Ten days later, however, prosecutors decided not to file criminal charges, "Given the circum-tances of this case, they couldn't prove the criminal activity without Mrs. De La Fuente's cooperation, and it was their impression that she wouldn't cooperate," says deputy city attorney Penny Castle-man.

Deputy city attorney Castleman, however, says police merely responded to a 911 call placed by Katayoun De 1a Fuente on the night of the alleged betting. A week later, Castleman says, they arrested Rocque based on allegations his wife had made to the officers—allegations that were supported by the presence of minor injuries to her body.

sultry brunettes advertise: "It doesn't get any cheaper or nastier... No 900 charges. No major credit cards needed.... Call toll-free to find out how." But attorney John Lopker says it's too good to be true— it's fraud. "This is the kind of misleadine advertisine that misleading advertising that rips a lot of people off," he says, flipping through dozens of raunchy magazines. Since 1992, he explains, the pornog-raphy industry has faced increasing regulation of its 900 numbers. In response, the in-dustry has developed dozens dustry has developed dozens of new ways to bill unsuspecting customers and businesses for millions of dollars a year. Some of these "free" calls cost up to 55 a minute.

Here's one way the scam works. Someone dials an 800 entertainment line, thinking it's free. Porn operators use a "caller LD" service, which "caller I.D." service, which identifies the caller's phone identifies the caller's phone number. Then, he says, the operator might switch the line to a 900 number or get permission to charge the call to the caller. Since caller LD. can't determine room numbers in a hotel or extensions na company, businesses, not individuals, usually end uppicking up the tab. For companies, colleges, and hotels, it's a disaster.

Lopker says this summer he found a special section of California law that protects Lopker, who has settled Lopker, who has settled several consumer lawsuits in the past, claims this case is not against the adult entertain-ment industry's right to sell sex over telephone lines. In fact, he says, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the individual's right to offer adult services with 900 numbers. "This isn't with 900 numbers. "This isn't some puritamical mission against the adult telephone service lines. It's about fraud, I wouldn't care about who's doing it — it just happens that 98 percent of the abuse is by the adult entertainment companies.

Lopker, who moved to San Diego from Washington.

"I called Pacific Bell, and they saked. "What do you do for a living? I told them I was an attorner, The operator said, You should look into this 800 number thing because we are flooted by complaints. It's a real prob-lem."

he researched the problem. "I started staying up late and watching for phone sex ads on late-night television. I found the ads in Hustler and other magazines. I spent time talk-ing to local victims, and called the Federal Communications Commission and found out the extent of the problem." Many of the thousands of complaints, he says, were reg-istered by hotels, businesses, and universities excuse for billing it. Or they will set up instant credit for you, and give you a pin num-ber, and bill the number you are calling from.

"I liken this to McDonald's

"I liken this to McDonald's advertising 106 hamburgers. People would rush to get inside the store, only to find out that hamburgers cost a dime with a $10 purchase. The point isn't that they didn't disclose the true deal to you, but that they did it after you got in the door."

om charging to unautho

Lopker, however, believes the only real way to solve the problem is to limit adult en tertainment companies to the 900-number slot created es-lated by the FTC by an extensive set of communication laws. They have to give peo-ple notice of what they will be ple notice of what they will be charged; they have to give truthful advertising." Most importantly, he argues, 900 numbers can be blocked by business, universities, and res-idences; 800 numbers cannot. "People are mad as hell because you cannot block 800-numbers. You have no way of protecting vourself way of protecting yourself from unauthorized use from a visitor in your house, from your child, or anyone.

"It hurts people even more because you can have your telephone service cut off if telephone service cut off if you don't pay those bills, which is not true for 900 numbers. You are protected if you dispute 900 charges. People throw up heir hands and pay because they can't live without their telephone."

Lopker is confident that he will win his case, which will be heard in San Diego Superior Court later this year. He has already set up a team of attorness, paraleask, and who has already set up a ream of attorneys, paralegals, and vol-unteres to help him litigate against the adult entertain-ment companies. "These calls are not free, People are being manipulated. Businesses are being abused. Chridren are being abused. Chridren are being described in the companies of the him to the properties of the time to the companies of 900-numbers, and marketed with honest advertising.

with honest advertising."

If he does win the case, adult entertainment compa-nies will be forced to cough up all proceeds from Califor-nia phone-sex lines, and the nia phone-sex lines, and the money will be redistributed to the people they defrauded. Lopker says he will place newspaper, radio, and television advertisements statewide to find any Californian billed by unauthorized phone-sex scammers.

Castleman dismisses the suit as "without merit." She not only denies that police or the city are guilty of any wrong-doing, but asserts that if, as De La Fuente maintains, the alleged assault never hap-pened, then Katayoun De La Fuente is the one who is to blame for the false arrest.
