I don't even know what it was supposed to mean, some goody, mystical notion we had. Not long after that ad appeared, Bill Engler was making wax bars in the back yard under a big mulberry tree, pouring the bot was into the molds. While he was working, mulhery leaves the two sais in the hoods. While he was working mulhery leaves the two sais in the molds. While he was working mulhery leaves to the sais in the hoods. The best was the form of the morning also. Later that spring when I leve back to Florida on a promotour for Hansen Surfboards, I took along some of our wax, thinking.

I would give out free samples to the surf shops. But apparently some redneck surf shop owner in south Florida had seen the ad of me blowing smake over the wax, and when the bars arrived at his shop, he'd seen Bill's leaves embedded in them. He was sure were purting maripunal leaves in the wax so hids could scrape it some particular strains and the wax so hids could scrape it smuggling maripiana, and on his tip I was stopped at the airport in Maini.

The police were convinced I was from some California-surface was the surface of the copy shipped out a bar of our purple surf wax, pointed to the leaves, and said. Tom sctually built a hundred-fin surfhoard just for the fun of it, and it worked terrible. But I've used his simple formula ever since—not just designing surf toys, but in all types of thinking.

Over the years I'd tunglet is of to people how to userf, and I had a pretty good idea of what it took to overcome the difficulties of the beginning surfer. Besides the obvious element of halance, you have to learn wave judgment, paddling, timing — a lot of one good wave. So I started thinking that a soft surfloard, made from the material Tom was using for his Boogie Board, would be a great learning tool. It would be soft enough that a beginner wouldn't get hurt, it would have smooth edges that would be a great learning tool. Eventually, Tom got an offer from the Kransco Corporation

Maybe I was a bit harsh, but Tom didn't get offended. Doyle, he said, what you're talking about is the differe you. I'm a maker, you're a doer. You don't want to talk about things, you don't want to fantasize about things, you want to do things... But me, I like ideas, and I like tools, and I like to think about how to get them both to do what I want. Who knows, maybe finger surfing will be the next big craze.

over the years, a lot of people have tried to tell me how many opportunities I've missed out on, how rich I would be it in only I'd had the good sente to invest in this or that project. But I don't look at it that with lotter than the choice between the control of the control

Diego agriculture is a $950 million industry. If you tell a grower it's gonna freeze, he can do something. He can go out and protect his crop with heaters. One grower told me. "Wilbur, if we don't get the freeze you re predicting, you're gonna find $15,000 worth of diesel fuel en your doorsten!"

"You can track the cold air coming in from as far away as the Yukon. The next day you can see it coming down through British Columbia. The following day the cold air mass would reach Washington State, and if it alsow in Seattle. You can see it creeping down. You can predict which way the winds are blowing.

Montana, six years at Montana, six years at Santa Maria. I've been up and down the coast from the Canadian border to the Mexican border. Everywhere I go border. Everywhere I go is the toughest place to make a forecast. Each place has its own peculiarities, and each place is difficult in a sense. But if you're in Texas, you can see the weather coming at you from all directions. Same thing with Missoula, Montana you have Seattle reporting and Canada reporting, and if it comes from the east you have the Dakotas east you have the Dakotas. Santa Maria was pretty tough, halfway down the coast, because there's nothing to the west. The storms would come from the Gulf of Alaska, and you'd have a fair handle on the storms coming

It Takes A

Special Person
Thank you for your article on our unsung heroes, the San Diego Animal Control officers ("In the Mornings We Put Them to Sleep," November

It takes a special person to lethally inject perfectly healthy, adoptable animals simply be-cause there are too many of them.

Perhaps someday this will not be part of the Animal Control officer's job requirement. If only San Diegans would get a clue. The answer is so simple: spay or neuter your pets!

Kimberly Skaar San Diego

Spayed/Neutered Pets Are Healthier, Happier Animals "In the Mornings We Put Them to Sleep" (Novem-ber 11) was emotionally mov-ducing the pet overpopula-tion problem, beginning with public education and promot-public education and promoting low-cost spay/neuter programs which are available in San Diego.

We must not assume that we are helpless in this situation and left with no other alternative but to euthanize helpless, unwanted animals. The real solution is prevention through an active public education program that teaches cation program that teaches responsibility for the care and stewardship of animals and promotes a better understanding that spayed/neutered pets are healthier and happier

Control picking up animals, housing and caring for them, and then ultimately euthaniz ing them could be drastically reduced by approaching this problem from a prevention standpoint. This could involve redirecting funding and ef-forts toward media support, community education pro-grams, and low-cost pet care A follow-up article that specifically addresses the in-formation that the public needs to know to be tively involved in a solution to this tragic problem would be an excellent beginning step. Susan Sorg

Of The Pound
I was disgusted by the story,
"In the Mornings We Put Them to Sleep" in the November 11 issue of the Reader. I sounded like a PR man's ver of the Reader. It ion of the pound. I have worked at a shelter, and I have worked at a shelter, and I have had to put animals to sleep myself. I did not stay there long, and I personally felt that the shelter was an animal concentration camp and that those who decided that those ndividuals should be put to sleep had no right to do so. This might sound radical, but f we were to use the same logic of putting surplus animals to sleep and apply it to humans, a lot of people would be upset. It is a travesty to use the name "shelter," because many of these wonderful pets are sold to UCSD research labs each year. I think it is the most blatant example of broken trust which I know, not only buttant example of noveled-for the unsuperiting and trust-ing dogs and cats but for us, the people who pay for it. I think it is disgusting.

As for the carbon who are, but how could they work there that long and not want to change things or ofter other solutions such as massive sunkind acts towards the ani-mals at the central pound. Also I have heard stories from hearthroken people who have pet and were told to come pet and were told to come back the next day just to find that the animal had been de-stroyed. As I said, a blatant ex-ample of broken and a sur-

Does He Really Think We

Believe Him? As a Jew and as a human be-ing, I am offended by Adam Parfrey's piece on Los Angeles' Simon Wiesenthal Center's Beit Ha Shoah Museum of Tolerance "Held.a." November 11). His flippant tone shows a lack of sensitivity on specific and anti-Semitism in general), and his pernicious conclusions border on being anti-Semitic manufacted order that skinbead Christopher Eisher attend the Museum of Tolerance shows that the court believes (as does the levish community in general) that education is an essential community.

the museum's press release propaganda that, according to edical instru the museum's press release cited by Parfrey, "is believed to experiments and musical in-struments made by the Nazis have contributed to Hitler's struments made by the Nazis from Torah scrolls." (italics mine). Parfrey's mocking use of the word 'boasts' implies that the museum is 'proud' to house such atrocious artifacts and discounts the real reason (their educational value) the anti-lewish policies"? In another example of artifacts are present at the mu-seum. A more neutral verb such as "informs" or "reports" would be more appropriate given the subject matter.

Parfrey later writes that "Fisher will have the oppor-Parfrey's insensitivity, he writes, "When Fisher is through playing with computers in the multimedia center...' (italics mine). Part of Fisher's ehabilitation at the museun is to learn, and one way of do ing so is by interacting with the computers; he is not there to play computer games. In yet another example of Parfrey's insensitivity, he writes that Fisher "can mosey through the Tolerance Cen ter's well-stocked gift shop... (italics mine). The verb sey" brings to mind the proverbial cowboy strolling pleasantly through town on carefree afternoon. Again, is

"mosey" an appropriate verb for someone walking through a Holocaust museum?

One might argue in Par-frey's defense that I am nitpicking by citing his word choice. However, I contend that by virtue of his trade as a writer, Parfrey makes (or should make) conscious choices in selecting his words. Moreover, the fact that there are several questionable words in a short, four-paragraph ar-ticle supports the idea that he carefully and consciously In addition to his tone and word choice, there are several other instances which reflect Parfrey's negative attitude to

In effect, he is asying, "Look, Jews, even one of your own, the famed Nazi-hunter, 'say of the fact that this book is available at the museum is that in the Jewsh community— as in a few short of the famed o guably to Jews in general. He mentions that the gift shop is "well-stocked." In view of his tone throughout the entire ar-ticle and the conclusions he ticle and the conclusions he draws, his reference to the gift shop being "well-stocked" is not neutral but instead charged, implying that the museum is exploiting the Holocaust to make money. Then, of all the items Parfrey could possibly mention that are available in the gift shop, he chooses to write that one

"By virtue of their intelligence and dedication; Jews have established themselves as the predominant force in medicine, law, and the mediar proud of my people's accomplishments in these and other fields, Parfrey's contention that the Jews are the righteningly similar to 'the-Jews-control-the-world' propaganda found within the museum's walls. Lastly, Parfrey concludes that the real Affair' is that "a bureaucratic tangle of museums, monuments, films, videos, magazines, and anti-defamation organizations must raise funds by creating villains out of all proportion to their true im-port." This ugly assertion that money is the true motive for these things is downright dis-gusting. Does Parfrey find it implausible that the museum's any potential criticism by pretending that his criticism of the museum is not out of prej-udice against Jews, but really in the name of "the Jews who perished in World War II [who] deserve better." Does he really think we believe him?

William R. Cook was made after seeing the very same video Abe Opincar so arcastically critiqued in his article.
"As Seen on TV," October 14.
What's so wrong about someone wanting to look and feel better? Sure, people have always poked fun at liposuction as a. crazy. way. to loos. as a crazy way to lose unwanted fat. But hey, it works! And Dr. Cook's advanced tumescent techniquis performed under local anes ia, which meant I exper enced no pain and was up on my feet the next day. Contrar o Mr. Opincar's statement I think it was pretty amazing to be awake talking to Dr. Cook throughout the entire procedure.

So, Mr. Opincar, don't knock it until you try it. Take it from the hundreds of thou-sands of Americans who have experienced liposuction surgery in 1993.

Otto's eloquent description of his wife's potting technique illuminates the ineffable quality of this shape. There is the graceful movement of her hands, exerting complete positive control over the clay from the first firm grip during the centexing, leading into a progressively lighter touch while shaping the general outline. There is never any sign of excessive force or strained effort, it all is a continuous, completely natural, controlled

That is why one of these little Natzler pots is so much more aesthetically excit-ing and spiritually profound than even the best of the Frankenthaler prints that are on exhibit at the San Diego Mu-

Sung Dynasty elegance is not the only aesthetic approach the Natzlers took. Otto is par-ticularly noted for his pompeiian and crater glazes, which instead of the smooth, glossy surface so suited to Gertrud's most refined bowls offer a wild, rough textural landscape, pocked with pits and blisters, variously resembling elephant skin or the fields of the moon. The sense of free dom, rough vigor, and natural impetuosity implicit in these glazes suggests 16th-century Japan rather than 13th-century China, and the large shallow China, and the large shallow bowls Gertrud shaped as bear-ers of such rough, blistered grays, greens, violets, and browns also tended to resonate with heavy Japanese earthiness rather than with the refined aerial delicacy of the Sung. 1970. Otto perforce began a new phase of his career. Recognizing that he could not match her perfection in throwing on the wheel, he devoted in the perfection of the perfecti cles in shallow relief, which do not even have an opening to suggest an interior.

As always, however, there is glazes. Notable here are the green crystalline vase with iri-descence (1984), its gorgeously streaked and discolored darkgreen body spattered with tiny crystal shapes in light green and duction glaze footed circle (1986), mat in finish, cloudy and painterly in texture, sub-dued red and green in hue, decorated with fine fissure patterns, and of very great beauty. The latest period of Otto Natzler's creativity involved froms he has spoken of: recti-linear slabs, making powerful use of the rough, earthy crater glazes. This period also includes a handsome, nine-candle menorah from 15 years ago, and it culminates in a grand fragmented cube on a conical base (1992), its stable yet dynamic form (with its four rectangular components just a bit out of phase) comple-mented by the rough, pitted, blistered, greenish and tannish surface of the sulphur and gray/green crater glaze, like an old lichen-colored wall of an ancient monument — though perhaps not one on this planet. Between this commanding perhaps not one on this planet. Between this commanding ceramic sculpture by Otto on his own and the refined substitute is of his earlier collaboration with Gertrud, there lies a whole world of experience, emotion, personal re-identification, and artistic re-assertion. In such a context, the earliest and the latest pieces in the portion of the Mingel show devoted to the Natzlers have an expressive poignance that goes

Capitol didn't go out on a limb by reissuing the two so-called "Red" and "Blue" Beatles the rights to the DC5 catalog—until now kept off market by Clark, its owner—and issued the two-CD The History of the Date Clark Five with great fanfare. The modestly packaged, 50-song albums—properly titled 1962-1966 and 1967-1970—exactly the way they were first issued years ago. Still, Beatles fans gobbled them up—the two double-disc collections (which, at about 150 minutes total time, could have fit into one double-disc box) are the closest Capitol

Atlantic must figure it can never put enough Led Zeppelin out there; it released two different packages in '93, to follow its 1990 triple-platinum box. Those who already own the first set might opt for Boxel Set 2, a two-CD collection with all the band's studio tracks that didn't make the initial Led Zeppelin box. Like that original repackage, this one shuffles familiar playing order for a fresh look at the Zeppelin catalog. But with only one previously unreleased song added, "Baby Come On Home," there isn't much new here for anyone other than advanced collectors. The Complete Studio Recordings is the second set, 10 CDs with all nine of Zep's original studio albums (one a double) in original sequence, with four bonus

The box the trade mags predicted to be the year's smash is A&M's Police set, Message in a Box—The Complete Recordings. They may be right: The Police rode to popularity on the back of punk rock, although the band was leagues ahead of its peers in musicianship. Then it sold enormous quantities of records in its 10-year lifespan; Sting is still as popular as ever. The four CDs here comprise all five Police studio albums in entirety, augmented with assorted B-sides, live tracks, etc., including the band's rare debut single, "Fallout"/"Nothing

Rykodisc acquired U.S. rights to Elvis Costello's Columbia catalog this year, and began releasing them one by one. For collectors, Ryko took the first three albums-My Aim Is True. This Year's Model and Armed Forces-along with the former bootleg Live at the El Mocambo and

TOWER TRIBUNE

Ten holiday classics to please all tastes or many of us with an affinity for music and recordings, the prospect of listening to Christmas and holiday music has about the same appeal as a Michael Jackson concert at a retirement home. There is, in other words, a palpable lack of electricity. It is as though the phrase "Christmas music" is a contradiction in terms. Despite such curmudgeonly forebodings about the music of the holidays, there is a larger public whose members infrequently wander the aisles of record stores and who cannot have enough of the holidays and their concomitant music. Every year the record industry takes aim at these recalcitrant consumers and fires off salvos of holiday classics, reissues and new megastar releases to draw these unwary customers into the madness of holiday shopping. Any idea, no matter how mindless, is not left untried. No one, for example, would ever dream of buying a Beatles record performed by barking dogs; make the recording one of carols performed by those same dogs, or singing cats, or even, God forbid, pseudo-chipmunks, and the line of customers goes around the block.

Occasionally, however, lightning gets captured in a bottle and the holiday music that results, like Christmas itself, is miraculous. The list of holiday classics that is included herein, despite the diversity of artists, possesses one unifying characteristic-this music, the holiday season notwithstanding, sounds just as wonderful in May or September as it does in December. And this year the coast is clear: there are no singing

1. Santa's Got a Brand New Rec-James Brown

2. Light of the Stable—Emmylou Harris (Warner Bros.). As traditional as Christmas gets.

3. A Christmas Gift for You—Phil Spector (Abkco). Rock'n'roll meets Christmas and rock wins. 4. If We Make It Through December-Merle Haggard

(Epic). Hard times meet Christmas and Christmas

5. Memorabilia Navidena—Tish Hinojosa (Watermelon). The holidays as seen from a unique American perspective along the Rio Grande valley.

6. The Christmas Song—Nat King Cole (Capitol).

"... chestnuts roasting on an open fire ..."
7. Elvis' Christmas Album—Elvis Presley (RCA). Will the real king of kings please stand up?
8. Christmas Wish-NRBQ (Rounder): Try cranking

this in July.

9. Ov Chanukah!--Klezmer Conservatory Band (Rounder)

Santa's Got A Brand New Bag

Eastwood does not go looking to make postcards when he goes looking for locations.

et used to it. Clint Eastwood

t used to it. Clint Eastwood has become one of our fine terror the control of the feel they gave him his due at that time and he's got nothing more coming to him. But he has done no measurable that he has done not have been a consistent and predictable that vas should not feel a little relieved about that he could have opted to direct another Dirty Harry. Yet, if we can trust our preceptions of that newly attained summit, we should not be too surprised, either.

That said, it might not be out of place to put off discussion of the plot particulars and to detail instead some of the standard features of his visual style: to accord him in other words the same sort of scrutiny we might give to a Kurosawa or an Antonioni.

You'll Laugh Again!

You'll Cry Again!! You'll Hurl Again!!!

The first thing to notice in that regard, the first thing not to be able to miss. is the position the camera favors, but doesn't inflexibly misst upon, in relation to the actors, a slightly uptilled (ed. 1988). The support of the control of the c dren to grownups.

The second thing has two parts. Eastwood's compositions tend, when-ever the story situations permit, to Calendar staggered arrangement of figures, working backwards from the camera in zigzag diagonals (or just as likely, zigzig). The other way is by cutting between single figures in off-balance compositions, with the first figure compositions, with the first figure positioned near one edge of the wide-screen frame and the next figure positioned near the opposities a sort of tennis match sans ball at which the spectator is seated right by the net. This cross-cutting between lopsided shots has the amene effect in time as the zigzag compositions have in space. Leeping the people at a m's stength. Or even at ten-foot pole's.

The third and final thing (not the only things that could be mentioned) follows closely on the second. Where there is a spread-out sense of space between people, there's a stretchedout sense of space about the landscape around them. The Central Texas set-ting of A Perfect World, for the most ting of A Perfect World, for the most part flat, veant, featureless, is pretty much of a piece with the unspectacular Western visits of Unforgivers or the African plains of White Hunter, Black Heart or the Depression dual bowl of go looking to make posteracts when goes looking to make posteracts when the goes looking for locations. The point about them is not what you can see. This point holds true to a large extent even for interiors. Those off-balance compositions of single figures leave cupied, not so as to fill in some décor and ambience, but just so as to empty

PICTURE STORY by the San Diego Historical Society

Santee blacksmith shop, circa 1910. Santee
Was a farming community originally known as "Cowleston," after George A. time the area boasted more livestock than Cowles, an early raisin magnate. When Cowles passed away, his widow Jennie married 55year-old Los Angeles realtor Milton Santee; Launders Its Water," referring to its landmark hence the town's subsequent name change in water reclamation from lowly sewage. 1893. (Mission Gorge Road used to be known as Cowles Avenue; one wonders why Milton's moniker didn't end up there, either!)

"Hey, the Chargers can still turn this around."

"Laddie, the only thing happening in this town sports-wise, are the hockey and soccer teams. We don't do mainstream team sports in San Diego. One is reminded of the Boston Red Sox. The Red Sox last the Boston Red Sox. The Red Sox last won a World Series in 1918, since then they have gone down to the last week, the last day of the season, even a special one day playoff, and lost more times than anyone cares to count. Til give you the archetypical Red Sox story. The scene is one of those ancient, lovely seen is one of those ancient, lovely have both the special season and the season and have been seen to see the season and the season and have been seen to see the season and the is reading the sports pages, sees the Red Sox have blown the pennant one more time. He looks up, remarks to a customer, 'They killed our fathers and now they're coming after us."

"What does that have to do with the Chargers?"

"Call me in a couple weeks."

Avid fight fans will want to know that heavyweight pugilist. Ray Mercer, won a 10-round split decision over Jesse Ferguson in Atlantic City last Friday. Nine months ago the same two titans squared off and a fat, gasping Mercer allegedly spent the first several rounds trying to bribe his opponent. According to news reports, Mercer offered a quick $190.00 for Ferguson to take a dive. Negotiations took place inside the ring while the fighers were busy at work. "How Much?" Bam, Bam! "Where will it be delivered!" Boom, sock? "How can you get that much more that quick?" Bom, boof! "How do you will pay me!" Wharm, ouch! The parties wouldn't reach agreement and Ferguson went on to couldn't reach agreement and Ferguson with match, this time at the courthouse, where ferguson will reach set the prosecution. Did you see Kansas City manhandle, molest and abuse the Buffalo Bills last Sunday on the way to a 23-7 win? The Chiefs wupped Buffalo from defense to special teams to offense to kicking, Buffalo's allworld running back, Thurman Thomas, was held to 25 yards, and quarterbacks Kelly and Reich were sacked four times and hurried all day. K.C. is a different and hurried all day. K.C., is a different team when loop plays.

The halting, strumbling, barely-beating-a-pushower opponent which is K.C. under back-up quarterback, Dave Krieg, is replaced by an efficient, ruthless shark when Montana takes the field.

All the strumble when the shark when Montana takes the control of the shark of the shark of the shark when Montana takes the field.

All the shark of unlikely, but not impossible, that K.C. will carry the AFC. Who's out there! They've already trounced Buffalo. Miami can be beat, DeBerg frequently has an off day. Every other contender in the conference is 7 and 4. With a couple breaks the Chiefs could be AFC Champions, And who is the best team in Champions. And who is the best team in the NFC right now? The San Francisco 49ers. Now, bucko, there is a Super Bowl for you. The 49ers vs. the Chiefs. Joe Montana vs. Steve Young, winner take all. Yum, yum.
