.

"The house was built in 1925, all Spanish and French Beaux Arts. I don't know who the architect was, no one seems to. Not even at the La Jolla Historical Society. All I know is that in the Depression there was too much money around in a few hands, and people like John Rawlins, the guy who developed a lot of this area of Mount Soledad, could build what they wanted. The Rawlinses came from Iowa and bought three houses on Sierra Mar. They built this one, I think, right on the ravine. It's an amazingly designed house. It has the warmest patio in California. No wind, angled for the sun. Eleven pairs of French doors. Shall we go out?"

It seems a shame to leave the salon, with its weird decor of William Ritschel paintings (a dour wagon on a misty beach) and its pseudo-stucco walls imprinted with trompe l'oeil patterns. The patio pool shimmers in the sun. The edge of a tennis court or slightly higher ground nestles behind lines of orange trees and flower beds. The whole has an untouched Lost Generation aura to it, an effect not carried into the living apartments, which are resolutely modern-American. We dip into the bathroom briefly to ogle the huge tub from Wisconsin and the little patio added "so that the dogs could have a bath whenever they wanted." Everywhere, marble, arched windows, sudden vistas of sub-tropic hillside. We peer out over the clipped, emerald lawns of the front garden and the deep, wide ocean view beyond.

"We always lived near water and didn't care that much about the ocean view. But then we cut the hedges, and lo and behold, we have a view. I suppose that's what was intended. And in recent years, I've become much, much more absorbed by the house. I spend most of my time trying to find out about it. It's my obsession, I suppose. The history of everything takes on a different meaning as you grow older. For me, even the history of those door vents or the fountain tiles or the tower have resonance. I want to restore the house perfectly...every detail exactly as it was. The house is the most beautiful thing I have. It's a house you can happily end your life in. Isn't that the definition of a great house?"

At the end of my visit, he takes me out onto the driveway and shows me the cunning perspectives of the gardens. His eyes are alight. He knows every inch of the terrain, every tiny mathematical nuance of the landscaping. The house has its ultimate master, one utterly fused with his property. There must be dozens of such places on Mount Soledad, sadly and discreetly buried in their luxurious gardens, lost in a netherworld. The whole mountain is so totally self-absorbed that this proprietal obsession is almost inevitable. It is as if the Mount could only end by driving its inhabitants subtly mad by virtue of its sheer preposterousness.

The whole house radiates a feeling of some confident, self-contained wish to be elsewhere in spirit.

He shakes my hand and waves toward his splendiferous and improbable residence. "Isn't that where you want to live when you die?"

It is surely impossible to imagine where you want to die. Must it be particularly pleasant? If so, then Sierra Mar is probably as good as anywhere else. Provided, of course, that you can stand your neighbors and afford the tree tenders.

And the owner of number 7755...might he also be a K, an H, or a P?

"Mr. Durbin," he says with a nod. "Do call 'round anytime you like. I'll show you my iron window vents. And the room at the top of the tower. The next time you come, the creeping fig might even be in retreat. And no, I am definitely, but definitely, not a doctor." ■

If You Think You Need 20% Down, You Could Be 15% Off.
(First In A Series Of Ads On How To Get The Home You Want.)

For a lot of us, a down payment for a house seems like an unattainable sum. Standing like the Great Wall of China, between us and the home we want.

But there's good news. These days, you can buy more of a home. With less of a down payment.

Why? First of all, you may assume you need to put a minimum of 20% down.

Not necessarily. Many home-builders offer financing that requires only 5-10% down. In some cases, less than that. (Just be wary of a deal that seems too good to be true. It probably is.)

Secondly, FHA loans have gotten better. Their down payments can be as low as 3%, and they can now finance a greater loan amount. Or if you are a military veteran, you may qualify for a VA loan, and buy a home for as little as $1 down.

Another piece of good news: Home prices have come down. And of course, a lower price means a lower down payment.

For instance, at Hearthside in Temecula, we sell 3-bedroom homes for as little as $4423 down.* Nice sized homes, with good sized yards.

In fact, Presley alone has 11 different models in 5 different neighborhoods where a 5% down payment can be under $7500.

But what if you've only managed to save part of that? How do you get the rest?

These days, lots of people get help from family members. (However it's wise to consult a tax advisor before doing so.)

Here's another idea. It can help you save money at a much faster pace.

Some people move in with their folks for 6-8 months, banking what they used to spend on rent, utilities, and phone bills. And saving up to $1000 a month or more — quickly.

Also, consider other things you could turn into cash — a boat, camping trailer, etc.

To help you analyze all this better, talk to one of our sales associates at any neighborhood Presley builds. We can do a free computerized workup to give you a better idea of what price range to shop in. Call us at the number below, leave your name and address, and we'll send you a list of specific neighborhoods where down payments are minimal.

Plus a free booklet with helpful information about the process of buying a home.

Or, if you hate talking to anyone in "sales," don't worry. We'll also include a Down Payment Worksheet, where you can add up your assets in the privacy of your own home.

Just call (619) 451-6300, ext. 300 and ask for your Down Payment information kit.

Phone Matches Success Stories:

Dennis and Lee Ann Jones and Family

SINGLE DAD, 36, black, open-minded, professional, athletic, thoughtful and romantic, seeks joyous, affectionate, trim, educated nonsmoker for experiences in life. Race unimportant. ☎

Dennis: This was my third Phone Matches™ ad. Each time, after a few dates, I was able to change the ad to better fit what I was looking for.

Lee Ann: I was meeting people through mutual friends, clubs, even church, but nothing really worked out. Then my son picked up a Reader and brought it home. One Sunday, when I was bored, I began reading the Phone Matches™ ads. I kept coming back to Dennis's. I thought, "What can it hurt?"

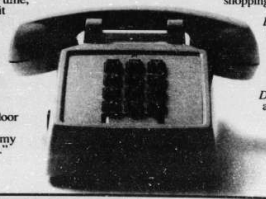

Dennis: We met at Heidi's, a yogurt place with an outdoor patio. I was in Mission Valley before that, on another Phone Matches™ date, and a little voice in the back of my mind said, "You do not want to be late for this next one."

Lee Ann: I came right from the dance class I teach in Balboa Park. I was still wearing my sweats. He was wearing a dress shirt and tie. He was very distinguished looking. I knew he was the one; we couldn't take our eyes off each other.

Dennis: After Heidi's we decided to extend our date. She went home, got changed, and we went out dancing.

Lee Ann: At first I was nervous and a little apprehensive. He was very open and conscientious. When he touched me, I felt a real sense of warmth and security.

Dennis: As it turns out, we were frequenting the same clubs and even shopping at the same grocery store. But we never met each other.

Lee Ann: On our second date he invited my son and me to his house for a barbecue. Dennis is a fabulous cook.

Dennis: I thought maybe I could make a mark here.

Lee Ann: He did.

Dennis: I really wanted her to see us – my boys and me – as we are in everyday life.

Lee Ann: It took off quickly after that. We got engaged three months later, right before Christmas.
Our wedding was on March 23, 1991.

Dennis: I didn't want any more children, but Lee Ann did. So I said okay, maybe in another year we can have a baby. But Annisa came sooner than that.

Lee Ann: Our boys have really enjoyed her. She's brought us all together.

Dennis: This part of our lives will be consumed by children. It's definitely a "we" thing.

You're concerned about the environment.

You read ingredient labels.

You prefer natural fibers to synthetics.

Why aren't you using a natural deodorant?

What we make:

You're using a deodorant that works. But maybe it's time to ask yourself how it works.

Most deodorants contain artificial bactericides like triclosan, as well as synthetic fragrances and other additives. Ingredients that may not be in keeping with the views you hold today.

At Tom's of Maine we make deodorants using naturally effective ingredients. We use natural extracts of coriander, an herb, and lichen, an Alpine plant, to fight bacteria that cause odor. And we take special care to formulate a product that's soothing by adding aloe, avoiding harsh perfumes and alcohol.

So whether you want a deodorant to control odor, or an anti-perspirant to fight wetness and odor, try Tom's of Maine.

What we believe:

Tom's of Maine lives and works by a mission which all of us helped create. At the heart of it is the belief that people and nature deserve our respect.

We use glass containers for our roll-on deodorants, making them easier to recycle. And we offer refills making it possible to reuse our containers.

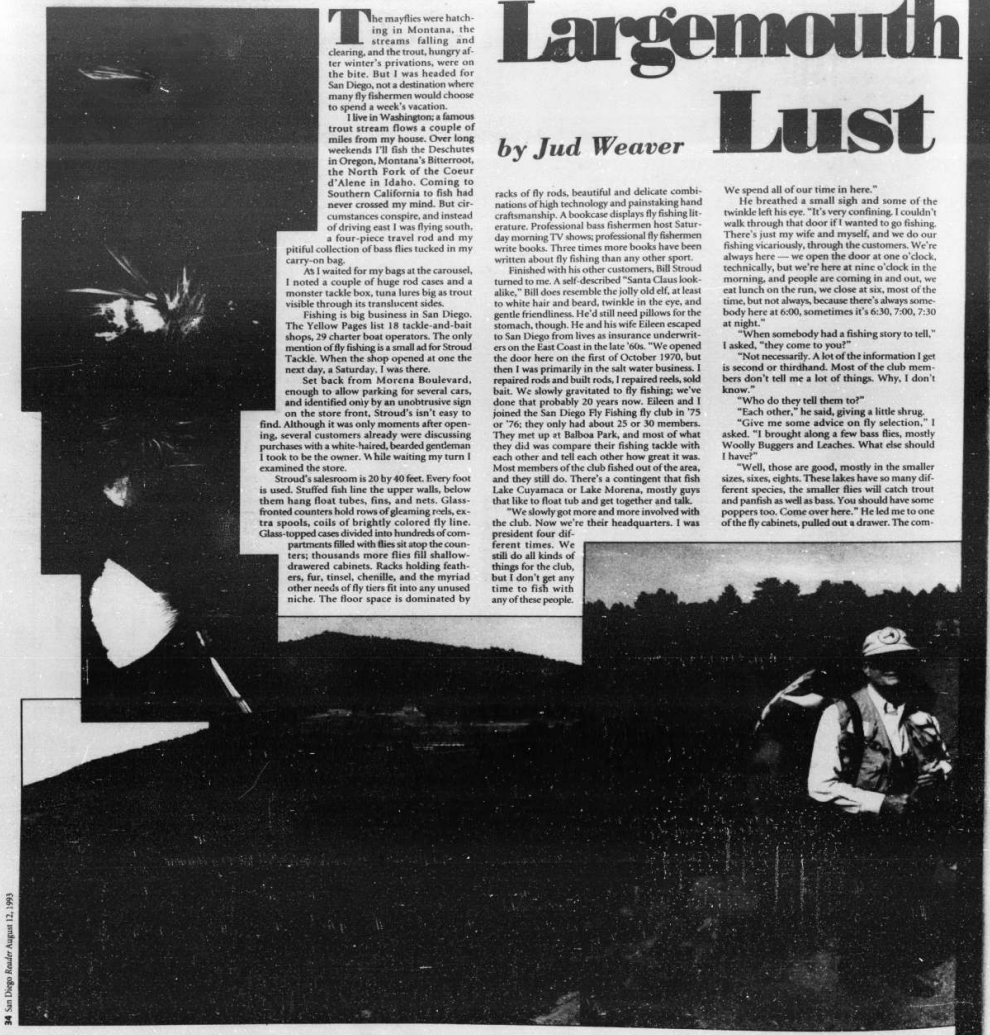

We believe it's important to look beyond profit and attend to the Common Good, of the community, the environment, and one another. We donate 10% of profits to these causes and encourage employees to use 5% of their paid work time for volunteering.

Largemouth Lust

by Jud Weaver

The mayflies were hatching in Montana, the streams falling and clearing, and the trout, hungry after winter's privations, were on the bite. But I was headed for San Diego, not a destination where many fly fishermen would choose to spend a week's vacation.

I live in Washington; a famous trout stream flows a couple of miles from my house. Over long weekends I'll fish the Deschutes in Oregon, Montana's Bitterroot, the North Fork of the Coeur d'Alene in Idaho. Coming to Southern California to fish had never crossed my mind. But circumstances conspire, and instead of driving east I was flying south, a four-piece travel rod and my pitiful collection of bass flies tucked in my carry-on bag.

As I waited for my bags at the carousel, I noted a couple of huge rod cases and a monster tackle box, tuna lures big as trout visible through its translucent sides.

Fishing is big business in San Diego. The Yellow Pages list 18 tackle-and-bait shops, 29 charter boat operators. The only mention of fly fishing is a small ad for Stroud Tackle. When the shop opened at one the next day, a Saturday, I was there.

Set back from Morena Boulevard, enough to allow parking for several cars, and identified only by an unobtrusive sign on the store front, Stroud's isn't easy to find. Although it was only moments after opening, several customers already were discussing purchases with a white-haired, bearded gentleman I took to be the owner. While waiting my turn I examined the store.

Stroud's salesroom is 20 by 40 feet. Every foot is used. Stuffed fish line the upper walls, below them hang float tubes, fins, and nets. Glass-fronted counters hold rows of gleaming reels, extra spools, coils of brightly colored fly line. Glass-topped cases divided into hundreds of compartments filled with flies sit atop the counters; thousands more flies fill shallow-drawered cabinets. Racks holding feathers, fur, tinsel, chenille, and the myriad other needs of fly tiers fit into any unused niche. The floor space is dominated by racks of fly rods, beautiful and delicate combinations of high technology and painstaking hand craftsmanship. A bookcase displays fly fishing literature. Professional bass fishermen host Saturday morning TV shows; professional fly fishermen write books. Three times more books have been written about fly fishing than any other sport.

Finished with his other customers, Bill Stroud turned to me. A self-described "Santa Claus look-alike," Bill does resemble the jolly old elf, at least to white hair and beard, twinkle in the eye, and gentle friendliness. He'd still need pillows for the stomach, though. He and his wife Eileen escaped to San Diego from lives as insurance underwriters on the East Coast in the late '60s. "We opened the door here on the first of October 1970, but then I was primarily in the salt water business. I repaired rods and built rods, I repaired reels, sold bait. We slowly gravitated to fly fishing; we've done that probably 20 years now. Eileen and I joined the San Diego Fly Fishing fly club in '75 or '76; they only had about 25 or 30 members. They met up at Balboa Park, and most of what they did was compare their fishing tackle with each other and tell each other how great it was. Most members of the club fished out of the area, and they still do. There's a contingent that fish Lake Cuyamaca or Lake Morena, mostly guys that like to float tub and get together and talk.

"We slowly got more and more involved with the club. Now we're their headquarters. I was president four different times. We still do all kinds of things for the club, but I don't get any time to fish with any of these people. We spend all of our time in here."

He breathed a small sigh and some of the twinkle left his eye. "It's very confining. I couldn't walk through that door if I wanted to go fishing. There's just my wife and myself, and we do our fishing vicariously, through the customers. We're always here — we open the door at one o'clock, technically, but we're here at nine o'clock in the morning, and people are coming in and out, we eat lunch on the run, we close at six, most of the time, but not always, because there's always somebody here at 6:00, sometimes it's 6:30, 7:00, 7:30 at night."

"When somebody had a fishing story to tell," I asked, "they come to you?"

"Not necessarily. A lot of the information I get is second or thirdhand. Most of the club members don't tell me a lot of things. Why, I don't know."

"Who do they tell them to?"

"Each other," he said, giving a little shrug.

"Give me some advice on fly selection," I asked. "I brought along a few bass flies, mostly Woolly Buggers and Leaches. What else should I have?"

"Well, those are good, mostly in the smaller sizes, sixes, eights. These lakes have so many different species, the smaller flies will catch trout and panfish as well as bass. You should have some poppers too. Come over here." He led me to one of the fly cabinets, pulled out a drawer. The compartments were filled with multihued creations of clipped deer hair; frogs, mice, little fish, and mythical creatures existing only in some fly tier's mind. "I keep these around, some people swear by them." He picked up a tiny, almost exact representation of a bluegill. "It looks like it should catch a fish; I suspect it mostly catches fishermen."

He pulled out the next drawer down. It contained more conventional poppers, brightly painted balsa wood bodies with white rubber legs and feather tails. He rummaged through the drawer, selected a half dozen different flies. "These should do the job, the bluegill will jump all over them, and you may catch a bass, too."

"Now that I've got all this stuff," I asked, "where do I go to fish?"

"Best advice I can give you is to go out to Lake Connor tomorrow morning. Every Sunday from 9 to 12 the club gives fly fishing lessons there. They teach casting, show people how to set up their equipment. Somebody will give you some advice on where to fish."

A Compleat Angler Fishes San Diego

photographs by Byron Pepper

When I arrived at Lake Connor shortly after nine the next morning, the fly fishermen were gathering. Clumps of gray-haired men, many wearing San Diego Fly Fishing Club baseball caps, strung up fly rods and talked quietly. Others, younger, and mostly men alone, wandered about with the distracted self-effacing air that characterizes an outsider at an in-group gathering. I wandered too, eavesdropping on conversations. Much of the club's purpose was still about equipment: new rods, reels, lines were displayed and passed about for admiration. All the fishing talk I heard concerned far-off destinations: a recent trip to the Green River in Utah, plans for a summer month in Montana, the possibilities of a long weekend in the Northern Sierras.

About 9:30, a man in a club cap walked over to one of the park tables and said loudly, "If you'll all listen for a moment ... I think everyone's here, I'd like all the people who are here for lessons to gather around the table." The different groups parted, although they'd never actually joined. The students, some clutching fly rods they'd obviously never handled before, moved toward the table; the members, their rods now strung with fly lines, went down to the edge of the wind-riffled lake.

A dozen hula hoops, painted white or fluorescent orange, were staggered 20 to 40 feet offshore along a couple hundred feet of bank. The members separated into smaller groups, two or three to a casting position, and began to toss their "flies" (actually clumps of bright pink yarn tied on the ends of leaders). I watched the fly casters and listened with half an ear to the instructor introduce his subject.

"Fly casting is not a natural act," he said, as his comrades at lakeside proceeded to make it look as natural and comfortable as breathing.

But he was so correct. I've never seen a beginner pick up a fly rod and make anything that resembled a decent cast. Natural athletes seem to be the worst, as their repeated failures cause them to try to remedy the problem with sheer strength. The real cure lies in delicacy and timing. "Fly casting" is a misnomer; the term "line casting" more accurately describes the act. The fly, usually a nearly weightless bit of fluff around a hook, would by itself not cast a foot. It is the thick and relatively heavy fly line that is the analog to the spincaster's lure.

The casters were starting to get their rhythm now, the clumps of yarn jumping off the water and following the line in long arches high above the casters' heads. Just as the line straightens behind an almost vertical rod (novices always bring their rods much too far back), the caster brings the rod forward sharply, a hand movement of less than a foot. For a fraction of a second, nothing happens; the force of the angler's forward thrust is added to the backward tug of the fly line and stored in the arc of the fly rod. The thrust ends as abruptly as it began, and the rod, now 45 degrees off the vertical, straightens. The line, accelerated by the straightening rod, rolls out above the lake as a smooth hoop that releases its last bit of energy by gently plopping the yarn into one of the targets.

The casters trade rods back and forth. Watching them, I can feel more sympathy for the obsession with equipment. I'm obsessed too; it's impossible to be a serious fly fisherman and not be. A spinning rod is just a rod. Given enough weight and a functional reel, most anyone will chunk a lure into the next county. A bad fly rod, like several I see being tentatively caressed by the students, can make casting nearly impossible. The whippy wand that looks so good being waved back and forth in the sporting goods shop will not store the power needed to drive the line forward.

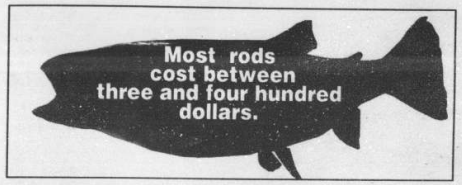

The results are casts that fall to the ground behind you or come across your head so low the fly snags on your ear. A good rod will absorb all the power a caster can exert and will transfer it smoothly into line speed.

All modern fly rods are hollow tubes of longitudinal graphite fibers bonded together by epoxy resins. Graphite because the fibers are extraordinarily stiff for their size and weight, enabling the manufacturers to build very light, thin rods that will store and transfer the power needed to cast a fly. Top-quality rods use graphite fibers that are as much as three times stiffer than those used in cheaper construction, and they're bonded with the absolute minimum amount of resin. Most of the rods the fly club members were using cost between $300 and $400, good reels start at over a $100, fly line is about $40; the average price of these state-of-the-art outfits is well over 500 bucks. It's possible to beat this price considerably, but difficult if you've had no experience with the sport.

I walked down to where two of the accomplished casters practiced. They were in their late 20s or early 30s, 20 years younger than any of the other casters. We introduced ourselves. The slighter man, his long hair, long beard, and drooping mustache obscuring his features, was Mark Smith; his friend a big, ruggedly handsome sort with an engaging grin, Terry Lutnick. Terry is the immediate past president of the fly club. "We joined several years ago, got totally involved, then I moved up north to Sun City. I went fishing, came home, and got a phone call, 'You've been nominated for president.' I live an hour and 15 minutes away, I'm the furthest person away in this entire club. Why me?"

I wanted to talk about the fascination with trout. Here I'd come to San Diego prepared to fish for bass, and all I heard was trout talk.

"Yeah," Terry replied, "it's always been that way. I'm just as guilty as anyone. There's hardly any that fish for anything but trout. We've got four or five members that fish the salt regularly, a few guys that fish for bass, but everybody runs out to those few lakes that have the trout in them."

We talked about the recent movie A River Runs through It, supposedly a paean to fly fishing, all noting how poorly the fishing scenes had been done, with close-ups of actors clumsily flailing their rods alternating with long shots of actors' doubles performing impossibly intricate and overlong casts. "Do you think it's brought new people to the sport?" I asked.

"Oh yeah. Even before the movie, the telephone commercial, the Chevy truck ad on the trout stream, it's become the 'in' thing. I don't know if it's good or bad. It's a sport that draws the people with the money — the lawyers, the doctors. They go out and spend four or five thousand dollars for five days of fishing, have the latest Sage rod, cost over $400, people just buying the experience."

By now, the lecture portion of the class was over and the students were starting to drift toward the casting positions at the lake's edge. I'd seen people learning to cast before. What I wanted was to go fishing. The instructor, Ned Sewell, had been pointed out as one who fished a lot locally. As he packed up his materials, I asked where I might go to catch a fish or two.

"A group of us will be going out to Lake Morena on Wednesday; you're welcome to join us. It's mostly retired people, we use float tubes and fish for trout, bass, carp. Bring along a lunch; there's no concession where we fish. Afterwards we'll usually stop at a restaurant for dinner." He drew me a map showing how to get to the lake and the area where they would be fishing.

"How about this afternoon? I've been in town two days, and I'd like to start fishing. I've got waders, but I don't have a float tube yet."

"Well, I'd go to Cuyamaca. The fly fishermen usually fish the south end; it's shallow enough to wade and the boats don't bother you. We were up there last week and one of the members caught 60 bluegill before he stopped counting. You might hook a bass, too."

Another map was produced, and I left Lake Connor with the promise to meet Ned and his friends on Wednesday.

I've spent a number of vacations in San Diego but have never ventured much east of El Cajon, imagining the land beyond there a flat, featureless desert stretching to the distant Sierras. It was a pleasant surprise, as I climbed past Alpine and turned onto the narrow road that twists through the hills toward Cuyamaca, to be in rolling, wooded country that reminded me of the east slope of the Rockies in Montana.

Several hours after leaving Lake Connor, I eased into the water at the south end of Lake Cuyamaca. I tied on one of the poppers Bill Stroud sold me and started casting. The lake was shallow. Fifty feet from shore it wasn't much over knee deep, and weeds grew thick all the way to the surface. I spent more time cleaning weeds from my bug than fishing. After an hour of fruitless casting and weed-cleaning, I moved down the west shore to a less overgrown area. Walking along the bank, I came upon a fellow fly fisherman sitting under a tree. I'd been fishing the right place, he assured me, but "they're not biting yet, probably be another couple of hours."

I was impressed by his patience, but preferring to kill the time fishing, I continued another 200 yards up the west bank. Here the weeds extended only 20 feet and I was up to my waist at 50 feet out. The popper had produced no action, and I had lost confidence in it. I tied on an olive-colored Woolly Bugger, a subsurface fly that, while not being an exact replica of any specific creature, vaguely represents a number of natural fish foods. I tossed the first cast toward the middle of the lake, gave it a couple of seconds to sink, and twitched it several inches. There was an angry boil where the fly had entered the water, and I hooked what felt to be a substantial fish. The fight was sullen rather than spectacular, the fish yielding ground grudgingly but not taking out much line, and in under a minute I grasped him by his lower lip and hoisted him from the water. It was a largemouth bass, maybe a bit over two pounds — not a trophy by any means, but my own personal best.

Encouraged by success, I repeated my first cast. And repeated it again, and again, and tried variants of it. All fruitless. While my fishing hadn't done much for the fish, it had attracted the attention of the other fishermen. I heard a little boy ask his father, "Daddy, what's that man doing?"

"He's fishing with a fly."

There was a pause. "Daddy, how's he get it on the hook?"

Another father was explaining the intricacies of wading. "You see, he'd got on these rubber pants...."

The lake was full of rental boats. Many fathers had decided it was time to teach the kid to fish. Some seemed serious about fishing, but more typical was the boat — the little Suzuki outboard buzzing furiously — that zigzagged toward me, the grade school operator swinging the motor from side to side, almost dipping the gunwales at each turn. Two or three of his contemporaries were flinging lures and reeling them frantically in. The father sat in the middle seat drinking a beer and occasionally shouting at the helmsman, "Go left!" The boat lurched 90 degrees to the left. "Right now, straighten it out!" Another 90-degree turn. They missed me by 20 feet; I had to jerk my line out of the way, however

Another solitary gentleman was having problems with his Suzuki. It wouldn't troll slowly enough to suit him. He'd idle it down as far as it would go, get his line out, and the motor would cough and die. I first noticed him because of his shouted "Shit!" at one of these deaths. He'd tug at the starter cord, but invariably before the motor would start, his trolling gear would have settled into the weeds at the bottom of the lake and he'd have to untangle it. The whole process did not noticeably improve his disposition. The simple "Shit!" was replaced by more rococo expressions. By the end of the afternoon I could hear him far across the lake beating on the motor cowling, screaming at the top of his lungs, "You dirty cock-sucking sonofabitch! Start, you motherfucker!"

I eventually tired of the nonproductive bass fishing and turned to face the shore. Up a narrow channel between the weeds there was a small swirl. I tossed the fly into the spreading ripples. Before it had sunk an inch, there was another swirl and a sharp tug. It was an eight-inch bluegill, a scrappy little fish, and it would be tasty too. I slipped him on my stringer, feeling that perhaps I could fulfill my promise of a fish dinner. During the next couple of hours I worked my way up the shoreline, catching a bluegill every few casts, my mind settling into the Zen-like concentration on the Now that good fishing brings.

Ansel Watrous

I hadn't fished for bluegills since I was ten. A friend and I had discovered a "secret" bluegill pond, a small gravel pit hidden behind much larger pits that were annually stocked with trout. The trout were mostly gone after Opening Day, but the bluegills were there all summer. A piece of worm on a hook, a bobber a couple of feet above, the bobber would bounce and quiver gently, tiny ripples would spread from it. Timing was important. A jerk at the first twitch would send the hook and chewed-upon worm flying over my head; wait too long and the fish would nibble the hook bare.

Toward the end of the summer, my friend found a fishtrap in the family's barn, an illegal relic of the Depression. His grandfather had used it to feed the family during hard times. We baited it with stolen bacon and threw it in our pond one evening. When we pulled it out the next morning, it was filled with fish: a score of bluegills, several small bass, and in the very bottom an evil-looking five-pound catfish.

We paraded our trophy home in triumph and carried it about town to show our friends. It must have been disposed of quietly by one of our mothers, because I remember nothing of eating it, but it changed our perception of the pond. The little bluegills lost their allure, and we dredged the bottom with increasingly nasty chunks of homemade "stink bait." We never caught another catfish, and by the next summer I'd become a trout fisherman. Many years later I went back to the pond, but the bluegills were gone, probably frozen out in a hard winter; nevertheless, it was they and that little pond that had made me into a fisherman.

I left Cuyamaca with a stringer full of bluegills, later filleted, rolled in cornmeal, and fried to a golden brown. They were crunchy and sweet.

Monday morning I was out early, looking for a float tube. Float tubes represent the ultimate in miniaturization of boats. In its simplest form merely a truck inner tube with a sling seat in the middle, the tubes have evolved into sophisticated fishing systems. Inflatable backrests, necessary both for comfort and as safety flotation, are now standard. Pockets to hold gear and a mesh apron across the fisherman's lap for a dry working area are found on all but the cheapest. The fisherman, clad in waterproof waders, sits inside the tube and propels himself with swim fins. They make an excellent fishing platform, the sole drawback is their lack of mobility; two miles per hour is top speed, and maintaining that for any length of time introduces you to muscles you were previously unaware of.

I found my tube at Oshman's in the Grossmont Mall. Oshman's has recently expanded its fly fishing department, obviously expecting increase in local interest in the sport. For exactly $100 I got a tube and a set of fins. Waders would have been about another hundred; I brought a pair with me.

The clerk explained San Diego's system of lake closures to me. All the municipal lakes are open on weekends. On weekdays, only one or two lakes are open, giving the fish in the others a rest from anglers' assaults. Mondays, only Lake Miramar is open.

Miramar looked more like what I had imagined a San Diego lake to be. Surrounded by rolling sagebrush hills, those to the south and east crowned with multi-story condos, its convoluted shoreline was ringed by a paved exercise path. Every few minutes an ear-shattering roar announced the arrival or departure of an unmuffled military jet from nearby Miramar Naval Air Station.

I put the tube in the water at the far end of the parking lot and paddled across the lake to a narrow inlet that looked bassy. An hour later, I was paying more attention to the in-line skaters in tight Spandex on the exercise path than to my futile fishing. None of the other fishermen that I could see were catching anything either.

Nonfishermen, on hearing of my devotion to the sport, frequently say, "You must have so much patience, I could never sit there and wait for a fish to bite." In actuality, I'm notably impatient and have always marveled myself at the worm-dunkers' stoicism.

Fly fishing gives me something to occupy my time between fish. There's first the cast: placement is all important, the hula-hoops at Lake Connor were good practice; when fishing a dry fly to a rising trout, the target is more the size of a teacup. Overpower the cast by a couple of ounces of force and the fly is driven to the water with a splash, almost certain to spook a fish gently sipping mayflies, but just what you want to imitate a foolish grasshopper plopping into the water. Sometimes the leader should fall arrow straight; at others, lie in loose curls, allowing the fly to move with the currents without the drag of the fly line. I can be happy with casting play if I get a fish every hour or so, if they're big fish I can go two. But much more than that, on a lake or stream with no rising fish, and I've used up all my tricks.

Given some fish rising, or bulging as they take something just below, or even flashing a quick white wink as they turn to take a bug far beneath the surface, I can spend hours puzzling through my fly boxes to find the fly that matches the insect the fish are eating. Sometimes I don't succeed and the fish continue to munch their preferred diet as my fly floats by them like a wallflower at the ball. More frequently, I'll have partial success and manage to fool the smaller, stupider fish. The real thrill is having the biggest, wariest fish of the bunch confidently shoulder aside the small fry to grab my perfect imitation. The fact that it doesn't happen all the time — even after 40 years of practice — is what keeps me coming back.

I'd only managed to stick it out at Miramar for two hours and could feel more sympathy for the trout-obsessed fly club members. Bass, particularly big bass, rarely eat insects the way trout will, and their apparent preference for things like chartreuse metal-flake plastic worms makes fly selection a lot less interesting than when fishing for trout, who are often picky to the point of eating not just a specific insect, but a particular stage in the life cycle of the insect. When I'm trout fishing, I'll have nearly a thousand flies, several hundred different patterns, in my vest. My one box of bass flies, 30 or 40, had been deemed by the fly-club members to be adequate for any bassing situation. My experience so far indicated that when they weren't biting, they weren't biting on anything, and changing flies and presentation had stopped to inspire hope.

The Complete Guide to California Fishing says, "You want fish? You get fish. Lake Morena may be the most consistent producer of bass in California...."

Ned Sewell had said the fly club would gather at the "Honor Camp" at Lake Morena. I'd imagined institutional barracks, rough-looking adolescent boys lounging on the dusty stoops, on their "honor" not to riot or escape or mug fishermen. Actuality was an unmanned box on a post, a signboard of instructions, and a stack of forms for campers and fishermen to fill out and put in the box with the appropriate fee.

I'd misunderstood Ned's other directions too, and I turned the wrong way at the Porta Potties. I bounced the rental down some roads that Dollar wouldn't have liked the look of, until, at the end of a narrow peninsula, I ran into a couple of fishermen. They were members of the fly club, and while they hadn't been to Morena for a year, they were sure this was where the club usually met. Deciding we were merely the first arrivals, we put our tubes in the water and went fishing. The others paddled out into the main body of the lake and trolled for trout; I elected to fish the shoreline shallows for the fabled bass. Two hours later, no one had caught a fish, and no other fishermen had arrived.

I learned later that the fly club had turned right at the Porta Potties. Ned had clearly shown it on his map; the beautiful day and my exultation upon arriving at the lake had hurried my checking it. The fly club also had a lousy day; the only fish caught was an eight-pound carp. Of the two in a row were too much to bear, so I headed back down I-8 to Cuyamaca and the reliable bluegills.

John Kasten and class, Lake Murray

Two fly fishermen were casting in the shallows at the south end as I drove up. I launched the tube at the boat dock a half mile uplake and fished a nymph along the edge of the deep weed beds as I finned slowly in their direction. My failures at Miramar and Morena had dispirited me. One take, even a planted eight-inch rainbow, would have changed my mood. As it was, my uninspired fishing produced uninspired results.

It took a little over an hour to fish down the weed beds. I stopped where I'd fished Sunday and confirmed that the bluegills were still there, still eager for the damselfly nymph. Every few minutes I glanced at the fly fishermen. They were in the same place, standing in knee-deep water, their tubes encircling their legs like ignored bathtub toys. I paddled up just as one caught and released a smallish bluegill.

"You guys doing any good?" I asked.

"That was the first one."

I was impressed. Two man-hours spent in the relentless quest for a solitary bluegill exhibited the sort of patience a Zen master would be proud of.

The fishermen were Bob and Larry. Bob had been fly fishing for a couple of years, Larry only one, but he caught the first fish. They were fishing much as I had, several days earlier, casting small poppers tight to the impenetrable shoreline weeds and catching more weeds than fish, but I must have brought them luck, for a few minutes later, Bob got the second and then the third fish of the day.

I left Bob and Larry and paddled back up the lake to my personal "honey hole." A half-hour later I had a dinner's worth of fish on my stringer.

Thursday it rained. Gusty winds scudded low clouds into San Diego. I stayed home, read a detective novel, and when I tired of that wandered to the liquor store for a paper.

Amid the sober grey of the L.A. Times, the Union-Tribune, the New York Times, the bright colors of the Fishing and Hunting News stood out. "Royal Star Shines with Huge Tuna" was the headline. Twenty-four fish over 200 pounds, one man had three of those plus three others over a hundred. What do you do with a thousand pounds of tuna? Does he have a pantry piled to the ceiling with tuna cans? This is hunter gathering of an entirely different proportion than my stringer of bluegills.

The News is a national paper, published in regional editions. A typical headline in its Northwest edition was "Banks [Lake] Belts Out Big 'Bows." The resemblance to a tabloid is more than cosmetic. The veracity of many of its stories is on a par with the Enquirer or the Star; fishless days rarely grace its pages, and its sources are charter captains and resort operators, hardly unbiased reporters. But it did offer news of the current fishing in San Diego, so I bought a copy and took it home in the hopes of finding better luck.

The only mention of fly fishing was contained on page 32, a full page on the Henry's Fork of the Snake. In Idaho. The technique articles focused on fishing Slug-Gos, a fat piece of plastic disturbingly reminiscent of a slimy garden pest, and color selection of plastic worms, pumpkin/green/red with blue flake being seen as particularly desirable. The front of the second section offered a possibility: "Bassing's Ready to Boom at Sutherland." The copy read, "At an elevation of over 2000 feet, Sutherland warms up later in the spring. While other lakes were seeing spring fishing decline, Sutherland was just getting started. Sutherland is a seasonal late-bloomer."

The story featured a map of the lake with orange circles indicating crappie/bluegill areas, yellow shading for bass hangouts. Narrow arms looked to be ideal float tube water. It would be open on Friday after a four-day rest.

I got lost in Ramona, following what I thought was Highway 76 but which turned out to be one of those uniquely Californian roads that appear to go somewhere and then suddenly broaden into a suburban boulevard through a raw earth development and abruptly end at a turnaround.

The real road climbs out of Ramona's valley; at the crest of the hills a small sign indicates Sutherland to the left. The one-lane track snakes down a steep hillside; boys who could have been from my Lake Morena "Honor Camp" scythed the brown grass from its edges, sweating under the midday sun.

The lake was created by a dam erected just below the joining of Bloomdale and Santa Ysabel Creeks. The water backs up their narrow canyons, creating an unlikely oasis in a barren landscape. A few cows grazing the narrow fringe of green along the water's edge were the only signs of life as I paddled up Santa Ysabel Arm. The arm had been outlined in yellow and overladen with orange circles on the map; I was ready for the "Bassing to Boom."

An hour later, the bloom had gone off the boom. If there were fish present, they weren't interested in what I was offering. I pulled out my fly boxes, looking for something to restore my faith, give me that willing suspension of disbelief necessary to sustain a fisherman on a slow day. Lost in the bottom of one box, left behind when I'd cleaned out the trout flies, I found a ragged Sculpin.

It was a fly with a history. I tied it with my portable fly-tying kit on a long-ago trip to the Bow River in Alberta. The river had been high and muddy; the grasshoppers and mayflies that had worked so well on previous floats were producing nothing. I put on the only Sculpin I had, a fly tied after reading an article in a fishing magazine. On the first cast, a huge brown trout took it, went straight across the river in a series of jumps, and broke me off. The rest of the five-day float we caught fish, lost Sculpins, and scrounged for feathers and fur along the banks. In the evenings, by the light of a Coleman lantern, we tied up flies to lose the next day. This one was the sole remnant. Back home I had a box full of better imitations; this concoction of melted goose feathers and deer hair plucked from rose thorns I'd kept more for sentimental value than any practical fishing use.

Sculpins are bullheads, terrifically ugly miniature catfish that are, along with bluegills, favorite little-boy prey. Fly fishing nicety would never allow one to cast a "bullhead," so, just as the bass fisherman's "crawdad" becomes a "crayfish imitation," the lowly bullhead has been elevated.

"Ozzie" Osborn

I pitched the fly up close to a tangle of half-submerged brush. It landed with a splash, its lead-wrapped core sinking it swiftly. Before I could start the retrieve there was an underwater flash and the line straightened. I struck hard and a big largemouth boiled from the water, shaking his head to dislodge the fly. He dived back toward the brush and I snubbed him with as much force as the leader could stand, the fly rod bending double with the strain. Retreat to its sanctuary denied, the fish ran for the open lake. I let it take line more easily in that safer direction, only applying palm pressure to the exposed rim of the reel when it attempted another dash into the brush. The fight was over in a couple of minutes; it felt like more a case of the fish realizing the hopelessness of its position than of it tiring.

The fish was close to four pounds, its mouth large enough to hold my fist, its bulky body too wide to span with two hands. I eased the hook from the gristle at the side of its mouth and watched it swim away, slowly at first as if testing to see if it was actually free and then disappearing with a quick and powerful thrust of its tail. (Fly fishermen release most of their catch. In trout country, a fish is rarely kept. This etiquette has migrated only recently to bass fishing.)

The next cast was a little too close to the brush, and the fly hooked a stick far beneath the surface. Try as I might, I couldn't dislodge it, and I had to break it off.

I tried several other flies, all unsuccessfully, before giving up. Whether my singular fish was due to the old Sculpin or simply luck would remain an unsolved fishing mystery.

Saturday was to be my last day in San Diego. I was tired of fishing. I headed for Stroud's Tackle at one o'clock with the hopes of talkative fishermen telling entertaining tales.

The shop was busy when I arrived. Bill Stroud was selling a customer a new reel and line; Eileen was showing rods to a young couple. In the back room, men were drinking coffee and watching a fishing video. I wandered about, marveling again at so much merchandise displayed in the tiny space, trying to look like the type of person a fisherman would tell stories to.

Finally, one of the men from the back room group came up to the front to help Eileen find something. In jeans, a plaid shirt, and with an untrimmed beard, he would not have looked out of place in a Northwest lumber camp. His name was Guy Muto. Now an archeology prof at UCSD, Guy had spent most of his professional life in remote areas of the Northwest doing archaeological surveys of areas soon to be covered by the reservoirs of hydroelectric dams — "Selling my soul to the river killers."

He was not impressed with where I had been dinner conversation, I heard nothing, but a fishless day producing sprightly talk seemed unlikely.

Fishless days are not uncommon; I do a couple every year, always trying to think of it as a learning experience, usually with little success.

fishing thus far. "Been talking with the members of the San Diego Trout Club, huh?" he said when I told him of my trips to Cuyamaca and Morena.

"There's good bass fishing around here, but those aren't the places to go," he said.

"Tell me where then," I countered.

"You drive a BMW? Drink Perrier?"

Reassured that I usually drove an old Chev, preferred Canadian lager, and promised to keep the secret, he agreed to divulge. "I usually fish small ponds. Most of them are private, some you have to get permission, people are usually pretty good about it."

"How about a place where I won't have to ask?"

He thought for a moment. "You a member of AAA?"

"No."

"Too bad, their maps are the only ones that show the ponds. Well, I can tell you how to get to a place where you can ask for directions."

Eileen Stroud produced a road atlas and Guy pointed out a small dot at the intersection of thin grey roads. "Once you get there, there'll be someone who knows about the ponds."

I had trouble just getting to the dot. I stopped at several gas stations, and while people had heard of the place, no one was quite sure how to get there. Eventually I fouad it by crisscrossing the area in which it had to be.

The town consisted of a store, a gas station, and the largest structure, a real estate office with a sign saying, "STOP HERE, INFORMATION AND FREE MAPS."

It was a slow day for real estate. I was the only prospective customer, and the broker greeted me eagerly at the door. His face fell upon learning that I only wanted information and free maps.

"No, I don't know of any ponds around here," he said.

I was walking out when one of the women in the office stopped me. "I've seen some ponds," she said. She got a free map and located only a couple of miles from the office a pond.

"There's another one, further up that canyon, but I'm not sure where."

The pond sat in a hollow off the side of the canyon road. About 100 feet wide and 200 feet long, it was thickly fringed with cattails. The only access point was a ten-foot-wide beach at the end of the steep trail down from the road. Two men and a boy occupied the beach. The men were in their mid-20s, lean, dirty, and unshaven. They exuded a dangerousness that may have come more from my viewings of Deliverance than themselves. As I walked up, one of them reeled in his spinner, removed a bit of weed, and cast it back up along the cattails.

"You doing any good?" I asked him.

"Nah, nothin'," he replied. "This place is either on or off. Today it's off."

The other fisherman reeled in. He was fishing a four-inch-long night crawler. He inspected it briefly, adjusted it on the hook, and cast it back into the pond. We all stared meditatively at his motionless bobber.

The worm fisherman removed a pack of cigarettes from the rolled sleeve of his T-shirt; a crude tattoo of a dagger dripping blood trailed down his arm.

"I hear there's another pond further up the canyon somewehere," I finally ventured.

After a lengthy pause, the worm fisherman allowed, "Yeah, but you need a boat to fish it."

"I've got a float tube, would that work?"

His face tightened and he looked at me for the first time.

"That'd do it all right. What kinda rig you goin' ta use?"

I considered lying. Revealing myself as an effete fly fisherman might ruin our newfound rapport. But truth won out.

"I thought I'd try flies."

"Oh yeah, flies work good up there," he said, setting his pole in a forked stick and turning to his tackle box. "I usually use a Muddler Minnow."

He plucked a fly box from the tangle of rubber worms, bobbers, and bass lures, opened it to show me a neat row of Muddlers. He stroked the flies the way one might pet a favorite cat and tenderly lifted out a vivid Royal Coachman. "Sometimes they go real good for these too. Crappies like 'em. There's some big crappie in that pond, real slabs.

I was stunned. Here he was, the cutting edge of the fly-fishing revolution, a country-boy worm-dunker as enthralled by the pursuit as I am. And all I asked were directions.

It wasn't far. A couple of miles, a couple of left turns onto smaller roads. "The pond's kinda hidden from the road. There's trees all around it except for the one hole, so go slow and watch for it."

The pond was a beauty. Two or three times longer than the first but almost as narrow, protected by its shoreline trees and the shallow canyon, its surface mirrored the scattered cumulus. Up the long side next to the road, the row of trees and the thick band of cattails separating the trees from the pond ran in a straight line paralleling the road. At the far end, the pond necked down, the ruins of an old dam partially enclosing an area highly recommended by my friend. The shoreline opposite the road was intricately convoluted. Twenty or more tiny bays and inlets, fringed by cattails, carved back into the trees. A muskrat, its mouth full of trailing weed, swam up one, its wake spreading a "V" across half the pond.

I fished up the road side, casting a Woolly Bugger up close to the reeds and twitching it back out. By the time I'd reached the remains of the dam, I'd still failed to interest a fish.

At the dam site, rotting timbers and piles of brush obstructed the water. I thought of wall-sized bass lurking in underwater caverns and carefully probed every opening with the fly. After half an hour, I gave up. I tied on the same white popper that had been so unsuccessful at Cuyamaca, thinking to perhaps attract a crappie.

I cast it up to the end of a little inlet, waited for the ripples to subside, and popped it with a tug of the line. A quick swirl and the popper was gone. I jerked more from surprise than any fisherman cunning. It was a largemouth, not a big one, but enough to restore my confidence in the pond's possibilities.

For the next couple of hours I finned slowly up the indented shore, attracting a bass every few casts. A few were larger than the first, but none spectacularly so, and after a while I stopped expecting them to be much bigger.

As the shadows lengthened, bullfrogs began a basso serenade from the cattails. The muskrat continued his weed gathering, apparently undisturbed by my slow-moving tube. The line soared but in graceful loops, and the popper landed with a gentle splash. I wasn't thinking about Montana. ■

"Lake Morena may be the most consistent producer of bass in California."

The Furies' Business is Revenge

The Dark Ambition of Janet Hobhouse's Final Novel

by Judith Moore

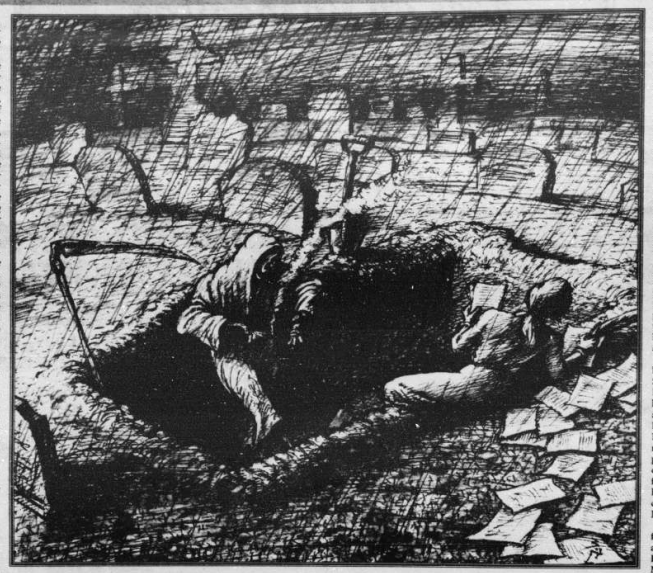

Illustration by Natalie M. Zelenetz

Make believe that after you were told you had one year to live, you decided to write the story of your life and not leave out one ugly, heartbreaking detail. This, essentially, is what Janet Hobhouse was told and what she did in her posthumous novel, The Furies. Hobhouse died of cancer in 1991 at the age of 42. Her three earlier novels — Nellie Without Hugo (1982), Dancing in the Dark (1983), November (1986) — were books in which bright young women could (at least uneasily) imagine themselves as characters. Next to The Furies, with its dark ambition, these were books that could be read, happily, at the beach. As well as fiction, Hobhouse wrote art criticism for Newsweek and was a contributing editor to ARTnews and Vogue and in 1989 published a much-acclaimed book on the artist and the nude in the 20th Century, The Bride Stripped Bare.

There are things wrong with The Furies and they're small. The book is more memoir than novel; all through, the reader can substitute Janet Hobhouse for Helen, the narrator. Perhaps the reader would be affected more powerfully had Hobhouse not tried this story as fiction. Sections in the novel's last half become sketchy; the narrator's voice occasionally turns hysterical or whispers secrets in a tone that falls too low to hear. I didn't care. Hobhouse was in a hurry. She was about to die.

Helen "had high cheekbones and a long, delicate nose, large, often fierce dark brown eyes, penetrating sometimes unnervingly direct for a girl so young."

The story begins with Helen's telling her childhood. Like Janet Hobhouse's mother, Helen's mother came from a prosperous Manhattan German Jewish family that lost its wealth. Helen's father, like Hobhouse's, was English. As Hobhouse's parents did, Helen's divorced when she was little more than a baby, with her father returning to England and her mother staying in Manhattan. Her mother takes low-paying jobs, moves from one dingy apartment to another, dates lowlife men, suffers one after another small nervous breakdowns. Helen's mother Bett isn't a bad mother — she's poor, she's helpless, she's untrained to live in the world to which she has been exiled by her family's loss of money and her own loss of a husband. She does her best.

Bett tries to protect Helen from their insecure existence. She sends the youngster away to boarding school. Helen doesn't feel protected, she feels lonely and abandoned. She was truly happy only on visiting days.

"I knew that her arrival would alter my life absolutely and that there would be whole hours before I would begin to dream the parting, whole hours of not counting, not figuring, not bracing, but just being, as I could only be when I was with her: outside time and whole."

Finally, Bett's unable to pay Helen's school bills. She takes the child, ready for sixth grade, back to Manhattan.

Helen gets a scholarship to attend a socially connected private Manhattan school (Hobhouse graduated from prestigious Spence). As did Hobhouse, Helen graduates at 16 and goes to England to meet her father, whom she's not seen since her parents' divorce. The move to England seems an attempt to escape her mother and her mother's fate.

Hobhouse's father is Henry Hobhouse, author of Seeds of Change, a study of the influence of plants (quinine, sugar, tea, cotton, and potato) in history. Her father, if the novel is to be believed, had little love to give and didn't give even that.

Helen, as did Janet Hobhouse, stayed in England. She went up to Oxford, read English, took her degree with honors, and blossomed into a femme fatale. At Oxford, Hobhouse met and married Nicholas Fraser (then a journalist and now a television producer), who inherited a comfortable fortune from his father. Hobhouse has her Helen marry Ned, and the couple soon moves to Manhattan.

Helen and Ned lease a floor-through apartment in a "limestone palace between Fifth and Madison near the Metropolitan Museum." The landlord pointed out a point for this damn building." "A famous writer. A selling Hobhouse names the famous writer Jack. Jack, in fact, is Philip Roth. Helen and Jack enter into an affair. Weeks pass before Jack and Helen kiss and months before they go to bed. The book's happiest pages (194-204) are those in which Hobhouse describes Roth.

Jack was "tall, slender, with broad shoulders — the alertness and pent energy more predatory than athletic, and the liquid black eyes never still under thick brows. There was something wound and ready to spring about him, physically, though it was all driven by the brain, from the shoulder that bent toward you when he listened.... We were both aware of his stature in American letters. A certain awe and a certain respect hung like a cloud around his dark and wonderful head and clung like cologne to his clothes."

Hobhouse has Helen say, about Jack, "He later wrote a version of our time together...and made me into some kind of English lady/saint." Roth's The Counterlife moved the action to London and gave Hobhouse two children and a bumbling diplomat husband.

Helen's mother, with age, has lost beauty. Her already tenuous hold on sanity slips. Helen is mistress, now, to moderate wealth. Bett, living with a taxi driver younger than herself, sometimes goes hungry. And eventually, Bett, as did Hobhouse's mother, kills herself.

After the funeral, Helen goes to her mother's shabby apartment to sort her things. When she walks to her mother's dresser, her knees begin to tremble. She coaxes herself, "like a pony going through mortar fire," to open the top drawer. "There nesting like something a bird values and hides are the separate piles of her underwear, clean, folded, but some of them so frayed or faded or laundromat-discolored that I have to bite down hard to stop from crying."

Hobhouse's story goes on unspooling, sadder and sadder. Helen's father doesn't acknowledge the letter Helen sends about Bett's death, Helen's husband leaves her comfortless and finally, leaves her. Helen begins to realize that when she went to England, she did not escape her mother's fate. With her husband gone, she is poor again. As she did in childhood, she lives in one after another run-down apartment. "The bag ladies," Hobhouse writes, "the madwomen looked at me in a special way as if they knew this was where I would end up." Then a doctor tells Helen she has cancer.

Hobhouse's story goes on unspooling, sadder and sadder.

The Furies, with whom Hobhouse makes her title, are three creatures from Greek mythology. Hideous bat-winged females with serpents for hair, the Furies' business is revenge: They punish crimes that elude discovery or public justice.

The Furies is Hobhouse's last word, a book into which the author apparently confesses everything. It also may have been an act of revenge against her father and her ex-husband.

Early this summer, the British television channel BBC2 offered a special, Only the Names Have Been Changed, an evening of interviews with people whom novelists had turned into fictional characters. Among the persons interviewed was Hobhouse's ex-husband, Nicholas Fraser. Asked about his portrayal in Roth's Counterlife and The Deception and his ex-wife's The Furies, Fraser confessed that he wasn't happy with his fictional selves. He verified that a relationship had existed between Roth and Hobhouse and that at the time he had known about the affair. But he objected to what he described as Roth's "caricature" of him as "an asshole diplomat." Fraser objected, too, to Hobhouse's characterization of him as cold-hearted in general and indifferent in particular to her mother's suicide.

Fraser said that had his ex-wife published this novel and lived, he at least could have telephoned her "and had lots of arguments" about her description of him. Now, Fraser told his interviewer, he will never know if his portrayal in The Furies was what Hobhouse really thought of him or if he was a fictional bad guy for the purposes of a novel. "No one," he concluded, "gives a shit about the people who are put in novels." ■ then remained in the top 5 for weeks after that, and to this day is still in the top 20. Aerosmith has been a top-selling band for many years and is also one of the only classic bands around that can still top the charts with each new release.

One last comment — I have to criticize what you wrote about their "looks." I can speak for many men and women in saying that those bodies are some of the sexiest around and those lips that belong to Steven Tyler are too beautiful to flatter with compliments. The fact that you have a problem with aging men sucks! Even though I am very young, I still think men get sexier as they age and mature. What I want to know is, who the hell do you look at? I suppose you like those slick-haired, postcard model, Ray Ban-wearing yuppie types that have no comprehension of good music so they listen to "new age" jazz because the people at Trader Joe's say it's the best thing since Brie.

The only thing I see that is lamer than lame is you and your writing. You need to drop your pickiness and "Get a Grip!"

I Was In Vietnam With Your Cousins

Steve Esmedina, you jerk! I was in Vietnam with your cousins. (Why weren't you there? Not old enough? No excuse.) We were wearing peace signs and beads as well and listening to Jimi, Janis, CCR, and even the Mamas and the Papas. In other words, had our class and ethnic situations allowed us, we happily would have been "bead-wearing pansies" too ("Of Note," July 29). You know squat about history and music.

Homophobic And Age-ist

I don't know who Florentine Mathez or Mark Casta are who both wrote letters criticizing the San Diego Music Awards ("Letters," July 29), but I do know that Mathez's homophobic comments like "Earl the Girl Thomas" and age-ist comments about Tom Cat Courtney are inappropriate and have no reflection on any of the nominated artists' talent.

And her ridiculous comments about the same clubs, same promoters, and same guest list crowds are insane. I have a lot of trouble getting into certain rooms, even though I am a high-profile act. The bottom line is if the crowds pay to get in, then the clubs make money. That is why I am personally booked over and over again at the Belly Up Tavern and Dick's Last Resort. The rooms are consistently packed with a drinking crowd. After all, this is a business, not a popularity contest.

I'm sorry that Mathez's and Casta's friends weren't nominated this year. That is no reason to invalidate the other nominees and their talent. The San Diego music scene is not stagnant. Great new bands are popping up everywhere....Honey Glaze, Rocket from the Crypt, Creedle are all on this year's ballot (I think). And the awards categories are more diverse than ever: rap, jazz, and country, all side by side.

Let's not forget that the awards are a charity event, mostly to benefit children's music programs at the elementary school level. This is a noble cause and something our children desperately need.

Also, there is an awards program for club owners and staff. They're called the "Entertainer Awards," and people can vote on their favorite bartenders and restaurants. I agree with Casta that there should be a lifetime achievement award, a write-in ballot, and weekly reviews or profiles of local club owners and bands.

Lastly, awards programs are seldom fair and cannot possibly recognize everyone, every year. Look at the Grammys. They consistently ignore quality acts and revere the same ones over and over. I know I'm not winning this year, but I am glad to be nominated and glad that all my hard work and being away from my kids night after night is being noted by somebody. But the awards aren't the beginning or the end of the music world. There are plenty of great acts who weren't mentioned: Ruby and the Red Hots, the Jukestompers, Robin Henkel, and many more, and their absence from the awards doesn't mean they're not good enough. We're all in this boat together and lucky to be making a living doing what we love: playing music.

Lowrider '93 Unity Tour Car Show

LOCAL EVENTS

We crossed boundaries we never thought imaginable maybe ten, surely fifteen years ago. We're really right on the edge of blowing this whole thing wide open." From where Alberto Lopez sits, he can see the next hot trend circling the globe. And it's moving low and slow.

Lopez publishes Lowrider magazine, for 16 years the main communication link for devotees of the art-craft-sport-lifestyle of lowriding. He estimates that 16 percent of the monthly's 265,000 copies go overseas. Lowrider, Japanese edition, hits Tokyo newsstands this fall. Back in the U.S., Lopez points out, the cars are now appearing in music videos and TV commercials; and in 1991, a one-day lowrider show in the L.A. Coliseum drew a car-show-record crowd of 42,000.

But while lowriding's branches spread to Europe, Asia, and Australia, its roots are still firmly in the Chicano varrios of the southwestern United States. And while American blacks, Asians, and Anglos are lowering and customizing their minitrucks and Nissan Sentras, some traditional lowriders like Rigo Reyes hope those roots are not neglected.

Reyes is a long-time member of the Amigos Car Club, one of the oldest active clubs in San Diego, and founder of the San Diego Lowrider Council. The Amigos, Reyes says, are from the "old school of traditional lowriders. By that I mean, basically, domestic cars, hydraulics all the way around, fancy paint jobs, custom interiors. Clean." It's cars like these that Reyes remembers when he was growing up in the '60s in a solidly Chicano neighborhood in San Diego's South Bay. "I saw my first lowrider when I was maybe twelve. It was the first car I ever saw with hydraulics, and I kind of freaked out. And my interest grew stronger from some of my cousins and uncles who were into it. And as far as the lowrider movement, the lowrider scene, it was greatly influenced by the Chicano movement [of the '70s]. We're sort of a product of it. I saw lowriding culturally. After all, I didn't see that first car in downtown San Diego, I saw it in my varrio."

As Alberto Lopez tells it, the origins of lowriding go back to World War II, when Mexican-Americans left the rootless cycle of migrant labor for stable jobs in the defense industry. When they could eventually afford to buy a car, says Lopez, himself the son of migrant workers, it was treated "almost like a member of the family. Everybody pitched in to keep it polished. On Sunday you'd go to church, and in the afternoon you'd drive to the park. That's how cruising really developed. It was a family outing.

"Out of the pachuco era that was heavy at the time...and out of the creativity that is naturally given to us, people started to give their cars that cool, low look, and it just caught on. People started heating up the springs and putting bags of cement in the trunk. And that's the way lowriding was until the early '60s.

"But when you're driving really low to the ground, speed bumps are a hazard, driveways are a hazard — so a lot of Mexican ingenuity came through again, and they started adapting surplus hydraulic cylinders from aircraft and applying them to the automobile suspension, and that's where the first hydraulic systems came in."

Rigo Reyes's first car, purchased for $200 in the early '70s, when he was 17, was a stock four-door '57 Chevy Bel Air, "the model that came with zero features." Before he sold the car eight years later for $3000, Reyes lowered it, put on Rocket rims, 520s (the smallest 14-inch tires available), shaved the back door handles, "suicided" the back doors so they opened the opposite way, replaced the stock grill with the grill from a 1958 Buick ("it made the car look like a shark"), and scoured Southern California for years until he found the original visor and fender skirts. He lacquered the top black and the bottom burgundy. The hydraulics, he recalls, came from Palley's in L.A., which sold government surplus airplane parts, the only supplier for lowriders from the Imperial Valley to Santa Barbara.

"As sophisticated as hydraulics are today, back then we just wanted the car to go up and down. For my particular model, you had to do a lot of adaptations to put hydraulics in the back because it had leaf springs instead of coils. None of us were professional welders, but we just did the best job we could. In those days you literally had to solve every problem yourself, there were no books to read, and the skills were just passed around the community."

Reyes then spent $1100 for a 1959 Impala with an original Continental kit. This car would give Reyes a personal glimpse of the new directions in lowriding that Alberto Lopez talks about so enthusiastically.

By way of background, Reyes explains, "Each lowrider has a particular theme or name or nickname or something to represent it. As a Chicano activist for many years, that influenced me a lot with my car, and I named it 'Azteca.' All the custom work I did was representative of that theme. It was pretty popular in Southern California. But in the lowriding scene, the car is the one that's famous, not necessarily the owner. The car becomes its own persona, if you will.

"There were two very popular [airbrushed] murals on the Impala that I got from posters. They followed the Aztec theme. I suicided the trunk so it opened the opposite way, and a friend installed trunk hydraulics that ran on its own pump and cylinders. I could open it with a switch as I was slowly driving by a crowd or whatever, and that would make the trunk lid come up and show the mural on it. The interior was full custom, swivel seats in the front, loveseat and a bar in the back, TV in the console, custom moon roof. The whole car was flaked with candy patterns, seven or eight shades of green, which was an unusual color back then."

A couple of years ago Reyes displayed "Azteca" at a car show in Anaheim and was approached by a Japanese man. "I'd been sitting there talking to him for about 45 minutes when he suddenly asked, 'Would you be willing to sell your car?' I told him I really hadn't thought of selling it, but I gave him a figure of $18,000 just to get him off my back. I thought that was the end of it. In fact, when he called me from Japan a month later, I didn't even remember the guy."

The man from Japan, it turned out, was in the U.S. scouting cars for a woman who wanted to find a gift for her husband who collected 1959 Impalas. Eventually the broker paid Reyes $18,000 and hauled "Azteca" away on a flatbed truck. That day, Reyes admits, it was like watching a member of his family leaving home. "Even after the car was gone, I was approached by some people who had been in the Chicano movement for some time and, to some extent, I was sort of criticized, because maybe they thought I was kind of selling the culture." Reyes says he has no idea who the broker was working for or where "Azteca" is now.

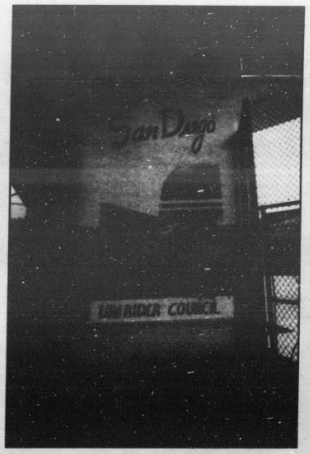

According to Alberto Lopez, at least 600 American lowriders have been purchased by Japanese collectors in recent years.

Since the late 1970s, lowriding has gone through the "Cal bug" craze (VWs); the minitruck craze, which started the cross-cultural popularity of lowriding; and today's so-called Eurosport craze (lowered, customized imports with wide tires, wide rims, spoilers). "But overall," Reyes says, "they're all categorized as lowriders, though we traditional lowriders have a hard time accepting that."

Reyes sees this evolution of lowriding and the strong influence of rap music on Chicano youth as elements that are breaking some of the cultural identity he felt when he was young. "That's why we [traditional lowriders] have taken it upon ourselves to try to educate our own young ones. Trying to get them involved with the tradition. We have to educate those kids to the reality of the past, because, just like our own history, it disappears."

Alberto Lopez also says that, despite the cross-cultural popularity of lowriding, his magazine will continue to serve the Chicano community with political and cultural articles in addition to automotive features. "The publication evolved out of the Chicano varrio, and we'll never turn our backs on that. I'd rather go broke."

Far from going broke, businesses on this crest of the lowriding wave are prospering. Lowrider magazine's circulation is growing at about 16 percent a year. The company also owns Thump Records, publishes Street Beat and Lowrider Arte magazines, will shortly launch a new monthly featuring lowrider bikes, and is working on a music-and-cars TV pilot. They also sponsor educational scholarships for Chicano students to underline the magazine's strong "stay in school" message.

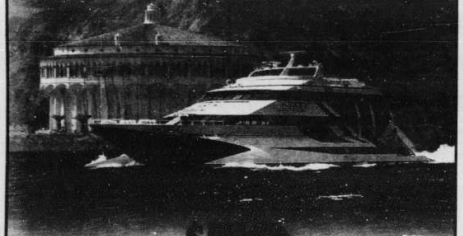

Lopez mentions other success stories in lowrider-related industries. Red's Hydraulics, originally a small San Diego shop started by "just down-home Chicanos who've proven very successful in their engineering and technology," now has its headquarters in Los Angeles and three outlets in Japan. Dayton, currently the number-one wheel for lowriders, is running three shifts a day to keep up with demand. Lopez guesses the economic impact of lowriding-related industries to be in the neighborhood of $100 million. A top show-quality lowrider can represent an investment of $40,000 or more.

This weekend, Lowrider magazine's six-city 1993 "Unity Tour" car show makes a stop in Mission Valley. Lopez anticipates several hundred entries from the San Diego area, covering the range of styles from traditional to Eurosport. Cash prizes are awarded to the best rides, based on a point system. There will also be hydraulics competitions, lowrider bicycles, and live music. The magazine began sponsoring car shows about 15 years ago as a promotional tool and to give lowriders, generally shunned from other custom-car or hot rod competitions, a venue of their own, and to help improve the quality of the sport. Rigo Reyes won't have an entry this year. The money he received for "Azteca" helped him buy his home and his next lowrider project, as yet unfinished — a 1939 Willys Knight.

Why Dost Thou Lash That Whore?

A Libertarian's Attempt to Organize Hookers

Even the Libertarians are sexist bigots! They decide to present a talk about prostitutes from a Libertarian point of view, and who do they get? A man!

All right, they didn't just pick Tom Tanana out of the phone book. He's been organizing prostitutes on the Midway strip against police harassment. He's been working to legalize prostitution in San Diego. But here's the point: he's not himself a prostitute, he's a lawyer (and don't tell me it's the same thing!). If they wanted someone to deliver a fiery oration on prostitution to the Libertarian Supper Club over a dinner of stir-fried chicken, spaghetti, or patty melt, why didn't they ask me!

I may not look it today, but in earlier and slenderer years I was known as the Queen of Times Square. I was interviewed on TV by Barbara Walters. Life magazine did a feature on me. Political writers from The New Republic used to ask my opinion. And just three weeks ago, Ruth Bader Ginsburg testified before the Senate that the two major influences on her views of Constitutionally guaranteed freedoms were Judge Learned Hand and Hooker Violet Rosenbloom!

First of all, making prostitution a crime is making an establishment of religion, which is forbidden by the First Amendment. It's only because the Bible has a bias against sex that Christianity has declared prostitution a sin, and it's only because of the breakdowns of the barrier between Church and State that a religious sin has been turned into a legal crime. People are allowed to sell cigarettes, guns, the National Enquirer, and Ice-T CDs, but when it comes to something as lovely and comforting as what I sell, suddenly it's the police, sting operations, tickets, bookings, fines, and criminal records.

"But," you say, "that's because you sell your body?" Why shouldn't I sell my body? It belongs to me, after all. And lots of people sell their bodies. What about manual laborers, who sell the muscular contractions of their arms and backs? That's just what I do, except it's a different muscle. Everybody who offers a service for a fee is selling himself or herself — the doctor, the electrician, the manicurist, the journalist. Why don't you call that prostitution?

I call it business! It's the American way. All around this country, at this very minute, people who aren't married to each other are servicing each other sexually, but the police aren't arresting them for fornication or adultery. Yet only a dd a skill," you say, "a specialized knowledge — and that's the handing-over of a bit of cash, and whammo! — the client pays for." Right — but if you think Violet doesn't have a specialized knowledge, you've never ordered my Nights-in-the-Gardens-of-the-Alhambra special!

"But," you say, "the sexual act should be associated with love, tenderness, mutual caring, and the effort to help the partner realize his or her full human dignity." That might be a nice thing. But where does government get off requiring that an activity has to be carried out at its highest spiritual level or not at all? Are you going to throw Jackie Collins in jail because she isn't Tolstoi? Are bicycles to be banned because they aren't BMWs? Sometimes a hungry man prefers a Big Mac to a dinner at Lutèce — and hasn't the Supreme Court found a constitutional right to Big Macs?

"But," you say, "prostitution tempts upright and innocent people into less-than-recommendable behavior." Sure — a perfectly upright husband, who has spent all his leisure time watching television and whose mind therefore has never been soiled with illicit sexual fantasies, spots a painted woman on El Cajon Boulevard and suddenly turns into a raving sex fiend. "But children see the hookers lounging on street corners!" And what does that do to the children? Make them say "Hey, there's a great way to earn a living!"?

"But the poor girls who lead this awful life! The hard hours. The exploitation by pimps. The risks, the diseases, the danger. They're the ones the law has to protect. We mustn't allow them to degrade themselves." Listen, buster, I stopped being a girl a lot of years ago. I'm a grown-up now, and I make my own decisions. I don't need you to protect me from danger and degradation of my own choosing — that's not what government was instituted for.

What government was instituted for was to protect me from dangerous crooks who interfere with my right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Last week my house was burgled. Yesterday the man across the street was the victim of a carjacking — he's in the hospital with a fractured skull. There are sections of this city people are afraid to go near because of gang violence and drive-by shootings. There are rapes and murders, more all the time. And where are the police?

Chasing hookers. They ticket them for littering, they hang around them for hours at a time to prevent them from getting clients. Is that what we pay taxes for?

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!
Why dost thou lash that whore?
Strip thy own back.
Thou hotly lusts to use her in that kind
For which thou whip'st her.

Tom Tanana may be a good Libertarian, and he may give a good talk at the Libertarian Supper Club — but for pertinent quotations like that, delivered with the dramatic flair of Sarah Bernhardt, and by a still-good-looking babe in classy leather, you ought to have:

Wind in Your Sails, Rats on Your Face

Sailing of the "Star of India"

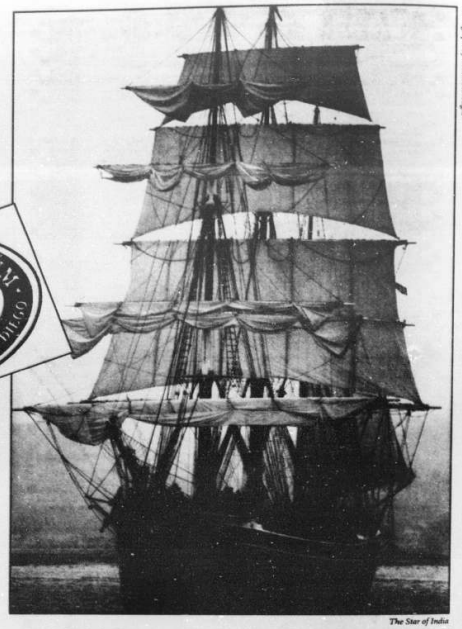

San Diegans have never quite related to the shipboard immigrant experience in the way that, say, New Yorkers do. Most of us came across land to get here. But we have in our midst a relic of seafaring migration even New York can't boast: the barque Star of India, which, during its previous incarnation as the full-rigged sailing ship Euterpe, was the vessel by which thousands of English and Europeans moved to government-sponsored new lives in colonial New Zealand.

The fact remains very much alive in Kiwi minds. During a recent essay contest sponsored by the San Diego/New Zealand Business Association, descendants of immigrants who arrived in New Zealand aboard Euterpe, some of them bearing "Euterpe" for a middle name, told of cherished family tales of shipboard life, and of beloved family heirlooms including watercolor paintings of the good ship, letters, and yellowed diaries chronicling shipboard life. One of the latter is in the possession of essay contest winner Janice Bonnett, the great-granddaughter of émigrés Thomas and Mary Jane Tichbon, passengers in 1879. Mary Jane Tichbon's sister, Ellen Hallam, who also made the journey, later married Joshua Charlesworth, a draughtsman she'd met aboard ship. Charlesworth kept a meticulous diary of the five-month voyage.

"Friday, November 14th. In Lat. 43.10 Long 61-17 and 230 miles. Terrific [sic] weather to day.... Fight between Romer 3rd mate and Lowe (sailor) — when the 3rd mate got a proper hiding. The 3rd mate 6 ft 2 ins to a sailor about 5 ft 6 ins — The 3rd mate was very fond of bullying and fighting and for once in his life he's got a good thrashing. 4.30. Main hatchway and part of the bulwarks carried away by a heavy sea coming right over the ship...."

The immigrants were laborers, servants, fishermen, iron workers, plasterers, sempstresses, mechanics. Another essay contest winner, Malcolm Francis, is the descendant of Elizabeth Harper, who with her younger sister Matilda took the Euterpe in 1872, seeking employment as servants and marriage among the largely male population of New Zealand. (Francis and Bonnett, by the way, won a trip to San Diego, and seats aboard the Star of India when she sails around the bay next Saturday -- along with Charlton Heston, for no apparent reason — as part of "America's Finest City Week 1993.")

Charlesworth chronicles the theft of mutton and potatoes, three births, rats in the rations, rats becoming the rations, collisions with other ships, "much card-playing on deck and drinking of spirits," concerts, races, cartoons posted on the W.C. (prompting "much fun"). The most pleasurable part of the voyage was in the equatorial zone. He later wrote his parents:

> A fine smooth sea and fine favourable winds and splendid fine hot weather in fact the region of perpetual summer... Here it is also subject to sudden squalls and rains heavily sometimes coming down in bucket-fuls (as you might term it). You may depend upon it is a pleasure to get up soon on a morning when raining (quite hot) naked with drawers on etc., and have a shower bath on deck for a few minutes and throwing buckets of water at each other, at other times a burning hot day and having the hose pipe played on to you, for its so hot that the decks are dry immediately after, and you can hardly bear with any clothing on.... On looking round the ship we see shoals of Flying Fish skipping along the water and all of a sudden we see them fly out of the water several feet pursued by the Dolphin, Bonito, etc., and other large fish. Whales and Sharks we saw also and some good sport is after experienced by catching them either by bait or by harpooning them from the fo'castle. Porpoises are seen on the whole voyage, and thousands of other smaller fish too numerous to mention. Large Albatrosses, Mollyhawks, Patagonian Hens, Mother Learys Chickens, Mutton bird, Cape Pigeon and other birds are seen also on the voyage, the Albatrosses measuring from 10 to 20 feet from tip to tip of wings. Some would reach above that. The passengers were always trying to catch them. The most successful one being Mr. Harry Middelton who caught a large number and gave nearly all of them away. The skins are preserved and dryed to make muffs with. The wing bones make first class pipe stems, from 18 to 24 inches long. Feet are used for tobacco pouches etc. The head is skinned and either skinned for the bill and skull or stuffed etc. The body then is thrown overboard it being too tough to eat....

On the same 1879 voyage Charlesworth made, a little boy named Llewellyn Owen also travelled. The trip was grisly for him: his mother's leg was broken during one of many storms at sea, rats ran across his face while he slept. He grew up to be a popular music composer in New Zealand. Recently, a San Diego Maritime Museum librarian found some dusty sheet music in the archives; it turned out to be Llewellyn Owen's ode to the voyage, the "Euterpe Waltz."

The work will be performed publicly for the first time this century on August 15, by civic organist Robert Plimpton, more of the "America's Finest City Week" festivities. San Diego Maritime Museum development director Joe Ditler had local folkies The Jackstraws work up a version of "Euterpe Waltz" too. It will play to the select crowd aboard the Star of India while she tours the bay. He played a recording of it over the phone. It's a delicate, rollicking piece, full of little trills and happy melodies. Owen must have been thinking of his weeks at the equator when he wrote it.

OUTDOORS

Watchers of the Dawn Sky this month will notice the bright, so-called winter stars (especially those in the constellations of Orion, Taurus, and Gemini) rising just above the rosy glow of morning twilight. Venus is currently amid this group, as is the waning crescent moon on the mornings of August 14, 15, and 16.

San Diego's Warmest Weather, on average, should be occurring right now according to statistics compiled from several decades of measurements taken near the San Diego International Airport. In an average year, coastal residents enjoy an average daily temperature of 70°, which compares favorably (depending on your viewpoint) with the January average daily temperature of 55°. The range between the high and low is typically 10° or less this time of year. August's warm, semi-tropical weather should soon give way to September and October's slightly cooler days interspersed with occasional heat waves brought on by Santa Ana conditions — dry, hot winds that sweep down the mountain slopes from the interior.

Nocturnal Rambling, take a moderate hike to see the animals active during dusk and the early evening tonight, Thursday, August 12 (and next Thursday, August 19), at 7 p.m., at Blue Sky Ecological Reserve. For further information, call 486-7238. Free. Find the reserve on Espola Road, one-half mile north of Lake Poway Road, in Poway.

Highest Tides this month (+7.1 feet) occur on August 16 at 9:02 p.m. and on August 17 at 9:46 p.m. The month's lowest tide (an unspectacular -1.3 feet) will be on the morning of August 17 at 3:49 a.m. In October, intense minus tides will begin occurring during afternoon rather than early-morning periods, and tidepooling activities will once again become more convenient and rewarding.

I'd Like to Be Under the Sea, explore the underwater park near the La Jolla caves during snorkeling excursions sponsored by the Birch Aquarium-Museum each Saturday morning in August. Aquarium naturalists will lead divers on adventures from 8 to 10 a.m. August 14 (and August 21 and 28). The fee is $20 per person per day. Call 534-7523 for information and the necessary reservations.

Native Plants are the subject of a walk through the Tijuana River National Estuarine Reserve, the 2500-acre wetland immediately north of the international border, on Sunday, August 14, from 9 a.m. until noon. The walk will be led by a naturalist from the California Native Plant Society. Meet at the corner of Fifth Street and Iris Avenue in Imperial Beach. Free. 575-3613. No reservations required.

Palm Walk, Offshoot Tours offers its monthly hour-long guided stroll past many of Balboa Park's palm tree stands on Saturday, August 14, at 10 a.m., starting from the park's Botanical Building. Free. Call 233-1114 for more information.

Nature Walks take place every Saturday and Sunday morning at Torrey Pines State Reserve. The walks begin at 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. These guided walks are free, but there is a charge for vehicle admission. Park entrance is on the old Coast Highway (Highway 101), one mile south of Carmel Valley Road between La Jolla and Del Mar. Call 755-2063 for more details.

The Resting Place for SD Millionaires is Greenwood Cemetery, with a directory that reads like a Who's Who of San Diego's elite. Take a tour of the cemetery on Saturday, August 14, at 1 p.m. Meet the group at the entrance off Imperial, just east of Highway 805. The fee is $7 per person. Call 999-3390 for information and reservations.

Our Only Native Marsupial, the opossum, will be brought by Project Wildlife volunteers to the Chula Vista Nature Center for a "Wildlife Encounter" on Saturday, August 14, from 1 to 2 p.m. All the animals in this program have been injured in some way and cannot be released back into the wild. (These encounters take place every second Saturday at the center.) For more information, call 422-2481. Admission to the center is $3.50 for adults, $2.50 for seniors, $1 for children between 6 and 18. The center is located at E Street and Bay Boulevard, just west of I-5 in Chula Vista.

Animal Tracking is the subject at hand on Saturday, August 14, at 7 p.m., at the Blue Sky Ecological Reserve. For further information, call 486-7238. The program is free. Find the reserve on Espola Road, one-half mile north of Lake Poway Road, in Poway.

Join Downtown Sam's Painting Party on Sunday, August 15, at 11 a.m. On this Walkabout jaunt Sam is looking for the consecutive dates stamped on downtown sidewalks (the oldest date is 1892) to paint white so they're easy to spot. This casual one-and-a-half-hour walk begins and ends at Sinbad's, Seventh Avenue and C Street, downtown. Call 231-7463 for more information. The walk is free.

A Medicinal-Plant Walk is planned for Tuesday, August 17, from 7 to 8:30 p.m., in the Los Peñasquitos Canyon Preserve. Let's say you have an exciting business idea.

Let's say you can't wait to call your colleagues about it.

Let's say fifteen colleagues.

Let's say your idea's starting to seem less exciting.

With Pacific Bell Voice Mail, you can send a single telephone message to a whole group of people.

Instead of repeating yourself over and over and over and over, you just record your message once into your phone. Then enter the numbers of the colleagues you'd like to have hear it, and you're done. They can listen to your message whenever they like. If they feel like answering, they can send you a reply.

And all this is in addition to Voice Mail's prowess as a system for taking your messages. It's more private than message slips, it offers better message access than answering machines, and it even answers when you're on another call.

To find out more, call Pacific Bell at 1-800-273-7000 and ask us about Pacific Bell Voice Mail.

Let's say it's a better solution.

TV

Incredibly Violent Pagan Rituals Reenacted Purely for Your Edification, in its upcoming special Lost Kingdoms of the Maya, National Geographic promises to "visit the ruins of the Maya and recreate their ancient rituals." If they're true to their word, this should be a hackuva lot more interesting than watching a bunch of endangered animals chew on twigs! Airs Thursday, August 12, 7 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Save the Black-Footed Ferret! Okay, so it doesn't sing hauntingly beautiful songs and eat krill, so it doesn't have an adorable water spout. The black-footed ferret has its own, somewhat elusive, charm. Now you can learn what innovative steps are being taken to save this tiny, ugly creature from extinction on Scientific American Frontiers. Airs Thursday, August 12, 9 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Audrey Hepburn Remembered, the world's favorite waif is remembered through film clips and interviews with her friends, fellow actors, and family members. Airs Friday, August 13, 8:10 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Forget Geeky Marvin Hamlisch, the only reason to watch this upcoming broadcast of Evening at Pops is to listen, however briefly, to Take 6 — the wildly talented contemporary jazz-gospel a cappella group. Airs Friday, August 13, 9:35 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Lard, Be Gone! Are you morbidly, or even slightly obese? Does living in body-conscious Southern California often make you feel so self-loathingly awful that you think you might yip! Covert Bailey may be able to turn you into an arrogant, hard-bodied goon! This best-selling author will give sensible advice on how to turn fatness into fitness. Covert Bailey's Fat or Fat Marathon airs for four straight hours at noon on Saturday, August 14, on KPBS, Channel 13.

Duke Ellington and Count Basie Loved It, we're talking of course about the sensuous voice of the saxophone. Bravo's excellent documentary Tenor Titans, hosted by Branford Marsalis, examines the history of the saxophone from the early 20s with the sounds of Frankie Trumbauer, to the present's Sonny Rollins. Airs Saturday, August 14, 8 p.m. Bravo.

The Usual Suspects, you've seen it a million times and it's sappy and contrived, but, damnit, you still get a lump in your throat every time you watch Ingrid Bergman's eyes brim with tears on that foggy airstrip. No one else could have gotten away with that goofy dialogue. Casablanca 50th Anniversary: You Must Remember This is a commemoration and celebration of the film that offers a behind-the-scenes look at how it was made. Airs Saturday, August 14, 8:07 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

King-of-Siam-o-Rama, Deborah Kerr plays the covertly sexually ravenous schoolteacher hired to teach at the Siamese Royal Palace. Sparks fly when Yul Brynner, the King, struts his manly stuff and acts pretty much like your garden-variety macho bore, except he wears outlandish clothes! The King and I airs on Saturday, August 14, 9:45 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Lock the Kids in a Box and Don't Let Them Out Until This Very Weird Program Is Over, okay. Hmmm. Err. Uh. Heh-heh. Uh. Yes, well. Alive TV, public television's strenuously iconoclastic series of offbeat programs, has really outdone itself this time. Let's just let the press release speak for itself, shall we? "Punk follows the life of nine-year-old Dominic, who is bored with school..... When Dominic is almost molested by the ice cream man in the men's room of a public park, the confused young man worries that the encounter will turn him into a girl.... With no other advice from the adults in his life, Dominic decides to take matters into his own hands. He takes a knife from his mother's kitchen...and then lures the ice cream man back to the men's room, where he solves his problem the only way he knows how...." Nuff said! Airs Sunday, August 15, 12:10 a.m. Note: this is 12:10 a.m. Sunday morning, or very late-night Saturday. KPBS, Channel 15.

America's First Naughty-by-Nature Mega-Celebrity, almost as exciting as a summertime pilgrimage to Graceland, Loving You is the King's second movie. Co-starring Lizabeth Scott, this fantabulous flick tells the hip-shaking tale of a gas station attendant, played by Presley, who's discovered by a high-powered publicist and jet-blasted to stardom as an unbelievably talented singing sensation. Wow! Airs Sunday, August 15, 11 a.m. KNSD, Channel 39.

Eight-Hour Bill Moyers Illness-a-Thon Blow-Out for Hypochondriacs, if you didn't get to see any of these programs the first time 'round, and if you have absolutely nothing better to do on a beautiful Sunday afternoon, you very well might want to plop down on your couch, take your temperature, massage your lymph glands, and sip hot tea while you watch all five episodes of Healing and the Mind with Bill Moyers, an exploration of the mind's role in the healing process. Airs Sunday, August 15, noon. KPBS, Channel 15.

Tunnel into the World of Ground Squirrels, through the miracle of time-lapse photography, you can finally see what these critters really do down there in those deep, moist tunnels. National Geographic on Assignment airs Sunday, August 15, 6 p.m. KGTV, Channel 10.

Pavarotti Sings Where the Central Park Jogger Was Nearly Beaten to Death by a Pack of Young Thugs, performance of tenor Luciano Pavarotti recorded live from the lawn of the most dangerous urban park in the known world. Airs Sunday, August 15, 8 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

"Everybody's All-American," in a bold break with tradition, network television broadcasts a movie that's apparently worth watching. Everybody's All-American, starring Dennis Quaid and Jessica Lang, is the bittersweet 25-year saga of a college football star and homecoming queen who marry and slip gradually into disappointment and decline. Airs Sunday, August 15, 8:30 p.m. KGTV, Channel 10.

The Singer, Midgets, and Hollywood's Most Beloved Female Masochist, yes, The Wizard of Oz can be construed as a delightful American film classic as long you don't know too much about the phantasmagoric degeneracy that plagued the set and the lives of the stars who appeared on it. Of course, you'll learn next to zilch about this in Wonderful Wizard of Oz: Making of a Movie Classic, one of those breezy specials that promises to take you behind the scenes but which neglects to lay bare any of the really interesting stuff. Airs Monday, August 16, 8:05 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Koalas in My Back Yard, these cuddly li'l balls o' eucalyptus-eating fluff are being mutilated and abandoned in growing numbers as development encroaches on their natural Australian habitat. Learn more about them on Tuesday, August 17, 7:03 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

More Animals for Your Amusement, this Nature episode, "Monkey Island," explores the social relationships among rhesus monkeys that live on the island of Cayo Santiago, near Puerto Rico. Airs Tuesday, August 17, 9:30 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

Spooky, Depressing Music to Remind You of Your Rotten Childhood, in the '60s, did you share a bedroom with an older brother who'd get real, real stoned and listen for many, many hours to the Moody Blues? Did being forced to listen to this fantastically depressing music warp your infantile brain forever? Now you can relive those very long, soul-wrenching nights! The Moody Blues at Red Rocks offers up the band, backed by the Colorado Symphony Orchestra, recorded live at the Red Rocks Amphitheater in Denver. Airs Wednesday, August 18, 8:15 p.m. KPBS, Channel 15.

On the same days, for children in the same age groups, from 1 to 3:30 p.m., "From Snails to Slugs" is planned. During this class, children will identify shells, dissect a squid, touch a sea slug, and make a take-home craft.

The cost for either class is $50 per person. Call 534-7523 for information and the necessary reservations.

Take in a Tale on Wednesday, August 18, at 10:30 a.m., when stories are told for children three and older at the White Rabbit Children's Books, 7755 Girard Avenue, La Jolla. Free. For more details, call 454-3518.

I HAVE FOUND MANY DEAD BODIES
By Abe Opincar

"I died with a baby in my arms. It was wonderful," chuckles D.J. Sullivan, cradling her blonde one-year-old granddaughter Katie.

"It's really the sort of thing we die for." Sullivan laughs again.

When Sullivan says "we," she means actors, and the sort of thing actors die for is roles like Jane Seymour, Henry the VIII's wife, in an Old Globe production of Royal Gambit some 20 years ago. Sullivan got to die onstage, clutching a newborn to her chest, and that performance pretty much launched her career as a professional character actress.

"After the show, Mary Crosby, a local talent agent, came up to me with her card and said she wanted to represent me. A few weeks later she calls and says she wants me to audition for a local Chevrolet commercial. It was the strangest audition I've ever done. I go out there, and there are all these gorgeous young people, fashion models, people like that, and the director asks me to stand up and turn around. That was it. So, I thought to myself, 'This is show business?' I was pretty disgusted. I go out to get in my car and Mary Crosby comes running down the street screaming, 'Don't go! They want to see you again!' So, I walk back into the office and this guy jumps out from behind the door and starts kissing the back of my neck! I was terrified. I must have given him a horrible look because the director shouted, 'That's it! That's the expression we want! She's hired!' And it turns out all they wanted me to do was drive around this huge R.V. I don't know what kissing my neck had to do with anything. A few weeks later I'm somewhere in the mountains behind the wheel of this enormous R.V.

"I still wasn't very impressed with the whole process. I wasn't convinced that it was something I wanted to do as a career. But when I got the check I was amazed. I said to myself, 'D.J., you're a single parent with three kids to support. Three kids. You better think about this. Think real hard.' "

The evidence of Sullivan's hard thought on the matter can be seen in her résumé. It lists 6 feature film roles, 12 network television credits (Dallas, Murder She Wrote, General Hospital, Starsky & Hutch). There were too many national commercials to list, so Sullivan chose just one, a Clio-winning Yamaha commercial — "I played a very crazy mother." And Sullivan has appeared in more than a dozen locally produced commercials over the past 20 years.

You may remember her, most recently, in July when she was shown caught up in a delirium of slot-machine greed in a 30-second Sycuan Gaming Center spot that aired on ten channels simultaneously for four weeks. You glimpse Sullivan for only a second or so, eyes-wide, grinning madly, cackling with delight. "It was what we call 'truth-in-acting' — I was really winning. You don't win coins on those machines, the machine spits out these little slips of paper. We started at about eight o'clock in the morning and I just kept on winning and winning. I had a blast. Even though the management kept taking the little slips from me, some of the old ladies who love to gamble weren't very happy about it. In order to do the shoot, we had to bump this group of eight women from a row of slot machines. They got kind of angry — they have, you see, favorite slot machines they like to play. At eight in the morning. If you can believe it. But the management was very nice about it. They came over and took down the ladies' names and the I.D. numbers of the slot machines so they could return to them after we finished shooting. I was paid over $300 for that commercial, which isn't bad for one eight-hour day."

Unlike the zealous Sycuan slot-machine players, Sullivan says San Diegans are unusually friendly to camera crews and actors. "L.A. people hate us. They hate us. Every time we go into a neighborhood, they hate us. Of course, so much is being shot in Los Angeles that residents don't think it's glamorous. It's just a disturbance."

The measure of San Diegans' tolerance for showbiz brouhaha was revealed to Sullivan several weeks ago when, for an entire day, she ran screaming around a sedate street near the Southwestern Yacht Club in Point Loma. "It's a Warner Brothers production called Accidentally Missing, a landlady who finds a body in a bathtub. Luxury condo.

D. J. Sullivan, "There's just something about me and dead bodies!"

Beautiful condo. I ran around screaming. I don't know how the cameraman kept up with me, but he did. The neighbors loved it. People would come out and sit on the curb and watch us film for hours. Two of the neighbors, a lovely couple, a doctor and his wife, who live downstairs from the condo where we shot were wonderful to me. Terrific people. In fact, I'm taking them some flowers today.

"Accidentally Missing was fantastic. I enjoyed it. Over the years, I've found many bodies. A lot of dead bodies. I've been in all four of the Killer Tomato movies. I'm Mrs. Williams, the one whose husband gets killed by a tomato. The movies have kind of a cult following. I've had people follow me on the streets of Los Angeles. They ask me, 'Are you the Tomato Lady?' I played Baretta's landlady in 1975 — I think I found a dead body in his apartment. I just got an $11.06 residual check from that episode. In In the Deep Woods, an NBC movie starring Anthony Hopkins, I was killed for the first time, I mean, I'd died before, but I'd never been killed. It was great. There's just something about me and dead bodies. I don't know what it is. But all of it has been fun."

Three nights a week D.J. Sullivan teaches a variety of acting classes for beg[illegible]ning, intermediate, and advanced "talent." For more information, call 274-1731.

MUSEUMS

(Art museums are listed in the Reader's Guide to Art.)

Antique Gas and Steam Engine Museum, the museum's activities include locating, collecting, documenting, and preserving historical gas-, steam-, and horse-powered equipment related not only to agriculture, but to the development of America. The collection is made up of equipment used in lumbering, mining, oil drilling, and construction industries. In addition, the museum has a blacksmith and wheelwright shop, a country kitchen and parlor, a steam-operated saw mill, and 1/3-scale train. The museum is open daily from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., at 2040 North Santa Fe Avenue, Vista. Admission is free; donations are accepted. For further details, call 941-1791.

Boucroft Ranch House Museum houses indigenous Indian artifacts and memorabilia of early settlers in the area and it runs by the Spring Valley Historical Society. The home, built in 1863, was registered as a National Historic Landmark in 1962 and is on a spot where Kumeyaay Indians camped more than 1000 years ago beside the spring that later gave the area its name. The museum is found at 9000 Memory Lane, Spring Valley; hours are 1 to 4 p.m. Friday through Sunday, and group tours are available during the week. Call 469-1480 for more information.

LOCAL EVENTS

Boulta Historical Museum, this museum features many historical photographs; artifacts, tools, and farming implements; the district's 1953 fire engine; and bound copies back to the 1930s of the Chula Vista Star News. Find the museum at 4035 Bonita Road, in Bonita. Hours are 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday and Saturday, and by appointment. Dial 267-5141 or 479-0678 for further details. Admission is free.

California Surf Museum, the museum features surfing artifacts and memorabilia — such as surfboards and clothing — of local legends Phil Edwards, John "J.J." Richards, and Peter Johnson, and that way-cool megastar from Hawaii, Duke Kahanamoku. Also featured is a collection of paraphernalia relating to the careers of Ron Drummond, Mike Diffenderfer, Mickey Munoz, and Phil Edwards.

The museum is located at 308 North Pacific Street, Oceanside. Take I-5 and exit at Mission Avenue. Head west approximately one mile, and turn right on Pacific Street. Hours are noon to 4 p.m. Monday, Thursday, and Friday; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, and Sunday. Admission is free. 721-6876.

Chula Vista Heritage Museum features glimpses of Chula Vista's past; the opening exhibits include lemon packing crate labels, photographs of downtown Chula Vista, doors and adobe blocks from the original Star newspaper building, and relics from the Otay Watch Company. Regular museum hours are 1 to 4 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Find the museum at 360 Third Avenue, Chula Vista. For additional information, call 420-6916.

Chula Vista Nature Center, an interactive living museum devoted to the endangered Southern California coastal wetlands, is located in the middle of Sweetwater Marsh National Wildlife Refuge. The facility is home to fishes and invertebrates that inhabit the mudflats and marshes of the San Diego Bay. Visitors can use a Biocamera to view animals macroscopically, use a Wentzscope for views of microscopic organisms found in the "Sweetwater Soup," and interact with computerized videos exploring how tides affect the bay in the "Moons, Tides, and the San Diego Bay" exhibit. At other exhibits, visitors can pet sharks and rays, see burrowing owls and migratory birds, and enjoy the xerophytic gardens.

On Wednesdays, Saturdays, and Sundays at 2 p.m., there are behind-the-scenes tours of the center. Free birdwatching walks are offered on the second Wednesdays and first and third Saturdays; wildlife encounters are every second Saturday; and nature walks are on the fourth Saturday of every month.

The center is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Sunday. Visitors meet a free shuttle bus at the Bayfront E Street Trolley Station or at the center's parking lot at the foot of E Street and Bay Boulevard, in Chula Vista. Admission to the center is $3.50 for adults, $2.50 seniors, $1 children six and over. Admission is free on the first Tuesday of every month. For more details, call 422-2473.

Command Museum of MCRD, artifacts from the beginning of the Marine Corps to the present are displayed, with special rooms dedicated to ribbons and medals and to the Boxer Rebellion. Hours are Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and weekends from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Free. The museum is located in Building 26, just inside Gate 4, off Pacific Highway. 524-6038.

Coronado Beach Historical Museum, housed in a restored 1898 house, traces the history of Coronado, mostly through photog.aphs. The exhibit allows the construction and early days of the Hotel del Coronado, Tent City, the first school and restaurant, and the ferryboats. One room is devoted to the story of early aviation at North Island. Find the museum at 1126 Loma Avenue, in Coronado. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday. Call 435-7242 for further information. Admission is free.

George White and Anna Gunn Marston House, noted San Diego architects William Hebbard and Irving Gill designed this fine example of turn-of-the-century architectural style and design, with an emphasis on the decorative arts and the Arts and Crafts movement. Currently on exhibit are American Arts and Crafts furniture and decorative arts made by the Roycroft Shops of East Aurora, New York. The museum is located at 3525 Seventh Avenue, Hillcrest; hours are Saturday and Sunday, noon to 4:30 p.m. Adults $3, children under 13 free. 238-3142.

Heritage of the Americas Museum is a museum featuring art and artifacts from South and North America, concentrating on the utilitarian and decorative artistry of crafts workers from ancient cultures. There are wings dedicated to natural history, archaeology, education, anthropology, and fine art.

Find the museum on the Cuyamaca College campus, 2957 Jamacha Road, Rancho San Diego. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; 1 to 3 p.m. on Sunday. Adults $3, seniors $2, students with ID $1, children 12 and under free. 670-5194.

House of Pacific Relations, the International Cottages in Balboa Park are open every Sunday from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m., presenting the history and traditions of 30 ethnic groups. Children Around the World videos are shown on the fourth Tuesday of every month, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., in the Hall of Nations, and select cottages are open. Admission is free. For further details, call 582-1316.

Junipero Serra Museum, "Changing Landscapes, Changing Lives: Native Peoples and New Arrivals in San Diego, 1769-1846" is the name of the current exhibit, running through 1994. Through a variety of images, maps, and artifacts, the exhibit illustrates how local natives and San Diego's first Spanish settlers viewed the land in very different ways. Items on display include richly embroidered vestments worn by a Spanish missionary, intricate basketry from a Kumeyaay tribe, a dugout canoe exemplifying a mix of European and native characteristics, and a reassembled section of the Mission San Diego de Alcalá aqueduct.

An exhibition of paintings by Spanish historian and artist Antonio Sedano entitled "El Camino Real" is on display at the museum through Friday, August 20. The work features portraits of individuals who played a role in the creation of California's El Camino Real, including Junipero Serra, King Francisco Palou, King Carlos III, and scenes along the path.

The museum is located at 2727 Presidio Drive, Presidio Park, on the original site of the San Diego mission. Permanent exhibits concentrate on the pre-American era of San Diego's history and include one of the finest collections of Spanish Renaissance furniture in the West. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Sunday from noon to 4:30 p.m. Adults $3, children under 13 are free. 232-6203.

Museum of San Diego History, the museum is hosting a traveling exhibit from the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, co-sponsored here by the Children's Museum. The show, "Remember the Children," is the story of the Holocaust told through the eyes of a child. The exhibition, which includes photographs, videotapes, environments, and participatory activities, illuminates political events of the '30s and '40s as they affected the life of a young boy and his family. The show, not overly graphic, is designed for children aged 8 to 14 and may be seen through September 19.

"Changing Faces, Celebrated Places: Images Over Time" is an exhibit comprising photographs chosen from the more than two million images in the San Diego Historical Society's archives. The documentary-style exhibit was briefly displayed in 1990 and will be on exhibit through most of 1993. The photos map the visual changes of the San Diego area during the past 100 years and includes images of the Mission Beach rollercoaster, La Jolla Shores, the Hotel Del Coronado, and other local landmarks.

The museum, located in Balboa Park, is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday, and until 8 p.m. Thursday evenings. Admission is $3 per person. 232-6203.

Reuben H. Fleet Science Center, "Odyssey of Wonders" is an exhibition on view through Monday, September 6. It celebrates the quest for knowledge by answering commonly asked questions about natural phenomena like rainbows, gravity, snowflakes, temperature, colors, and shadows.

The center's permanent exhibitions present a variety of hands-on exhibits illustrating scientific principles. The Science Center opens daily at 9:30 a.m.; closing time is 8 p.m. on Sunday, 6 p.m. on Monday and Tuesday, 9:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, and 10:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Adults $2.50, children 5-15 $1.25. The museum is located in Balboa Park. For other information, call 238-1233.

San Diego Aerospace Museum, the museum offers exhibits of approximately 85 aircraft, 1400 scale models, 10,000 aviation-related items, and memorabilia from the Montgolfier hot-air-balloon era to the space age and includes an International Aerospace Hall of Fame. The Spad, a World War I fighter, has returned to the museum. The aircraft just underwent extensive restoration and was found to be approximately 98 percent original, a discovery that makes the Spad the most rare aircraft in the museum's collection. It will remain on permanent display. The museum's latest acquisition (pedestal-mounted in front of the museum) is the Blackbird, a forerunner of the airplace that held the world's altitude and speed records for more than 28 years.

The museum is located in the Ford Building in Balboa Park's Palisades area. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. Adults $4, 6-17 $1. For more information, call 234-8291.

San Diego Automotive Museum, more than 60 automobiles and motorcycles from horseless carriages to future prototypes are included in the museum's permanent collection. The featured exhibit highlights Route 66. The museum has remodeled its main floor with a serpentine highway to highlight roadside architecture, signs, and other memorabilia of and landmarks of the time, as well as cars you might have found along the route during its heyday. The Route 66 exhibit continues through August.

The final mini-car show of the season at the museum runs through Sunday, August 15, when street rods are featured. Among the cars to be seen include a 1933 Ford Roadster Hi Boy, a 1934 Ford Phaeton, a Ford Opera Coup Deluxe, and others. On August 15, ten additional cars will be highlighted at the rear of the building.

Located in Balboa Park near the Starlight Bowl, the museum is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. General admission $4; seniors $3; children 6 to 17, $2; under 6 free. 231-2886.

San Diego Hall of Champions Sports Museum, has permanent exhibits dedicated to Thoroughbred racing, including trophies from some of the world's most famous horseraces, a pair of Bill Shoemaker's boots, and other artifacts; as well as artifacts from a wide variety of other sports. The museum is located at 1649 El Prado, Balboa Park; hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. Adults $3, under 12 $1. 234-2544.

San Diego Maritime Museum, the museum features permanent exhibits documenting the history of San Diego's waterfront and the building of the West Coast by sea, including exhibits concerning the old San Diego-Coronado ferryboats, the tuna fishing industry, and the military. The museum fleet consists of the 1863 bark Star of India, the 1898 San Francisco ferryboat Berkeley, and the 1904 Scottish steam yacht Medea. There are also nautical exhibits, ship carpenters, model building, ships in bottles, woodcarvers, and a complete research library.

In honor of America's Finest City Week, there are a number of activities planned. The Star of India will sail from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday, August 14 (and again on August 22). On Tuesday, August 17, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., there will be scrimshaw demonstrations. On Wednesday, August 18, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., enjoy a sea chantey festival. There will be a woodcarving demonstration on Thursday, August 19, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The museum is located along the Embarcadero at the corner of North Harbor Drive and Ash Street, downtown. Hours are 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily. Adults $5, 6-12 $1.25. 234-9153.

San Diego Model Railroad Museum, four large-scale models of railroads of the Southwest, past and present, and other toy train layouts are on view, as well as a working semaphore at the entrance that cycles every five minutes. The N-scale Carrizo Gorge exhibit is almost complete and can be viewed. An exhibit called "Railroad Women" includes photos and documents dating back to 1855.

"Terrain Sculpture, Site-Specific Installations" is an exhibit by Nina Karavasiles on view at the museum through Saturday, September 11. Karavasiles, with a background in fine art, uses the miniature landscapes to investigate scale in sculpture and to heighten the viewer's awareness of the picturesque terrain. Many of the pieces lend a futuristic perspective to the scenery. You'll see the sculptures throughout the museum in various train panoramas.

The museum, located at 1649 El Prado, Balboa Park, is open 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and Saturday and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Adults $2, children 15 and under free. 696-0199.

San Diego Museum of Man, "Retablos: Folk Art of Peru" is the newest exhibition on view at the museum. Retablos are portable altars once used as part of the ritual offering to the god Wamani, protector of herd animals. Traditionally they are box-shaped with double doors, open to reveal interior scenes depicting historical or religious themes. The exhibition features the work of Nicario Jiménez, from Ayacucho, along with examples by his father and others done in the Cusco style. See the retablos through September 6.

"Ravigods, Owls, and Animalitos" exhibits ceramic figurines of animals and humans made for sale to immigrants after the railroad came to the Southwest in the 1880s. This exhibition continues through December 31.

"Life and Death on the Nile: Sun Gods and Mummies in Ancient Egypt" is an ongoing exhibit that includes coffin and mummy masks, sacred amulets, falcon shrines, mummified falcons, and a human mummy of the Ptolemaic period, along with art and utensils of daily life in the Amarna Period, from 1368 to 1351 B.C.

The museum is located in Balboa Park. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily, with hours extended to 8 p.m. each Thursday through September 6. Adults $4, teens 13-18 $2, children 6-12 $1; free to all on the third Tuesday of each month. 239-2001.

San Diego Natural History Museum is currently exhibiting "Insects: Face to Face." Giant robotic insects, 50 to 200 times life size, are supplemented with related scientific information. Visitors may step through a giant microscope lens, becoming smaller relative to the size of the giant insects. Along with the robots, there are more than a dozen displays of living insects and arachnids. Displays concerned with the economic importance of insects, biological information, and environmental insecticides provide up-to-date scientific data. See the exhibit through September 19.

"Darkened Waters: Profile of an Oil Spill" is an exhibition documenting the nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil spilled in 1989 from the Exxon Valdez on the Alaskan people and their environment. The exhibit uses color photos, maps, audiotaped interviews, and artifacts to examine the spill and its aftermath. This show runs through October 10

The museum's permanent exhibits include the Scripps Hall of Mineralogy, the Hall of Ocean and Shore Ecology, and the Hall of Desert Ecology. The museum, located in Balboa Park, is open daily from 9:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. During the summer months, the museum remains open until 9 p.m. on Thursdays, with admission half price between 5 and 9 p.m. Regular admission is adults $6, seniors $5, children 6 to 17 $2, under 6 free. 232-3821.

San Diego Railroad Museum maintains an extensive collection of restored trains in several locations. At the Campo Depot, the museum offers vintage train trips on Saturdays and Sundays (and on many major holidays, excluding Thanksgiving and Christmas), departing at 12:01 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. for a one-and-a-half-hour trip to Miller Creek, in San Diego's back country. At the Campo location, there are more than 60 pieces of "rolling stock," a wide variety of cars, locomotives, and other train-related artifacts.

Tickets for the train excursion are $10 for adults, $3 for children 6 to 12, children 5 and under free. The Campo Depot is about a one-hour drive from San Diego (roughly 50 miles east). Find the depot at Highway 94 and Forest Gate Road. Questions? Call 478-9937.

The La Mesa Depot, 4695 Nebo Drive, La Mesa, is an authentic Victorian depot restored by volunteers. This wooden structure is the community's oldest building and served as passenger depot for the San Diego-Arizona Railroad from 1894 to 1927. Exhibits include photos and history of the Arizona Railroad, antiques, and memorabilia of the Southern Pacific line, alongside a 1920s locomotive and caboose, and a 1940s diesel engine. The depot is open 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information on either location, call the main office at 595-3020.

San Dieguito Heritage Museum, the museum celebrates the heritage of old and new Encinitas. Cardiff, Olivenhain, Leucadia, Rancho Santa Fe, Solana Beach, and Del Mar. Currently on view is a show celebrating the sport of surfing. Included in the exhibit are memorabilia, photographs, news items, surfboards, and other paraphernalia associated with the sport; see the show through mid-October. Find the museum in West Village Center, at the corner of Manchester Avenue and Encinitas Boulevard in Encinitas. Hours are Wednesday through Sunday, noon to 4 p.m. Call 632-9711 for admission and other information.

San Pasqual Battlefield State Historic Park commemorates the clash (on December 6, 1846) during the Mexican War between the U.S. Dragoons, bolstered by sailors and volunteers from San Diego, and California militia. A narrated slide-show screens throughout the day, telling the story of the war in Mexico and California. A self-guided tour recounts the events of the battle and profiles the leaders of the forces and also describes the lives of the Indians indigenous to the valley. The museum is found at 15808 San Pasqual Valley Road, Escondido. Admission is free. Call 238-3380 for additional details.

Stephen Birch Aquarium-Museum, an aquarium and museum under one roof, is an educational component of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at UCSD. The facility has 33 tanks containing marine life of the Pacific Northwest, the California coastline, Mexico's Sea of Cortez, and the South Pacific. One highlight is the La Jolla Kelp Tank, a two-story-high tank with giant kelp plants and nearly 30 species of local marine life.

"Legacy of Exploration" is the show in the museum's New Perspectives Gallery, highlighting important eras in Scripps research. The exhibit is divided into four displays: "1903 — Coastal Buildings," "1936 — Scripps on Active Duty," "1950 — Out into the Pacific," and "1993 — Going Global." These displays focus on the leadership, vision, and resources characteristic of the eras and include small scientific equipment, specimens, journals, photographs, furniture, and other memorabilia. See this show through October 31.

The aquarium is located at 2300 Expedition Way (off North Torrey Pines Road, south of la Jolla Shores Drive), La Jolla. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily Admission is $6.50 for adults, $5.50 seniors, military and 13- to 17-year-olds $4.50, $3.50 for children 4 to 12. For more information, call 534-FISH.

Villa Montezuma, built in 1887 for internationally celebrated author and musician Jesse Shepard, serves as both a historical house museum and cultural center. Hours are Saturday and Sunday, noon to 4:30 p.m. at 1925 K Street, downtown. Admission is $3 general admission, children 12 and under free. Call 239-2211 for more information.

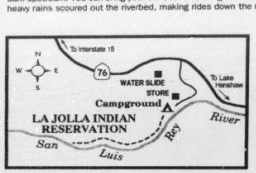

Roam-O-Rama
A Guide to Unexpected San Diego • By Jerry Schad

Eyes shut tight to ward off the stinging spray, wet hair plastered to your head, you hurtle blindly on a straight trajectory toward a sinus-filling finale. Flat on your back you slip through rollercoaster-like curves and curlicues that spit you, dizzy and disoriented, into a churning pool of cold water. These and other less-jarring experiences can be had at San Diego County's only water park, incongruously situated on the remote La Jolla Indian Reservation at the foot of Palomar Mountain.

At Sesame Oaks Water Park, the reservation's latest (and thankfully not outsized) effort at drawing recreational visitors, filtered well water greases several small and large waterslides and fills a spacious, 18-inch-deep pool perfect for kids of pre-swimming age. The water temperature, currently in the same 70°+ range as the ocean, will drop into the 60s by early September, so the best time to go is right now.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday until Labor Day. (The park may reopen on one additional weekend, September 11-12, if the water stays warm enough.) Admission, which includes unlimited use of the slides and picnic sites, is $8 adults; $7 kids; under age four free. Kids who can't swim should wear life vests (bring your own or rent them).

Down below the water park, the popular La Jolla Reservation campground spreads along the banks of the San Luis Rey River. On hot days some campers practice the art of "tubing" down the river, the success of which depends on the amount of water being released from the Lake Henshaw dam upstream. You can bring your own, or rent, the giant inner tubes necessary for this. Last winter's heavy rains scoured out the riverbed, making rides down the river a bit less bumpy. Hikers and tubing enthusiasts have forged a path along the river's shady north bank, good for a bit of pleasant hiking as long as you can avoid the poison oak. Fees for the campground are $12 per vehicle per night, $8 day use. Those arriving by motorcycle, bicycle, or on foot get in for much less.

The La Jolla Indian Reservation is located along State Highway 76, ten miles west of Pauma Valley and six miles east of Lake Henshaw. The whole family is welcome — but no pets, please. For more information, call 742-1921 (water park), 742-1297 (campground).

The city invalidated a petition signed by 100,000 nicotine addicts, and now it's official. Westside councilman Marvin Braude has finally won his 20-year fight against smoking in metropolitan restaurants. With the institution of the smoking ban, Los Angeles has inched closer to criminalizing the outdoor grill, as suggested by a 1990 AQMD-sponsored study on ways to clean the air.

It is appropriate that the smoking ban was the project of a wealthy, health-conscious Westside councilman. As we all know, cigarette smoking is largely a pastime of the lower classes. Now Braude and his well-to-do friends will no longer be forced to endure the classless exhalations of the untermench.

An offensive against airborne pollutants comes at an opportune time. The worsening business conditions have chased industry from Los Angeles to Utah, Idaho, and Tijuana, taking with them their eye-irritants. Sponsors of the impending North American Free Trade Agreement argue that once the free-trade laws are instituted, immigrants, along with their smoke-belching clunkers, are more likely to stay put South of the Border after American wages achieve "parity" with Mexico's.

Will the smoking ban affect business? Restaurateur Blair Salisbury, whose family has owned and operated the popular El Cholo eatery since 1927, isn't sure. "I'm worried that customers will drive ten minutes to the Beverly Hills border, or 15 minutes to Pasadena, and eat there. I'd prefer that the California Restaurant Association make this a statewide law so that all municipalities are affected. Plus, I don't know how cops are going to be able to enforce this ordinance." (Not to worry, Blair, the metro squad prefers to go after hardened criminals like jaywalkers and parking violators than perpetrators of softer crime, like murder, rape, and robbery.)

Braude contended the smoking ban was necessary since secondhand smoke is reputed to shorten the lives of restaurant workers. "The workers here," says Salisbury, "never complain about second-hand smoke. One joked with me that if she was worried about her health, she wouldn't be living in Los Angeles in the first place."

Lill's Carnaval did not have the quality of special revelation that characterized his Beethoven.

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE

The dominating presence toward the end of the Mainly Mozart Festival, aside from conductor David Atherton, was pianist John Lill. He appeared in a chamber-music performance with members of the Cleveland Quartet (the Mozart G Minor Piano Quartet, which I wrote about a couple of weeks ago); as soloist in concertos by Mozart and Beethoven; and in a recital of his own. A superb musician, Lill has appeared in San Diego before, notably in a marathon series of concerts a long while ago, in which he performed all the Beethoven piano sonatas and concertos. It was a pleasure to have this distinguished artist back, after so many years.

It was, naturally, the recital program that offered the broadest and most intimate revelation of the British pianist's talents. Its division — Mozart and Beethoven on the first half, Chopin and Schumann on the second — turned out to be significant for an evaluation of Lill's musical personality. Mozart and Beethoven seem to be his natural home. The classical tradition, with its formal rigor, its disciplined emotionalism, and its particular vocabulary of harmonic, rhythmic, and melodic devices, calls out the clearest resonances in Lill's soul, perhaps most responsively in the late Beethoven's extreme stretchings of classical form.

That is not in any way to discount the pianist's mastery of Mozart and early Beethoven. On the orchestral programs, Lill, in an invigorating and harmonious meeting of minds with conductor Atherton, offered delectably fresh and nuanced performances of the Mozart Concerto No. 12, K. 414, and the Beethoven Concerto No. 1. The Beethoven, in particular, demonstrated Lill's (and Atherton's) masterful understanding of the early Beethoven style, with its Mozartean grace, its wit, its lyricism (above all in the exquisite slow movement), and — notably in the finale — its spirited brilliance.

On the recital program, Beethoven was represented by the "Appassionata," a sure test of a pianist's confidence since it is such a familiar work. As in his traversal of the entire 32, Lill demonstrated not only a magisterial technical command of every phase of Beethoven's constructive and expressive imagination, but the remarkable ability to see something new in a well-known score, to make the music his own, and to illuminate ideas and phrases that an experienced concert-goer might have thought he knew down to the bottom. This was a powerful, driven, dynamic "Appassionata," highly dramatic in the opening movement, electrifying in the finale (the coda was breathtaking in its motoric force), but most wonderful of all in the superbly articulated Andante, where meditative inwardness and the inventive display of the variation form were balanced to perfection.

Having known Lill's artistry exclusively in this earlier repertoire (I have thought of him — as of Artur Schnabel — principally as a Beethoven pianist), I was grateful to be able to hear him in some masterpieces of Romanticism, including a Nocturne (in C Minor) and a Polonaise (the F-sharp Minor) by Chopin, and Schumann's Carnaval. The latter compilation of character pieces, with its broadly variegated styles and emotional states, in itself provided Lill with occasions to experience — and to communicate to the audience — a full spectrum of the Romantic sensibility.

My own experience of Lill's performances in this repertoire was, I am reluctant to confess, a bit less ecstatic than my reaction to his Beethoven, whether at his recent appearances or during his earlier visit to San Diego. The reluctance stems from the difficulty of expressing a slight, marginal, virtually ineffable reservation without seeming to denigrate the performances as a whole. Once again, Lill showed complete mastery of the music's technical and stylistic demands. Once again, his playing revealed the richness and depth of his musicianship, the subtlety and sureness of his interpretive skills, the shaded delicacy or bold grandeur of his touch, the focused concentration of his feelings.

Nevertheless — and I admit this must be a purely subjective reaction — I did not feel in Lill's Chopin or Schumann, as I did with his Mozart and (especially) Beethoven, that in performing the composer's music the pianist was expressing his own most profound being, and thereby forcing me to hear the music anew. This was a first-rate Carnaval, beautifully judged, brilliantly executed — but it did not have the quality of special revelation that characterizes Lill's Beethoven.

Of course, one could make similar remarks about Schnabel, who was certainly one of the greatest of pianists, but whose supremacy was indisputable only in a specific, narrow (although immensely deep) repertoire. Schnabel, it should be said, was as dazzling in Schubert as he was in Beethoven; I'd be curious to know whether Lill's resemblance to the older master extends in the same direction. Perhaps this fine artist will return to a future Mainly Mozart series and let us hear some Schubert Impromptus — as well as more Mozart and Beethoven. ■

SummerFest La Jolla '93 is here, and the first concert is planned for Friday, August 13, at 8 p.m. The music for this concert includes Telemann's Sonata for Four Violins in C Major; Trio for Violin, Cello, and Piano by Ives; and Beethoven's Quartet No. 15 in A Minor.

A conversation with the artists to help Summerfest artists prepare for the performance and share their musical experiences with the audience is planned on Saturday, August 14, from noon to 1 p.m. This conversation is followed by a master class from 1 to 4 p.m. with the Orion String Quartet members. The musicians will be instructing advanced music students. Both the conversation and class are free and open to the public and take place at Sherwood Auditorium.

The music continues on Sunday, August 15, at 3 p.m., when the La Jolla Chamber Music Festival Ensemble performs Mozart's Divertimento in D Major; the Concerto Grosso in G Minor by Vivaldi; Grieg's Holberg Suite; Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Major; and the Introduction and Allegro for Strings by Elgar.

Later on that Sunday, at 7 p.m., enjoy a concert of Ligeti's Sechs Bagatellen; Weill's String Quartet No. 1; the Opus Number Zoo by Berio; and the Piano Quartet in G Minor.

The first week closes with a Rising Stars Concert on Wednesday, August 18, at 8 p.m.; there's a pre-concert lecture by Eric Bromberger at 7 p.m. Hear Beethoven's String Quartet in F Minor, Schubert's Octet in F Major, and one other unscheduled piece during this concert.

Concerts in this series continue on various dates through Saturday, August 28; all performances are given in Sherwood Auditorium at the San Diego Museum of Contemporary Art, 700 Prospect Street, in La Jolla. Individual tickets are $27; series packages are available. To charge tickets by phone, call 459-3728. For more information, call 459-3724.

A Gospel Concert featuring the Voices of Fulfillment, Rodney and Ruth Pearson, and 11-year-old Christopher Johnson is scheduled for Saturday, August 14, at 7 p.m. Catch the concert at the San Diego Academy Gymnasium, 2700 East 4th Street, in National City. "The Enterpe Waltz" was written by Llewellyn Owen, a British emigrant to New Zealand in 1879. As a young boy Owen had sailed on the Enterpe, a ship now known as the Star of India. In honor of America's Finest City Week and the sailing of the Star (on August 14 and 22), the organ concert from 2 to 3 p.m. on Sunday, August 15, will feature a performance of the concerto by civic organist Robert Plimpton.

Tenor Dan Decker and bass Steve Gowan will join Plimpton, assisted by organist Dale Sorenson, in a variety of contemporary popular music, plus organ works by Handel, Guilmant, San Diego composer Gordon Baker, and music from the Latin and African-American traditions. This is the next installment of weekly free concerts on the 4400-pipe instrument at the Spreckels Organ Pavilion in Balboa Park. 226-0819.

The 40-Member Navy Concert Band is scheduled to perform at the next Summer Serenade Concert, on Sunday, August 15, from 5 to 7 p.m., at Carmel Del Mar Park, 12000 Carmel Park Drive, in Del Mar. Call 481-1339 for more information. The concert is free; bring blankets or beach chairs and a picnic dinner.

The M.U.S.E. Chamber Music Series concludes for the summer on Sunday, August 15, at 7 p.m., when soprano Ellen Lawson, pianist Don LeMaster, Stephen Rumbold on French horn, and Scott Paulson on oboe and English horn perform works by Kurt Weill, Gabriel Fauré, and Arnold Cooke. Admission is by donation. Enjoy the concert at the University Lutheran Church, 9595 La Jolla Shores Drive, La Jolla. Dial 491-2473 for further details.

Italian Native Massimo Nosetti is the organist during the next installment of the sixth annual Summer Organ Festival in Balboa Park. You'll hear music by Hollins, J.S. Bach, Petrali, Yon, Germani, Bossi, Saint-Saëns, Litaize, and Reuschel. The program is presented by the Spreckels Organ Society, on Monday, August 16, at 8 p.m. Call 226-0819 for more information. Free.

ART

Worshiping the Brown Goddess

This painting is an exotic icon invented by a late-nineteenth-century European painter to express his own yearned-for spiritual truth.

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE

In the vast majority of Cézanne's paintings, structurally transformed as the subjects (landscapes, table tops, human figures) are, the painter's sincere allegiance to the reality of the natural world is never in doubt. Only in a few early and late fantastic compositions, usually involving female nudes, does the artist's power to do whatever he wants assert itself unrestrainedly.

These are not among Cézanne's more successful works. Evidently, he needed the restraint imposed by objective reality; without it, his tumultuous inner life came too close to the surface, threatening the orderly pictorial architecture by which he kept emotional chaos at bay. The great pictures — such as the Paley Collection's L'Estaque, Milk Can and Apples, and Reeds at Jas de Bouffan — are those in which rigorous outer order and hidden inner passion are held in tense balance.

Cézanne's contemporary Paul Gauguin, another of the founders of modern art splendidly represented in the exhibit at the San Diego Museum of Art, made a more decisive (and extremely influential) move away from nature toward the assertion of the artist's autonomy. He was articulate in expressing this attitude. Offering advice to another painter, he wrote, "Don't copy nature too much. Art is an abstraction; derive this abstraction from nature while dreaming before it, and think more of the creation which will result." Art, then, is not a faithful representation of the world as we see it or as objective knowledge describes it. It is, rather, an imaginative vision, stimulated by nature, but deriving its essential qualities from the secret, irrational, unconscious life of the artist — the activity Gauguin calls "dreaming."

This is the key to a painting such as the magnificent Seed of the Areoi in the Paley Collection. The handsome young woman seated in a luxuriant South Seas landscape has her real connections with the world: the model is Gauguin's 13-year-old Tahitian mistress. The mountains and the palm trees in the background, the mangoes on the low, curved table in the foreground — these, too, have been inspired by observations of nature. But it is the artist's "dreaming" that has given the picture the forms and meanings by which our souls are awed; any possible accuracies of portraiture or topography are unimportant.

The girl is represented not as herself but as the goddess Vairaüumati, a beautiful virgin from Bora-Bora, chosen by the god Oro to give birth to the superior race of the Areoi. Her humanity has been magnified into divinity — a divinity, however, which remains of the flesh, for she is the goddess of sexuality, fertility, and the generative powers of nature. Hence, the flowering seed in her hand, symbol of the universal reproductive force she embodies; hence, too, the mangoes, whose ripe, seed-laden flesh symbolizes the goddess's essence in another form.

The story itself is authentically Polynesian. But the painting emerges not from Polynesian religious beliefs and practices in 1892 but from Gauguin's own project of reinstituting the imagination of the sacred in a world where the spiritual view of things had become more and more marginal and irrelevant. It was the shallowness and lifelessness of the modern, advanced, civilized world view that had driven him to the peasants of Brittany, then to Martinique, and now to Tahiti, in quest of a meaningful spiritual relationship between human culture and the natural world it is nourished by.

In this quest for the numinous, an inherent principle of divinity independent of any specific religious tradition, Gauguin was part of the general late-Romantic reaction against 19th-century materialism and rationalism, a phenomenon that is still aggressively with us. His particular means of reaction, deriving from Jean-Jacques Rousseau and shared by many artists in our own century, was to reject modern European culture in favor of the non-modern, the non-Western, and the non-civilized — the "primitive" world in which the supernatural and the unconscious, the intuitive and the imaginative, were the normal modes of understanding.

It was not his sojourns in Tahiti that converted him to this anti-rational, anti-European vision. He went to Tahiti (and later to the Marquesas) precisely because he had already been converted. Artistically, he made the most of whatever elements of beauty, simplicity, spirituality, human dignity, and dream-truth he found there. But much of his sense of the numinous, and of suitable artistic ways of conveying it, he brought with him.

Gauguin, The Seed of the Areoi

The William S. Paley Collection
San Diego Museum of Art
Through October 3

Thus, he learned the myth of Oro and Vairaümati on which The Seed of the Areoi is based not from his Tahitian contacts (Tahiti was by then thoroughly Christianized) but from a book about Polynesia by a European anthropologist, published more than half a century before Gauguin's voyage and carefully tucked away in his baggage as he set out for the South Seas.

Similarly, he learned his anti-realistic artistic techniques — stylized postures, flat color areas, outlined forms, de-emphasized modeling and perspective — from ancient Egyptian friezes, Javanese Buddhist relief sculptures, medieval stained glass, late Gothic and early Renaissance painting, and Japanese woodcuts. For example, the relative absence in The Seed of the Areoi of shadows (and of the natural light source shadows imply) has nothing to do with what Gauguin observed in sun-drenched Tahiti. "Look at the Japanese who draw so admirably, and you will see that there is life in the open air and in the sun without shadows.... I will have as little as possible to do with what gives the illusion of a thing, and since shadows are the trompe l'oeil of the sun, I am inclined to suppress them."

But he is no more the prisoner of the Japanese woodcut tradition than he is of the empirical, scientific verisimilitude of post-medieval European painting. The girl-goddess's legs, on the arbitrarily red, flat-color area of the ground, cast no shadows, but the table, standing on the same red ground, does.

As to Vairaüumati's angular stance, the dance-like position of her arms, the square shape of her shoulders, the straight lines of her thigh, and the placement of her feet — in his commentary in the Paley catalogue, William Rubin gives a detailed iconographical analysis of the eclectic sources Gauguin consciously made use of in this figure: all from traditions of symbolic and religious art, none from Tahiti. It is the artist who freely creates the Tahitian goddess, unbound by the specific cultural realities out of which she grew.

This painting, then, is an exotic icon invented by a late-19th-century European painter to express his own yearned-for spiritual truth. Nature offers him some material, but so do various artistic traditions to which, as a cultivated modern man, he has wide access. Above all, Gauguin asserts the right to combine and transform all these materials according to his own aesthetic imagination. His extreme freedom in choice of colors is only the most striking of these willful divergences from the way things actually look.

The most comprehensive assertion of the power of "dream" is to be found in the extraordinary way Gauguin has unified the picture around its central image. The sexuality of woman, perceived as the creative energy of the universe, pervades not only the monumental and hieratic rendering of the figure but also the landscape and the painting as a whole. The soft, feathery, yellow forms of the palm fronds in the background, continued in the sharper but similarly shaped yellow decorations on the sumptuous dark blue cloth below the figure, encircle her like a nimbus or crown on the painting's surface, independent of material space. The vague, massed clusters of small, round, lavender flowers crossing the picture behind the girl are like the ocean froth out of which Botticelli's Venus was born, a sensually suggestive foam enveloping the waist and loins of Gauguin's austere "Egyptian" goddess. The two steep, blue-purple mountains in the distance, softened in contour and painted with smoky suppleness, meet in an erotically suggestive V, as though to reveal in the landscape what the figure's posture conceals in her person. The mangoes on the table, their colors (red, yellow, and green) echoing other areas in the painting, are harder, brighter, more vividly outlined versions of the girl's youthful, delicately modeled breasts.

In a sense, it is not just the flowering seed that this dusky female principle hoids in her hand, but the whole world, including this breathtaking painting and the creative genius of the man who painted it. She is the artist's muse, the eternal feminine, the mystery of Being, given bodily form by the particular nature of the Tahitian women whom Gauguin made love to, and who provided him with so many noble, "primitive," human-yet-greater-than-human subjects.

"The Tahitian Eve," he writes, "is very subtle, very knowing in her naiveté. The enigma hidden in the depths of her childish eyes remains incommunicable to me. She is Eve after the Fall, still able to walk naked without shame, possessing all her animal beauty of the first day. Like Eve, her body has remained animal, but her head has evolved, her mind has learned subtlety, love has impressed an ironic smile upon her lips, and naively she searches her memory for the why of present times. Enigmatically she looks at you."

In The Seed of the Areoi, however, the Tahitian Eve, mother of the human race, has been exalted far beyond her earthly embodiment. There is no ironic smile, but rather a pensive seriousness; she does not look at us, but off into the distance — or, perhaps, into her own mysterious thoughts. You may see something of the same expression on the face of Botticelli's Venus, as well as on numerous representations of the Virgin Mary in the late Middle Ages and the Renaissance. She is older than the fields and mountains she sits among (to paraphrase Walter Pater on Leonardo's Mona Lisa) — and while she does not appear in every painting by Paul Gauguin, she is the ultimate source of his genius. He rebels from business, family, civilization, Europe, and the art of his time, in order to seek her out, to worship her, to become her consort, and to take on her knowledge with her power. She is there in his unconscious, calling to him and forming his art, long before he travels to the South Seas and begins painting her in the flesh.

She is there in Cézanne, too, but (except in rare moments of loss of control) he stends fast against her with desperate intensity, concealing her presence behind objects of the world, to the point where she is visible — if at all — only to the deepest, most wordless intuitions of our own unconscious. The landscape into which we are not allowed to enter, whose central spatial relations are unintelligible, whose softnesses and roundnesses are hardened into minute, intersecting, impenetrable planes — that is the tension-wracked manifestation of the goddess as Cézanne allows it, her femininity and eroticism overlaid by tectonic plates of emotional resistance.

Gauguin, in contrast, yields to her even before he has seen her. The sensual and the erotic pervade his artistic style from the moment, early in his career, when he abandons Impressionism and plunges into his own self as the wellspring of art; and when — as in The Seed of the Areoi — the goddess becomes his direct subject, in all her glorious nakedness, he is simply giving his long-time companion an explicit name. From her, not resisted but absorbed, flow the boldly unnaturalistic colors, the sinuous linear arabesques, the soft textures unimpeded by explicit brush strokes, the free transitions from one kind of line, color, or texture to another, the dissolution of objective rigidities in a glowing liquid dreamworld of luxury, calm, and voluptuousness.

The subsequent history of modern art is the story of this muse in a world alien and often hostile to her: how artists have sought her, attacked her, wrestled with her, ignored her, imprisoned her, dismembered her, disguised her, deserted her, returned to her, and sometimes — though reluctantly and ironically — celebrated her. Fortunately, the Paley Collection traces her story through most of its important stages, from Cézanne and Gauguin onward, as you may see by visiting this exceptional exhibit. ■

Sunday, with some extended hours on Friday and Saturday. 232-0396.

"Diversity in Stone and Nocturnal Impressions" is a collaborative show by sculptors Mika Forrest and Tracey Joubert, and photographer David Max Bleakney, beginning with a reception for the artists on Friday, August 13, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m., at Root's. The sculptures are in soapstone and alabaster; the photographs are in black and white. See the show through Saturday, September 4. Regular gallery hours are 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Tuesday through Friday; 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday. The gallery is located at 2644 Adams Avenue in Normal Heights. 291-0402.

The Second Juried Wildlife and Marine Art Festival is set for Saturday and Sunday, August 14 and 15, from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. both days, at the Ferry Landing Marketplace, 1201 First Street (at B Avenue), in Coronado. Forty-five artists from throughout the Southwest will participate (including Osage Indian artist Rod "Bearcloud" Berry at Southwest Indian Den), and attractions include a sculpture garden, display booths, musical entertainment, and hands-on art projects for children. Admission is free. For further information, call 239-1143.

The Vanishing Wildlife and how to protect and preserve it in the Ramona valley is the theme of a members' art show currently on view at the Olde Ramona Hotel Gallery, 845 Main Street, Ramona. This show was co-sponsored by the Iron Mountain Conservancy. There's a reception, featuring art, slides, video, and lectures on local plants and animals, set for Saturday, August 14, from 6 to 9 p.m. at the gallery.

See the show through Tuesday, August 31. Regular gallery hours are from Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. 789-3682.

ART MUSEUMS

Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, the permanent second home of the Museum of Contemporary Art, San Diego, presents "Bill Viola: Slowly Turning Narrative," a new work, reflecting Viola's ongoing exploration of opposing but interconnected forces, from Saturday, August 14, through Wednesday, October 20.

Examples of such forces are the conscious versus the unconscious, the personal versus the social, illusion versus reality, and abstraction versus representation. Visual and audible components interact within the installation to evoke the encounters that shape identity. The work is made up of a 9-by-12-foot screen, mirrored on one side, which turns like a giant propellor in the center of a darkened room; video projectors, stationed at opposite sides, offer two sets of footage, one color, the other black and white. Also on exhibit, Viola's two-channel video installation, "Heaven and Earth," a new acquisition to MCA's permanent collection.

Find the museum at 1001 Kettner Boulevard, directly across from the Santa Fe Railroad Depot (at Broadway Street), adjacent to the America Plaza trolley transfer station. Museum hours are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday, and on Thursday from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Admission is $2 for adults, $1 seniors and students, children under 13 free. On Thursday evenings, from 5 to 9 p.m., admission is free. 234-1001.

The Museum of Contemporary Art, San Diego is exhibiting selected works from the permanent collection through December. The Museum of Contemporary Art is located at 700 Prospect Street in La Jolla. Hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Admission is $3 for adults, $2 for seniors and students, free for children under 13; admission is free to all every Wednesday from 5 to 9 p.m. 454-3541.

Museum of Photographic Arts, "Rolling Stone: 25 Years" is the exhibit of 85 color and black-and-white photographs that can be seen through September 12. The show features the best of two and a half decades of work for the magazine by 20 photographers, including Annie Leibovitz, Mary Ellen Mark, Richard Avedon, Herb Ritts, Albert Watson, Steven Meisel, and Bruce Weber.

A companion exhibit, "Linda McCartney's Sixties," is a collection of 55 black-and-white, platinum, and color prints of the rock and roll scene of the era. It too can be viewed through September 12.

Located in the Casa de Balboa in Balboa Park, the museum is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Docent tours are available on weekends at 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. and are included in the price of admission (adults: $3). 239-5262.

The San Diego Museum of Art is featuring "The William S. Paley Collection," an exhibition of works built according to the dictates of Paley's tastes rather than to public concerns (Paley was the founder of CBS). The exhibition includes paintings, sculpture, and drawings from the latter half of the 19th Century through the early 1970s. Among the artists represented are Cézanne, Matisse, Picasso, Toulouse-Lautrec, Degas, Derain, Bonnard, Gauguin, Rousseau, Rousault, and other modern masters. View the exhibit through Sunday, October 3.

The annual juried exhibition featuring works in all media by members of the San Diego Museum of Art Artists Guild runs through Sunday, August 29. The juror is Jo Farb Hernandez, director of the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art; she has selected 71 pieces by 64 artists out of the nearly 1000 entries by California artists.

The museum's permanent collection includes Italian Renaissance paintings, Spanish Old Masters paintings, American art, 19th-century European paintings, Asian art, 20th-century paintings and sculpture, and the Weisman Gallery of contemporary California art.

Find the museum in Balboa Park; it is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday; viewing hours are extended to 8 p.m. on Thursdays through September 30. Admission is $5 adults; $2 for children 6-18; free on the third Tuesday of the month (for viewing the museum's collection of permanent paintings, not special exhibitions). 232-7931.

Luck, Pluck, & Flop

Lapine's staging and the design work are miles ahead of the script.

JEFF SMITH

Are you a Schadenfreudian? Do you experience irrepressible glee at the misfortunes of others? Then you'll love James Lapine's vapid piece of tripe, Luck, Pluck, & Virtue, now in its world premiere at the La Jolla Playhouse. Though altered and updated, the play is based on Nathaneal West's 1934 novella, A Cool Million (or, The Dismantling of Lemuel Pitkin), in which the eager-eyed Pitkin seeks his fortune, during the Depression, only to discover that those who believe in the upbeat novels of Horatio Alger are fodder for the exploiters of the "real" world. As the book's subtitle attests, Pitkin is literally dismantled. He loses his teeth, an eye, a thumb, a leg, his scalp, and eventually his life. West's view of the American Dream isn't "dark"; it's obsidian. Lapine's remake, however, is so watered-down and one-note it's just inane.

In the book, Chief Israel Satinpenny, Harvard graduate, decides to unite the Indian nations and drive the palefaces back across the Atlantic. He tells his cohorts: "Don't mistake me, Indians, I'm no Rousseauistic philosopher.... The day of vengeance is here. The star of the paleface is sinking and he knows it. Spengler has said so; Valéry has said so; thousands of wise men proclaim it." A Cool Million is an episodic series of predictable scenes, in which Pitkin and his woman friend Betty Prail undergo various forms of comic-book violence. Along with a harrowing vision of the growth of American fascism, what gives the book interest is its quirky narrator. Like Chief Satinpenny, the narrator approaches his subject from unexpected angles in a "cool," formal tone. He describes the impropriеties of humankind with a prudish, Puritanical style that refuses to lapse beneath propriety. The combination of myth-debunking, cartoon pain, and distanced narration makes for a bleakly humorous read. But take the narration away, as Lapine has done, and all you have left is just the cartoonish series of predictable events unclothed by West's eerie perspective.

Lapine has changed the protagonist's name from Lemuel Pitkin to Lester Price. The switch loses an implied reference to Jonathan Swift's Lemuel Gulliver but does shed associations with that good-for-the-heart diet that makes everything taste like unsalted cardboard. Lapine has brought the story forward into a '50s-ish sort of present (Lester's mother refers to TV as "the box," an appellation at least 40 years old). Lapine has made a far graver change, however. He has tried to turn A Cool Million into Voltaire's Candide, and the fit doesn't work.

In Candide, in spite of all evidence to the contrary, Dr. Pangloss espouses the Leibnitzian belief that "this is the best of all possible worlds," a philosophy Voltaire debunks with haunting verve. Pangloss is a comic figure. In A Cool Million, Nathan "Shagpoke" Whipple, ex-president of the United States, is not. He forms the fascist National Revolutionary Party, with Storm Troopers and Leather Shirts, makes Pitkin a martyr for the cause, and in the end threatens to become the American Hitler. In Pitkin's fall is Whipple's rise. Lapine, by contrast, reduces Whipple to a silly, comic Pangloss, thereby paring away the terrifying political content of A Cool Million.

Lapine has gutted the politics of West's novella and erased the narration. What has he replaced them with? Pop psychology! Toward the end of the intermissionless drauma, there's a sequence called "Lester's Dream." In it, Lester changes his nature from a passive recipient of misfortune's slings to a chin-up, shoulders back, assertive being. He stands up to his domineering mother and to Whipple, with the implication that none of the previous events would have happened had he only dared to take charge of himself from the start. Such a shallow, simplistic reduction fails to account for the oppressive, external forces that stalk A Cool Million, Candide, and (in some ways the more interesting book, written the same year as Candide), Dr. Samuel Johnson's Rasselas. The script not only sweeps these forces under the proverbial rug, it also argues eloquently that Lapine hasn't understood his materials at all.

The La Jolla Playhouse has labeled Luck, Pluck, & Virtue a work-in-progress. At present it doesn't look salvageable. Scarecrows have more heft. The repetition of predictably violent acts to Lester grows tedious, and that's basically all there is. Lapine's staging and the design work, however, are miles ahead of the script. In the tradition of the Playhouse's 80 Days and Tommy, Adrianne Lobel's scenic designs are so mobile they're almost a living entity. On the rear wall, like a gigantic piano roll, is America. NEW YORK, in 20-foot-tall letters, is at one end. At the other, of course, is us — in between which are OHIO and a lot of trees and stars on a blue background. In keeping with the cartoon nature of the piece, colorful flats establish locales, and everything moves on and off the stage kaleidoscopically. Chris Parry's lighting and Martin Pakledinaz's costumes use every opportunity to enhance the show's look, while pianist Mark Danisovszky, playing accompaniment with Allen Shawn's music, gives the scenes a vaudevillian feel.

Lapine's cast is game as well. Often soaring through the air, Neil Patrick Harris is quite good as the plucky, unlucky Lester. Harris is especially adept at physical comedy, though his having to spit out Lester's false teeth becomes tiresome. As Whipple, George Coe was a half-beat behind the rest, but Marge Redmond, Ming-Na Wen, Dan Moran, and Adrianne Krstansky, all in multiple roles, gave the script better than it merits. It's never a good sign when a new work recalls better, more fulfilling efforts of its kind. Luck, Pluck, & Virtue does that often. At the La Jolla Playhouse, one doesn't have to look far at all. Eugene O'Neill's Hairy Ape, right across the way at the Mandell Weiss Forum, is also about the inexorable plunge of an individual presumably on the rise. After The Hairy Ape, one leaves the theater fretting about humankind. After Luck, one simply leaves, and would do it sooner were there an intermission. ■

Always...Patsy Cline
The most popular production of the San Diego Repertory Theatre's season was this musical tribute both to the songs of Patsy Cline and to her friendship with Louise Seger. The Rep has brought the show back, has recast it, and guess what — the new version is better! In the original, Denise Hills approximated Cline's songs. Close, but no banana. In the new version, Melinda Gilb plays Cline and sounds like Patsy Cline. Gilb has dared to replicate Cline's subtle musical phrasings, and there are many times when you feel that Patsy is in room, singing her breaking heart out (especially when Gilb sings "Sweet Dreams," "I Fall to Pieces," "She's Got You," and the immortal "Crazy"). The new version also boasts the ever-funny Kate Kiley as the irrepressible Louise Seger, and Kiley is terrific too. Seger was one of Cline's biggest fans. When Cline performed in Houston, Seger was there, and they became fast friends. They exchanged highly personal letters — and talked for hours on the phone — until Cline died tragically in a plane crash. For those wanting a biography of Patsy Cline, Always doesn't deliver. It's much more about Louise and her relationship with Cline than it is about the singer. The musical discards the specifics of Cline's life in favor of the universality of her music. The star descends to the common world, and the fan ascends to the spotlight. The Rep's new version of Always...Patsy Cline should run and run and run.
Worth a try.
Lyceum Stage, through August 15; Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Sunday at 7:00 p.m.

Arms and the Man
The La Jolla Playhouse has unleashed the energy of George Bernard Shaw's "pleasant" play. Once it gets going, the Lisa Peterson–directed show moves with the speed of Sergius Saranoff's allegedly heroic cavalry charge just prior to act one. The production has energy and a rich Balkan texture. It suffers, however, from Idea-ophobia: a fear that any but the swiftest attention paid to Shaw's themes and ideas will cause momentum to falter. Arms and the Man is a "serious farce." Except for an eerie opening, with young Raina wielding a gun during a street skirmish, the production has stressed the second half of the oxymoron. By act three, the farcical elements are so over-the-top manic that we are watching, in effect, a chase scene. There is much debunking, in a broad acting style, but little sense of what is being debunked. True, Shaw's main targets, idealized love and war, have been hit hard since he wrote the play in 1894. But Shaw was after more than these. He was satirizing Victorian attitudes, in general, and "Byronism" — the pose of being an unappreciated colossus astride an imperfect world — in particular. The production, which takes place both then and now, is weakest when it comes to Shaw's targets. We see neither examples of the originals nor modern correlatives. Mark Harelik fares well as Bluntschli, Shaw's spokesperson for reality. I very much liked the way Harelik complicates the character. In the end — along with Cynthia Nixon's sprightly Raina — we wonder if we've seen the real Bluntschli. Andrew Weems's Sergius lacks the necessary "Byronism" Shaw detested. Instead, Sergius is defeated too early and too easily and ends up little more than a buffoon. In other roles, Mario Arrambide and Ivonne Coll are enjoyable as Major Paul Petkoff and wife Catherine. Sevanne Kasarjian's Louka is appropriately feisty, though she could be more emphatic when Louka speaks about class-system inequities. Jan Triska's Nicola, the servant content with his lot, is so ethically authentic that sometimes it's hard to make out what he's saying.
La Jolla Playhouse, Mandell Weiss Forum, through August 15. (Note: Arms and the Man is running in repertory with The Hairy Ape. Call the theater for specific dates and times at 534-3960.)

Black Comedy
In Peter Shaffer's one-act, darkness equals light and light, darkness. The main switch for the apartment building at 18 Scarlatti Gardens has gone out, just when George Bamberger, the "mystery millionaire" and possibly the richest man in the world, was coming to inspect Brindsley Miller's artistic creations. Miller's soon-to-be-father-in-law, Colonel Melkett, is also coming. To impress him, Miller has "borrowed" the elegant furnishings of his neighbor, Harold Gorringe, unbeknownst to the man. Also making unscheduled appearances are Miss Furnival, a teetotaling neighbor, Clea, Miller's lover of recent years, and Gorringe. The production begins in darkness (i.e., light for the characters), and when the lights go out, they come on onstage. When someone lights a match, the room darkens slightly. In effect, the audience can see in the dark, and we watch the farcical shenanigans of Miller, trying to return the furniture to Gorringe's apartment, and his guests, fumbling in the light, most of whom have discovered heartfelt reasons for wanting Miller dead. Black Comedy is a funny play — or could be. The opening-night performance by the Sweetooth Comedy Theatre, however, left too much to be desired. Timing problems, faulty coordination between the light booth and the stage, and uneven acting made for a sporadically funny evening at best. The performance lacked much-needed polish. Also, the actors too often tried to urge the comedy into being, rather than relax and trust the text and situations. As to the latter, director Stephen Brown could have invented more physical business, just as the attractive scenic design, uncredited in the program, could have made Miller's apartment more of an obstacle course. It would also help if the actors played "real" people, not just caricatures caught in a bizarre conundrum, but only Wendy Cullum, as Miss Furnival, Peter Moore, as Gorringe, and young Natascha Nikolai, as Carol Melkett manage to create the sense that an actual person is going through this passel of improbabilities.
Sweetooth Comedy Theatre, through September 11; Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Sunday, August 8, and Sunday, August 22, at 7:00 p.m.

Burning Hope
Douglas Michilinda's Burning Hope, in its world premiére at the Cassius Carter Centre Stage, is a long, scattered play that burns to say something — about everything! The play, about the fate of a pub in Hadley, a small New England town, resembles an untended garden, with flowers and weeds intertwined, and it needs a massive hoeing and pruning. Even a faithful production, by the always-capable Andrew J. Traister, is unable to conceal the many flaws in the script — monologues that go on and on, schematic formulas, a zillion observations (the playwright is never content to just say something; he must make statements), an overall predictability. Burning Hope does ztriculate a feeling, however: the ache of diminishing economic horizons in Hadley and, by extension, in the country.
Michilinda has things to say. He has yet to find a way to say them effectively. Traister has shaped the sound of the "ache" impressively — the play is actually one long, sometimes screaming, sometimes barely audible howl — and his cast has done what it can with roles varying in dimension. Dave Florek's Chaser, who has declared war on the world, is a one-note volcano. Florek has to read clunky dialogue ("I hate myself for not being rich"), and Chaser's fuming tantrums grow tedious. As Mickey "the General," burly Wren T. Brown does admirably focused work. Rosina Widdowson-Reynolds and Jennifer Stratman make their characters seem more substantial than they are. Dan Gunther brightens up the stage as Larry Clark, an entrepreneur with eyes, he says, that are "flashlights" of opportunity. James Greene's Paddy, owner of the pub, is a beautifully dervished, multidimensional being. And Kim Miyori's touching Sisopha Van Ngoc, a woman who has lived the Book of Job, could renew almost anyone's hope for humanity. The design work is top quality, especially when a big, stagy, four-alarm effect is called for at the end. And the costumes of Andrew V. Yelusich have been chosen with such precision that they often define character more sharply than the script.
Cassius Carter Centre Stage, Simon Edison Centre for the Performing Arts, through August 15; Thursday through Sunday at 8:00 p.m. Matinee Saturday and Sunday at 2:00 p.m.

Carthage/Fire
Theatre E is offering, as its second production, the first half of a new work by San Diego–based playwright Naomi Iizuka. It begins where Virgil's Aeneid ends. 747 12th Street (at F), downtown, through August 15; Thursday and Friday at 8:00 p.m. Saturday at 8:00 p.m. and 11:00 p.m. Sunday at 8:00 p.m. For information call 595-5870.

The Elephant Man
The Lamb's Players Theatre is staging Bernard Pomerance's drama about John Merrick, "The Elephant Man," and the reaction to his deformities by Victorian society. Robert Smyth has directed. Lamb's Players Theatre, Friday, August 13, through September 11; Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Matinee Saturday and Sunday at 2:00 p.m.

The Fern Street Circus
Now in its third season, the Fern Street Circus has a new show, "Mr. Omnipopo & His Circus of the Universe," written by Ringmaster Don Victor. Ricky X (Kory Abosada) has lost his family. They have leaped through the "Omni-Portal, the doorway from this circus world to all other circus worlds," which could take them anywhere, and does. Ricky and the Ringmaster seek them out. They visit Animal Land, where they see a large, recalcitrant mule and flee from Killer Bees, and Aqua Land, where huge sea monsters frolic, to the horror of everyone else. Along the way, the single-ring, bilingual circus offers the juggling of Sean McKinney, 1992 winner of a gold medal at the International Jugglers convention at Montreal, the comic acrobatics of the 3 Gobies (Oreste, Ottavio, and Pietro Cannestrelli, the eighth generation of a circus family), rope gymnastics by Corky Lindsey, tumbling drills by youngsters from the After-School Circus Program at the Golden Hill Rec Center, and the Fern Street artistic director, John Highkin, way up there on stilts. I saw a preview of the show, and it was still rough around the edges. The pacing was often lax, as is often the case in previews, and sections of the story needed sharpening, especially for the younger attention spans in the audience. In spite of these drawbacks, though, the show has an infectious spirit, and the highlights are many: one of San Diego's funniest comics, Don Victor, is a delightful Ringmaster; the 3 Gobies do some amazing stunts, one being linking themselves together like a wheel and going under — then over — a table; and McKinney's juggling is terrific (particularly impressive was when he juggled two large, bluish balls and a young boy). The costumes, coordinated by Cheryl Lindley, are a big plus, from the sea monsters to the Killer Bees, as is the music of the Xavier Cugat Memorial Combo, with Ian Shields on drums and the gifted Pea Hicks (who also composed the music) on keyboards.
Worth a try.

The Hairy Ape
First produced in 1922, Eugene O'Neill's howling, visceral drama combines elements of expressionism and naturalism to depict a portrait, unlike any seen before in the American theater, of ultimate alienation. Robert "Yank" Smith is the "most highly developed" stoker in the fireman's forecastle of a luxury liner. When socialite Mildred Douglas wanders into the stokehold, Yank has, in effect, an antivision. He falls "in hate" for her. He rises from the hold to seek her out and show her who's the real "ape," and the rest of the play is a swiftly spiraling plummet into the fires of his personal hell. The Hairy Ape is like a jazz concert performed in the Satanic Mills. At the Mandell Weiss Forum, director Matthew Wilder has used the dramatic equivalent of assault tactics to release Yank's cry of pain. The scenic designs of Robert Brill have an undesigned quality that suits Wilder's conception. The stage is bare, big, and impersonal. It looks more like a warehouse than a theatrical space: a place of labor, not of love. David Thayer's lighting is one of the best efforts I've seen in some time. And, since the other characters are how Yank sees them, Cynthia Bolin's effective costumes reveal a grimly warped world. One exmple: Mildred's aunt wears a gold pyramid of a dress and looks like a walking Inca temple. Much of the ensemble work — stokers feeding the furnace with slamming shovels, oblivious Fifth Avenue strollers wearing masks — is quite good. There are also solid performances by Mark Harelik, Ian Triska, and Micha Espinosa. Everything depends, however, on the actor playing Yank, and with Mario Arrambide, the director couldn't have cast better. Arrambide has the hulking physicality for the role. He growls and distorts his face, all the while conveying the sense that, like someone who had an arm amputated and can still feel it, at birth Yank had his mind removed. He can still feel it, he just can't make it work anymore. Arrambide is appropriately atavistic, but he also has a vulnerability that makes Yank's odyssey to oblivion very moving. This human quality is crucial for the role because O'Neill insisted all along that Yank is actually "Everyman."
Worth a try.
Mandell Weiss Forum, UCSD, through August 22. (Note: The Hairy Ape is running in repertory with Arms and the Man; for specific days and times of each show, call the theater at 550-1010.)

Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat
The Lamb's Players Theatre is staging a reprise of its very popular production of the Andrew Lloyd Webber/Tim Rice musical. The show may retell the biblical tale of Joseph and his jealous brothers, but you wouldn't know it looking at Mike Buckley's set. The stage doesn't resemble ancient Canaan or Egypt; it looks like a lapsed Copacabana. Nathan Peirson's lighting bathes the place, glitzy-fake palm trees and all, in salmon pink. And during the evening, the live band doesn't intone antic melodies on flutes and curved lyres. It plays a potpourri of modern styles, ranging from calypso to disco and everything in between — including rap, an addition to the Lamb's production, by Vanda Eggington, that makes it even more current. Joseph is an "Old Testament Story Told Through a Contemporary Musical Revue," and much of its lighthearted fun comes from the enjambment of the hallowed story of a chosen/wronged brother's sufferings and the bizarre, modern choices made for playing each scene. The Pharoah, for example, is an Elvis impersonator (the first Elvis impersonator, one could say, retroactively speaking). Potiphar's house has a chandelier. One hesitates to imagine what this material would become in the wrong hands because it needs a balance between the serious story (so serious Thomas Mann devoted four novels to its telling) and the irreverence of the musical (Joseph's mother was father Jacob's "favorite wife," for example) to make both work. Director Robert Smyth, musical director Mary Kidd, and choreographer Pamela Turner have done an excellent job not only keeping the show moving at a breathless pace and supplying wonderful visuals (credit goes to Veronica Murphy's costumes as well), but also keeping that balance pretty much intact. And the whole cast contributes, from Deborah Smyth's light Ariel of a narrator, to Christian Turner's many fatherly roles (one of which allows him to ride a smug-looking — albeit hilarious — camel), to Mike Buckley's Pharoah/Elvis, to Rick Meads's wistful Joseph.
Worth a try.
Lyceum Space, 79 Horton Plaza, downtown, through August 29; Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Matinee Saturday and Sunday at 2:00 p.m. For information call 474-4542.

King Lear
The Old Globe Theatre has staged a splendid Lear. It booms, it brays, Nightmare and Her Ninefold fire and fall back — but the chief excellence of the production is the way director Jack O'Brien unfolds the story with such amazing clarity. The story, told so clearly, is engrossing. It's only after that one realizes how effectively O'Brien has organized Shakespeare's vision of chaos. Harley Granville-Barker, the gifted director/critic, once said, "At best, the actor can be but a token of the ideal Lear." This is true of Hal Holbrook's performance as the inferior superior who, in the end, becomes the ultimate equal of us all. His is no Promethean Lear, and there are times when he slurs his lines so much he seems more drunk than mad. Holbrook lacks the metaphysical size needed to bellow Lear through the storm, matching it verbal jolt for lighting bolt. But when Holbrook's in the middle and lower — i.e., more human-scaled — ranges, he's something to behold. Holbrook has an admirable freedom of emotional movement that shifts easily from folly to cruelty, and even to wit and spry sexuality. And in the final scenes, when the character becomes a bundle of rags, there is no denying Holbrooks' Lear all the empathy we can muster. The large cast is one of the strongest ever assembled at the Old Globe. Richard Easton's Gloucester, Kandis Chappell's Regan, Robert Sean Leonard's Edgar, and William Anton's Kent (with rock-solid patience, the virtue Lear learns to appreciate most) are particularly distinguished. And Patricia Conolly's Fool (who, like Merlin, appears to be living backwards and already knows the outcome of the play — as reflected in a profound look of sadness when Lear commences his regal folly) is excellent. Like the cast, the design team is composed of Old Globe all-stars: Ralph Funicello (set), Robert Morgan (costumes), David F. Segal (lighting), Jeff Ladman (sounds). All are first-rate, as is this production. One could wish more from Holbrook, but what he does he does quite well. Overall, in the Old Globe's production, the story is the star.
Outstanding.

Oliver!
The Lawrence Welk Resort Theatre's string of entertaining, well-performed shows has ended. Their Oliver! is a dud. In fact, memories of the Welk's recent Nunsense, one of the best shows I've seen at the LWRT, make this one to pale to whitrose by comparison. The choppy script, made so by drastic cutting, is matched by choppy performances in an overly broad, melodramatic style encouraged by director/choreographer Terry Barto, and played against a dreary backdrop (set by Gil Morales, Todd Faux, and Spectrum Studios) that even the always serviceable lighting by Matthew Cubitto can't perk up. The most elementary movements of any production — where to go, and when — are too shakey too often and, given problems at this level, it's inevitable there will be others elsewhere. Lionel Bart's musical is a speed — no, make that a sprint — reading of Charles Dickens's Oliver Twist. He's the orphan who does the unthinkable: at a workhouse for homeless boys, he asks for more food. This assertion casts him out, where he (and Dickens's sharp sociological eye) encounters the top, middle, and bottom of London. Oliver becomes everything from a "Junior Coffin Follower" for a funeral home, to a pickpocket-in-the-making, to a foundling headed for high station in life. Young Brent Badgerow, who plays a quietly appealing Oliver, eventually reaches that lofty position, but he can't hit the high notes in his songs because the music lies just outside his range. David Peace's Artful Dodger is game, though his fake accent's so thick he's almost incomprehensible. Glen David's work as Bill Sikes, the Al Capone of London thievery, is so stiff you'd think he were posing for a daguerreotype. J. Tompkins MacLaine and Nancy Streeter send Mr. Bumble and the Widow Corney so over-the-top you fear they'll frighten the horses. David Allen Jones as Fagin and Liz Lorenzen as Nancy (who sings "As Long As He Needs Me," the codependent's lament, so movingly) perform with such competence they seem like islands in a rising stream.
Lawrence Welk Resort Theatre, through September 4; Tuesday, and Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m.; Wednesday through Thursday and Sunday at 1:45 p.m.

Sexual Perversity in Chicago
Anyone on the lookout for a hot late-night comedy should go to the Fritz Theater and check out David Mamet's exposé of the singles scene. The "sexual perversity" of the title isn't what you think. It's actually about the ways veterans of the scene erect barriers to prevent them from intimacy. Danny and Deborah have met and are headed toward love. His friend Bernie and her roommate Joan, however, are determined to prevent it from happening. Between Bernie's deep-seated hatred of women and Joan's of men, there's no room for anything like optimism. In the hour-long comedy-drama, they function like evil angels at the ears of Danny and Deborah, filling them with overflowings of their own negativity. They must rank as two of the least supportive "friends" on the planet. In a series of quick, often hilariously funny scenes, Mamet traces the slow rise and precipitous fall of Danny and Deborah's relationship. At the Fritz, thanks to some fine work by director Duane Daniels, the show moves at a brisky Mametian clip. Daniel Morris's set — four chairs and a black background lit nicely by Douglas Gabrielle — makes up in instantaneous scene changes what it lacks in detail. The latter is supplied by Allen Ogden's costumes and Marty Eldridge's sound design, part of which is mid-'70s disco music that catches the period (Chicago, 1976) and causes cringes of musical memories at the same time. The acting is solid. Hope Engels's Joan could be more intelligent (she's the smartest character in the piece) and could show more effectively how she became such an ungiving black hole. But other than that, the cast is impressive. Bryan Bevell's Danny is just right, moving from a form of singles-scene innocence to the bitterness of James Watkins's Bernie in believable stages. Lisa Viertel's Deborah, caught in the switches like Danny, is often most eloquent when she doesn't say a word and simply shows us how repulsive Bernie is and how, were it not for two very angry singles soloists (and boy, this is an angry play, in the characters and in Mamet's anger at the condition), she and Danny might have turned out together just fine. (Note: Several cast changes have occurred since the show opened in April 1992.)
Worth a try.

Taking Chances
This new "old-fashioned lesbian and gay musical," by San Diegans Raylene J. Wall and Mary L. Smith (book) and June L. Vertucci (music and lyrics), is about coming out of emotional hibernation and, as the title says, risking once again. Caroline ("Miss Perfect") and Lee ("My life has been like breakfast; it's either hot or cold") are about to become roommates — a mismatch, it would seem, because like Felix Ungar and Oscar Madison, Caroline is a compulsive cleaner and Lee is comfortable with an apartment in, well, modest disarray. They deny an attraction for each other, but one morning they awake in each other's arms and...did they? And did Lee bet with friend Bernie that they would? Taking Chances rewards all chances taken, with little threat that things might turn out otherwise. The rewards would be more so if the threat were greater, however. The night I caught the show, an almost full house at St. Cecilia's had several entertaining moments: in an appealing performance, author Wall plays Lee with a pleasing voice and a gentle but persistent urge to put more quality into her life; I'm almost convinced that David Hough could never not be funny; and Harriet J. Whitman is flat-out outstanding as Bernie, a fearless former Brooklynite. Whitman's rendition of "Cradle to Grave," in which Bernie experiences punk rock nostalgia, stopped the show. The musical performances entertain, on occasion, but overall the loose, rambling script screams for a ruthless job of editing (every scene could be condensed and compressed, with the forward movement of the plot the primary goal; too many scenes lag, act two scene two, for starters, and the script often wanders from its through-lines). Lengthy set changes also slow the pace. The overly broad acting —sitcom, and then some — ranges from amateurish to Whitman's blazing Bernie. The design work, direction, and choreography are, for the most part, unremarkable. Vertucci's music — in particular the title song and the riotous "Am I Getting Closer?" — shows signs of talent but it, like everything else in this project, needs much sharpening, refocusing, and rethinking.

For 30 years, John Kander (composer) and Fred Ebb (lyricist) have begun their work, around midmorning, in the kitchen of Ebb's apartment on Central Park West. From this humble enclosure, they have collaborated on Cabaret, Chicago, New York, New York, and over 18 other musicals, among them Kiss of the Spider Woman, winner of the 1993 Tony Award for best musical score (they do their planning in the kitchen; then they move to another room where they do "the nuts and bolts stuff" on a piano and a battered Smith Corona). 2x5, in yet another lively, stylish production at the Theatre in Old Town, is a revue based on their music up to 1977. It's a sort of retrospective manqué, unfortunately, that doesn't include their work of the last 16 years. As a result, it makes them seem less prolific than they are (in fact, they seem to suffer the "Curse of the Doobie Brothers": they wrote five great songs and that's it). Director Paula Kalustian, however, never met a musical revue she couldn't frame to advantage. She gives us a sleek-looking show (Nick Reid's dark set includes what looks to be a glass trampoline hovering over the bare stage) that is so assurred you almost overlook the sameness of much of the material — and that the Kander and Ebb "voices," except in their major efforts, nudges toward the generic. Of the five-person cast — two men and three women — the males are Old Town regulars. Brian Trent has become a truly polished performer and handles all his assignments with ease, sometimes more, as in "Ten Percent," than they merit. Steve Anthony turns in solid work, as expected, but his choreographic collaboration with wife Jill is one of the show's consistent highlights (especially for "Military Man" and "Me and My Baby"). The women are newcomers to Old Town. But while Melissa McCarl appears reluctant to take stage and grab the spotlight, Tracy Venner is as sprightly as she is savvy. And Catherine Fries, memorable in the Lawrence Welk's recent Nunsense, belts Kander and Ebb's home-run songs — "The World Goes Round" and "Maybe This Time" — over the fence with ease.
Worth a try.

He's Never Understood the Joys of Becoming Void

Townshend happily credits San Diego for "making me rich."

REVIEW
GINA ARNOLD

People just love to feel involved in the creative process, however tenuous the connection. Hence the perennial success of the otherwise meaningless phrase Hello, San Diego! (or San Francisco, or Timbuktu) in eliciting ecstatic cheers at rock concerts.

However, when an artist convinces an entire community that it was instrumental in the creation and/or success of a piece of art, the result is even more delirious. That was proved last week, when Pete Townshend played Copley Symphony Hall, whose elegant brown confines were filled with La Jolla matrons, grey-bearded gentlemen, and other genera inappropriate to loud rock music, each of whom had paid from $50 to $250 to attend this benefit for the La Jolla Playhouse. Before the concert began, Townshend, aided by Mayor Susan Golding and La Jolla Playhouse artistic director Des McAnuff, spent 15 minutes giving the city of San Diego personal credit for the success of Townshend's rock opera Tommy on Broadway (where it recently won five Tony Awards), because its theatrical version was first developed at the playhouse last year. And the city of San Diego, represented by this well-heeled crowd, was more than willing to accept the burden.

Early in the concert, the audience confined itself to standing ovations and irrepressible shrieks ("We love you, Pete"). But mid-set, Townshend brought out Tommy star Michael Cerveris to sing a 15-minute précis of the opera's highlights, and the crowd, to quote from the libretto, went crazy. Gold-laméd ladies bellowed with glee. Cummerbunded men trembled in anticipation.

Even for the very jaded, it was a splendid moment. As the ringing open chords of "Pinball Wizard," played by Townshend on acoustic guitar and fleshed out by his eight-piece band, filled the velvet environs, one couldn't help but be moved, even shaken, by the grandeur of those mnemonic musical phrases and the memories they evoked.

Granted, this first local solo appearance by Townshend, former guitarist for '60s rock superstars the Who, was bound to generate some heedless adoration among diehard fans, no matter where he appeared. But here was reverence on a scale usually reserved for stadiums full of heavy metal fans, adulation of a sort not often seen in symphony halls, and not often evinced by society mavens, yuppies, and casually attired beachy types (for whom the conjunction of the terms symphony hall, La Jolla, and rock 'n' roll had apparently caused a conflict of interest fashion-wise). For a time, all was pandemonium and power chords, the passionate intensity that the best moments in rock 'n' roll bring.

And yet, though Townshend happily gives this town credit for "making me rich," a definite cognitive dissonance was experienced in the audience's collective breast. Although the theatrical adaptation of Tommy (spearheaded and co-developed by McAnuff) premièred at the La Jolla Playhouse last year, the original wasn't written for (or by) San Diego; it was written in London in

Joshua Kadison

The mark of any enduring artist is that at the end of the day, they remain free spirits, true to themselves, for better or worse, and true to their art. New singer/songwriter JOSHUA KADISON is one such free spirit. On PAINTED DESERT SERENADE, his debut album for SBK/ERG, Joshua paints landscapes of life, vignettes of romance lost and found and lost again, drawn from his very real experiences of travel and wanderlust.

1969. Neither its social significance nor its rock iconography has much to do with life in California in the '90s (though McAnuff has said that the child-abuse theme is "very modern"); in fact, it's a flower-power fable that looks out of place being embraced by San Diego's bland and conservative high society.

But the fact that this audience felt so keenly in touch with the work, despite its inappropriateness to them, is one measure of Townshend's genius. The man can be and has been accused of many self-indulgences, of general pomposity, of post-Who-reformation greed, bitterness, and artistic bankruptcy, but in the final analysis, his dreams are not as empty as his conscience seems to be, and it is marvelous songs like "The Kids Are Alright," "Behind Blue Eyes," and those from Tommy that tell the real story. His work endures.

Unfortunately, as with so many '60s rock artists, the quality of Townshend's more recent music doesn't even approach that of his past work. So the rest of the three-hour-plus show didn't live up to the frisson of those 15 minutes of Tommy. There was an opening segment featuring songs from his solo LPs — "A Little Is Enough" from Empty Glass, "Face the Face" from the LP of the same name, and "Heart to Hang on To" from his 1976 album with Ronnie Lane — a closing segment that included "Behind Blue Eyes," "Rough Boys," and "Won't Get Fooled Again," and, between the two, a nearly 90-minute showcase of his new rock opera, Psychoderelict, performed in its entirety, with the assistance of three actors.

It would be ridiculous for Townshend to try to play the Casbah.

Townshend introduced the last-named work self-deprecatingly, saying that he wrote the play "to distract attention from the songs and confuse people." Unfortunately, he wasn't kidding, because that is exactly what it does. Both the record and the onstage drama consist of 11 songs, 4 instrumentals, 2 reprises, and many bits of connecting dialogue from the three main characters. The plot, in brief: Ray High (played by John Labanowski) is a former '60s flower child and rock star who now lives a reclusive life in his 22-room mansion, where he reads his fan mail, drinks expensive liquor, and broods upon his fabulous past. Presently, his evil manager Rastus Knight (Linal Haft) and an even more evil rock journalist called Ruth Streeting (Jan Ravens) concoct a scheme to get him to perform again (and thus make themselves tons of money). They go about it by involving him in a teenage sex scandal, which relates to a rather confusing subplot concerning virtual reality and the attractive perils of high technology. In the end, Ray becomes once again a huge star but wonders aloud what it all means: "There's no alternative to reality.... It's all games now. What happened to hope? What happened to dreams? What happened to all that lovely hippie shit?"

Like Tommy, Psychoderelict deals primarily with fame, celebrity, and alienation, subjects that Townshend, a star since the age of 19, knows all too well but that, frankly, not many other people can relate to. A more pertinent problem is how to grow old gracefully, which no rock 'n' roll star has managed with total success. (Those coming closest were, sadly, Jimi, Jim, John, and Janis. Elvis died a joke, but he could hardly help it. Can you even imagine Kurt Cobain or Eddie Vedder at 45 or 50?) Along with Neil Young, however, Townshend is one of the few to retain any measure of dignity, and he, to his credit, began working on the problem early, by messing with the art form itself. When he wrote Tommy as a rock opera in 1969, he envisioned rock as a more serious and lasting, not to say mature, genre. It was a bold, even defiant, gesture of belief in his métier, especially for the time, when only young people listened to rock 'n' roll.

And it was a bet that's paid off, at least retrospectively, as the success of Broadway's Tommy has proved. The story of a deaf, dumb, and blind kid who becomes the new messiah, Tommy has transcended its dated, hippie-esque aspects, thanks mostly to unstoppably tuneful songs, which make anything by Andrew Lloyd Webber sound childishly unmelodic in comparison.

But despite Tommy's musical resonance, rock 'n' roll as meaningful drama (or worse, social criticism) is a tricky business, not the clear-cut path to musical maturity Townshend sees it as. Rock 'n' roll isn't quite as flexible as all that, and it intrinsically favors youth, poverty, and a light touch, things Townshend has (inevitably) lost. Currently he resembles a proper British butler or headmaster, albeit one who isn't afraid to shimmy like a teenager. He looks remarkably like a skinny John Cleese, with the result that at times you think he's making fun of himself.

Of course, it would be ridiculous for Townshend to put together a four-piece band and try to play the Casbah (that's more David Bowie's bogus strategy), but his solo show does have its problems. To begin with, Townshend is a poor singer (which is why he wasn't the singer in the Who): his rendition of Dylan's "Girl of the North Country" was interesting only by virtue of its sincerity. More unnervingly, however, Townshend's insights seem increasingly psychobabbly and out of touch. Despite every scenario he's written, from Tommy's "Sensation" to Psychoderelict's "Fake It," one gets the feeling that he's never really understood the pleasures of fandom, the joys of, to quote Simon Reynolds, becoming void. Instead, he has stared blankly into the ecstatic faces of crowds (like those at Woodstock, where the Who closed the show), wondering what impossible virtues and powers people have endowed him with.

But that burden, though interesting in and of itself, cannot be dealt with effectively in this context. At one point in Psychoderelict, Townshend says, "A great artist is just like a child: he needs to submit to the audience." But Townshend's audiences are increasingly uncritical, either because they suffer from blind fandom or, as at Copley, they are completely unfamiliar with the genre he helped perfect. Submission to such a group isn't wise; it's indulgent, like sinking into a safety net, or scratching at a scab.

Perhaps that's what ultimately made the Copley concert unsatisfying. Except for some fine moments during "Behind Blue Eyes" and "Won't Get Fooled Again," Townshend's incarnation as symphony hall patron and venerable old artist was not so much unconvincing as meaningless, taken entirely out of context. When he wound up his tired old arm for the windmill swing on "Won't Get Fooled Again," one couldn't help wonder whether the old boss hadn't actually been the new boss all along, whether we hadn't been fooled from the start.

And then Pete Townshend, songwriter, playwright, and '60s icon, gave a grin and a giggle, did a brief duckwalk, made a balletic leap across the stage, and brought the concert crashing to its close. A shower of resplendent notes fell upon the adoring crowd, like so much gentle rain from heaven, like mercy itself, and suddenly everything fell into place. After all, in certain times and places, nostalgia and respect alone should suffice. Hello, San Diego! It's really great to be here. Thanks so much for making Tommy such a hit... ■

An Antidote to This Unfunny Decade

Borders bleed into one another – blues into gospel into country, humor into heartache into irony.

REVIEW
TIM RYLAND

"This is such a lovely evening," says Lyle Lovett between songs, adjusting the capo on his guitar. "The air is very nice." The Humphrey's audience chuckles. A low panoply of clouds hangs over Shelter Island; whispers of drizzle have spritzed the July 28 concert throughout the evening. Lovett peers out around the edges of the spotlight. "I'm really glad we're in such agreement about this," he says sincerely. The crowd's laugh is equivocal: is he serious or kidding?

The exchange seems incidental, but it is important: such ambiguities of meaning lie at the heart of Lovett's emotional and musical sensibilities. Borders bleed into one another — blues into gospel into country, humor into heartache into irony. During the second of the 35-year-old singer's two sold-out nights at Humphrey's, it was apparent that during his three-year absence from San Diego, Lyle Lovett and His Large Band have been off polishing the ambiguities until they shine.

"For me it always starts with the song. If I didn't have my songs to do, I'm not sure I would want to stand up on stage and sing at all." — Lovett quoted in The Dallas Morning News, July 1993

It was the songs that hooked me. "I think you'll like this guy," my friend Jake said at one point in the summer of 1989, and handed me a tape of selections from Lyle Lovett's first three albums. (Jake knew my predilection for music involving an acoustic guitar and 4/4 time, though he tried to educate me. We would sit for hours sopping up jazz — Chet Baker croaking "Almost Blue," Miles blowing icy fire on "'Round Midnight" — the dark of Jake's living room lit only by the stereo's glow and the intermittent flare of his Marlboros. I never graduated.) I took the tape reluctantly. It's not often I actually like an artist when someone says, "I think you'll like this guy." Nevertheless, I did what I always do in these situations: gave the tape a once-through just to say I'd listened.

By the end of the summer, the tape was worn thin from overplaying. What caught my attention first was the scope of Lovett's lyrics — deadpan country ("God Will," "I Married Her Just Because She Looks Like You,") that might be parody and might not; talking big-band blues ("Here I Am"); sardonic swing numbers ("An Acceptable Level of Ecstasy"); Raffi-with-a-brain whimsy ("If I Had a Boat"); dark short-story vignettes ("Pontiac," "L.A. County"); ballads that were tender without being maudlin ("Nobody Knows Me"). But what kept my attention were his music and his voice. Both are spare, nonexperimental, and — owing to Lovett's Texas upbringing — eminently American. You can quibble, as some critics have, that Lovett is a facile storyteller whose music isn't really country and isn't really jazz or blues and who's too skinny and too white to sing gospel. But in my book these aren't complaints — they're compliments.

The evening begins with the full band onstage. After his heartfelt rendition of Tammy Wynette's "Stand by Your Man," Lovett wanders offstage and lets the band members showcase themselves as they swing through a long jam. When he comes back, Lovett looks out on the audience in his cockeyed way and elicits a yell with: "Hello, I'm the guy who sits next to you and reads the newspaper over your shoulder." It's the opening line of "Here I Am," which becomes an audience participation song on the final verse: " … I realize there are things you say and do you can never take back," Lovett intones. "But what would you be if you didn't even try? You have to try. So after a lot of thought, I'd like to reconsider. Please, if it's not too late, make it a…." The house lights come up and 1000 people yell, "Cheeseburger!"

Dressed in a crumpled black linen suit and red-and-black striped tie, his famous hair piled up in front like an afterthought, Lyle Lovett flatpicks his way adeptly through the first set. Dressed in trim dark suits (except for singer Francine Reed, who wears gold lamé), the Large Band looks more like The FBI Musical Revue. But they can play. Lord, they can play. After a rousing first set that includes "I've Been to Memphis," "An Acceptable Level of Ecstasy," and "She's No Lady," the horns and singers leave the stage and Lovett's guitar — inaudible in the big arrangements of the full ensemble — comes to the fore.

"I'm a huge fan of Roy Rogers and Dale Evans," Lovett says in introducing "If I Had a Boat." "I wrote this song a very long time ago, and it never occurred to me that there was any possibility they would ever, ever hear it." He launches into the song, whose second verse goes:

These and the lyrics from other songs ("She's no lady, she's my wife," "She was ugly from the front," "You can have my girl but don't touch my hat") have been interpreted by some as anti-female.

"The first time I saw the word 'misogynist' in a review — after I looked it up, I laughed. I thought, 'Holy smoke, I don't believe this,'" Lovett told L.A. Times critic Robert Hilburn last month. "If anything, I am really just trying to be funny." Lovett can't resist it; last year he mentioned to Rolling Stone that he was thinking of "taking some time off from the music thing and opening a chain of misogyny parlors." Tongue planted firmly in cheek, Lovett is an antidote to this unfunny, out-of-kilter decade of deadly sensitivity.

The essence of his songwriting, though, lies in the timeless images he invokes again and again: the deep blue sea, the red rose, the sun that burns on the sand, the stars that look like diamonds in the sky. In less skillful hands such images would be hackneyed. In Lovett's songs they take on archetypal resonance, like folk tales and lullabies about lost love and the heart's yearning.

The acoustic set includes "Which Way Does That Old Pony Run," "This Old Porch," and the slinky "Good Intentions." A little past its halfway point, the concert turns on a single song: "You Can't Resist It," a rock-based number from Lovett's eponymous 1986 debut album. Up to this point the arrangements have been faithful to the albums, but "You Can't Resist It" starts out as a toned-down acoustic shuffle. At the bridge, drummer Dan Tomlinson breaks into a bare-handed solo, slowly increasing in tempo; suddenly he's using drumsticks and egging the crowd into applause. Then it's guitarist Pete Snell's turn. He meanders through an open-tuned acoustic solo that turns darker and more intense by the measure. He's really flying now — Michael Hedges minus the guitar abuse.

Then cellist John Hagen takes over. (Lovett is the first major artist I've seen since Harry Chapin who includes a cello in his band.) Hagen starts bouncing his bow on the strings. Then the bowing becomes longer and the staccato rhythms turn ominous. It suddenly occurs to me that the band started down the main street of a catchy if innocuous song; the sun was shining and the coast was clear. But Tomlinson sidetracked the stroll, and Snell detoured into a side street where shadows lengthened. Now Hagen has completely shanghaied the song into a darkened alley where all hell is breaking loose. It isn't virtuosity for the sake of mere showmanship (though the crowd is spellbound). The cello begins caterwauling. Beads of sweat from Hagen's brow dart through the spotlight. The bow against the strings gives off resin clouds like a locomotive puffing steam. The brawling is getting worse. There's another explosion of bass-string staccato, mimicking someone falling down stairs. The cello shrieks — I think someone actually gets killed — then slowly, slowly, slowly moves back to where the original song is a faint echo.

Snell's guitar edges back in, and suddenly the cello is back on a recognizable counterpoint to the melody. The crowd is nuts. The singers and horns stroll back onto the darkened stage and take their places. Lovett moves center stage. The lights come back up and the band starts the refrain of the song. With the entire 15-piece ensemble joining in the lightweight pop song becomes a powerful, gospel-tinged affirmation of a career and possibly a life: "You can't resist it when it happens toyou."

If Lovett's stuttering, painfully shy stage persona is an act, it's a damn good one. But he obviously takes great pleasure in the abilities of his band members. He looks around, makes eye contact with them, smiles. The smile on his long, chiseled face can more accurately be described as a grimace — he looks like he just hit himself on the thumb with a hammer. Backlit by the stage lights, Lovett's pompadour, toned down in size from the '80s, surrounds his head in a light-brown nimbus.

Even without going into Lovett's upbringing as a churchgoing only child, it's not hard to get a sense of where he comes from from this little nugget in the July 1992 M magazine: "The hair thing went from being unconscious, from being unkempt, actually, and then it started to become, like, a thing.... My mom would always say, 'You know, maybe you should get a haircut.' I'd say, 'But Mom, people seem to like my hair.' And she would say, 'You know, a lot of times people compliment you when they don't know what else to say.'"

The concert stays on a high with Francine Reed's hair-raising rendition of "Wild Women Never Get the Blues" and a faithful version of Lovett's gospel opus "Church." At one point some idiot calls out, "Where's Julia?" Lovett wisely ignores him. Through the great misfortune of true love, Lovett has — literally overnight — become a cultural icon: the frog who marries the beautiful princess. ("Country Music's Ugliest Singer," the National Enquirer called him in a headline about his marriage.) For the millions of vacuum-headed American moviegoers asking the question, "How in the world could she marry him?" there is a substantially smaller but smarter number of music fans asking, "How could he marry her?" The real question, however, is, Who cares? To imagine that we can glean a single iota of real insight — especially through the American media — into the private lives of public figures is stupid. Wish them well and leave them alone.

For an encore Lovett sings two ballads from his latest album, Joshua Judges Ruth: "She's Already Made Up Her Mind" and the gorgeous "North Dakota." The people who rush the stage at the end of the concert stand transfixed by Lovett's clean guitar playing and soulful delivery. After giving the crowd what they want with the stomp-along closer "She's Hot to Go," Lyle Lovett and His Large Band finally file off the stage out of sight for good. You get the idea, all things being equal, that's where he really prefers to be. ■

JULIO IGLESIAS

In writing about a figure as massively popular, as truly global as Julio Iglesias, it may seem inappropriate to fold in things personal and anecdotal. So I won't. This time. Because the Spanish singer remains relatively underappreciated (or at least underevaluated) in this country, shouldn't a scribe be more concerned with dutifully bombarding his readers with the essential, impressive facts?

After all, here is a guy who made the Guinness Book of Records for multi-lingual album sales some years ago and continues to wipe the world stage with all competition, closing in on a study 175 million units shifted. Now pushing 50, the super-suave Spaniard has been at it since 1968, after winning a song festival with "La vida sigue igual" and watching it, as his first single, top the charts in his home country within two weeks. He has since steamed up audiences worldwide with his romantic if schmaltzy balladeering, playing to kings and queens, presidents and prime ministers, and, yes, sold-out soccer stadiums full of workaday women flinging their moistened undergarments at him. Iglesias has recorded in myriad languages (currently laboring on his fourth English long play), and his latest ('92's Calor, a sort of relaxed Spanish-language-world survey in song) makes number 67 overall. Yet for all this, what is the J-man (er, J-hombre, -homme, -uómo, etc.) primarily known for stateside? Oh yeah, he's the stiff who held up the Latin-lover end of the sh)tick in his 1984 duet with Willie Nelson, "To All the Girls I've Loved Before."

That he was, but also realize that this ig-ster has been the singing Latin lover supreme for successive generations, the model for younger heartthrobs like Luis Miguel (who packed our Sports Arena two months ago). And though the potential appeal of Julio's warm, slippery-soft phrasing cuts across language lines, a grasp of Spanish culture helps in understanding his special status. Hailing from la madre patria, Iglesias effortlessly operates as the smooth Continental, a confident Eurnman who transcends the Hispanic world while still being a proud part of it. Being from Madrid, he speaks and sings in crisp Castilian Spanish, the native "royal accent" so often mischaracterized as a lisp. And though castellano is but a regional linguistic variation spoken by the poorest on up, it sounds very classy to the rest of the planet's Spanish-speakers, particularly in the context Iglesias uses it in. Back in Madrid, natch, Julio is the home-town-boy-made-good, a success story heightened by Iglesias overcoming paraplegia in the wake of a car crack-up that ended his promising career playing soccer for the city's beloved Real Madrid.

Personally, look, let me just say I prefer Nat King Cole's singing in phonetic Spanish to Iglesias's crooning in tongues native and otherwise, but how fair is that? Cole shuts 'em all down in the romantic ballad arena, and besides, he's long gone. The (always well tanned) flesh-and-blood wonder that is Julio, however, hits town this Sunday.

JULIO IGLESIAS, Embarcadero Marina Park South, Sunday, August 15, 7:30 pm, 278-TIXS. $30.00, $35.00, and $51.50.

ON NOTE

By Stephen Esmedina

TERENCE BLANCHARD QUINTET

The retroactive enshrining — in the wake of the Marsalis regime — of the New Orleans jazz "tradition" appears to be settling down to a state in which the lesser-known squadrons can compile credits unrelated to their hyped Crescent City origins. Trumpeter Terence Blanchard, despite having replaced Prince Wynton in the Jazz Messengers during his NYC internship, has become an impressive soloist/composer/arranger on his own. His music for Spike Lee's Afro-centric melodramas gave those pixilated movies what little subtlety they possess. His extended recasting of the Malcolm X score, while not on the level of the vaunted Anthony Davis opera X, is a provocative example of his ambitious but cautious bravura.

Like many of his contemporaries, Blanchard venerates entrenched innovations of dead masters. But his is not a rigid, evangelical preoccupation; his writing has an open ambience, allowing an elasticity that favors consolidation, not concession. His tone is pure and his idiomatic base is not far adrift from the consonant shifts of the early '60s, demarcating the bands of Davis, Coleman, Blakey, and the Young Lions. Blanchard has versatility, swing, and wit. His recent work also shows an expanding scope and virtuosity that are, gratefully, not pell-mell or smarmy (a charge I level at Marsalis's trumped-up Citi Movement. Stanley "Mr. Objectivist" Crouch's annotated fellating notwithstanding). Blanchard's grace substantiates his lyrical, more liberal arcs.

His excellent quintet, which includes tenor saxist Sam Newsome, pianist Bruce Barth, bassist Tarus Mateen, and drummer Troy Davis, will be at the Horton Grand tonight through Saturday. TERENCE BLANCHARD QUINTET, Horton Grand Hotel, Thursday through Saturday, August 12 through 14, 8:30 pm and 10:15 pm, 544-1886. $10.00, $12.00.

OF NOTE

By Gina Arnold

GENITORTURERS

Last spring I was subjected to the experience of observing Florida's redoubtable Genitorturers perform at a rave warehouse in Austin, Texas. At this show, the band sawed its songs off its long-suffering guitars, while a blonde singer clad in dominatrix wear commenced a tuneless bellowing and hissing. The noise was visually augmented by what seems to be the Genitorturers' raison d'être, a series of immorality plays enacted behind them, in which hooded Geni-minions truss up a female sex slave, beat her, rape her, attack her with a blowtorch, give her an enema and make her drink the results, and so on and so forth throughout the tedious set. The whole time the band was playing, a number of male rock critics who'd just attended a panel on sexism kept coming up to me and my girrrl friends and saying smugly, "Oooh, isn't this sexist. Oooh, isn't this misogynistic. Ooooh, I bet this is just bugging the shit out of you guys!"

Which just shows how deeply they misunderstood both the panel and the band in question. The Genitorturers aren't sexist — they're just really, really bad: too aesthetically pathetic to be able to make any political point whatsoever — except, unwittingly, one about the exploitative nature of the music business, which forces bad bands to think up stunts like these in order to gain attention. Incidentally, the Genitorturers' other big gimmick is that they supposedly do live genitalia piercings onstage, during their shows. Oddly, at the show I saw, no one volunteered for this, but perhaps San Diego will be luckier.

Meanwhile, the record company that bought all this bullshit (I.R.S.) is spreading a story that the singer, Gen, is actually a med student in Orlando whose day job involved culling organs from dead bodies. Any trained reporter could pierce a quick hole in this story with a few quick calls to Florida, but no trained reporter ever will, simply because the Genitorturers are so very, very unimportant. Who even cares? To ream the Genitorturers, as they "ream" their co-working sex slave, would be just as phony an exercise, since it's impossible to work up any anger at their desperate lameness. It would also be too easy, like taking candy from a baby.

The Genitorturers, along with Sacred Reich, open for Danzig Sunday evening at the Starlight Bowl in Balboa Park.

GENITORTURERS, Starlight Bowl, Sunday, August 15, 7:30 pm, 278-TIXS. $14.50 and $18.50.

ROVING EYE MUSIC REPORTS: Stik – Getting ready for this show was such an immense thing. I wondered whether it'd be worth it. Issues needed to be acquired – April apologies pending with her sister. Dry run, 60 lbs of it. Jessi Sinatra tore up the road giving for the wrong address on 30th; I gave him the correct one in Mira Mesa – sweat pouring down, gas can in hand and a certified speeding ticket he conquered all and arrived a success. Too bad it read a phone call to Mark Townsend – our amp that blew out last week wasn't going to be ready so happily the camper provided; then a call from Stretter, there hey, machine broke – called College Manage, can borrow yes, let Fritz and Hans in exchange; sure. Little did I know that meant the whole band, their girlfriends and their drivers as well. Band organized by Fritz, Hans, and Jessi, and I'm glad it was. Jessi and I previewed Jessi's new promo comics. I think Jessi got something cookin' on. The phone ringing off the wall, as bad as I answered it, next one over are those shit tickets left, sure, when we sell out, there's always room for one more. I hurry home, shower with a friend, it's cheaper and rush back all the advance tickets gone, phone still not hot. I knew I was going to get paid this month, on time too! Part II next week – till then – Thanks Alot!

the WHEREHOUSE

Your Used CD's Add Up To Great New Music!

Are your old CD's multiplying out of control? Here's how to make 'em add up to the best new entertainment around.

Now your used CD's can bring you from $1 to $6 credit per title on anything you purchase at The Wherehouse. Trade them toward new music, movies, video games and more. Or get up to $3.60 in cash on selected titles.

We want your used CD's, and we buy anything! We'll even give you at least one buck for any CD you bring us undamaged and in its original jewel box. Any CD!

So let your CD's gather more than just dust. Call 1-800-825-2000 for participating store locations. At The Wherehouse, we know just how you feel about saving money!

The Wherehouse wants your used CD's! All CD's must be full-length (no CD singles) and in original packaging. No promotional packaging. In addition, we cannot purchase or give credit for more than one of each CD title per customer. A state driver's license or state I.D. is required from each person selling CD's. See stores for complete details.

DUNCAN SHEPHERD

The Secret Garden

The Secret Garden, a warm-up of the Frances Hodgson Burnett chestnut, is a good children's movie. To split hairs: a good movie for children and also a movie good for children. A good movie, I mean, that additionally and incidentally happens to be a good one for young ones. (Well, I know what I mean.) Good for them in the sense that it is a good introduction to concepts of the inner world and the outer world, living and dying, growth and stuntedness, courage and surrender — besides a good introduction to the artistic presentation and development of these concepts: why shouldn't children's movies be as good artistically as anyone else's? And because it's a good movie — actually a very good one — it is also a good refresher for the adult: a return to mythic basics.

The somewhat underplotted story, should you need reminding, tells of how an orphan girl comes to live with her widowed uncle at Misselthwaite, a gloomy monstrosity on the moors, with secret passageways, locked doors, a key-jangling housekeeper (Maggie Smith, comfortably in her element), unidentified wails and moans (dogs? the wind?), all the trappings of a Gothic novel — and of how the girl brings the place back to life: "The house seemed dead, like a spell had been cast upon it." The girl herself (ten-year-old Kate Maberly) is sullen and snooty ("What a queer unresponsive little thing"), nothing at all like the Julie Andrews nannies who performed similar resuscitative services in Mary Poppins and The Sound of Music. Any cheeriness is the sole responsibility of the assistant housekeeper (charmingly played by Laura Crossley), whose temperament in the face of sullenness and snootiness approaches the qualifications for sainthood. What draws us to the heroine, nonetheless, and to the pasty-faced bedridden cousin to whom she promptly traces those wails and moans, is the enveloping subjectivity through which the story is filtered. With the preludial earthquake in India, viewed entirely from the heroine's vantage beneath the bed, we know we're in the hands of an authoritative moviemaker, not a mere special-effects supervisor, and we soon suspect we're in the hands of an enchanter: the first sight of Misselthwaite in the misty distance, the cavernous corridors and stairwells, the Chinese-boxlike gardens — a new world beckoning for exploration.

Agnieszka Holland, of Europa Europa and Olivier Olivier, might seem an odd candidate to direct a piece of sentimental Edwardiana, but she is for once free to indulge her eye for detail without having also to indulge her eye for irony, and she has made everything here magnificently physical, palpable, solid — she, and her cameraman Roger Deakins, and her production designer Stuart Craig, together concocting a rousing apologia for studio filmmaking. At bottom the movie is little more than an Illustrated Classic, but what illustrations! The Caspar David Friedrich bleakness of the estate in winter. The Pre-Raphaelite lushness of the garden. The deliberately too-fast pan that transforms the blossoms into an Impressionist blur. The prelapsarian image of perfect, Franciscan harmony between man and animal. The Secret Garden, opening Friday, is for anyone who came away from the recent re-release of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs muttering that they don't make them like that anymore. It isn't a matter of visual medium; it's a matter of vision.

The nicest thing about the new version of The Fugitive — modelled of course on the 1963-67 television series of that name, not the 1947 fallen-priest film by John Ford — is that it permits the critic to drift out of his jurisdiction and pay tribute to the original: existentialism for the masses; Swanson Frozen Kafka; a latter-day Odyssey (or: The Longest Distance Between Two Points). And David Janssen, an actor of the narrowest range, had in Dr. Richard Kimble, innocent man on the lam, a once-in-a-lifetime role right up his alley: tucked chin, corner-of-the-mouth twitch, bright-light-in-the-eyes gaze, swallowed syllables, hair dye, and all. It must be said in fairness that the current movie is a completely separate work of completely separate purpose, a straight-ahead chase film without pit stops, in which the title character, rather than roaming aimlessly from place to place with dim hope of running into the phantasmic One-Armed Man, simply dodges the cops for the short time needed to do the detective work they should have done in the first place. It's not a vocation.

Lt. Gerard, now Deputy Gerard of the U.S. Federal Marshals, doesn't come on the scene until after Kimble's escape en route to the electric chair — after, that is, some twenty minutes of plodding preamble taking us through the night of Mrs. Kimble's murder, the third degree, the trial. (Just the opening credits, including hiatus, take fifteen minutes.) In other words, Gerard has no reason for obsession aside from his admirable dedication to the job. A second fugitive from the same prison bus as Kimble, but going his separate way, gives the lawman a chance to gain our respect, even our awe: "I don't bargain."

Harrison Ford, though remaining at the shallow end of the pool and never nearing the depths of excruciation of Janssen, is a sympathetic hero, and Tommy Lee Jones's Gerard is only a little less sympathetic as only a little less of a hero, and Andreas Katsulas gives an interesting face to the One-Armed Man, clouded with anxiety as well as menace. (There turns out to be a second villain, too, in fact a whole corporate conspiracy — a touch of triteness passed off as something original and fresh and reinvigorating.) And the thing overall is lively, diverting, superficial, forgettable. Andrew Davis, for whom this constitutes a step up from the society of Chuck Norris and Steven Seagal, is not really much of a director. Whenever he must take the reins from the stunt co-ordinators and the special-effects boys, he demonstrates a serious lack of the action director's mandatory spatial sense. In the climactic three-man game of hide-and-seek, the cutting between equidistant camera set-ups keeps creating the illusion that the stalkers are continually catching sight of or actually bumping into each other.

I had hoped after Parents — after, I should say, the premature passage of it into video heaven — that actor-turned-director Bob Balaban would get another opportunity behind the camera. In every way but financial, he earned it. I might have hoped, however, that it would be a better opportunity than that of My Boyfriend's Back (still titled Johnny Zombie as recently as the Los Angeles Times's summer movie preview in May). One doesn't expect a project nurtured within the Disney family — the Touchstone branch — to be fertile soil for themes of necrophilia and cannibalism. Nor does one expect to hear the adolescent heroine therein address the camera in such double-meaning terms as "Don't you want to eat me?" — not even in a dream scene. The cheering section for subversives, if anyone can be found sitting in it, will begin to take an active interest.

But it is a tough assignment for Balaban to pursue his established predilection for dark humor, always a minority taste, and at the same time to broaden his audience to acceptable commercial dimensions. (Pursuing his predilection for the dollhouse décor of suburbia is less of a hindrance, and although he doesn't pursue it to the extremes of Parents, he goes a good long way with it.) The vehicle for this assignment is a teen romance about a timid young suitor who finally gets the attention of his object of desire by stepping between her and a convenience-store bandit and absorbing a chestful of bullets. The night of his interment, he crawls out of the grave, looking a little peaky, in fact a lot peaky, but still intent on asking the girl to the prom.

Much of the humor of the situation derives from the smooth adjustment of the neighbors to the presence of a zombie in their midst: "I think it's really great that you're back from the dead and all, but I've got gym." The dialogue regularly attains a lilt of absurdity ("Are you mad because I tried to take a bite out of Eddie?" "There's a lot of prejudice against the undead." "Good girls don't go out with dead guys," etc.) that survives the overbearing readings of a majority of the actors. The guileless Andrew Lowery and Traci Lind, as the high-school sweethearts, come off better than such comic "veterans" as Paul Dooley, Bob Dishy, Cloris Leachman, Austin Pendleton, Edward Herrmann, and Mary Beth Hurt, the last of whom came off better herself in Balaban's Parents. The nonveteran Philip Hoffman, who made so strong an impression as the spineless preppie of Scent of a Woman, also makes a strong impression here as a hallway bully.

The humor gets very dark indeed around the problem of physical decay (the finger inserted into a bullet wound and inquisitively wiggled around, or the ear that comes off in the mouth of a nibbling girlfriend), and still a shade darker around the proposed solution to the problem: snacking on human flesh. The party-line surrealist might at some point, or at several, find his lips forming the fond expression l'amour fou — the love that overcomes barriers not just of proper etiquette but of the laws of nature. In that light, the afterlife tribunal that, at the end, literally undoes everything that has happened in the movie is a bitter disappointment, a hat-in-hand retraction of all previous outrages. If the trouble with Parents was that it went too far (cannibalism again), the trouble with this one is that it backtracks too far. There is no reason yet to abandon hope for Balaban. ■

The cheering section for subversives will begin to take an active interest.

Another Stakeout

ceding year's Beauty and the Beast ("Riffraff! Street rat! I don't buy that!/ If only they'd look closer . . ."), and the action in general seems overaccelerated and underappreciated — more like the work of that Disney defector, Don Bluth, than of Disney itself. (The anthropomorphized Magic Carpet is nice, as is the Cave of Wonders with its leonine mouth. But not nice are the computer-animated backdrops that stand out from the principal characters like sore thumbs.) And while the Genie of the Lamp — a genial Bluto with blue pigmentation — affords infinite possibilities for the sorts of transmutations at which animation is unrivalled (see the early Betty Boops), these tend to be executed in a presto-change-o, blink-of-an-eye style rather than a liquidy-smooth one. It has been posited that this style matches exactly the verbal style of Robin Williams, who provides the Genie's voice. But, apart from the objection that a voice as familiar as Robin Williams's will inevitably overpower and upstage an animated figure (just as Gilbert Gottfried's overpowers and upstages the pet parrot called Iago), why would we want our Ancient Arab to be doing impressions of the likes of Jack Nicholson, Rodney Dangerfield, Arsenio Hall, Ed Sullivan, Groucho Marx, and William F. Buckley? This ensures only that the movie will date much faster than those we might agree to call the "timeless classics" in the Disney library. Directed by John Musker and Ron Clements. 1992. ★ (VINEYARD TWIN; VOGUE, MATINEES)

Altered States — The traditional mad scientist dressed up in new clothes, or rather, divested of his clothes and floating naked in an isolation tank. That's just for starters. It's quite nice the way the metaphysical odyssey of this so-called "Faust freak" keeps expanding into new territory, moving through a Dr. Leary psychedelic phase to a Dr. Jekyll metamorphic phase (clever use of a video screen, at one point, to effect the transformation), and well beyond that, to terra incognita and very much infirma. And it is unchar.acteristically courteous of Ken Russell to confine his most convulsive stylistics to hallucinatory moments, rather like occasional epileptic fits, and to leave the rest of the movie and the rest of the world in relative peace. The original script by Paddy Chayefsky almost certainly intended more humor than comes through here, and the heaviness of Russell's touch, as well as his disregard for the spoken word, must have had a lot to do with Chayefsky's decision to remove his name from the project. The humanistic, sentimental, and unexpectedly affecting finale may indicate a final triumph for Chayefsky, or at least a touching of a previously dead Russell nerve. With William Hurt and Blair Brown. 1980.
★★ (GARDEN CABARET, 8/18 AND 19, 8:30 P.M.)

Amongst Friends — Rob Weiss's directorial debut, about upper-middle-class kids getting into lives of crime.
(HILLCREST CINEMAS, FROM 8/13)

Another Stakeout — The sequel to Stakeout goes the way of the Lethal Weapon series: into escalating silliness. (Even the title, copied from Another 48 Hrs., is not a novel way for a sequel to go.) Enlisting stand-up comedian Rosie O'Donnell and her audible gasp makes the intentions perfectly clear. The most actual amusement, however, come: from the intermittent glimpses of Madeleine Stowe, the romantic interest of the first film, as Richard Dreyfuss's now estranged girlfriend. The original director and writer, John Badham and Jim Kouf, are back too. With Emilio Estevez, Cathy Moriarty, Miguel Ferrer. 1993.
● (CARMEL MOUNTAIN; CINERAMA 6, FROM 8/13; FASHION VALLEY; NICK. ELODEON 10; SAN MARCOS CINEMAS; SPORTS ARENA 6; TOWN AND COUNTRY; WIEGAND PLAZA)

Barton Fink — The Coen brothers (director Joel, producer Ethan, writers both) cut right to the heart of the role of the artist in Hollywood. They are too much artists themselves, however, to abide any idealizing or universalizing of their proxy on screen: a Broadway Bolshevik (modelled roughly and rudely on Clifford Odets) whose hot new dramaturgical ode to fishmongers has made him the toast of the town and has won him an invitation to Hollywood and a chance to broaden the spread of the gospel. There are also, less prominently, a drunken Faulknerian figure and a studio mogul a la Harry Cohn, Jack Warner, Louis B. Mayer, take your pick.

This combustible blend of the historical and the mythical Hollywood — the specified year is 1941 — yields a movie that does not just fill up a screen for ninety minutes to two hours, but one that helps to fill up a void (coming within hollering distance, possibly, of Preston Sturges's Sullivan's Travels, whose year of release — coincidentally or not — was 1941); one that adds something fundamental and durable to the cinematic stockroom; one that creates something that you can imagine someone wanting to look at fifty years hence. The formal layout of the movie rests on a pattern of repetitions and resemblances, of equivalences and variations, of echoes and distortions, that gives the thing a Byzantine elegance. (Besides imparting any structural elegance, the pattern also mirrors the title character's declining mental state: establishing connections, finding significances, noticing similarities, etc., with a literally lunatic obsessiveness.) The décласsé Hotel Earle, where the writer has plunked down his typewriter, has a Byzantine elegance all its own. And the minutely observant, tirelessly investigative photography of the place — the endless corridor, the sag of the mattress under the weight of a suitcase, the arc of peeling paint on the ceiling over the bed, the colorless wallpaper glue melting in an autumn heatwave — creates a piece of architecture as alive and characterful as the apartment in Repulsion. John Turturro, John Goodman, John Mahoney, Judy Davis, Michael Lerner. 1991.
★★★★ (KEN, 8/12)

Cliffhanger — The ten-minute prologue, of the Rocky Mountain Rescue team in action, should drench the palms of the mildest acrophobe. From there, it's pretty much downhill (so to speak), despite a plane crash, three scattered valises containing $30 million each, and a gang of bad guys who keep trying to outdo one another in badness. (John Lithgow is so bad he must speak in a foreign accent: "Kill a few people, they call you a murderer. Kill a million, they call you a conqueror. Go figure!") Some of the trick work is enjoyable (process shots, miniatures), and Sylvester Stallone is photographed often in his favorite pastime of sprinting in slow-motion toward the camera while bombs and guns go off behind him. He also does a lot of chin-ups on sheer rock. And once he does a clean-and-jerk of one of the bad guys for the purpose of impaling him on a stalactite. Neat-o. In accompaniment, Trevor Jones has changed just a few notes (for the worse) from his rousing Last of the Mohicans score. With Janine Turner and Michael Rooker; directed by Renny Harlin. 1993.
★ (VINEYARD TWIN)

Comeheads — The family of pointy-headed aliens from Saturday Night Live — a monotonous bunch at a length of a few minutes — is dug up and then run into the ground for ninety. (Well, it sure beats having to think up a new idea.) The replacement of Laraine Newman with Michelle Burke as the daughter is the extent of the excitement. That, and a return trip to the home planet, where Newman makes a token appearance amid a splash of special effects. With Dan Aykroyd, Jane Curtin, Michael McKean, and a host of TV comedians, mostly from SNL, in bit-parts and cameos; directed by Steve Barron. 1993.
● (CLAIREMONT; UA CHULA VISTA 6)

Dave — A recasting of The Prisoner of Zenda or The Prince and the Pauper or State Secret (or others) as a post-Perot piece of sentimental populism about a Presidential look-alike who's installed in the Oval Office by Machiavellian wire-pullers when the real President is laid low by a stroke. (Overreaction with the office secretary: ha-ha.) Being a decent sort, the imposter does more good than any recent five or six Presidents put together: all it takes to solve America's problems is a head screwed on straight and a willingness to roll up the sleeves and burn the midnight oil (one night only). Director Ivan Reitman and scriptwriter Gary Ross are selective satirists: bristly about politicians (several actual ones from both major parties appear in cameos, to show what good sports they are and perhaps to exempt themselves from implication) but softsoapy about the common man. In other words, not really satirists at all. In fact, more like politicians. And let's leave Frank Capra out of it: Capra saw the good business sense of flattering the commoner, but he had his limits and he held onto his self-respect. Still, the movie is intermittently amusing, with plenty of automatic-pilot proficiency on both sides of the camera. Among the more tangible displays are those of Kevin Kline, Sigourney Weaver, Frank Langella, Charles Grodin, and, most ingratiatingly, the deadpan Ving Rhames as the Presidential bodyguard. 1993.
★ (CLAIREMONT; GUILD; NICKELODEON 10; FROM 8/13)

Dead Alive — Cheapo zombie comedy from New Zealand, in vigorously, aggressively bad taste. (That was the proud title of director Peter Jackson's first film: Bad Taste.) There are several laughs (the kung-fu clergyman: "I kick ass for the Lord!"), but nothing to compete with the quantities of blood, pus, severed limbs, entrails, etc. It is finally neither as amusing nor shocking as simply exhausting. Timothy Balme, Diana Peñalver, Elizabeth Moody. 1992.
★ (KEN, 8/13 MIDNIGHT)

Dennis the Menace — Demoted from prototype to copycat, the classic comic strip comes to the screen in the dust of Problem Child and (thanks to a robber on the prowl) Home Alone. The small-town setting, however, apart from the automobiles, seems to belong to an earlier day: no skateboard! no Nintendo! Director Nick Castle reveals a well-developed sense of humor in his camera placements; and Walter Matthau, as the beleaguered Mr. Wilson, ably demonstrates the art of the slow burn. Written and co-produced by John Hughes; with Mason Gamble, Lea Thompson, Joan Plowright, Christopher Lloyd. 1993.
★ (UA CHULA VISTA 6)

A Far-Off Place — Junior-teen high adventure about an African-born white girl, tenderfoot tourist boy, and young Bushman fleeing from poachers across the barren Kalahari ("Wind can do it, we can do it"). Walkabout it isn't. Director Mikael Salomon, like Nicolas Roeg a proven cinematographer, finds lots of pretty landscapes and tangerine skies, not much narrative interest. Reese Witherspoon, from The Man in the Moon, is very appealing without any help. And very cute in her sleeveless scoop-neck animal skin, too. Ethan Randall, Maximilian Schell, Jack Thompson. 1993.
● (VOGUE, MATINEES)

The Firm — Sydney Pollack, back in the paranoia racket of Three Days of the Condor, of mysterious many-tentacled forces and vast invisible conspiracies, offers an au courant variation on the myth of the yuppie dream gone bad. And in this case, as in so many others, made right again by yuppie gumption. Overlong, at around two and a half hours, and rather grimly driven through the many pages of the John Grisham potboiler, the movie does well simply to make the plot convolutions comprehensible. It does not go the extra mile, or extra parsec, and also make them cinematic: there's a great deal to do with invoices, computers, photocopiers, fax machines, and other assorted white-collar dragons and broadswords. A rare exception is the extreme long shot of the almost-albino hitman (not the ideal candidate for the job: easy to describe, easy to identify) chasing down a monorail car on foot across the bridge beneath which it's suspended. The chase goes on and on, but the pot barely reaches a simmer. Tom Cruise, Jeanne Tripplehorn, Gene Hackman, Holly Hunter, Gary Busey, Ed Harris. 1993.

Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare — An epigraph from Friedrich Nietzsche, a time-jump of ten years into the future, a heavy-metal song track, a cameo by Roseanne Barr (and hubby), an allusion to Twin Peaks, a psychedelic video-game sequence, a promised (for those who can hang on that long) climactic 3-D sequence, an overall contemptuous jokiness, an ungripping if not ungraspable storyline. In sum, a mess. With Lisa Zane, Yaphet Kotto, and Robert Englund (as the resilient Freddy Krueger); directed by Rachel Talalay. 1991.
● (CASINO, FROM 8/13)

Free Willy — Effective sentimental piece, and anti-advertisement for aquatic theme parks, about the bond between a troublesome foster child (despite super-cool foster parents) and a captive killer whale. The dialogue is often disarmingly simple-minded ("You saved my life," the towhead says to his 7000-pound pal, after spitting up water and regaining consciousness at the edge of the pool), and the photography, although overreliant on slow-motion, is clear and bright. And Willy (portrayed by Keiko) is not dishonored by a surrounding movie that can stand erect alongside such other cinematic whale tales as Moby Dick (the boat that captures Willy is called the Pequod), Orca, Star Trek IV, and the Disney cartoon, The Whale [named Willie, incidentally] Who Wanted to Sing at the Met. With Jason James Richter, Lori Petty, Jayne Atkinson, Michael Madsen, and August Schellenberg; directed by Simon Wincer. 1993.

Hocus Pocus — Three resurrected weird sisters (the rat-toothed Bette Midler, the bimbo-esque Sarah Jessica Parker, the jello-y Kathy Najimy; three broad actresses) chase after three dull youths in present-day Salem. This could have been prevented if only the talking black cat had spoken up before the virgin lit the black-flame candle on Halloween night. Few rules are observed: one minute the 17th-century witches do not know what a bus is, and the next minute they are making like pop stars at the annual country-club bash. The poundingly loud music endeavors to shout down any objections. With Omri Katz, Thora Birch, Vinessa Shaw; directed by Kenny Ortega. 1993.

House of Cards — An over-the-moon ode to Mother Love. A six-year-old girl, having lost her father on a Mayan pyramid, withdraws into her own little world, expressing herself through the plain-as-day symbol of a ceiling-high house of cards. Her mother, the to-hell-with-dieting Kathleen Turner, resists the diagnosis of "classic autistic features" put forth by the oddly cast Tommy Lee Jones, and resolves to "enter" the daughter's world and "bring her out." This entails a reconstruction of the cardhouse on the VDT (with some virtual-reality computer graphics) and then the construction of a water-tower-sized facsimile of it out in back. Not a very practical solution, but a bombastically romantic one. With Asha Menina and Shiloh Strong; written and directed by Michael Lessac. 1993.
★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

Indecent Proposal — The edifying and entertaining spectacle (not in the ways intended) of Hollywood high rollers wrestling with a Moral Question. Here's the question: What if a perfect stranger were to offer a happily married couple a million dollars for one night with the wife? Or to put it another way: Does everything have a price? Or another way: Can happiness be bought? Or another way: Has someone here just fallen off the turnip truck? To preserve the hypothetical purity of the issue and not to cloud it with anything that resembles real life, the couple must be storybook. Namely: Demi Moore, poster girl for Cosmetic Surgery, with airs of snootiness and snottiness sufficiently approximate to Self-Esteem and High Principles; and Woody Harrelson, kinda cute, not in a Rob Lowe or a Ken Doll kinda way, but in a kinda boyish, kinda goodball, kinda nonthreatening and noncompetitive and nonoutshining kinda way. And the issue's purity will be further preserved by the casting of Robert Redford as the indecent proposer. (Wives across America are expected to start silently calculating what they would accept to bed down with Robert Redford: a thousand? a C-note? no charge?) Indirectly and without half-trying, the movie enacts to a fare-thee-well the Hollywood mind-muddle. Sex (read "passing pleasure," read "commercial block-buster") may be "just sex," but it can all the same be "good sex" (i.e., make money). The True Love (read "work of art") of a couple of Ordinary Average Common Little People is all well and good as long as the Little People are portrayed by bankable superstars and are swathed in trendy photography and a high-concept plot (i.e., make money again). Money no doubt can't buy everything, but it can at least buy Demi Moore, Woody Harrelson, and Robert Redford, together with the rest of the production values or "assets" or "investments" that guarantee a good return on the dollar (i.e., make more money). The proper question is not:

Why would Robert Redford, for example — Redford above all others — Redford the de Medici of American independent filmmaking — waste his time on such a project? The question is: For how much would he be willing to waste his time on it? Directed by Adrian Lyne. 1993.
★ (CLAIREMONT; STAR)

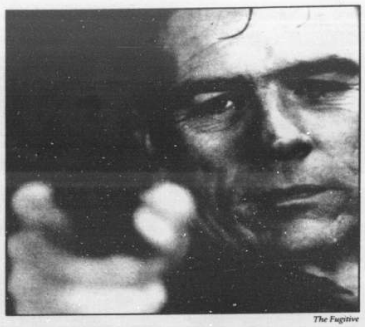

In the Line of Fire — The prospect of watching Clint Eastwood being annoyed, exasperated, disgusted by John Malkovich for an entire movie, and then foreseeably dusting him off at the end of it, certainly sounds like a reasonable evening's entertainment. You won't be much let down. Eastwood plays a Secret Service agent — an acknowledged "dinosaur" and "borderline burnout," just in case you were wondering about mandatory retirement — and Malkovich is an ex-CIA guy who, for conveniently vague, fill-in-the-blank reasons, is plotting to assassinate the President. The latter is likewise a blank — no personality, no political party, no politics — apart from the fact of trailing in the polls and slowly closing the gap in the last weeks of his re-election campaign. Whatever blanks do get filled in are of no real inspiration or interest: a gratuitous hors d'oeuvre of violence at the outset, a handful of bonus murders to fend off audience boredom prior to the climax, a couple of fruitless chases, some facile and easy-to-follow detective work, a disposable sidekick, a female character who is good for some battle-of-the-sexes banter but no full-blown romance. The whole thing, directed undawdlingly by Wolfgang Petersen, is preposterously funneled down into a one-on-one cat-and-mouse game, featuring a very weakly motivated mouse. Without Eastwood in the part of the cat, it would be nothing. With him, it has substance, it has style, it has stature. Not a lot, but as much as a leading man can supply on his own. Rene Russo, Dylan McDermott. 1993.

Jurassic Park — Spielberg. Dinosaurs. What more need be said? You get what you expect. Or in blurb-ese: "It delivers the goods." But it nowhere exceeds or confounds expectations. The premise, from the Michael Crichton novel, is essentially that of Crichton's Westworld with dinosaurs in lieu of robots: amusement park gone haywire. And the kind of sensation peddled in it, like the kind in the same director's Jaws, is the rudimentary fear of sharp objects. Or more accurately, graphically, and literal-mindedly, fear of being punctured, severed, minced by same: My, what big teeth you have, Grandma! (Fear of blunt objects, or fear of being swiped, stomped, scrunched by same, hardly enters into it.) It is a sensation long on bodily discomfort, short on wonder — a questionable balance in a movie that bridges the sixty-five-million-year gap between man and dinosaur. With Sam Neill, Laura Dern, Jeff Goldblum, and Richard Attenborough. 1993.

Like Water for Chocolate — A feminist yarn of personal oppression and liberation set against a background of large-scale oppression and liberation: the Mexican

The Fugitive

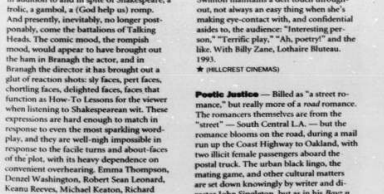

Revolution. (A distant and dim background, most of the time.) The youngest of three daughters, bound by family tradition to stay home and care for her mother till the day one of them dies, has the effrontery to fall in love with a secret suitor, who, when the secret comes out, is matched up instead with the eldest daughter. The youngest can only vent her feelings through her cooking: tears of woe added to the wedding-cake batter to induce mass vomiting at the nuptials; drops of blood in a rose-petal sauce to produce a mass aphrodisiac; and so on. One could talk about the fairy-tale elements of all this, or about the "magic realism" of it, or about "multiculturalism" or Mexifeminism or gastroeroticism or whatever. And of course all the while one could be talking just about the Laura Esquivel novel and never mind the Alfonso Arau movie. In the latter context, none of these avenues of discussion can provide escape from a mushy slippery unmoored image that has a hard time simply holding onto the screen. The careless framing, the soft focus, the peach light, the general pallidness, the telephoto collapsing of space, the blurry foreground objects — all this and more renders the movie all but unwatchable for the discerning eye. With Lumi Cavazos and Marco Leonardi. 1992.
★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS; NICKELODEON 10)

Made in America — Artificial-insemination screw-up: a black high-school girl, breaking into the sperm-bank computer, discovers that her real father is not as requested ("black, smart, not too tall") but is instead a white man (worse, a car salesman modelled on Cal Worthington: cowboy duds, circus animals, everbody's buddy). Richard Benjamin directs with an evenly heavy hand on the comedy, the sentiment, and the gear-grinding shifts between. One sweet (and discreet) touch: a theater marquee in the background of a shot spells out a tribute to his wife: "Paula Prentiss Retrospective." (We might rather be watching that.) And his look-alike son, Ross, is given a tiny role on the television-commercial crew. With Whoopi Goldberg, Ted Danson, Nia Long, and Will Smith. 1993.

Menace II Society — The vicious-cycle view of life in the urban ghetto, in this case Watts. (Aren't there any other views of life in the urban ghetto?) No new wrinkles, but slick photography, and scary violence, and even more scary nihilism behind it. Too much narration, not too much preaching. Directed by The Hughes Brothers, Allen and Albert, twenty-one-year-old twins, and in their first feature film alarmingly sure of themselves. With Tyrin Turner, Jada Pinkett. 1993.

The Meteor Man — Benign alternative to ghetto-violence movies. A pacifistic grade-school teacher in Washington, D.C., is struck by a meteor and invested with supernatural powers: the usual ones, plus the ability to converse with dogs and to absorb the contents of books at a touch. There are some pleasant notions (acrophobic, the caped superhero flies around at an altitude of three feet), and writer-director-star Robert Townsend is himself pleasant, but inspiration — as distinct from inspirationalism — runs low. Marla Gibbs, Robert Guillaume, James Earl Jones, Bill Cosby. 1993.

Much Ado about Nothing — Shakespeare, naturally, and nearly as naturally, Branagh. As always with Shakespeare, even without Branagh, there is a period of adjustment. The opening recital of the "Hey Nonny, Nonny" lyric, with the widely spaced and overarticulated words spelled out on screen in almost a follow-the-bouncing-ball fashion, is meant to make the transition easy, but it's more apt to raise concerns about the envisioned audience: Shakespeare for the groundlings of the Nineties? Shakespeare for schoolchildren only? Shakespeare for the hearing impaired? Very soon thereafter, the thrilling sight of a row of riders charging in slow-motion toward the camera as the credits come up (or thrilling sound of the fanfare composed by Patrick Doyle to accompany it) stirs the vain wish that this could turn out to be a completely different type of movie, a real movie. However, the post-credits parade of undifferentiated bare bottoms reminds us forcefully and soberingly that this is to be, in addition to and in spite of Shakespeare, a frolic, a gambol, a (God help us) romp. And presently, inevitably, no longer postponably, come the battalions of Talking Heads. The comic mood, the rompish mood, would appear to have brought out the ham in Branagh the actor, and in Branagh the director it has brought out a glut of reaction shots: sly faces, pert faces, chortling faces, delighted faces, faces that function as How-To Lessons for the viewer when listening to Shakespearean wit. These expressions are hard enough to match in response to even the most sparkling wordplay, and they are well-nigh impossible in response to the facile turns and about-faces of the plot, with its heavy dependence on convenient overhearing. Emma Thompson, Denzel Washington, Robert Sean Leonard, Keanu Reeves, Michael Keaton, Richard Briers. 1993.

Naked Lunch — David Cronenberg carries on his dubious search to find "straighter," more respectable outlets for his creature-feature schlock tactics: this time, the William S. Burroughs novel of the same name, although the movie is not a direct adaptation of it, but rather a reconstruction of the (highly drugged) state of mind in which it might have been written — and thereby, too, a validation and endorsement of it. Here as before, the cross-dressing in particular. Tilda Swinton starts out playing the immortal Lord Orlando circa 1600 ("There can be no doubt about his sex," the narrator assures us, a necessary precaution in the face of so delicate and feminine a figure), while none other than Quentin Crisp is playing Queen Elizabeth (a drag queen indeed!). Somewhere over the next four centuries, the Lord changes magically into a Lady, and some intelligible feminism begins to assert itself. Swinton maintains a deft touch throughout, not always an easy thing when she's making eye-contact with, and confidential asides to, the audience: "Interesting person," "Terrific play," "Ah, poetry!" and the like. With Billy Zane, Lothaire Bluteau. 1993.

Poetic Justice — Billed as "a street romance," but really more of a road romance. The romancers themselves are from the "street" — South Central L.A. — but the romance blooms on the road, during a mail run up the Coast Highway to Oakland, with two illicit female passengers aboard the postal truck. The urban black lingo, the mating game, and other cultural matters are set down knowingly by writer and director John Singleton, but as in his Boyz n the Hood, there are sentimental detours that soften and weaken the impact (the pastoral utopian family reunion, the Big Sur scenic views). He's at his best when he's in no hurry; he is not at his best when he wants to get somewhere; at this point he hasn't figured out how to make a movie that needn't move. Janet Jackson, although not a very "representative" physical type, performs with self-assurance in her dramatic debut (her only singing is on the soundtrack), and she even dares some self-deprecation: "My ass is gettin' too big." The title comes from the fact that the hairdresser heroine is named Justice and writes poetry in her spare time — oh, dear — but this is a one-way pun: no other justice is in evidence. Samples of her verse are furnished by no less than Maya Angelou ("I am a woman, phenomenally./ Phenomenal woman, that's me"), but nothing is said about publishability. With Tupac Shakur, Tyra Ferrell, Regina King, Joe Torry. 1993.

Posse — Remedial history lesson on the Afro-American West ("People forget," says the authoritative Woody Strode in a present-day preamble, "that one out of every three cowboys was black"). But the story proper — tracing the path of a "posse of outlaws," one white man and the rest black, from the front lines of the Spanish-American War to a utopian separatist frontier town called Freemanville — proves to be not much devoted to historical truth. To the contrary, what is interesting here (or almost interesting, or fleetingly interesting) is how easily this piece of "revisionism" appropriates and assimilates the hoariest conventions of the Western genre: the railroad representing progress; the pacifistic schoolmarm representing civilization; the revenge quest representing men having to do what men have to do. Mario Van Peebles, who also directed, undeniably cuts a stylish figure (leather laces around the edge of his hatbrim, ankle-length duster, holsters angled every which way: very Italianate), especially when in the classic posture of "fanning" his six-gun. The problem with him emerges more behind the camera, where he pushes stylishness right to the water's-edge of narcissism. He always gives you a lot to look at, thumbing through the unabridged manual of cinematographer's tricks. Once the initial excitement wears off, however, the impression is of a music-video phantasmagoria rather than of anything rooted in the real world. And this lends an air of insubstantiality that goes ill with the revisionist purpose of setting the record straight. Stephen Baldwin, Charles Lane, Billy Zane. 1993.

Rising Sun — A murder mystery with a better than usual set-up and a no worse than usual letdown. The backdrop of Japanese encroachment on American shores is sketched in in ways ranging from witty to sinister to sleazy. Witty: the Peckinpah spoof (a swarm of ants in a dusty road, a dog exiting an adobe church with a human hand in its mouth) that turns out to be only! Shakespeare for the hearing impaired? Very soon thereafter, the thrilling sight of a row of riders charging in slow-motion toward the camera as the credits come up (or thrilling sound of the fanfare composed by Patrick Doyle to accompany it) stirs the vain wish that this could turn out to be a completely different type of movie, a real movie. However, the post-credits parade of undifferentiated bare bottoms reminds us forcefully and soberingly that this is to be, in addition to and in spite of Shakespeare, a frolic, a gambol, a (God help us) romp. And presently, inevitably, no longer postponably, come the battalions of Talking Heads. a music video in a karaoke bar in downtown Los Angeles. Sinister: the boardroom bugging system by which the Nakamoto Corporation gains the upper hand in its bid to take over a micro-chip manufacturer with important ties to U.S. defense. Sleazy: the secret seraglio of white mistresses guarded by yuksua sentinels. "I don't get you, Eddie," says one of its residents, prettily posed at her vanity table, wearing nothing but her perplexity. Eddie, ever the inscrutable Oriental, responds: "So what?" The cultural documentation thins out as we go along, and the mystery plotting descends to the level of a weekly TV cop show, but the detectives on the case hold our interest: a liaison officer from the LAPD and his semi-legendary predecessor in the job, a Japanophile now living in semi-retirement in Little Tokyo. There is a question of loyalty about this second man, as about the Indian scout in a cavalry Western, but, also like the Indian scout, he understands the lay of the land: "We may come from a fragmented MTV culture, but they do not." This is an interesting character, a Sherlock Holmesian repository of arcana, larger than life, more than a little daunting, and played with maximum-wattage charisma by Sean Connery. If Wesley Snipes, as his junior partner, can't quite match him, that fits in nicely with the relationship of teacher to pupil, master to apprentice, Holmes to Watson. Snipes pounds the beat from Wary Street to Worry Avenue; Connery knows the way through the labyrinth. Based on a novel by Michael Crichton; directed by Philip Kaufman. 1993.

Road Scholar — Romanian-born Andrei Codrescu, commentator for National Public Radio, roams America in this documentary by Roger Weisberg.
(KEN. 8/13 THROUGH 19)

Robin Hood: Men in Tights — Tardy takeoff on the already anachronistic Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves. Mel Brooks, trying to shoot his way out of a slump, keeps firing up the jokes, clanging bricks off the front of the rim or, just as often, heaving airballs. Among them are a "chorus" of rappers, a nomadic mole on the face of Prince John (this joke is eventually pointed out in the dialogue in case it's too subtle), a sorceress named Latrine (not even Tracey Ullman, made up to look weirdly like Phyllis Diller, can manage to be funny), a Rabbi Tuckman in place of Friar Tuck, a black character called Achoo ("A Jew?"), a not bad, but not applicable, imitation of Brando's Don Corleone by Dom DeLuise, and a "surprise" appearance by Patrick Stewart, speaking with a thick Scots burr in honor of Sean Connery. Brooks now pays less attention than he once did to matters of style, and he cannot even accurately copy one of his old jokes. Remember the Hitchcockian moving camera in High Anxiety that crashes through a pane of glass? Here, with less reason for a Hitchcockian moving camera to begin with, he cuts to a second camera on the other side of the glass in order to anticipate the breakage: the point is lost. With Cary Elwes, Amy Yasbeck, Roger Rees, Richard Lewis. 1993.

Rookie of the Year — Kiddie comedy about a Major League minor, twelve years old, with unnaturally tight tendons in his mended shoulder, who helps pitch the Chicago Cubs to their first World Championship in living memory. (How this happens, when both the hero and his mentor are knocked out of commission on the final day of the regular season, is unclear.)

Sleepless in Seattle — An outrageous bluff which no thinking man, much less any card-carrying cynic, can let pass unchallenged. The germ of the idea — an eight-year-old boy in Seattle places a call to a nationwide radio psychologist on behalf of his widowed father, and a newspaperwoman in Baltimore, along with thousands of other women across the country, begins to weave amorous fantasies around the man — has plenty of possibilities. The thinking man may not feel that a fairy-tale romance, with the fated twosome kept at a distance till the love-at-first-contact finale, would be the most fruitful of these. But if fairy-tale romance must be the way to go, he still may fail to see the wisdom of tipping the hand so immediately and continually in the movie through the visual motif of stars and fireworks and the audio motif of chestnuts such as "Over the Rainbow" and "As Time Goes By" sung by the likes of Ray Charles and Jimmy Durante. It's all so worry-free, so settled, so unspontaneous, so forcibly imposed. The main problem would seem to be that the director and chief writer, Nora Ephron, is a been-around-the-block, wised-up, nobody's-fool sophisticate who never comes nearer to happiness than when sitting around with the gals and being rueful, witty, whiny about how life doesn't live up to the movies, but who has gone ahead anyway and made a movie about how life should, could, can live up to the movies. Accordingly, the scenes that ring truest are the ones in which the gals are sitting around and being rueful, witty, and whiny about how life doesn't live up to the movies. The rest of it has a forced-march quality, together with a watch-the-suckers-fall-in-line quality, slightly at variance with the feigned quality of sweet idealism. Tom Hanks, Meg Ryan, Ross Malinger. 1993.

Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs — Walt Disney's first feature-length cartoon has the wonderful sense of a pool of talents working at the top of their bent, holding nothing back. There is some canny borrowing of what works well in live-action movies, particularly the stuff on the Bloody Mary queen — her shadowy Gothic castle (in the dungeon cell, a skeleton lies for eternity with an arm stretched through the bars toward an unreachable pitcher of water), her smoky magic mirror, her Mr. Hyde transformation into an old hag who's a ringer for Lionel Barrymore, and her demise in an exciting D.W. Griffith-ish cross-cutting climax. And the animation — the density of the image, the depth of field, the singularized movements of the figures — puts to shame practically all of today's scanty cartoons. 1937.
★★★★ (FASHION VALLEY; NICKELODEON 10; OCEANSIDE 8)

So I Married an Axe Murderer — A man afraid of commitment suspects that his current girlfriend is the serial spouse-killer he has read about in the Weekly World News. Apart from his besetting phobia, the protagonist is gravely ill-defined: it's hard to reconcile his apparent wit and charm with his professional self as a throwback beat poet who sounds in performance like a cross between Jerry Lewis and Frank Sinatra. But it may just be that Mike Myers, of TV's Saturday Night Live, is an unsteady straight comic. (In contrast to gross caricaturist, as in his second role here, a chauvinistic Scotsman and the hero's embarrassing father.) Alan Arkin and Charles Grodin show, in small parts, how it's supposed to be done. And Nancy Travis is attractively winsome, but not uncomplicated, as the girlfriend. With Anthony LaPaglia, Brenda Fricker, Amanda Plummer; directed by Thomas Schlamme. 1993.
★ (CARMEL MOUNTAIN; HAZARD CENTER 7; PLAZA CINEMAS; SANTEE VILLAGE 8; STUDIO 3 CINEMAS; UA CHULA VISTA 6; UA ESCONDIDO 8; UA GLASSHOUSE 6; UNIVERSITY TOWNE CENTRE; WIEGAND PLAZA)

Son-in-Law — California weirdo, alone on campus for Thanksgiving break, is invited by the farmer's daughter to Pikeville, U.S.A., where he makes himself right at home, secure in the knowledge that he's the star of the show. Pauly ("High-on-Himself") Shore is the lucky fellow. It must be luck, mustn't it? With Carla Gugino, Lane Smith, Cindy Pickett, and Mason Adams; directed by Steve Rash. 1993.
● (CENTER 3 CINEMAS; NICKELODEON 10; STUDIO 3 CINEMAS)

Strictly Ballroom — A Cinderella tale, or an Ugly Duckling tale, or a some other fairy tale, set in the world of competitive ballroom dancing Down Under. In one way or another, the movie calls to mind most of the dance movies of the previous decade: Footloose, Dirty Dancing (especially that), Salsa, Forbidden Dance. Where this movie diverges from its analogues is in the overtly (understatement for broadly, blatantly, blaringly) comic tone, while yet reserving plenty of heartfelt sentiment for the underdog, his self-expressive urges, his ascendance through "art." The satire at the expense of the spangly costumes, topiary hairdos, raccoon-cap toupees, Bozo-the-Clown cosmetics (the movie is really more a wardrobe and a makeup kit than a full-blown movie), is roughly on the level of British music-hall and Benny Hill and the "Carry On" gang. And any temptation to laugh is stomped down beneath a flamenco boot heel. (Excepting perhaps a couple of interludes of the pot-bellied, thinning-haired, henpecked husband cutting the rug in private; best evidence of the transformative powers of Terpsichore.) Next to the tackiness of the filmmakers, the tawdriness of the dancers looks pretty harmless. Directed by Baz Luhrmann. 1992.
● (GUILD, 8/14 AND 15 MATINEES)

Toto the Hero — Splashy debut by Belgian director Jaco Van Dormael, a switched-at-birth fable about an embittered old man (Michel Bouquet) who's convinced that another man has taken his rightful life. His, so to call it, "wrongful" life is recounted nonsequentially (using three other actors: baby, child, and young adult), and with all manner of comical, lyrical, and surrealistic liberties. The web of events not only fails to persuade us that the protagonist never had a life of his own (a life of extraordinary coincidence, if nothing else), but fails to persuade us even that he felt that way about it. 1991.
★ (SAN DIEGO PUBLIC LIBRARY, 8/16, 6 P.M.)

What's Love Got to Do with It — Musical bio on rock-and-roller Tina Turner, her relationship with her mentor, partner, husband, and abuser Ike Turner, and her eventual self-regeneration as a solo artist. The conventional form and tempo are much enriched by the period detail (changes in fashions are an inexhaustible source of amusement) and enlivened by the music. Angela Bassett can't match the overwhelming physicality of the real Tina, but she does very well with the emotional extremes of offstage agony and onstage ecstasy. And Laurence (formerly Larry) Fishburne is appallingly credible as the unregenerate Ike. Directed by Brian Gibson. 1993.

Feathery Light Meatballs in Paradise

All the entrées — copious in size and fresh as this morning's cooking — were remembrances of things past for me.

REVIEW
ELEANOR WIDMER

George Neagu believed life was good when he was growing up in Romania under an oppressive Communist dictatorship. His parents operated a small restaurant in Bucharest, he obtained a master's degree in electrical engineering, and he found immediate employment. But he had never traveled out of his country. At one of his part-time jobs, sewing garments for an Italian fashion house, he was sent to Milan, Italy, for a business trip. At age 26, he couldn't believe the freedom in Italy, the openness of society, the streets filled with people — even late at night. He felt intoxicated every moment of his stay.

When George returned to Bucharest, he again applied for a travel visa and was turned down. The frustration only whetted his appetite, and he decided to leave the country permanently if he could. Three years later, in the middle of the night, he was told he could take only his clothes and leave the country. Fortunately, he had hoarded American dollars since Italy, and with much weeping on the part of his family, he left Romania. He arrived in San Diego — which he calls "paradise" — almost a decade ago.

George and his parents operate a small cafe on Goldfinch in Mission Hills called the Second Cup. Originally, they sold packaged health food items, tea, and coffee — hence the tea room atmosphere in the front of the shop. But when his mother Maria arrived from Romania, she started to prepare Romanian meals. Subsequently, I heard a Romanian restaurant had opened in San Diego — the only one.

My friends and I showed up one Thursday evening. Why Thursday? The Second cup offers breakfast and lunch Tuesday through Saturday, but dinners are only available Thursdays, and then by appointment. If your party has four or more, dinner will be prepared on a designated night. The same menu exists for lunch and dinner, with a top price of $7.50 for lunch and $11.00 for dinner. Wine and beer are not served, but you may bring your own.

I was raised on middle-European cuisine and always ate Hungarian, Romanian, or Balkan country specialties. When I first called for a reservation at the Second Cup, I asked whether they served mamaliga — a corn meal mush similar to polenta that's either baked and cut into slices or served like our grits. Mamaligutza (the correct long form) is not on the menu, but chicken soup, cabbage rolls, and schnitzel are.

Romanian cuisine is not the least bit spicy; it doesn't even employ paprika the way Hungarian food does. In Romanian restaurants with extensive menus, you may find roast duck, goose, roast lamb, rice garnished with goose liver, and plat-

MILLIGAN'S IS PROUD TO INTRODUCE JESSIE OAKLEY, OUR NEW PASTRY CHEF.

Though Jessie has just begun to create our incredible new desserts, she is not an unfamiliar face at Milligan's. Jessie started with us 3 years ago as a bus person. She spent many hours in the kitchen observing and displayed an enthusiastic desire to learn the art of fine culinary preparation. Before long, Jessie was baking all of Milligan's fresh breads and pastries. She has just graduated from Kump's New York Cooking School and brings back to Milligan's many innovative confections. SOME SAMPLES YOU MAY FIND:

GENOISE BUTTER CREAM CAKE • CHARLOTTE MOUSSE CAKE
CHOCOLATE TRUFFLES • MILLIGAN'S SYMPHONIE CAKE
VARIETY OF CHEESECAKES • APPLE PIE • BROWNIE A LA MODE

Order one of Jessie's mouth-watering desserts and receive a FREE COFFEE OR CAPPUCCINO with mention of this ad. Limited time offer.

ters of cold meats — not the pressed American stuff with its interchangeable flavors, but lamb, beef, pork, and several varieties of fowl. I don't know a single restaurant in San Diego that prepares goose — it's very fatty; the crisp skin and layers of fat are consumed along with the flesh. That would never appeal to health-conscious Californians; even schnitzel — which consists of pounded veal, pork, or chicken dipped in bread crumbs and fried — is hard to sell here.

My friends and I ordered four of the five items on the dinner menu, all accompanied by soup or salad. (The only dish we didn't sample was European-style meatloaf.) The soup was chicken vegetable, one of Romania's most famous soups, a rich broth filled with vegetables and chunks of chicken. The salad, with oil and vinegar and lots of grated white cheese, was very satisfying, but most Romanians start their meal with soup. The soup here is great, but I fondly recall green bean soup and "hangover" soup — a broth with fruit and cinnamon. Perhaps in the future these could be added to the menu.

All the entrées — copious in size and fresh as this morning's cooking — were remembrances of things past for me. Just as my grandmother did, Maria Neagu cooks daily — nothing is kept for the next day. The chicken schnitzel was crisp, not greasy, and cooked to perfection. I think George was disappointed in our response to his cabbage rolls, but I was raised on my Bubbie's stuffed cabbage — each roll was wrapped in several leaves and the broth was like a borscht, namely sweet and sour. For the broth, she used brown sugar, along with lemon juice, tomatoes, salt, and a dash of white pepper. We cooked the dish for hours until the broth was like new wine. The Second Cup offers good cabbage rolls, but the cabbage leaves were white and translucent, and the dish lacked the complex gravy I'm accustomed to.

My two favorite dishes were the meatballs — feathery light and served in a prepared-on-the-premises tomato sauce — and the chicken breast, which came in the same tomato sauce (the American equivalent would be stewed or potted chicken). The vegetables for every entrée were sliced carrots, string beans, boiled and sliced potatoes with lots of parsley, and white rice. We could hardly finish all the excellent food.

For dessert, we were sent a complimentary slice of apple strudel, strongly flavored with cloves and cinnamon. We also had a seductive chocolate torte, prepared by George himself, which won much praise.

I urge George to consider serving dinners Friday and Saturday. It's not our custom to eat this kind of food at lunch, but since lunch extends to 4:00 p.m., you might consider it an early dinner. There are approximately four tables in front and four in back. The middle section still displays packaged goods and vitamins. I must admit, it seems out of place with these lovingly prepared European meals. ■

RESTAURANT LISTINGS

The Reader's Guide to Restaurants is compiled by Eleanor Widmer and represents a selective listing of recommended San Diego County and Tijuana dining establishments. Individual restaurants will appear once or twice a month. Price estimates are based on the latest information available for a complete meal per person, exclusive of drinks and tip. Low: below $8; moderate: $8 to $15; expensive: more than $15. Please call restaurants in advance for operating hours, reservations, and other specific information.

NORTH COASTAL

THE ARMENIAN CAFE 3126 Carlsbad Boulevard, Carlsbad, 720-2233. If you've never tried Armenian food, you should do so at this charming restaurant located in a cottage. Each item is prepared from scratch including "gyros." Complete meals range in price from $6.00 to $14.00. Lamb, eggplant, ground beef in cheese custard are all first-rate. One of the best bets is the Armenian breakfast served Saturday and Sunday. Omelets are stuffed with chicken or lamb shish kabobs. Same menu lunch and dinner. Closed Monday and Tuesday. Low to low moderate.

BAJA GRILL AND FISH MARKET 1342 Camino Del Mar, Del Mar, 792-6472. You can dine here inexpensively on very fresh fish and seafood. The menu offers a good fish taco platter, shrimp and crab quesadilla, and seafood relleno. Charbroiled chicken tacos are also served. Breakfasts served Saturday and Sunday include banana pancakes, Baja scrambled eggs and omelets. Patio dining. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low

THE BRASSERIE La Costa Resort & Spa, Costa Del Mar Road off El Camino Real, Carlsbad, 731-7595. This hotel dining room offers breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Of particular interest is the all-you-can-eat fish and seafood buffet which is served Friday nights only, costs $27.50 and includes hot and cold dishes. The cold fish and salads were excellent and so was the smoked salmon. Although the buffet is not amazing, it's very substantial. Lobster was not available when I visited, but King crab was. Service is outstanding. Continental and American dinners are served other nights of the week. Open daily, breakfast, lunch and dinner. Expensive.

CHUNG KING LOH 352 Stevens Avenue, Solana Beach, 481-0184. Hong Kong food at its best is served here by an efficient, sophisticated management. White tablecloths and art objects add to your dining pleasure. Be sure to try the onion pancakes, lobster in black bean sauce, lemon chicken and any mu-shu dish. The vegetarian menu offers appetizers, soups and 21 vegetarian entrées. Chung King Loh may be a bit more expensive than most, but worth it. Open daily. Lunch and dinner continuous service Monday through Saturday; dinners only Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

CILANTRO'S RESTAURANT AND MARKETPLACE 3702 Via de la Valle, Del Mar, 259-8777. This Southwestern dining room offers a constantly expanding and changing menu. Among the staples are a full range of tapas, wonderful tortilla soup, skewers, and spit-roasted chicken. Very sensuous desserts. Open daily. Continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low to expensive.

FIDEL'S CARLSBAD 3003 Carlsbad Boulevard, Carlsbad, 729-0903. A sister restaurant to the venerable establishment in Del Mar, the stars here are carnitas, quesadilla with chicken, beef or pork, tostada suprema, and breast of chicken Milanese. Open daily lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

JAKE'S DEL MAR 1660 Coast Boulevard, Del Mar, 755-2002. Jake's is the archetype of what people visualize when they say "Southern California." One of the two dining rooms has an ocean view and everyone has a good time, which counts as much as the food. Fresh fish is the best bet here and is accompanied by rice or pasta. Steak lovers won't be disappointed. Nothing fancy, but high spirited. Open daily. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner nightly. Sunday brunch from the menu.

OVERSEAS RESTAURANT 2818 Roosevelt Street, Carlsbad, 729-0348. This superior Chinese restaurant offers specialties from Hong Kong and S'agapore as well as Mandarian and Szechuan dishes. Some of the best appear on a menu printed in Chinese; ask the owner to translate the offerings from that list. Some of the best in the house include Overseas Supreme, chicken, shrimp, beef and cashews placed in a ring of deep-fried mashed potatoes, and shark's fin served with lettuce cups. Satay preparations are also interesting. Gorgeous presentation includes carved vegetables. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Moderate.

PIRET'S 897 First Street, Lumberyard Shopping Center, Encinitas, 942-5152. This is the only remaining Piret's and it serves your old favorites in the black and white room that started the trend in charcuterie dining. Try the fixed-price meals on Monday night or cabbage and pork pie, homemade sausage, and gourmet pizzas. Salads are always a best bet. This is a good spot for Saturday and Sunday a' la carte brunch. Open daily lunch and dinner, Saturday and Sunday brunch. Moderate.

RED TRACTON'S 550 Via de la Valle, Del Mar. 755-6600. If you like truly mammoth portions of prime rib, steak, chicken, or fish that's fresh, plain, and unadorned, served in a lovely surrounding, try this former L.A. family restaurant. Dinners come with corn on the cob or baked potatoes or vegetables — salads are à la carte. Each portion is enough for two people, especially the salads and broccoli. The pan-broiled chicken is a best bet. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinners nightly. Moderate to expensive.

SPICES THAI CAFE 3810 Valley Centre Drive, Piazza Carmel Shopping Center, Del Mar (east of Carmel Valley turnoff), 259-0889. This is a superb Thai restaurant whose cuisine is not only elegant but also contains no MSG and very little fat. The menu is varied and you may have a delightful meal by ordering several appetizers. The seafood dishes rate high, especially seafood panang, which contains shrimp, crab legs, scallops and mussels. Among other delicacies are duck, frog legs, and soft shell crabs. It's all glorious. Put Spices Thai Café at the top of your list. Open daily: lunch, Monday through Friday, dinner, Monday through Friday; Saturday and Sunday, dinner menu all day from 11:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

STAR OF INDIA RESTAURANT 927 First Street, Encinitas, 632-1313. If you've enjoyed the fine Iftdian food at its original home in La Jolla, you will appreciate having a branch in Encinitas. Authentic and well-flavored soups, rice, and vegetarian dishes as well as tandoori chicken and lamb are perennial favorites. All-you-can-eat buffet lunch, Monday through Friday; Saturday and Sunday brunch provides a wonderful alternative to ordinary fare. Open daily, lunch and dinner plus Sunday brunch. Moderate to expensive.

SPICES THAI CAFE 3810 Valley Centre Drive, Piazza Carmel Shopping Center, Del Mar (east of Carmel Valley turnoff), 259-0889. This is a superb Thai restaurant whose cuisine is not only elegant but also contains no MSG and very little fat. The menu is varied and you may have a delightful meal by ordering several appetizers. The seafood dishes rate high, especially seafood panang, which contains shrimp, crab legs, scallops and mussels. Among other delicacies are duck, frog legs, and soft shell crabs. It's all glorious. Put Spices Thai Café at the top of your list. Open daily: lunch, Monday through Friday, dinner, Monday through Friday; Saturday and Sunday, dinner menu all day from 11:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

VILLA D'ESTE 2282 Carmel Valley Road, Del Mar, 259-2006. The chef from Milan performs marvels with pasta, many of them unique and exciting. Chicken, fish and osobuco, served nightly, are marvels. You'll find the Old World dining room soothing, the menu extensive, and the service, under the supervision of Gino, elegant. The tira misu dessert is the best in the city. Private room available. Lunch, Monday through Friday, dinner Monday through Saturday. Closed Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

NORTH INLAND

DELICIAS 6106 Paseo Delicias, Rancho Santa Fe, 756-8000. This restaurant serves excellent pastas and very thin crusted pizzas à la Spago in Los Angeles. Menu includes fresh fish, salads, daily specials. The room is smashing, but the service and entrées bear improvement. Lunch Tuesday through Sunday; dinner daily. Expensive.

HERNANDEZ' HIDE-AWAY Rancho and Lake Drives, Del Dios, Lake Hodges, 746-1444. Noted for its authentic Mexican cooking and very large portions, its followers remain so steadfast that weekends are inevitably crowded. That's because the breakfast/brunch served both Saturday and Sunday until 2:00 p.m. offers outstanding value: steak and eggs, chilaquiles, sausage, beans, and omelets. Fine entrées are chicken enchiladas with spicy sour cream, stuffed quesadillas, tamales, and chiles rellenos. Because it's not easy to find, call for driving instructions. Closed Monday. Breakfast/brunch, Saturday and Sunday. Dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to moderate.

MANDARIN GARDEN RESTAURANT 8242 Mira Mesa Boulevard, Mira Mesa. 566-4720. From the dim sum served Saturday and Sunday to its variety of exotic dishes, this restaurant is worth seeking out, especially at dinner. Located in the Mira Mesa Mall, it offers such unusual appetizers as jellyfish. The noteworthy main dishes are steamed whole fish, twice-cooked pork (spicy), eel served in brown sauce and mushrooms. The extensive menu includes standard dishes favored by Americans.

RESTAURANTS

Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to low-moderate.

MEIKI JAPANESE RESTAURANT AND SUSHI BAR 9823 Carroll Canyon Road, Eucalyptus Square, Scripps Ranch. 566-0206. You'll find a first rate sushi bar tucked away in this tiny shopping center. The fresh yellowtail, scallops in spicy sauce (hotategai), or the special order of baked salmon roll are all wonderful. Forty-two items appear on the sushi list, all prepared by a master chef. The cooked combination plates are also fine. If you sit at the sushi bar, you may be disappointed because chairs, not stools, are used and you can't watch the chef. If you're in the area, don't miss this one. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

ORIGINAL PANCAKE HOUSE 14905 Pomerado Road, Poway. 679-0186. Everything you loved and adored at the Convoy Street address is available here, such as apple pancakes, Swedish pancakes, omelets, coffee with real cream. Open from 7:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. daily. If you love pancakes, this is not to be missed. Open daily. Low.

REAL TEXAS BBQ 6904 Miramar Road, 566-5235. Texas barbeque consists of meat, chicken, and links that are smoked rather than cooked over a fire and the sauce is served on the side. Therefore, don't expect the ribs to be lathered in barbeque sauce — they are soft rather than crunchy. The best bet is the half and half sandwich, half pork and half brisket served with two side dishes plus a drink (beer, soft drink, coffee, tea). This meal is filling and low-cost. All you can eat barbeque dinner served from 4:00 to 9:00 p.m. costs $10.95 and also includes side dishes and drink. The food here is fresh and good; the room is unadorned but very clean; and the barbeque meats are succulent. Same menu lunch and dinner. Open daily. Continuous service. Low.

STELLA'S HIDEAWAY POLISH RESTAURANT Peñasquitos Village Shopping Center, 14323 Peñasquitos Drive, Rancho Peñasquitos. 672-3604. This mom-and-pop Polish dining room serves home-style sauerkraut or dill pickle soup and 18 pungent entrées. Among the best are beef roll-up (rouladen), the Polish plate combination, and the boneless chicken breasts. The pierogi are a bit doughy, but all dishes are prepared from scratch. The food is robust, the portions large, the atmosphere induces you to order more than you can eat. Soup or salad and dessert are included with dinner. Dinners only, nightly. Moderate.

LA JOLLA

AVANTI'S ITALIAN RESTAURANT 875 Prospect Street, 454-4288. You won't be disappointed with the Northern Italian food here. Try the early bird three course dinner served between 5:30 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. daily for $12.95. Fresh fish and pastas do especially well here. Apart from the fine food there is dancing Wednesday through Saturday and opera singers every other Sunday. Dinner only, Sunday through Thursday 5:00 p.m. to midnight and to 1:00 a.m. on Friday and Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

BAKED BY ETTA 7523 Fay Avenue (Von's Shopping Mall), 551-8107. "Just like mother used to bake — only better" would be a perfect description for the lemon poppy seed cake and the chocolate chip coffee cake. During the summer try the fresh fruit, virtually sugarless pies. Cookies and fruit tarts are lowly. Every item available for take-out, or you may have dessert on the premises with gourmet tea and coffee. Open daily, Monday through Friday, 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.; Saturday to 5:00 p.m.; Sunday to 3:00 p.m. Low.

CHANG CUISINE OF CHINA 8670 Genesee Avenue, Costa Verde Shopping Center, 558-2288. The palatial setting and beautiful art carry this restaurant. The best dishes here are crispy beef, minced chicken in lettuce cups, honey chicken. The Mandarin and Szechuan dishes are all of average competence. Dinners start at 2:30 p.m. and are served to 11:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday nights. Seperate dining rooms available. Low to Moderate.

CINDY BLACK'S 5721 La Jolla Boulevard. 456-6299. Cindy Black, who established her reputation at Sheppard's, now has her own French restaurant and her entrées are fresh, innovative, and provide good value. Those on a budget may limit themselves to pasta, rice, or chicken dishes at roughly $10.50. And on Sunday between 5:00 and 8:00 p.m. a fixed-price dinner is offered at $14.95. On Monday night, a three course fixed-price dinner is available for $10.95. Fixed-price lunch for $12.95 offers three courses (Friday only). Some outstanding entrées are the Norwegian salmon and the duck with ginger and leeks. Superb service. Open nightly for dinner and Friday for lunch. Moderate to expensive.

FRENCH GOURMET TOO 711 Pearl Street. 454-6736. The new updated menu is a major improvement over the old and includes breakfast and lunch items served until 2:00 p.m. daily. However, the physical setting could use some improvement. For dinner, try Hunan chicken salad, and any of the salmon preparations or the chicken. Entrées include salad and bread basket. Desserts always seductive. Open daily, breakfast, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

KHATOON PERSIAN CUISINE 639 Pearl Street, 459-4016. This Iranian cuisine is very healthy, non-fat or low-fat, and the menu consists mostly of meat, fish, and skinless chicken kabobs served with basmati rice and broiled tomatoes. Lamb shanks are available Saturday and Sunday, but sell out quickly. Best bets are the chicken kabobs or the ground beef and filet combinations. Same menu of larger portions is available for lunch and dinner. Families with children frequent this home-style restaurant. Good tasting fresh food, but not too exotic. Open daily. Low to moderate.

MILLIGAN'S 5786 La Jolla Boulevard, 459-7311. Old-style American food is at its best here, especially the fried chicken dinner, baby back ribs and fresh fish. The mashed potatoes are terrific. The upstairs dining room offers a view and is a fine spot for and Sunday à la carte brunch. Open daily. Lunch, brunch, dinner. Moderate to expensive.

RUSTY PELICAN 4340 La Jolla Village Drive. 587-1886. The new menu has been scaled downward so that prices are now affordable for almost everyone. The fish and seafood are fresh and the preparations innovative. However, the best bet is the sunset dinner served daily between 5:00 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. It offers salad or soup, fish with potato or rice, vegetables, bread, dessert, and beverage for $9.95. Setting is lovely (try to get a table overlooking the man-made lagoon) and service swift. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low moderate to moderate.

SAMMY'S WOODFIRED PIZZA RESTAURANT 702 Pearl Street, La Jolla. 456-5222. As its name implies, all pizzas are wood-fired and you have a choice of 20, most with exotic nouvelle cuisine toppings. They're modeled after those pioneered by Wolfgang Puck. The best ones are the simplest; tomato and fresh basil or sun dried tomatoes with goat cheese. The barbequed chicken pizza doesn't taste like pizza but it's worthwhile. If you decide on a pasta, select the simplest: angel hair with tomatoes and basil. The house salad is a pieasant accompaniment to any dish. Very casual atmosphere and service that may be frantic. Open daily, Sunday through Thursday, 11:30 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday, to 11:00 p.m. Low to low-moderate.

SANTE RISTORANTE 7811 Herschel Avenue, La Jolla. 454-1315. Though this northern Italian restaurant is pricey, the room is soothing and quiet and the pasta dishes outstanding. Tony Buonsante will prepare any pasta you like in any manner you prefer, but don't overlook bread white noodles with shiitake mushrooms and sautéed mushrooms. Lunch is a best bet and shouldn't be missed if you are entertaining visitors. Lunch Monday through Friday, dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

SOUP EXCHANGE 7777 Fay Avenue. 459-0212. Does La Jolla offer bargains? It does indeed at the Soup Exchange, an all-you-can-eat soup-and-salad bar, where the items (including pasta salads) are fresh, tasty, and inexpensive. Price includes muffins and dessert. Very attractive surroundings and a charming dining patio. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low.

TRIANGLES 4370 La Jolla Village Drive, Golden Triangle, La Jolla, 453-6650. If you're looking for low-calorie, low-fat food at its gourmet best, try this restaurant on the site of the old St James Bar. The chef-owner is from The Main Chance Spa in Arizona and every dish is gorgeous to behold, marvelous in texture and flavor and low in cost. The same menu is served from opening to closing so you may have a light meal or a large one depending on your mood. Menus change weekly. We are fortunate to have cuisine of such caliber in San Diego. Closed Sunday. Continuous service; lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Low to moderate.

ZOOT'S ROTISSERIE CHICKEN 6130 Regents Park Row, La Jolla. 450-9094. Whether you eat in (on paper plates and plastic utensils) or take-out, this is one of the best rotisserie chicken houses in the city. Chickens contain neither preservatives nor hormones, and all the sauces are prepared from scratch. Side orders that accompany chicken are brown rice, baked potato, green or fruit salad, vegetarian beans. Healthy but very tasty product. Closed Sunday. Continuous service; lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

CLAIREMONT & KEARNY MESA

BAC'S 1955 Morena Boulevard, Bay Park, 275-2094. A full bar, three well appointed rooms, excellent service, and an interesting menu characterize Bac's. Pastas, chicken stuffed with cheese, seafood are well prepared, though the pastas carry the day. Soup, salad and appetizers are à la carte. Closed Sunday. Lunch Monday through Friday, dinner Monday to Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

EMERALD CHINESE SEAFOOD RESTAURANT 3709 Convoy Street, Pacific Gateway Plaza, Kearny Mesa, 565-6888. This is possibly the best Chinese restaurant for fresh seafood and fish. The chef is from the famous Mandarin Hotel in Hong Kong. Fresh fish, prawns and lobsters are kept in tanks and prepared within minutes after you order. Not to be missed are the lobster, scallops, honey-walnut shrimp and steamed chicken with vegetables. The food here is superb, but it's the most expensive Chinese restaurant in the city. Dim sum served daily 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. Open daily, dim sum and lunch; dinner nightly to 11:00 p.m. Upper moderate to expensive.

THE GOOD EGG 7947 Balboa Avenue, Kearny Mesa, 565-4244. Twenty-two new items have been added to the breakfast and lunch menu, which offers freshly squeezed fruit juices, eggs served in a skillet and a long list of sandwiches. Very good food in a completely smoke-free setting. Good value here. Open approximately 6:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Low.

HSU'S SZECHUAN CUISINE Hazard Village, 9350 F-G Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Kearny Mesa, 279-9799. This restaurant is noted for its hot and spicy Hunan-style dishes and for its Mongolian Barbeque (your choice of beef, pork, lamb, chicken or turkey with stir-fried vegetables). Extensive menu with many unusual dishes. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Moderate.

KATZRA 4229 Convoy Street, Kearny Mesa, 279-3430. Lunch here provides extraordinary value because the top price is $5.50, either for the daily special or for combination plates. At dinner, the Katzra special offers chicken teriyaki and tempura, sukiyaki and broiled fish. The sushi bar, housed in a special room, is especially fine with forty-five offerings. Open daily; lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Low to moderate.

KOBE MISONE 5451 Kearny Villa Road, Kearny Mesa. 560-7399. American prime rib and prime steaks done Japanese-style, either by themselves or in combination with lobster, shrimp, or scallops. All entrées are served with soup, salad, hibachi shrimp, and Japanese-style vegetables. Essentially a Japanese steak house, you sit communally at the teppan tables. Food tends to be well seasoned. Attractive, well-stocked sushi bar. Closed Monday. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to expensive.

MANDARIN WOK 4227 Balboa Avenue, Clairemont. 272-3972. The chef, born in mainland China, has spent years in Korea, Taiwan, and Japan. The fusion of these cuisines provides some interesting accents to basic Mandarin and Szechwan cooking. Try the wor ton soup (with egg whites), crispy beef in hot sauce, tsung ting shrimp with barbecued beef, and lemon chicken. If you fancy noodles, don't fail to order the combination of soft and hard noodles heaped with shrimp, beef, and chicken. Huge portions, all visually attractive (two dishes are always three handily), and impeccable table settings. Closed Monday. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to moderate.

THE BEACHES

GUAVA BEACH 3714 Mission Boulevard, Mission Beach, 488-6688. This new restaurant on the site of the old Newport Annie's should be named "Square Meals." The menu features old-fashioned favorites as meat loaf and mashed potatoes and macaroni and cheese. The greatest drawback to the cooking is that everything is oversauced. If you order either a salad or anything with gravy, ask for the sauce on the side. Many items are under $7.00, so it's possible to eat inexpensively here. Same menu lunch and dinner. Dinners nightly; brunch, Saturday and Sunday. Low.

ISLANDIA BAR AND GRILL Hyatt Islandia Hotel, 1441 Quivera Basin, Mission Beach. 224-1234. Although this American and Continental view dining room is noted for its overwhelming Sunday brunch offerings, the à la carte dinners prepared by the new chef are excellent in appearance, taste, and high quality. Fresh fish entrées are especially recommended. Open daily; dinner Monday through Saturday. Sunday brunch only. Moderate to expensive.

LAMONT STREET GRILL 4445 Lamont Street, Pacific Beach, 270-3060. The best bets here are the entrées, which are about $11.95 and include salad or soup. Most of these are chicken preparations — the dijon chicken is a signature dish — and are accompanied by potatoes and vegetables. Other entrées may be pricey compared to the current going rates. Fresh fruit dipped in chocolate is included with the meal. This restaurant boasts an outstanding physical feature: a real fireplace and fire in the heated outdoor patio. It's really romantic. Dinners only, nightly. Moderate.

LITTLE ITALY 4204 Voltaire, Ocean Beach/Point Loma, 225-9900. This branch of Little Italy on University Avenue holds about seven tables. You may eat there or take-out any item on the menu that includes pizza, calzone, and pasta. The Italian feast consists of salad, cheese pizza, lasagna, spaghetti, and garlic bread for approximately $10 to eat there or to go. Old fashioned Italian recipes have been wedded to take-outs. Open daily. The hours are a distinct advantage, 11:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m., to midnight Friday and Saturday. Low.

MERLANO'S Sheraton Harbor Island Hotel East, 1380 Harbor Island Drive. 692-2255. Located on the site of what was once the elegant Sheppard's, Merlano's offers an à la carte menu of northern Italian dishes that are low to moderately priced. The bread basket contains focaccia and spicy pepper rolls as well as salami and parmesan cheese. Good selections are the baked zucchini and eggplant and tagliatelli with prosciutto cheese and spinach. Several pasta dishes are available in half orders. Daily fresh fish, grilled or baked, are also good prospects. Closed Monday. Open dinner only Tuesday through Sunday, 6:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

PACIFIC BEACH BREW COMPANY 4475 Mission Boulevard, 274-2537. If you enjoyed the Tuscany style pizzas (served in oblongs) that used to be prepared at Mangiamo's, you will find the chef here at P.B. Brew Company. The menu is virtually the same as at Mangiamo's, which means low cost pizza, pasta, and salads. Open daily, 11:30 a.m. to approximately 10:00 p.m.; to 11:00 p.m. on weekends. Low.

PALENQUE 1653 Garnet Avenue, Pacific Beach. 272-7816. If you adore Roberto del Fundio in Tijuana, you'll love Palenque. It serves regional dishes from Puebla, Guerrero, Nuevo León, and Mexico City. All the dishes are quite spicy, so if you prefer fewer chiles, say so before ordering. The best preparations are tortilla soup, pozole (spicy broth with hominy topped with fresh lettuce), ringa poblana (shredded pork with sausage and salsa), machaca (an unusual grilled preparation of sun-dried beef and eggs), and chile relleno topped with fresh tomato sauce. For authentic regional cooking, it's not to be missed. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

PIZZERIA UNO 4465 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach. The menu has been expanded and you will now find lots of salads and low-calorie items as well as pizzas. The shift has been to healthier offerings which include pastas with light sauces. Try it. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

SHELDON'S CAFE 4711 Mission Bay Drive, Pacific Beach, 273-3833. Although the old favorites are still on hand - chicken-fried steak, fried chicken, old-fashioned croquettes and liver and onions - the menu has been revised toward healthier dining. All vegetables are fresh, more fresh fish appears daily and the breakfast buffet offers lots of fresh fruit. Breakfast buffet open daily; on Saturday and Sunday it includes champagne. Monday through Thursday, 5:30 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday to 11:00 p.m.; Sunday, 7:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. Low.

THEE BUNGALOW 4996 West Point Loma Boulevard, Ocean Beach. 224-2884. Located in a charming bungalow that is one of the landmarks of Ocean Beach, this restaurant offers French/Continental food that's well-prepared, and miraculously the prices are moderate. Low-cost dinners available Sunday through Thursday. Fresh fish and chicken do particularly well here. Price of entrées includes soup or salad. Dinners only, nightly. Moderate.

YO ESPANA 1050 Garnet Avenue, Pacific Beach, 274-0990. The Spanish food is excellent here. At least 55 items are available daily. These include hot and cold tapas (appetizers), soups, salads, and seafood entrees, as well as paella. The seafood is flown in from the east coast. Among the best hot appetizers are the chicken and shrimp. Lots of loud music and vibrant wall murals. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly, to midnight on Friday and Saturday. Low to moderate.

MIDWAY, OLD TOWN & MISSION VALLEY

BUCCANEER'S CLUB 2375 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 299-6527. Seek out this small and eclectic dining room that seats about 30. Every item is made from scratch and while you are in the dining room you can hear them pounding chicken breasts in the kitchen. The soups are Polish, the entrees are French, and you may have Russian pancakes with gravlax. The cooking is homestyle and delicious and the dessert soufflés are the best in the city. Closed Sunday. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Low to moderate.

CAFE PACIFICA 2414 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 291-6666. This remains one of the best fish houses in the city. The menu includes Pacific Rim appetizers such as Thai smoked chicken salad, which makes an excellent light meal. Fixed-price dinners, served from 5:30 p.m. to 6:45 p.m., include soup or salad, entree, dessert, and beverage. Class act. Open daily, lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

GEORGIA'S GREEK CUISINE 3550 Rosecrans, Grosvenor Shopping Center, 523-1007. This new branch of Georgia's serves Greek food that will please anyone on a budget. Lunch is an especially good value — a half chicken, plus soup or salad, is $5.65. For dinner try the combination plate. It's enough for two and includes dessert and coffee. All items are available for take out and you'll find the lemon soup marvelous. The owners are loving and generous. Closed Sunday. Open lunch and dinner, Monday through Saturday. Low.

GREAT WALL CAFE 2543 Congress Street, Old Town, 291-9478. This is the only Chinese restaurant in Old Town. The premises as well as the people who operate the restaurant are lovely, but unless you phone in advance, you will get standard fare from the menu. A scallop and shrimp combination and a vegetable dish called Buddha's Fan should be ordered beforehand. Also good are the aromatic chicken and tossed noodles. Please specify if you want them to cut down on salt. Open daily, lunch and dinner, continuous service. Early bird specials 3:00 to 6:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

JACK AND GIULIO'S SPAGHETTI WESTERN 2391 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 294-2074. The restaurant named Giulio's that you knew and loved for thirty years in Pacific Beach is now Jack and Giulio's. The top price for any entree with salad is $9.95 — gourmet items no longer appear on the menu. Best bets are angel hair pasta, minestrone soup, and the scampi. Pizza and giant hero sandwiches are available. Outdoor patio is one of the strong features. This is a low cost family restaurant with fresh casual food. Open daily, lunch and dinner; continuous service weekends. Low.

OLD TOWN MEXICAN CAFE 2489 San Diego Avenue, Old Town. 297-4330. This boisterous cafe is noted for its excellent breakfasts, served from opening to closing. Try also the eggs, beans and rice, or the rotisserie roasted chicken. Open daily from 7:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m., with the same menu served throughout. Low to moderate.

TOMATOS ITALIAN RESTAURANT 3111 Sports Arena Boulevard, 226-2046. The menu here offers "appe-teasers," salads and pastas. Pasta dishes are good, filling and low-priced — the top one for shrimp and pasta is $11.95. Peep it on a budget should try vegetarian lasagne, fettucine Bolognese, eggplant and giambatto — pasta with chicken, hot sausage, roasted pork tenderloin and hot peppers. Cheerful lively atmosphere. Open daily for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

EAST COUNTY & STATE COLLEGE

DANSK RESTAURANT 8425 La Mesa Boulevard, La Mesa. 463-0640. Although it no longer serves dinner, this is a charming spot for breakfast and lunch that includes first-rate waffles, Swedish pancakes, omelets, open-faced sandwiches. Devoted service and tasty food. Closed Monday. Open Tuesday through Sunday. Low.

EUROPEAN GOURMET 6126 Lake Murray Boulevard. 697-4848. Dinners are low-cost, country-style, include soup or salad plus pirozhki, and are hearty rather than elegant. Service is distracted, but if you'll suspend your notions about what order your dishes should arrive, or how quickly, you'll have a good time here. Best items are stuffed cabbage, blintzes, shashlik (shish kabab), and hunter's stew. Poppyseed strudel is terrific. Worth the trip for offbeat dining with good value. There's also a gourmet section that offers boxed or bottled products from the major Balkan countries. It's a large treat just to view the products. Open daily, breakfast, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

LADER'S ITALIAN GOURMET RESTAURANT 5654 Lake Murray Blvd. 463-9919. This charming dining room offers unusual, innovative dishes with hearty recipes from southern Italy and elegant ones from the north. All entrées include soup or salad. Excellent pasta and chicken dishes. Pizza available Tuesday through Thursday and for take out only on Friday and Saturday. Closed Monday. Lunch Tuesday through Friday; dinners Tuesday through Sunday; served very early on Saturday and Sunday. Low to moderate.

LY'S GARDEN 6011 El Cajon Boulevard, 265-1885. Although the extensive menu offers Chinese as well as Cambodian specials, it's best to order the Cambodian food, many of whose recipes come from Mr. Ly's family. Be sure to ask Mr. Ly for suggestions, but the following are sure-fire hits: fire pot soup where you cook a variety of ingredients in little baskets plunged into broth; salted shrimp, clams with ginger sauce, hot and sour shrimp, chicken with lemon grass, beef with sour vegetables. You may also obtain live crab and lobster as well as fresh oysters and shrimp. Daily specials for parties o'four or more are great bargains. Don't miss this delightful cuisine. Continuous service, open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

MARIO'S DELI MEXICAN RESTAURANT 8187 Center Street, La Mesa, 461-9390. This is located in an industrial area, but it's worth seeking out. The food and value more than make up for the simple dining room. You'll find the best tamales outside of Mexico and amazing shrimp with a green salsa that's incomparable. The soups are also outstanding and so are the fajitas. For dinner all items are $7.95 or less. Sunday brunch offers carne asada with eggs, fresh tamales with eggs, machachas, from $5.95. Mario used to work at La Valencia Hotel in La Jolla and brings his expertise to his own restaurant. Huge portions; low costs. Not to be missed. Monday, breakfast and lunch only; Tuesday through Saturday, 9:30 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. and Sunday, brunch only, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Low.

PIZZA 'N PASTA 915 Broadway (at Mollison), El Cajon. 588-4246. The physical surroundings, which include uncurtained windows, tables covered with oilcloth, and a counter at which you place your orders, scarcely hint at the excellence of the pasta dishes or the pizza. The house specialty is "stuff" pizza with a double crust and choice of toppings. It shouldn't be missed. For your pasta dish, try the sensuous lasagne. Sub sandwiches and calzone also available. This place is a treasure amid unpromising surroundings. Takeouts. Open daily, continuous service; Sunday through Thursday 11:30 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday to 10:00 p.m. Delivery begins at 5:30 p.m. daily. Low-moderate.

SALA THAI 6161 El Cajon Boulevard, Campus Plaza. 229-9050. You will find this Thai restaurant as charming as its owner who used to operate a Thai establishment in Chicago. Among its delights are spring rolls with cucumbers and omelet; stuffed chicken wings with a sweet chili sauce; a salad that packs a lot of punch called nam sod, prepared with ground pork, ginger, and chili powder; spicy fried rice; and a stew called panang. The menu is extensive, the service attentive, and the whole experience loving as well as gastronomically satisfying. Ask for the degree of spiciness compatible with your taste. Extraordinary Thai banquet available with 24 hours' notice. Items include shrimp wrapped in noodles, fish cakes, fish souffle in banana leaves, Cornish hens, and Seafood Delight in clay pot. All or any of these dishes may be ordered by calling beforehand. Chinese dishes also available. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly. Low to low moderate.

VICENTE'S 6315 University Avenue. 287-4443. This small, inomaculate, family-run restaurant serves excellent barbecue dishes as well as Mexican specialties at amazingly low costs. The barbecue sampler with chicken, pork ribs, beef short ribs, plus beans, rice, salsa, and tortillas easily serves two. The carne asada is also recommended. Every item, including the barbecue sauce, is made on the premises. Well worth the trip. Open Monday through Saturday, lunch and dinner, closed Sundays. Low to low-moderate.

CENTRAL SAN DIEGO

JYOTI BIHANGA 3351 Adams Avenue, Normal Heights. 282-4116. Low-cost, tasty, and fresh vegetarian dishes with international influences. The mildly Indian ones include a different curry every other day. Soups, salads, and nightly specials are good bets. Simple dining room. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, 11:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Wednesday, 11:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday brunch, all you can eat for $5.95 from 7:30 a.m. to noon. (There is no brunch on the third Sun-day of every month.) Dinner, Saturday to 8:00 p.m. No dinner on Sundays.

MAMA'S BAKERY AND LEBANESE DELICATESSEN 4237 Alabama Street. Normal Heights (south of El Cajon Boulevard). 608-0717. If you're searching for an unusual light meal or take out, try the Lebanese sandwiches here. Hand made whole wheat dough is rolled to the size of a small pizza and then filled with the ingredients of your choice: cheese, herbs, chicken, or beef. All sandwiches are served hot and are cooked in a dome shaped Lebanese oven. Excellent Middle Eastern salads. The food is fresh, unusual, and very low in cost. Dining in the patio only. Closed Monday. Open Tuesday to Saturday, 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.; Sunday 10:00 a.m. to 2 p.m. Low.

RED SEA RESTAURANT 4717 University Avenue, East San Diego. 285-9722. The newly decorated Ethiopian restaurant offers a charming bar, and authentic Ethiopian cooking. All preparations are served over injera, a sponge-like bread which sops up the gravies and is considered one of the best parts of the meal. Chicken fares better here than beef, which tends to be chewy. Chicken wat (stew) with hardboiled egg, sambusa (stuffed pastries) and the vegetarian plates are among your best bets. On weekends students congregate here, so it's very lively. The area is not the greatest, but the trade-off is exotic food at low prices. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low.

VESUVIO ITALIAN RESTAURANT AND PIZZA HOUSE 3412 30th Street, North Park. 291-3230. The daily luncheon specials, served with salad and bread, start at $3.95, and dinners in the dining room start at $6.00. But the major asset is its separate take-out service which offers menu items as well as pizza to 1:00 a.m. weekdays and to 3:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Old-fashioned Sicilian food at very low costs. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Take-out to go nightly. Low to moderate.

UPTOWN

BUSALACCHI'S RESTORANTE 3683 Fifth Avenue, 298-0119. If you like old-fashioned Sicilian-style cooking — tons of tomato sauce, olive oil, and garlic — then try this converted cottage which serves it. Tomato sauce is so prevalent, even the bean and pasta soup is flavored with it. Sauces tend to be heavy and rich. Lots of pasta dishes, veal, chicken, and fish. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 2:15 p.m.; dinners nightly, Sunday through Thursday, 5:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m., Friday and Saturday to midnight. Moderate.

CITY DELICATESSEN 535 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 295-2747. Jewish specialties are available here which include brisket of beef, chicken-in-the-pot, as well as chopped liver and a wide variety of sandwiches. The great advantage of City Deli is that it's open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner, to midnight during the week and to 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Low to moderate.

CREST CAFE 425 Robinson Avenue. 295-2510. Onion rings served in a loaf, homemade potato chips, chicken, steak, pasta, and a variety of extra-lean charbroiled hamburgers, plus the continuous service from breakfast to late night keep this café crowded. The California chicken salad, the sandwiches, and the breakfast omelets deserve particular attention. The desserts are homemade. Noisy and high spirited, this café is open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low.

EL INDIO SHOP 3695 India Street. 299-0333. The shop has an indoor dining area, or you may brave the elements (such as they are in San Diego) on benches across the street. You won't be disappointed by the pungent, mouth-watering specialties. The entire menu is available for takeout, as are huge bags of tortilla chips. A good value and very good, inexpensive food. Open daily; Monday through Thursday 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday to 10:00 p.m. Low.

GELATO VERO CAFFE 3753 India Street, 295-9268. A fine spot for Italian ices and ice creams, pastries of all kinds, and coffees. Some flavors of gelatos change frequently. Diners may sit and read unburdened indoors or weather permitting, outside. Open Sunday to Thursday to 11:00 a.m.; to 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Low.

KUNG FOOD VEGETARIAN RESTAURANT 2949 Fifth Avenue. 298-7302. At breakfast, lunch, and dinner, vegetarian and egg dishes are available that are low in fat, salt, and cholesterol or follow the Pritikin diet. Many entrées contain dairy products. The good dinner menu includes quesadillas, pasta primavera, and spinach/mushroom lasagne. Brunch, Saturday and Sunday, 8:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. Lunch and dinner daily. Low-low moderate.

LA FAVORITA 142 University Avenue, Suite E (next to Thai Chada), Hillcrest, 295-5005. This small, unpretentious Italian restaurant and bakery offers true bargains, all made on the premises. The top price for an entrée with salad is $5.95. Low on variety of menu, low on value. Same menu from opening to closing, 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday. Low.

LA MANSION 3940 Fourth Avenue, Second Floor, Hillcrest. 298-3286. If you are searching for unique Mexican offerings that are beautifully prepared, don't overlook the latest addition to our Mexican dining scene. The elevator is at street level and will whisk you up to a beautiful dining room with an open kitchen. You'll find specialties from the various regions of Mexico. Especially recommended are the grilled garlic hens, chicken with nuts, and their famous shrimp dishes. Excellent service, loving atmosphere. Don't overlook the Sunday Mexican buffet brunch. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Saturday, Sunday brunch, dinner nightly. Low to moderate.

SAFFRON 3731-B India Street, 574-0177. Very fine grilled chicken is available for take-out or it may be eaten on benches outdoors. Side dishes such as Cambodian salad (cabbage with peanuts) or rice paper stuffed with noodles and vegetables, or beef and vegetables (and occasionally curried dishes) are also prepared. Excellent healthy product with lots of flavor. Seating outdoors only is limited, so take-outs are popular here. Open daily, with continuous service, but early closing. Call for exact hours. Low.

THE SECOND CUP 4030 Goldfinch, Mission Hills, 692-3255. The only Romanian restaurant in the city exists in this tiny shop that seats about twenty people — part of the premises is devoted to packaged health products. The cooking is done by the mother of the owner and it is excellent: wonderful chicken-vegetable soup, chicken schnitzel, cabbage rolls, chicken with fresh tomato sauce, and feathery meat balls and meat loaf. Lots of choices for lunch and dinner. Only catch is dinner is served only Thursday night and by appointment. Or you may have a late lunch till 4:00 p.m. Made on the premises strudel and chocolate torte and good breakfasts. All food to go. Don't miss this authentic European cafe. Closed Sunday and Monday. Breakfast and lunch, Tuesday through Saturday. Dinner Thursday and by appointment. Low-moderate.

SOMETHING'S BREWING 1250 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 294-9311. Available at this coffee house are bulk coffee beans less expensive than anywhere else, light meals, espresso, coffee, and fresh-baked muffins, scones, bagels, quiche. Wide variety of desserts includes "Incredible" cheesecake. Closed Sunday at 6:00 p.m.; open through Saturday, 8:00 a.m. to approximately 11:00 p.m. Low.

TASTE OF SZECHUAN 670 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 291-1668. The Mandarin Szechuan menu offers standards with few surprises. But the three best features are the lovely room, the astonishing friendliness of the management, and the late hours. The Peking duck is excellent and so is the chopped chicken in lettuce cups. If you have any mouthwatering specialties. The entire menu is available for takeout, as are huge bags of tortilla chips. A good value and very good, inexpensive food. Open daily; Monday through Thursday 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday to 10:00 p.m. Low.

DOWNTOWN

ANTHONY'S STAR OF THE SEA ROOM 1360 North Harbor Drive (at Ash Street). 232-7408. In terms of sheer variety and items brought from all over the U.S., few restaurants can equal this major, long-lived gourmet fish and seafood house, where you may obtain hard-to-find specialties and remarkable dishes are broad-bill swordfish, loin of swordfish, and Florida pompano. It's also the only seafood restaurant in the dozens. Of course, the empalle Véronique (lobster with grapes), clams Genovese, or scampi Italiano (with pasta) make vivacious light meals. Magnificent bar view and specialized cart service. Reservations a must in the dining room. Dress code. Open nightly. Dinners only. Expensive.

THE CHEESE SHOP 401 G Street, downtown, 232-2303. This cafe is open daily and offers outrageously good sandwiches of which my favorites are the Black Forest ham and the roast pork. Muffins and cookies are baked on the premises. Paper plates for food but real mugs for coffee and tea. All items available from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Open daily; low. Branch in La Jolla, 2165 Avenida de la Playa, La Jolla Shores, 459-3921.

515 FIFTH AVENUE. 232-3552. The menu changes daily and offers 40 items of what the chef describes as "progressive global cuisine." He means that you will find dishes with influences from France, Italy, the Pacific Rim. There's lots of fresh fish and pasta. The food is well prepared and the setting cosmopolitan. 6 to 8 desserts are prepared on the premises. Friendly atmosphere and attentive service. Dinners only, nightly. Moderate to upper moderate.

FIO'S 801 Fifth Avenue (corner of F Street), 234-3467. Northern Italian cooking is served in two stylish dining rooms. Regardless of the hour, Fio's is always crowded. For light meals, your best bet is the pizza bar, where you may order pizza or salad. Daily specials and pastas are recommended. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly, to 11:00 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, and to midnight Friday and Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

THE FISH MARKET 750 North Harbor Drive. 232-3474. This huge restaurant with its harbor view offers a fresh fish market, a separate room for sushi, an oyster bar, and a moderately priced restaurant downstairs. A gourmet room, Top of the Market, exists upstairs where both the menu and service are more elaborate and cost more. Top of the market serves an à la carte brunch Sunday 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. A great advantage of this enterprise is that it offers great views and offers both lunch and dinner seven days a week. Menus are extensive and fish and seafood arrive fresh each day. If you like and enjoy the offerings at the sister restaurant in Del Mar, you'll appreciate this one more because of its beautiful setting. Lunch and dinner, continuous service daily. Downstairs dining room, moderate; gourmet Top of the Market, moderate to expensive.

GELLEROSA RANCH BARBECUE 120 Ash Street (Second and Ash). 232-2838. Oklahoma-style barbecue is prepared here with pure fidelity, down to the sizzling hot links and the meat and chicken that emerge smoother than grilled. Don't be concerned that the flesh looks pink! — it's due to the smoking process. White diced bread is served with meals a la Oklahoma. Closed Sunday. Monday through Wednesday, 11:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.; Thursday through Saturday, 11:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Low to low-moderate.

GRANT GRILL U.S. Grant Hotel, 326 Broadway, 239-0806. The newly revised menu has reduced prices drastically while the quality remains high. Three entrées, chicken, meat and fish are $12.95 while roast beef is available at the same price Saturday and Sunday. Outstanding service and value. Breakfast, lunch and dinner daily. Moderate to expensive.

JAVA COFFEEHOUSE-GALLERY 837 G Street (corner of 9th and G), 235-4012. One of the great features of this place is that you can order a cup of coffee and sit and read and no one will bother you. In addition to a variety of coffees, teas, cocoa, steamed milk, and Italian sodas, you can have light snacks such as cheese boards, smoked salmon, bagels, and a wide choice of desserts culled from all over the city. Relaxed urban atmosphere and changing art exhibits. Open 8:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Low.

LITTLE CAFE 1017 Eighth Avenue, 233-4076. If you have a nostalgia for a 1930's-style cafe, you'll love this spot which provides home-style food such as chicken pot pie, spaghetti with dressing, meatloaf and potatoes at budget prices. Everything is baked on the premises. Stuffed cabbage and Russian pirohki are available for take-out. Open for breakfast and lunch only, Monday through Friday. Closes at 2:00 p.m. Low.

RAINWATER'S 1202 Kettner Boulevard, 233-5757. Though this attractive restaurant is noted for its fine steaks and chops, live Maine lobster and fresh fish, especially the salmon in parchment are outstanding here. For lunch try meat loaf and creamy mashed potatoes and on Wednesdays, chicken pot pie. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.; dinner ...even nights a week, 5:00 p.m. to midnight. Moderate to expensive.

7TH NEAR B 1146 Seventh Avenue, 696-7071. Susan Garrett, who operates this establishment, is wonderful to talk to, and she stocks papers and magazines from Japan, Costa Rica, Brazil, France, Italy, Denmark, Argentina, Peru, and dozens of cities across the United States. Per rarely seen such a collection outside New York. The night we were there a strawberry/rhubarb pie prepared by a woman named Laura, was as good as any you make at home. My friend had foccacia and herb butter. We hated to leave, but 7th Near B closes at 7 p.m. However, it's a delightful place for Saturday breakfast. Don't miss this one. Coffee, tea, baked goods, bagels, bread, muffins, sweets. Monday to Friday, 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.; Saturday, 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Closed Sunday. No smoking inside; smoking at outdoor seating.

SOUTH BAY & CORONADO

BARRIO FIESTA OF MANILA 1510-D Sweetwater Road, Town & Country Shopping Center, National City, 474-0177. This is the mother of all Filipino restaurants. It serves gourmet preparations in a beautifully appointed room that resembles a garden. If you like the exotic, try squid in garlic sauce, crispy pata, a deep-fried pig's knuckle, and kare-kare, a meat stew with peanut sauce. Should you want to eat more conservatively, order crispy chicken, beef tagalog and possibly milkfish. But don't overlook the noodle and rice dishes and the lumpia eggrolls. Open daily, continuous service lunch and dinner; same menu all meals. Low to moderate.

CASA SALSA 625 H Street, Chula Vista, 498-0700. The bargain of this well-established, colorful Mexican restaurant is called "taco fiesta" and is served on a lazy susan that holds crocks of shredded beef, seasoned chicken, carnitas, refried beans, cheese, and all the hot tortillas you can eat. Three can eat heartily from this make-your-own taco dish at minimal prices. The carne asada tacos and the tostada supreme are also worthwhile. Huge portions, cheerful atmosphere, swift service. Open daily. Food to 11:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday, bar to 2:00 a.m. nightly. Continuous service, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low to moderate.

CROWN ROOM, HOTEL DEL CORONADO 1500 Orange Avenue, Coronado, 435-6611, ext. 7245. The menu has been overhauled so that the food tastes fresher and more lively. A sunset dinner, served from 5:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday, is worth noting. It costs $15.95 and includes soup or salad, choice of three entrées, and dessert. The food, while not thrilling, is recommended for those who enjoy plain, straightforward cooking. The regular menu offers continental specialties. The Crown Room is still noted for its lavish all-you-can-eat Sunday brunch. Open daily, br.sak.fast., lunch, and dinner. Moderate to expensive.

MARIUS Le Meridien Hotel, 2000 Second Street, Coronado, 435-3000. Open for dinner only, this gourmet room of the hotel offers French provincial cuisine. A fixed price dinner is offered nightly for $48.00 or $68.00 and includes appetizer, soup or salad, entrée and dessert. Or, you may choose from the à la carte menu. Closed Sunday and Monday; open Tuesday through Saturday. Expensive.

PRINCE OF WALES ROOM Hotel del Coronado, 1500 Orange Avenue, Coronado, 435-6611. The gourmet dining room of this venerable hotel is located one flight down, boasts an old-fashioned windowless atmosphere and offers fine steaks, fresh fish and seafood, duck and chicken, prepared in traditional style. The food is competent, the service fine. For those who don't like change, you will be glad to hear that this dining room remains unaltered through the years. Open nightly, dinners only. Expensive.

TIJUANA

(The prefix for all Tijuana numbers is 011-526)

EL TAURINO 7531 Sixth Street (off Revolución). 685-7075. Located in the heart of the old section of Tijuana, three blocks west of Revolución, this restaurant will provide superb value in an excellent setting. Basically a steak house, it also offers fish, seafood, and fowl. The price of the entrée includes grilled quail, soup or salad, and mammoth amounts of the main course. Almost everyone orders cabrita, grilled filet of New York-cut steak. The meat covers one end of the platter to another. It's the house specialty for good reason. Another fine dish is empapelado, fish and shrimp cooked in silver foil, or you can try one of several shrimp dishes. Fresh lobsters are another good bet. Superior service. The menu is printed in Spanish, but the maitre d' speaks perfect English. Firstrate bargain for high quality. Open daily 11:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. Continuous service. Low to moderate except for lobster.

LA CASA DEL ALFONSO Estaban Cantu, 2007 Zona Rio, Tijuana, 66-91-89-55. Don't miss this outstanding Basque and Spanish restaurant that's physically stunning and has some of the best food in Tijuana. I actually kissed the chef's hand because of the cabrata (roasted baby goat). Try the camarones Costa Brava (shrimp topped with pimentos, chiles, and tomatoes), Dacalao, paella, and fish stew also available. Highly romantic setting and gorgeous food. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday, noon to midnight. Take Paseo de los Heroes at border, driving past the Cultural Center and Plaza Fiesta until you see Ensenada Libre. Turn right at this sign, cross two stop lights. When you see the building called Marcos Disco, turn right and at the next corner, turn left. The restaurant is immediately to the left.

LA COSTA 150 Galeana (Seventh Street between Revolución and Constitución). 685-8494 or 685-3124. An extensive menu, consistently fresh product, and huge portions have made La Costa the reigning seafood house for Americans. Identical lunch and dinner menus offer lobster, shrimp, grilled fish, fish with sauces, squid, abalone, and oysters, all in a variety of preparations. Inexplicably, the prices here are lower than at its brother restaurant, Adrian Pedrin. Price of entrées includes soup, salad, rice, dessert, beverage, and after-dinner drink. Almost always crowded. Moderate to expensive.

LA LENA 4560 Blvd. Agua Caliente, 686-2920. The most fastidious American would feel comfortable here because of the charming room, the open grill, and the tortilla maker who prepares fresh tortillas as the diners are seated. Dinners come with an appetizer and lively soup, and some of the entrées are extraordinary. Try the pulan ("fist") prepared from marinated beef that's roasted and combines with ham, pork, large grilled green onions, and melted cheese and served with hot tortillas. It's mouth-watering. Guerrera is also recommended. Meat is pounded thin, stuffed with guacamole, beans or cheese, and presented like a quesadilla. Roasted quail and chicken are also first-rate. Seafood available. Open daily, lunch to late dinner. Low to low-moderate. Take Revolución to the left-hand bend where it becomes Agua Caliente. Continue past the twin high-rise towers of the Fiesta Americana. A large sign marks the restaurant (on the right side of the road). Moderate.

LAS ESPUELAS Centro Rio Plaza (opposite the Tijuana Cultural Center on Paseo de los Héroes). 684-0157. For those who wish to dine close to the cultural center and who are not especially interested in ethnic food, the chicken, steak, and quail are good, particularly if you order them without sauces. The food is fresh but unexciting. The atmosphere rates high, as does the attentive service. Luncheon specials at minimal prices are the best buys. Open daily. Moderate. It's good fun to eat in this restaurant with its thatched roof and its wide variety of fish and seafood. For example, it's possible to have a half-dozen preparations of oysters; an appetizer served in a tall glass that combines ceviche, abalone, oysters, shrimp, and conch; and shrimp may be combined with mango curry, in tequila, garlic butter, or cheese. Don't overlook the whole fish, either steamed or fried, the filet in garlic butter, or, for those who'd like a smorgasbord, the "Combinacion Mr. Fish" supplies fresh lobster, shrimp, squid, and a filet of fish. The half-dozen preparations of crêpes are wild — there's even a Mexican version of blintzes. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate. Follow Revolución until it bends to the left and becomes Agua Caliente. Continue past the twin high-rise towers. Mr. Fish is on the right side of the road, just before the country club. Moderate.

PEDRIN'S 1115 Avenida Revolución, across the street from the lai Alai palace. 685-4052. Located one flight up, the dining room offers a view of the city, and the menu boasts over 50 fish and seafood items reminiscent of the preparation at its brother restaurant, La Costa. The price of the entrée includes appetizer, soup, salad, nonalcoholic beverage, and after-dinner drink. Hearty eaters should try the combination plates. Also recommended: whole, boneless, charcoal-broiled fish, whole fish in garlic sauce, broiled lobster, shrimp baked with spinach. Open daily. Fairly early closing for Tijuana. Low to moderate.

CLASSIFIED ADS

Free Classifieds

Time to sell your surfboard, futon and electric guitar? If you're a private party or a nonprofit organization, you may qualify for a Free Classified. Free ads must be typed and mailed. See page 120 for details.

Roommate Hotline

Looking for a place to live? Now you can get a jump on your search before the Reader even hits the streets by simply calling the Roommate Hotline at 1-900-844-4663. Only 49 cents/minute. To place your roommate ad and get it on the hotline, call 235-2415, 24 hours a day. The cost is only $16. See the Roommate section for more details.

These horseless carriages drove the long, arduous journey of, say, five miles from San Diego just to "see the light." What's the point? Find out on page 127.

Paid Classifieds

Need a roommate or clients for your business? Have a vacant rental property? It's easy to place a 25-word Paid Classified ad in the Reader. For more information on paid ads, turn to page 120.

Phone Matches

Looking for your special someone? Turn to the Phone Matches column where you'll find 700+ special someones to choose from. Or call the Phone Matches line at 1-900-844-6282 and "browse" through the introductions. Only 98 cents/minute, $1.98 for the first minute. Love is just a call away! See page 135 for details.

Obscure little ad attempting to speak volumes to kindred spirit. Think-too-much guy, 34. Garlic-breathing, bicycle-cleat-wearing cynic loves well-kerned type.

This guy's ad is getting a little graphic, but I'm sure it's justified. If you'd like to see this Italic changed to Roman (getting a little bold here), turn to page 135.

OFF THE CUFF by Lin Jakary

Do you know any couples who are happy with their marriage?

Hank Dempster
Engineer
Pacific Beach

Well, in my case I thought I knew several until I asked. When I was having trouble with my own situation, I talked with a few friends and was surprised to find out that they all had some problems. I do have friends that have worked through many problems. Most of the women in these marriages say they had to do a lot to adjust at first and then they were mostly content. Also people tended to divide the marriage into parts, and they were happy with some and not happy with others. One couple I talked with liked just about every part of their marriage unless they did some sort of project together or went on a trip. Actually, they get along if they are not together too much. My best friend's, Chuck and his wife Dee, told me they got along fine as long as they didn't have money problems because they both like to buy different things.

I have several older friends that seem to be happy with their marriage. My first cousin Frank and his wife Nancy are very happy probably because Bill does just about whatever Nancy wants to do. They have been married for 54 years, and I have never heard either say a bad word about the other or heard that they were mad at each other. I have other friends that have also been married for many years, and they are very happy now that their kids have left. I don't have any young friends that seem all that happy with their marriage. I think they are all working too hard and trying to do too much. Actually I do have some friends that have three kids that recently told me their marriage just keeps getting better and better, so I think they must be happy.

I have several friends that are happy. My friends Judy and Robert went together on and off for 11 years and were not all that happy about their relationship. Then Judy got very sick with breast cancer, and both of them changed and really started to realize how much they cared about each other and they got married. She is now apparently completely well and they seem to be happy. They bought an old, ugly house and they are fixing it up and they are still happy. So that is a sign of true love in a marriage. I know another couple that raised seven boys, and even though their lives were always in a state of disaster, they are happy. They got much happier when the last son finally moved out. I talked with Ralph about what it was like to raise seven boys, and he said, "I found things out about myself I really didn't want to know." So you know it wasn't all that easy.

Judy Maure

Rancho Santa Fe

I know quite a few couples that have a very good marriage, and I think I know why. The men in these marriages are unusual. These men are more or less easygoing but not weak. In fact, they are strong but they are caring, and they don't seem to be bothered by all the trivia of life. I know people that have women do all the bending, but I think that is what happens in a marriage that isn't good. The man is the one who has to make a lot of changes if a relationship is really going to work. Most men just don't make all those necessary compromises all that well; they expect the women to always adapt to their needs. A woman's basic nature is much more suited to the kind of situations you find in a good marriage, although I know a lot of women that shouldn't be married either.

Anne Surnbergen

Kensington

I live in an older neighbor with lots of good marriages. The people directly to the west of my house, Ruth and Bernie, are very happy and very nice to each other. We have a young couple next door with two small children, and even with that strain they are very happy. If you live next door you know if there is trouble. Most of the people I know are happy with their marriage. You always hear about the bad problems people have, but I think there are more good marriages than bad ones. Of course, if you asked me about bad marriages I could come up with quite a few, but I wouldn't want to talk about them because it might start even more trouble. Also some marriages look worse than they are. My parents fought every day for over 50 years, and when my mother died my father said that they never had a bad word between them. I think all that fighting was just an emotional release for the stress of life. At least, I am happy with that explanation.

THE READER PUZZLE by Don Rubin

#770 Reader Survey

There are thousands of nifty-looking bronze disks like this one all over the country. One of them, undoubtedly, near you. The U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey uses these "permanent monuments" – azimuth marks, bench marks, traverse marks, etc. – to pinpoint precisely various spots on the earth for survey purposes. All of which brings us to our puzzle.

Where exactly is the disk at the following coordinates located?

42° 20' 49.97397" N
71° 05' 00.17357" W

© 1993 United Feature Syndicate.

RULES OF THE GAME

1. The prize for solving the Reader Puzzle will be a Reader T-shirt.
2. All entries in the Reader Puzzle contest must be received by the Reader (addressed to Reader Puzzle, P.O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803) by 9:00 a.m., Wednesday, six days following the issue date.
3. All entries must be accompanied by your name, address, and shirt size S, M, L, XL.
4. Employees of the Reader and their immediate families are not eligible.
5. In the event of disputes or ties, decisions of the judges will be final and arbitrary. We've only got five prizes each week to give away, so if there are more than five winners, we'll have a lottery.
6. All answers must be entered in the space allowed on the puzzle page. And please, no phone calls or trips to our office.
7. One entry per person.

PICTURE STORY
by the San Diego Historical Society

Point Loma lighthouse, circa 1910. Known variously as "The Old Tower" and (the misnomer) "Old Spanish Lighthouse," the brick and sandstone building was constructed in 1854-55 at the behest of the United States Government. The U.S. Lighthouse Board had authorized eight such warning structures for our country's west coast; Point Loma's was the first in Southern California. The oil lamp in the Cape Cod-style structure was officially lighted at sunset on November 15, 1855, by its first keeper, Captain James Keating.

(From the Ticor Collection)

The lighthouse's beacon shone faithfully, albeit fitfully, for 35 years; at over 400 feet above sea level, the beam emanating from its Paris-ground lens was often obscured by dense Point Loma fogs. In 1891, the lighthouse was abandoned and a new one built below it on the tip of the point. The newer structure is still active and operated by the U.S. Coast Guard. The original lighthouse has been designated a California historical landmark and serves as a museum – Cabrillo National Monument.

Phone Matches Success Stories:

Natalie and Greg Kaczur

SINGLE, WHITE MALE, FIREFIGHTER, 34, 6'4", attractive (I've been told). Into fitness, laughter, music, outdoors, golf/sports. Seeks taller, slender, naturally beautiful lady with similar interests. ☎

Greg: In my occupation, people are usually in a traumatic situation. It's not advantageous for meeting someone.

Natalie: I was working at Children's Hospital and teaching Jazzercise™ at night. It didn't leave a lot of time for dating. And 90 percent of the people around me were women.

Greg: My friends would try to introduce me to people, and I think it put a lot of stress on them. Because when it didn't work out, they felt bad.

Natalie: My hairdresser set me up with one of her clients. It was the "Date from Hell."

Greg: I was bound and determined to be a bachelor. But every Thursday the guys at work would get a Reader and read through the Phone Matches™. Then they'd start calling out, "Hey, Greg! We've got one for you!"

Natalie: I wasn't really looking for true love. I just wanted to meet someone fun, someone I could hang out with. I was going to put my own ad in Phone Matches™, but then Greg called me back.

Greg: She was number 13. I never called 14, 15 and 16. We talked over the phone for a month before our first date. I never asked her what she looked like. And then when I met her in person, it was, "Wow!"

Natalie: He was easy to spot because he's so tall.

Greg: We met at the Cargo Bar down at the Hilton. She called me the wrong name.

Natalie: We pretty much knew right from the beginning that we really liked each other. We got engaged after three months, but he doesn't remember asking me.

Greg: We got married in a meadow at Lake Tahoe. Then came Korey, who was kind of a surprise.

Natalie: We call her the Reader Baby.

You're Single. We're Free. Why Wait?

Introducing Reader PHONE MATCHES, a Great Place to Meet Single People.

You are provided with a free personal matching ad in the Reader Classifieds. You also receive a free "voice mailbox"— a phone service that allows you to record and receive messages from any touch-tone phone.

HOW TO PLACE YOUR AD: To place a free Phone Matches ad, fill out the coupon below and mail or FAX it (233-7907) to us. (If faxing, please photocopy the coupon first and then fax it. The newsprint doesn't reproduce well.) The deadline for receiving free Phone Matches ads is Saturday at 7am. Free ads are 25 words or less and run for two weeks. No free ads will be accepted over the phone or in person. Ads with more than 25 words cost $1.20 per additional word. We'll send you a 5-digit mailbox number (to be printed in your ad) and a 4-digit security code for exclusive access to your responses.

You may also place a late ad until 6pm Tuesday by phone (235-8200), in our office (1703 India St. at Date St., downtown), or by FAX (233-7907). The charge for these late ads is $20 for the first 25 words plus $1.20 per additional word. Ads placed by phone or by FAX are with Visa, MasterCard or Discover only. Limit one Phone Matches ad per person per two-week period.

HOW TO USE YOUR VOICE MAILBOX: After you receive your mailbox number and private security code, you can record your personal introduction. Call 527-1966, 24 hours a day, and follow the easy instructions.

Use your introduction to tell more about yourself than your ad does (see below for guidelines). Give your first name; but DON'T give your last name, phone number or address. Make sure you ask your callers to leave their names, phone numbers and the best times to call them. You can re-record your personal introduction once per 24-hour period. All introductions are reviewed by the Reader and go on-line within 24 hours.

To listen to your responses, call 527-1966 any time, 24 hours a day, and follow the easy instructions. You can replay any response or move ahead to the next one. If you choose to move ahead, the previous response will be erased, so have a pencil and piece of paper ready! You must have a touch-tone phone to record a personal introduction or listen to responses.

San Diego Reader Phone Matches

QUESTIONS? Call 235-8200, ext. 268.

GUIDELINES: The Reader suggests that your Phone Matches ad contain a description of yourself, your interests and the age range you are seeking. Phone Matches ads are available for any single person who is seeking a sincere relationship with a member of the opposite sex. Ads containing explicit or implicit sexual/anatomical language will not be accepted. Ads offering anything of monetary value, including living accommodations, gifts or trips, in exchange for companionship will not be accepted. The San Diego Reader has the legal right to reject any advertisement for any reason whatsoever. Phone Matches ads may only be submitted for publication by persons 18 years or older. No ads will be published seeking persons under the age of 18. No last names, addresses or personal phone numbers will be permitted. Phone Matches ads are for individuals only. No dating services, singles clubs or commercial businesses may advertise in this section.

PHONE MATCHES

MEN SEEKING WOMEN

READER PHONE MATCHES TIPS: We want you to enjoy meeting others through Phone Matches, so we encourage you to follow these common-sense reminders: 1) Take the time to conduct a phone interview before scheduling a personal meeting. Is the person similar to, or compatible with you? 2) Consider asking for references and check them out. Trusted employers do it. You can, too. 3) When meeting the person for the first time do so in a public, well-lit place that is known to you. Tell a friend. 4) Trust your instincts. Don't be afraid to end any interview.

Roommates

READER ROOMMATE TIPS. Finding someone that you like and trust enough to share your home with isn't always easy. However, by following a few commonsense tips, finding a compatible roommate will be easier. 1) Take the time to conduct a personal interview before scheduling a personal meeting. Is the person employed with a reliable source of income? Is the person similar to, or compatible with you? Why is the person seeking a new living situation? 2) Ask for references and check them out. Prudent employers do it. You should, too. 3) If you must schedule your initial meeting with a prospective roommate at your home, make sure you have someone else there with you—another roommate, a friend, or a family member. If possible, meet the person for the first time in a well-lit, public place. If you are answering roommate ads, take along a friend when you go to check out living situations. 4) Finally, take enough time to make a thoughtful decision on whom to choose, and trust your instincts!

Respond to Roommate Ads Free

Yes, it's free to call ads that list the Roommate Response Line 235-2297.
By using the 5-digit extension number included in the ad, you will hear the advertiser's recorded description of his or her roommate needs.
You can then leave a message if you like.

Get a jump on your competition. Hear the newest ads before they're printed. Call the Roommate Hotline!

Soon after an advertiser places an ad, his or her spoken introduction goes on the Roommate Hotline. This means you can hear new roommate ads before they appear in the Reader. You can access the Hotline 24 hours, 7 days a week by calling 1-900-844-4663. The cost is just 49¢/minute and you can select the listings by gender, price range and area. Respond to Roommate Ads Free

Yes, it's free to call ads that list the Roommate Response Line 235-2297.
By using the 5-digit extension number included in the ad, you will hear the advertiser's recorded description of his or her roommate needs.
You can then leave a message if you like.

Get a jump on your competition. Hear the newest ads before they're printed. Call the Roommate Hotline!

Soon after an advertiser places an ad, his or her spoken introduction goes on the Roommate Hotline. This means you can hear new roommate ads before they appear in the Reader. You can access the Hotline 24 hours, 7 days a week by calling 1-900-844-4863. The cost is just 49¢/minute and you can select the listings by gender, price range and area. New listings are added daily (you'll find the largest selection of listings a few days prior to publication)

THE SPORTING BOX by Patrick Daugherty

Timely Hints From Nevada Bob

The Box is most pleased to welcome back Nevada Bob for the football season. Bob lives in Las Vegas, not because he likes the glitter — "It's god-awful" — or because he likes the desert — "I hate it" — but because sports betting is legal in Nevada. Over the last fifteen years Bob has burrowed deep into Vegas, has scored a large, professional job and a big, fat office. He owns a nice house, is married to a good woman. He jogs, loves sports, is an all-around stout citizen. But all this is foreplay and beside the point. Bob is in Nevada because, deep down, he's a degenerate sports bettor graced with enough sense to keep it under control. Bob wins, which makes him an authority and counselor rather than a wino-bum shivering from day-sweats in the El Cajon Blvd. bus stop. There's a message here for all of us.

I reached Bob at his office, astounded that he wasn't at lunch or away from his desk, and asked, "So, let's say I've set aside $500 for the season, how do I manage it?"

A laconic drawl pours out from my telephone, "Well, you bet 25% of your bankroll during the week. You don't want to lovd up on a certain game. You don't want to fall in love with a game. Try to bet the same amount every time.

"No one sticks to this, it sounds good, and if you can do it, great. I don't follow my own advice. It's like saying, 'Don't eat fat.' That's good counsel, but you eat it anyway. The idea is to manage your money. The whole point is to have fun and make money. If you're losing money it's no fun, and your kids aren't getting their breakfast cereal. The old saw is true, only bet what you can afford to lose. Most serious bettors do. Your basic bettor doesn't.

"Don't be intimidated by the point spread. It doesn't mean what most people think. People think the betting line means merit, that it's an indicator of a given team's strength. Actually it has nothing to do with the team. The point spread is just an indicator of where the money flows.

"The lines are good, no doubt about it. Roxy makes a great football line, but that's not the point. The point is not the line itself, the line just divides the money. So don't get psyched out. Eighty percent of the teams just flat out win the game and while they're doing it they cover the line. They win, they cover. Maybe two games a week the point spread comes into play. On the whole the point spread usually doesn't come into play; either the favorite wins and covers, or the underdog wins outright.

"I'm more of an em-tional handicapper than a trend handicapper. I look at all the tech, how you play on Astroturf, how you play on the road, what you had for lunch in Detroit. I think trends are important, but I don't bet on trends. I tend to bet mini-seasons. I think teams play well for a few weeks at a time, or play lousy for a few weeks at a time. I'll go with a team for three or four weeks and that's it. Nobody can sustain. It's a rare team that significantly varies against the spread over time. At season's end most teams are 50-50 against the spread. If you bet all the underdogs or all favorites you'll come close to 50%, you'll be a loser, but it will be only a 2.5% loss.

"Most of my wagers these days are totals, because that's easier to handicap than point spreads. A lot of it comes down to having a feel for the game and a feel for the team. I think Minnesota is going to be a good under this year; they have good defense and Jim McMahon doesn't depress me. The 49ers look like an over team because of their offense, and they've lost a lot of key defensive players. Start with teams you know. The first few weeks of the season the bookmakers only know as much as you do. It's a good time to bet if you think you have a feel for it. The lines get tough after the first month.

"There is definitely the reality of streaks. I hate to say it because it sounds so unscientific, but you just sort of feel it. It's like when you play basketball and everything you shoot goes in, same with billiards or tennis. You have to remember that you'll have losing streaks too, so be consistent in your betting. Live to fight another day. You don't want to be tapped out after four weeks, you want to live to bet the Super Bowl so you can sit in your living room and yell and scream and win.

"Have fun."
