Enigma in a Turban

STRANGE GOINGS-ON IN ENCINITAS

If anyone ever writes a Guidebook to Supernatural San Diego, one chapter will have to be set on the bluff in Encinitas where the coastline takes a bend eastward. The Self-Realization Fellowship owns about 13 acres there, property which overlooks a breathtaking expanse of the ocean and stretches, on its eastern perimeter, for a full city block along Highway 101. Three gigantic lotus towers painted gold and protected with a shiny coat of epoxy demand the attention of passing motorists. It is near the northernmost structure that one eerie episode occurred. (continued on page 18)

Elisa Fulks Is The Dancer's Name

I was enjoying your article on flamenco dancers until I came across a picture of my daughter-in-law on page 20 and 24 ("White Boys and Gypsy Souls," October 13). You don't have her name there. Her name is Elisa Fulks, and you have Angelita something, which is the lady in the background. My daughter has been a ballet dancer and flamenco dancer for many years, and I truly believe she is the best in the city. So I'd like to have her get some credit; maybe you could put it in your next issue. I'd appreciate it.

TV Prejudice

Abe Opincar's article in the October 13 Reader ("As Seen on TV") was disturbing to me, both because you are undoubtedly correct in your assessment of mainstream America and its television-watching habits and also because I have made a conscious effort with my own son to immediately address any prejudicial remarks we hear on television or that he himself makes in error.

As members of the Baha'i Faith, we feel that it is our responsibility to raise the next generation prejudice-free in all aspects of life including race, religion, gender, and creed. I am teaching my son to see all people as individuals, with individual strengths and weaknesses. As we are taught, we should not be blind to the weaknesses but concentrate on the strengths and help that person to become the best he or she can be.

I hope that as the Baha'i Faith spreads, the comments which are currently heard and accepted on television will cease, that they will no longer be acceptable to a prejudice-free generation of people, and we can go on to accomplish the unity this planet needs.

What Is Your Goal?

I see that the Reader is soliciting stories from anti-Semites and victims of anti-Semitism. Since we Jews are less than 2 percent of the population, we will surely be outnumbered by the Jew-hater stories. Of course, the stories don't have to be true. Every week the Reader runs at least one anti-Semitic letter to the editor. The same people who hate blacks for being on welfare hate Jews for being successful. The Reader seems very dedicated to spread this religious hatred: first a cover story by an Arab, then letters to the editor, and now you solicit stories from anti-Semites.

Christians have persecuted Jews for centuries, and you are perpetuating this sick practice. What is your goal, an American Holocaust?

More On Mathis

I would like to commend the Reader on reporting what I hope is an ongoing investigation into the "Trouble with Harry" (Mathis), in which his intervention into the statewide seismic code was discussed ("City Lights," October 6). I, too, have considered that he has little regard for the effects his actions have on his constituents. His lack of regard for ethical political practice, as described in the article, confirms my opinion.

I would like to add other parts of Mathis's political history to the story.

In 1989, his last-minute entry into the 1st District primary race made him both the "Rosie Ruiz" and the "Ross Perot" of this contest. His campaign, which was limited to anti-Wolfsheimer positions, did nothing for the causes he claimed to support and delayed the removal of Wolfsheimer by four years. By pulling barely 1 percent of the vote, he put both Wolfsheimer and Bob Trettin under 50 percent and forced a runoff. Wolfsheimer, who had been overconfident in this race and was behind Trettin in the primary, was grateful for the opportunity to rally and go to victory in November.

After that, Mathis identified a personal cause, which was the construction of the Regents Road bridge across Rose Canyon. He found that this would provide access to a shopping center on one side of the canyon, which would benefit greatly by this connection to more of University City. While he was president of the University City Planning Group (UCPG), Mathis communicated with the owner of this shopping center and championed the bridge. Under his guidance, the UCPG voted approval in a historic meeting. Ironically, Mathis now sits on the city council, where he is in a position to promote this project further.

During this time, I also sat on the Facilities and Architecture Committee of the ECS, which Mathis attended erratically. On one occasion Mathis presented the watered-down version of the proposed Unreinforced Masonry Ordinance to this group, with his interpretation of the effects of this

CITY LIGHTS
CITY LIGHTS

The care and feeding of Ron Roberts Millionaire Doug Manchester, who teamed with Union-Tribune publisher Helen Copley in this year's big-money election battle to move the airport to Miramar, hasn't stopped handing out campaign cash. The voluble developer and others associated with his now-defunct Citizens for Miramar campaign committee have channeled more than $2000 into the coffers of 4th District county supervisor candidate Ron Roberts. Manchester personally gave Roberts $500, the legal limit. John Seymour, president of a Manchester-backed foundation still lobbying to move the airport, donated $250. Robert Lichter, a vocal member of the foundation and CEO of Burnham & Associates, donated $500. Even David O'Neal, of ZHA Inc., an Orlando research firm commissioned by the foundation to produce a report about the move, kicked in $125. June's advisory ballot measure, which narrowly carried the county, was rejected by San Diego city voters. Roberts, a city councilman, backed the proposition to the hilt; portions of his district lie under the current Lindbergh Field flight path. Records also show that Manchester also gave Roberts and his wife New Year's Eve accommodations at the developer's Hyatt Regency next to Seaport Village, valued at $150. Neither man returned calls. —M.P.

A different kind of bio-tech Mourn no more for Convair and Teledyne Ryan. A pair of enterprising local industrialists have come up with the latest in job-creating high technology: the waterless urinal.

Klaus Reichardt, president of Mira Mesa's Waterless Company, says sales of the "No-Flush" urinal he and a partner invented three years ago are booming. The sophisticated device, retailing for $400, uses a plastic trap filled with a lightweight, recyclable oil, which filters urine before gravity moves it down the line. "The less water you use, the less bacterial growth you have and the less smell you have," notes Reichardt. But although the appliance has caught on from Seattle to Tampa, local sales are zilch. "The water authorities are somewhat reluctant," he says, "but that reluctance really comes from not knowing." —T.K.A.

Golding's Mexican waffles? As the controversy over Proposition 187 heats up, San Diego mayor Susan Golding has been conspicuously silent about her position on the measure to strip illegal immigrants of their social services. Championed by her political mentor and fellow Republican, Governor Pete Wilson, the proposal has stirred fierce opposition just across the border. Golding told the Union-Tribune last month that there are "elements in the initiative that trouble me," but gave no "further explanation," according to the paper. Repeated phone calls and a fax to her office went unanswered. Observers say the mayor is "caught between a rock and a hard spot." If she comes out against Prop. 187, she risks alienating Wilson. But if she comes out in favor of the draconian measure, she could damage the close relationship she's been cultivating with Tijuana city officials as well as the likes of Chamber of Commerce president Gil Partida. —T.K.A.

Adieu to Sue, redux Mayor Golding has lost four more staffers in the last month, city hall sources say. The latest to leave was Andrea Salinas, who joined the San Diego mayor's office just seven months ago as executive secretary to chief of staff Richard Ledford, who himself resigned in July. Salinas denies that the long hours and frenzied work environment cited by most of the previous dozen-plus Golding departees triggered her departure as well. "I really didn't leave in such a terribly negative way," says Salinas, now a transportation planning staffer in the city's Engineering and Development Department. Mayoral spokeswoman Maryanne Pintar did not return repeated phone calls, but a source says three other Golding staff members, all of them classified as council representatives, have also left the mayor's employ. At least two have been transferred to other jobs in city government, even though, as one source says, "None of them have civil-service protection. They are all political appointees." —T.K.A.

County Campaign Cash Found in Trash

By Melinda Powelson

One very powerful but little-recognized force in San Diego politics is the local trash lobby. During the past decade, a group of trash haulers and their public relations firms have donated thousands of dollars to political campaigns, especially during the election years when sensitive trash-related issues were at stake.

This year, campaign-disclosure records show that the trash lobby is on the move again. It has invested thousands of dollars in two county supervisorial races. Both Democratic candidate Peter Navarro, who is running for a seat in the 4th District, and Lee Thibadeau, a candidate for the 5th District, have received over $3000 from employees of San Diego trash companies. In the '92 campaign, the haulers, their spouses, and PR firms donated $1750 to San Diego councilwoman Judy McCarty; $3000 to Supervisor Pam Slater; and $2500 to Supervisor Diane Jacob.

The biggest trash issue on the November ballot is the Gregory Canyon Initiative, a ballot measure to locate a private landfill in North County. A campaign committee made up of a group of out-of-town investors, including a Beverly Hills diamond dealer, a Massachusetts-based bio-energy executive, and a San Francisco investor, has raised nearly $300,000 to push the proposal.

This year, elections come at a time when the county's solid-waste division, which is responsible for trash disposal throughout San Diego, is being whittled down. The division's budget has been slashed by $20 million, two departmental leaders have been placed on administrative leave, and the landfill system may not be able to generate enough revenue to support the $140 million recycling plant installed last year in San Marcos.

Some critics want to see the County Board of Supervisors turn the system over to private industry to save taxpayers money. But others claim that the trash industry is using its campaign money to engineer a costly private monopoly.

"Donating to political campaigns is one of the most effective tactics private trash haulers have at gaining influence in government-run systems," says a research analyst with the environmental activist group Greenpeace. Greenpeace conducted a year-long study in 1992 on the private trash industry and its influence on local government.

"Our research showed that whenever there was a trash issue on the agenda — whether it be the siting of a landfill or the award of a waste-hauling contract — elected officials were flooded with contributions," says the Greenpeace analyst. "Most often, these contributions have an influence."

"I think that the trash haulers are trying to exploit a very bad situation," says one county insider, who recognizes the problems in the department. "The public perception is that the county is not doing a very good job, and [the public] is eager for a change," the county insider continues. "What they don't realize is that turning the system over to a private industry isn't going to help. Private industry is in the trash business for profit — they are not out to save ratepayers money."

Of all of the candidates running for office, Navarro has received the most money from the private trash haulers, with over $3500 in contributions. Critics charge that those donations stem from an April 1994 position paper, in which Navarro outlined ten reasons why the county should abandon the "trash bureaucracy" and award solid-waste contracts to private industry.

The money came from employees and their spouses of the three biggest trash haulers in the county — Coast Waste Management ($750), EDCO ($750), and Mashburn Waste & Recycling ($1000). He also received a $250 donation from Victoria Tobiason, owner of Ramona Disposal, and Martha Gibbons, a vice president of Laidlaw, the third largest trash hauler in the country.

"I can tell you exactly why the trash haulers donated to my campaign," says Navarro. "It is because of the 'trash tax' proposed by my opponent, Ron Roberts, at the Miramar landfill," Navarro says.

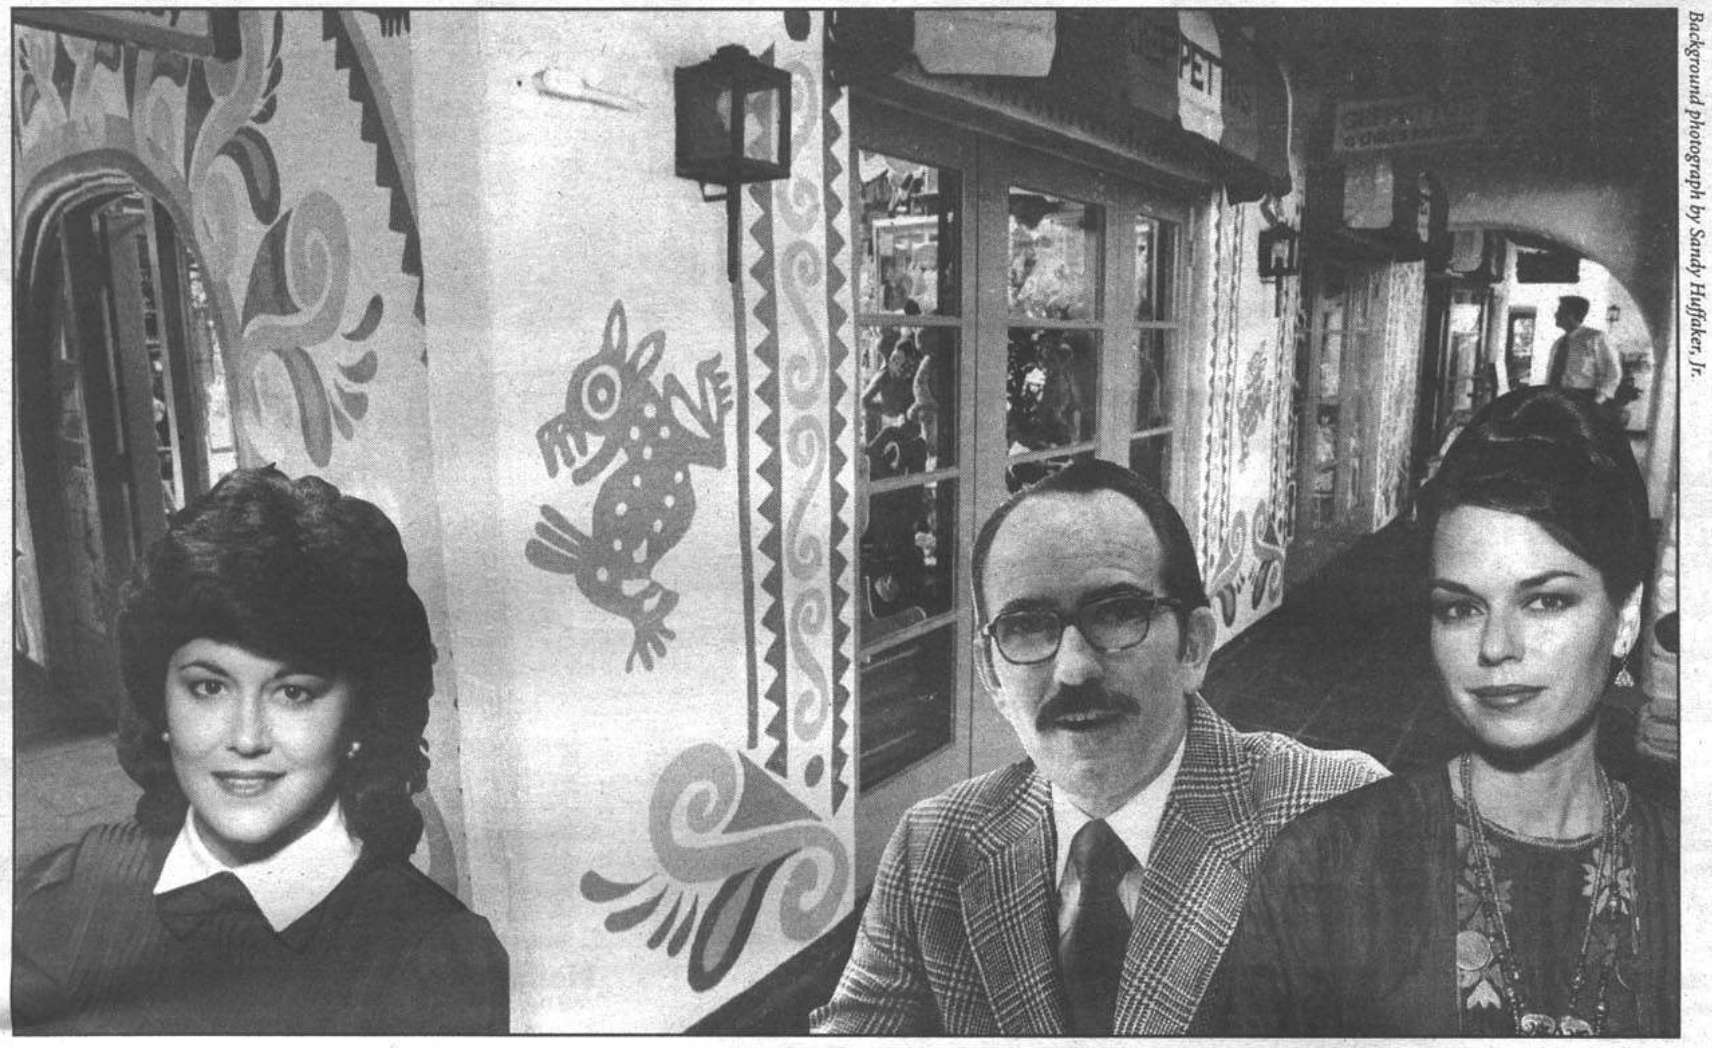

Last year, as a way to balance the budget, Roberts proposed a $10-a-ton tax on commercial businesses that bring their trash to the city landfill. The proposal drew severe criticism from the trash industry, which claimed that the tax was unfair to small businesses and elderly

Bazaar del Politico: Rich Golding Chums Paint City Hall Green

By Thomas K. Arnold

The pastel pinks, greens, grays, and rose tones in which then-mayor Maureen O'Connor redecorated her office in 1990 simply won't do for her successor, Susan Golding.

So on the eve of the second anniversary of her election, Golding is planning an elaborate makeover of the mayor's 11th floor city hall suite. The task has been relegated to a "redecorating committee," chaired by Kay Porter and including as members Deborah Szekely and Diane Powers, both old friends of the mayor.

Szekely and Powers's involvement raises some potentially serious ethical questions, critics say — particularly if their relationship with Golding isn't fully, and promptly, disclosed. Szekely owns the Golden Door fat farm in North County; last year, Golding received a pair of $1000 discounts to both the Golden Door and the Rancho La Puerta spa in Tecate, Mexico, which is owned by Szekely's son, Alex. Powers, an interior decorator, runs the Bazaar del Mundo specialty shop mall in Old Town, a complex she built in the early 1970s in partnership with Golding's ex-husband, convicted money launderer Richard Silberman.

"Issues like this, in which people are willing to give money or time to make an elected official's life easier, are complicated," says Lisa Foster, a former member of the city of San Diego's now-defunct ethics commission and, before that, executive director of Common Cause, the political-watchdog group. "On the one hand, there is nothing illegal about it. But on the other, there needs to be full disclosure about who's giving the money — and that includes in-kind contribu-tions — so people know who's helping the mayor or not. Obviously, the implication is the mayor is going to look more kindly on those people, and that's always a cause for concern."

The redecorating committee is still in the "preliminary stages," Powers says. Its goal is to engineer a comprehensive redo of Golding's city hall digs "to have the office reflect San Diego more than it does currently," Powers says. "Now, it does not reflect the professionalism of the office or of San Diego," she says. "So much activity takes place in there, and so many people from all over the world come into that office. This office might be the first place some of these very important VIPs come in when they visit San Diego, and it's important for the office to reflect what happens in there and in our city. It needs to be a very positive image."

Nothing's been set in concrete, but Powers says that aside from changing the color scheme — to what, she won't say — "what we are hoping to do is draw some items from some of the museum collections and have them on display there. I felt, as well, that if we pulled some items from the San Diego Historical Society, some photos of San Diego and how it has evolved from early on to its present day, that would be really interesting for people when they are waiting in the reception room, and really tell a story of San Diego and have it look like the image that people have of San Diego."

One former city councilman who asked that his name not be used says he fully understands why Golding is so bent on redecorating her office. "You should have been up there and seen it," he says of what O'Connor did to it in 1990. "Maureen went to great lengths to redecorate things, but the result was awful, sort of this pastel bland."

He says if the house Golding once shared with Silberman is any indication, the mayor's office will be a lot more colorful. "What Susan likes is bright and bold colors," he says. "The house was painted inside and out with Mexican and Guatemalan folk-art colors and motifs, even the doors."

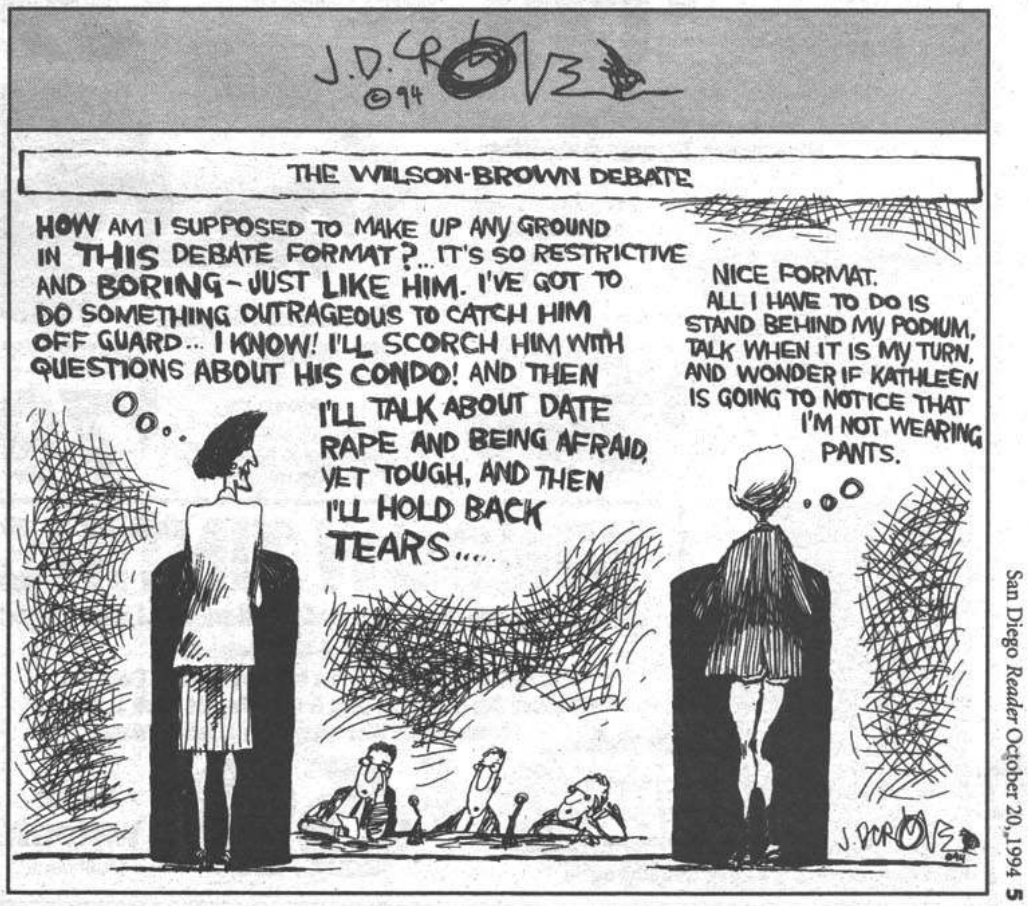

O'Connor's 1990 remodel was financed by a $70,000 gift to the city from the tax-exempt R.P. Foundation set up by her wealthy husband, the late hamburger magnate Robert O. Peterson. Those improvements included a gourmet kitchen and costly designer furniture.

Powers says Golding's redecorating committee has not yet established a budget. She says the redecorating will focus on Golding's personal office, the lobby entryway, the reception area, and the conference room, "because there are an awful lot of meetings there."

Who's going to pay for all that? Maryanne Pintar, Golding's press secretary, did not return repeated phone calls. But Powers says no public money will be used on the project. It will be funded, instead, by private donations collected under the auspices of Ann Beard, a former social director of the University Club, which, until its demise a few years ago, was a popular haunt of San Diego's old-school establishment.

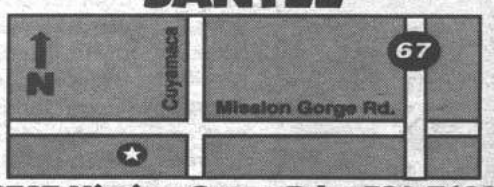

How much are they hoping to collect, and from whom? "We have not gotten that far yet," Powers says. "When it first started out, they [Golding staffers] were just talking about reaccessorizing, but as different individuals from the outside got involved in it, they felt it really warranted a more thorough look to make it more attractive." So now, Powers adds, "We're going to wait and see how much we can raise, and after that we will work on people who lived in apartment buildings.

Navarro says he believes that trash haulers also support the views expressed in his '94 position paper. "Because I understand the economics behind the county's trash dilemma, I think [trash haulers] see me as someone who can cut through the bureaucracy and get the job done," Navarro says.

San Diego councilman Roberts received substantially less money from private trash haulers. Frederick Penning, an executive with Waste Management, the nation's largest trash hauler, contributed $125 to Roberts's campaign, and Jay Powell of Mid American Waste Systems donated $250. Roberts did not respond to calls seeking comment.

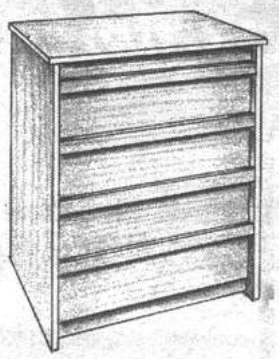

In the 5th District supervisorial race, San Marcos mayor Lee Thibadeau is squared off against rancher Bill Horn. Like Navarro, Thibadeau thinks the county bureaucracy has done a bad job managing the trash system. Thibadeau received over $3150 in donations from local trash haulers.

"I don't think that trash is a big issue for most voters," Thibadeau says. "As long as the trash truck comes and picks up their garbage, I don't think [voters] are going to make a big fuss." Thibadeau, who is also a former San Marcos City Council member, says he supports the idea that the county should get out of the trash business and allow the cities to handle the situation themselves. tion that the county is currently taking to allocate the responsibilities to fthe cities. That's where the responsibility belongs."

Thibadeau received $750 total from EDCO principals. He also received $1000 from principals of Mashburn Waste & Recycling, and $1000 from the principals of Coast Waste Management.

Thibadeau's opponent, Bill Horn, hasn't received any contributions from local trash haulers. Horn's spokesperson says he intentionally did not seek money from them because of the volatile nature of trash discussions. Horn has said he opposes a new landfill in North County.

Proposition C, the initiative to site a private landfill at Gregory Canyon near I-15 in Pala, is backed by mayors from La Mesa and Imperial Beach as well as councilwoman Judy McCarty.

"Proposition C is designed to break the political logjam that has prevented the county from opening a new North County dump for nearly a decade," says Sidney Notkin, a proponent of the initiative.

Critics of Proposition C wonder, if the initiative is really about helping the county site a landfill, why is Gregory Canyon the only proposed location on the ballot? "The county has narrowed its search to four possible locations. It seems suspicious that voters only get the chance to approve one," the county insider explains.

Citizens for Environmental Solutions, a San Marcos–based campaign committee, has raised nearly $300,000 in its efforts to get San Diego voters to approve the Gregory Canyon initiative. Most of the money comes from wealthy investment groups.

Disclosure records show that more than $200,000 of the sum collected by Gregory supporters comes from Servcon San Marcos, a company based in San Francisco. Jerry Riessen, an entrepreneur who is also president of OLS Energy, a company that develops power plants in California, is president of Servcon. Riessen has an option to purchase the Gregory Canyon site for $22.5 million from Waste Management Inc.

Records also show that the initiative is backed by Capital Foresight L.P, an investor group that operates out of Austin, Texas; Las Vegas, Nevada; and Beverly Hills, California. Capital Foresight's president, Naty Saidoff, has worked as a diamond dealer and real estate broker. Saidoff did not return calls seeking comment.

Another company, California Landfill Development Inc., contributed $28,000 to the Gregory initiative. The company, based in Haverhill, Massachusetts, is run by James Ricci. He also is president of Twin Rivers Technologies, a company that is devising ways to create fuel from soy products.

Opponents of the Gregory initiative say they don't have enough money to fight such a well-financed campaign. "How do you compete with an organization like that?" asks Virginia Bounarati, an activist for the North County Coalition, a group of 400 citizens against the Gregory Canyon Initiative. "When San Diegans cast their votes for Proposition C next month, they are voting for special-interest politics at its worst. Residents in South and East County are not aware of all of the problems with the Gregory Canyon site. It is an environmental and political disaster."

Bounarati believes that Gregory Canyon has too many hurdles to overcome. The canyon sits at the edge of the San Luis Rey River. Approximately 50 percent of all the county's drinking water passes through the area. Gregory Canyon is also full of boulders and rocks, and there is little to no landfill cover to properly operate a dump.

Bounarati is convinced that Servcon is going to sell the landfill to Waste Management Inc. after it gets the dump through the permit process.

Proponents of Proposition C argue that Bounarati and other critics are just local activists who are of the NIMBY (Not in my Back Yard) mentality. Unless voters approve the Gregory Canyon site, Servcon warns, San Diego County will be facing a trash crisis of "monumental proportions." Furthermore, they say, the landfill sight will be reviewed by 11 governmental agencies who will determine whether the site is viable from an environmental perspective.

"The county has tried to site a landfill in North County for 12 years that I am aware of, and failed miserably," Notkin concludes. "It's time that the public made the decision for them." ■ a limited budget and stretch dollars as much as we can."

Foster says that in the interest of ethics, Golding should carefully monitor donations and fully disclose who gave what. "Especially in a city like San Diego, where there is such a low limit for political contributions, situations such as this raise a lot of questions," she says. "In my opinion, most politicians are better off not doing these things. If it's so important that the mayor's office gets redecorated, then the city should pay to have the mayor's office redecorated. Obviously, in times of a tight budget, it would not be a good thing to have the city pay for it. But in a situation like this, at the very least, I would encourage the mayor to provide a complete list of donors and file it with the city clerk, so the public knows certain people are helping the mayor."

Foster also deems it essential that Golding disclose the full extent of her relationship with Szekely and Powers. Already, Szekely's largesse has gotten Golding into trouble. In 1993, the San Diego Union-Tribune reported that the most lucrative gifts given to any elected city official were the $1000 discounts to the Golden Door and Rancho La Puerta Golding received from the Szekelys. Under California law, it is illegal for a local official to accept gifts totaling more than $1000 from any one source in a calendar year. Golding got around that law, according to the U-T, "because the Golden Door is owned by Deborah Szekely, while Rancho La Puerta is a separate corporate entity owned by her son, Alex." Golding told the U-T that she was invited by the Szekelys to be their guest at the spas — the going rate for a week at the Golden Door is $4250 — but didn't want to risk running afoul of the state Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC). "Instead, she allowed each spa to cover the maximum allowable $1000 discount and paid the rest with her own money," the U-T reported, quoting Golding as saying she had known the Szekelys for 20 years.

Two years earlier, Golding, then a county supervisor, questioned the logistics of a proposal to build a water and sewer system straddling the international border near Tecate, Mexico. The measure, discussed by the board of supervisors in September 1992, was opposed by Rancho La Puerta, whose lobbyist, attorney Michael McDade, also happened to be one of Golding's three key strategists in her successful run for mayor.

Powers and Golding — or, rather, Golding's ex-husband, Richard Silberman — also go way back. In 1971, Silberman cut a deal with the state to renovate a dilapidated old motel in Old Town State Park. He and Powers, an interior decorator by trade, were the only bidders for concession rights. Silberman provided the money and Powers, the decorating know-how, to turn the motel into Bazaar del Mundo.

The colorful mini-mall soon became such a popular tourist attraction that by 1979, Silberman and Powers were grossing $10 million a year, according to an April 1989 story in the Los Angeles Times. Even so, the lease remained tiny, at just $3600 a month.

In the meantime, Silberman had sold his interest in the complex to Powers to join Governor Jerry Brown's cabinet. Powers, however, retained Silberman as a consultant and continued to make installment payments to him for his share in the business, even though as state business and transportation secretary he had authority over the establishment's four liquor licenses. In 1981, Silberman failed to disclose his financial ties to Powers while lobbying state legislators on her behalf, after he left office. A few months later, mounting public criticism led the state to renegotiate the lease agreement for 4.5 percent of Bazaar del Mundo's gross, resulting in more reasonable monthly payments of about $40,000.

"At the very minimum, Mayor Golding should disclose the fact that they [Szekely and Powers] helped her," Foster says, "if for nothing more than the appearance of propriety." ■

Heard the One About the Bird-Loving Lawyer?

By Bill Manson

Steve Crandall

With his talent he could be representing O.J. Simpson. Instead he's gone to court on behalf of the marbled murelet, a tiny bird.

"I'm a Greeny with short hair," says San Diego lawyer Steve Crandall. "And my first love is suing corporate America — on behalf of the environment."

But hold it: This is no dreamy-eyed, tree-hugging country boy. Crandall is a hard-nosed, self-confessed down-and-dirty trial lawyer from New Jersey (where there is no nature to preserve) who has spent most of his professional life prosecuting hardened criminals for the government.

So what's a tangle-jaw prosecutor doing volunteering to help near-bankrupt environmental groups defend some obscure birds up in Northern California?

Turns out Crandall mixed with the biggest on environmental questions. He was on the trial team that won $5 billion in punitive damages from Exxon this year for fishermen, the Inuit, and Alaskan settlers affected by the infamous 1989 oil spill.

Crandall says the Exxon Valdez, the spotted owl, and marbled murelet are of equal importance to him. "I've been angry about environmental destruction ever since my father started getting mad — and that was when I was a kid."

As he sat talking in the morning sun sipping coffee at an outside cafe recently, blue-eyed Crandall, 42, dressed like an ad for Gap in khakis and blue golfing shirt, still didn't know if he had saved the marbled murelet and the giant redwood trees it depends on.

The fight, though, was typical of the environmental battles he loves to take on.

It was when he met fellow lawyer Mark Harris earlier this year that Crandall got involved in the crusade for the little bird — and its ancient-growth tree-homes. "Harris is your original 'green' lawyer. He's a surfer, a pilot, lives off the grid, and was fighting this alone. I decided to try to help."

Gnatcatcher

The battle Harris and Crandall were taking on was daunting: Representing the Garberville-based environmental group EPIC (Environmental Protection Information Center) in its battle to prevent the Texas-owned Pacific Lumber Company from cutting down 237 acres of old-growth forest the Houston-based company owns. EPIC claims the Owl Creek grove of ancient redwoods is needed by the endangered marbled murelet for nesting. Owl Creek is part of six remaining areas where the bird is known to make its home.

The murelet is a robin-sized seabird that rockets in off the Northern California coast at up to 60 mph and nests high in the last stands (96 percent have already been logged) of redwood forest in Humboldt County. Like the trees, the marbled murelet is endangered. Of the historical estimated breeding population of 60,000 birds, only about 2000 remain today. They've been victims of gill nets, oil spills, and — above all, according to EPIC — loss of nesting habitat: the trees.

EPIC says the little birds nest in depressions of moss or lichen that they find in the crooks of the large limbs. The canopy helps protect their single egg from predators like crows and jays. The often 150-foot height of the nesting site allows the short-winged diving bird room to drop perhaps 30 feet before it can start gaining height when leaving the nesting limb.

The battle to save the trees wasn't puny. "We called Scotia [Pacific Lumber's Northern California town] the Kingdom of Scotia," says Crandall. "It's a company town. Everything is owned by Pacific Lumber Company. They make the rules, they break the rules, they do business the way they feel like doing business. If nothing else this trial was a comeuppance for them in the sense of exposing what they're all about."

Indeed, says Crandall, before the trial was over the lumber giant had been forced to produce internal memos showing that their own survey indicated that the Owl Creek Forest was very suitable murelet habitat, despite their claiming the opposite; and Pacific Lumber had faced accusations of scientific skullduggery, in "losing" documents showing the bird had been observed in the nesting area.

"A lot of environmental lawyers are fairly genteel," says Crandall. "What we ex-prosecutors do differently is we street-fight. We are always expecting that people are going to lie. With Pacific Lumber we said, 'Let's dig in.' By compelling discovery we got to internal memos, and then we started to see their true colors. Slowly but surely we dragged documents out of them. They weren't used to this."

Frank Bacik, one of the Pacific Lumber attorneys opposing Crandall and EPIC says it was unusual to be facing "out-of-town lawyers" on a case like this. "These guys were brought in from far-flung regions ....[EPIC] called in a different team," says Bacik. "And I think this is because...they were arguing a novel position for an expansion of the Endangered Species Act, one that, if it works, could effectively prohibit a lot of development on private property...and provide a lot of attorneys' fees for counsels such as these that took this case on a contingency basis."

Crandall doesn't apologize for his aggressive attitude towards Pacific Lumber. "You just have to look at the other side...The EPIC people are... beautiful. There was no money, but they did have volunteer paralegals working 24 hours a day for us. I have become a carrot-juice addict. But mostly, they believe: they find something in the redwoods almost like a religion. And it is an emotional thing to see these 800-year-old trees standing tall. These people dedicate their lives to protecting these trees,

Who Masterminded The WaterGage Break-In?
$25,000 CASH REWARD

Fluid Data Systems Of San Diego Will Pay A $25,000 Cash Reward To The First Party To Supply Information Leading To The Arrest and Conviction of Person(s) Who Sabotaged Barrett Reservoir WaterGage*

By Gene Glassey, President/Chief Engineer
Fluid Data Systems

San Diego had a "WaterGage Break-In" that is likely more significant than the Watergate Break-In of the Nixon era. The truth is being held in appalling secrecy by San Diego City Government and the San Diego Union-Tribune.

This open message is intended:

1. To provide public disclosure of Congressman George Miller's deception of President Clinton and Clinton Administration, by withholding vital knowledge of federal fraud, in the formulation and conduct of natural resources policy.
2. To provide public disclosure of extensive crimes, fraud and corruption Congressman George Miller perpetrated upon GS (U S Geological Survey, Water Resources Division) resultant from his having employed it as a political pawn and platform for most of two decades.
3. To provide public disclosure of how Miller's crimes, fraud and corruption, in turn, corrupted the administrative and procurement policies of San Diego City Government.
4. To provide public disclosure of alleged obstruction of justice by Mayor Susan Golding, City Attorney John W. Witt, Congresswoman Lyn Schenk and San Diego Union-Tribune for not reporting knowledge of these crimes and fraud to law-enforcement officials and for keeping them secret from the people of San Diego.
5. To describe need for a prompt federal grand-jury investigation of these crimes and fraud, in both, San Diego and federal governments.
6. To disclose extensive cult-type coercion of employees of, both, San Diego and federal governments to violate their personal ethics and the laws of their respective governments.
7. To disclose widespread dishonesty and confusion, nationwide, in water related activities resultant from GS fraud and incompetence.
8. To provide abundant proof that all GS procurements of hydrologic water-stage monitors — nationwide since 1982, were unlawful, procured to fraudulent GS mind-set specifications, as in San Diego.
9. To disclose use of cult methodologies by GS in the deception of City of San Diego, San Diego FBI and San Diego Union-Tribune.
10. To disclose how similar methods were used to deceive and induce Water Survey of Canada to follow fraudulent GS policy.
11. To disclose how Miller sought to destroy Fluid Data Systems before this expose' could be published, by unlawfully coercing federal agencies and other government entities he could control or influence, such as the City of San Diego, to boycott our products.
12. To disclose how an exemplary high-tech manufacturer, Fluid Data Systems — possessing as high ethics, creativity and social conscience as might be found — was nearly destroyed by these wrongs, orchestrated by Miller from the very heart of Congress.
13. To generate cash to help defray legal and news media costs from the nonprofit sale of the Autumn, 1994 issue of FDS newsletter, Fluid (Data)^2 that extensively documents Miller's crimes and frauds.
14. To propose that a professional hydrologic society bring a massive, multi-billion dollar class-action suit against our Federal Government, with proceeds to be used for the establishment of a nonprofit natural resources foundation to draw national attention to these crimes and fraud in government— and to advise Congress and governments worldwide, in matters relating to the conservation and thoughtful use of natural resources.
15. To merit the good will and assistance of the San Diego Community.
16. To stress the national need for a federal grand jury investigation of these matters — right here in San Diego, where there is an abundance of evidence and of remarkably qualified professional witnesses within California.

To the people of San Diego: This is genuine, based upon my rock-solid forty year personal experience and massive documentation. President Clinton and Congress were deceived by Congressman Miller. A recent letter from the new GS Chief Hydrologist complemented me upon my many contributions to hydrologic instrumentation, then went on to let me know he regretted I disagreed with GS policy, but that the Clinton Administration was united in its stand. I had written several letters to President Clinton, Secretary of the Interior Babbitt and Congressman Miller on these subjects over an extended period of time.

My letters to President Clinton, however, drew only replies from the foxes who ate the chickens. He, likely, never heard of the "WaterGage Break-In." A criminal WaterGage Break-In did occur, however. "That nut did not come loose by itself," were the words of a member of Congresswoman Schenk's staff — before he was ordered to clam-up like his boss.

If we accept the GS statement at face value — that the Clinton team is firmly united — the statement simply links President Clinton and Secretary of the Interior, Bruce Babbitt, to the WaterGage Break-In. There is no other possibility. It would seem the last thing on Earth President Clinton would want, right now, is for the U. S. Geological Survey to link him to the WaterGage Break-In!

FBI Fuzz Fizzled

— As a Result of Being Lied To By San Diego City Government — both duped by theGS Mess

No one in Mayor Golding's Office, Congresswoman Schenk's Office, City Attorney Witt's Office, the FBI, GS nor Union-Tribune ever made a credible denial nor explanation of these matters, just cult clam-ups and evasions. Fluid Data Systems extensive study indicates Miller deceived frosh Congresswoman Schenk into bringing a fraudulent message home to City Administration and Union Tribune — that my allegations had been "reviewed and found to be without substance." (Which statement, of itself, is grossly fraudulent since FDS has never even been notified of any such hearing — let alone given opportunity to present the abundant evidence we have.) The people of San Diego will be able to judge, for themselves, whether this message "has substance."

City officials and the Union-Tribune were coerced not to communicate with Fluid Data Systems in any way — just clam-up and heed GS bunko. The offenders advised the City to keep a large procurement of water-stage monitors, for all of its dozen reservoirs, secret from FDS — a violation of procurement regulations. (FDS is in truth, by rights of patents, the only qualified manufacturer — as extensively proved at all reservoirs of the California Water System and hundreds of other reservoirs in the United States and Canada.)

The specification employed forgery of the ALERT (a highly respected hydrologic society) name, wrongfully claiming the specification to be an ALERT specification. In the WaterGage Break-In, someone criminally sabotaged the federal government owned Barrett Reservoir WaterGage by loosening the nut of a tube fitting, creating a leak to detract from its performance a relatively short time before the procurement.

A responsible San Diego Water Utility engineer told me his agency specified our WaterGages on the requisition, but the paper work was changed "down town." Another conscientious Utility executive suggested I write to Mayor Golding, that she sought to be a champion of local business. (Nuf sed about that!) It seems Golding, Schenk, Witt and the Union-Tribune recognized their blunder rather promptly, as a result of letters I wrote, but chose to keep the whole stinking mess secret. It is, now, well evidenced that Golding, Schenk, Witt and the Union-Tribune would have simply stood by and watched Fluid Data Systems being destroyed by crime and fraud in government rather than admit their duplicity. They lied to and deceived the U.S. Attorney and FBI. "It is just a procurement dispute," were the San Diego Union-Tribune profound words of journalism.

Again, there has never been denial of any of these repeated allegations — just clam-ups and cover-ups. Similar deception succeeded in nearby Coachella Valley Water District and in Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt's home town of Phoenix and — it now seems, at hundreds of other local government entities throughout our United States — all lied to and deceived — corrupted by Miller and GS.

Now, it is time for truth — and for justice. It is time for primary offenders to go to prison for what are, in truth, crimes and fraud against our natural resources and the people. Fluid Data Systems has the evidence to put them there. It took forty years of interspersed effort for me to understand what I now call The GS Mess — which was, itself, continuously evolving — secretly — with cult-methodolgies.

The Autumn, 1994 issue of our 32 page, FLUID (DATA)2 is the ninth issue re The GS Mess published since 1988. This is the first issue offered for sale — nonprofit — to combat crime in government.

It is time for Miller's, Golding's, Schenk's, Witt's and the Union-Tribune's dark secret to be told — to reopen the door for science, rather than politics, in the technology for conservation and thoughtful use of our water resources. Finding "Who Masterminded the WaterGage Break-In" will be frosting on the cake!

This is a true story — with an abundance of real-life heroes, villains & clandestine drama — right here in San Diego!

this mixture of little old ladies and young hippies. We [the big-city lawyers working for them on a pro-bono basis] called them "The Tribe." This is why I do this. I love suing on behalf of innocents like these people, defending something you know is good."

Even though Crandall's professional life has been spent mostly in D.A.'s offices, he was pointing towards environmental law right from the start.

"My parents were both doctors and also naturalists. Dad especially, getting me caught up in his concerns over how precious nature is, and how fast it's being ruined. I saw Long Island being raped in the '60s and '70s. There was a complete lack of planning or management."

When he graduated from Princeton, Crandall joined the U.S. Attorney's office in New Jersey. "I was hired to do civil law and environmental law," he says. "Except with my very first case, I realized I was on the wrong side."

Crandall had to go after the Humane Society for trying to stop a deer hunt in a government forest. "It was a bit of a shocker. That was the beginning of my metamorphosis, when I started to think, 'Do I really want to be doing this kind of environmental law?' 'It's not what I came to do.' So I pushed to start prosecuting environmental crimes — and bang! That's where I found what I love."

His first such case was prosecuting importers of endangered black cayman crocodile skins, bringing 25-foot hides along from Colombia via Hong Kong. "I brought the curator of the Bronx Zoo in. He saw the hides and started crying. I got a conviction, but they only got six months to a year. The law still didn't take environmental crimes seriously."

Still a federal prosecutor, he decided to come west, to San Diego, where his sister had settled as a doctor.

"San Diego, in 1983, was pre-historic in its awareness of environmental crimes," he says. "I said I wanted to concentrate in that area. They said, 'Prove yourself.' So I started with parrots being smuggled in from Mexico."

He was able to put the word out among local FBI agents that he was looking for environmental cases. He established a small network of agents, which finally coalesced into the Hazardous Waste Task Force.

"I've taken the 'hippie' thing from colleagues all the time. They're partly right. I got the snickers over the parrot cases...until I finally got a conviction on the largest parrot-smuggler in Mexico. Five years in jail. With customs we got convictions for illegal shipping of hazardous waste to Mexico. I started to get kudos. I was awarded the Justice Department's Director's Award for Superior Performance. People started realizing that I wasn't a fly-by-night idealist."

Still, Crandall found something frustrating about prosecuting. "It's not prospective," he says. "You're always closing the barn door after the horse has bolted." By 1989, he'd had enough.

He left the government and joined Milberg, Weiss, Bershad, Specthrie and Lerach, a firm he liked because "they sue corporations for things like fraud. They're a pain in the butt to corporate America."

His first case — and his first five years with Milberg, Weiss were spent commuting to Alaska, fighting Exxon and jostling with 38 other law firms. It was only after two years solidly on the Exxon case that he was able to look for more local environmental issues. There followed three major successes. He stopped the County of San Diego from putting a highway through Mission Trails Regional Park in 1991; won $15 million in settlement from Southern California Edison to clean up the San Dieguito Estuary; and stopped the subdivision of areas within the Cleveland National Forest in 1993.

The problem was, these cases weren't proving cost-effective for Milberg, Weiss. "The honchos there said, 'This is too risky.' I said I wanted to continue doing this — and we split amicably."

So suddenly, from being part of a huge law firm with offices in New York and San Diego, Crandall was out on his own, finding himself in a world dominated "by non-profits and pro-bono law firms."

But Crandall's not short of work. While waiting for a result in the marbled murelet case, he's already got his teeth into the next project dear to his heart: fighting the Baldwin Company over development of the Otay Ranch lands.

"Can you believe? 24,000 homes. 70,000 people. The developers are running with this thing unchecked. Otay is a national treasure! It has the largest population of gnatcatchers in the country...." ■

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

Illustration by Rick Geary

Dear Matthew Alice:
Where did the expression "mad as a hatter" come from? What's a hatter, and why is a hatter so pissed off?

— Don't Get It, San Diego

You sure don't, Don't. The hatter isn't steamed, he's nuts. Loony. Daffy. Dotty. Crazed. Bughouse. A.k.a. "mad," as in madhouse, madman, mad dog, mad(ding) crowd. And a hatter is a guy who makes hats. (Duh...) That doesn't sound like much of a high-risk profession, but back in the Victorian era, hat makers used pure mercury to put a glossy finish on top hats. Hatters went bonkers from huffing toxic mercury fumes and absorbing it through their skin every day.

Dear Matt:
My friend and I were having a discussion about life in general, and we decided that we need to know why there is any stuff in the universe. Why is there anything instead of nothing? If there used to be nothing, it makes more sense that there would still be nothing. Can you help?

— Rick and Rita, Clairemont

If you're not already beyond help, you will be by the time I'm through with you. You're going to be really sorry you asked. Anyway, we'll take a crack at it (skirting the religious implications) with a little help from some consulting philosophers. According to all the big thinkers, "nothing" can't exist, even though you seem to think "nothing" is more logical than "something" — rubber cigars, chow mein, nuclear waste, and all the other "stuff" of the universe.

The brainiacs challenge you to imagine "nothing." Go ahead. Give it a shot. The holes in Swiss cheese? An empty bank account? A dark, spooky void stretching to nowhere? Ixnay, they say. Even the void has dimension in time and space; it can be imagined and described, therefore it can't be "nothing." Real "nothing" has no characteristics and so it can't exist. The savants conclude that a world full of rubber cigars and chow mein is much more logical; "nothing" has never existed, and the universe is infinitely old because "something" could not have arisen from "nothing." They have reduced it all to a mathematical formula, in case you're still not convinced. But you're asking for even more trouble if you insist on seeing the proof.

Dear Matthew:
On vacation recently, I saw a machine that for 50 cents squashed a penny into a thin copper disk with a picture of the Golden Gate Bridge on it. I remember my dad telling me when I was a kid that it was illegal to deface money. How can this machine be legal?

— Bob G., San Diego

Golly, don't tell me Pops actually told little Bobby something that wasn't true! Why, this must be the only time ever, ever that a dad has filled his kid's bean with wrong-headed nonsense! And wrong-headed it is. Unless your intent is to counterfeit, you can mash, bend, staple, cut, fold, file, paint, melt, puncture, etch, or otherwise deface a coin, and you won't show up one day on America's Most Wanted. In fact, if you can get a lot of bozo tourists to pay you 50 or 100 times the penny's face value once it's smashed and embossed, why, go get 'em, Bob.

Dear Matthew Alice:
My in-laws recently came to visit from Ireland. When my mum made the remark, "That's a Yank for you!" I said something derogatory regarding Micks. Where did we assume the name Yankee or Yank? How does one adopt a name like "Yank" or "Limey" or "Mick"?

— Kelly, Mission Valley

Some fun at your house, Kelly. Do all your discussions end in insults and food fights? Well, you can bet name-calling is a sport older than recorded time. Calling the guy in the cave across town a pinhead probably predates fire.

"Yankee" seems to have been applied to several different nationalities, though I'll warn you, this is another word that has a hazy parentage. I'll go with the most commonly accepted story. The word originally may have been "Jahn Kees," Dutch for "John Cheese," the personification of a dirt-ordinary dolt. It was applied in the 1600s to Netherlanders by Brits and the Flemish. The resulting song, "Yankee Doodle," with slightly different words from the one we sing, was sung in England as a put-down of Oliver Cromwell and the Puritans. ("Doodle" was a common Britishism for "simpleton.") When British troops came to North America, they sang "Yankee Doodle" to taunt the colonists, most particularly New Englanders, and called them Yankees. During the American Revolution, New Englanders changed the song's words to the lyrics we know today and sang it right back at the British, adopting proudly the name "Yankee" as a sort of self-defense. Since the label, good or bad, was most associated with New Englanders, it became a handy put-down for Rebels to use during the Civil War. World War I made the term universally known, sometimes a compliment, sometimes an insult, depending on who was saying it.

Yankee Doodle Update: In the earlier 1990s, the U.S. was plagued by a Bulgarian computer virus that brought your system to a sudden halt, then beeped out the tune to "Yankee Doodle" while it ate your data. Hey, Europe, back off!

Got a question you need answered? Get it straight from the hip. Write to Matthew Alice, c/o the Reader, P. O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803, or fax your questions to 231-0489.

Enigma in a Turban

To learn more about it, I was told by a local religious scholar that I should talk to an Encinitas businesswoman whom I'll call To'chula. Over the phone, she sounded cautious. The incident in question had been quite personal, and she disliked the thought of public attention. With the promise of anonymity, however, she described what had happened.

Now 47, To'chula is a Native American who has immersed herself in religious and philosophical study since she was in her late 20s. But she says she knew nothing about Paramahansa Yogananda a dozen or so years ago, when she and a friend went to lunch one day at the old Shepherd restaurant, a vegetarian cafe fronting the highway just a few doors north of the Fellowship property. To'chula states, "I never had seen Yogananda's likeness in any way, and I never had studied the teachings of the Fellowship" (which Yogananda founded in 1920). Nevertheless, as she ate her lunch that day, she began to sense the presence of someone standing in back of her. She thought at first that a waiter was hovering near the door that led into the restaurant kitchen. "But it persisted for 30 to 45 seconds," To'chula recalls. At last she turned around to look. She saw something floating in the air that she describes as looking like a bull's eye. "It was all the colors of the rainbow, and it was pulsating. And in the middle of it was a man."

To'chula says the apparition was dressed in robes. His skin was dark; his hair long and softened by a loose natural wave. The image seemed holographic, she elaborates, "like the Haunted Mansion in Disneyland where they have the people dancing." At the sight, she drew in her breath in a gasp so loud that it was almost a scream. The other restaurant patrons turned to stare at her. And the man, she says, vanished. "Then I experienced the most extraordinary series of physical reactions. First I started laughing hysterically. Then I cried. Then I started shaking, all within a two-minute period." To'chula's friend pointed out a painting of Yogananda on the wall of the restaurant that To'chula had not noticed before. It was the very image of the being who had materialized before the distraught woman.

And why not? Anyone who has read the life story of this Indian mystic might ask why he hasn't put in more appearances at the Encinitas site that meant so much to him. It was on these grounds, in rooms preserved today just as he left them, that Yogananda dictated his Autobiography of a Yogi, the spiritual chronicle studded with miraculous occurrences (most of them in India), which has since been translated into 18 languages.

Paramahansa Yogananda an hour before his death, March 7, 1952

Yogananda didn't die in Encinitas, but at the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles in 1952, at the age of 59. "Some of his disciples made fools of themselves. They said he was not dead, but just in samadhi [a higher state of consciousness in which the person more or less withdraws from the senses]. He was dead," snaps Omar Garrison, a British-educated journalist who met Yogananda around 1937 and became a close friend, though not a formal disciple, of the guru. Garrison now lives in retirement in Utah, but at the time of Yogananda's death he was writing for the Los Angeles Mirror. He reacted like a journalist when he learned from one of the employees at Forest Lawn Cemetery that Yogananda's body seemed to be resisting the normal postmortem deterioration. Garrison broke the story, which he says was viewed as "somewhat of a scandal." (He says the cemetery workers weren't supposed to be gossiping about their deceased clientele.) The episode still lives on in an appendix to Yogananda's Autobiography in which extracts from a notarized letter are printed. Written by one Harry T. Rowe, Forest Lawn's mortuary director in 1952, the letter states that "At the time of receiving Yogananda's body, the mortuary personnel expected to observe, through the glass lid of the casket, the usual progressive signs of bodily decay."

Instead, Rowe wrote, day after day passed with no sign of any mold upon the dead man's skin, "no visible desiccation took place in the bodily tissues.... No odor of decay emanated from his body at any time.... The physical appearance of Yogananda on March 27th, just before the bronze cover of the casket was put into position, was the same as it had been on March 7th." Concluded the mortician, "The case of Paramahansa Yogananda is unique in our experience."

Many aspects of Yogananda's life were unique, including the saga of how he came to take up residence on the Encinitas bluff. That story too has a supernatural element; it began with a transcontinental vision.

Yogananda told the child that the Lord was calling him to America.

According to the Autobiography, "enigmatic glimpses of three buildings" had come since early youth to Mukunda Lal Ghosh, the second son and fourth child of a prosperous middle-class family who lived near the Himalaya Mountains in northeastern India. One of those buildings was "a sylvan retreat on a plain." Another sat on a hilltop, while the third overlooked the sea. None figured in the life of young Mukunda, whose father was an executive of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway and whose mother bore eight children. But vivid otherworldly images were a fixture of the boy's earliest existence. "Clear recollections came to me of a distant life in which I had been a yogi amid the Himalayan snows," he would later write. By the age of eight, he had already experienced a miraculous healing. "While at our family estate in Ichapur, Bengal, I was stricken with Asiatic cholera," the Autobiography recounts. "My life was despaired of; the doctors could do nothing." At his bedside, Mukunda's frantic mother ordered him to "bow mentally" to a photograph of her guru, a man named Lahiri Mahasaya. "I gazed at his photograph and saw there a blinding light, enveloping my body and the entire room. My nausea and other uncontrollable symptoms disappeared," Yogananda wrote. "I had instantly recovered from a usually fatal disease."

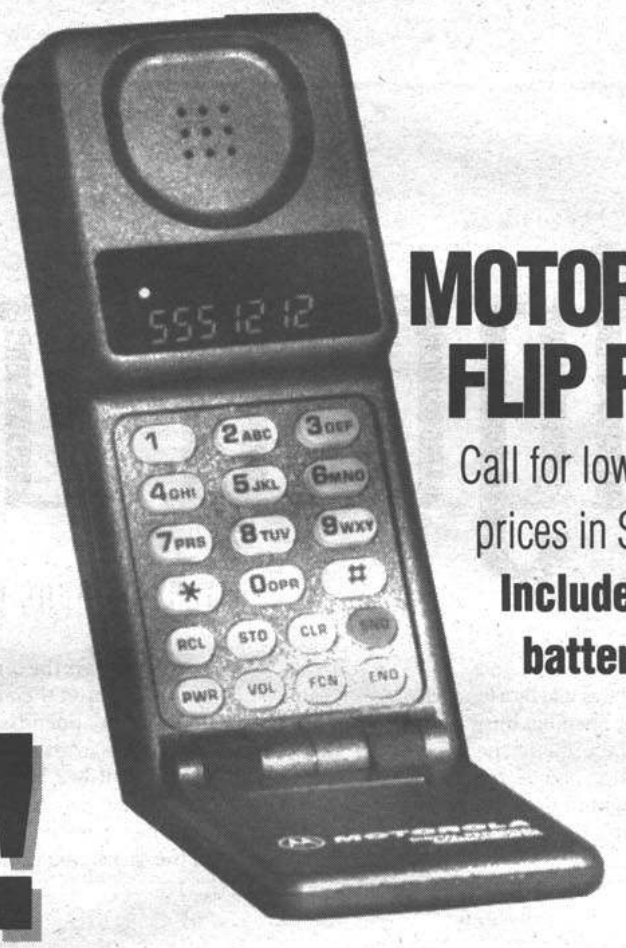

He had many other religious experiences, and the boy resolved to devote all his attention to God. That goal clashed with his father's educational plans for him, and there followed many years during which Mukunda flirted again and again with academic catastrophe, as he directed his attention and energy to spiritual rather than intellectual inquiries. It was soon after his near-miraculous graduation from high school that he found a spiritual master in the form of a swami known as Sri Yukteswar. Much to Mukunda's dismay, this guru also urged the youth to go on to college. ("Someday you will go to the West," he was said to have told Mukunda, adding, "Its people will be more receptive to India's ancient wisdom if the strange Hindu teacher has a university degree.")

Mukunda received an A.B. degree from Calcutta University in 1915, and a few weeks later, Sri Yukteswar initiated him into the Swami Order, an ancient form of Indian monkhood, which, among other things, requires the selection of a new name. (Yogananda's choice means bliss [ananda] through divine union [yoga]). "The ideal of selfless service to all mankind and of renunciation of personal ties and ambitions leads most swamis to engage actively in humanitarian and educational work," explains the Autobiography. It didn't take the new monk long to find such a project. Yogananda started schools, beginning with a small one in the Bengal countryside but soon winning the patronage of a local maharaja. With the rich man's aid, Yogananda was able to move to a palace set on a 25-acre estate in the town of Ranchi, about 200 miles from Calcutta. In this, the "building on a sylvan plain," he could accommodate 100 youthful boarders, but at the end of his first year, "applications for admission had reached 2000."

Yogananda records that this success was interrupted one day while he was meditating behind some dusty boxes in the storeroom of the Ranchi school. ("A private spot was difficult to find during those busy years with the youngsters!") At once his "inward view" was filled with "a panorama of Western faces," which caused him to exclaim, "Surely these people are Americans!" The vision continued, Yogananda writes. "A vast multitude, gazing at me intently, swept actorlike across the stage of consciousness." Seconds later, when one of the schoolboys discovered his hiding place, Yogananda told the child that the Lord was calling him to America. Within hours, according to the Autobiography, he was on a train bound for Calcutta, where he says the next day he got an invitation to serve as India's delegate to the International Congress of Religious Liberals about to be held in Boston.

Yogananda's beneficent father interceded with a check, and the young swami scrambled to get a passport. In August 1920, he pulled away from the shore of India aboard The City of Sparta, the first passenger ship bound for America after World War I. Two months later, he disembarked at Boston Harbor and on October 6 gave his speech to the assembly of religious leaders.

A Los Angeles Daily Times article alluded to "accusations that a love-cult is being conducted under the cloak of the Vedantic religion of India."

In many ways, Yogananda's audience was well-primed to hear his message. The Vedas and Upanishads had been translated into English by the beginning of the 1800s, and those sacred Hindu scriptures had influenced many American religious leaders (including Ralph Waldo Emerson) long before any Hindu arrived in the New World with an eye to starting some formal organization here. Yogananda wasn't the first such East Indian to do that. He was preceded by a charismatic young swami named Vivekenanda, who attended the 1893 Parliament of Religions in Chicago. Vivekenanda later drew crowds on a lecture tour that took him throughout the country, and within a year or so the Vedanta Society sprang into existence and grew quickly. According to J. Gordon Melton's Encyclopedia of American Religions, others also helped popularize Hinduism in the first years of this century, including an American named Peter Coon, who became well-known as "Oom the Omnipotent." (By 1910, Coon opened a New York Sanskrit College, where he combined the teaching of yoga, Hindu philosophy, and the giving of advice on sex to a following that included some wealthy socialites.)

As strange as the turban-bedecked Yogananda must have looked in Boston in 1920, his ideas thus weren't altogether alien. Moreover, his particular message — that both Eastern and Western teachings contain the same essential truth — went over just fine with the Unitarians who had sponsored the Boston conclave. Yogananda also soon discovered that ordinary New Englanders were interested in his thoughts. "Because of Father's generous check, I was able to remain in America after the congress was over," he later recorded in the Autobiography. "Three happy years were spent in humble circumstances in Boston. I gave public lectures, taught classes, and wrote a book of poems." The president of the College of the City of New York contributed the preface for the latter.

It's curious that out of the almost 600 pages that constitute Yogananda's autobiography (published in 1946), the swami devotes only about eight pages to the 15 years that followed his arrival in America. Those are the years in which he stepped into the limelight and founded his own religion, years in which he acquired a number of rich and powerful patrons and thousands of ordinary followers, many of whom regarded him as almost a living god. Yogananda paid a visit to the White House (in 1927), yet he forewent recording any of his impressions of Coolidge. (He instead devotes five of the eight pages covering 1920–1935 to discussing his great admirer, the plant breeder Luther Burbank, whom Yogananda regarded in turn as a "saint.")

Whatever the reason underlying his reticence, Yogananda seems to have communicated it to his followers, who today number in the hundreds of thousands worldwide (according to a spokeswoman at the Fellowship headquarters in Los Angeles). No book has ever been written about Yogananda other than his own account, and despite the fact that he lived in Encinitas for at least ten years, Fellowship leaders there say they have no documents recording his years on the premises. When I asked for access to any records in Los Angeles, officials turned me down, polite but immovable. I was shown a 30-minute version of a two-hour video about Yogananda produced by the Fellowship. Yet once again, facts about the religious leader's life in America were scarce. The production instead focuses on Yogananda's disciples — everyone from Fellowship monks and nuns to the actor Dennis Weaver — all describing their emotional reactions to the leader.

Many mention his striking physical appearance, in particular his eyes. Large, dark, and heavy-lidded, they look (in photos) filled with a languid bliss. Set in a face that remained smooth and glowing well into the swami's later years, it's hard to imagine being pinned by them in a stare that was sharp or searching. Instead his gaze is misty, humorous, benevolent. Striking too is the cataract of blue-black hair that flowed in waves down to his shoulder blades. Although Yogananda sometimes donned a business suit, he more often wore orange silk robes, which concealed a figure that was always chubby, at the least. He loved to eat, according to people who knew him, and later pictures reveal a wide girth and a double chin.

Yogananda gave eight "soul-stirring free lectures" on the subject of "everlasting youth" in April of 1932 in the ballroom of the Hotel San Diego.

Yet he had a physical strength that could be astonishing, according to Brother Mitrananda, a Fellowship monk for 25 years and one of the leaders of the Encinitas ashram. Mitrananda never knew Yogananda in person, but he says he's heard stories about Yogananda's lecture tours. The swami would often line up a group of men on stage, then urge them to try to push him over. "And they couldn't," says Mitrananda. However, "with his stomach he would just knock them all back. He did this kind of thing in the beginning, but then he saw that it was really sensationalistic...just a P.T. Barnum kind of thing. And so he stopped it."

Mitrananda says other factors helped insure Yogananda's success when he left Boston in 1924 and set off across the nation. He always advertised in local newspapers, and Mitrananda says Yogananda also had gained entry into a network of influential New Yorkers. He somehow met John Barron, the founder of the Wall Street Journal. Amelita Galli-Curci, the most famous opera singer of the day, was enthralled by him and introduced the swami to other glittering cultural and political figures. "He met Woodrow Wilson's daughter," says Mitrananda. "He met the daughter of Leo Tolstoy. There were lots of people who knew lots of people, so when he traveled, he would be introduced to the mayor. We see pictures of him with car dealers who'd give him a car for the week. Everybody wanted on this bandwagon because he was so personable."

By the end of 1924 he'd reached California, where he visited Luther Burbank at Burbank's home in Santa Rosa. In January of 1925, Yogananda sailed onto the pages of the Los Angeles Daily Times in a story announcing that he'd been the guest of honor at a private banquet held at the Biltmore. The story also informed readers that Yogananda was about to give a series of talks dealing with "such subjects as mastering the subconscious by the superconscious, scientific spiritual healing, highest technique of concentration, and other talks of like character."

On the day before Yogananda's first lecture, a prominent ad in the paper's "Theaters, Amusements, and Entertainments" section stated that "MILLIONS HAVE MARVELLED AT THE WONDER MESSAGE of this saint of the Far East sent by a reigning prince of India the Maharajah of Kasimbazar — SWAMI YOGANANDA — Admission Free." "Come Early! Thousands turned away," the next day's ad warned. When the newspaper dispatched a reporter to the proceedings, she reported that Yogananda "drew an immense crowd" to the Music-Arts Hall. "Sponsored as he is by so many local lights, including Capt. and Mrs. Richmond Pearson Hobson, Mrs. Rufus von KleinSmid, Mrs. Isadore Dockweiler, Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, Harry Haldeman and others too numerous to list, my own curiosity was duly whetted with the rest," the reporter gushed.

What they got was the swami, "clad in a peach-colored silk robe, wearing his black curly hair long and hanging about his shoulders, and a wristwatch upon his left hand. Swami Yogananda is not tall, and neither is he thin and emaciated as some Indian teachers who have visited us have been. On the contrary, an air of prosperous well-being pervades him." Besides a lengthy discussion of Yogananda's thoughts on "Raja Yogo" (as the writer misheard it), she also noted some clues to the speaker's apparent affluence. Although admission was free, a "freewill offering" was solicited and audience members were urged to buy the speaker's portrait for $2 apiece (the equivalent of about $16 today) along with various books and pamphlets. The reporter also noted that "the Swami gives this precious knowledge of his methods in 12 lessons for $25 [more than $200 in 1994 dollars] — and his courses are already so crowded that it is difficult to secure a hall large enough."

Whether it was the effusive reception, the congenial weather, or some other factor that swayed him, Yogananda decided to stay in Los Angeles, and sometime in 1925 he brought to life the second architectural element from his early visions — the building on a hilltop — by buying a large piece of property on Mt. Washington, overlooking Pasadena, Glendale, and Dodger Stadium. The Mt. Washington site contained a building that had been a famous old resort hotel. "They used to have a cog railway up to it, and famous tennis matches were played there," says Brother Mitrananda, the monk in Encinitas. He says that soon after Yogananda acquired the property, he invited a group of city officials to visit him there — even though he hadn't yet had time to furnish the place with such basics as a table and silverware. But Yogananda's self-confidence was unshakable. "He said, 'Come on, we're going to do just like we do in India!' And they sat on the ground and he served them on banana leaves, and they thought it all was just ever so charming."

That every official in L.A. was not dazzled by the swami seems apparent from a series of articles that appeared in the Times in 1928. "Cult To Be Subject of New Inquiry," announced one. It stated that although the district attorney's office some months before had looked into the practices at the Mt. Washington center and had found "nothing criminal," another investigation was being launched "to establish if any juvenile laws are being violated at the Hindu cult headquarters." A few days later, a longer article alluded to "accusations that a love-cult is being conducted under the cloak of the Vedantic religion of India" and elaborated, "The interest of the District Attorney's office in the asserted love-cult activity is said to be centered on whether young girls were included in the various classes in which love and sex theories are declared to be unfolded."

If the D.A. ever discovered any wrongdoing, no record of it survives in the indices to the old Times articles. And it seems unlikely that any loose behavior was occurring; Yogananda's writings suggest he himself was a lifelong celibate whose attitude toward sex fell somewhere between mild dislike and repulsion.

Temple on Edge Of Cliff After Earth Slide

An earth slippage is toppling the Golden Lotus Temple of All Religions, built on a coastal promontory at Encinitas, into the sea.

The temple, famous landmark on the coast highway since it was built in 1936, and used each Sunday for religious services, cracked up and tilted over at a 45 degree angle yesterday afternoon.

Sheriff Bert Strand dispatched deputies to the scene and he made a personal inspection of the damage. Strand posted uniformed deputies on the beach area below the slipping temple to prevent persons from using the beach in event the temple finally plunges into the sea.

Furnishings Saved

The temple began slipping shortly after 1 p. m. and Rev. Bernard Cole, with others at the religious center, salvaged oriental rugs and other expensive furnishings from the building. By the time the temple plunged part way down the cliff, cracking the sides and breaking windows, all of the furnishings had been removed.

Paramahansa Yogananda, Indian religious leader, who erected the temple and founded the sect in this country, was absent from the grounds when the accident occurred. He was reported in Los Angeles at the headquarters of the Self-Realization Fellowship, the name by which the religious organization is known.

Gold Domes Covered

The damaged temple was well known to motorists on the coast highway because of the gold-leaf covered domes atop the structure. The labor of applying the gold leaf on the four domes cost more than $3000.

San Diego Union, July 22, 1942

But Los Angeles wasn't the only place where racy rumors swirled around the guru. At the very same time that the L.A. district attorney's minions were poking their noses into the classrooms at Mt. Washington, Yogananda was in Miami — caught up in a scandal whose repercussions reached as far as the New York Times. One of its front-page stories on January 4, 1928, told how Miami officials and police were ordering Yogananda not to speak publicly in the Florida city because they thought if he did, "violence might result," instigated by husbands enraged over their wives paying the guru up to $35 for lessons. One irate gentleman reportedly told the police chief "that if he found his wife at the lecture he would kill Yogananda. He said he had asked his wife not to attend...but she had said she would do so if the Swami appeared," the article stated. "The son of another woman reported that he had found his mother trying to walk on the Miami River because 'Yogananda told her she could do it.' " Despite testimony from a former California congressman that Yogananda was "one of the most godly men he ever knew," along with other legal efforts, Yogananda finally left Miami, in compliance with police orders.

Darrough found the bluff collapsed and the temple clinging to the edge of it, canted at a 45-degree angle toward the sea, and inching downward.

Yogananda's Los Angeles organization nonetheless continued to grow, as did interest in India among Southland residents. By the end of 1932, the religion editor of the Los Angeles Times was declaring, "Today there are more swamis to the square mile in Southern California than in any other section of the country." Of them, "the most spectacular" was Yogananda, the editor wrote.

Yogananda made some trips down to San Diego County during this period. For example, he gave eight "soul-stirring free lectures" on the subject of "everlasting youth" in April of 1932 in the ballroom of the Hotel San Diego. And it must have been around then that he discovered the undeveloped Encinitas acreage, which he proclaimed to be the ocean-view setting from his childhood vision. "He thought it was an enchanted spot," says Omar Garrison, Yogananda's journalist friend, who recalls that the guru had a mobile home custom-built for him by the Pullman Company, which he would park up on top of the cliffs. "He meditated there," says Garrison. But although the property was for sale, Yogananda didn't have enough money to buy it, say Fellowship spokespersons today. He did have a rich disciple named James J. Lynn, an oil and insurance executive who paid for the swami to make a 16-month return visit to India, which began in June of 1935. During Yogananda's absence, Lynn also secretly purchased the land in Encinitas, then oversaw the construction of a luxurious retreat there.

Lynn managed to astonish the guru with his homecoming gift, despite Yogananda's claims of being able to see into the deepest corners of his disciples' souls. The monks and nuns who live on the property today tell the story of how Lynn drove the religious leader down to Encinitas; of how distressed Yogananda was to note the disappearance of the "For Sale" sign; how indignant to see that someone had built there; how speechless when he realized that the building was his. Today this Hermitage, as it is called, lies at the end of the long driveway that enters the grounds from K Street; most of the time, a sign announces it is off-limits to visitors (unlike the magnificent Meditation Gardens, open daily). But from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. most Sundays, the forbidding sign is removed and the Hermitage doors open.

From the outside, the building where Yogananda lived and worked seems a simple, very Southern Californian construction: two stories frosted with white stucco and topped with red clay roof tiles; encircled by a thick border of pink and white begonias, mature palms, and twisting junipers. But just inside the double-doored front entrance, visitors face a carpeted stairway so wide that it feels ceremonial. Only at the top of the 14 steps does the logic of the building become apparent: the upper rooms command the clifftop, letting in enormities of sea and sky through tall, wood-framed windows. There's a huge, formal dining room and an even larger salon. A short corridor leads to Yogananda's small study and bedroom. Braided silken ropes guard the doorways and lie over most of the furniture.

Closer inspection brings into focus sumptuous details: teakwood tables and ebony chairs carved with fantastic Oriental friezes; a gorgeous brass filigree floor lamp; a Tibetan brazier made of brass, silver, and gold. The artworks, the touches of exotica — rare seashells, for example, arranged on a bearskin rug in the study — all seem the trappings of some wealthy, well-traveled collector. (Most were gifts, Yogananda's followers say.) Against such splendor, the few personal items like the polished brown leather bedroom slippers tucked next to Yogananda's bed somehow look staged.

Altar

Yet Yogananda's followers say Lynn conceived of the Hermitage as a very personal refuge indeed, a place where Yogananda could escape in solitude. They say Yogananda did in fact spend a few weeks alone here after Lynn unveiled his surprise but that the swami soon wanted to share the delights of the place with friends and disciples. And so the Golden World Colony, as it became known, developed into the central base for Yogananda's activities. Plans were announced for retreat facilities that would be open to all the Fellowship's members (then estimated at 150,000) and throughout 1937 the swami directed the construction of a temple adjoining the gardens being planted just north of the colony's living quarters. This temple was to sit on the highest knoll on the estate, right out on the cliff edge. By October of 1937, it was complete enough for the San Diego Union to judge it "one of the most unusual and beautiful [temples] in the world."

Christened the Golden Lotus Temple of All Religions, the building was massive. Huge lotus buds encrusted with gold leaf sprouted from a roof that was open to meditating devotees. A four-story glass tower also rose like a lighthouse next to the central structure, inside which "hundreds" could "enjoy the ocean view thru the panoramic windows," so declares a flyer written not long after the dedication. The flyer adds that a "blue tile altar" beneath one of the windows supported the statues of Christ, Krishna, St. Francis, Buddha, Zoroaster, Mohammed, Rama, and several other Indian religious figures. A large pool situated on the side of the temple mirrored the whole complex "like a lovely dream."

Opera singer Amelita Galli-Curci moved to San Diego to be closer to her guru/idol.

Looking back, I have to wonder how Yogananda, with his vaunted psychic powers, failed to recognize just how short a time the dream was to last. Almost at once, auguries appeared that were visible to Clarence Darrough. Darrough, now 81, lives near the top of Mt. Palomar, but back in 1938, his home was Encinitas, just a mile and a half away from the new place of worship. A construction supervisor, he had watched as first the Hermitage and then the temple took shape, and he'd even donated a number of Torrey pines to be planted on the grounds. But he noted with concern that "a regular lake" would appear on the property after every heavy rain. Darrough says the county had built K Street in such a way that rainwater could not drain from it but seeped into the ground and flowed west toward the cliffs on whose edge Yogananda's temple perched.

Darrough says he'd met Yogananda a number of times at the truck stop across Highway 101 from the Fellowship property. "He used to go over and visit with the people in the restaurant. Oh, he was very personable!" recalls the retired construction supervisor. But Darrough says what really brought him and Yogananda together were the swami's mounting concerns during the winter of 1941–'42. Storms that season were fierce.

"It rained for seven days and nights at one point," the old man recalls. Around 10:30 on the night of July 21, 1942, Darrough got a call from someone at the Hermitage expressing concern about the temple's prospects for survival. Darrough says when he dressed and hastened to the property, he found the bluff collapsed and the temple clinging to the edge of it, canted at a 45-degree angle toward the sea, and inching downward. When the war had broken out the previous December, naval authorities had forced the Fellowship members to cover the golden domes with white cloth, to foil any Japanese bombers looking for a landmark. Now Darrough and a small band of other rescue workers worked through the night to remove these great sheathed baubles, along with the stained glass windows, oak pews, Oriental rugs, and other valuable interior furnishings.

The building itself couldn't be saved, crashing within hours down the cliff. After the disaster, Darrough says he urged Yogananda to sue the county. The swami did so, asking $50,000 for damages, but the complaint was dismissed by both the local and appellate courts.

Darrough today believes Yogananda lost due to prejudice. He says he saw the same attitudes among some of his neighbors in Encinitas. "In a small town, someone will criticize the sun coming up. In this case, they didn't want yogis coming in. And oh! The insulting remarks that were made!" Such remarks continued right up to when Darrough was serving on the San Dieguito High School school board and took it upon himself to invite the swami to give the invocation and benediction at the school's graduation ceremonies. "The community had not yet fully accepted the Self-Realization group, and it certainly wasn't because the members weren't doing their part," Darrough asserts. But Yogananda wound up delivering "just the most beautiful invocation that I think anybody ever heard. I would say that the next day the sun came up on a whole new community, to the point where you didn't hear the slurs anymore. It was a turning point."

Garden

Yogananda had a revelation that his life was drawing to a close. After 1948 he began spending more and more time in the Mojave Desert.

And counterbalancing the loss of the temple were other triumphs. In September of 1943, Yogananda opened a new house of prayer in a graceful building just north of downtown San Diego, and for the rest of the decade, he conducted services there on alternate Sundays. (He also presided over a Hollywood temple that had opened in 1942. Journalist Omar Garrison says the swami made the four- to five-hour commute in one of a number of the Fellowship's cars, driven by a Mexican chauffeur.) Occasional lecture tours continued to take him farther afield, but famous admirers also made their way to the succulent Indian banquets served in the Hermitage dining room. Among them, says Brother Mitrananda, were movie stars Greta Garbo and Ramon Navarro, conductor Leopold Stokowski, dancer Ruth St. Denis, religious scholar Walter Evans-Wentz, and opera singer Amelita Galli-Curci, who moved to San Diego County to be closer to her guru/idol.

By the middle of the 1940s, Yogananda was also immersed in the creation of his epic autobiography. "He would dictate this thing for hours on end," sometimes straight throughout the night, recalls Garrison. "It was a continuous operation. The man had incredible stamina. He wore out secretaries."

Garrison says he discovered that one of those amanuenses, one Miss L.V. Pratt (later known as Tara Mata), was editing the guru's discourses with a rather heavy hand. Garrison says he exploded, "Don't let her change anything! She thinks she knows more than you. And she doesn't." He says Yogananda came to agree with him, and Garrison offers the opinion, "It's the sincerity of the book that makes it."

The Autobiography does resound with simple declarations that convey an artless sense of innocence. The tone contributes to carrying the reader through Yogananda's recollections of one supernatural feat after another, performed by such characters as the Perfume Saint (who made scents appear and extracted objects out of thin air), the Tiger Swami (who fought the big cats with his bare hands), and the Levitating Saint (who not only defied gravity but also once performed a series of breathing exercises in front of Yogananda "with such amazing force that it seemed that an actual storm had arisen in the room!"). Upon the book's 1946 publication, both Time and Newsweek took notice, though Time's review ("Here Comes the Yogiman") couldn't quite keep the smirk out of its tone. (While acknowledging that the dearth of swami autobiographies made Yogananda's contribution "something of a document," it "is not likely to give the uninitiated much insight into India's ancient teachings," Time sniffed, adding that such literary followers of Indian philosophy as Aldous Huxley, Christopher Isherwood, and Gerald Heard viewed Yogananda with contempt.)

Public demand for the book far exceeded the snickers; a Los Angeles spokesperson for the Fellowship, which publishes the Autobiography, says "countless millions of copies" of it have been sold worldwide. As the '40s drew to a close, Yogananda's life more and more resembled that of a besieged titan of industry, according to profiles that appeared around that time. He was overseeing 82 centers and churches stretching all the way to the Gold Coast of Africa, San Diego Magazine reported in 1951. "He directs such diverse activities as a goat farm in Arizona, a desert retreat for monks and nuns of the Order overlooking Palm Springs, papaya groves and a restaurant in Encinitas...." (This "cleansitarian" eating place was located out on Highway 101, next to the central lotus tower. Raw vegetable juices and "mushroomburgers" were the specialties.) Continued the San Diego Magazine writer, "On [Yogananda's] busy days he puts in 16 to 18 hours at his desk, takes a three- or four-hour rest and comes back for more. An avalanche of mail greets The Master every morning. These consist mostly of requests for his photo (now available in three poses — the long-time favorite, seated with folded hands, and his latest photograph, seated). Others want 'The Voice' singing his Hindu Chant on non-breakable, vinylite record. Still others write him for his correspondence course and writings." Besides having produced the Autobiography, Yogananda also composed poetry, songs, and chants. "Weekly, he turns radio writer and produces the script for The Voice of Self-Realization. And each morning between 7:00 and 11:00 a.m., as he claims to be a human sending station, he emits, to the students and those seeking help, his personal healing vibrations."

In the midst of this frenzied schedule, Yogananda had a revelation that his life was drawing to a close, says Mitrananda, and after 1948 the religious leader began spending more and more time in the Mojave Desert, writing. One of the most detailed accounts of his final days appeared in Time magazine, a few months after his death. "For the last two years the guru suffered from a 'metaphysically induced illness,' as his disciples put it — the result of 'working out' on his own body some of the physical and spiritual burdens of his friends." Time continued that as 1952 had arrived, the swami had grown silent. "He finished dictating his spiritual books. His last 'little desire' was fulfilled, he said, when a disciple from Florida sent him some green coconut juice in March."

Omar Garrison says Yogananda called him one day at the beginning of March 1952, to disclose that the ambassador of India was coming for a luncheon. "I said, 'Well, Paramahansaji, I have an assignment. I can't come at that time.' He said, 'Cancel it. Do anything, but you must come.' And there was something about the way he said it; I immediately caught it in his voice.... So I went. And the moment I saw him, he told me, 'I wanted to say good-bye to you.' I was confused; was he returning to India? I didn't realize what he meant until a few days later [March 7] — the night of the banquet for the ambassador at the Biltmore Hotel."

According to Time, Yogananda ate vegetables and strawberry parfait at the banquet, then rose to make a speech about "spiritual India," ending the presentation by quoting from one of his own poems. "As he finished, Paramhansa [sic] lifted his eyes, turned slightly to the right, and slid to the floor, dead." The subsequent medical verdict blamed a heart attack.

He was 59 — young for a profession in which (by Yogananda's own account) some yogis manage to avoid death for centuries. "He'd finished his mission," declared Brother Mitrananda when I questioned Yogananda's demise. "He did what he was supposed to do."

When I had asked to talk to someone about the current residents of the Encinitas ashram, I was referred to Mitrananda. Although he was only a few years old at the time of Yogananda's death, and although he probably wasn't many miles away, he started out in a very different world from that of the Indian mystic. "I was born in Glendale but raised in La Crescenta. I have really great folks; came from Kentucky. They were childhood sweethearts," said the monk, who resembles the actor John Malkovich. The family was Methodist. "I was into my church," says Mitrananda. "I stood in tableaus on the lawn at Christmas, and I sang in the choir and all that."

One element in his life did distinguish him from the typical suburban schoolboy. Around the age of 12, he got a professional acting job, and he says throughout his teens he worked in "hundreds of movies and television programs and commercials." He adds, "Working in the film studios was kind of a revelation. I was never starstruck. In fact, I saw how neurotic, how insecure, most of the artists and actors were." After high school, he nonetheless enrolled in the University of Southern California to study journalism and film production. As he neared graduation, "I was sort of aimless," he recalls. "I'd been through a lot of confusion and didn't really know what I wanted." He says at times he would make the trip to Forest Lawn Cemetery, near his family's home in Glendale, and attend the funerals of complete strangers. "I used to go with college friends. We would just walk up and see this strange guy lying in a box. And it was like, 'Hey, you too, my friend.' You know, when most people are young they think they're never going to die. But I would drive along and see a wreck on the freeway, and I just couldn't dismiss it from my mind. I'd think, 'No, it is going to happen to me. It's just a matter of time. It's either going to be that or cancer or having a child who's crippled, or something.' This was haunting me...this duality of life."

Mitrananda continues, "I wanted a goal-oriented life.... And I was scared because I saw that all my peers, the young college students, they all seemed sort of like cattle getting on this train to some unknown destination, getting into these careers. These executives from these big companies came around to interview the top third of the senior class, and when I was being interviewed, I thought, 'If I do this, I'm going to wind up just like you.' And I somehow wanted something different."

At the end of his senior year, a college friend gave him a copy of The Autobiography of a Yogi. After reading it, "I went up to the Hollywood church to see what was going on. I had the sense that this was what I'd always wanted." The Fellowship at the time had a restaurant on Sunset Boulevard, and Mitrananda got a job there. "I thought, 'Well, I'll work here for the summer just to get the exposure [to the Fellowship]. Then I'll get a real job in the fall.' " Many of his fellow workers were aspiring monks, and Mitrananda says, "I couldn't understand what they wanted to be monks for. It seemed like sort of a bizarre thing in my mind." He says his thinking changed in a single memorable moment.

"We had one day off a week, and frequently we [lay restaurant workers] would join the monks for three-hour meditations." He was deep in concentration on one such occasion when a voice filled the young man's consciousness. "It wasn't a physical voice, but it was so clear that it was as if the words were chiseled in the base of a Roman statue. They were: 'Just this once, don't do what you want to do, do what you know you should do.' And I thought, 'Well, that's it. I don't want to do this, but it will be good for me. It's like going in the military.' " Only forever. Although he "didn't really know what it meant to be a monk," he says at the time he viewed the decision as a lifetime commitment.

What had he turned his back on? "I would have been an executive with IBM and made videos for them," he shoots back the answer. "I would have had a green Jaguar and lived in Brentwood and everything." It is easy to imagine this. Shadows of some other, corporate identity cling to the lean, balding clergyman. Although nuns in the Self-Realization Fellowship dress in saris, the monks forgo robes and instead wear trousers and short tunics reminiscent of the old Nehru jackets. Mitrananda's are ochre, the rusty orange shade donned by those who've taken final monastic vows. His words are crisp and businesslike; his demeanor cordial and very polished. "We're very busy people," he said of the religious community. "For us meditation isn't a luxury, but a necessity. Because if we don't meditate regularly, we really feel the pressures — just the phone ringing and we deal with computers. We have to feed the cats and the dogs. We have to process the monthly bills. We do everything a householder does, pretty much. Also I go on international lecture tours.... I was in Rome last November, and there were a thousand people who'd come for a weekend class."

About 45 men and women now live full-time at the Encinitas ashram. "We have hundreds of thousands of members, but only about 250 monks and nuns," Mitrananda says. "It's a very small percentage." The seaside group includes a dozen nuns and 20 or so monks, who live and eat in separate quarters. "Yogananda believed in the strict segregation of the sexes. So we keep talk to a minimum, strictly about business. There's no social or personal exchanges."

Postulants make up the third group within the community. While women seeking nunhood go to Los Angeles, all young men aspiring to be Fellowship monks come here. "Right now we have one from England, one from Australia, one from Italy, one from Spain, three from Brazil, and the rest are Americans," Mitrananda enumerated. All take vows of loyalty, obedience, chastity, and simplicity (rather than poverty; "Yogananda said of poverty, 'No, that's a little negative,' " one nun explained). During their one- to two-year probation, the postulants are cloistered.

All three groups within the community follow the same fixed schedule, starting each day at 5:30 and fitting in three separate meditation sessions (two hours total). Group recreational and "energization" exercises consume other time slots, and the remaining daytime hours are devoted to various tasks: postulants, for example, study and do gardening work (besides the Meditation Garden, the Fellowship also raises fruits and vegetables on some land located just across the railroad tracks). The full-fledged monastics work on various tasks, such as running the ongoing retreat programs, which each year bring thousands of people from all over the world to the Encinitas compound.

Retreatants — most, though not all of whom are Fellowship members — stay for anywhere from 1 to 14 days. All "do certain physical exercises twice a day, to control the energy," says Mitrananda. "We teach them techniques of concentration and meditation." They attend some lectures, and they also are asked to keep silence, an experience that itself is "a tremendous education," the monk avers. "Many people have never not spoken for two days. But a lot of things come to you from within just with the slowing-down process. That's what we believe — the definition of self-realization is that we already have the knowledge. It's inside. But we can't access it...because of our restlessness and because of all the energy that's going out. Every night when we sleep, the life force withdraws, but it's not conscious. Whereas meditation is really a sort of a conscious sleep. You get a chance to shut things down, the heartbeat slows down, the breath slows down, thoughts slow down, and then up underneath that comes this first manifestation of God — peace. The Bible says, 'Be still and know that I am God.' Well, that stillness is a science...and to be able to create it consciously, at will, is what we teach."

"Yogananda was not here to teach Hinduism as such," Mitrananda told me on another occasion. "I mean, he wasn't preaching incense and sitting cross-legged and that." Indeed, the theme of religious universality pervades the Fellowship. At temple services, for instance, worshipers pray to Jesus, Krishna, various Indian yogis, and "saints and sages of all religions," and they make their requests in spare, Anglicized buildings in which the walls are white, the pews simple and wooden. These churches bear about as much resemblance to the perfumed and glittering and oh-so-Indian Hare Krishna temples as the average fundamentalist chapel bears to St. Peter's in Rome. The notions at the heart of Yogananda's teachings are Hindu ones: Godhead within, yogic practice as a means of getting in touch with it throughout innumerable reincarnations. But even here the Fellowship members can advance to something that, though it supposedly wasn't invented in the West, seems as if it should have been. Once initiated into the practice of "Kriya yoga," Yogananda taught that Fellowship members can dramatically compress the spiritual evolutionary process. "One half-minute...of Kriya equals one year of natural spiritual unfoldment," he explained in the Autobiography. According to this peculiar equation, the Kriya-practicing yogi in just one day could dispense with "the equivalent of one thousand years of natural evolution.... In three years, a Kriya Yogi can thus accomplish by intelligent self-effort the same result that Nature brings to pass in a million years."

I asked Mitrananda if the complex Kriya calculus made sense to him the first time he read the Autobiography.

"I didn't have a clue," he replied. "How could you know? What could you have read that would have given you a perspective on something like that? No, it's totally fresh. And I didn't know what to make of the miracles in the Autobiography. I was very skeptical. And yet there was something.... I thought, 'This man's not lying. It's not a fantasy. There's some truth here.' "

The monk says since then he's given a lot of thought to the panoply of marvels presented by Yogananda in his bestseller and he's come up with this explanation. "It says on the title page of the Autobiography, 'Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe. — John 4:48.' And in our lessons we learn that Jesus said that with wry humor. Which means to me: 'I don't like to have to tell you all these miracles. Because it's not the key point. But I have to tell you them to get you excited; to motivate you initially. You won't believe otherwise.' But as you get into this science and test it for yourself, you will at last believe the ultimate so-called miracle — that you are God. That's self-realization. God-realization. This is the goal."

Mitrananda says he's now certain that all the astounding events did occur as Yogananda, pacing back and forth in his chambers on the bluff, described them. But Mitrananda echoes the words of the guru himself in declaring that such events aren't really "supernatural." "They're natural things that you or I could do if we had the same control of our minds. And slowly, as we evolve, science will come to comprehend these laws and the miracles will get crossed off the list, and we'll all realize this incredible, even infinite, power of the mind of man."

What about within the ashram — where some of the monastics have been practicing Yogananda's potent "science" for decades. Do the veteran monks and nuns experience things that the rest of us would call miraculous?

"I couldn't generalize," the monk replied, after a long pause. "I couldn't talk about other people, but I would say that these kind of so-called miracles — or let's call them phenomenal experiences — are not a part of our daily experience."

So maybe the Encinitas compound doesn't merit a whole chapter in that supernatural guidebook after all. Maybe To'chula's strange lunchtime vision only deserves a footnote. Then again, the Encinitas property does encompass the Meditation Garden, where it's not very difficult to catch glimpses of something transcendental and where ghosts of the miraculous still linger.

You enter the garden not far from the street. A stone stairway leads upward off the central driveway, and within steps you're in a bosky wonderland. Many of the trees here were planted 50 years ago, and all their hidden layers give them the thickness and dignity and character of elders, brought together in some multinational convocation. Hollywood junipers lean over the stone pathways like dark giants, their many arms frozen into dozens of gestures as they gossip with magnolias, sago palms, rubber trees, Aleppo pines. At their feet rise tree ferns from Australia and Hawaii that have grown to the height of men. The walkways lead to ponds where papyrus knifes up through crystalline water and where gaudy Japanese carp glide beneath lilies such as those Monet painted. Despite the profusion of the plant life, there's an underlying order discernible; this is no vegetative riot, but a creation wrought with patience and discipline and discrimination. The droplets of glowing sunlight that penetrate the foliage may splatter at random, but they shower flowers positioned with subtlety and restraint. Hot red kalanchoe grows next to a tender green groundcover; the spiky alien blooms of pink bromeliads jut up near the normality of philodendrons. Coleus has been hung in planters suspended at eye level, the better to show off the astounding leafy palette: white and fuchsia and orange and dried blood, all bordered with the most delicate lime green.

Throughout the garden wafts the smell of the sea, but only glimpses of it are visible until you emerge into an area paved with irregular flesh-colored slabs. This space feels like a plaza with one side open to the oceanic infinity. Three low gray steps rise to the cliff edge and then break off in a jagged edge that runs into a bed of blooming red and gold lantana. Once, however, Yogananda's temple floated just beyond the stairs. For those who entered it and climbed to the roof, it must have seemed as if the dreary, tugging forces of gravity had ceased to exist. ■

I WAS THE COOLEST GUY I KNEW

Confessions of a Disenchanted Sportswriter By Jeff Savage

I'm sitting in the press box at Jack Murphy Stadium for the first time as a member of the "working press," watching the Padres getting whacked by the Expos. It's 1982. The Padres stink. Dick Williams is their manager.

I'm there with a flimsy tape recorder to get quotes from ballplayers for the UCSD campus radio station that no one listens to. Sportswriters are all around me, middle-aged white men in ties and nice sweaters. Everyone's talking and laughing and scribbling in spiral notebooks and wolfing free popcorn and drinking free beer. Except me. I'm just some punk college kid frozen in his seat, nervous as hell.

The game ends on a strikeout, and the writers scramble from their seats and blow down the hall, around the corner to the elevator. I catch up just in time to squeeze in, and down we go. Everyone gets quiet.

The doors slide open and I'm the first one out. It's a dark corridor. Where the hell are we? I step to the side, faking that I have to check my tape recorder, to let the sportswriters slip by. They move down the corridor in a pack, and I join them from behind. We turn right, then left, and arrive at a closed blue door above which it says "Padres Baseball Club." After a minute the door opens and we step inside.

It's a big, brightly lit room. The air is hot and soggy. Guys are sitting around half naked. A few sportswriters fan out to the players, but about ten of them go through a doorway to the right. I follow. It's a small room lined with chairs and a long couch. The manager's office.

The writers quickly take seats until there's nothing left but a small space at the end of the couch. I make my way over and sit down. In front of me is a large desk and chair. It must be the manager's, which is perfect for me since I need to get quotes with my tape recorder. I notice I'm the only one in the room with a microphone. Everyone else is sitting with a pen and notepad. Where are all the radio station reporters, I wonder?

"You know what I'm going to do to you, Barry? I'm going to pick you up and take you outside and smash your head into that wall out there."

In a side doorway a figure appears. He is wearing long underwear. He walks in holding a can of Schlitz beer. He has gray hair and deep lines in his face. It's Dick Williams.

I knew nothing about Dick Williams to this point except that he managed the Oakland A's to a couple of World Series titles in the early '70s and he was among my heroes.

Williams grunts a little as he slowly sits down in his chair. He takes a big gulp of beer and then belches. No one says a word. Williams stares at his desk. Without looking up he takes another swig of beer. I can't figure it out. Why isn't anyone saying anything? Williams burps again. He's two feet away from me. I'm so nervous I could puke.

"Uh, Dick," someone finally mutters.

I get my tape recorder ready.

"Uh, Dick, did Ruppert miss a sign off first base in the fifth?"

I click on my recorder as Williams clears his throat, and I push the mike up near his mouth.

"What the fuck?" he says, staring at the microphone.

"What the fuck is this?" he says even louder. Then he snaps his head around and glares at me.

"Who the fuck are you?" he yells. "Who the fuck are you!"

My whole body freezes. I try to answer. "I'm-I'm-J-J-Jeff Saa— "

"Who the fuck are you?" he yells again. Then he just explodes. "Get the fuck outta here! Get the fuck outta this office!"

I lift myself from the couch as Williams springs from his chair. The other reporters are dead-still. "Goddamnit!" he screams as he points at the door. "Get the fuck outta here!"

I crash over ankles and feet as I bolt from the office, out the locker room, and up the corridor to the elevator.

"Press box?" the elevator operator asks as I step in. "No," I say with my heart pounding. "First level."

I flee from the stadium to my car without looking back.

I never should have gone back to the Murph. Ever. Instead, it became a big part of my life. I was thrilled with sports and athletes, so I got a job as a sportswriter at the San Diego Tribune. I lasted eight years in the business. I finally wised up and quit in 1992.

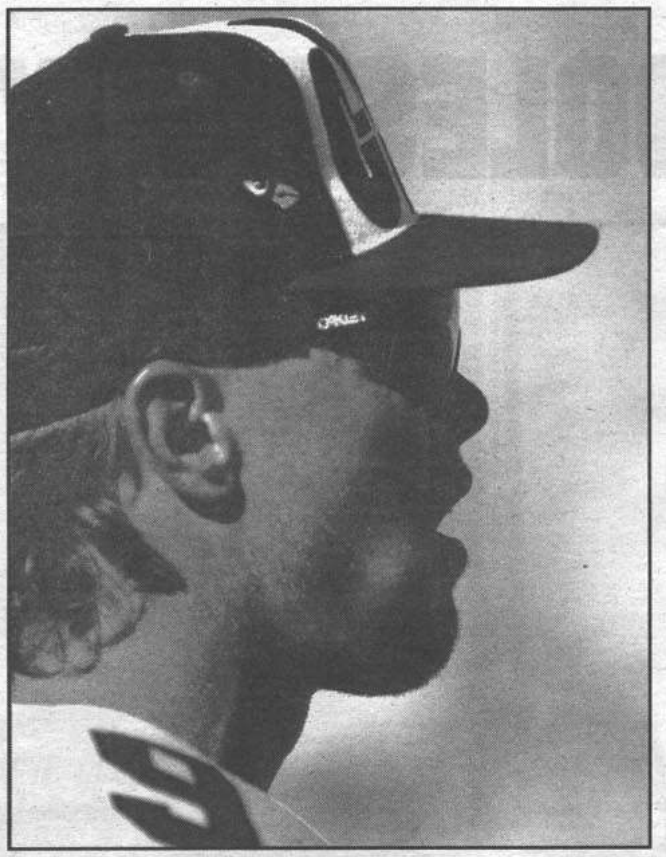

Guys think sports writing is a cool job. Free games. Free food. Conversations with athletes. What could be better? Trust me, the job stinks. The hours tear you down and the deadline pressure beats in your head. Editors can make the job especially miserable. Above all, most athletes are insufferable assholes.

When David Hirshey, a sportswriter for the New York Daily News in the '70s, learned that Reggie Jackson of the Yankees fantasized about singing with the O'Jays, he decided to write a story about it. "I walked up to him at his locker," Hirshey said, "and asked, 'Reggie, I know you can carry a team. Can you carry a tune?' " Jackson turned around, lifted a leg, farted, and said, "How's this tune?" Shortly thereafter, Hirshey left sports writing.

An athlete never farted on me. I was lucky.

To get locker room quotes on game day, you have to be very careful where you position yourself. It's especially tough after a Raiders or Rams game in L.A., with the media cramming in. A player sits naked on a stool in front of his cubicle, toweling off from a shower, and you're squeezed in with 20 other fools straining to hear him mutter, "We never shoulda lost" or "The ref blew the call." Your face is buried in another reporter's greasy hair, the guys pressing you from the sides have B.O., and you're getting banged from behind by a television camera. Worse is when you're in the front of this scrum and there's a push from behind and it takes all the leg-strength you've got to maintain your stance. I've seen guys fall onto players. I've seen players get pissed.

I got yelled at plenty while learning the business, working for the UCSD campus newspaper and radio station. I didn't know the locker room rules, like sticking a microphone in the face of a sonofabitch manager whose team just lost. I also asked a lot of stupid questions.

Jim McMahon

McMahon tilted his head back, covered one nostril with his finger, and rifled a wad of snot through the other, directly into T.J.'s ear.

One time, when the San Francisco Giants were in town, I approached slugger Jack Clark (another of my Bay Area heroes) in the locker room before the game.

"So, Jack," I said without introducing myself, "what's it like to carry the Giants?"

"Hey, man, I don't want to talk," he said as he yanked his shirt over his head.

God, I thought to myself. What a dumb question. I'd better try another one a little more tame.

"So, Jack, how do you think the team's young pitching staff will hold up this season?"

Clark wheeled on me. "Hey, muthafucka!" he yelled, "I said I didn't want to talk! Clear the fuck out!"

I didn't try a third question.

Another time the Phillies were in town, and I just had to talk to Pete Rose. He was standing in the locker room with some shady-looking characters long after the game had ended.

"Hi, Pete. I'm Jeff Savage from the UCSD Guardian."

"So?"

"So I was wondering if I could talk to you for just a moment."

"What about," he snapped.

"Well, I was wondering if you might be thinking about switching to the American League to be a designated hitter."

Dumb. Dumb. Dumb. The man is one of the greatest hitters ever, and I'm suggesting to him that he's too slow and old to play first base (which, of course, he was by then).

"Listen," Rose said, "if I decide to be a designated hitter, you'll be the first guy I let know. What's your phone number? I'll call you the moment I decide."

His buddies were laughing now.

"Tell ya what," Rose went on. "Let me give you my card. It's got my home phone number on the back. Call me as soon as I get back to Philly. I'll decide on the plane."

Embarrassing myself was no fun, but I didn't care much. I was hanging with the athletes, talking with the pros. How many guys got to do that? I wanted to do it for a living.

New colleague Nick Canepa told me my first week of work at the Tribune in 1984 that being a sportswriter would be great for the bar scene. "Women love it," he said. "They'll be all over you." If you've seen Mike, you know he didn't need to be a sportswriter to attract women. Me, I needed the help.

Kirk Kenney was hired shortly after me, and we'd go bar-hopping together. We'd get involved in some lame conversation with women, and eventually one of them would ask, "So, what do you guys do?" Kirk was classic.

"Write," he'd say real cool out the side of his mouth.

"Really?" they'd say. "That's great. What do you write?"

"Sports."

"Really? You're a sportswriter? For what newspaper?"

"Trib."

"Oh, wow. That's great. Your name is, like, in the paper and everything? You know all the athletes? Tell me about...."

At first, being a sportswriter was great fun. I sat in the dugout with the Giants for two innings as they were clinching the NL West in '87. I rode around in a golf cart with Eric Dickerson, had lunch with Nolan Ryan, dinner with Dominique Wilkins, had long conversations with John Elway, Warren Moon, Evander Holyfield, Jerry Tarkanian, David Robinson, Will Clark....

Petricca gave his ticket to USD basketball coach Hank Egan. When Hank arrived at the stadium, he had no place to sit down. Petricca's seat had been ripped out.

I was caught up in greatness by association. In one two-month period, I was quoted in USA Today as an authority (which I wasn't) on some sports subject, seen by all my friends in a front-page Union photo standing on the sideline as the Chargers were making a game-saving tackle, and shown on ESPN holding Dan Forsman's baby while Dan was tapping in to win the tournament at Torrey Pines. I was the coolest guy I knew.

Somehow you lose perspective.

When I covered a Raiders exhibition game in Oakland in 1989, I got a press pass for my childhood pal Gerry Bottero, because we grew up rooting for the Raiders and I knew he'd enjoy the experience. On our way down to the locker room after the game, I handed him a pen and notepad and told him to fake like he was taking notes so it looked like he belonged. As I moved from player to player gathering quotes for my story, I noticed Gerry across the room, high-stepping through heaps of wet towels and mounds of white tape, doing his best to dodge players and reporters.

"Pretty neat, eh, Ger?" I said as we left the locker room.

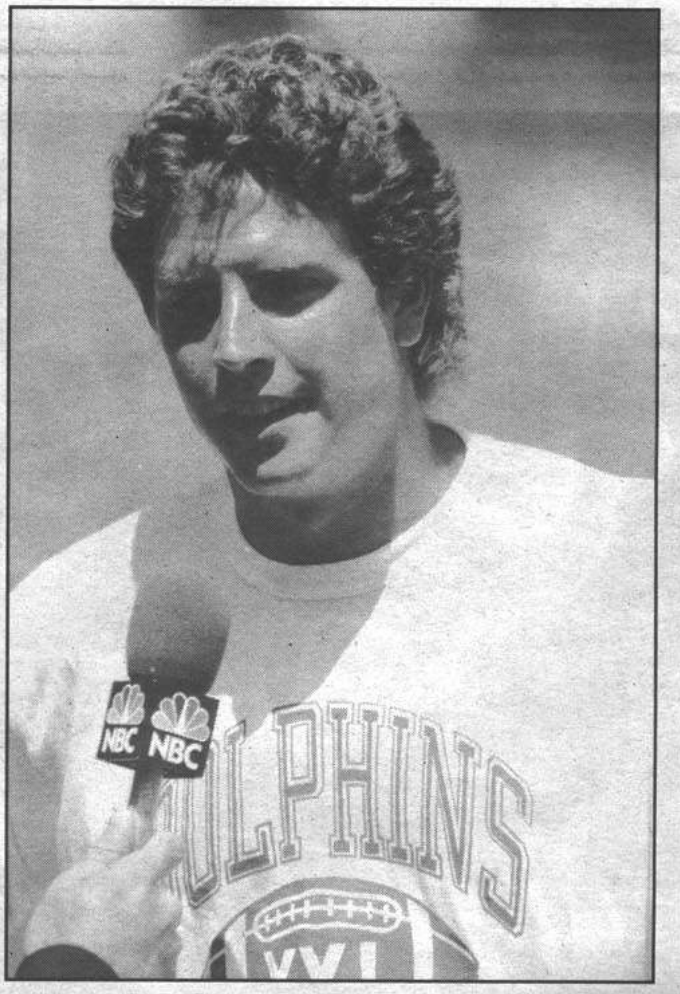

"Neat?" he replied. "Just a bunch of hairy butts in my face. What's so neat about that?"

He had a point.

Still, I was having too much fun hobnobbing. And not just with sports stars. My ultimate elbow-rubbing came every January when I spent a week on the phone getting Super Bowl predictions from celebrities. I talked to Jimmy Stewart, Janet Leigh, Sidney Poitier, and a bunch more. I talked with Bob Hope every year, and one time we swapped jokes for 15 minutes.

It wasn't talking with bigwigs that thrilled me, but seeing the reaction of my friends. Then I'd play it down like it was nothing. "Just part of the job," I'd say.

I got so carried away that I called the Kremlin to get Mikhail Gorbachev's prediction. After 20 minutes of being transferred from one department to another, I figured I'd burned up enough of Helen Copley's money and hung up.

Dan Marino

Another time I tried to talk with Cary Grant.

"Hello, is Cary home, please."

"Who is this?" a woman says.

"This is Jeff Savage from the San Diego Tribune. I'm calling to get Cary's Super Bowl prediction for the game, if he's got a minute."

"You're kidding."

"No, really, we like to get predictions. People love reading about that sort of stuff."

"Are...are you serious?" she says.

"Yeah, sure. Why not? Is he busy or something?"

Long pause.

"Hello?" I say. "Are you still there?"

"Cary's been dead," she whispers, "for over a year."

Slowly something began to change. The thrill of interviewing athletes subsided. What they had to say was predictable and boring. And sometimes they refused to talk at all. But no matter how dull the players were, I needed quotes for my story.

I asked Eric Davis in the Reds' locker room one day about his home run prowess. Eric is a slight man who generates tremendous bat speed to hit with power, unlike bigger men like Frank Thomas, who use their size. I explained to Eric that I was writing a story on the subject.

"Nah, man, I ain't got nuthin to say," Eric replied.

Nothing to say? About his own magnificent skills? Was Eric one of those rare athletes who don't like talking about themselves, preferring instead to discuss the exploits of others?

"What about your teammate Kal Daniels? Are you impressed with his home run power?"

"Nah, man, ain't no thing."

"What about Darryl Strawberry? Kevin Mitchell? Do they impress you?"

"Nah."

"Do any players impress you?"

"Nah."

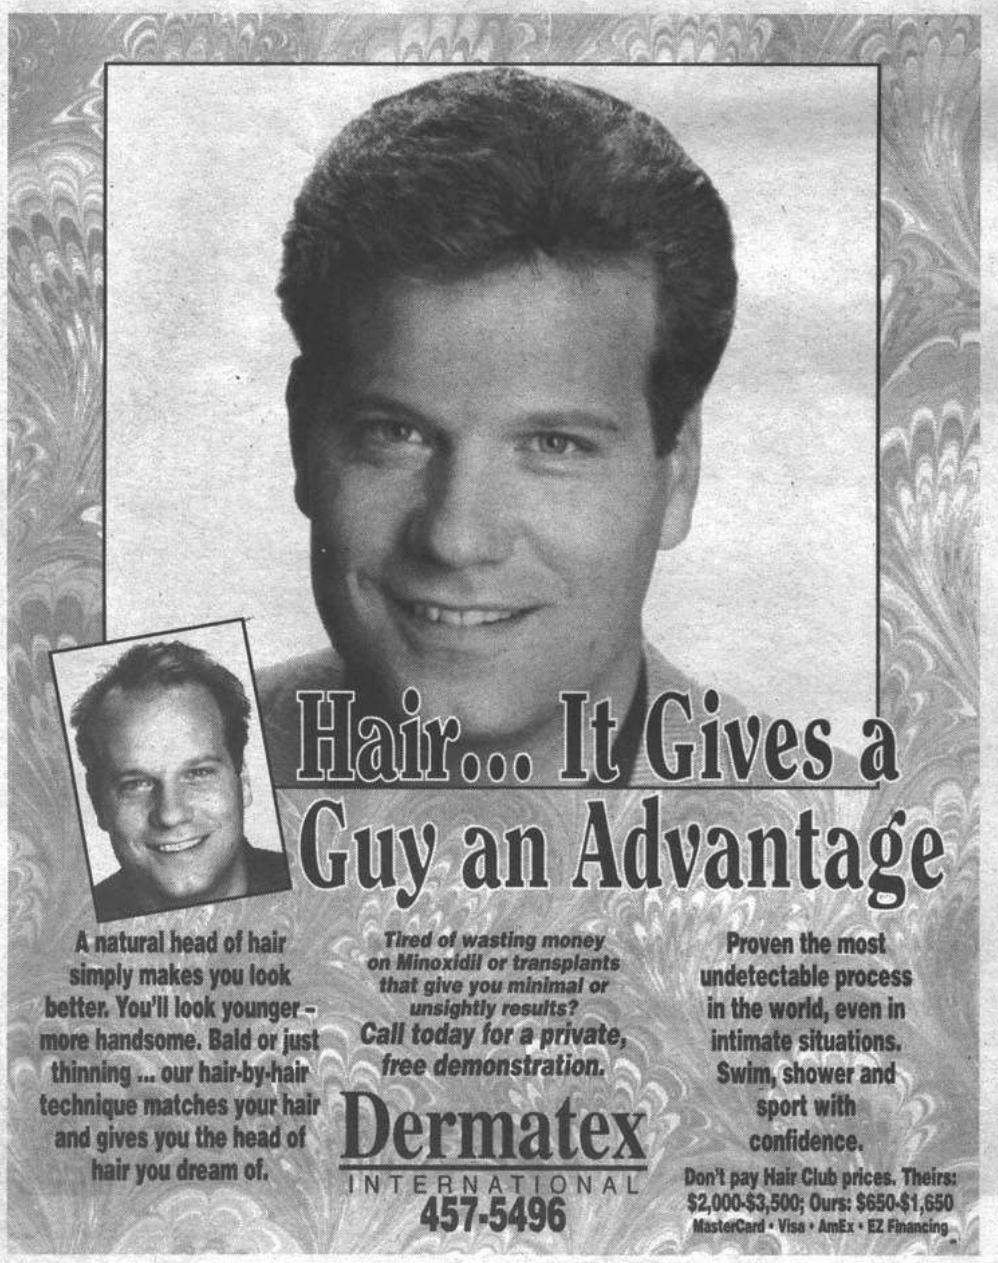

"Do you have any thoughts at all on the subject?"

"Nuthin."

Eric Davis wasn't rude. He was lifeless. I had to ask him one more question.

"What about playing baseball in general? Are you happy to be playing?"

"Ain't no thing."

It is common courtesy after an interview to thank an athlete for his time. It was hard to thank Eric.

I approached first baseman Wally Joyner in the Angels' locker room at spring training one day to ask him about the upcoming season. Wally was lacing his shoes when I introduced myself. I asked him for a minute of his time.

"No," he said.

I told him I'd just driven up from San Diego and that all I needed was a forecast. No deep thinking required. Just a prediction for the paper.

"No time to talk," he said.

I stood there a moment, wondering how a person could be so cold. I asked him to reconsider. Just a quick assessment of the team. A comment. Anything.

"Game time," he muttered.

This was three hours before a spring training game.

"Oh, game time," I said. "Then I'd better get to the press box in a hurry."

"Asshole," he said.

When U-T sports columnist Nick Canepa goes into a baseball locker room, he says he often gets the feeling that 25 guys don't want him in there. Nick doesn't unfairly jab local athletes. In fact, sometimes he can be too nice. He gets the chill for one reason alone — because he is a sportswriter.

Athletes don't need sportswriters anymore. Back when salaries were fathomable, athletes appreciated any exposure they could get. Players and reporters may not have been fast friends, but their relationship was harmonious because each had something to gain. Now, money is out of sight and TV is the road to fame. It's safer for athletes to make a few harmless comments in a quick post-game TV interview than reveal their thoughts to sportswriters and worry about what will be printed. Writers are now a nuisance.

Trib beat writer Barry Bloom criticized the Padres in a column for their childish behavior in a beanbrawl in Atlanta in 1984. When the players read the story, they voted 24–1 to ban Bloom from the clubhouse (Steve Garvey cast the dissenting vote). Major league baseball rules prohibit such an act, so Bloom was allowed to remain. But some players made it miserable for him.

When Bloom wrote that some unnamed Padres (Gary Templeton and Alan Wiggins) were concerned about teammates belonging to the John Birch Society, catcher Terry Kennedy (a Birch member) approached Bloom and punched him in the shoulder. Bloom got in Kennedy's face and yelled, "Don't you ever touch me again." The locker room fell silent. Bloom reiterated, "Terry, don't you ever, ever lay your hand on me again. Understand me?" Kennedy turned away.

"How can you be sure the WWF won't sue the paper?" one editor asked.

Pitcher Eric Show asked Bloom later what he would have done had Kennedy not backed down. "What could I do?" Bloom said. "I would've had to fight him."

"He would've kicked the shit out of you," Show said. "You showed a lot of guts."

When Rich "Goose" Gossage blew a lead in a game in 1986, manager Steve Boros took the blame by saying he should not have used the relief pitcher two nights in a row. "He was probably tired," Boros told reporters. "I should've rested him. It was my fault."

Gossage was sitting at a table when Bloom approached him.

"Fuck you, Barry. Get away from me," Gossage said. "I'm not talking to you."

Bloom stepped to the side as Daily Californian reporter Dennis Wynne came over and said to Gossage, "Steve said you were tired."

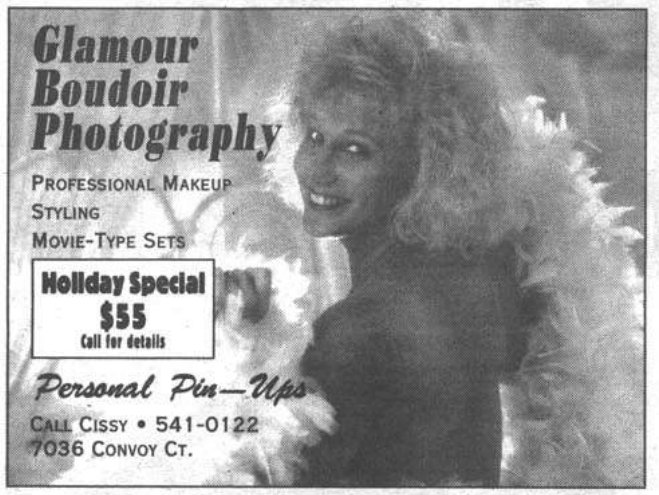

"Steve who?" Gossage responded.

"You know, Steve your manager."

"Steve my manager said that?" Gossage replied. "Well, we'll see exactly what he said. Come with me. You too, Barry. You can come too."

Gossage pounded on the manager's door and yelled for him. Then he went inside. Bloom and Wynne followed. Boros was shaving.

"Did you say I was tired?" Gossage asked his manager.

"What I said, Rich, was that — "

"Listen," Gossage announced. "Don't you tell me when I'm tired! I'll tell you when I'm tired!"

Gossage stormed out of the office. Bloom felt sorry for the manager. In a way, he also felt sorry for Gossage. He followed the pitcher back to his locker and said to him, "Rick, I think your days in New York really ruined you."

"Fuck you," Gossage said as he pushed his face into Bloom's. "You know what I'm going to do to you, Barry? I'm going to pick you up and take you outside and smash your head into that wall out there."

"Go ahead, Rick," Bloom said.

"I'm going to do it right now," Gossage said.

"Go ahead, Rick. I'll be happy to take your home in Tierrasanta."

Fortunately, Gossage walked away.

I met Jim McMahon in 1989, when he joined the Chargers. Chris Jenkins was covering the team for the Union one day before the season began, and I was covering for the Trib, when we decided to talk with McMahon. He was escorted to the stadium newsroom by a Chargers PR staffer, who then left. We were sitting at a large table, and McMahon took a seat across from us. He was wearing dark sunglasses and a tank top.

Chris and I introduced ourselves. McMahon said nothing. He stared down at the table. The interview went something like this:

"Jim, are you learning the new system pretty easily?" Chris asked. McMahon didn't look up.

"Yep," he said.

"Are you having any difficulty with it in any way?" I asked.

"Nope."

"Do you like the passing system?"

"Yep."

"What do you like about it?"

"I don't know."

On the table was a stack of statistics sheets. McMahon pulled the stack toward him and began leafing through the pages. He wasn't reading, just leafing.

"Are you getting situated here in San Diego?" Chris asked.

"Yep."

"Do you like it here?"

"Yep."

"Have you bought a house yet?"

"Nope."

McMahon still didn't look up. He kept turning the pages of statistics.

"Are you happy with the Chargers receiving corps?"

"Uh-huh."

"What do you think of Anthony Miller?"

"Good."

"How so?"

"Don't know."

"Are you looking forward to the season?"

"Yep."

"How good do you think this team can be?"

"Don't know."

"How's your shoulder?"

"Fine."

Chris and I looked at each other.

"Well," Chris said. "I guess that's all I need."

"Me too," I said.

"Cool," McMahon muttered, and in the next moment he was out of his chair and gone.

McMahon hated sportswriters. (You can see why, considering those terrifying questions we bombarded him with.) So why did McMahon agree to be interviewed in the first place? He didn't. NFL players are obligated by their contracts to "foster good public relations for the league." In other words, they must meet with the press, at least occasionally.

"I ain't gonna talk about nothin',"
Fernandez said.
"Get outta my face."

I suppose we should have expected such behavior from the quarterback. The Today Show made arrangements the day McMahon was traded from the Bears to San Diego to interview him at the stadium the following morning. The set was prepared at 2:30 a.m., and host Bryant Gumbel was ready at 5:00 a.m. McMahon was due in an hour later. He didn't show. The program began at 6:00 a.m. with Gumbel announcing that the quarterback would be arriving soon.

A Chargers PR staff member went to McMahon's training camp room at UCSD to get him. McMahon wasn't in bed. The staffer woke up quarterback Mark Vlasic, McMahon's roommate. Vlasic said he hadn't seen McMahon all night. Meantime, Gumbel was making periodic references to McMahon's imminent arrival. It was rather embarrassing for NBC. Eventually, the show came to a close with Gumbel saying, "We apologize, but it seems as though something has happened to Jim McMahon."

When McMahon arrived at camp later that day, his excuse was that he overslept. And that's what the PR department had to tell NBC. The truth is, at a Mission Valley nightclub early that morning McMahon got into a scuffle in which he choked a transvestite. The police and the Chargers kept it a secret.

Following a loss to Seattle in October, McMahon was surrounded at his locker by reporters. Among the group was T.J. Simers, the Chargers beat writer for the Union. T.J. was a tough-minded journalist who wrote the truth. The Chargers were a bad team at the time. Not many players liked T.J.

Suddenly, without provocation, McMahon tilted his head back, covered one nostril with his finger, and rifled a wad of snot through the other, directly into T.J.'s ear. It was disgusting. And humiliating.

An offensive lineman revealed to me later that almost every player on the team approved of McMahon's wretched act. "Why?" I asked. "Because we don't like Simers," he said. "Why not?" I asked. "Because he's, uh...because he's a jerk," the lineman said. I wondered if the words "sportswriter" could be substituted for "jerk." I didn't ask.

Another time, cornerback Elvis Patterson sneaked up on T.J. from behind, threw a garbage bag over his head, and tried to toss him in the shower. Several players in the room laughed. It was like watching the fourth-grade bully picking on a weaker classmate. Today, T.J. Simers covers the Rams for the Los Angeles Times. Patterson is out of football.

Not all the Chargers were cold-hearted. Kellen Winslow was kind. So were Gill Byrd and Martin Bayless. Everyone knows about Rolf Benirschke. And Junior Seau remains gracious. But most of the players were infantile galoots. Professional athletes are stars in high school, so they're conceited early on. They're lured to a college where they're coddled by administrators and given a free ride and passable courseload (a popular major is criminal justice, maybe so the athlete can figure a way to stay out of jail). Finally they're drafted by the pros, showered with money, and idolized. Hard to maintain a perspective through all that. Maybe society is to blame. Maybe we create these monsters.

Rick Smith, the Chargers PR director for many years, was caught in the middle of this acrimonious relationship between reporters and players. Rick works today in the same capacity for the Rams. Rick says, "The press grinds on you to make players available, and the players bitch to you about the reporters. You tend to get buffeted. Everybody in the NFL has an ego. Players may not feel comfortable talking to the media, or a coach might be on them, or a girlfriend might be on them, or they're just not very pleasant to begin with. Whatever it is, their first inclination is to strong-arm the reporter or blow him off."

I was on the field for the last five minutes as the Chargers were beating the Dolphins in December 1991. The Dolphins were rallying when Dan Marino was penalized for intentional grounding. As gifted as he is, Marino is a consummate crybaby. He argued the call, then on the next play threw an interception to Chargers safety Stanley Richard to ensure the loss. At the final gun, Marino tore off the field and up the tunnel. I followed him.

"Where are the fuckin' officials?" he screamed. "I want the officials!"

He ran down the hallway, knocked teammate Jim Jensen into the wall, and kept on going.

"Where's the goddamn officials' locker room?" he demanded.

A security guard gestured for him to continue down the hall. A few steps later, Marino arrived at a door. It was his own visitors' locker room.

"Goddamnit," he yelled. "Where's the fuckin' officials?"

He stormed farther down the hall until he reached a red door — to the San Diego State locker room.

"Aw, fuck it!" he said before turning around and stomping back to his own locker room.

After showering, Marino arrived at his cubicle, where a dozen reporters were waiting for him. He called the referee "a fucker" and answered a number of questions about the game. Then I asked him about his post-game tirade.

"Why were you trying to find the officials after the game?" I asked.

"What are you talking about?" he said.

"When the game ended, you ran up the tunnel screaming for the officials' locker room," I said.

The other reporters were silent, wondering what I was talking about.

"No, I didn't," he said, glaring at me.

"I followed you," I said. "You ran down the hall and wound up at the San Diego State locker room."

"Never happened," he said.

"How can you say that?" I asked. "I was behind you the whole way."

"Look, man, it never happened. Next question."

The interview ended soon after, and I walked away in utter disbelief. I talked to a few more players for my story and was leaving the locker room when I felt a hand on my shoulder. I turned around. It was Marino.

"Hey, man," he said as he leaned into me, "if you print that, I'm gonna kick your ass!"

"Print what?" I said.

"You know," he said. "If you write that shit, I'm coming after you." He pointed a finger at me and said, "Remember that."

I wrote it the next day. I didn't mention the threat. I'm still waiting for him to come by.

More than anything else from my job, I was sobered to learn that athletes were immature and irresponsible. To me, growing up, athletes were something to admire, to marvel at.

Talking twice with ultra-hero Joe Montana and learning that he is dense; seeing Dave Stewart and James Worthy and Courtney Hall, athletes with whom I shared a pleasant conversation, go out and get busted with hookers; hearing athletes privately criticize the stupidity of fans and then go sign autographs — all of it helped me see that professional athletes are just guys who play a game. Certainly nothing to idolize.

José Canseco stood outside the A's dugout several hours before a game in Oakland one afternoon where a lone boy at the railing could see him. The boy was no older than ten, and he had a speech impediment.

"Can-thako," the boy called out. "Ho-they Can-thako."

Canseco didn't turn around. He stared out to the field, but he sneaked a peek in the boy's direction. The boy was holding up a baseball and a pen.

"Can-thako. Ho-they Can-thako. Pleath, Mr. Can-thako. Pleath."

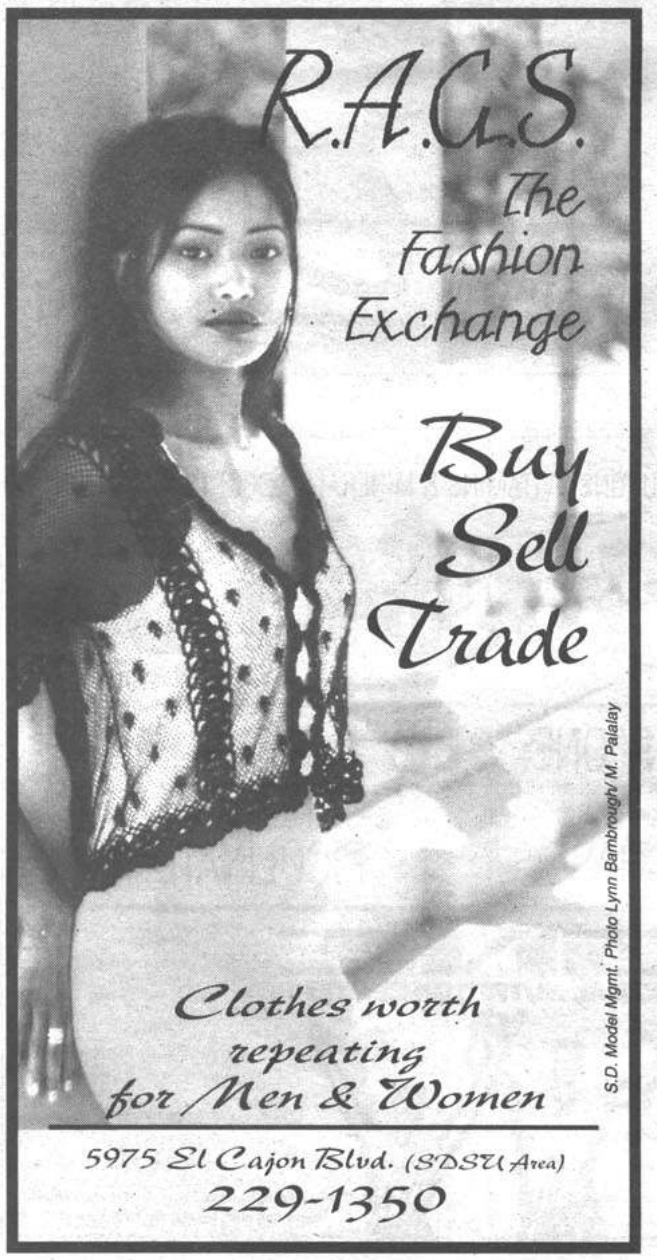

Canseco kept his head steady toward the field. Then he turned around and came in the dugout. The boy stopped calling for him.

"What a fuckin' idiot," Canseco said with a laugh. "The kid can't even talk."

Novelist Kurt Vonnegut was hired early in his writing career by Sports Illustrated to write an article about a racehorse that took a circuitous route across the infield and over a fence to finish first in a race. Vonnegut sat at his typewriter for a while, then got up, walked out of the room, and never came back. On his typewriter was a single sentence — "The horse jumped over the fucking fence."

If you don't believe sports is meaningful, you cannot be a good sportswriter.

When I realized the insignificance of sports, I was done for. It was just a matter of time. I was surrounded by people who believed what they were doing was the most important thing on the planet. From where they stood, the real world was invisible. I had to buy into it or I was kaput.

In 1990 I went to Oakland with Pete Egoscue, an anatomical functionalist (physical therapist) from Del Mar who works with athletes and who was checking on the Golden State Warriors basketball team.

Warriors coach Don Nelson greeted Egoscue on the floor of the Coliseum Arena. "Who's he?" Nelson said pointing at me.

"He's with me," Egoscue said. "He's doing a story about me for a San Diego paper."

"Oh," Nelson said.

I introduced myself.

"Listen," the coach said. "You can't write about anything you see here today."

"But that's why I'm here," I said. "That's why I came."

Nelson didn't argue. We walked together to the training room, where he stopped me at the door. "Wait here," he said. Nelson went in with Egoscue, and in a moment the team PR director came out.

"Since you're with Pete," the PR guy said in a hushed voice, "you can come inside. But you can't write about anything you see. This is highly secret stuff. Top secret."

We went inside. Some players were lifting weights, and others were on the floor in stretching positions prescribed by Egoscue. It was all familiar to me. I'd been to Egoscue's clinic and seen the routine.

"No reporter's ever been in here," the PR guy said with a straight face. "This is top-secret stuff. You're getting a very special treat to see this."

It looked like the Miramar Family Fitness Center. What was the big deal?

"Remember," coach Nelson said to me before we left, "not a word. Okay?"

"Sure," I said. There was nothing to write about anyway.

Not having something to write about — that predicament arose with regularity when writing about the Chargers. How many middle-of-the-week stories can you do about a team that goes 6–10 every year? But that's what the paper wanted.

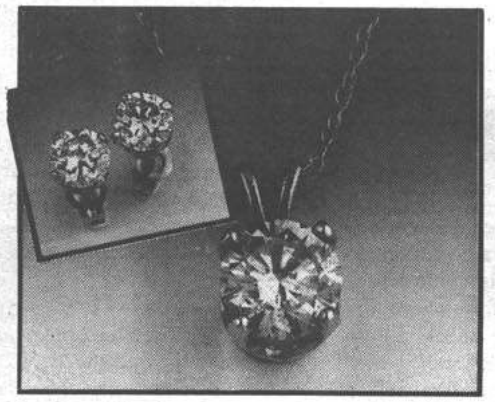

The players used to hang out at Petricca's restaurant on Morena Boulevard. Tony Petricca represented the model die-hard fan who suffered through the Dan Henning era. Tony was especially frustrated during the middle of another lousy season when I wrote a story about him. Tony had season tickets for many years but said he was so upset he couldn't bear to see another Chargers game as long as Henning was coach. The story appeared in the paper the next day, and the Chargers front-office people were pissed. They wanted to know why I didn't write a second story about a happy Chargers fan. I told them it would be difficult to find one. They said, "We'll get Petricca for this." "For what?" I asked. "For criticizing our team," they said. "He just voiced an opinion shared by many," I said. They didn't listen.

The next Sunday the Chargers played at home against Tampa Bay. Petricca gave his ticket to USD basketball coach Hank Egan. When Hank arrived at the stadium, he had no place to sit down. Petricca's seat had been ripped out. Hank went home.

The Chargers organization is different today. Winning or losing, it's a better working environment. Easygoing general manager Bobby Beathard has weeded out most of the pompous personnel. Beathard himself replaced perhaps the most overbearing snob of all, Steve Ortmayer. Henning was just a crummy coach with a lot of Irish pug in him, but Ortmayer was a scoundrel. One former employee says Ortmayer suffered from "a bunker mentality." The sad part of it is, Ort's haughty personality filtered through the organization.

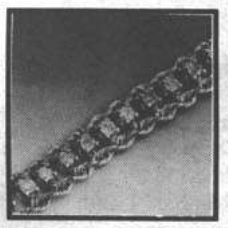

The Dawg Pound is a renowned end zone section at Cleveland Municipal Stadium where Browns fanatics go crazy. When I arrived at the stadium for a Browns-Chargers game on a cold December day in 1986, I went down on the field to see these crazies. The section was packed more than an hour before kickoff. Some fans were wearing ugly dog masks (though they were hard to distinguish from the rest), and snowballs were flying everywhere. Men were drinking and yelling and barking and hurling dog biscuits and batteries at people on the field. I walked over to a game official who was standing at the ten-yard line, and we both looked up at the stands. "God, I hate this place," he said. "I never feel safe here."

When I returned to the press box, a member of the Chargers organization approached me.

"Jeff, you shouldn't be down on the field," he said.

"Why not?" I asked.

"Because. Sportswriters are supposed to be in the press box."

"But the game's an hour off," I said.

"You're representing the San Diego Chargers today," he told me. "We're a first-class operation. You're with the big-time now. We keep our sportswriters in the press box."

"I represent the San Diego Tribune, not the Chargers," I said. "And the media is allowed on the field before the game."

"Not in my book," he said. "Don't you understand? We're first class, not coach. Our sportswriters are supposed to be in the press box."

"Whatever," I said.

A Cleveland reporter overheard the exchange. "What's the big deal?" he said. "I go on the field all the time. We all do."

The "first-class operation" Chargers lost the game 47–17 to end another losing season.

Chargers linebacker Gary Plummer and I grew up in the same hometown. We shared common interests and talked a lot. When I told him one day that I was considering leaving the business, he said it was the best thing I could do. "I'm glad to hear it," he said. "I would never be a sportswriter no matter how much they paid me."

"Why not?" I asked.

"I like sports too much to ruin it," he said.

I knew what he meant, but he explained it anyway.

"Players don't like sportswriters," he said. "Why would anyone want to always be talking with guys who didn't like them?"

I had to agree.

When the merger hit, the newsroom wall fell, and the U and the T became the U-T. My boss, Tribune sports editor Bill Pinella, was put in charge of the afternoon edition — in other words, benched. Union sports editor Bob Wright was put in control of the new staff. Morale among the writers and copy editors was in the gutter.

I spent much of the first two months after the merger investigating the sordid world of pro wrestling. Not my favorite topic, but a story that needed to be written. I had been working 12-hour days for about two months.

Bob Wright got involved in the project exactly once, when I met with a group of editors to discuss the story. They were concerned about a lawsuit because I was making some serious allegations against the World Wrestling Federation involving drugs, rape, and other sexual offenses. After seeing the boldness of the three-part series, the editors wanted to cancel it. I had good sources and knew the allegations to be true, and I spent an hour trying to talk them into running the stories. Wright did not support me — not that I expected him to.

"How can you be sure the WWF won't sue the paper?" one editor asked.

"Because the WWF has never filed a lawsuit in its history," I said. "It doesn't want a procession of witnesses taking the stand exposing its dirty affairs."

We were having an educated conversation when Bob spoke up. "But you just said the WWF was involved in a lawsuit with [a wrestler]," he said.

"Yes, Bob, they were," I said. "But they settled out of court, just as they always do."

"So they sued someone then," he said.

"No, they were sued by the wrestler. They filed a countersuit, which is standard practice when a company is sued. But they did not file the lawsuit. They did not initiate the litigation. They countersued."

"Well, same thing," he said.

The editors were silent.

The stories eventually ran (though they were greatly toned down), and the national media swept in. I was on radio talk shows in New York, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, and Dallas within a week and helped producers for Entertainment Tonight, Donahue, and Larry King Live prepare shows on the subject. I received a memo after the first story ran from U-T editor Karin Winner, which read, "Jeff. Excellent work on the WWF. It reads very well, is full of good documentation and thorough research. You left the L.A. Times' piece this morning in the dust. Looking forward to your next installment. Nice going. Karin." Another of the stories won the San Diego Press Club 1992 sportswriting story of the year.

Bob Wright never said a word to me.

I visited the Murph for the last time as a sportswriter on April 11, 1992. The Padres improved the stadium (if you can't change the players, might as well change the grass), and I went out to do a ho-hum story on the upgrades. A new type of infield grass was planted, mostly because shortstop Tony Fernandez complained so much about it the previous year. I approached Tony on the field before the game. He was standing alone, doing nothing.

"Tony, can I talk to you for a minute," I said.

"Nah, man, I don't got nothing to talk about," he said.

"It's a story for the Union-Tribune about the new infield," I said. "I just want your opinion of it."

"Nah, I don't know nothing about it," he said.

"You played on it last night," I persisted. "Do you like it better than last year's grass?"

"I ain't gonna talk about nothin'," he said. "Get outta my face."

The grass changed. The players hadn't.

A while later I stood behind the batting cage next to manager Greg Riddoch. I told him I was seriously considering leaving the sportswriting business.

"I don't blame you," Riddoch said. "Who would want to work with these idiot players."

I told him about Tony Fernandez's unwillingness to talk about a benign story like the new grass.

"Tony Fernandez is a jerk," Riddoch said. "He makes a million dollars a year and he's an unhappy person. Go figure that out."

I suggested that Tony's attitude is not unusual among athletes.

"A lot of players are jerks," Riddoch said. "It didn't used to be that way. Money changed them. There's exceptions like Tony Gwynn. But a lot of them are spoiled brats. Do you know that I have to babysit Benito Santiago every damn day? He's a baby. Any little thing not exactly to his liking and he whines and whines. A lot of these guys are that way. It's the money. And the egos."

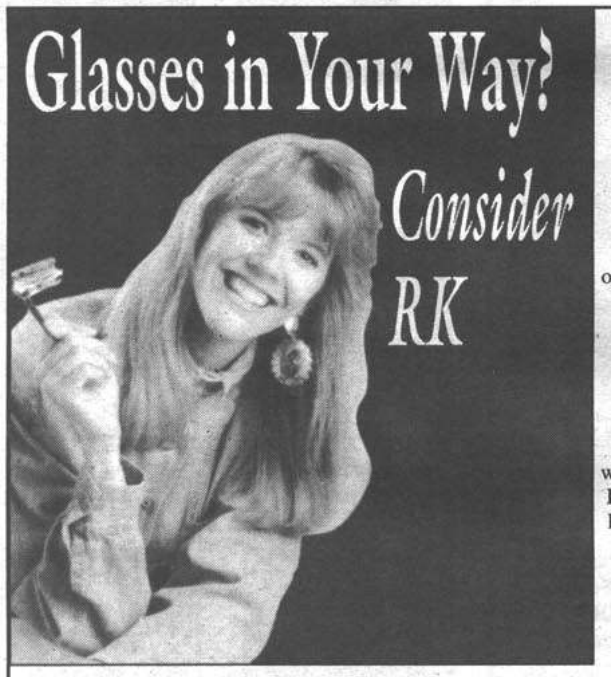

I wrote a story in mid-April about a man with no legs and one arm who overcame years of drunken despair by learning to swim. He became so fast in the water that he qualified for the 1992 Paralympics in Barcelona, only he didn't have the funds to go. I talked with him twice by telephone and then went on a Saturday to see him swim in a local meet. I wrote the story the next day, and it appeared in Monday's paper. The office was flooded with calls from caring people who had read the story. In three days we received letters and donations from 57 people totaling more than $3000 — enough for the swimmer to go to Spain. The story was a success, and I felt good about it. On Thursday, Bob Wright stopped by my desk.

"Did you get the results of that meet you went to on Saturday?" he asked.

"Results?" I said. "No, Bob, I was out there to do a feature on the swimmer."

"Well, next time get the results," he said with disdain. Then he walked away.

At that moment I decided to quit. I could have sought a transfer to another department, maybe writing breezy stories for "Currents" or copy editing, but the incident left such a sour taste that I had to leave the building.

And it wasn't just me. Since the merger on February 2, 1992, 11 people have left the U-T sports department. One distraught sportswriter says he spends the first hour every morning chanting to himself, "Don't quit today. Don't quit today. Don't quit today."

Wright's glass-enclosed office is dubbed the "Shark Tank." One of his routines is to step from his tank and announce an employee's name followed by, "Got a minute?" Heads sag at the sound of this.

Ed Graney's name was called one day. Wright spent the next few minutes yelling at the sportswriter for supposedly missing some key elements of a story. Finally Graney interrupted his boss. "Uh, Bob," he said, "could you take a look at the byline." Another reporter had written the story. Graney was released from the tank. Then, a few days later, in Graney's newsroom mailbox was that same story, the story he didn't write, marked up by Wright in red pen.

In January 1993, columnist Nick Canepa was not included on the schedule to cover the Super Bowl in Los Angeles. Nick is the most entertaining writer on the staff and knows football as well as anyone. He asked Wright why he wasn't going.

"Because we only got passes for three guys," Wright said.

"Really?" Nick said. "Only three? Well, I think I can get a fourth."

"You can?" Wright said. "Okay. See what you can do."

Nick pushed some NFL buttons and secured a fourth press pass. He informed Wright.

"Hey, that's great," Wright said.

"So, when do you want me to go up?" Nick asked.

"Oh, I'm not giving it to you," Wright said.

What can be done? Probably not much. A change should come from the top. Tom Cushman is a nice guy and a master craftsman, but he isn't a hands-on department head. He spends more time finding new and ingenious ways to describe Don King's hair than he does fixing staff problems. And that's as it should be. Cushman should be left to write.

A new sports editor would be in position to make some overdue changes:

Nick Canepa's "Sez Me" column is the best thing in the paper. He should write it more than once a week. The section needs more columnists. Mark Ziegler is sharp and insightful. Make him one.

Expand pro football coverage during the season. Tom Krasovic is the best beat writer on the staff; he should cover the Chargers. Jerry Magee should write more about football and less about anything else. And so should Jim Trotter.

Less coverage of non-Olympic-year events. The USOC? Who cares? Less auto racing coverage. More local golf. And how about a men's local softball story once in a while? Bill Center is the most versatile writer on the staff, but really, how many people read about yachting and Thunderboats? Fewer stories about salary caps and arbitration, more about people.

Chris Jenkins should write more. Talent going to waste. And Ed Graney is clever and writes with feeling. Get him off the preps and into the pros. Ed Zieralski's scenic outdoor stories should be on the front page with color art. Don Norcross works harder on a story than anyone. He should do features. Fritz Quindt should write anything he wants.

Keep Buster Olney on the Padres and give him the national baseball column as well. Give Phil Collier a golden parachute. Wayne Lockwood should step it up or step out. He's known among staffers as "Cliff Clavin," the postman on Cheers, because he "just mails it in."

Finally, have staff meetings with open, honest discussions. Hire a writing coach. Communicate. Fix things. Just leave me out of it.

You may not agree with any of this. You may be a sports fan, reveling in the Chargers' fast start, blubbering over the baseball strike, chirping like a cricket about the fastest track times or latest PGA Tour winner. Me, I've seen the innards of this beast, seen it all.

Above all, in my new career as a children's book author, I have seen that the professional athlete is much like a child. And like a child, he believes he is the center around which the world revolves. Unlike the child, he ought to know better. I was there when José Canseco laughed at the boy with the lisp. I've seen enough. ■

Pacifica Strings

WE NEVER PUSH OURSELVES ON ANYONE

THE DURABLE FOUR By John Brizzolara

Unlike, say, rock-and-roll bands, classical musicians in a quartet are not required to exhibit personalities as they perform. A tuxedoed homogeneity and a serious sameness of expression will do nicely, thank you. If the performers feel passionately or not about the music, have aches and pains of a physical or existential nature, harbor resentments toward each other, or guesstimate tax returns while sleepwalking through the Kochel Concerto No. 525 or "Memories" from Cats — we couldn't care less. As we brunch in a North County bistro or fork wedding cake onto our plates at the reception, the music might be wallpaper, the musicians, potted ferns. If it's a rock group, we think we want a little flamboyance and character with our 4/4 time, but aren't Keith Richards, Ron Wood, and Charlie Watts really the same person when you get right down to it?

Well up the winding reaches of Soledad Mountain Road, four very different people have come together on a sultry August night to share wine, lasagne, the sunset, and their skills as musicians. Forty-one-year-old Ken Jerahian plays first violin; 42-year-old Sarah Agler provides vocals and second violin; Gordon Grubbs, 35, contributes cello; while Karen Childress-Evans, 45, provides viola and musical direction for Pacifica Strings, one of San Diego's few long-lived string quartets.

Grubbs, a lean, bespectacled black man, wears shorts, a dark polo shirt, socks, and dress shoes. He seems to be the comedian of the group, yet the most elusive and private. As the musicians tune (that four-note sawing and occasional skirling associated with clearing one's throat and fanning oneself with the program before the house lights dim), Grubbs, originally from Wichita, Kansas, is rattling off personal and musical jokes in a shorthand recognizable only to his fellow quartet members. Childress-Evans is the quickest to laugh, while Agler chuckles silently and Jerahian beams with pleasure. Grubbs is speaking so quickly, those outside the musical circle are at a loss as to what's so funny.

Grubbs teaches music for a living and performs professionally whenever possible, often without the other quartet members and frequently in Mexico — La Paz, Mazatlán, and Ensenada, for example.

Jerahian is dressed in a white, button-down collared shirt, Levi's, and sneakers. His two leg braces (a legacy from childhood polio) rest against a wall near his chair. The first violinist, with his thick, black hair streaked with traces of gray; deep-set, smiling dark eyes; and shoe-brush Armenian mustache has the appearance of a benevolent Uncle Joe Stalin. An electronics technician during the day, repairing such devices as TVs, stereos, VCRs, and video game players, Jerahian has been playing violin since he was seven years old. He holds a B.A. in music from University of San Diego.

Jerahian has played "in most of the local orchestras — uh, Jolla Civic, USD orchestra. From the age of 13 to 25, I played with the San Diego Youth Symphony."

Grubbs and Childress-Evans are searching for misplaced sheet music to a Bach piece they'll perform at an upcoming wedding. The violist is a petite, attractive blonde wearing a red blouse, a gray-and-red checked skirt, and red shoes. She finds the piece and sets it on her stand: "Air" by J.S. Bach. Childress-Evans plays a few tentative notes. She is accompanied immediately by four-year-old Sean Agler, who contributes a wheezing musical non sequitur on his child-size starter violin. His brother, two-year-old Nicky Agler, is offstage (that is, in his bedroom, not in the living room where the action is), crying operatically. Evidently, he has inherited his mother's lung capacity, diaphragm control, and tonal dexterity.

Discussion of which Mozart pieces to perform ("Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"), whether or not to include the Pachelbel Canon ("yeah, we have to"), Handel's "Water Music," the "Quartet versions of 2, 3 and 6," "Hawaiian Wedding Song," "Wind Beneath My Wings," "The Vivaldi" (Four Seasons), "Trumpet Voluntary" (the Clarke), and/or "that wedding thing by the guy from Peter, Paul and Mary" ("There Is Love") resolves with a tentative list and the decision to run through Bach's "Air."

The piece is processional. The words "stately" or "courtly" are hard to avoid. Grubbs's cello marks time with a descending scale of slow octaves beginning in the key of C. Jerahian and Agler sustain a middle C in unison and then part ways in a harmonic pavane away from the tonic note that grows increasingly complex and flows into A major and then D major scales — a pattern thoroughly familiar to audiences of a thousand popular love songs. Pacifica Strings render the piece with a grace and soulfulness I don't usually associate with Bach, thinking of his music more in terms of prancing, mathematical, clockwork patterns than a slow ballet of emotion.

Agler, Jerahian, Grubbs, and Childress-Evans indeed seem to be sculpting "air."

Sarah Agler is a round woman with a ready laugh and a smile behind large-framed glasses. She wears a blue floral print dress to her ankles. When she stands to sing, one might envision her in a horned Viking helmet and armor breastplate; when she opens her mouth, she can break your heart. As a violinist she is superb, which raises the question: Why second violin? The answer is that everyone in the quartet is very, very good and someone has to play the second violin parts. The term "second fiddle" is clearly a misnomer here since what Agler plays is hardly less accomplished than the first violin parts — merely different, harmonic, contrapuntal, and without which the center would not hold.

Agler has been playing since the age of eight and received a bachelor's degree in violin from the University of Nevada in Reno, followed by a master's in voice performance from Indiana University.

"I didn't tell anybody I was a violinist for eight years," the musician-singer and mother of two says. "I was only singing. But there was more of a need for violinists than sopranos. I did a lot of moving around, performing in operas." Agler moved to San Diego in 1984 and won first place in the Met (San Diego Metropolitan Opera) auditions in 1986. Agler met Childress-Evans while playing with the Grossmont Symphony.

Karen Childress-Evans started playing violin in the fourth grade in Yakima, Washington. "I had a wonderful teacher there," she says. "This woman started off a whole bunch of violinists, and I realized right off I wasn't going to be able to sit first chair so I decided I would start off with viola." She laughs; the quartet members find this funny as well. "No," she says, protesting the unlikeliness of the situation. "It's true. I decided to play the viola because I wanted to go to All Northwest and All State and All City. And if you're just one of several violins...." She trails off. "And I wanted to go to all of them and I did. It was a wonderful experience."

The 45-year-old Pacifica Strings director also plays with the La Jolla Symphony. She got her undergraduate degree in music at Washington State University and her graduate work at Western Washington State University in music education. "It was a double major," she explains, "a music degree and an education degree. Up until this year I taught strings for 24 years. I teach in the La Mesa–Spring Valley School District, and I teach at Parkway Middle School. Several years ago, I went back and got my degree in social science so I can teach other subjects. They decided to take me out of strings and put me in social science for this year, and that broke my heart. So I decided to go back and proceed with my doctorate in educational leadership. I decided that since I can't do what I love the most, and that's teach strings, I'm gonna go be a principal and I'm gonna hire Gordon and Sarah and Ken." This concept is met with much laughter and approval from her prospective employees.

"Fabulous!" Grubbs chuckles.

"I'm serious," says Childress-Evans. "I wouldn't have anybody else teaching my cellos. It will be the School of the New Century."

"We go back," she continues, "maybe ten years — well, a good seven or eight, but not in this incarnation. I found Sarah through an ad. We got Ken involved. We had another cellist at that time, and Ken brought Gordon into it. As Sarah says, this is our best group. Do we like each other? I like each other," chuckling at her grammatical negligence. "Gordon is kind of a pain in the butt, you know, but...." She trails off, joined by four-way laughter.

The rehearsal resumes.

"You're gonna do the four," Childress-Evans says to Jerahian about the "Ave Maria."

"Actually, they should both do it," says Grubbs. "You should both play in D."

The violin and viola carve a five-note figure, which climbs half a step in key every time the phrase is completed. Beneath them, the cello sustains single-root notes anchoring the violin's counterpoint to Agler's slow, true soprano. "Ave Mar*ee-eeeyaaahhhh.*" The five-note figure falters as Childress-Evans and Jerahian tumble their notes onto each other in slightly separate tempos. The effect is supposed to be a flowing one but instead is that of a lurching vehicle with mismatched tires.

"It sounds as if this is a difficult piece to pull off," I suggest.

"It is, but we have the skills," laughs Childress-Evans. "Believe it or not."

"We may have left them someplace," says Grubbs, "but we have the skills."

"Isn't there something like three or four verses to this thing?" asks Jerahian.

"Yeah, but we're not gonna do 'em," announces the violist, and the others laugh with relief.

"Yeah, let's not," says Agler.

"I went to a wedding," Jerahian recalls, "and a band was singing this, and in the second verse the guy's voice broke, started cracking. I felt terrible for the guy." He looks through his sheet music. "This says, 'From Walter Scott's "Lady in the Lake.' "

"Which one is this?" asks Childress-Evans.

"This is the Schubert," Agler explains. "I sang them both for her [their employer for the upcoming wedding], and she liked this one better. And this is easier for us to play."

"Should we do this smoother? More legato?" asks Grubbs. "Or maybe even, well, some kind of a brushstroke? Somewhere in between? As long as we stay together...."

"Let's just do it smooth," Childress-Evans suggests, and that seems to be the final word on the matter.

Another run-through and someone is striking sharp notes, though it is not apparent, at least to me, who it is.

"Sorry," says the squinting violist, "I can't read this." Her sheet music is a Xerox copy; the musical text has shrunk and blurred.

Later, one member of the quartet will express dissatisfaction with Childress-Evans's organization and handling of the sheet music.

"In terms of what music means to me in my life, that has changed over the years," says Jerahian, the first violinist and former technician with Maxwell Laboratories. "When you do things for a living, sometimes it gets to be a grind, and you don't enjoy it. Music now for me is just relaxation and enjoyment. I don't use it to make a full-time living.

"I don't know if anybody's flat-out put it in an article, but the arts have never really been supported in San Diego," Jerahian says. "The plays, the Old Globe, are too expensive, and there's a lack of support for the San Diego Symphony. It's not a poor town either; they can afford it, but their priorities go into other areas. We [the quartet] all have other jobs and don't have time to get together as often as we'd like."

When asked, Jerahian says his mother most influenced the violinist's nascent career.

"She used to play the piano, nothing amazing, but she had an incredible love of music, especially the violin. I had three sisters who were all trained on the piano, so I was the one who got the violin. To be honest with you, I don't really think I had a desire at first to play the violin. I was inspired by my mother. At one point it was a tossup between electrical engineering and music, and I just so happened to go into music, not only because of my love of music, but I also received a music scholarship to the University of San Diego, where I went to school. It was a good opportunity to get an education and 99 percent of it was paid for, so I went that route. USD isn't really a topnotch school for majoring in music; it's good for minoring in music; it's good for teachers, and throughout it's a very good education, but nothing like a music conservatory."

Was childhood polio a factor in learning the violin, the hours of being forced to be sedentary?

"I was in second grade," Jerahian remembers. "It was just before my first music lesson. I was one of those rare cases that contracted it from the vaccine. So, yeah, music was a good thing for me to pursue full-time because you're sitting and all that, but believe it or not, I actually feel better mobile — sitting is what really kills me. People see me on crutches and right away they say, 'Hey, do you want a chair?' while my back is screaming, 'No!'

"Actually, string players develop all these ailments, so even if you're okay when you start out...." Jerahian laughs. "They develop all kinds of problems with their shoulders. It's very taxing on your body. Especially violin or viola because of the awkward position you hold your instrument. I don't think cellists are as affected. One woman I know of in the San Diego Symphony had to give up playing after years because of all kinds of major problems. It affected her arms especially."

Has Pacifica Strings ever toured?

"No. We really haven't outside of San Diego. What's popular right now is your coffee shops. That seems to be the big thing, where a lot of San Diego's music is happening. I'm trying to break into those coffee shops—" Jerahian laughs, realizing that what he said sounds illegal. "— with classical music, I mean, which doesn't seem to be that prevalent in these coffee shops."

Jerahian and Grubbs will perform as a duet at A Better World this fall, and he hopes to appear there eventually with the entire quartet. "I don't think there's that much money in it, but it's good for the publicity end of it — to play and advertise what you do, get the word out."

Does Jerahian remember the first piece of music he heard as a kid that turned him on and set him on his course?

"Yeah, probably a lot of people's favorite and that's the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in D or D minor, I forgot which."

What kind of music does Pacifica Strings perform best?

"In my opinion [the wedding pieces] are the most rotten stuff. That doesn't comprise any of what we really do except maybe during the ceremony. Those are little pieces that are stuck in for a candle-lighting or we'll do the Pachelbel Canon during a processional and maybe we'll do some upbeat light classical for the recessional. A lot of people want the traditional, so we let them have it. I would say our best stuff is light classical in the vein of 'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' or Haydn. When you get into some of your Beethoven or Brahms, that's more like 'sit and listen' — it's real deep. That's not the kind of thing we usually play at a wedding reception. Schubert is kind of on the lighter side, and Schumann. We don't do a lot of baroque-type stuff. As you heard, we occasionally do Bach, we'll do the Brandenburg No. 3. We also do things like Scott Joplin rags."

Also in the Pacifica Strings repertoire are such unlikely numbers as "Unchained Melody" by the Righteous Brothers, "Wind Beneath My Wings" (if you insist), and the Andrews Sisters' "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy."

"We do those things very well," Jerahian says. "We'll maybe do some of them at A Better World. But I'm not really super fond of contemporary music; that's just always the way I've been.

"Most of the people we play for are sipping on champagne, getting ready for dinner after the wedding, so the light classical is fine. It's usually pretty understandable to people. The heaviest we'll get is Beethoven, and we tend not to do too much Beethoven."

Does Jerahian find that the audience as a rule will ignore the quartet? Comment on the music? Look over the musician's shoulders? Could he characterize a general reaction to the music of Pacifica Strings?

"Maybe you can throw this into words and make it somehow that nobody's offended," Jerahian laughs; his mustache widens, his eyes narrow. "I would say that in general, the people that can least afford us are definitely the most appreciative. They're the ones that struggle to get the money to have our group, and they are the ones who are the most complimentary and supportive and come up and say, 'You guys sound great' or give us requests.

"To be honest with you, I can think of at least two or three instances playing in La Jolla and here around Soledad Mountain Road where we've been stuck in a corner and nobody even said a word to us. We were there for the scenery; it was the elite thing to do. That was fine; we got paid very well. At one job, even though there was a large buffet and tons of food, we were not invited to eat. I've learned to make sure you get something to eat during the breaks." Jerahian laughs again, but at himself, not his thoughtless employers. "A job is a job, and I don't stipulate in the contract that we have to be fed, but sometimes we have a three-and-a-half- or four-hour job and we don't get a chance to duck out and get something to eat. About 80 percent of the time we are invited to eat. We never push ourselves on anyone, though."

How affordable is the quartet?

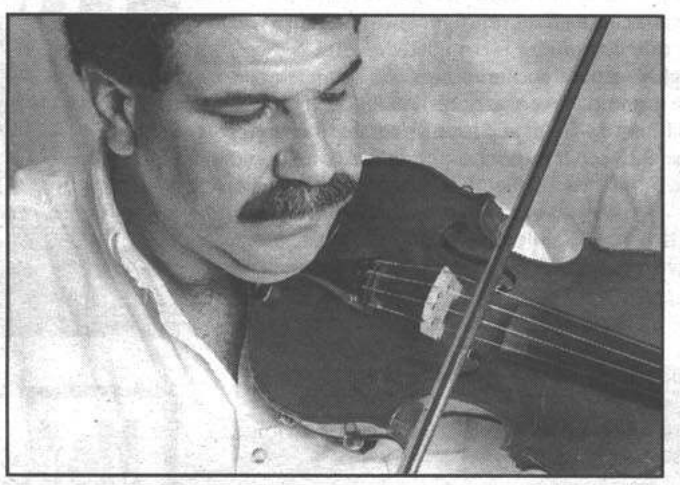

"For a basic wedding we charge $300, and that involves music while people are arriving, say 15, 20 minutes. We play the whole ceremony, which is about 20 minutes to a half-hour. We'll play as people are walking out of the church. Then we'll play as they head for the champagne and hors d'oeuvres, which is another 15 minutes. So they get roughly an hour or hour and 15 minutes' worth of music for $300. We add on for every additional hour, so it comes out to between $300 and $500. For a full, blow-out wedding where we play a three-hour reception, it's $500."

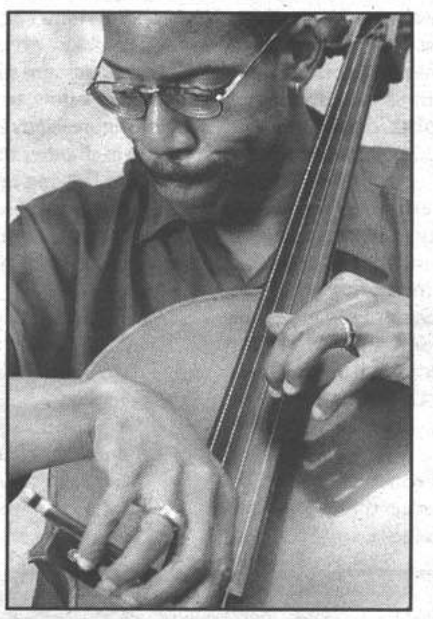

How is Jerahian's relationship with the other musicians? His response is primarily about Gordon Grubbs. "He also plays harp, you know? He went to a music conservatory and he's a very..." Jerahian pauses, "....talented cellist. It's kind of a bummer he doesn't have a driver's license, so somebody has to pick him up, and that kind of makes it hard. His cello playing makes up for the inconvenience, and he's a good friend, a good guy.

"We had another cellist, but you've got to really want to do it. You've got to have four people that really want to play who don't bitch and complain. Whiners, you know? People to whom you have to say, 'I'll pay you extra if you play 15 minutes more,' and they say, 'No, I've got to leave.' It's not like they're really committed to it. It's like, bam, and they're out of there — give-me-the-money-and-run kind of thing. Everybody wants to be paid and everything, but at the same time, you've got to be diplomatic about it."

The sun is setting out to sea through a shredded marine layer and shadows spread through the Aglers' wooded back yard. Lights are turned on in the living room as the members of the quartet take their seats. The smell of lasagne and tobacco (from Agler's husband's pipe) fills the house, along with the famous 18 opening notes of Mozart's "A Little Night Music." Pacifica Strings begins the piece spontaneously; smiling and nodding at each other with satisfaction and amusement that the same selection was on everyone's mind as darkness fell.

The centuries are erased and Mozart's music feels as relevant as it was 200 years ago, as relevant as the moment, the summer night. ■

DALTON'S LUCK

By Luis Urrea

San Diego writer Dalton Lee innocently has done a small favor for some mysterious Colombians — Elvis, La Mula, and El Gigante. As a gesture of appreciation, Elvis later delivers to the amazed Dalton and his wife Nicolina a box containing $15,000. Though the Lees don't know it, the men are drug smugglers. Soon, the thugs dispatch a La Jolla man and his bodyguard and take over his Mercedes and his Mt. Soledad home, then kill a Tijuana customs officer and steal an address book from his desk.

Tonight, a group of men sit around a table in a building on the San Diego waterfront looking at slides of the recent activities of Dalton, Nicolina, and the Colombians. The men speculate on the connection between the Lees and the smugglers and set out to track them down. Meanwhile, Dalton and Nicolina have taken Wanda, owner of Bitches Brew feminist bookstore on Adams Avenue, to the Corvette Diner for a friendly meal. There they encounter Dalton's biker friend Bear, much to Nicolina's dismay.

Chapter Fourteen: Things Fall Apart

Okay, Dalton could concede that there had been more pleasant lunches. Not that Wanda minded the biker's joining them. She seemed entranced by his tattooed forearms, pointing at various demonic scribbles and innocently asking, "And what does this one mean?"

It was Nicolina who refused to look at anyone at the table. Dalton reached out and touched her hand, but she pulled it away. Wanda was asking Bear about motorcycle engines and said, "Having a spat, children?" Nicolina looked at the decorations of the Corvette Diner. The longer she sulked, the madder it made Dalton. She'd always accused him of having writerly mood swings. Ha! he thought. Nico, Nico, Nico — Little Miss Moody. This morning he swore she was the perfect mate; now he wanted to throttle her.

While the happy family picked through their food, La Mula was delivering Elvis's Benz to Allain Gillot's garage just off India Street. Elvis wanted some fine-tuning done to the engine. Big deal, Mula thought. What a waste of money. Up at the house on Mt. Soledad, he'd had to carefully clean all traces of old blood out of the trunk, even though he'd insisted to El Gigante that there was no observable blood anywhere on the car. "It'd be dry by now," he reasoned. "Flakes. Dust!"

"It's not important that you can't see it," El Gigante said.

"But if I can't see it, nobody will see it."

"Clean it."

"It is clean."

"No, it's not."

"It is too."

"Clean it again," El Gigante ordered.

"You're being too careful," La Mula said.

"Impossible."

"It is possible to be too careful. You are proof."

"I'm saving your life, you fool. You just don't know it."

"It's tempting fate. It brings bad luck," La Mula groused. "Besides, I can get along perfectly well without you."

He was still pissed off when he pulled into the Gillot lot. They treated him like some menial, some slave. All the dirt went to Mula, and none of the glory. "Falta de respeto," he muttered as he signed the papers at the counter.

"Excuse me?" the young man said.

Mula shook his head and wandered outside. He had an hour to kill in this ridiculous gringo town. Yanqui comemierdas, he thought. If he were back home, he'd be down in the main plaza, eating a shaved fruit ice and watching the pretty girls sashaying home from the secretarial college. He could attend a cockfight or see the masked wrestlers at the Coliséo. But San Diego — what was there to do?

He stepped out through the gate and walked up to India. A plane went over to the north, his left. He shrugged and walked in that direction. He sniffed the tasty air across the street from some Italian restaurant. He didn't notice the tan Dodge slowing behind him, two blond heads showing through the windshield.

"Jesus," said Wanda, savoring it. "How fascinating. A conversion."

Nicolina felt the edges of the box tearing. Her life was being invaded by alarming strangeness. Eying Bear's Iron Cross, she said, "Isn't that a Nazi medal? Wanda's Jewish." She smiled with false warmth. "Do the Avenging Angels have Jewish members?"

"Jeez, honey," Dalton muttered.

"I'm not like that no more," said Bear.

"I'm a lesbian, too!" Wanda said.

"Really?" said Bear. They grinned at each other, but they didn't know why.

Wanda said, "Nicolina is angry with us. She's making a scene."

Nicolina fumed.

Dalton thought, the madder she gets, the older she looks. He found himself thinking her outrage made her look like a bird.

Bear studied his nails.

"Ain't love great," he said.

"You said it, brother," said Wanda.

"Cut it out, you guys," Dalton said.

"Well," said Bear. "I got to get going."

He reached into his pocket.

"I'll get it," said Dalton.

Bear rose, said, "Later," and hurried from the table.

"Poor old Bear!" Wanda whispered.

"He's a Nazi," Nicolina said. "Dalton thinks we enjoy killers eating lunch with us."

"He seemed nice enough," Wanda said. "Come on, girl — you're not usually like this."

"Stop it," Nicolina said.

"Bear," said Dalton, "is trying to turn over a new leaf, that's all." He sighed. "How mad are you, Nardona?"

Wanda slapped the tabletop.

"I believe it's time for the gentile squabble hour." She smiled at them. "I think I'll go observe the barbarian mount his steed."

She kissed Nicolina on the cheek.

"Bitch," she said.

"No," said Dalton. "It's my fault."

"Asshole," Wanda replied.

Mula enjoyed walking. He'd spent 30 years intending to do something about his weight. The chance to walk made him feel virtuous and athletic. He clopped along at a good clip, heading toward Washington Street. It was about three-quarters of the way to Washington that he sensed the car behind him. He felt the prickle in his neck hairs, and then a bolt of adrenaline. He never turned around. He feigned an untied shoelace and he bent down to retie it and glanced between his shoulder and his knee. A tan gringo car coasted to the curb and sat. It was about 200 yards behind him. He surreptitiously patted his side — no firearm. El Gigante had made him leave his pistol at home.

He stood, started whistling, and strode north. The car waited a few beats and pulled away from the curb. Mula walked faster and faster, and after 30 paces or so, he broke into a run. He almost veered in to the Mexican taco shop on the corner of Washington, but he made a tactical error and turned west, thinking Washington might take him to the airport. More cover. Cops. But no. He realized as he ran that Washington passed under the freeway and dropped to the bottom of the hill and lost itself among underpasses and an empty-looking factory of some sort. He was wheezing.

The car sped by him and stopped. A smiling gringo stood up and adjusted his tie. Mula took his measurements automatically: six feet two inches, 180 pounds, blond hair, broad shoulders. The gringo came across the street and stood, hands on hips. It was the man from the screening room who had been studying Mula's picture. His assistant got out of the car, jogged over, and stood half in the street, half on the sidewalk. Mula slowed. The driver opened his jacket and showed Mula the butt of a military-issue .45 sticking out of his belt.

"Coño," Mula said, stopping, hanging his head to catch his breath. He bent forward from the waist and rested his hands on his knees. He couldn't believe how hard his heart was pounding. If they waited just a few moments, he might be able to collect himself enough to fight them.

The first one walked up to him and said, "I'm Mr. Williams." Then he hit Mula across the back of the neck.

Chapter Fifteen: Wanda Rides a Motorcycle, and Confessions Begin

Whenever Nicolina was mad at him, Dalton felt the world deflate around him. Part of him couldn't believe it was possible. The other part of him wanted to go into battle.

Nicolina felt betrayed. Betrayed in some unexplainable way, as if Dalton had lied to her, presented a false face behind which lurked an imagined monster. Of course, the more she expected to find some hideous True Dalton lurking within, the more she found evidence that such a creature existed. And the more Dalton suspected Nicolina, for all her glory, of harboring some deep and hidden anger at him, the more he saw her moods as assaults. They had hypnotized each other, in love and in dread. Her frowns said more than they needed to say; his moods seemed to signal catastrophe. The sad fact was, each of them wished they were making love, all the confusions around them erased. The troubling ghost of the $15,000 hovered over them — everything fell beneath its shadow.

They sat in the Corvette Diner, carefully not looking at each other.

Opting to escape the cloud of marital ill will, Wanda hurried after Big Bear, hoping to catch a glimpse of his motorcycle. This whole man-beast thing really intrigued her. It was much more interesting than the little spat brewing away in the restaurant.

Of course, in case the Bear said some stupid sexist thing, she had half a pack of bologna in her shoulder bag. She wasn't afraid to tell a biker, as she wasn't afraid to inform workmen, that women were not meat. She'd fling bologna all over his bike if she had to.

The Bear was stomping down the street, shoulders hunched and head hanging.

"Yoo-hoo!" Wanda called.

He kept on walking.

Wanda tried again. "Calling all barbarians!" she hollered.

He glanced off to the side but didn't turn back.

"Damn it," she muttered. She stuck two fingers in her mouth and whistled as loud as she could. It blasted forth powerfully.

He spun around, startled.

"Oh," he said.

"I was just wondering," Wanda said, "if I could see your bike. It sounds silly, but I've never even looked at one up close."

Big Bear eyed her.

"Okay," he said.

They walked along, hands in pockets.

The Bear caught a reflection of them in a bank window. He grinned and pointed. "Don't we beat all," he said.

Wanda enjoyed what she saw.

"Don't we though," she said.

El Gigante was struggling. He bent down close and stared, mouthing out loud. Tijuana Cop fascinated him, even if this new English was so absurd as to be undecipherable. He worked at a page for five, ten minutes. He turned back to Dalton's photograph. It seemed Dalton could write pretty well. At least there were a lot of gunfights.

"Do you like it?" Elvis asked.

"Sí," El Gigante said. "El libro es groovy."

Elvis was sketching Nicolina from his photographs; he drew in her hair in black ink and her face in blue. Bic pens. He couldn't figure out what to do with his red pen. Maybe a flower in her hair?

El Gigante said, "English."

"It's insane," Elvis agreed.

"T-h-o-u-g-h," El Gigante said. "Though. But the same letters make the word through. Then, the same letters make the word tough."

"How about thought."

"But that rhymes with caught, which is different letters."

Elvis said, "There is a word, b-o-u-g-h. Bough."

"Que la chingada," El Gigante reasoned.

"Hey!" Elvis enthused. "What about throughout?"

He was busy writing it out for El Gigante to ponder when the phone rang. Elvis snatched it. "Hello, baby," he said.

The voice on the other end said, "Elvis Poma. I have one of your boys here." Elvis started snapping his fingers wildly, gesturing for El Gigante to get on the extension. "He sings like a bird, if you ask him nice enough."

"Who is this?" Elvis asked.

"Mr. Williams," the voice said, "your new buddy."

Elvis covered the mouthpiece and whispered, "¿Qué es 'buddy'?"

El Gigante thumbed through his Spanish/English dictionary while Elvis listened, his eyes staring straight ahead, not blinking once.

Big Bear Honeywell parked the bike in front of Bitches Brew. Wanda let go of his gut and pried off the helmet. "Whoa!" she cried, which was the least witty thing she'd said in a year. "Yeah!" She got off the bike and punched him on the shoulder. "What a gas," she said.

The Bear smiled.

"In the wind," he said.

She went to the door.

"Come in, Bear," she said. "Have some tea."

"Tea..." he said. "Uh."

He looked at the signs, the posters in the window. A new notice was pasted to the glass: FEMALE SPOKEN HERE.

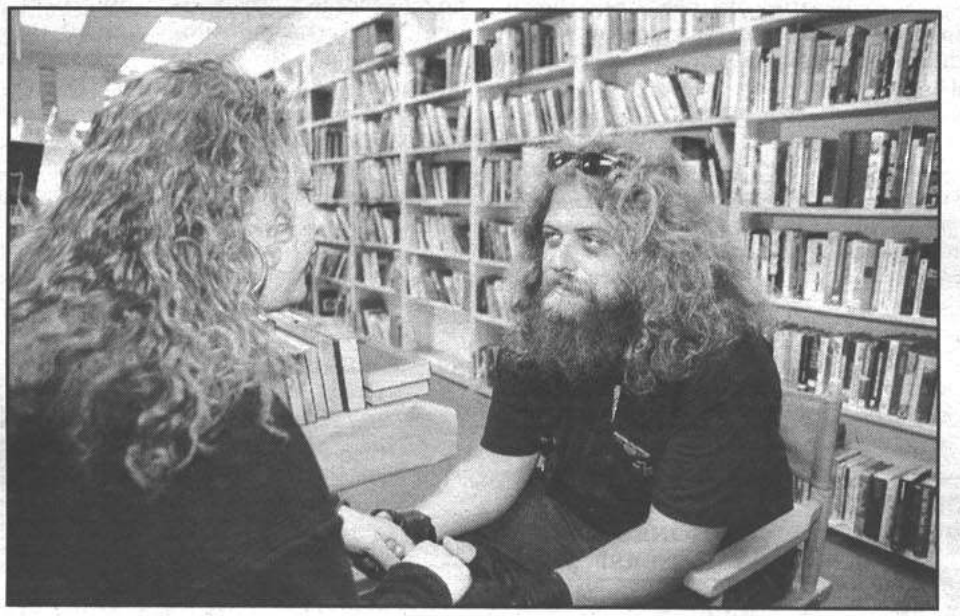

"Oh, come on," she said. "It won't hurt you."

"Look," he said, "I'm not sure you want me around. I'm not exactly your kind of person."

"Don't be silly," she said. His face was cloudy. He stared at his big hands resting on the gas tank. "I'm a good liberal," she joked. "An equal-opportunity humanist."

Bear sighed.

He slowly got off his bike as she unlocked the door. The tinkle of the bell above her head seemed intimidating. He looked either way, hoping nobody on a scooter could see him entering the feminazi store, then stepped in, wrinkled his nose: patchouli oil, incense. There was a poster of a naked woman with a mastectomy scar raising her arms to the sky. He looked at his feet.

"Chamomile?" she asked, as she rattled around behind the coffee machine.

He perched himself on a delicate wooden bench.

"Wanda," he said. "I've...uh...done things."

She looked at him over the counter.

"Bad things. I don't think you want me in here."

"So it's true what they say about bikers," she finally said.

He blew air through his nose.

"Bear?" she said. "Are you crying?"

"I just want to serve the Lord," he mumbled. "Don't know how. Don't know...."

The Lord, she thought. Hoo-boy.

"I'm not too good with this Christian stuff," she admitted. "What's the problem. Aren't you supposed to be forgiven?"

"I done some real bad things."

She sat beside him.

"Can't you go to confession or something?"

"I ain't Catholic."

"I bet it'd help."

"I don't know nobody I could confess to. I don't know nobody who could listen to what I got to say, Wanda."

Wanda looked at the spines of books: Adrienne Rich. Judy Grahn. Sharon Olds. Beside her, the Bear shuddered, drew a hitching breath. My God, she thought. Late afternoon light barely made it into the store. The cool gloom spread, the scent of the pages coming into her nose. She watched her hand float across to the Bear's and take it. He jumped. She knew he was startled. She smiled slightly, thinking, Dyke 'n' bike!

"Tell me," said Wanda.

He looked at her.

"It's okay, Bear. You'd be amazed at the things I've heard. I can take it."

Cars passed out on Adams Avenue. She squeezed his big oil-stained paw.

"I will hear your confession." ■ ordinance on a project being considered by that committee. At that time, I was struck by his lack of understanding of even the basic issues of seismic safety and by his lack of regard for retrofitting standards in general. At one point, he dismissed the alternative ordinances as "make-work projects for structural engineers"!

So, add my vote to that of Jim Libby, a structural engineer I have always respected. San Diego should not have been exempted from the statewide seismic code, and I hope we somehow avoid the earthquake that proves it.

But in the meantime, Harry Mathis runs his politics as he would from the bridge of his submarine; he has his orders, his mission, and his torpedoes!

Computer Errors

We feel obliged to point out that your October 6 article about the annual meeting of Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility (CPSR), held at UCSD on October 8 and 9, contained a number of inaccuracies ("Highlights"). From the article, written by Eleanor Widmer, readers might infer that the Global Schoolhouse Project and the San Diego Computer Society's work with the San Diego Police Department are activities of CPSR's San Diego chapter: This is not true. The Global Schoolhouse Project and the San Diego Computer Society's bulletin board are two of the many innovative community networking projects under way in San Diego, and we would encourage everyone to learn more about them, but they have no affiliation with CPSR.

Widmer's article may also have left readers confused about Christine Harbs's correct affiliation. She is an attorney with the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse at the University of San Diego. Moreover, the quotations attributed to Harbs bear only a tangential relation to anything she ever said. In particular, she made no reference to a "gay Internet." These errors notwithstanding, your interest and attention to the CPSR conference and community networking in San Diego are very much appreciated.

Thank you very much.

Ditch Black Crowe Humor

I am writing this in response to the enclosed cartoon (J.D. Crowe, September 29). It takes a while for families and friends to get over the suicide of someone who jumped off a bridge, and I know your cartoons have a lot of humor, sarcasm, black humor, etc., but it would be nice if someone occasionally thought about the pain caused by some of them. I am in that situation, as are others who knew someone or saw a body as it landed, or after it landed.

Also, the power of suggestion when someone is considering suicide or the method: I wish messy methods were not publicized like you did. A friend of mine committed suicide with sleeping pills, and that has been less difficult to deal with.

Thank you for any consideration.

Another Trolleygate

Over 200 letters were received by the Army Corps of Engineers during the recent public comment period for the west Mission Valley trolley permit application of the Metropolitan Transit Development Board (MTDB) ("City Lights," September 29). According to MTDB's written record, not one comment supported this trolley route through wetlands and floodplain. Without this federal permit, this trolley cannot be built.

MTDB deleted most public comments from their written responses. No comments from individuals were listed or responded to; only some of the group and agency comments were answered. Such deletions are reminiscent of the infamous 18-minute gap in the Watergate tape.

One example of a deleted comment was that of the River Valley Preservation Project. It provided MTDB's own documentation which shows that routing the trolley mostly on Friars Road between Morena Boulevard and Fashion Valley Road would cost $20 million less than the adopted wetlands route!

Federal law provides for $10,000 fines when an applicant misrepresents information in the permit process. These are some of the reasons the project is becoming known as Trolleygate. The

Loves Exposure

I must tell you what a guilty pleasure it is to read your articles about the scandal and lawsuit involving Planners Independent Management, Inc. ("Fugitive in a U-Haul," "City Lights," September 29).

I only wish such articles would appear on the front business pages of the Wall Street Journal or the San Diego Union-Tribune.

More power to you and your paper's reporting. I live for the day I read that company has gone out of business.

Suggests Trip To Bookstore

It is clear from his letter ("Decency Beacon," September 29) that Jeff Harris is anti-Semitic and ill-informed about how Christian Europe generally treated the Jews. As far as Jews were concerned, Christianity was seldom a beacon of decency.

I suggest that he read two books written by Catholic scholars on the subject, The Anguish of the Jews by Edward Flannery and History of the Jews by Frederick Schweitzer. Both books are available in the SDSU, USD, and UCSD libraries.

Phone Matches™ Success Stories:

John & Ann Brannon

WANT TO SPEND HOLIDAYS with dark African sister. Must drive, love Jesus, quiet, honest, loving. No games. I'm white, 47. Gospel music, shooting pool, movies, walking, quiet times, prayer. Hebrews 10:24, Romans 12:10, 14:19. Let's get busy. Here and now. A house is not a home. Love is overdue. Football! ☎

Ann: My girlfriend and I were talking over the phone one night and she said, "Ann, we got to meet us some nice Christian men." So she started looking through the Reader Phone Matches™ ads. I said, "Ruby, find me a white Christian man." She said, "Here's one!" and she read off John's ad.

John: I tried the Reader classifieds years ago, back when you had to rent a post office box and send letters. I like Phone Matches™ better. I think you can tell how honest a person is from their voice.

Ann: John and I talked for hours on the phone before we ever met. On our first date, I invited him to my church. There's no way I could have missed him. Everybody else there was black.

John: That didn't bother me. At the time I was going to Bayview Baptist in Southeast San Diego. I was the only white man in the congregation.

Ann: I've always looked at people as people, without their skin color. That's the way my mom brought me up. So this racial thing never got in the way. Right off the bat, I knew John was the one. We just connected.

John: After our first date, we started visiting different churches together. We also went out to dinner and to the movies.

Ann: John always acted like such a gentleman. He would open doors for me, help me down off the curb. And when we said good night, he would just kiss my hand.

John: Neither of us believe in sex before marriage. When I married Ann, I was a 48-year-old virgin. An endangered species! I proposed on a beautiful day in Seaport Village. I don't remember if I got down on my knee or not.

Ann: You did.

John: I was expecting her to turn me down. I didn't have much to offer – no fancy car, no big income. But she looked at me with this big smile and said, "Yes."

Ann: I have seven children, all grown, and 14 grandchildren. He said, "I'm willing to accept them all as a package deal. I love you that much."

John: I've thought about a church wedding all my life. We got married at Greater Galilee Baptist, where the pastor is a friend of mine.

Ann: It was on May 31, 1992. My friend Ruby played the organ.

John: When Ann walked down the aisle, she was the most beautiful woman I've ever seen.

Ann: We do everything together now – attend church, pray, movies, Disneyland, long walks, reading the Bible … .

John: We don't fight, but sometimes we fuss.

Ann: What he calls a "fuss," I call "expressing yourself."

John: Ann brought out a lot of things that were hidden in me. When you have someone who accepts who you are, you feel more at ease, more comfortable with yourself.

Ann: He writes me poems and leaves them all over the house. I find them on the coffee table, in front of the microwave …

John: When I met Ann, the whole world opened up.

John and Ann: The Lord has truly blessed us, and our marriage.

Grace Harmelink Knows Just How Holly Treppa Feels

Loma Portal School Celebrates Its 80th Birthday

Grace Harmelink, Amy Rank, Patty Rank — three generations of Loma Portal students

"Loma Portal opened its doors in 1914," reports Grace Harmelink, "a two-room school, where my oldest brother William Justice was one of the first few students." Mrs. Harmelink goes on to tell me about her siblings (Roy, Robert, and Margaret), recites dates they attended the grammar school (1916, 1919, 1922), who was teaching (Mrs. Calloway), and who was principal (Mrs. McKin). Grace first attended Loma Portal Elementary School in 1921. When I ask her if she's the oldest student in the area, she says Jack Lane of Rancho Bernardo is older: "He's 83, I think — and he's still handsome."

LOCAL EVENTS

Both Mrs. Harmelink and Loma Portal Elementary School celebrate their 80th birthdays this year. In preparation for the celebration, Loma Portal principal Jill Brogan's office is overrun with memorabilia: PTA scrapbooks, yellowed clippings, photos mounted on faded construction paper, stacks of postcards and hand-written letters from past students. An entire accordion file filled with information gathered 30 years ago, for the 50th anniversary, squats on a small round table in Brogan's office.

At this year's celebration, a chorus of 60 fourth-, fifth-, and sixth-graders will sing the school's alma mater, and a group of student delegates will manage tours of the grounds. The Navy band will perform, and a time capsule will be buried.

"We're getting 50 phone calls a day now," says Brogan, who remains cheerful amidst these piles of nostalgia. "We have people coming from as far away as the Netherlands! Louise Dyer, who worked on the 50th birthday party, has a son who will be flying in from London. A friend of Grace Harmelink's will be here from Sacramento. I got a call the other day from a woman who was indignant because her sister had received an invitation and she hadn't. 'Everybody knew me!' she declared. 'I was the twin! Everyone knew the twins — we were history!' So, the twins will be here, too."

Other alumni expected are Florence Chadwick (who swam the English Channel), artist Stephen Correia, Mark Reynolds (Olympic gold medalist in sailing), several judges, authors, and actors. State and local officials are scheduled to present proclamations (it is, after all, an election year). "I'm prepared for a crowd of 200," Brogan says.

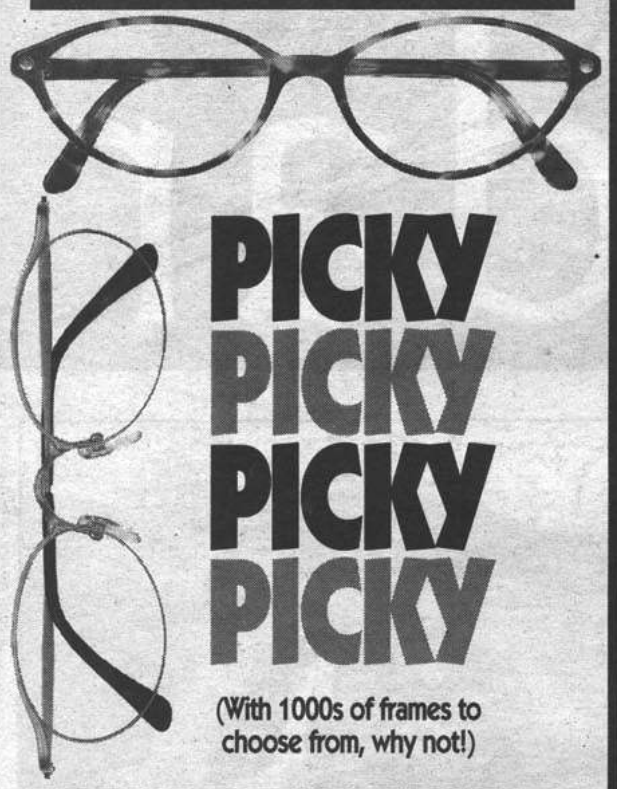

Not even high school reunions bring so many back home. So, how does a grammar school keep alumni coming back?

"It's really like a family," says Charlene Bradshaw, a former PTA president, whose 11 children (now ages 9 to 27) all attended Loma Portal. "Every school program involves the community, and the parents are very supportive of the staff and teachers. Everyone works together."

Loma Portal's second-grade teacher Carolyn Hayes, who grew up in a military family that moved from base to base, attended sixth grade at Loma Portal in 1961. "I loved going home for lunch with friends who lived across the street. I'd never experienced that before." In her last year at Point Loma High School, Hayes began student teaching at Loma Portal. After graduating from high school, she left the area for 12 years, got her teaching credential and master's degree. In the late '80s, she returned to San Diego, hoping to find a teaching position at Loma Portal.

"I had such a strong feeling that I would work here," recalls Hayes. "One of the interviewers was the sister of a classmate from Point Loma High. Now I find myself teaching my peers' children, or their siblings' children. The mother of one of my current students remembers me from my student teaching days in 1967."

According to Jill Brogan, such allegiance is not unusual for Point Loma. "As a whole, this community tends to be intergenerational; there isn't a lot of mobility. Families stay here, they grow up, they go through all the schools, they return and raise their families here."

Patty Rank, Grace Harmelink's daughter, who attended Loma Portal from 1950 to 1956, agrees. "People generally never move out; if they do, they move back when they can afford to. Once you live here, you don't want to live anywhere else."

From her school days, Rank remembers polio shots and air-raid sirens: climbing under tables at noon every day in her black-and-white saddle shoes, worn with white socks and white angora cuffs "which you didn't want to wash because they'd get all matted."

Rank's daughter, Amy, a tennis champion, graduated from Loma Portal's sixth grade last year. So did Holly Treppa, whose dad, Ray, went to Loma Portal from 1953 to 1956. Ray remembered Loma Portal's influence fondly enough that when it came time for his own daughter to start school, the Treppa's faked their address to get Holly into Loma Portal. "And now she hates Correia [Junior High], just for the idea that she had to leave Loma Portal," says Ray.

Grace Harmelink knows just how Holly Treppa feels. "We were sad to leave the school — and scared to death to go to Point Loma High! But I have many beautiful memories of Loma Portal. In spring, we could go barefoot at times. We loved that! And you know what? At the age of 80, I have never had problems with my feet."

Can San Diego ZPG Be Reborn?

Zero Population Growth Reports on Cairo

Photograph by Sandy Huffaker, Jr.

Laurie Shook

Mexican-American writer Richard Rodriguez, in a recent editorial about the U.N. International Conference on Population and Development, wondered why white folks, when worrying about overpopulation, are wont to illustrate their concern with images of brownish people streaming across the border, rather than with footage of pale Norwegians packed into a crowded restaurant. His curiosity was legitimate. Whenever and wherever the question of population control has reared its head, the twin issues of eugenics and racism have trotted up and waved their grimy paws in the air and begged for equal attention.

Overpopulation, as a public policy matter, necessarily implies a population controller and a population controlled. And the question of just who will be cast in these two roles is problematic. Nonetheless, it is a question that Laurie Shook, chairperson for the San Diego chapter of Zero Population Growth, feels can be addressed with fairness and with wisdom.

Several years ago, Shook revived San Diego's ZPG chapter, which had disbanded in the early '70s. ("Birth rates were low at that time and everybody thought, 'Great, the problem's solved.' ") Shook came to overpopulation by way of environmentalism. She had been active in organizations like the Sierra Club, which put her on ZPG's mailing list.

"I started reading the material ZPG sent me," she says, "and I gradually realized that overpopulation was the issue at the core of these environmental problems I was concerned with. It made sense to me."

Shook set about reorganizing the 1100 local ZPG members. The idea was to provide a forum in which people could learn about overpopulation. ZPG was given a publicity boost by the recent United Nations International Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo.

Shook went to Cairo armed with worries and opinions which 170 San Diegans had expressed at a ZPG-sponsored meeting last March. These worries and opinions, voiced mostly by members of 30 local organizations — such as the League of Women Voters, Womancare, and the Sierra Club — were compiled by Shook into a four-page report, which was forwarded to the U.S. State Department and incorporated into positions the U.S. would take on issues raised in Cairo.

Shook says that race-hate-mongers, the kind you expect to be riled up by population control, were a no-show at the March ZPG meeting. "There was a similar meeting in L.A.," Shook says, "and from what I gather there was quite a bit of that, you know, that kind of thing."

It's a curious and difficult path Shook has opted to trod. She's aware that garden-variety liberal Democrats, the kind concerned with the environment and overpopulation, are shocked to discover they have allies on the extreme, white-supremacist right.

"We have to be careful," she says, "to emphasize, especially in San Diego, that our problem at the border is a symptom of overpopulation and not a cause. People are driven from their homes because of unemployment, which is in turn caused by environmental degradation, which is caused by overpopulation. We believe in a sane border policy that takes these factors into consideration. We believe that overpopulation is best addressed through education, particularly the education of women, women's rights, and governmental policies that support these things."

San Diego's chapter of ZPG is once again holding a public meeting on the Cairo conference. This time, Shook and others will explain clauses of the non-binding resolution which the conference produced. Workshops held during this three-hour meeting will address zero-population-growth lobbying on the local level, media advocacy of the ZPG agenda, border-area social services, women's and youths' issues, and sustainable development.

Exquisite Cadaver

Photograph by Dave Allen

Michael MacCarthy

My children had no television when they were growing up. On rainy days, or when they were ill, I kept them busy with word games. Each of us would write two sentences on a sheet of writing paper, fold the paper over to cover the sentences, and pass it on to the next person. We continued the process until we had finished a full page. No subject was taboo (my sons were fond of bathroom humor), nor did we worry about grammar or spelling. When the story, with its disjointed subject matter and lack of transitions, was read aloud, my children fell into uncontrolled laughter. So did my advanced-writing students at the university. When they were uptight and anxiety-ridden, I would ask them each to write a paragraph anonymously. Then I would shuffle the sheets for greater randomness and read the results. It was a perfect exercise to help my students relax.

The technique was not developed by me but by the surrealists of the 1920s; each would write down a word his fellows couldn't see, then pass along the page. Perhaps the most well-known result of these exercises was the sentence, "The exquisite corpse will drink the bubbly wine."

The surrealists' aim was to "épater les bourgeois," that is, to attack the middle class by breaking down academic traditions in the arts. The father of surrealism, French writer André Breton, issued the first "Manifesto on Surrealism" in 1924. In the following years, René Magritte looked into the mirror and saw only the faceless back of his head; and Giorgio de Chirico projected perfect columns in a landscape, suggesting entrapment or death. In literature, the movement spawned renewed interest in stream-of-consciousness writing.

When Cory Meacham, a San Diego writer, took a course in surrealism, he was especially impressed with the word games played by Breton and his followers. His admiration led him to imitation. Meacham solicited San Diego writers to collaborate on a surrealistic novel. Contributors' names would be kept secret. Each person would contribute one page. They would, however, be given the advantage of seeing the two preceding pages. Meacham wrote the first two pages and faxed them to the next writer. Each writer had 24 hours to complete the task; only one person failed to meet the deadline. The process began on January 15 this year, and finished on May 21. Meacham had the last word, by writing the ending. Making its debut at a private ceremony tomorrow is the result: a novel, The Exquisite Cadaver.

The timing couldn't be better. Of the 100 participating writers, at least 30 were affiliated with San Diego Writer's Monthly, a local literary magazine that has just ceased publication. Publisher/editor Michael MacCarthy began the journal in February 1991, funding it with his thriving construction business. MacCarthy gathered around him such local writers as Charles Elster (of There Is No Zoo in Zoology fame), Kenneth Merrill, and Cory Meacham, but any San Diego writer who wanted could send in articles, fiction, poetry, or interviews. Top price for a story was $35. At the height of its success, San Diego Writer's Monthly had a circulation of 4000. But after collecting money from sales, the magazine was still costing McCarthy $2500 to $3000 a month to produce. Although the local writers' community loved it, the money ran out. San Diego Writer's Monthly's last issue appeared this month.

The money generated by The Exquisite Cadaver, however, won't be going toward any attempt at resuscitation of the journal, but to the Friends of the San Diego Public Library. "We wrote the novel for the love and the fun of it," says Cory Meacham, "and wanted the libraries to benefit."

The question remains, is it a good book?

Italian Straw Hat Signed

I haven't seen the National Theater of the Deaf's Italian Straw Hat, as you will be able to do this weekend. But I have seen the National Theater of the Deaf, and I have seen The Italian Straw Hat. So, a bit of imagination, and we can figure out what you are in store for.

What is a theatrical production like when all the actors are deaf? Not "hearing impaired," which implies a disability, but just plain deaf — and not disabled at all. First of all, this is theater like any other theater: the actors act, the director directs, the set and costume designers design sets and costumes, and the play is a play like any other, with script, plot, characters, action, and dialogue. The only significant difference from the theater you are used to is that the dialogue is carried on not in English but in American Sign Language.

American Sign Language, by the way, is just that — a language. It is not a deaf form of English, or in any way a dependent or defective mode of communication. It may occasionally use bits and pieces of English — translated into hand signals — as a supplement to its own vocabulary. But essentially it is an autonomous language, with its own words, its own grammar, its own sound (except that this is a sound perceived by the eyes). In fact — believe it or not — it is the fourth most common language in the United States. And no one who speaks this language experiences it as limited or limiting. On the contrary, ASL is capable of expressing anything any other language can express, with all the subtlety and nuances of meaning you will find in well-spoken English, French, or Japanese.

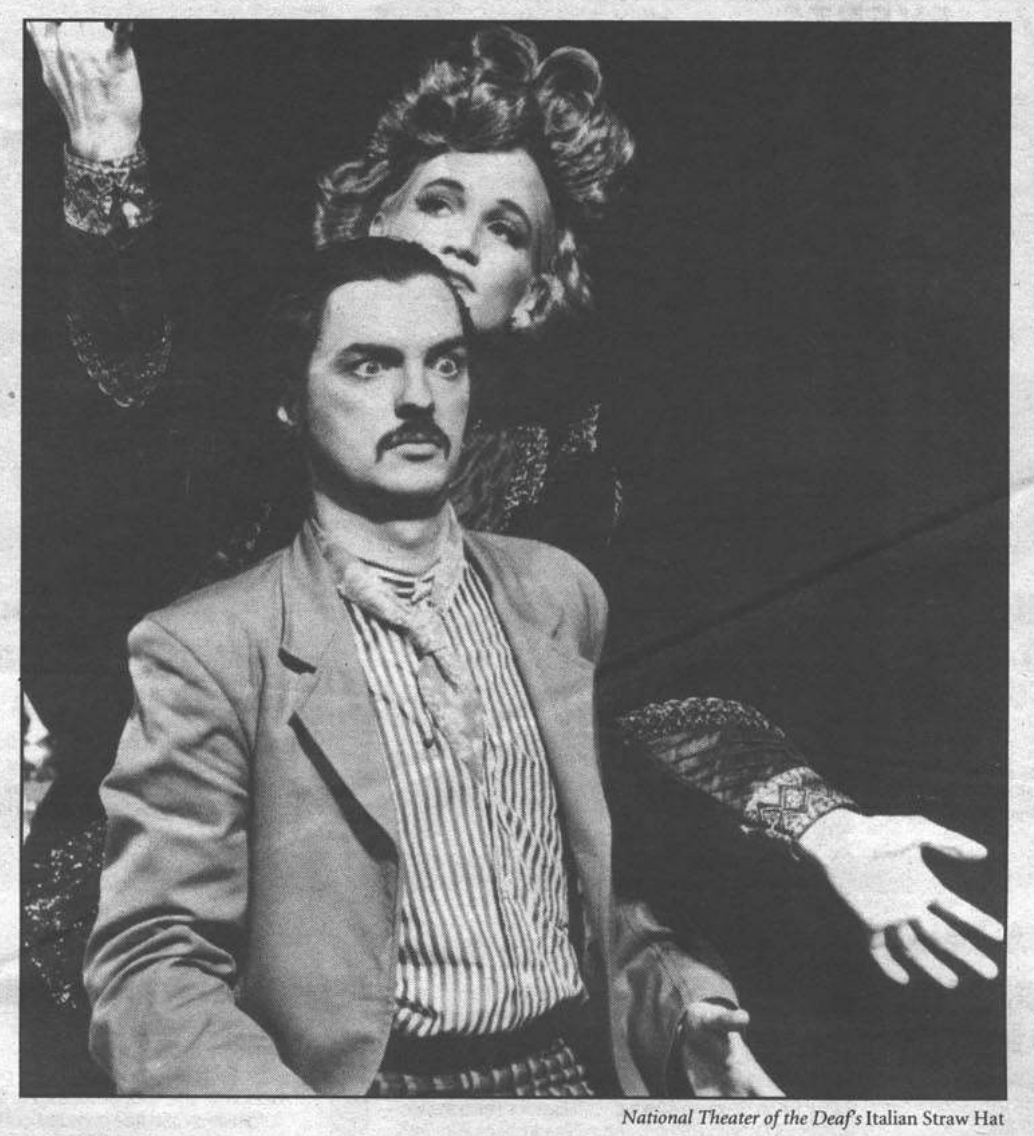

In one sense, therefore, seeing a play in ASL is like seeing a play in a foreign language. If you don't know ASL, the actual words and sentences will be unintelligible to you. But unlike English, French, or Japanese, sign language has a communicative power inherent in the act of signing itself, and speakers of ASL — whether on the stage or in ordinary life — make good use of that visual expressiveness.

You may have seen a stage play or a television program offering a simultaneous ASL translation for the deaf. If you have paid attention to the translators, you will have noticed that, in addition to all those rapid hand gestures, they are making faces to underline the meanings and feelings of what they are saying. They look like rather extravagantly emotional people in animated conversation — like Neapolitans, for example.

But animated gestures and facial expressions are also part of the normal equipment of actors, as you may see by muting the sound of a TV drama and watching all the ways in which actors express themselves visually. In the ordinary theater, the spoken words and the physical gestures and expressions are two quite different means of expression that supplement each other. But when the actors of the National Theater of the Deaf sign their sentences and add their expressive gestures and looks, the two means of expression are both visual, the elements of acting growing out of the signing, expanding it, exaggerating it, transforming it from a simple means of communication to a complex expressive art. (In addition, a few of the actors in each production speak aloud the dialogue of all the roles.) Because of the physicality of the sign language, magnified by the physicality of the acting, this is big, lively, intense, virtually operatic theater, whatever its subject.

No play could suit this style better than The Italian Straw Hat. A masterpiece of theatrical farce by the 19th-century French playwright Eugène Labiche, the play exhibits all the physical humor, fast pacing, slapstick, absurdly complicated plot devices, and exaggerated characters common to its genre. The story itself could not be sillier, or more delightful in its silliness. When a young man is driving through the bois de Vincennes near Paris, his horse (this is 1851) accidentally chews up an Italian straw hat it happens to come upon. It turns out that the hat belongs to a respectable married lady who is engaged in some unrespectable activities in the bushes with an army officer.

The lady cannot return to her husband without the hat, for what plausible explanation could she give of how she had lost it? (Don't raise any objections, please — this is farce!) The army officer gallantly protects the lady's honor by demanding, with threats of violence and destruction, that the young man find an identical hat to take the place of the horse's breakfast. This must be done, of course, post haste.

There is a problem, however. I forgot to mention that the young man is going to be married today, so that he has a million more important things to do than look for Italian straw hats. How can he manage to fit all these diverse tasks into the few hours remaining before the wedding, or before the army officer rips him to shreds? And this marriage is of vital importance to the young man — not so much for love, but because the girl's father is rich, and because money means respectability and luxury, the two things the young man wants most. (Don't raise any objections, please — this is French!)

So the wedding procession is combined with the young man's desperate attempts to find the hat, which of course gets him into hot water with his prospective bride and his prospective father-in-law, while the army officer goes on making threats, and the pace gets faster, and the incidents get crazier, and the confusions and coincidences get thicker, and all the characters are running around in a frenzy shouting at the top of their lungs.

Now, imagine this done in American Sign Language!

Common Humanity and diversity are celebrated in "The Human Condition/La Condición Humana," the inSite94 contribution by Joyce Cutler-Shaw, at the Hospital General de Tijuana, found at #10851 Avenida Centenario, in the Zona Rio area of Tijuana. The exhibition features large cut-out newborn figures taken from Cutler-Shaw's drawings, mounted on the exterior face of the hospital and cascading down to a cut-out of la anciana, an elderly woman. Inside the waiting room, the cut-outs combine with wall text fragments of interviews with local residents.

In a related exhibit by Cutler-Shaw, the glass entry/atrium of the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center (on the UCSD campus), at 3350 La Jolla Village Drive, in La Jolla, will contain life-sized cut-out figures of eight women and men who served in the US military; fragments of their stories are imprinted on transparent yellow and blue gels. For more information on either exhibit, call 277-7321 or 534-1394.

The Casa de la Cultura is taking part in inSite94, a binational exhibition and festival of installation and site-specific art, with pieces by Abraham Cruzvillegas, Mark Alice Durant, José Miguel González Casanova, Diego Gutiérrez Coppe, Rolf Julius, Jean Lowe, Ernest Silva, and Sofía Táboas. Find the casa at Avenida París #5, in the Colonia Altamira area of Tijuana. For additional details, dial 011-52-66-37-31-22. See the show through Sunday, October 30.

Walking Distance in Sight, the Tijuana Cultural Center hosts many installations in conjunction with inSite94, including art by Alvaro Blancarte, Felipe Ehrenberg, Gabriela López Portillo, Luis Moret, John Outterbridge, Marta Palau, Marcos Ramírez "Erre," and Eloy Tarcisio. These works are on display through Sunday, October 30. The center is located at Paseo de los Héroes and Mina Street in the Zona Rio, in Tijuana. For more information, call 011-52-66-84-11-11 x302.

A Circular Assemblage said to comment metaphorically on the duality of the nature of existence and the relationships of races of people and nations is part of Albert Chong's "Yin/Yang, Us/Them," on view at La Torre de Tijuana. The mandala will be constructed of apples and oranges at its core, with coconut shell vessels and feathers.

Jim Skalman's piece is an attempt to alter the identity and function of pre-existing architectural space. The Torre was originally an air-control tower at the entrance of the defunct Agua Caliente racing resort. Skalman intends to transform the interior to a space fostering contemplation of an individual and inward nature.

Both Skalman and Chong's inSite94 installations can be seen through Sunday, October 30, at La Torre de Tijuana, on Boulevard Agua Caliente (at Boulevard de los Fundadores), in the Zona Centro of Tijuana. Viewing hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Free.

A Residential Neighborhood in Tijuana located just south of the U.S./Mexico border and east of the San Ysidro border crossing is the setting for Silvia Gruner's "Middle of the Road" inSite94 offering. The cycles of life are themes explored by Gruner in this work; find the installation at Calle Cuarta and Serapio Rendón, in the Colonia Libertad area of Tijuana. For more information, call 544-1482. The installation will be in place through Sunday, October 30.

The Stairway of the Ancients is a complex stairway, probably constructed in the 1920s, leading up to the Casa de la Cultura. It's in disrepair, with broken and eroded sections. Artist Kim MacConnel has placed figurines purchased from street vendors along the stairs for his contribution to inSite94; see the "piece" through Sunday, October 30. The Casa de la Cultura is found at Avenida París #5, in the Colonia Altamira area of Tijuana. For additional details, call 544-1482. These pieces are located outdoors at a site accessible 24 hours each day.

Playas de Tijuana hosts installations by Helen Escobedo, Oscar Ortega, Ulf Rollof and Michael Schnorr, and Eloy Tarcisio in coordination with inSite94, through Sunday, October 30. These pieces are located outdoors at a site accessible 24 hours a day. Call 544-1482 for more information.

Omnimax Films, Africa the Serengeti screens in the dome theater at the Tijuana Cultural Center (in Spanish) weekdays at 4, 6, and 8 p.m. daily, with an additional showing at noon on Saturday and Sunday. The Discoverers (Los Descubridores) shows in Spanish daily at 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m., with additional showings at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. People of the Sun continues to be shown in English on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, at 2 p.m.

The center is located at Paseo de los Héroes and Mina Street in the Zona Rio. For more information and ticket prices, call 011-52-66-84-11-11 x302.

The Orionid Meteor Shower, one of the year's five best annual showers, remains active between tonight, Thursday, October 20, and Wednesday, October 26. During the shower's peak near Sunday, October 23, ideal rates for this shower are about 30 meteors per hour near dawn. This year, a waning gibbous moon in the sky spoils the show somewhat with stray light. The Orionids "radiate" from the constellation of Orion, and many leave long-lasting, glowing trails. Comet Halley is believed responsible for this shower. Every year at this time, Earth plows through a stream of icy particles presumably shed by that comet in the past.

San Diego County's Coastline is now padded by what is likely the deepest and widest accumulations of sand we'll see this year. Many stretches of the coastline are vulnerable to powerful waves associated with winter storms. This wave action pulls sand off the beaches, deposits it offshore, and (especially in parts of North County) may leave nothing but cobble beds. During the spring and summer gentle wave action usually returns a lot of this sand, generally in time for the arrival of the summer tourists.

Saturn glimmers with a warm, steady light in the southeastern sky at dusk, on these late October evenings. A small telescope pointed at this spot of light in the sky reveals a small, slightly flattened disk and highly elongated rings.

Historical Heritage and stories of La Jolla's famous landmarks and people are focused on during the La Jolla Walking Tours, departing from Colonial Inn at 10 a.m. on Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. The tour lasts one and a half hours; the fee is $7 per person. Find the inn at 910 Prospect Street, in La Jolla. Call 453-8219 for information and the required reservations.

Wintering Ducks, Terns, White Pelicans, shorebirds, and other waterfowl (possible gnatcatchers) are expected sightings during the Audubon Society outing slated for Saturday, October 22, from 8 a.m. to noon, at San Elijo Lagoon. To reach the trail, take I-5 to Lomas Santa Fe Drive in Solana Beach; go west less than one mile to Rios Avenue. Turn right (north) and go to the end of Rios; park and meet at the end of the street near the barricade.

Bring water, binoculars, and a field guide; no water or restrooms available. Easy hiking. Call 280-7710 for more information on this free event.

Walk on the Wild Side with the Chula Vista Nature Center, on Saturday, October 22, at 8:30 a.m., with center program director Barbara Moore, at Bonita Long Canyon. Reservations are required for this free walk; make them and get directions by calling 422-2481.

Explore the Rural Countryside in Fallbrook with Walkabout explorers on Saturday, October 22, beginning at 8:45 a.m. in the parking lot at the Fallbrook Golf Club, at 2757 Gird Road, in Fallbrook. The nine-mile walk on paved country roads is extremely hilly, but participants will be rewarded with views worth huffing and puffing for; the pace is moderate to moderate-plus. The walk is free; call 231-7643 for more information.

Experienced Hike Leader Jim Weinel will lead a moderate six-mile hike on the San Pasqual hiking trails, south to view point, on Saturday, October 22, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The hike is free; call 595-5602 for information, directions, and the required reservations.

Cactus Walk, Offshoot Tours offers its monthly hour-long guided stroll to the desert garden in Balboa Park, examining how plants from Africa and the Baja desert have adapted to local conditions. Enjoy the tour on Saturday, October 22, at 10 a.m., starting from the park's Botanical Building. Free. Call 235-1114 for more information.

One of California's Last Remaining Salt Marshes is found at the Tijuana Estuary; explore the unique vegetation and bird life that exist in the estuary with the Canyoneers on Saturday, October 22, from 1 to 2:30 p.m. Endangered species such as the clapper rail, Belding's savannah sparrow, and California least tern may be seen.

The Canyoneers are San Diego Natural History Museum volunteers with special training to help the public develop appreciation of the native plants and animals in the county. Join up with the group at the Tijuana Estuary Interpretive Center, at 301 Caspian Way, in Imperial Beach. Free. For more information, call 232-3821 x203.

Downy Woodpeckers, Yellow-Rumped Warblers, and golden-crowned and white-crowned sparrows are all expected to be sighted during the Audubon Society outing to Old Mission Dam set for Wednesday, October 26, from 8 a.m. to noon.

Take Mission Gorge Road north to the east entrance of Father Junípero Serra Trail in Santee; take Junípero Serra about one mile and watch for the Mission Dam sign and parking lot on the right. A drinking fountain and portable restroom are available. There will be considerable hiking of a moderately strenuous nature. Call 280-7710 for further information on this free outing. Bring drinking water, a field guide, and binoculars.

DANCE

Celebrate Diwali 2051, the Hindu New Year Festival of Lights, at the California Center for the Arts, Escondido on Friday, October 21, at 6:30 p.m., during the Festival of India Dance Competition. Look for folk dances such as Ras Garba and Bhangra, as well as the classical dances Bharat Natyam and Kathak. Tickets are $10 and $15. It's in black and white, in Spanish with English subtitles, and was directed by Camila Motta in 1993. Admission is free and the public is welcome; call 594-1103 for more information.

Reuben H. Fleet Space Theater, ever wondered how a computer chip is created or what a microprocessor does? The new film at the theater, The Journey Inside: A Learning Adventure in High Technology, takes viewers on a realistic fantasy-journey through a computer chip factory, inside a computer itself, and into a microprocessor. It's geared toward the family, starring a 12-year-old hero on an adventure. The film was created by the Intel Corporation to improve technological literacy as it relates to computers.

The annual 500- to 800-mile migration of the wildebeests is highlighted in Africa: The Serengeti, the newest IMAX/OMNIMAX film at the theater. The Great Migration takes place within the two East African nations of Tanzania and Kenya and focuses on the Serengeti/Mara ecosystem, an area of more than 18,000 square miles, often considered the Earth's greatest animal sanctuary. The film features an array of other animals, the Maasai, and narration by James Earl Jones.

The current laser show roster includes Laser Halloween (showing October 22, 23, 29, 30, and 31 only), Laserific in 3-D and Laser Floyd Shines On. For ticket prices and daily showtimes, call 238-1233. The theater is located in Balboa Park.

LECTURES

San Diego County Park Rangers are presenting information on San Diego County Parks, campgrounds, preserves, and historic sites along with tips on sharing nature with children and outdoor safety tips at county parks throughout this month.

The San Diego County Rockhoppers of the American Volkssport Association sponsor two year-round walk events and a 25km bike ride in Carlsbad. The events begin and finish at the Carlsbad by the Sea Retirement Home, at 2855 Carlsbad Boulevard, and may be taken any day, from dawn to dusk. The 10km (6.2-mile) walk is along the beach and city areas, while the 14km (8.7-mile) walk is along old Highway 101 to the South Carlsbad State Beach Park. The bicycle route follows the coast to Encinitas.

To register, ask for the registration book at the desk in the lobby and follow directions. The events are free and open to all. Participants desiring American Volkssport Association (AVV) credit will be charged $2; if you desire the credit and award, the charge is $5. Questions? Call 758-5667 or 741-8144 for additional information.

SPECIAL

A Win-Win Situation, Women's Opportunities Week runs through Sunday, October 23, at many locations throughout San Diego. It's the 16th annual celebration, and the theme this year is "What's Important Now," or WIN. For information on the CSU, San Marcos campus workshops and seminars continuing through Friday, October 21, call 752-4935. For general information on the greater San Diego-area events, times, and locations, call 239-7000.

Get Some Christmas Shopping Done Early when attending the 22nd annual Harvest Festival, slated for October 21 through 23, at the San Diego Community Concourse, at Third Avenue and B Street, downtown. The event promises craft demonstrations; arts and crafts; musical performances by the Brass Band, the Knudsen Brothers, David Zasloff, and the Jackstraws, among others; food; music; dancing, and more.

Show hours are noon to 9 p.m. Friday; 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday; and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $6 for general, $5 for seniors, $2.75 for those 6 to 12, under 6 free (admission is good for the entire weekend). Attendees donating cans of food at the festival for the San Diego Food Bank will receive a $1 discount on admission. For more information, call 800-321-1213.

A Labyrinth of Terror on Two Floors is promised when the San Diego Museum of Man in Balboa Park is transformed into the 21st annual Haunted Museum. This year's museum offers snakes, rats, macabre specimens, ghosts, mummies, and other sinister beings to thrill and frighten participants. Haunted hours at the museum are 7 to 9:30 p.m. Friday through Sunday, Wednesday, and Thursday (the event continues October 28-31). Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for children under 12. Questions? Call 239-2001 for answers.

Cuban Music So Compelling and sexually electric that it was once outlawed in Cuba is played by Conjunto Céspedes, a group planning to perform in UCSD's Mandeville Auditorium on Friday, October 21, at 8 p.m. The ensemble performs an intricately polyrhythmic music that is the folkloric root of mambo and salsa. Admission is $14 general, $12 seniors, $10 students. Call 534-4559 for information and advance tickets.

Parking permits are required on the UCSD campus, cost $3 after 4:30 p.m., and may be purchased at the Gilman Drive and Northview Drive information pavilions at the north and south entrances to the campus.

Slip into Something Spooky and get ready for the haunted sleepover for adults planned at the San Diego Zoo on Friday, October 21, or Saturday, October 22. The festivities (for both nights) include dinner; a phantom bus driver and tour; a scary movie; a visit to the "Creepy Cabaret," replete with a comedian and a cauldron of alcoholic brew; and a hearty breakfast the next morning. The fee is $55; call 557-3963 for additional information and the required reservations.

The Biannual Threshing Bee and Antique Engine Show at the Antique Gas and Steam Engine Museum starts on Saturday and Sunday, October 22 and 23, from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. each day.

Activities include traditional craft demonstrations, harvest demonstrations, country and folk music and dancing, hay wagon and train rides, an antique tractor parade (at 1 p.m.), along with exhibits of steam- and gas-powered equipment and engines, vintage cars, model engines, apple pressing, and the museum's permanent blacksmith and wheelwright shops, sawmill, gristmill, and more.

There will be food for sale, a shuttle bus for those unable to walk, and overnight camping (with prior reservations). The entrance fee is $5 per person, free for those 15 and under. Call 941-1791 for further details. Find the museum at 2040 North Santa Fe Avenue, in Vista, on 40 acres of rolling farmland.

Autumn Is the Best Time of Year to establish or add to a perennial garden. Cedros Gardens is hosting an exhibit and sale of over 200 varieties of perennials, all well suited to our local growing conditions in a fall celebration starting on Saturday, October 22, and continuing through Sunday, October 30, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

Included in the sale are more than 30 varieties of salvia, several lavenders, yarrow cultivars, and summer pastels. Experienced gardeners will be on hand to answer questions, and information will be available. Samples of a locally manufactured, organic compost will also be available. Nursery manager Bill Greer will give lectures entitled "Subterrain Talk," covering drainage, soil amendments, pest control, and more at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Find the gardens at 330 South Cedros Avenue, in Solana Beach; call 792-8640 for more information.

Several Thousand Books donated by estates, MENSA San Diego, and other local groups will be for sale during the Friends of READ/San Diego Literacy Programs book sale planned at the Adams Avenue Recreation Center on Saturday, October 22, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Find the center at 35th and Adams Avenue, in Normal Heights. For more information, call 263-0681.

Go for the Gold, the All-American Pet Olympics are hitting the Del Mar Fairgrounds on Saturday and Sunday, October 22 and 23, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day. Dogs, cats, pot-bellied pigs, birds, reptiles, and their owners will be performing and competing during the event, which includes an All-Breed Championship Cat Show hosted by the Poinsettia City Cat Club; dog contests including Frisbee catching, fly-ball relay races, and a dog/owner look-alike competition; reptile exhibits; birds; and many contests for the pigs. Also look for the animal psychic, "ask-the-vet," and educational presentations.

Admission is $7 general; $5 for seniors, military, and those aged 6 to 12; children under 6 free. Two-day passes are available for $10 general, $6 seniors, military, and kids 6 to 12. For additional information, call 443-SHOW.

Docent-Led Walking Tours of inSite94 projects are taking place every Saturday and Sunday at participating Balboa Park sites, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.; and at downtown sites from 1:30 to 3 p.m. through October, continuing on October 22 and 23. The tours of Balboa Park installations begin in front of the San Diego Museum of Art, and the fee is $6 per person. To take the tour of the downtown sites, meet in front of the Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, at 1001 Kettner Street; the fee for the tour is included with museum admission.

Walks of UCSD's Stuart Collection and inSite94 projects on the campus are planned on every Sunday in October, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The cost is $5 per person; join up with the group at the "Sun God" (just outside of the UCSD Faculty Club). Call 544-1452 for further details on any of these tours.

FOR KIDS

"Hansel and Gretel" is the show planned by the Family Tree Puppets on Friday, October 21, at 10 and 11:30 a.m.; and on Saturday and Sunday, October 22 and 23, at 11 a.m., 1, and 2:30 p.m. Enjoy the shows in the Marie Hitchcock Puppet Theater, located near the Aerospace Center in Balboa Park. Tickets are $2 for adults; $1.50 for children over two years old; free for those under two. For more information, call 685-5045.

The Art Rookie Series at the California Center for the Arts, Escondido, is designed to enhance the visual and performing arts experiences young people have at the center. The series begins at 7 p.m. on Friday, October 21, with the storytelling of Naa Kahidi's "Fires on the Water," stories dramatized by elaborate, authentic costumes, intricate masks, drums, and dance. The series contains five more performances by a variety of groups (lasting into May).

The series is available only by purchasing the entire season roster. Tickets (for the series) are $45 for children, $90 for those 18 and over. Find the center at 340 North Escondido Boulevard (at Valley Parkway), in Escondido. For information and registration, call 738-4100.

Night Hikes in the Los Peñasquitos Canyon Preserve are just one attraction to the Halloween celebrations at the preserve's adobe from Friday through Saturday, October 21-22 (and again on October 28), from 7 p.m. to 8 a.m. Parks staff will lead the hike, present "chilling" activities, and introduce wildlife guests. A professional storyteller will host the late-night campfire, and there's a continental breakfast on Saturday morning. The event is for children and their parents (two children per adult allowed). The fee is $18 per person; call 694-3049 for information and the necessary reservations.

Edible and Healthy Halloween Sculptures created from vegetables, witch's berry brew, and zany-ghostly cookies will be taught when Stella Fong conducts a class for six- to eight-year-olds enrolled with an adult on Saturday, October 22, from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. The class will be given in the auditorium at the Poway Community Park. The fee is $20 per child/adult team. For information and registration, call 486-0779.

Scientific Trick or Treat, the Reuben H. Fleet Space Theater and Science Center is hosting a Halloween class for kids in grades one through four on Saturday, October 22. Participants will learn about bats, skeletons, pumpkins, the moon, and more. For those in grades one and two, the class meets from 10 a.m. to noon; kids in grades three and four will gather from 1 to 3 p.m. The cost is $17 for center members, $22 for non-members. Call 238-1233 x853 or x808 for information and the required reservations.

Children's Author and Storyteller Erica Silverman will storytell and sign copies of her books at White Rabbit Children's Books on Saturday, October 22, from 11 a.m. to noon. Fee per child is 50 cents. The center is located at E Street and Bay Boulevard, just west of I-5, in Chula Vista. 422-6924.

"Art of Many Lands" is the theme for an ongoing art event planned by the Friends of the University City Library taught by Valerie Colston. Participating children will receive art instruction and learn about various cultures during the program. On Saturday, October 22, Daruma spoon dolls from Japan and Chinese landscape painting will be the subject; classes begin at 3 p.m. for those 4 to 7, and at 4 p.m. for those 8 to 12. Find the library at 4155 Governor Drive, in University City; call 552-1655 or 593-4278 for information or the required advance registration.

'Tis the Spooky Time of Year, and the San Diego Natural History Museum helps set the mood with the Full Moon Evening Spook-Out on Saturday, October 22, from 4 to 8 p.m. Participants (in grades one through six, accompanied by an adult) will meet at Palomar Mountain and hike to Big Willie's grave to hear about its curse. The evening will also include a potluck dinner, games, songs, and activities at Doane Pond. The price is $25 per adult/child pair for members, $35 per pair for non-members. Call 232-3821 x203 for information, the required reservations, and directions.

"Mask-arade" Through the Month at the Children's Museum of San Diego, which celebrates its one-year anniversary in its downtown location in October. Every Saturday and Sunday through the month, there is papier-mâché mask making, face painting, and storytelling. On Saturday, October 22, at 3 p.m., the San Diego Opera Ensemble will perform its educational program, "Let's Cook Up an Opera" for children of all ages at the museum; the program uses the metaphor of cooking a meal to teach those in the audience what goes into creating an opera. Admission is free, but invitations must be picked up in advance at the museum, or at the San Diego Opera offices (Third Avenue and B Street, downtown). Regular museum admission is $4 for adults and children two and older, $2 for seniors. Find the museum at 200 West Island Avenue, downtown. 233-8792.

Head to Crown Point on Mission Bay (in Pacific Beach) on Sunday, October 23, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., for Yes!Fest '94, promising more than 50 exhibitors and performers, all with an environmental connection. Look for West African drummer Omar Moore, storyteller Harlynne Geisler, Nancy Kobert with exotic animals, improv theater games by Marcia Singer, tribal mask-making workshops (1 p.m.), guided walks of neighboring Kendall-Frost Preserve, and more. Admission is free; call 496-6666 for more information. This event is sponsored by the San Diego International Children's Festival and San Diego Earth Day.

A Parade of Hats opens the Questival at CSU, San Marcos, scheduled for Sunday, October 23, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. The Civic Youth Orchestra will perform and have guest seats for the audience, the university's computer labs will be open, a mural will be created, and there will be dancing, music, poetry writing, mask making, theater, and storytelling. The festival is "centered around the excitement generated from the quest for knowledge and understanding of the world we live in."

The CSU, San Marcos campus is found on Twin Oaks Valley Road, in San Marcos. Dial 752-4337 or 752-4010 for more details. Free.

"Hats Off," from turbans and crowns to berets and pill boxes, hats have played an important role in the art of fashion. See how hats have been worn through the ages around the world, and then design a hat and start a fashion craze of your own during the Family Day at the San Diego Museum of Art (in Balboa Park) on Sunday, October 23, from 1 to 4 p.m. Admission for members is $2 for adults, $1 for children; for non-members the cost is $3 for adults, $2 for children. For more information, call 232-7931.

Animals Nobody Loves such as scorpions, cockroaches, tarantulas, millipedes, and a rat will be brought by science educator Maureen Lewis to the San Diego Natural History Museum (in Balboa Park) on Sunday, October 23, from 1 to 3 p.m. The program is open to all ages and is included in museum admission. Call 232-3821 x203 for additional information.

Ghosts and Goblins ages six and under are invited to the Mission Valley YMCA's annual Gym Ventures Halloween Carnival slated for Sunday, October 23, from 3 to 5 p.m. The carnival promises games, prizes, a costume parade, and food. Unlimited booth participation is $5 for those aged 2 to 6; and $2 for those 12 to 23 months; infants 11 months and under free. The cost for costumed parents is $1, or wear a costume and get in free. Call 298-3576 for more details.

Bring Your Blankie to Barnes and Noble Bookstore on Monday, between 7 and 8 p.m., for the ongoing pajama story time. Participants will be treated to a variety of old and new kid's stories. Find the shop in the Del Mar Highlands Town Center, at 12835 El Camino Real, in Del Mar; 481-4038. Free.

Story Time at the Athenaeum happens every Wednesday at 3 p.m. for kids aged five through eight. The program uses readings from children's classics. The sessions are free and open to the public, but advance registration is suggested. The Athenaeum Music and Arts Library is located at 1008 Wall Street, La Jolla. For reservations and further information, call 454-5872.

built in 1863, was registered as a National Historic Landmark in 1962 and is on a spot where Kumeyaay Indians camped more than 1000 years ago beside the spring that later gave the area its name. The museum is found at 9050 Memory Lane, Spring Valley; hours are 1 to 4 p.m. Friday through Sunday, and group tours are available during the week. Call 469-1480 for more information.

Bonita Historical Museum, this museum features many historical photographs; artifacts, tools, and farming implements; the district's 1953 fire engine; and bound copies back to the 1930s of the Chula Vista Star News. Find the museum at 4035 Bonita Road, in Bonita. Hours are 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday and Saturday, and by appointment. Dial 267-5141 or 479-0678 for further details. Admission is free.

California Surf Museum, a show honoring Tom Blake and John "Doc" Ball, legendary surf historians, features authentic wooden boards, antique photographs, personal memorabilia, and artifacts is currently on display. Blake was known as "the conceptualizer of the modern surfboard" and created the first surfboard to receive a patent. Ball documented early surf history on film. See this show through summer.

The museum features surfing artifacts and memorabilia — such as surfboards and clothing — of local legends Phil Edwards, John "L.J." Richards, and Peter Johnson, and that way-cool megastar from Hawaii, Duke Kahanamoku.

The museum is located at 308 North Pacific Street, Oceanside. Take I-5 and exit at Mission Avenue. Head west approximately one mile, and turn right on Pacific Street. Hours are noon to 4 p.m. Monday, Thursday, and Friday; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, and Sunday. Admission is free. 721-6876.

Carlsbad Children's Museum, the museum is designed as an educational environment for children through art, science, and social activities, targeted for children 2 through 12. Look for a medieval castle, magic mirror, mini-city, and children's marketplace; a Carlsbad Police Department patrol car will be installed soon. Hours are noon to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday; 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday; and 11:30 a.m.to 5 p.m. Sunday. Find the museum at 300 Carlsbad Village Drive, suite 103, in Carlsbad. Admission is $3.50. 720-0737.

Children's Museum of San Diego hosts a room-sized installation by Chris Burden entitled "A Tale of Two Cities" in conjunction with inSite94, an exhibition and festival of installation and site-specific art. The piece is said to provoke thought about conflict and all of its implications; through the placement of 5000 war toys in a landscape, the tableaux depicts two city-states at war with each other. Enjoy this piece through March 1995.

A corn pyramid constructed of concrete block and grown with corn to a final height of 15 feet is the central part of "Mais/Maze," David Jurist's inSite94 contribution at the museum. The center of the pyramid houses a video phone connection allowing visitors to "call up" the image of the corn maze located in La Jolla. Dennis Oppenheim's project is called "The Last Dance," an installation incorporating many elements. Expect spinning cactus forms made out fiberglass, a large snake with a vibrating maraca for a rattle, old radios playing '40s radio programs, automated drums, and large gloved hands. The project creates a multifaceted environment for the viewer. Jurist's work will be on exhibition indefinitely, while Oppenheim's work will be on view through Monday, October 31.

"The Box Show," an installation of nine experiential environments created by San Diego and Tijuana artists. Each installation is said to be different; look for a hydraulic-powered low rider, a network of garden hose for communicating through, and more. See this show through the end of the year.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; noon to 4:30 p.m. Sunday. Regular admission is $4 for adults and children two and older, $2 for seniors. Find the museum at 200 West Island Avenue, downtown. 233-8792.

Chula Vista Heritage Museum features glimpses of Chula Vista's past; the opening exhibits include lemon packing crate labels, photographs of downtown Chula Vista, doors and adobe blocks from the original Star newspaper building, and relics from the Otay Watch Company. Regular museum hours are 1 to 4 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Find the museum at 360 Third Avenue, Chula Vista. For additional information, call 420-6916.

Chula Vista Nature Center, an interactive living museum devoted to the endangered Southern California coastal wetlands, is located in the middle of Sweetwater Marsh National Wildlife Refuge. The facility is home to fish and invertebrates that inhabit the mudflats and marshes of the San Diego Bay. Visitors can use a Bioscanner to view animals macroscopically, use a Wentzscope for views of microscopic organisms found in the "Sweetwater Soup," and interact with computerized videos exploring how tides affect the bay in the "Moons, Tides, and the San Diego Bay" exhibit. As seen on TV

Of Pancakes and Plastic Slipcovers

By Abe Opincar

It's worth noting that from 1958 until the late-'60s, Disneyland's Mainstreet, U.S.A., featured Aunt Jemima's Pancake House in which Aunt Jemima herself — in rag-wearin' human form — greeted folks and grinned and signed autographs. Civil-rights protests eventually put the kibosh on Aunt Jemima and her pancake house. And hidden deep within the image of this syrupy Disneyland attraction, which to the present-day mind seems almost surreal, is a lesson about how American racial and ethnic sensibilities have (and have not) changed through the years.

Disneyland's Aunt Jemima flap concerned a minority's objection to how it, the minority, was portrayed publicly. Although middle-class blacks are only just now beginning to find racial clichés like lawn jockeys and Aunt Jemima vaguely amusing, it is easy to understand how blacks in the late '60s would not. But what is interesting about the pancake house debacle is how it mirrors present problems people have with television.

You see, Disneyland, as an amusement park, did not provide equal time for offended blacks to vent their outrage. (It's not as though Disneyland would have opened and subsidized a Black Panther Pie Shop next door to the pancake house.) Disneyland, I'm pretty sure, felt that it was providing its visitors with something they might enjoy, namely, the sight of a jovial, subservient black mammy straight out of Malcolm X's worst Gone with the Wind–type nightmare. In other words, Disneyland wasn't knowingly out to hurt anyone; Disneyland was just trying to show (white) folks a good time.

The same is true for television. Television just wants to show folks a good time. And although it has enormous power, it is primarily an amusement. And like Disneyland, television is lousy at providing room for people who object to its contents to express their opinions. Unless yours is a Nielsen household, it's difficult for you to tell television that what it has to offer sucks. You have to go outside television to tell the world how you feel about it.

Which leads me, naturally, to The Nanny, a series that you may or may not feel has something in common with Disneyland's Aunt Jemima Pancake House. The Nanny stars Fran Drescher, a kind of full-tilt, bagel-noshin', smart-shoppin', lox-lovin', wisecrackin' Jewess, who chatterboxes in Queens's English (the New York borough, not the monarch) with industrial-strength nasality. She's also built like a brick house. Drescher is, in other words, quite a handful.

Put another way, Drescher is not the kind of Jew you're apt to see on Meet the Press or Washington Week in Review. Drescher's tones are not measured; Drescher is not subtle. Drescher is the kind of Jew, I've decided — since reading many of the Reader's letters to the editor — likely to drive certain Gentiles right out of their minds.

The Nanny's plot is innocent enough. Drescher plays an ex-salesgirl who ends up as nanny to the three children of a rich and handsome Broadway producer. It's not the show's plot that disturbs people. If you haven't already guessed, it's Drescher herself. Or what Drescher represents.

In the interest of full disclosure, I am the kind of guy who spends his vacations in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, so what I've heard people say about the Nanny is likely colored by the fact that I don't vacation in, say, Munich or Baghdad. What I've heard people say, in personal conversations, on computer bulletin boards, is that Drescher is a threat. While some Jews think she's a real hoot, many others worry that she gives Gentiles a bad notion of what Jews are all about.

Drescher is, according to Judith Peiss in a Los Angeles Times, May 2, 1994, editorial, "whining, demanding, loud, obnoxious, and never as sexy as Gentile women." Moreover, wrote Peiss, "she covers her furniture with plastic slipcovers." Even moreover, wrote Peiss, "I fully expect that Fran will start wearing plastic slipcovers over her clothes."

I find it difficult to believe that America's Jewish women will anytime soon begin wearing plastic slipcovers as symbols of ethno-religious pride, so I'm somewhat confused by Peiss's plastic slipcover obsession. But I think I understand her point. Peiss is very afraid that Drescher will lead some Gentiles to think that some Jews cover their furniture with plastic slipcovers. And, frankly, I think this is a good thing. If the worst thing Gentiles can think of to say about Jews is that we cover our furniture with plastic slipcovers, then I don't think we have anything to worry about.

Uncle Walt greets two racially pure visitors on their way to Aunt Jemima's Pancake House.

But I digress. What I'm trying to say, what I've tried to show, in this week's and last week's column, is that the most important aspect of television is what goes on outside television. Television is not a two-way street. You cannot expect too much from television. In order to talk back to television, you have to expend a little effort, you have to, for example, write an editorial and submit it to your local papers. Television isn't going to give you an opportunity to criticize television. You can't just sit in front of your television and scream at the screen. If you want to discover television's impact, or how certain of its ideas play or do not play in the big world, you're going to have to put your ideas in a forum where other folks can see and respond to them. Otherwise, it's just lonely you and your TV.

Junípero Serra Museum, "Changing Landscapes, Changing Lives: Native Peoples and New Arrivals in San Diego,1769-1846" is the name of the current exhibit, running through December. Through a variety of images, maps, and artifacts, the exhibit illustrates how local natives and San Diego's first Spanish settlers viewed the land in very different ways. Items on display include richly embroidered vestments worn by a Spanish missionary, intricate basketry from a Kumeyaay tribe, a dugout canoe exemplifying a mix of European and native characteristics, and a reassembled section of the Mission San Diego de Alcalá aqueduct.

The museum is located at 2727 Presidio Drive, Presidio Park, on the original site of the San Diego mission. Permanent exhibits concentrate on the pre-American era of San Diego's history and include one of the finest collections of Spanish Renaissance furniture in the West. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Sunday from noon to 4:30 p.m. Adults $3, children under 13 are free. 297-3258.

Museum of San Diego History, "Modern Perspectives: Three Women Painters of the 1920s and 1930s" includes 34 paintings and explores how Anni Baldaugh, Belle Baranceanu, and Margot Rocle interpreted the modern art developing in the early decades of the 20th Century. The show illustrates how these women impacted Southern California art and how they interpreted the new movements in artistic expression; enjoy the exhibition through Sunday, March 5, 1995.

Concurrently at the museum, view "Visions of Paradise: The Selling of San Diego" chronicles the growth of San Diego from a population of just 650 (in 1850) to the sixth-largest city in the nation and the boosterism that encouraged such growth. "War Comes to San Diego" focuses on the impact World War II had on the city and its transformation into a wartime metropolis. The exhibit contains new artifacts and previously "classified" materials never displayed before. "Irving J. Gill, Architect" features the work of this San Diego architect best known for his Craftsman-style and Prairie designs.

The museum, located in the Casa de Balboa building in Balboa Park, is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday. Admission is $4 general, free for those under 13. 232-6203.

Ramona Pioneer Historical Society and Guy B. Woodward Museum is a complex of historical buildings, including the Verlaque House (the only Western adobe home of French provincial design still in existence), wagons, antique exhibits, and artifacts. There is a cowboy bunk house, a ranch blacksmith shop and tack room. The Casey Tibbs Memorial Exhibit is dedicated to Tibbs, a local resident who was a world-champion rodeo rider. Women's clothing and accessories from 1700 to 1800 are also on display. The Bancroft Memorial Rose Garden is on the grounds. Rare documents, historical exhibits, books, photographs, and a research library are also part of the complex.

Find it all at 645 Main Street, in Ramona. Hours are 1 to 4 p.m. Friday through Sunday. Admission is $3 for people 12 and over. For more information, call 789-7644.

Reuben H. Fleet Science Center, "About Faces" is an exhibition of 17 components, most of which use visitors' faces to demonstrate the broad range of information communicated by that part of the human anatomy. The exhibits help participants use their faces to answer such questions as "When does a visual pattern become recognized as a face?"; "What would I look like with Jane Fonda's lips and Frankenstein's eyes?"; and "Is it easier to mask an expression of anger or surprise?" Enjoy the exhibition through mid-January, 1995.

The center's permanent exhibitions present a variety of hands-on exhibits illustrating scientific principles. The Science Center opens daily at 9:30 a.m.; closing time is 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday; 8 p.m. on Sunday; 9 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday; and 6 p.m. Monday and Tuesday. Adults $2.50, children 5-15 $1.25. The museum is located in Balboa Park. For other information, call 238-1233.

San Diego Aerospace Museum, the museum offers exhibits of approximately 85 aircraft, 1400 scale models, 10,000 aviation-related items, and memorabilia from the Montgolfier hot-air-balloon era to the space age and includes an International Aerospace Hall of Fame. The Spad, a World War I fighter, has returned to the museum. The aircraft just underwent extensive restoration and was found to be approximately 98 percent original, a discovery that makes the Spad the most rare aircraft in the museum's collection. It remains on permanent display. The museum's latest acquisition (pedestal-mounted in front of the museum) is the Blackbird, a forerunner of the airplane that held the world's altitude and speed records for more than 28 years.

The museum is located in the Ford Building in Balboa Park's Palisades area. Hours through Labor Day are 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. daily. There are "Behind the Scenes" tours given in the afternoons on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; and Tuesday and Thursday on an hourly basis. Admission is $5 general, $4.50 seniors, $1 for those 6-17, free for those under 6 and active duty military. For more information, call 234-8291.

The San Diego Automotive Museum, more than 60 automobiles and motorcycles from horseless carriages to future prototypes are included in the museum's permanent collection. "Puttin' on the Ritz" features a dozen elegant roadsters from the '20s and '30s, such as a Duesenberg, Bugatti, Rolls-Royce, Stutz, and Ruxton. Also on display: a salute to 100 years of automotive racing, from the early days of "sprint cars" to an Indy racer. Located in Balboa Park near the Starlight Bowl, the museum is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. General admission $5; $4 for seniors; $2 for children 6 to 17; under 6 free. 231-2886.

San Diego Hall of Champions Sports Museum, has permanent exhibits dedicated to Thoroughbred racing, including trophies from some of the world's most famous horse races, a pair of Bill Shoemaker's boots, and other artifacts; as well as artifacts from a wide variety of other sports. The museum is located at 1649 El Prado, Balboa Park; hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. Adults $3, under 12 $1. 234-2544.

Roam-O-Rama

A Guide to Unexpected San Diego • By Jerry Schad

On two recent occasions this fall, I beheld a vision: a circular arch of white light — the arc of a perfect halo — embedded in cool mist.

On the first occasion, at daybreak on Cowles Mountain, I made it happen. While the rising sun was nibbling at a tongue of fog wrapped around the mountain's upper slope, I scampered through the scrub brush and purposefully interposed myself squarely between the sun and the still-opaque mist. The vision duly appeared.

"White rainbow" over Cougar Canyon

On the second occasion, the vision came spontaneously. Cycling to work on the shoulder of Highway 52 out of Santee, early-morning sun at my back, the arch appeared again, straight ahead, arcing symmetrically over the fog-wreathed Oak Canyon bridge. Hundreds of westbound commuters crossing the bridge that morning probably saw it, too, if they didn't blink at the wrong time. I savored the spectacle for half a minute, due to my slow speed on the uphill grade.

The vision I'm referring to — one of many associated with sunlight and clouds — is variously known as a fog bow, a cloud bow, and a white rainbow. Like an ordinary rainbow, it curves along a circular arc of about 42-degree radius centered on the "antisolar point" (the direction toward which one's shadow is cast). The ordinary colored rainbow originates from sunlight refracting and reflecting inside water droplets large enough to contain many wavelengths of light. Refraction of white light always involves dispersion — a separation of colors that forms a spectrum. Clouds and fog banks contain water droplets too tiny to contain many wavelengths. As a result, another optical effect called diffraction prevails, which causes the various colors of the rainbow to spread apart and overlap each other. The resulting blend is white.

From October through December, low-lying fogs frequently visit our coastal region during early morning, making it quite feasible to chase and find fog bows. Simply seek out any sharply defined fog bank illuminated by sunlight. Maneuver about so that your shadow falls toward the sunlit side of the fog, which should lie no more than a couple of hundred feet away. Under the best circumstances you will see not only the fog bow arcing high overhead, but also a "glory" consisting of small, concentric rings of blue and red light around the shadow of your head. The glory, or "specter of the Brocken," is a rarer optical effect associated with diffraction.

The physics behind fog bows, glories, and other atmospheric spectacles is well understood. That, however, does not diminish the metaphysical thrill of chasing after them.

documenting the history of San Diego's waterfront and the building of the West Coast by sea, including exhibits concerning the old San Diego-Coronado ferryboats, the tuna fishing industry, and the military. The museum fleet consists of the 1863 bark Star of India, the 1898 San Francisco ferryboat Berkeley, and the 1904 Scottish steam yacht Medea. There are also nautical exhibits, ship carpenters, model building, ships in bottles, woodcarvers, and a complete research library.

The Russian International America's Cup class yacht, Age of Russia, is now shoreside at the museum, on display along the embarcadero near the Star of India and the ferryboat Berkeley. Age of Russia is a 73-foot IACC boat that was flown here in 1992 for competition but never raced. The vessel was built at a Russian missile factory near Moscow in 1991; see it here through September 1995.

The museum is located along the Embarcadero at the corner of North Harbor Drive and Ash Street, downtown. Hours are 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily. Adults $6, 6-12 $1.25. 234-9153.

San Diego Model Railroad Museum, four large-scale models of railroads of the Southwest, past and present, and other toy train layouts are on view, as well as a working semaphore at the entrance that cycles every five minutes. An exhibit called "Railroad Women" includes photos and documents dating back to 1855; and a Lionel train exhibit provides children with a chance to run trains.

The museum, located at 1649 El Prado, Balboa Park, is open 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and Saturday and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Adults $3 per person; students, seniors, military with ID $2.50; children under 15 are free. 696-0199.

San Diego Museum of Man, more than 70 rare human skulls from Peru illustrate the history, motives, and techniques of cranial surgery more than 1000 years ago in "With Holes in Their Heads: Ancient Peruvian Skull Surgery." Trephination, the practice of opening the skull for therapeutic or ritual purposes, has been practiced in many parts of the world. The ancient Peruvians used obsidian blades, abrasive stone drills, and the tumi, a bronze knife with a curved blade; some patients did not survive, but many skulls show partial or complete healing. Visitors may observe the skulls and try to determine why cranial surgery was performed. See this exhibit through December.

People in Latin American countries often paint dichos (special sayings) on their vehicles, similar to the North American use of bumper stickers. "Dichos: Words to Live, Love, and Laugh by in Latin America" features photographs of vehicular dichos, as well as miniature trucks and buses decorated with dichos. A dicho may be long or short, written in poetry, or just a name, and may have a double meaning. The photographic documentation was collected in Mexico, Peru, Ecuador, Guatemala, and Panama during the last 14 years by Grant La Farge of Santa Fe, New Mexico. Enjoy the graffiti through January 15, 1995.

"Skeletons from Our Closet" is a show featuring artifacts from around the world revealing information about ourselves and the past. Visitors see evidence of genetic, environmental, and cultural influences on skeletal development and remains through the displays of actual bones, skeletons, and mummies; photographs and illustrations; and "hands-on" learning activities. See this exhibit through February 1995.

"Life and Death on the Nile: Sun Gods and Mummies in Ancient Egypt" is an ongoing exhibit that includes coffin and mummy masks, sacred amulets, falcon shrines, mummified falcons, and a human mummy of the Ptolemaic period, along with art and utensils of daily life in the Amarna Period, from 1368 to 1351 B.C.

The museum is located in Balboa Park. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. Adults $4, teens 13-18 $2, children 6-12 $1; free to all on the third Tuesday of each month. 239-2001.

San Diego Natural History Museum, examine the myths, metaphors, and misconceptions in human attitudes toward wild and domesticated animals in "The Good, the Bad, and the Cuddly: Attitudes Toward Animals," running at the museum through Sunday, November 13. The exhibit, organized by the National Zoological Park of the Smithsonian Institution and the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Services, includes models, photographs, interactive computers, video presentations, and objects. Visitors will be offered a chance to explore our species' complex relationship with fellow members of the animal kingdom.

Global environmental issues are explored through cartoons in an exhibit entitled "No Laughing Matter: Political Cartoonists on the Environment." The cartoons draw attention to a host of international environmental problems; the exhibition contains 80 works by political cartoonists from more than 20 countries. See the show through Sunday, November 13.

An exhibit of more than 1800 pieces of Shona sculpture from Zimbabwe is also on view at the museum. Many of the pieces exhibited in "Spirit in Stone" are for sale, to benefit the museum. See this work through Sunday, October 23.

The museum's permanent exhibits include the Scripps Hall of Mineralogy, the Hall of Ocean and Shore Ecology, and the Hall of Desert Ecology. The museum, located in Balboa Park, is open Monday through Friday from 9:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.;Saturday and Sunday, 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Regular admission is general $6, military and seniors $5, children 6 to 17 $2, under 6 free; with half-price admission on Thursday from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. 232-3821.

San Diego Railroad Museum maintains an extensive collection of restored trains in several locations. At the Campo Depot, the museum offers vintage train trips on Saturdays and Sundays (and on many major holidays, excluding Thanksgiving and Christmas), departing at 12:01 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. for a one-and-a-half-hour trip to Miller Creek, in San Diego's backcountry. At the Campo location, there are more than 60 pieces of "rolling stock," a wide variety of cars, locomotives, and other train-related artifacts.

Tickets for the train excursion are $10 for adults, $3 for children 6 to 12, children 5 and under free. The Campo Depot is about a one-hour drive from San Diego (roughly 50 miles east). Find the depot at Highway 94 and Forest Gate Road. Questions? Call 478-9937.

The La Mesa Depot, 4695 Nebo Drive, La Mesa, is an authentic Victorian depot restored by volunteers. This wooden structure is the community's oldest building and served as passenger depot for the San Diego-Arizona Railroad from 1894 to 1927. Exhibits include photos and history of the Arizona Railroad, antiques, and memorabilia of the Southern Pacific line, alongside a 1920s locomotive and caboose, and a 1940s diesel engine. The depot is open 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information on either location, call the main office at 595-3030.

San Dieguito Heritage Museum, the museum celebrates the heritage of old and new Encinitas, Cardiff, Olivenhain, Leucadia, Rancho Santa Fe, Solana Beach, and Del Mar. An exhibit featuring the floriculture of the area is now on view, with photographs, maps, and artifacts from area growers and greenhouses. Find the museum in West Village Center, at the corner of Manchester Avenue and Encinitas Boulevard in Encinitas. Hours are Wednesday through Sunday, noon to 4 p.m. Call 632-9711 for admission and other information.

San Pasqual Battlefield State Historic Park commemorates the clash (on December 6, 1846) during the Mexican War between the U.S. Dragoons, bolstered by sailors and volunteers from San Diego, and California militia. A narrated slide-show screens throughout the day, telling the story of the war in Mexico and California. A self-guided tour recounts the events of the battle and profiles the leaders of the forces and also describes the lives of the Indians indigenous to the valley. The museum is found at 15808 San Pasqual Valley Road, Escondido. Admission is free. Hours are Friday through Sunday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 238-3380 for additional details.

Stephen Birch Aquarium-Museum, an aquarium and museum under one roof, is an educational component of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at UCSD. The facility has 33 tanks containing marine life of the Pacific Northwest, the California coastline, Mexico's Sea of Cortez, and the South Pacific. One highlight is the La Jolla Kelp Tank, a two-story-high tank with giant kelp plants and nearly 30 species of local marine life.

Nina Karavasiles has created "Saline" at the museum in conjunction with inSite94; the installation intersects the border of the museum and Scripps Pier. She will evaporate seawater into salt, using the salt as her medium. By creating the link to the pier, the viewer will be enticed to take in the Mexican Islands in the distance, forming a visual connection. The installation will be on view through Sunday, October 30.

Antique nautical toys, dating from the 1880s to the present, depicting adventure, recreation, and travel, are on display at the museum. A majority of the objects were created before World War II and provide a history lesson in the advancements in America industry and leisure, including military, shipbuilding, merchant marines, yachting, and fishing. Enjoy "Waves in Toyland" through April 1995.

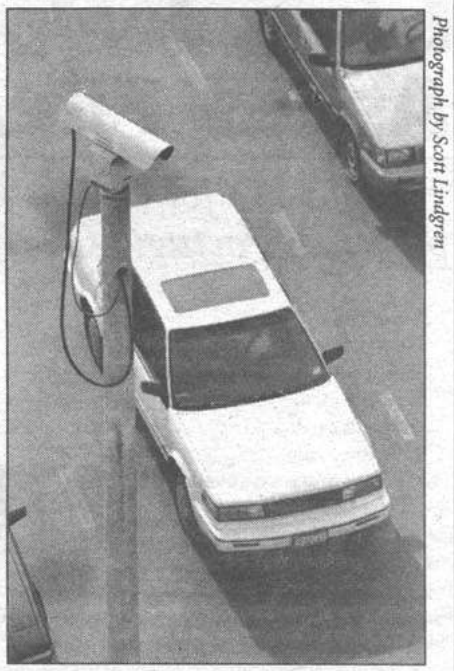

The aquarium is located at 2300 Expedition Way (off North Torrey Pines Road, south of La Jolla Shores Drive), La Jolla. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Regular admission is $6.50 for adults, $5.50 seniors, military and 13- to 17-year-olds $4.50, $3.50 for children 4 to 12. For more information, call 534-FISH.

Villa Montezuma, built in 1887 for internationally celebrated author and musician Jesse Shepard, serves as both a historical house museum and cultural center. Hours are Saturday and Sunday, noon to 4:30 p.m.; find the house at 1925 K Street, downtown. Admission is $3 general admission, children 12 and under free. Call 239-2211 for more information.

Wells Fargo Bank History Museum, the museum features a working agents' office staffed by guides in period costumes and contains a working telegraph for visitors to send and receive messages. There's an audio-visual theater presenting short films on California and Wells Fargo history; a gold display, part of the collection assembled by Wells Fargo agent Samuel Dorsey at the end of the last century; an exhibit of Concord Coach #251, a restored stagecoach built in 1867; and the Davies watch. The museum is located in the reconstructed Colorado House, at 2733 San Diego Avenue, in Old Town San Diego State Historic Park. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Admission is free.

There's nothing that makes my skin crawl more than a mass-transit pundit predicting the average speed of post-millennium Los Angeles. It's always something like 7 mph.

If Los Angelenos were really stuck at a 7 mph pace, radar detectors, so dearly bought at the Sharper Image, would go back into the closet, dusted off for that yearly trip to Vegas. Bureaucrats would be forced to invent ways to replace the speeding ticket revenue shortfall. With no speeders to shake a finger at, the Highway Patrol will become overstaffed.

But that's all in the next millennium. For a few sweet years, motorists will continue to play cat-and-mouse games with citation-pushers in order to score that fast-diminishing adrenaline rush.

So where do the coppers hang? You're guaranteed to be written up by a pesky motorcycle highway patrolman should you decide to employ Kanan Road as your escape hatch from Agoura to the beach. That fat stretch of Glenoaks, north of Glendale, is also a risky zone, as you're apt to drift up to freeway speeds in your unconscious desire to escape nowheresville.

Highland between Wilshire and Melrose is a dangerous place to speed home during weekday rush hours; up towards the Hollywood Bowl, Highland is chock-a-block with surveillance cameras mounted atop three extremely tall light poles. These cameras are guided by remote control to swivel and zoom in on license plates in order to ID suspicious vehicles. Paranoid patriots, like Indiana lawyer and militia leader Linda Thompson, advocate shooting out the cameras as a pro-active strike against the New World Order.

After you've dusted off your .22 long rifle, make sure to avoid speeding to Highland by way of Venice, where they're serious about those 25 mph posted limits. Rose Avenue between Lincoln and Walgrove in Venice, and Abbott Kinney Boulevard between Venice and Washington, regularly feature patrolmen aiming radar guns at otherwise law-biding folk. With nothing but their health in mind, we must remind these officers that leaky radar guns often yield cancerous testicles.

Love, Jealousy, Ashes, Fire, Pain, Sin

The passion for fado is not confined to people of Portuguese origin.

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE

Amor ciúme
cinzas e lume dor e pecado
tudo isto existe
tudo isto é triste
tudo isto é fado

That pretty much says everything about the Portuguese folk-popular-art music known as fado. All the persistent themes of fado's cry from the heart are there: love, jealousy, ashes, fire, pain, sin. "All this exists/ all this is sad/ all this is fado."

It is not exactly what one might have expected from the Portuguese, whose national character otherwise appears formal, restrained, unemphatic, ironic. But under the urbane surface there are volcanoes — and it is fado that provides the molten lava with an outlet. Ordinarily accompanied only by guitars, and sung in a style combining passionate personal expression with elaborate refinements of phrasing and embellishment, these solo songs create a musical-poetic world of their own, occasionally exuberant, but more often filled with saudade, the special Portuguese melancholy longing that fado was born to express. Even the language, with its hushing, veering mellifluousness and its obsessive sound repetitions, somehow seems the natural vehicle for fado. Don't read that last line of lyrics as though it were Spanish; it's pronounced "toodoo ishtoo eh fadoo," which makes a big musical difference.

You may hear fado in night spots devoted to this art in Lisbon and Coimbra, seats of the two schools of fado music. There, professional fado singers perform, but amateurs as well will rise from their chairs to sing of romance thwarted, betrayed, shattered, or remembered with nostalgia and grief. San Diego, obviously, does not offer such opportunities. But, in connection with the exhibition of Portuguese baroque art that occupied its galleries this past summer, the San Diego Museum of Art arranged for an authentic fado concert in its auditorium. Naturally, this drew the city's considerable Portuguese (or Portuguese-descended) population out in force, delighted at the contact with their inherited culture. But the passion for fado is not confined to people of Portuguese origin. For anybody who had visited Portugal, or who had listened to fado on recordings, or who simply was fond of vocal music of deep feeling, poetic texts, and poignant melodies, this was a concert not to be missed.

Expectations were not disappointed. The performers — singers Aurelio de Oliveira and Zelia Freitas, and guitarists Aneiceto Batista and Jorge Rocha — are professional Portuguese fado musicians living in California but continuing to practice the art of their homeland, and they proved to be as good as anyone you might hear in Portugal itself. The guitarists — Rocha accompanying on the familiar instrument, and Batista engaging in the glittering, sinuous, suavely expressive, voice-like style of the Portuguese guitar (a significantly different member of the guitar family) — not only supplied supportive background to the singers, but also performed guitarradas on their own, to admirable effect.

The singers represented two extremes of fado singing, each attractive in its own way. Oliveira, a man of distinguished, gentlemanly appearance, emphasized musical values, which he brought out with great subtlety. He showed himself capable of exciting dramatic climaxes, delivered in a ringing, well-focused voice; but much of the time he preferred to suggest the passionate emotions of text and music by delicate nuances of rhythm, dynamics, articulation, and phrasing. For listeners unfamiliar with fado, it may have taken a little time to appreciate the way Oliveira made a small, exquisitely calculated vocal device deliver the emotional goods.

Freitas, in contrast, made an immediate and irresistible appeal to virtually all members of the audience, whether they were acquainted with fado or not, and whether or not they could understand the words. A slim, beautiful young woman, dressed (in typical fado fashion) all in black, she delivered these songs with so much explosive, lamenting, throbbing passion that their meanings came through powerfully to non-speakers of Portuguese. She, too, was by no means lacking in subtlety, her fluttering, twisting, spilling, spinning vocal melismas (so essential to the fado sound) adding complex qualifications and reinforcements to the large-scale emotions; and her voice, an operatic instrument of great smoothness, richness, clarity, and warmth, was deployed through a large range of expressive timbres, to give dramatic presence to the persons and situations evoked by each song.

In addition, she — like Oliveira — made discreet but extraordinarily effective use of hand gestures as adjuncts to the music and the text. Executed with such grace and skill, these gestures are not superfluous decorations but essential elements in fado singing, where the central fact to communicate is the absolute sincerity of the singer's emotions. The sense of personal truth in these songs of heartbreaking saudade is ultimately what makes them so compelling.

The word fado in Portuguese, aside from designating this uniquely flavorful musical style, means "fate," "destiny," "fatality." The longing and the anguish the songs express are felt as an inevitable component of our human existence. By our nature, we are fated to love and to suffer. As no member of the deeply gratified SDMA audience could have denied at the end of this dazzling and moving concert, all this exists, all this is sad, tudo isto é fado. ■

JONATHAN SAVILLE

Many of the most striking paintings and drawings in the Egon Schiele exhibit at the San Diego Museum of Art (and its accompanying catalogue) are of nudes, male and female. The male nudes are generally self-portraits, while the pictures of females depict the models Schiele hired, and occasionally his wife. Since Schiele never aims at objective realism, always drenching his subjects in his personal feelings about them, these nude pictures are intimately revealing of his attitudes toward himself and toward women. Their contrast with the traditional treatment of nudes — in Greek and Roman art, and then again in painting from the Renaissance onward — also opens a window on the new understanding of the self and the world that was coming to dominate Western culture in Schiele's time, and that today, in an extreme form, has taken over almost entirely.

The nude as a subject for art has always been intensely revealing, and not only in the literal sense. Paintings and sculptures of nudes tell us about one of our most fundamental experiences, the experience of the body. The presence of bodies, our own and those of others, exerts a profound and continual influence on our consciousness. Many of our most acute sensations come through our flesh. Our sense of personal identity is closely bound up with our perceptions of our body, both as we see it and as we feel it from within. The overwhelming preoccupation on which we spend so much energy, sex, centers on the body, and particularly on the traits that indicate that most basic aspect of our lives, the difference between men and women.

There is a further kind of revelation in representations of the human body. Since the vast majority of artists have been men, their pictures of female bodies are inevitably connected, in one way or the other, with their own erotic desires; and their pictures of male nudes embody (literally and figuratively) their feelings about themselves as sexual beings and as personalities — what they think they are, or what they regret that they are not, or what they aspire to be.

But artists are not concerned only with their own feelings, although these necessarily color their view of the world. They are also, whether they intend it or not, spokesmen for the values of their age; and the human body has always been a focal point of such values. The way a culture treats — and portrays — the body is an indispensable key to the whole complex of experiences, beliefs, self-definitions, and views of reality characteristic of the people and their time.

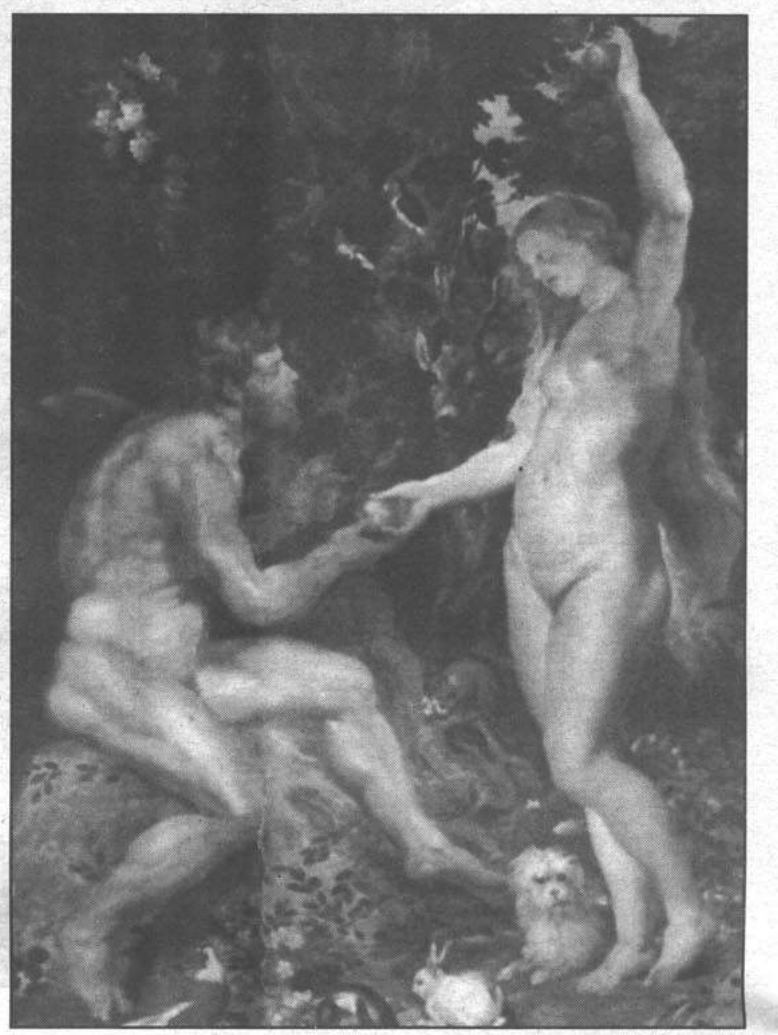

To put Schiele's attitude toward the body in perspective, and to clarify the enormous change that had come over human consciousness by the end of the 19th Century and the beginning of the 20th, we might take a propaedeutic look at a characteristic pair of nudes dating from exactly three centuries before the culmination of Schiele's career. The detail (it is from a larger painting by another artist) shows us a naked man and woman painted by Peter Paul Rubens about 1615. Rubens clearly has observed nude models and knows the human anatomy in all its actuality. The flesh, skin, and muscles here have substantial bulk, weight, and texture, and individual contours, folds, and protuberances are shown in detailed truth to the nature of human bodies, and perhaps to specific models.

The rendering thus reveals a consciousness to which physical nature — space, light, solidity, musculature, feet, hands, buttocks, breasts, and belly buttons — is accepted as a rich source of beauty and value. But at the same time, these figures are idealized. They are perfect specimens of their species and gender, conforming to their period's ideals of robust, well-proportioned, beautiful human figures. The plumpness of certain parts of the woman's body, which makes it unlikely that she could win a bathing-suit contest today, is part of the idealization: this is a body ripe for child-bearing, a fruitful body whose reproductive potential is an element of her glory.

Ignoring modern changes in taste, this woman is a paragon of feminine loveliness. We delight to look at her, and men viewing the figure will doubtless feel a certain mild stirring as their own biological impulses respond to the woman's attractions. Yet at the same time there is a curiously unerotic quality in that full, rich, luscious figure. She displays herself with perfect frankness, but seemingly without consciousness of any sexual suggestiveness in her naked body and its pose. Seeing her, a man might bless nature (or the God of nature) for having produced such beauty, but heated erotic excitement would be an unusual reaction. The idealized naturalism of the portrayal precludes any suggestion of the pornographic. Nor does Rubens hint at any impropriety or shame or guilt in her nakedness or the man's, even though that is the forbidden fruit she is plucking and handing to her mate (for these, of course, are Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden).

Turn now to a typical Schiele drawing of a nude woman (charcoal on paper, 1918). This is woman not as a virtual goddess of fertility (for among the ancestors of Rubens's Eve is the Venus of the ancients, and of Giorgione and Titian), but as a source of gross sexual pleasure. The lovely harmonies of the female body, as presented with such grace in Rubens's Eve, are absent, or concealed by the rumpled garments this purveyor of sex has pulled up over her belly and by the twisted, awkward, purely utilitarian pose of wanton invitation. Her face expresses cold indifference while she more or less routinely displays her genitals, as presumably all that the male viewer is interested in. The erotic — indeed, pornographic — quality of the drawing is emphasized by the long dark stockings and high-heeled shoes that frame the naked thighs and groin.

The bold naturalism of this drawing makes us more aware of the way Rubens has idealized the female figure. The most prominent element in the Schiele nude is the coarse, black, wiry hair marking her genital area, and in other drawings and paintings the artist regularly shows similar clusters of hair in the women's armpits. Rubens's

Schiele, Reclining Woman

Schiele, The Family. (Squatting Couple)

Schiele, Nude Self-Portrait, Squatting

Eve, in contrast, has no body hair; in fact, in the idealizing, classicizing, Renaissance and Baroque tradition to which Rubens belongs, both male and female nudes are regularly shown without pubic or axillary hair. Those secondary sexual characteristics are felt to be too erotically charged, too animal-like; Rubens rejoices in the human body, but it is the human body aesthetically purified, an object of admiration but not of lust. He does enjoy hair, but it is the civilized hair that is visible even when the body is clothed. Hence the ruddy masculine beard of Adam, and the gorgeous cascade of titian hair (the color takes its name from the artist who often favored it) streaming so lushly and lyrically down Eve's naked back.

For Schiele, however, his model's hair is simply another opportunity to indicate his attitude toward her moral nature: it has the rough, rumpled look of her bunched-up garments, not graceful, lyrical flow but jagged, chaotic disorder. And just as Rubens is speaking not only about Eve or a particular model, but about woman in general, so Schiele's drawing represents the later artist's vision of what a woman essentially is. The contrast is the age-old one between the goddess and the whore, those two antagonistic extremes of the way woman is represented in the male imagination.

Unlike the usual virgin goddesses, about whom to think lustfully would be a desecration, Rubens's Venus-Eve constitutes a confident proclamation of woman's generous sexuality, without making that the obsessive center of things. But Schiele's "whore" is an expression of his anxiety-ridden ambivalence toward women. He finds them at once desirable and repulsive. He wants their bodies, yet feels disgust when they offer themselves. He feels compelled to demean them, desperately averring that women's power over men, which makes them dangerous and frightening, resides not in their fertility, not in their ability to continue the human race, not in their affectionate nurturing, and certainly not in their personal character, but exclusively in their genitalia.

The patently neurotic quality of this representation, which surrounds most of Schiele's female nudes like a poisoned atmosphere, reminds us that he lived in Freud's Vienna, where psychoanalysis was uncovering the complex unconscious longings and terrors that shape attitudes toward sexuality. If a drawing such as this one springs from Schiele's own unconscious, expressed through the tremendous vigor and precision of his art, its relevance is not confined to the autobiography of a particular sexually troubled young man in Vienna in 1918. Schiele's courage in baring his neurotic feelings about women (itself an act of emotional disrobing) at the same time brings into the open a more or less universal conflict in the male unconscious. It shows, with relentless honesty, an emotion that is no more true than that associated with Rubens's optimistic idealization of the female body — but also no less true, and (upsetting as it may be — indeed, ought to be) no less worthy of depiction by an art that seeks to tell the whole truth about human nature.

The same relentless truth-telling appears in Schiele's pictures of his own nude body, perhaps most trenchantly in his Nude Self-Portrait, Squatting (watercolor and pencil on paper, 1916). This image of man is as distant from Rubens's Adam as Schiele's women are from the Flemish painter's Eve. Compare the handsome, powerful, heavily muscled, ruddy-fleshed Adam, radiant with health and strength, and the sinewy, knobby, pasty-colored, emaciated body of the Schiele self-portrait, with its air of sickliness and starvation. Even the poses reflect different conceptions of masculine identity. Adam sits solidly on a leaf-strewn mound, poised and balanced, his upper torso, head, and arms engaged with integrated naturalness in the action of accepting the fruit from Eve's hand. Schiele squats idly and grotesquely, like a chimpanzee, his limbs sticking out in every direction as though getting in each other's way, his torso bent to the left so as to unbalance the whole figure, which instead of being supported from below hangs tensely suspended in a blank space from which all other aspects of nature are excluded.

Here, too, hair is significantly expressive. The pubic hair, the axillary hair, the irregular tufts and patches of hair on the figure's chest and scattered along his legs and forearms — how pointedly all this undermines the notion of human beings as grand, noble creatures, nature's supreme creation, justifiably masters of the world. Instead, what we see is the poor, bare, forked animal King Lear speaks of with amazement and horror: "Is man no more than this?" And Schiele knows the pathos of his status: brilliant, sensitive, a superb artist, yet indissolubly bound (like all human beings) to a bundle of bones, hair follicles, and imperious genitals, subject to all the ills that flesh is heir to. It is this wry knowledge that is in his eyes as, his head bent painfully to the side, he looks up at us with a challenging stare that says, "This is all I am — and this is all you are too."

The face in this stark, compelling picture is not so different from the woman's face in the 1918 drawing: it has the same gauntness, the same sardonic expression, the same large eyes drilling into the surrounding world, the same small, bow-shaped mouth, and a spikier male equivalent to the woman's mop of hair. Similarly, although the genitals are different, their centrality in the subject's bodily (and hence emotional) identity is the same. Neurosis may color this man's view of women, and of himself; but his anguished vision of the human condition embraces both genders in its renunciation of all self-ennobling self-deceptions.

Schiele's most touching painting, a highly original masterpiece, brings his images of the male and female bodies together in a group portrait of the generic or archetypal family (oil on canvas, 1918). There they squat (no nobility), naked (no concealment), connected together as forms in the composition but each emotionally isolated, and both of them infinitely sad. Schiele's view of woman is softened here; she is no longer a threat, icily manipulating her sexuality, but a victim herself, her head, shoulders, and breasts humbly rounded, her whole figure forming a compact oval mound that seems to grow out of the earth.

The man — once again a self-portrait — makes two extraordinarily expressive gestures. His right hand reaches upward across his chest, as though assertively grasping at himself, his life, his family responsibilities, his existential meaning. In contrast, the left hand dangles listlessly from the arm draped over his knee, exerting no will, passively accepting the force of gravity. He looks out at us quizzically, as though asking, "Which of these two attitudes is appropriate to the human condition?"

It is a question he cannot answer. But he needs to answer it, for he is no longer alone. He has established bonds with the woman huddled between his legs. And the interaction of their sexual organs, which are so prominent in Schiele's nudes, has resulted — by the organic process for which the sexual organs came into being — in a child, self-protectively holding himself as he lies at his mother's feet, and gazing with simple innocence (but already sadly) toward his future.

The deeper question posed by this picture is, "Is the human race worth perpetuating?" Schiele, who died — absurdly — that same year, was given no further chance to search for an answer. But even if he had survived to a normal old age, he might never have found it, for he was living (as are we) in a culture that can offer no unambiguous assessment of anything connected with human existence, including the value and purpose of the family.

This brings us back to an earlier family, Rubens's Adam and Eve. The joyful affirmation of the human race's first parents we see in the Rubens picture — an affirmation of their human and natural perfection, their bodies, their maleness and femaleness — is appropriate to the story the artist is telling, for he is showing us humanity before (actually, an instant before) the fall: the fall that exiled us from Eden and thrust us into a world of imperfection, guilt, suffering, and death.

Disaster is about to befall the first man and woman, and all their progeny. But you would not know it from the way Rubens portrays them, so ideally strong and beautiful. You would not know it from Rubens's other paintings either. All his art is a paean to great creating nature, to the guiltless enjoyment of sensuality, to the natural (and hence ideal) grandeur of the human race. Rubens may have been a Christian, but he did not believe in the fall of man.

Egon Schiele was no Christian; religion seems to have meant nothing to him. He lived in an era when, for the first time in human history, the religious understanding of human existence has decisively given way to a very different theory: to matter and energy, to impersonal laws of organic and social evolution, to the rule of the unconscious, to the impenetrable solitude of human beings in an indifferent universe.

But Schiele believed in the fall. He believed in it with a certainty that went far beyond theory, far beyond any verbal articulation. That is what his art shows us, with incomparable poignance and power: our fallen state, unredeemable, revealed without qualification and without consolation in its 20th-century totality. The Family (Squatting Couple) could just as truly be called Adam and Eve after the Expulsion from God's Garden. ■

Abstract Expressionist Art by local artists is on view at the Nobel Gallery through Thursday, November 10; there's a reception for the artists on Friday, October 21, from 6 to 9 p.m. Find the gallery at 1621 West Lewis Street, in Mission Hills; 297-9911. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and by appointment.

Artability is a group of artists with disabilities working in a variety of media; the group has a show on display at the new Potpourri Gallery beginning with a reception on Friday, October 21, from 6 to 9 p.m. See the work through Sunday, November 20. Find Potpourri at 6784 El Cajon Boulevard, in College Grove; 697-7366. Hours are 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday; 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday; and noon to 4 p.m. Sunday.

"French Impressions" promises works in oil by Jean Karam at Riggs Galleries; each of the paintings is mounted in frames handmade by Karam. There's a reception for the artist planned on Friday, October 21, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.; the show closes on Saturday, November 12. Find the gallery at 7463 Girard Avenue, La Jolla; 454-3070. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday; 1 to 9 p.m. Friday; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

Master of Pen and Pencil Guillermo Acevedo is honored in a show entitled "Acevedo: A Glimpse into the Mastery," opening at Intersection 33°/117° Gallery with a reception on Friday, October 21, from 7 to 9 p.m., and continuing through Wednesday, November 2. The exhibit includes a selection of the artist's original works and prints from his widow's collection. Concurrently on display is new art by Rocco Satoshi in a show called "Panic Rocco '94," continuing through Tuesday, October 25.

Next Thursday, October 27, between 5 and 8 p.m., artist Jose R. Morales, Jr., will begin building an altar for the dia de los muertos (or days of the dead) celebrations at the gallery. Morales invites the public to bring objects of remembrance to their departed loved ones to add to the altar. The altar will remain on view through Wednesday, November 2.

The gallery is located at 4247 Park Boulevard (at El Cajon Boulevard and Washington Avenue). Regular gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Call 574-6454 for more information.

Feminism and Art are said to intersect in the San Diego Women's Caucus for Art's Exhibition '94, which hosts a reception on Friday, October 21, from 7 to 10 p.m. Find the show in the Foster Art Building, at 710 13th Street (at G Street), in downtown San Diego; 940-1626. Gallery hours are noon to 6 p.m. Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday; noon to 9 p.m. Friday. See this show through Saturday, November 19.

Docent-Led Walking Tours of inSite94 projects are taking place every Saturday and Sunday at participating Balboa Park sites, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.; and at downtown sites from 1:30 to 3 p.m. through October, continuing on October 22 and 23. The tours of Balboa Park installations begin in front of the San Diego Museum of Art, and the fee is $6 per person. To take the tour of the downtown sites, meet in front of the Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, at 1001 Kettner Street; the fee for the tour is included with museum admission.

Walks of UCSD's Stuart Collection and inSite94 projects on the campus are planned on every Sunday in October, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The cost is $5 per person; join up with the group at the "Sun God" (just outside of the UCSD Faculty Club).

Tijuana inSite94 project tours are planned every Saturday and Sunday in October, including October 22 and 23. The tours start at 9:45 a.m. in front of the Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, at 1001 Kettner Street, and finish at 4 p.m. The fee for the bus tour is $28 per person; box lunches are available for an additional $10. Call 454-7166 for information and the required reservations for the tour; dial 544-1452 to reserve a lunch and for further details.

Still Life and Landscape paintings in pastel by Jackie Perreault are on view through October at the relocated San Dieguito Art Guild Offtrack Gallery; there's a reception planned for Saturday and Sunday, October 22 and 23, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days. The gallery is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is now found (in the former Offtrack Gallery space) at 510 North Highway 101, Encinitas; 753-8368.

Fuel Up the Car and head out for the second annual Artist's Studio Tour, hosted by the aforementioned San Dieguito Art Guild, scheduled for October 22 and 23, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days. Each day, participants will be able to choose from nine studios to visit, and there will be different studios open each day. On Saturday, artists opening their studios include Ken and Stephanie Goldman, Irina and Erik Gronborg, Cindy Brenneman, and Richard Dias; on Sunday, look for Annette Paquet, Sally Bly, and Thelma Speed Huston, among many others.

The $15 ticket (half-price for those 12 and under) entitles participants to take the self-guided tours on both days and may be purchased by calling 753-8368 or visiting the guild's Offtrack Gallery, 510 North Highway 101, in Encinitas. There are other ticket outlet locations; call the gallery for a complete list.

Hopi Artists Karen Abeita (a potter) and jeweler Lawrence Saufkie from Arizona will visit the Southwestern Indian Den on October 22 and 23. They'll be at the store from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday; and from noon to 4 p.m. on Sunday. Find the shop in the Old Ferry Landing Marketplace, in suite 207, 1201 First Street, in Coronado. "Apparitions by Vital Signs," presented at the University Art Gallery in UCSD in conjunction with inSite94, explores the intersections of virtual reality and material bodies. Vital Signs is a group of collaborating artists and computer programmers; the show exists as a gallery installation and a computer network conversation.

Visitors navigate through a three-dimensional, photo-realistic, computer generated virtual clinic whose boundaries are confined by the imagination. The virtual environment is a computer simulation projected onto a large screen in the darkened art gallery; while the user navigates through the environment and interacts with it, onlookers may watch what happens to the user. Each user's experience is influenced by her responses to a series of questions posed by a nurse/receptionist in the waiting room; from the waiting room, the user moves through the clinic for a three- to five-minute virtual experience. Pique your interest? See the show through Sunday, October 30.

The University Art Gallery (formerly known as the Mandeville Gallery), in Mandeville Center on the UCSD campus, is open Tuesday through Sunday, from noon to 5 p.m. Admission is free, but on-campus parking permits are required; they can be purchased at the information pavilions at the Gilman and Northview Drive entrances to the campus. 534-2864.

"Car Park" began as both an event and installation by Nina Katchadourian, Steven Matheson, and Mark Tribe with the participation of nearly 3500 members of the general public at Southwestern College. Photographs of the event are on display in conjunction with inSite94 in the Southwestern College Art Gallery through Sunday, October 30. One day during the summer, the artists (and their volunteer helpers) directed motorists arriving to park at the college into color-coded lots, creating an enormous color wheel.

Find Southwestern College at 900 Otay Lakes Road, Chula Vista. Regular gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and Wednesday and Thursday evenings, 6 to 9 p.m. For more information, call 482-6372.

An Outdoor Public Artwork/Video Installation entitled "Video Wind Chimes" by UCSD assistant professor of visual arts Sheldon Brown is on display at UCSD's Center for Research in Computing and the Arts (CRCA). The piece consists of a series of three video projectors that are hung from 20-foot-high street lampposts. Random movement created by the wind against the video projectors cause their internal circuitry to pick up a variety of broadcast signals in the air and project television images onto the walkway below. See the exhibit through Sunday, October 30.

Walking Distance in Sight, the Tijuana Cultural Center hosts many installations in conjunction with inSite94, including art by Alvaro Blancarte, Felipe Ehrenberg, Gabriela López Portillo, Luis Moret, John Outterbridge, Marta Palau, Marcos Ramírez "Erre," and Eloy Tarcisio. These works are on view through Sunday, October 30. The center is located at Paseo de los Héroes and Mina Street in the Zona Rio, in Tijuana. For more information, call 011-52-66-84-11-11 x302.

A Circular Assemblage said to comment metaphorically on the duality of the nature of existence and the relationships of races of people and nations is part of Albert Chong's "Yin/Yang, Us/Them," on view at La Torre de Tijuana. The mandala is constructed of apples and oranges at its core, with coconut shell vessels and feathers.

Jim Skalman's piece is an attempt to alter the identity and function of pre-existing architectural space. The Torre was originally an air-control tower at the entrance of the defunct Agua Caliente racing resort. Skalman intends to transform the interior to a space fostering contemplation of an individual and inward nature.

Both Skalman and Chong's inSite94 installations can be seen through Sunday, October 30, at La Torre de Tijuana, on Boulevard Agua Caliente (at Boulevard de los Fundadores), in the Zona Centro of Tijuana. Viewing hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Free.

A Residential Neighborhood in Tijuana located just south of the U.S./Mexico border and east of the San Ysidro border crossing is the setting for Silvia Gruner's "Middle of the Road" inSite94 offering. The cycles of life are themes explored by Gruner in this work; find the installation at Calle Cuarta and Serapio Rendón, in the Colonia Libertad area of Tijuana. For more information, call 544-1482. The installation will be in place through Sunday, October 30.

The Stairway of the Ancients is a complex stairway, probably constructed in the 1920s, leading up to the Casa de la Cultura. It's in disrepair, with broken and eroded sections. Artist Kim MacConnel has placed figurines purchased from street vendors along the stairs for his contribution to inSite94; see the "piece" through Sunday, October 30. The Casa de la Cultura is found at Avenida París #5, in the Colonia Altamira area of Tijuana. For additional details, call 544-1482. These pieces are located outdoors at a site accessible 24 hours each day.

"Bravo for Glass" is a juried exhibition for members of the Art Glass Association of Southern California, on view at the Bravo Gallery, including glass sculpture, functional work, furniture, and handmade beads and jewelry. Find the gallery at 535 Fourth Avenue, in the Gaslamp Quarter. Gallery hours are noon to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday, with extended hours on Friday and Saturday nights. 232-0396. The show continues through Sunday, October 30.

Authentic Altar Arrangements are on display at Back from Tomboctou as part of their "Dia de los Muertos" exhibit, which continues through Sunday, November 6. Gallery hours are 10:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Saturday; 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday. Find the shop at 3564 Adams Avenue, in Normal Heights; 282-8708.

"Autumn Sails and Kensington Streets" are the focus of the show at the Amerson Gallery through Monday, November 7. Look for watercolors by Anna Johnson, oils by John Morro, and paintings by Rafael Gallardo; blown glassware by Bruce Freund; oils, acrylics, and charcoals by Betty Amerson; watercolors by Johnson and Towle; and raku pottery by Berkestreder.

Hours are Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., and until 8 p.m. on Thursday; Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and by appointment. Amerson Gallery, 4157 Adams Avenue, Kensington; 281-9600.

"The Poetry Series" is a departure from traditional themes for Cuban artist José Bedia, featuring drawings created with inspiration from the poems of Quincy Troupe, on display at the Porter Randall Gallery through Saturday, November 12. Regular gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, noon to 5 p.m. Porter Randall is located at 5624 La Jolla Boulevard, Bird Rock. 551-8884.

An Installation of 72 Panels, each one inscribed with 768 invented characters, is part of Ming Mur-Ray's "CYM 55296," the Athenaeum Music and Arts Library's contribution to inSite94. The panels are placed side by side on narrow shelves of freestanding units diagonally bisecting the gallery, confronting the viewer with a total of 55,296 characters; this piece draws inspiration from Mur-Ray's personal experiences with the art of calligraphy.

Enjoy the show through Saturday, November 12. The Athenaeum is located at 1008 Wall Street, in La Jolla. To obtain additional information, call 454-5872.

The Ceramic Masks created by Pennsylvania artist Eleanor Myers are on display at the International Gallery; each mask is made by hand without the use of molds. Enjoy "The Many Faces of Eleanor Myers" through Sunday, November 13. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sunday 11:30 to 4:30 p.m. The International Gallery is located at 643 G Street, downtown San Diego. 235-8255.

All Manner of Angels in paintings, carvings, retablos, ceramics, and leather books, are on view at ¡Este Es! Primitive and Fine Art through Tuesday, November 15. Find the gallery at 7644 Girard Avenue, in La Jolla; 454-9886. Hours are 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

After Finishing His First Book, photographer Eric Blau began photographing the sculpture of a friend, incorporating the human form into each frame. The 21 images, all processed via a polylith procedure (which affords less darkroom control than traditional silver gelatin printing), are gathered into a show entitled "Hush," which can be seen at the Red Venus Gallery through Saturday, November 19.

Find the gallery at 2400 Kettner Boulevard, downtown; regular gallery hours are noon to 5 p.m. on Saturdays, and by appointment. 544-0505.

Vivid Oils, earth-tone pastels, and soft lead pencil black-and-white renderings by Eddie Edwards are on display in "Images of Dignity," on display through Wednesday, November 23, in the Educational Cultural Complex Gallery. Find the gallery in the upstairs foyer at ECC, 4343 Ocean View Boulevard, in Logan Heights. For more information, call 230-9199.

Landscapes and Interior Paintings by Robert Frame are on exhibit at the Susan Street Fine Art Gallery through Wednesday, November 23. Regular gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday noon to 4 p.m., and by appointment. Find the gallery at 444 South Cedros Avenue, studio 100 (between Via de la Valle and Lomas Santa Fe), Solana Beach. 793-4442.

Landscape Painter and Colorist Wolf Kahn has 11 oil-on-canvas and eight pastel-on-paper paintings on view through Thursday, November 24, at Thomas Babeor and Company. Running concurrently in the back gallery, look for paintings by William Balthazar Rose.

The gallery is located at 7470 Girard Avenue, La Jolla. Gallery hours are Wednesday through Saturday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., and by appointment. 454-0345.

ART

Historical Ships and Naval Vessels rendered in ink and watercolor on nautical charts by Adam Koltz are on view at the First Street Gallery. The show also includes antique maps and prints; it continues through Thursday, November 24. Find the gallery at 820 First Street, in Encinitas; 753-5458. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

"Test Service," an exhibition of constructed photographs by Steven De Pinto, is currently on view at Simayspace Gallery. De Pinto's work is said to be highly structural; minimalist painting has influenced its creation, which involves altered industrial materials. The gallery is found at 835 G Street, downtown. Hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. 544-6444. See the show through Saturday, November 26.

The Group Exhibit at the new Zanzibar Fine Art Coffee and Gallery location includes work by Justin Love, Solomon Cohen, and Matthew Forderer, and continues through November. Find Zanzibar at 904 Pearl Street, in La Jolla; 456-1152. Hours are 6 a.m. to 2 a.m. daily.

The Depression Years in America saw developments in impressionism, the Ashcan school, social realism, regionalism, the avant-garde, post-impressionism, and plein air painting. A show entitled "American Art — The 1930s — A Decade of Diversity" is on view at the K. Nathan Gallery through Wednesday, November 30, promising work by many artists. The gallery is located at 7723 Fay Avenue, La Jolla. Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily. 459-3490.

A Collection of Erotic Arts created by San Diego artists is on exhibition in "Eros — Unbound," at the Meeting Place Gallery (co-hosted by COVA). The gallery is in suite 202 at 744 G Street, downtown, and has no established hours. Call 234-0928 for information and an appointment to view the show, which will be up through Wednesday, November 30.

Common Humanity and diversity are celebrated in "The Human Condition/La Condición Humana," the inSite94 contribution by Joyce Cutler-Shaw. The installation is found in the glass entry/atrium of the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center (on the UCSD campus), at 3350 La Jolla Village Drive, in La Jolla. The entry contains life-sized cut-out figures of eight women and men who served in the US military; fragments of their stories are imprinted on transparent yellow and blue gels.

In a related exhibit by Cutler-Shaw, the Hospital General de Tijuana, found at #10851 Avenida Centenario, in the Zona Rio area of Tijuana, features large cut-out newborn figures taken from Cutler-Shaw's drawings, mounted on the exterior face of the hospital and cascading down to a cut-out of la anciana, an elderly woman. Inside the waiting room, the cut-outs combine with wall text fragments of interviews with local residents. For more information on either exhibit, call 277-7321 or 534-1394. See both pieces through Wednesday, November 30.

Abstract Naturalism is the mode for painter Fred Mastrangelo, whose work is on display through November at DonnaLee's Coffeehouse. Find the coffeehouse at 987 Lomas Santa Fe, in Solana Beach (in the Ross Center/Lomas Santa Fe Plaza). For information, call 481-8800.

"Goyescos" is the title for an exhibition of new paintings by DeLoss McGraw at the Linda Moore Gallery. "Goyescos" is the beginning of a new cycle of collaboration between McGraw and America's poet laureate, W.D. Snodgress; the paintings in the show are said to be a springboard from the socially based paintings of Goya. See this show through Thursday, December 15. Gallery hours are Wednesday through Friday, noon to 5:30 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Find the gallery at 1611 West Lewis Street, in Mission Hills. 260-1101.

"Vistas: An Exploration of the Tradition of Landscape Painting" is a group show of plein air paintings by Nikki Basch-Davis; West Coast scenes in pastel by Carol Leach; images in the Dutch tradition by Cornelis Roos; and "visions" by William Glen Crooks at the Regency Gallery through Thursday, December 15.

Regular gallery hours are Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Friday and Saturday 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and Sunday noon to 6 p.m. Regency Gallery is found on the bayfront of the Hyatt Hotel, One Market Place, downtown; 236-9956.

Recent Figurative Paintings are gathered in "Nudes, Bathers, and Dancers," a show of work by William Gambini on view through December at Helmer/Jackson Designs. View the show at 2305-A India Street, middletown; 696-0068. Hours are Saturday noon to 5 p.m., and by appointment.

"Journey" is a collaborative installation by metal sculptor Alber DeMatteis, and potter and sculptor Elizabeth Woolrych, on view in the MBS Sculpture Courtyard (an exhibition sponsored by COVA). The installation is said to represent the journey of the emerging self as art. See this show through Thursday, January 5.

The courtyard is located at 744 G Street, downtown, and is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 234-0928 for additional information.

Polish Artists are featured at the newly opened Angst Prospect Galeria; look for paintings by Piotr Nalewajko and Dariusz Kaleta; prints by Zbigniew Lutomski and Krzysztof Skorczewski; and Baltic amber, among other objects. Find the gallery at 1298 Prospect Street, suite 2G, in La Jolla. Regular hours are noon to 8 p.m. Wednesday through Monday. Call 459-1334 for information.

Fine Art Pottery by Michael Nowack is on display at Michael Nowack Lamps and Art Pottery; view the work Fridays and Saturdays, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Find the shop on the second floor at 7445 Girard Avenue, #9, in La Jolla; 454-2785.

"New Art," digital paintings and photography images, featuring original iris prints in multiple, original photomontages, and multimedia images, are on display at the David Robinson Gallery on an ongoing basis. Gallery hours are Thursday through Saturday, noon to 6 p.m. Find the gallery at 363 Fifth Avenue, downtown. 238-8065.

Figurative, Abstract, and environmental sculpture by the Bennett family is on display at the Bennett Sculpture Gallery, 910 Prospect Street (in the Colonial Inn), in La Jolla. Hours are 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday; and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday. 459-3988.

ART MUSEUMS

California Center for the Arts Museum opens its first season of exhibitions with an inSite94 installation by Dennis Oppenheim entitled "Digestion: Gypsum Gypsies." Six reindeer with flaming antlers circle the museum's Tower Gallery. See this piece through Saturday, December 31.

Also look for "Wildlife," the animal world as seen through the eyes of 37 contemporary artists. The show promises over 100 paintings, photographs, sculptures, and installations by local, national, and international artists. William Wegman's personal collection of large format Polaroids of his infamous Weimaraners Fay and Bettina (taken from 1989 to 1992, not previously exhibited) are part of the show, as are paintings by Donald Roller Wilson. His paintings are inhabited by a cast of elaborate animal characters, created between 1973 and 1993. The exhibit also promises work by London sculptor David Mach, Deborah Butterfield, Komar and Melamid, Ray Smith, and Myer Vaisman. Enjoy the menagerie through Saturday, December 31.

Find the center at 340 North Escondido Boulevard (at Valley Parkway), in Escondido. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday. General admission is $4; free for full-time students and those under 18. For additional information, call 738-4120.

Mingei International Museum of World Folk Art, "First Collections: Dolls and Folk Toys of the World" are on view at the museum through Saturday, December 31. The Mingei is located in University Towne Centre, at 4405 La Jolla Village Drive, building I-7, in La Jolla. Museum hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Docent tours are offered on Thursday at 1:30 p.m. Admission is $3 for adults, $1 for children. For more details, call 453-5300.

Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, in conjunction with inSite94, promises "Airplane Parts and Building: A Large Growth for San Diego" by Nancy Rubins. A plume of scrap metal rises from the floor of the museum, to break through the museum's windows and hang overhead in the adjacent public plaza. Rubins makes visual links physical with a welded bridge of debris that joins the museum's interior with the public exterior of the building. This show continues through Thursday, February 9, 1995.

Also look for "inSite94: Carlos Aguirre, Anya Gallaccio, Silvia Gruner, and Yukinori Yanagi." Aguirre contributes "Untitled," examining the journey from life to death; Gallaccio contributes "Preserve"; Gruner's piece is entitled "The Middle of the Road"; and Yanagi's work is called "America." This exhibition closes Sunday, November 27.

"Deborah Brown's Big Top" can be seen in the American Plaza Office Tower Galeria lobby and the trolley station. Brown creates hybrids of manufactured dolls and toys, plastic fruits and vegetables, with heads and limbs exchanged between different toys, arranged in a carnival setting. The "transformed creatures seem to struggle with identity." The show continues through Sunday, January 29, 1995. Admission to the galeria is free.

Find the museum at 1001 Kettner Boulevard, directly across from the Santa Fe Railroad Depot (at Broadway Street), adjacent to the America Plaza trolley transfer station. Museum hours are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday, and on Thursday from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Admission is $3 for adults, $1 seniors and students, children under 13 free. On Thursday evenings, from 5 to 9 p.m., admission is free. 234-1001.

Museum of Photographic Arts, a room composed of reading chairs, placed under framed photographs, audio components, and specially printed bilingual newspapers establishes the tone of a public library in Mark Alice Durant's "Treasures from the Potato Famine," an inSite94 exhibit. The installation features a video projection comprising extensive footage of urban centers and landscapes in Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Southern California. See the installation through Sunday, October 30.

The tactile surfaces of various kinds of hair — both natural and synthetic — is explored in an installation by Lorna Simpson on view at the museum through Sunday, October 30. The show is made up of 21 waterless lithographs mounted on felt, and individual panels of text; Simpson's wigs are said to "demonstrate our tendency to read an individual by appearance alone."

Located in the Casa de Balboa in Balboa Park, the museum is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Docent tours are available on weekends at 1 p.m. and are included in the price of admission (adults $3). 239-5262.

The San Diego Museum of Art participates in inSite94 with an installation by environmental artist Andy Goldsworthy, who assembles natural materials into compositions. Within the galleries, photographs and artifacts relating to Goldsworthy's site-specific works are being displayed, along with a series of "snowball" drawings made at Lake Tahoe. These drawings were made by snowballs that had been intermixed with different-colored earths, which were then left to melt on a sheet of paper, each leaving an impression as a narrative of its passing. Goldsworthy's work is said to often illustrate the effect of time, as materials decay, melt, or wash away. See the piece through Monday, October 31.

The annual "Artists Guild Juried Exhibition" features work in all media selected by juror Katherine Plake Hough, running through Sunday, November 13. Fifty-one works in all media, by 44 artists, have been chosen for the show.

Also on view is a retrospective exhibition of more than 70 paintings, watercolors, and drawings by Egon Schiele, a seminal figure of Austrian expressionism. The exhibit encompasses work from every period and subject of the artist's career. From the beginning he concentrated on the human figure, and his treatment of erotic themes defied the sexual mores of Victorian Austria. The exhibition is organized chronologically and thematically, allowing comparison between Schiele's handling of similar subjects over the course of his career. "Egon Schiele" continues through Sunday, October 30.

"The Prints of Harry Sternberg" is a show in tribute to this seminal American realist's 90th birthday; the exhibition includes about 120 works representing Sternberg's career from 1927 to 1991 and all 40 of the vignettes from his autobiographical book, A Life in Woodcuts. The show reveals the artist's acute social consciousness and inspiration from the Old Masters. See this show through Sunday, November 6.

The museum's permanent collection includes Italian Renaissance paintings, Spanish Old Masters paintings, American art, 19th-century European paintings, Asian art, 20th-century paintings and sculpture, and the Weisman Gallery of Contemporary California art. On Wednesday, October 26, the museum will open the Interactive Multimedia Art Gallery Explorer (IMAGE) Gallery, designed to educate visitors through an interactive catalogue of the museum's permanent collection.

Find the museum in Balboa Park; it is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday. Admission is $6 general; seniors $5; active military with I.D. $4; children 6-17 $2; free for those 5 and under. Admission is free on the third Tuesday of the month (for viewing the museum's collection of permanent paintings, not special exhibitions). Docent tours are available at 10 and 11 a.m., 1, and 2 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday; and 1 and 2 p.m. Friday and Saturday. 232-7931.

Timken Museum of Art presents Deborah Small's "Metamorphosis," an inSite94 installation. Small has created a large-scale computer-generated piece, as well as a computer-generated artist's book to accompany the piece. Using a series of 17th-Century flora and fauna colored engravings from Metamorphosis Insectorum Surinamensium by Maria Sibylla Merian (1647-1717) as a starting point, the project is an investigation of the intersections of European colonization, art history, natural history, and literature. In galleries adjacent to the installation, visitors can view paintings by Merian's male contemporaries. The museum will display the installation through Sunday, October 30.

The museum's permanent collection includes European masters, 19th-century American paintings, and Russian icons. Museum hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Free admission. For more information, call 239-5548.

Lamb's on a Roll

JEFF SMITH

Bob Fosse must have taken on Pippin as a dare. Stephen Schwartz's lightweight music and Roger O. Hirson's bland libretto resemble a meal prepared for a queasy stomach — "heart smart," with nothing spicy, please. Enter Fosse. He took his staging and choreography from the piquant end of the spice rack and whipped up a concoction so bug-eyed and vein-bulging that the show almost burns with significant perceptions. I said almost.

Pippin is based loosely on the life of Pepin, eldest son and heir to the throne of Charlemagne. The play is set in the Eighth Century, but as Otis Guernsey, Jr., has pointed out, "History is not to be studied here." Pepin, about whom the little that is known is unremarkable, becomes a quester for complete fulfillment in life. He seeks it in War, in the Flesh, and in Revolution, only to find each "empty and vacant." In the end, like Voltaire's Candide, he opts for aspirational downsizing and the modest cultivation of a limited domain. The insights in Pippin are few, though the question "What comes after?" lingers on: the legendary Charlemagne, ruler of the Holy Roman Empire, was a tough act to follow. Though Schwartz and Hirson initially sketched out the show earlier, Pippin was produced in 1972, and it looks back on the previous decade, asking, After the '60s gonzo questing for illusory absolutes, where does one go now? And today, with Generation X reminded daily that aspiration is a crock, how does one follow the unabashedly selfish Reaganomic orgy of the '80s?

Maybe there's more to Pippin than meets the eye. Director Robert Smyth treats it that way with a free-form production brimming with inventive theatricality. The Lamb's Players Theatre was on a roll this summer with three shows enjoying extended runs (Godspell, Pump Boys and Dinettes, and Beau Jest, with the latter re-opening at the Hahn on November 4). Pippin continues that roll. The book calls for a Leading Player to be a good and evil angel in Pippin's ear. Ben Vereen played him on Broadway. To great effect, Smyth has expanded the part into three Leading Players: Deborah Gilmour Smyth, Chrissy Voegle, and David Kamatoy. Dressed (by Margaret Neuhoff-Vida) as if they were a commedia dell'arte troupe moonlighting on the Dark Side of the Force, the trio is a show unto itself. They sing beautifully, and Kamatoy juggles dexterously, as they wryly (and humorously) cajole Pippin down a stained-glass path toward Faustian unfulfillment.

The program claims that Rick Meads was a last-minute replacement as Pippin. Though it has a nice metaphorical twang — Meads being new to the part and Pippin being new to the world — you'd never know it from Meads's assured, thoroughly polished performance. Vanda Eggington carries on the show-stopping tradition when her Berthe sings "No Time at All" (Irene Ryan began the tradition on Broadway, and my niece, Annie B., continued it swimmingly in a production at Los Gatos High). When Shaun Marie Levin's Catherine finally gets a chance to sing, her classically trained voice makes it well worth the wait. Fernando Vega (yet another strong voice for the show), David Cochran Heath, the always-imaginative Kathi Gibbs, and young Hilary Clarke are useful in supporting roles.

Pippin may be the last — if not the, then at least one of the — official productions in the Lamb's National City theater space. Come December, the company moves to Coronado. Thus, this show is one of San Diego's final chances to see how Lamb's has mastered its intimate arena stage (the evidence is clear as soon as one sees Jane La Motte's scenic design; with complementary lighting by Nathan Peirson, it's a zodiac of squares, symbolic of Pippin's journey). The musical is on the slight side, but the staging is all, and it's near impossible to discern any cracks in the fusions among Robert Smyth's direction, Pamela Turner's choreography, the design work, and the fluid performances. Like Pippin, Lamb's is heading in new directions. But as I watched the show, I became a bit pre-nostalgic for the kinds of theatrical wonders the company has done in this seemingly prohibitive space.

Escondido's new $74.4 million California Center for the Arts is a huge facility brimming with potential uses. Located on 12 acres, the center has a gigantic 1524-seat concert hall (with no seat more than 100 feet from the stage), a 408-seat theater, a museum, 9000 square feet of exhibition space, plus meeting rooms and educational programs for children and adults. The Center, which opened recently, anticipates 250,000 visitors annually.

If it wants a significant portion of that estimate to be theatergoers, the center had better shore itself up on two fronts: A) Learn the quirks of the concert hall's acoustics, and B) Bring in much stronger productions. The first theatrical venture in the new space, a touring version of Guys and Dolls, pointed out both shortcomings glaringly.

THEATER

The show was an auditory mishmash. Although no one in the audience is more than 100 feet from the stage, the show sounded miles away, as if the entire company were performing inside the metallic labyrinth of the Save-A-Soul Mission's tuba. With five levels of seats, and boxes on the sides, the concert hall resembles the great opera houses of Europe. The sound system, however, was amateur all the way.

The non-equity show was produced by Big League Productions, a flashy marquee moniker at desperate odds with its minor-league product. Guys and Dolls is as surefire as a musical can get. And yet this speedy, nuance-free production, directed by Victoria Busser as if her horse were smelling the barn, almost rendered Frank Loesser's songs and Abe Burrows's book dull. Hey, if Miss Adelaide (a spunky Shelley Clarke) could steal the whole evening, there was something rotten in Escondido. Ross Neill was badly miked and insipid as Sky Masterson, but at least he could sing, unlike Jen Little's Sarah Brown, who couldn't. If you don't count the cheap trick of turning up the house lights at the end of a song — as an unsubtle Applause Sign — the only bright spots were Clarke's Adelaide, Tim Salamandyk's Nicely-Nicely, and having Dick Tracy colors on the late-'40s Broadway Bloodhound costumes. Otherwise, any of our local colleges could have done this show a ton better, without half trying and for one-third the ticket price. ■

Aunt Dan and Lemon
I'm still not a fan of Wallace Shawn's controversial drama about how fascism seeps into unsuspecting minds. In interviews Shawn insists he's not of the devil's party, but in young Lemon's pseudo-argumentative defense of Nazism, I'd swear Shawn's wearing a party armband, throwing confetti, and puffing into a kazoo. For those interested in the subject, see Bertram Gross's Friendly Fascism: The New Face of Power in America. For those interested in seeing firsthand what the shouting's been about — i.e., the local premiere of a play first produced nine years ago — the North Coast Repertory Theatre is offering a production with more strengths than weaknesses, though some choices detract and shouldn't. As the American expatriate with warped ideological views, Rhona Gold's Aunt Dan does some impressive work: her timing, deliveries, and level of focused intensity are among her best ever. But she plays Aunt Dan, possibly as directed by Olive Blakistone, too much as an Auntie Mame, as a goofy eccentric we needn't take seriously, rather than as someone with a hankering for things evil. Gold makes her almost a purely comic character and needs to add flickerings of gravitas to her portrayal. Aunt Dan may say funny things, but at no point is she kidding. Michelle Napolitano is quite good as Lemon, the ailing youth tutored by Aunt Dan to admire the Nazis for their "refreshing" lack of hypocrisy. In her many direct addresses to the audience, though, Napolitano should project to the back rows (which the NCRT has elevated recently, too good effect), not merely to the front seats. Aunt Dan and Lemon is about political and moral extremities, and as Mindy, Shawn's happy-go-lethal prostitute, the actor Devorah has made her San Diego debut a memorable one. John Christopher Guth, Daniel Armand, Susan Stratton, and Jerry Monroe also contribute. As does Marty Burnett's set and Trish Dalton's costumes, although Sean LaMotte's lighting kept halves of faces in the dark for most of the opening-night performance.

Evita
Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice's 1978 musical is such an oddity: an apolitical show about the most powerful woman in Argentinian history. They took an enigma (Eva Perón was a sinner/saint who allegedly thought nothing of the masses who worshipped her) and watered it down into an innocuous People magazine bio. They even throw Ché Guevara into the mix as an on-course commentator (though he was still quite young when she died of cancer in 1952), but this move muddles more than it clarifies. Is he jealous of her popularity with the people? Are they competing myths? Rather than unravel her mystery, when he isn't laboring as a stage-hand for scene changes, Guevara distances us further from what is already an extremely distanced view of Eva Perón. It's all done so far away, Evita feels like watching Argentinian politics from the moon — or, more to the point, from Anglo America, where enquiring minds will still want to know who she was (and why Webber and Rice wrote the musical, with its Jesus Christ Superstar-derivatave harmonics, in the first place). Rice's libretto is not only devoid of factual detail, it's pretty much devoid of drama as well. It moves in formal blocks, with the music making things seem portentous, the progressions seem logical. Then suddenly — blip! — it's over, with an afterthought for a climax. Frank Wayne and the Lawrence Welk Resort Theatre have given Evita a decent but often too dispassionate mounting that's cold at the core. The musical begs for fire and for acting that fills in the motives and meanings missing in the script. Wayne has cast capable singers — Barbara Passolt as Eva, Kurt Andrew Hansen as Ché, and Erik V. Garcia as Juan Perón. He's encouraged them to stand and belt their songs, which they do well, but not to provide telling gestures and nuances for their characters. The result resembles a museum tour conducted by a cicerone who has yet to read the guidebook. Terry Barto's acceptable choreography recalls the original, though there are far too few Latino singers and dancers for a show supposedly set in Argentina.
Lawrence Welk Resort Theatre, through November 12; Tuesday, and Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Matinee Tuesday through Thursday, and Sunday at 1:45 p.m.

Forbidden Broadway, 94
If Gerard Alessandrini's parody of Broadway musicals becomes the hit it looked to be on opening night, the Theatre in Old Town had better un-book future shows. Forbidden Broadway is a wall-to-wall hoot and could run till all the sacred cows it spoofs come home. Now in its 12th year, the show began as a vehicle for actors needing work (and "to get us agents"). Alessandrini collected parodies of songs he performed at parties and directed crisp caricatures, and soon crowds began coming to Palssons, a New York supper club, to hear their favorite vocalists and musicals satirized — nay, clobbered — by four performers and a pianist. Forbidden Broadway has that sense of "C'mon, gang, let's do a show!" But while it's one thing to conceive of a collection of witty, iconoclastic parodies of the American musical theater, it's quite another to pull them off. True parody must be dead on target, both in the words and the performances, otherwise it's just dead. One of the delights of the Theatre in Old Town's production, which Alessandrini has directed, is that not only are the lyrics consistently funny, the performances are topnotch as well (all four have done other versions, in New York, on tours, and/or in the recent L.A. run). Although there's a sameness to some of the bits (who does and doesn't get cast in movie remakes of musicals, for example), the cast is remarkably versatile. Christine Pedi's renditions of Liza Minnelli ("Liza One-Note"), Ethel Merman, and Patti LuPone suggest she could do just about anything. As do Susanne Blakeslee's Carol Channing, Julie Andrews, and a devastating Andrea McArdle (Annie at age 30, having a smoke and hoping for a revival). David Benoit handles his assignments with élan, in particular his Mandy Patinkin (singing a version of "Somewhere, Over the Rainbow" entitled "Somewhat Overindulgent"). Brian Noonan's also a kick as a flea-infested feline from Cats and as Robert Goulet in a lounge-show version ("How's that steak?") of Camelot. All four are impressive individually, and their ensemble work makes you swear they've performed together for years. At the Theatre in Old Town, they might get that chance.
Outstanding.

Home
Reacting to the melodramatic overkill of 19th-century theater, Anton Chekhov observed that, on stage, "Life must be exactly as it is, and people as they are — not on stilts." David Storey's intriguing 1970 drama is Chekhovian in this manner. It's devoid of plot, events are few, and there is so little "drama" that the play appears to court mundanity. Jack and Harry, nattily dressed British gents, stroll through a gardenlike enclosure and discuss whatever comes to mind in fragmentary sentences. They meet Marjorie and Kathleen, have lunch and disagreements, and end the play in tears. Amid these non-events a whole lot does take place, though. Our sense of who they are alters radically, and the title of the play does a 180-degree turn. Where one "draws the line," so to speak, gets redrawn, but not enough in the Old Globe Theatre's production. Directed by Craig Noel, most scenes are played for laughs — on comic stilts. This converts Storey's quartet of fractured beings into just some goofy, cardboard eccentrics easy to laugh at, when their poignance should banish all laughter by the final curtain. What's frustrating about the show is that, on the whole, it's close to making the play work on its own terms. It just needs some tragic relief from all the comedy. Performing the undramatic Home must feel like bouncing on a diving board and wondering if there's any water in the pool. There is. The cast just needs to believe it. Leo Stewart's Alfred, an ex-wrestler with psychological difficulties, could use major rethinking: more danger, less slapstick silliness. Katherine McGrath's Kathleen could follow Anne Gee Byrd's lead, as the hard-bitten Marjorie, and be less of a single comic mannerism and more of a pain-riddled sensibility. And Jonathan McMurtry and Donald Burton would fare better by playing their lines not as one-liners and emphasize, instead, what takes place between the lines. Overall, the production was too eager to entertain rather than explore those gaps and gulfs behind the characters' half-formed sentences. Were they to do so, the production could become as fascinating as the play.

Later Life
We've seen Austin before. He's yet another rigid A.R. Gurney, Jr., WASP stapled to propriety who, with the free-spirited Ruth at a friend's party, could have a second (and last) chance to pry himself from psychological entombment. We've even seen Gurney's Later Life before (stiff, "nice" guy keeps artistic, life-loving woman, trailing clouds of divorces, at bay). It's Gurney's Love Letters minus the letters of 30 years. Later Life has comical cameos, though. Party guests periodically interrupt Ruth and Austin's unexpected assignation on the terrace of a friend's apartment, with each symbolic of the change Austin is terrified to contemplate (the play has a strange duality: everyone in the world can make sweeping changes in their lives except New England male WASPS). What gives the Old Globe Theatre's production interest, along with Allen Moyer's breathtaking set — stage left, a white-brick apartment façade; the terrace center; and a black infinity, pin-pricked by stars, stage right — is that only two actors play the ten or so interlopers. Wearing wigs and David C. Woolard's cavalcade of present-day fashions, Richard Easton and Linda Atkinson are such fun (if at times broadly stretching things) that they threaten to upstage the main plot, which becomes tedious by comparison. Nonetheless, Jennifer Harmon fares well as Ruth, adding some psychological depth where the script draws a blank. Frank Converse, however, is stuck in a one-note role as Austin. If he reminds people of Jim Dial in Murphy Brown, it's because Charles Kimbrough originated the part (and Gurney dedicated the play to him). I must report that the night I caught the show the audience enjoyed it a lot. But I found the comedy-drama about a road not taken to be yet another undemanding amble down Gurney Way, a road he's taken us down many times before.

Love Letters
It's hard to "review" the Sweetooth Comedy Theatre's current production, because the cast will change every week. Sweetooth is staging A.R. Gurney's immensely popular two character play as a benefit, with one-third of the proceeds for each evening going to charities chosen by the participants. So how can a show change performers every week? By design. Gurney wrote Love Letters to be read, not acted. It is a "sort of a play," he said, "which needs no theater, no lengthy rehearsal...no memorization of lines, and no commitment from its two actors beyond the night of performance." In effect, the approximately 90-minute piece is simply a reading of letters between Andrew Makepeace Ladd III and his childhood friend, Melissa Gardner. And the aims are to keep the show from becoming too polished, to preserve the rough-hewn look of a staged reading, and to sustain the spontaneous feel of letter-writing itself — 50 years of letters, everything from the Annual Christmas Letter to queries about one's whereabouts and health (i.e., are you still in detox?). Though they are rarely together (their lives are a series of near-misses), and though they are opposites temperamentally, something links the "stalwart," "upright" — okay, "stuffy" — Andrew with the "lascivious," "cynical," "self-destructive" Melissa. One is leftbrain dominant, the other right-. As he rises ever higher in the Eastern WASP Establishment, trailing clouds of self-denial in his path, the artistic Melissa expresses every impulse in a life that is forever vowing to restart anew. All of this makes the play's title appear a misnomer. The letters aren't about love, small l, but instead trace the growth, change, and evolution — the whole zodiac of love's many ways. Love Letters is a deceptively simple, ultimately moving show. And with a new cast each week at Sweetooth, composed of theater artists and local celebrities, the piece has a persistent way of coaxing unrehearsed, genuine feeling from its participants. Thus far this production has raised over $10,000 for more than 20 local charities and organizations. This week's performers: Cassandra Lind and Bruce Bekkar.
Worth a try.

Muzeeka
In John Guare's 1967 one-act, Jack Argue (is "argue" an anagram for "Guare"?) goes on an anti-quest. He begins with a vision: he'll get a job at a Muzak-producing company and then pipe in wild, ancient Etruscan sounds ("Not rock and roll. No. More than that"), turning Americans into Dionysian maniacs. "Everyone will feel sexy all the time, and nobody will mind what anybody does to anyone else." Amid this mid-'60s euphoria, Guare injects a lethal dose of late-'60s disillusionment, and after Jack's de-enlightenment, the numbness is all. Like David Mamet's Edmond, Muzeeka looks linear but is actually a downward spiral that should move like a dive from a tall building. Persistent technical troubles at the Fritz Theater's opening night performance, however, made halting what should have been hasty. The play is built on blackouts and brief scenelets. Too often the lighting and music cues were late, the transitions too tardy. For reasons that don't make sense, director Duane Daniels has eliminated Guare's Brechtian banners, which precede each scene ("IN WHICH ARGUE HAS A VISION" "IN WHICH ARGUE IS AT A LOSS"). The result is lengthier transitions (because the audience has less to do) and less Guarian coherence. Daniel Morris's earth-toned set — with naked, larger-than-life Etruscans frolicking on the rear wall — is one of the Fritz's best. But the technical work needs to be 100 percent sharper to make Jack's fall as vertiginous as the script demands and as David Kornbluth delivers. As written, Jack Argue is deliberately more parts than a whole. He doesn't know his real age and shifts opinions readily. What's so frustrating about the Fritz's technical foibles is that Kornbluth is quite strong as Jack, tracing the character's arc, from having the answers to forgetting the questions, with admirable skill. Deborah Ayers and Abigail Jordan do acceptable work, at best, in multiple roles.
Fritz Theater, through October 29; Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Sunday at 7:00 p.m.

Forbidden Broadway '94

The Normal Heart
As a piece of writing, Larry Kramer's tragic tale about the first five years of the AIDS crisis isn't very good. Too often it substitutes diatribe for drama, and Kramer's persona, Ned Weeks, comes off as the only person in the world who fought the powers-that-be in the early years. As a piece of history, and as a moral broadside, however, The Normal Heart is an extremely important chronicle of neglect. It names names and newspapers (the New York Times, in particular, gets a much-merited going over). It puts human faces on the escalating numbers of the dying, and Kramer's vehemence, which punches through every scene, is deeply moving, even when the writing itself feels strained and self-serving. San Diego State University's drama department has staged a competently done Normal Heart. Having equity actor Barry Mann play Ned Weeks is inspired. Mann takes the role by the throat — without once trying to show there's a sympathetic actor inside of it — and just fires away as the complex figure who, the Baltimore Sun wrote, "more than came out of the closet" (with his insistence on sexual abstention among gays), "he's housecleaned the whole neighborhood." Michael Pugh O'Connor and Ann Stocking, playing Ned's brother Ben and Dr. Emma Brookner, also do yeoman work as Kramer's antithetical bookends, the one an ostrich, the other a cheerleader. The rest of the cast, though admirably directed by Rick Simas, performs unevenly, at best, but the leads keep the play's engine revving. Tal Ostrowiak's minimalist set (with stagehands dressed by Christina Fair in black, with black surgical masks, like a death squad of orderlies) includes a Vietnam Memorial-like projection of names on the rear wall of those who have died from AIDS-related causes. Also of note is a very apt, albeit uncredited, selection of music from the period. The production has some flaws, and the play has quite a few. But Barry Mann's performance, Simas's staging, and most of all Kramer's message make the SDSU production definitely...

Porcelain
In Chay Yew's award-winning drama (1993 London Fringe Award), about a murder in a London "loo," the script's five actors never look at each other. They perform straight ahead, gunning their lines at the audience in a channelling of viewpoints. In the center is John, the gay Asian 19-year-old who fired six bullets into William Hope, his Caucasian "toilet sex" lover. The question, which becomes questions, is why? The play probes beneath sensationalistic headlines for motives. Though Yew's insights are few (his conclusions, in fact, are obvious), the way he orchestrates the conflicting perspectives — racism, homophobia, an exam by a corrupt psychologist — make for some vivid drama in the 90-minute, intermissionless piece. Peter James Smith plays John with an ingrained sense of superiority and a riveting understatement. As he slowly shapes origami cranes from colored paper, Smith unravels his character in multiple directions, and hate and love do a symbiotic arabesque across John's psyche. Directed with a feel for the play's reader's theater demands by Robert Joseph, the other cast members are reasonably secure in their parts, though more nuanced deliveries would add some needed variety to a consistently overstated, banner-headline style of presentation. Michael Myers's William grows into an eerie portrait of a man with as many internal conflicts as the play's themes. Roman Jiminez and Allen Bernstein are usually effective as several disembodied voices, though Martin Namaro's psychologist, Dr. Jeff Worthy, pushes harder on the evil-intensity button than need be. (As written, Worthy's already insidious enough.) Joseph's handsome, minimalist scenic design, Michael Coleman's costumes, and Gary R. Lewis's lighting are further evidence that the Diversionary company has increased its familiarity with its relatively new space.

Rain
Adapted from Somerset Maugham's short story "Miss Thompson" by John Colton and Clemence Randolph, Rain pits the zealous missionary, the Reverend Alfred Davidson, against the "wayward" Miss Sadie Thompson at Joe Horn's general store in rainy Pago Pago. The play's an old-fashioned, good-versus-evil melodrama, but with a difference: it was among the first American dramas to suggest that excessive morality could be an evil and that — though "wanton" and "brazen" — for all her "faults," Sadie Thompson is still "just an ordinary human being." Rain is currently at the RUSE/Marquis Theatre, and about the only thing to recommend this now very dated, mega-overstated three-acter is Tamara May's portrayal of Sadie. When May's in a scene, brimming with Thompson's humanity, the stage comes alive. Her Thompson is feisty, running scared, courageous, frail, and ultimately indomitable. Most of all she's a survivor, and May makes sure artistically that Sadie's survival has a price and is in doubt until the end. May's is a heartening performance. But everyone around her, in this A.M. Charlens-directed show, comes nowhere near her standard. The "supporting cast," in fact, is an oxymoron, since most of the under-rehearsed and amateurish work is non-supportive, even lacks a basic sense of verbal emphasis. Berrisford Elliot has a strong voice for Davidson, but with a full beard and long, curly hair, he looks like David Koresh, Davidson's opposite, rather than the "sin buster" he's supposed to be. Other choices puzzle and boggle: why is easy listnin' from-the-'60s music of choice between the acts? And why does the rain in the background sound like popcorn popping in a huge vat of oil?
Marquis Public Theatre, through November 15; Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m.

Sexual Perversity in Chicago
Anyone on the lookout for a hot late-night comedy should go to the Fritz Theater — at its new location on Third Avenue — and check out David Mamet's exposé of the singles scene. The "sexual perversity" of the title isn't what you think. It's actually about the ways veterans of the scene erect barriers to prevent them from intimacy. Danny and Deborah have met and are headed toward love. His friend Bernie and her roommate Joan, however, are determined to prevent it from happening. Between Bernie's deep-seated hatred of women and Joan's of men, there's no room for anything like optimism. In the hour-long comedy-drama, they function like evil angels at the ears of Danny and Deborah, filling them with overflowings of their own negativity. They must rank as two of the least supportive "friends" on the planet. In a series of quick, often hilariously funny scenes, Mamet traces the slow rise and precipitous fall of Danny and Deborah's relationship. At the Fritz, thanks to some fine work by director Duane Daniels, the show moves at a briskly Mametian clip. Daniel Morris's set — four chairs and a black background lit nicely by Douglas Gabrielle — makes up in instantaneous scene changes what it lacks in detail. The latter is supplied by Allen Ogden's costumes and Marty Eldridge's sound design, part of which is mid'70s disco music that catches the period (Chicago, 1976) and causes cringes of musical memories at the same time. The acting is solid. In particular, Bryan Bevell's Danny is just right, moving from a form of singles-scene innocence to the bitterness of James Watkins's Bernie in believable stages. Lisa Viertel's Deborah, caught in the switches like Danny, is often most eloquent when she doesn't say a word and simply shows us how repulsive Bernie is and how, were it not for two very angry singles soloists (and boy, this is an angry play, in the characters and in Mamet's anger at the condition), she and Danny might have turned out together just fine. (Note: Several cast changes have occurred since the show opened in April 1992.)

Final Transfer

Events took a strange turn after Jeffrey Marchino, 35, was shot and killed October 8 by a gunman on a bicycle. Marchino had been sitting at a bus stop in Normal Heights, on 30th Street near Adams Avenue. Four days later in San Francisco, the suspect,Christopher Cruise, accordion player for the Irish folk band the Downs Family, was found dead of an apparent suicide by drug overdose. Cruise had left several notes for friends and instructions to the medical examiner regarding the disposition of his body.

San Diego Police said Cruise, 34, shot Marchino four times following a brief verbal exchange. Cruise left for San Francisco after the shooting. According to police, Marchino had been stalking Cruise's girlfriend for almost four years, from the time she ended a former relationship with Marchino. There had been previous altercations between Cruise and Marchino before the murder, including a stabbing of Cruise by Marchino a year ago. At press time, the Downs Family planned a wake for Cruise along with a live performance at Granny's Paradise Lounge in North Park on October 18.

Former Fishwife Spurns Headhunter

It seemed such a natural transition. Fishwife released two albums on Headhunter, so it looked like Tanner, which consists of the members of Fishwife minus vocalist Ryan Foxe, would do the same.

Tanner was a signature away from a one-record deal with Headhunter when, according to vocalist-guitarist Gar Wood, the band decided, for better or worse, to try something different. "When Tanner started, we decided to keep things fresh, since we had been together for a long time already [as Fishwife]," Wood said. "We were going to do things differently just within ourselves, to keep things interesting. I'm singing, which is something new. Matt [Ohlin, bassist] never sang at all and now he sings a little. Chris [Prescott, drummer] sings. We also decided to do a record on a different label. It would be different.

"[Headhunter] offered us a one-record deal, pretty much the basic deal, and we were anxious to put a record out. We were like, 'Well, fuck, whip out one of those contracts and let us check it out.' We started checking it out; it was fine, and it was a good deal, but we decided not to do it because we wanted to go through different channels, meet different people. It wasn't like all of a sudden we saw the Dark Side."

Wood said Tanner plans to record a full-length record later this month and hopes to have it released sometime next spring.

Ethel Merman Turned Around

He can deliver music from Armenia, Japan, Cuba, the Philippines, Greece, Israel, Jamaica, Iran, Italy, Germany ....

LOCALS
JOHN BRIZZOLARA

It is 20 minutes into the interview before I finally get it.

While Tony Kol is stir-frying tomatoes and peppers he has grown outside his Allied Gardens apartment, he talks about his days behind the drum kits, timpani, triangles, and xylophones of Broadway — in New York City — more than 30 years ago. He mentions Barbra Streisand's boobs and the day she walked into the theater dressed like a biker babe. As he talks I jot down notes like: a character out of Broadway Danny Rose and looks like ... looks like.... I cross out Frank Sinatra meets Red Buttons as Kol adds chopped turkey to hot oil and vegetables and speaks of his first day on the job behind Ethel Merman in the Broadway show Gypsy. I write Looks like a cross between Ben Gazzara and Harvey Keitel and feel satisfied, more or less.

I bring this up and Kol says, "Yeah, well, they're New York types, like me." In the next two hours, as he jumps from anecdote to anecdote with little regard for segues, Kol will look and act like a dozen different people, all of them somehow familiar.

"I was goin' to Juilliard — on scholarship. It was, like, '58 or something, and I got a call from the percussion player, Irwin Cooper, who was doin' Gypsy." Sixty-year-old Kol moves around his kitchen with graceful economy. His accent vacillates between New York Italian, Yiddish, and Southern California lazy. "He said, 'You gotta go in for me tonight. I can't make it.' I said, 'Can't you get anybody else?' He says, 'No, you're my last hope. You gotta do it for me; you gotta do it.' I said, 'Okay.'"

Kol spreads his arms, shrugs, digs his cheek into his shoulder, and pouts/grimaces in a "Whaddaya gonna do?" mime. "So I went in there, and I notice he didn't mark the book [of music]. In rehearsal, you're supposed to mark the book, cuts and all the rest. So I went to the conductor. I didn't wanna get blamed 'cause the book wasn't marked. I said, 'Whaddaya wanna hear? 'Cause you're not gonna hear it all.'" Kol pronounces the words conductah, mocked, heah. "He said, 'Do the best you can.'

"So I went in there cold, with no rehearsal, not even a good talk-over, and did the show. Jimmy Crawford, the drummer — used to play with Lunceford — was always hipping me to what was happening in the arrangements. But this one tune, the conductor came down with a strong downbeat, and I hit that timpani with everything I got. But it was omitted; that part was supposed to be circled; I wasn't supposed to play it. Ethel Merman turns around and looks at me — everybody turns around and looks at me. That's when I hid myself behind the timpani, took out a handkerchief, put it on top of the timpani stick, and just waved the top of the stick with the white handkerchief back and forth. Well, the conductor and some guys in the pit laughed at that. They did ask me to come back and do the next show the following evening."

Tony Kol

Tony Kol no longer allows gray hairs to show through on his head or eyebrows. Instead he has returned to the towheaded, carrot color of his youth, because, he says, "otherwise they don't think you can do the job." Ironic, since Kol is far more animated than my 17-year-old son and his video-glazed friends.

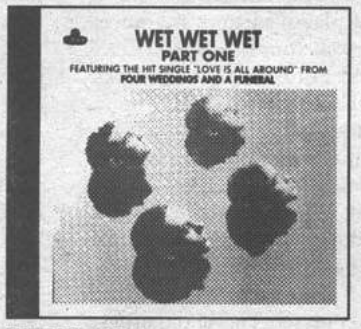

In his almost–50-year career, from the block parties of Williamsburg, Brooklyn, in the postwar years to San Diego's Festa Bella at the Embarcadero in '93, Kol has made some interesting stops along the way. After graduating from Juilliard, he took to Broadway for the relative stability of a steady paycheck. Funny Girl and Gypsy were two of many shows Kol worked in the late '50s and early '60s. He made occasional jaunts to the Borscht Belt in the Catskill Mountains, or "Jewish Alps," in upstate New York. He had the odd gig at the Metropolitan Opera House or Radio City Music Hall. Kol eventually found himself working in television. As a staff musician for NBC, he performed for several years on the game show Concentration, as well as on The Tonight Show and other NBC programs. Later, when he moved to Los Angeles, he did the percussion parts for the Valerie Harper series Rhoda. His L.A. tenure included work on the soundtracks to the remake of King Kong and All the President's Men and even a bit part as a drummer in the James Caan–Elliott Gould vehicle Harry and Walter Go to New York.

These days, Kol spends his time in his Allied Gardens apartment, which overlooks a good stretch of Mission Valley, or at his Los Angeles home, where he keeps most of his drums, bongos, congas, pandeiros, timbales, dumbegs, djembes, xylophones, vibes, and timpani.

Another thing that sets Tony Kol apart from the average drummer: he's the guy you want to call if your musical entertainment needs are more exotic than a competent combo running through "Feelings," "Strangers in the Night," or "New York, New York." With a little notice, Kol will put together singers, musicians, and authentic instruments to perform traditional music for a bar mitzvah, a Korean wedding, a country-western line dancing party, or a Cinco de Mayo bash. He can deliver music from Armenia, Japan, Cuba, the Philippines, Greece, Israel, Jamaica (reggae), Iran, Italy, Germany. Also swing, rock and roll, klezmer ("a kind of Jewish Dixieland," he says), "music from the Gay '90s to today's '90s." And this only touches on Kol's arsenal of the world's music, his knowledge of which began with his years of working weddings, parties, and parades in New York. The question arises: Yeah, but is he any good at all this? Forty minutes of fast-forwarding through Kol's cassettes and videos provides the answer: he is.

"These very orthodox guys got into an ecstasy. They were groovin', really groovin'."

Kol, a man who understands and respects the contributions of both Gene Krupa and Charlie Watts, also teaches percussion. A potential Ginger Baker or Elvin Jones would be hard pressed to find a mentor with a more comprehensive outlook.

"I had this brilliant student." Theatrically, Kol pretends to tear his hair. "He was on the sauce and doing cocaine. I said, 'I don't know what you're doin', man. But I know if you keep this shit up, you're not playin' drums anymore. Look at your hands; you can't even hold the fuckin' sticks without shakin'.' I said, 'You're gonna be finished.' A year later, he quit the drinking and drugs. Then, when he quit smoking, I said, 'What? Now I gotta go out and get you a halo!' Jeez. But he's good, he's good."

Kol allows, "I used to be crazy myself. I never did drugs, but I like a rum and Coke. When I was young and I played up in the mountains — you know, upstate New York — we used to have to play for these Mafioso guys after hours. I never worried about anything; guys from the JDL [Jewish Defense League] were always around, and I'd wear my yarmulke, or kippah. But one night at this club in the Catskills — Joe Columbo, remember him? He was in the club with his people; they used to come in after one o'clock. And one son of a bitch, this Italian guy with the party, wants to play my drums. He was drunk. I nearly got in trouble because I was crazy. I went" — Kol dumps pasta into boiling water and brushes his hands off. He stalks toward me with a menacing posture and a set to his mouth that suggest he'd as soon rip my lips off as serve me the Chinese/Italian lunch he has been preparing with such care and panache. "I said, 'Get off the drums.' He said he wanted to play, and I said, 'I don't give a fuck what you want to do. Get off the drums!' He looked at me. This is a made guy, a guy who ... hey! Who knows? I was crazy. You probably understand what I mean."

Kol now produces vermicelli he will use as a bed for his stir-fry dish. As if the pasta reminds him of truculent Italians, he breaks two fistfuls in half, drops them in boiling water, brushes off his hands, and changes the subject. "One time, I was playing a wedding for the Hasidim. It might have been a Purim for Rabbi Wohlgelernter in La Jolla; I do a lot of work for him. A very interesting man, a young man. We were playing a circle dance, what they used to call a hora. It might have been the first dance, when they bring the bride and groom in. Anyway, what happens is these very orthodox guys get into an ecstasy. They were groovin', really groovin'. They could have been a little loaded, you know? And they were, like, the Watusi, with the ecstasy and the rhythm of the dance, the movement. They put their right arms on the right shoulder of the guy in front of them, and they step and they step and they step, step, step. That kind of thing, you know?

"What happens is, they really get into it and this poor bastard drops, and they just stepped over him until a couple of guys came over and pulled him out of the circle. That's when the caterer came by with the chicken. Somebody bumped the guy and the big plate of chicken fell onto the dance floor. These guys didn't stop, man. They just kept dancin', slithering around the chicken, groovin'. The caterer comes over to the bandstand and starts shouting at me, 'Stop the music, ya doity bastid! Take it out! Enough already!' I told him, 'If I stop the music, they're not gonna stop dancing anyway.' 'Take it out!' he says. 'I'll pull the plug! They gotta eat the chicken; it's gonna get all dry!' So I stopped playing and the bastards kept dancing. They never slowed. They started singing the tune. They kept goin'; they were in it!"

Does Kol remember the tune? "It was a Hasidic tune. It could have been a Lubavitch kind of song. It was one of their tunes for that sect. Their rabbi wrote this song during a kumsitz, when the rabbis get together and have a few drinks.

All of a sudden one of the guys gets a creative feeling and comes out with a new tune. The others pick up on it and they'll all sing it. They get somebody to write it down, and it becomes their tune. Every time we play for those guys, we've got to play that tune."

Any other good wedding stories? Funny I should ask. "This was an arranged marriage, like in the Fiddler on the Roof? This guy never saw his prospective bride and she never saw him. So what happens is they have a deal where the groom sits down with the rabbi and makes out the marriage contract, the ketubah. Now, in order to make sure he gets the bride he contracted for, they take the groom to the bride, and that is called the bedeken.

"The caterer starts shouting at me, 'Stop the music, ya doity bastid!'"

So we dance him in. We're doin', like, bumpa-dumpa, simpa-dimpa mazel tova, whatever. All the rabbis are puttin' their arms around the guy and they're swingin' into the room, right? Now this is the first time he gets up close and they take the veil off the bride. Of course, he's supposed to put it back on later. And she was ugly." Kol lowers his voice and pronounces the word with nine extra *u*s. "I mean really ugly.

"So they danced him out, which is part of the ceremony. After they danced him out, they couldn't find him anymore. When they found him, it was in Chicago two weeks later. But they had a party ... just no wedding."

As we eat Kol's Chinese/Italian dish, for which he has no name, the conversation enters a lull. The food is spicy and delicious. We wash it down with lemon seltzer. "I only cook for people I like," Kol says, and I nod appreciatively. I ask him what drummers he admires and he mentions Grady Tate, Big Sid Catlett, and "a new guy, Steve Gadd." Kol recommends these drummers to his San Diego pupils. He teaches students of all ages but prefers the younger ones. "They're not so stiff."

After lunch Kol plays videotapes of Persian, Greek, Hebrew, German, and Italian weddings and parties where he has performed. In each one, his band is dressed in appropriate ethnic costumes. During one klezmer session, Kol listens to an accordionist playing a half step behind Kol's xylophone solo, and he shakes his head. "The schmuck," Kol says. "He doesn't listen."

When asked how on earth he learned this vast repertoire of music from such a wide spectrum of cultures, Kol says, "Well, you gotta build a library and ...," he spreads his arms again and shrugs, "listen." ■

OF NOTE

By Stephen Esmedina

The musical landscape has never produced an authentic-sounding honkie R&B singer, especially one from Texas. (I will forever cherish Robert Duvall's great line from Geronimo: An American Legend: "A Texan. There is no lower form of white man.") When Southern R&B, a deeply ingrained, blatantly sensual music, can be manifested in the likes of Malford Milligan, lead singer for Storyville, then I must toss aside my regional, if not racial, prejudice and admit the style has influenced and made minor heroes out of a few noteworthies. Milligan joins the class of Delbert McClinton, Jim Dewar, Jerry Lacroix, and the great Frankie Miller: he understands the deep connections, emotional and aesthetic, that bond black and white pop performers without condescending to silly barroom bloozy-band schtick.

Storyville's debut, Bluest Eyes, is no precedent setter in the manner of Frankie Miller's High Life or Edgar Winter's White Trash, but it has sufficient songcraft, drama, and referential savvy to make such allusions appropriate. Accolades from Austin's rock media proclaim Milligan "the most amazing male singer in Austin, bar none!" So I, most eloquent critic in Barrio Logan, say: anyone who can make Peter Gabriel's mawkish ode to Anne Sexton sound harrowing, who can underplay "A Change Is Gonna Come," should be heeded.

STORYVILLE, Coach House, Saturday, October 22, 8 pm, 220-TIXS. $10.

OF NOTE

By David Stampone

CONJUNTO CÉSPEDES

You needn't be an expert on Caribbean music to understand why the generic label salsa irks various musicians when it's affixed to their particular form. Leading artists of, say, the Dominican Republic's zippy merengue or Puerto Rico's soulful, distinct plena and bomba forms have groaned as their music gets lumped together under the salsa heading, and not just by culturally ignorant Anglo recording industry and media folks either. Perhaps nobody gets more bent out o' shape about the S-word than Cuban musicians, who saw the first use of the term in the wake of the Cuban Revolution, when de-emphasizing their Cuban-ness became a stateside marketing stratagem. Thus, Cuba's proud son — the durable Afro-Cuban supergenre that has cross-fertilized with so much other Latin music around the world, not to mention its journey back across the Atlantic to serve as the catalyst for modern African pop's emergence — was soon given another, less specific identity, with accompanying music that, depending on your perspective and aesthetic orientation, reflected either a dilution of the source or a drift into urbanized pan-Latinism.

The Bay Area–based Conjunto Céspedes (up to a dozen members now, after starting in 1981 as a trio) is committed to celebrating the son with original compositions and standards by masters like Miguel Matamoros. Cuban-born director Guillermo Céspedes and captivating vocalist Gladys "Bobi" Céspedes (his aunt) will lead the ensemble (tres guitar, piano, violin, horns, etc., and sundry percussion, including the essential claves) in concert tomorrow night, Friday, out at UCSD's Price Center Ballroom. CONJUNTO CÉSPEDES, Price Center Ballroom, UCSD campus, Friday, October 21, 8 pm, 534-6467. $14 (general public), $12 (UCSD faculty and staff), $10 (students).

DAVE EDMUNDS

Just the name Dave Edmunds makes me happy, conjuring up as it does such wacky memories. In the late '70s, Edmunds and cohorts Nick Lowe and Elvis Costello (once staff artists at Stiff Records) provided an oasis of emotion in the desert of angry punk.

English-tempered rockabilly–cum–garage rock, Eddie Cochran meets Wreckless Eric with a dash of the Bonzo Dog Band — the Dave Edmunds mystique may be hard to define, but it sure is fun to hear. Though currently better known as a producer (Flamin' Groovies, Del Shannon, Stray Cats), Edmunds has put out neat little records with his own group Rockpile that have dotted the charts over the years. The records rely mostly on covers ("I Hear You Knockin'," "Crawling through the Wreckage," "Little Sister," etc.) but nonetheless add some inimitable if lightweight British charm to them. Both Bruce Springsteen and ELO's Jeff Lynne have written songs for Edmunds, which gives a good idea of his reputation among musicians. The man has a new album out, but even if he didn't, he'd be well worth seeing live.

Pete Droge opens.

ROVING EYE MUSIC REPORTS:
7th – Winterhawk: next time you turn on the air conditioner I am going to turn on the heater and force feed the stage. Rolling Scones: cool idea and songs but as I remarked to Matt's sound, "How can you play Stones' songs bad?" Bad Medicine: the debut of their new guitarist Rick Turkel; boy, does he get around and tested the new stage, proved it's safe. Klown Fish: Chili Peppers extraordinaire. Creation of the new extended stage they liked.
8th – The Harbinger jolt got us off as the glory boys Alleyrat followed, subbing for foundation who had part of the structure shaken apart, hope all's well with him. Christoverhead: like a fully developed artesian well, taste better with time. Gypsy Child: as I listened to their songs, I thought Radio 102 could be heard. Arson left us with rolling red eye a-glaze by a rocket's heat; this show could have been a 102 night, remember them? She, April, S.D. Roxx's here.

REVIEW
DUNCAN SHEPHERD

How odd that the first two Anne Rice novels to have been made into movies are the only two of hers, out of many, many, under different monickers, that I have attempted to read. Attempted and failed. If I remember right, I may have gotten a little further with Exit to Eden than with Interview with the Vampire, if only because of skipping and skimming more pages, in search of the hot parts, before tossing the book across the room. Having now seen the movie of it — a sort of Saturday Night Live parody, complete with Dan Aykroyd and Rosie O'Donnell, but a parody of a hypothetical nonexistent movie, as if a straight treatment had already been produced — I can well understand why the original author was not moved to dip into her own bank account to take out a newspaper ad in support of it, as she did on behalf of the soon-to-be-unveiled Vampire movie in the L.A. Times Sunday Calendar of October 2, reprinted from the Daily Variety of September 23.

This is a remarkable document. So let me waste no time in commencing to remark on it. On the one hand, it provides plenty of evidence for those of us who suspect that she is an atrocious writer but who temperamentally lack the linguistical cowcatcher necessary to plow through an entire one of her books. On the other hand, it provides the would-be blurb culler with an embarrassment of riches. Or embarrassment of something. Decisions, decisions:

(a) "An event of indescribable excitement."

(b) "I loved the film. I simply loved it. I loved it from start to finish."

(c) "I found myself deeply impressed with every aspect of its making."

(d) "Heartfelt and often daring performances by all the actors and actresses."

(e) "Exquisite set design and cinematography."

(f) "Masterly direction."

(g) "I was honored and stunned to discover how faithful this film was to the spirit, the content, and the ambience of the novel ... and of the script for it which I wrote."

(h) "I was shocked to discover that Neil Jordan had given this work a new and distinctive incarnation in film without destroying the aspects of it which I hold so dear. I never dreamed it would turn out this way."

(i) "Never during 17 years of development had I ever expected the film version of this book to emerge with so much of the heart and soul intact."

(j) "This film surpassed my maddest expectations."

(k) "The charm, the humor, and invincible innocence which I cherish in my beloved hero Lestat are all alive in Tom Cruise's courageous performance."

(l) "The guilt and suffering of Louis are poignantly portrayed by Brad Pitt."

(m) "The enigma of Armand is embodied in Antonio Banderas."

(n) "The role of the Interviewer is handled perfectly by Christian Slater."

(o) "Stephen Rea is delightfully sinister as Santiago."

(p) "Kirsten Dunst's mesmerizing performance as my tragic Claudia broke my heart."

(q) "The cinema maniac in me loved the pace of this movie, its tension, its suspense, its deep and spectacular sensuality."

(r) "I loved its comic moments."

(s) "I loved its stamina."

(t) "I loved its relentless intensity."

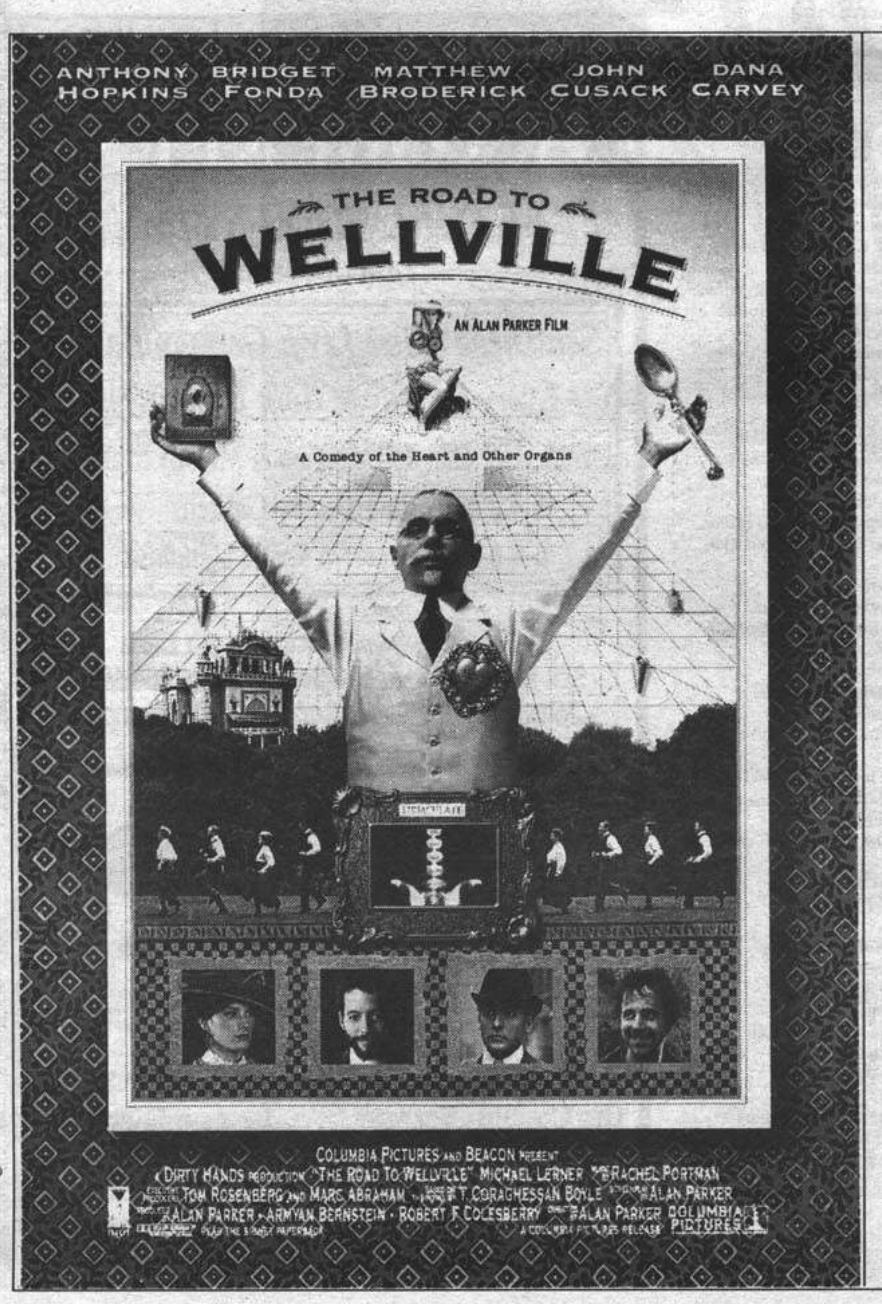

(u) "Pure entertainment."

(v) "I could not have hoped for anything better. To repeat, I never dared to hope for so much."

(w) "A unique work."

(x) "When you see this film, I think you will marvel, along with me, as to how something that developed with so many difficulties and so much controversy could turn out to give so many people what they want."

(y) "I think you will embrace this

Peter Travers and Jeffrey Lyons, step aside.

I had, however, to write beforehand would-be blurb culler, because there is a catch: an all-capitals codicil that stipulates (minus the capitals save one), "Permission is granted to anyone to reprint this statement as long as" — and long is very much the word — "it is reprinted in its entirety" (italics, as they say, mine). This artist has got integrity after all. No one in the promotions department twisted her arm for a quotable quote. No one bought her off. No one knelt down on the floor and begged. These could-be blurbs are apparently the way she truthfully prefers to express herself when she does not have to run something past an editor, and even when she is not angling to see her name in print in movie ads alongside eminences such as Peter Travers and Jeffrey Lyons. (Is it possible that the same holds true — the truthfully preferred form of self-expression — for the likes of Peter Travers and Jeffrey Lyons as well?)

She begins her soi-disant Personal Statement in a more reportorial vein. Dates, names, simple sentences, short paragraphs:

"On September 16, 1994, I saw a videocassette of the up and coming film [sic; upcoming film, surely] Interview with the Vampire.

"This film is directed by Neil Jordan, and stars Tom Cruise, Brad Pitt, Kirsten Dunst, Antonio Banderas, Stephen Rea and Christian Slater. It was produced by Stephen Woolley and David Geffen. It will be released this fall.

"Unable to attend a recent sneak preview at the invitation of the producers, I was trusted with this tape by David Geffen so that I could have an early look at the film [comment: but can she be trusted to distrust videotape?] because it is based on my first novel, which was published in 1976 — the first of the Vampire Chronicles."

The foregoing gambit carries on a time-honored tradition, especially among writers in the fantasy genres, of starting off a tale, in either the third or the first person, with a bit of solid circumstantiation in order to establish that the author (or narrator) is a down-to-earth sort; is firmly rooted in the world as we know it; is not unconversant with matters of fact and figure; is, in a word, sane.

She soon thereafter shifts into a more autobiographical gear, tripping nimbly from present to past and back to present again: "Living in a dramatic clutter of laserdiscs, and videotapes, I am nourished daily by movies, loving them as much as books. All my life I have looked to films for inspiration, consolation, amusement and enlightenment; and here at last was a tape of the film based on my own book."

This intimate, even confessional, mode of address establishes that, beyond sane, the author is bristlingly honest and candid, someone to be trusted more than just to the extent of a loaned videocassette, and not one to sweep under a rug the public catfight that erupted when Tom Cruise was cast in the lead role. One, on the contrary, to leave the clumps of dislodged fur lying about in open view: "Many scripts for Interview with the Vampire have crossed my desk over the years. In Hollywood restaurants, on Hollywood patios, at lunch tables at Le Dome and dinner tables at Morton's [comment: it would appear, if we take her literally, that she brings her desk along with her whenever she goes out to Hollywood restaurants, Hollywood patios, etc.]. I have talked and dreamed aloud about this film so many times I don't want to remember it all. And I have shed more tears over the process than I care to admit."

Another clump: "The recent development of the film has been an exquisitely painful process for me. Perhaps that's as it should be, given the nature of the book. But undoubtedly the process was painful or uncomfortable for others as well. I wish all of this could have been avoided. I wish that no one had been hurt, or insulted, or slighted or confused. But film making is an art, collaborative or not, and art can be vampiric; it can take all the tears and blood you have to give." Or, to paraphrase by way of a comparably germane metaphor: if you can't stand the heat, stay out of hell.

The intimacy, in spots, closes in still further ("I am making this personal statement now for my readers, and for myself"), and the autobiographical tense tightens to the incremental instant that your eye traverses the line of type ("If you have no interest in this, don't read it. It's not a news story. I paid for the space. I don't want to be misquoted; I don't want my statement cut to pieces. So I bought the page, and please feel free to turn it whenever you wish"). That would seem pointedly to invite me out of the conversation. That, along with this:

"And I thank you, my readers — who wrote letters to me, the press, the studio, and the producers, who called to express your opinions, who came out in droves to my book signings to speak your hearts about this film, and about its casting and content.

"Guys [comment: the common touch], you were great. You gave me to know that the book I'd written meant something to you. You gave me to know that Lestat, Louis and Claudia had a life in your minds, as well as in mine.

"I wish every author could know the happiness you gave to me. I love you for it. And I hope and pray that I never let you down."

Plainly I'm just not one of the "guys." I guess that would make me something of an eavesdropper. And I hope (and pray) that that excludes me from the rules of etiquette and sportsmanship as thoroughly as it excludes me from the conversation. Or guy-talk. I have so far proceeded under the assumption — not wanting at this particular time to pester Alan Dershowitz or F. Lee Bailey with legal inquiries — that I am exempted as a critic from the stipulation in the all-caps. codicil, much as a book reviewer would be sanctioned to reprint revelatory excerpts without having to fill in the three hundred pages of "context." But just to be on the safe side, if not to be fully worthy of all the love (among other things) the author is spreading around, I want to double back and pick up any remnants left out of the passages quoted above. In the interests of completeness, then, albeit not of proper continuity:

"This was for me ... What I have to say is this ... and ... including its ... its ... and its ... But most personally ... Interview with the Vampire ... But ... Fearlessly it presented the love shared by the fictional characters, Lestat, Louis, Claudia and Armand; fearlessly it told the story of the making of the child Vampire Claudia; fearlessly it allowed my tormented vampire outsiders to transcend gender, and to speak from their souls about matters of life and death, love, loneliness, guilt and pain ... and ... In addition ... and its success as ... I thank everyone connected with this film — regardless of their motives or feelings — for attempting and accomplishing ... I think you will find it ... as I did. I think you will find it such ... that ... If I'm wrong, if you don't like the picture — let me know. Laugh in my face. Write me letters. Call me. Come to the bookstores when I'm there and scream. I can take it. I've never been a cautious person. I have to stick my neck out now and say ... I can't wait for Siskel and Ebert; I have to go on record immediately in my excessive and impulsive fashion [comment: other adjectives swim to mind] ... All my love to you, Anne Rice. P.S. Be prepared to give the studio, the producers, the stars and everybody else just as much advice and help with the sequel [no comment] as you did with this first film! By this time, perhaps they will be used to us."

There. ■

MOVIE LISTINGS

All reviews are by Duncan Shepherd. Priorities are indicated by one to five stars and antipathies by the black spot. Unrated movies are for now unreviewed.

The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert — Priscilla's just a bus; Mitzi, Felicia, and Bernadette are her passengers, two female impersonators and a transsexual (the gaunt Hugo Weaving, the muscle-bound Guy Pearce, and the grande damish Terence Stamp), who take their cabaret act out of the cosmopolitan security of Sydney and into the backward Outback. There's a lot of flaunting and posturing (Froot Loops for breakfast, a request at a video store for "The Texas Chainsaw Mascara"), and little concern for plausibility (mid-song changes of costume in the climactic stage show), and yet there's the occasional, throat-clearing interjection of Hard Realities ("AIDS Fuckers Go Home!" graffitied on the bus during a stopover in a jerkwater town). The taste in music is educationally arcane: when, for instance, was the last time you heard "I've Never Been to Me"? Written and directed by Stephan Elliott. 1994.

★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

Angels in the Outfield — And on the pitcher's mound, and in the batter's box, and on the base paths, aiding the California Angels on their drive to the pennant. The (lower-case) angels, excluding the maniacally mugging Christopher Lloyd, are impressive — glowing, shimmering, streaking things in the sky. But only the very young and indiscriminate will not consider themselves above the low comedy (squirted mustard, spilled soda) and the lower sentimentality. With Joseph Gordon-Levitt, Danny Glover, Brenda Fricker; directed by William Dear. 1994.

● (STUDIO 3 CINEMAS; VINEYARD TWIN)

Atlantic City — Out of this elegiac comedy on Old Age and the Changing Times, Burt Lancaster's fans ought to get the same sort of sentimental tingles that John Wayne's got from True Grit. His role here is as a small-time numbers runner (and part-time poodle walker) who disdains the swanky new casinos as "too wholesome," and who comes off as something of an Old World gentleman in comparison with the scummy young drug dealers he unwittingly falls in with. This accidental entanglement affords him the first opportunity of his long career to notch up a gangland killing, and his attack of light-headedness in the aftermath is really something to see. The sentimentality of John Guare's script is alleviated not so much by the occasional touches of absurdism, which occasionally become touches of just plain silliness, but by the solid, old-fashioned craftsmanship. And French filmmaker Louis Malle brings an always tasteful eye to an environment that entices and encourages a vulgar one. With Susan Sarandon and Kate Reid. 1981.

★★★★ (SAN DIEGO PUBLIC LIBRARY, 10/24, 6 P.M.)

Blue Sky — Jessica Lange as the mood-swinging, not to forget hip-swinging, wife of a steadfast army guy (Tommy Lee Jones), ca. 1960. She fashions herself after BB and MM (or momentarily, when transferred from a base in Hawaii to one in Alabama, Bette Davis: "What a dump!"). She teases, she flaunts, she raves, she quivers, she oozes, she erupts — and she dwarfs the anti-nuke message. It's a big thick juicy steak of a part, and Lange dives into it with serrated knife and fork and forty chews per bite. Director Tony Richardson's final film, and he still had an eye for the dreary. With Powers Boothe, Carrie Snodgress, Amy Locane, and Chris O'Donnell. 1994.
★ (LA PALOMA, FROM 10/21)

Caro Diario — Diary film, divided into three "chapters." In the first, the director, writer, and star Nanni Moretti putters around on his Vespa (lengthy tracking shots from behind him), looking at buildings (lateral tracking shots), dropping in on movies, seeking out the murder site of Pasolini. In the next, he visits a series of Mediterranean islands, and in the last, a series of dermatologists, complaining to them of a mysterious itch. The filmmaker infuses all this with relaxed tempos, muted climaxes, unaggressive charms. It doesn't add up to much, but it affords him a solid moral and artistic foundation from which, in one of his funnier bits, he can carp at Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer and its highbrow apologists. 1993.
★★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

Clear and Present Danger — Slow-to-start and long-to-end espionage thriller (or the further adventures of Dr. Jack Ryan, Tom Clancy's CIA guy from Patriot Games), detailing a covert and illicit military action against the Colombian drug cartels. There's a well-staged ambush at around the hour mark (sole survivor: Harrison Ford), and an exciting rescue near the finish, and strong supporting parts for Willem Dafoe, James Earl Jones, Harris Yulin, Donald Moffat (President of the United States), and Ann Magnuson, but not for Anne Archer: very much farther in the wings as the Woman Who Waits. There's also a large dose of bottled cynicism out of the medicine cabinet of John le Carré, and its frequent buffer, cherry-flavored self-righteousness. Directed by Phillip Noyce. 1994.
★ (GROVE 9; HAZARD CENTER 7; NICKELODEON 10; SPORTS ARENA 6)

The Client — Formulaic John Grisham legal thriller (a little bit of lawyering, a lot of dashing about), in which the author adopts an underdog or two, and throws them a steady diet of bones, biscuits, hamburger, filet mignon, as they dodge and run circles round the powerful and the baleful. The latter, in this case, are the New Orleans Mafia and assorted overzealous prosecutors; the underdogs are an eleven-year-old boy (or Little Man, as you prefer) who has witnessed a suicide, and the "unfit mother" whom he hires for one dollar as his attorney. Vivid portrayals by newcomer Brad Renfro, Susan Sarandon, Mary-Louise Parker, Tommy Lee Jones (too vivid: out-Southerning everybody), Ossie Davis, Will Patton, and Anthony Edwards (if vivid can describe a meek and mild legal secretary); directed by Joel Schumacher. 1994.
★ (CARMEL MOUNTAIN)

Corrina, Corrina — A little girl, traumatized by her mother's death, comes out of her shell to nudge her father and their black housekeeper (jazz lovers both) into romance. The writer-director, Jessie Nelson, does a lot of nudging also, making double sure we know precisely how we're supposed to feel about everything and everybody (the parade of prospective housekeepers in the interview montage, the middle-class divorcee on the make, etc.). The action is set in the 1950s, and the production values drive the point home with more than an occasional nudge; more like a constant barrage. Whoopi Goldberg, Ray Liotta, Tina Majorino, Wendy Crewson, Joan Cusack. 1994.
★ (CENTURY TWIN, FROM 10/21)

Eat Drink Man Woman — Ang Lee's tantalizing, toothsome, pungent, succulent, nutritious, well-balanced, filling (etc.) comedy about a Taiwanese widower and master chef and his three grown daughters still living at home. This is the sort of material that Yasujiro Ozu used to take to the depths of profundity, while always maintaining a bravely cheerful surface. Notwithstanding the last nostalgic visit to the soon-to-be-vacated family home, Lee never reaches so deep, and yet for all its shallowness, all its conventional closed-endedness and over-compression, his movie is filled to capacity with the wonderment of human relations and emotions. It matches the complication of his prior effort, The Wedding Banquet, though without the farcical contrivance, and it extends and expands what was best about that one: the scrupulous monitoring and honoring of a wide range of personalities and attitudes. The food preparation and presentation, neither more nor less attractively photographed than everything else in the movie, are almost a detachable aesthetic issue, begging treatment in some MFA thesis titled "Optical Epicurism in the Modern Cinema," clustered together with the food stuff of the aforementioned Wedding Banquet, and Babette's Feast, Like Water for Chocolate, The Age of Innocence, The Scent of Green Papaya, Tampopo, The Cook, the Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover, and (possible progenitor) Jeanne Dielman, 23 Quai du Commerce, 1080 Bruxelles. Winston Chao, Sylvia Chang, Sihung Lung, Ah-Leh Gua. 1994.
★★★ (COVE)

Ed Wood — Conventional Hollywood "biopic" on an unconventional subject of study: the ignored, ridiculed, and campily canonized director of Plan 9 from Outer Space. The disrepute, or nonrepute, of the central figure liberates the film to engage in the kind of myth-making in which the "biopic" once engaged with impunity, but which has been much curbed since the coining of the term "docudrama." If ever Tim Burton (in the possessive case) ought to have been part of a movie's title, this surely would have been the one, not Tim Burton's The Nightmare before Christmas. Tim Burton's Ed Wood (sans italics) emerges as the very embodiment of psychological "projection." Burton himself is not bothered, is on the contrary positively delighted, by Wood's transvestitism, by his valueless production values, by his undetectable aesthetic standards, by his blind eye to detail. And so it comes to pass that Wood, too, is unbothered and delighted by all this; is not, to be strictly candid, unsusceptible to the blue moods of the artistic temperament, but is completely immune to self-torture and second-guessing and regret. No doubt this man could have been portrayed in many other ways, plenty of them more readily believable, but none of them funnier or more pleasing to believe. Johnny Depp injects into the part a Young Mickey Rooney-ish ("Let's put on a show!") exuberance, and in one leap expands his acting range by a couple of time zones. And Martin Landau, all but unrecognizable as Bela Lugosi (unrecognizable, that is, as either himself or Lugosi, looking rather more like late-period Raymond Massey), uncovers one of those elusive areas of overlap between the funny and the pathetic. There is unavoidably a sense in which these filmmakers appear to be slumming: the same sense in which the luscious black-and-white photography (by Stefan Czapsky) is a rebuke at the same time as it is a tribute to the low-grade horror and s-f films of the Fifties. But in the prevailing spirit of unbotheredness and delightedness: who cares? With Sarah Jessica Parker, Patricia Arquette, Jeffrey Jones, Bill Murray. 1994.
★★★★ (CARMEL MOUNTAIN; CINEMA 21; WIEGAND PLAZA, FROM 10/21)

Exit to Eden — Fainthearted adaptation of Anne Rice's B&D romance novel, set on a Pleasure Island of vacationing sex slaves and masters. To this, a comical cop plot has been added, so that Rosie O'Donnell (undercover LAPD) can throw in one-liners and voice-over narration or both at once: "Let's face it, a wild night for Fred is a Doris Day film festival." This is the Puritanism of tittering embarrassment. Some expansive stretches of skin, especially Dana Delany's, make the cut, even so. With Paul Mercurio, Dan Aykroyd, and ("as usual" for a film directed by Garry Marshall) Hector Elizondo. 1994.

Forrest Gump — Three decades in the life of a mental midget (I.Q., 75) who leaves giant footprints on his twisting path, in rather sharp contradiction of the feather-on-the-wind visual motif at movie's beginning and end. The traversal of so much history permits the filmmaker, Robert Zemeckis, to resume his wrong-end-of-the-telescope examination of past absurdities and archaisms, in the vein of his Back to the Future, Who Framed Roger Rabbit, I Wanna Hold Your Hand. But his is essentially a flippant, a cold-blooded sensibility, and his efforts here to deepen it and warm it ought by rights to arouse less in the way of support than in the way of suspicion. His sentimentality over the holy-fool type (same family tree as in Rain Man, Regarding Henry, Awakenings), his "concern" about the cycle of abused-child-battered-woman (Robin Wright, not so much a character as a makeup-and-hairstyles model), his "awareness" of the great events of recent times — all these give off a scented air of insincerity. What's more (what's worse), the changes in tone begin to approximate the personality profile of the certified psychopath. A firefight in Vietnam will be as harrowing as anything in Platoon, but this will follow directly on a stretch of service comedy in the mode of, albeit better written and acted than, Gomer Pyle. The tear-jerking bits are mere technical exercises — strenuous, but more productive of sweat than of tears. And the centerpiece performance of Tom Hanks (with a Southern drawl compounded by Jerry Lewis glissandi) and the sporadic special effects (the Birth of a Nation pastiche to illustrate the Ku Klux Klan activities of the hero's forebear and namesake, the computer-doctored newsreel footage that puts the present-day actor in the company of JFK, LBJ, Nixon), no matter how diverting on their own, occupy a separate plane from the unspooling storyline. Hanks in particular, although able to fatten up his thespian portfolio, always seems more an actor than a character; and the events of the narrative take a very long time to catch up to his evident age. By then, the movie has grown disfiguringly overlong and overlarge. With Gary Sinese, Sally Field. 1994.

Fresh — In basic outline a conventional thriller about drug dealings in Brooklyn, but renovated almost to a condition of like-new. Screenwriter Boaz Yakin (of Clint Eastwood's The Rookie), here making his directorial debut, has bright ideas about virtually everything, some of them studied or showoffy, but none of them sloppy or secondhand. Sometimes the abstractness and audacity of them approach the visionary: the filling-in, right at the start of the movie, of a contemporary cityscape piece by piece, suggesting a sort of time-lapse passage from small-town virginity to urban defloration; or the several superimposed mental images of railroad tracks representing the possibility of flight, escape (realistically, the tracks are where the hero stashes his drug-delivery wages in a rusty tin can). Those two examples are especially apposite in a movie shot through with a sense of pain and nostalgia over the loss of innocence, and shot through with a sense of crisis and urgency over the battle to hang onto it. The precocious twelve-year-old hero (Sean Nelson) already when we meet him possesses a deadened impassive gaze, even when just shooting the breeze with boys his own age or trying his wings at amatory flirtation. Is it too late for him? ("Anything lost," according to the tenets of paternal wisdom, "can be found again. Except time.") The plot eventually thickens, but the character inversely thins. As the architect of his own fate, a schemer, a manipulator, a master strategist, he ceases to be believable as a mere child. And the lessons learned from his chess-master father (Samuel L. Jackson, essentially playing the Larry Fishburne role from Searching for Bobby Fischer) cannot fully account for his cunningness and sangfroid. Cannot account remotely. He becomes a sort of Spirit of Childhood, a guardian angel, an avenging angel, all rolled into one. Even then, the tear he sheds at the fadeout is nearly as humanizing, nearly as redeeming, nearly as touching, as that of Kim Novak at the end of Bell, Book, and Candle. 1994.
★★★ (CENTURY TWIN, FROM 10/21)

I Like It Like That — Another slice of the ethnic pie, this time the Bronx Puerto Rican section: a nuclear family of four, whose Poppy has just gone to jail for looting during a blackout, and whose Mommy wangles herself a job in the Latino music business. Newcomer Lauren Vélez, though temperate by comparison, could give Rosie Perez a run for her money, and all the characters tend to yammer at one another at the volume of a baseball rhubarb. (The level of violence stops at a few lashes of the belt and a single punch in the mouth.) It's not a movie to go to if you have anything of a headache. In fact it's not a movie to go to unless you want something of one. With Jon Seda, Jesse Borrego, Rita Moreno, and Griffin Dunne; directed by Darnell Martin. 1994.

● (CARMEL MOUNTAIN, FROM 10/21; HILLCREST CINEMAS; SWEETWATER 6; UA ESCONDIDO 8, FROM 10/21)

It Could Happen to You — A New York beat cop, having just spent his last dollar on his weekly Lotto ticket, and not wanting to stiff a waitress on her fifteen percent of two coffees, disdains the standard line ("Catch you later") and, in order to underscore his earnestness, goes through some laboriously written dialogue to the effect that half of his lottery winnings are earmarked for her. When these turn out to be four million dollars, he resolves to be true to his word — "A promise is a promise" — despite the hurricane-force attempts of his wife to alter his course. It is somehow not surprising that a self-professed fairy tale about finding the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow (waitress to cop: "What you did was like a fairy tale") would be susceptible to bouts of indolence. Our two winners are set up to be models of virtue (a truer title: It Couldn't Happen to Nicer Guys), but the movie can't come up with much for them to do, aside from a few showy gestures such as giving away subway tokens to rush-hour commuters or reserving one table for paupers at the waitress's coffee shop — that is, the coffee shop that she now owns as well as in which she still waits tables. More damagingly, this romantic comedy relieves its hero and heroine, or its fairy-tale prince and princess, from any and all of the comedic chores. The notion that goodness, modesty, honesty, generosity, etc., could be fodder for comedy, rather than just for gold-medal commendation, never crosses the filmmakers' minds. One wonders what Preston Sturges might have made of the premise. (Something in the nature of Christmas in July, one would suppose.) One wonders, even, what the present director, Andrew Bergman, of The Freshman and Honeymoon in Vegas, might have made of it if he had written the screenplay himself instead of accepted the pile of mush handed in from Jane Anderson. With Nicolas Cage, Bridget Fonda, Rosie Perez. 1994.

Jason's Lyric — No, not his song or his poem, but his new girlfriend, whose name (heaven help her) is Lyric, a sassy Louisiana Soul Food waitress, swept up in a sunset, carnival, and sex-on-a-flowerbed courtship. But Jason's got a no-good brother, too, darkening the horizon with drugs and drink. A heart-on-sleeve and huge-bleeding-hole-in-chest sort of thing. With Allen Payne, Jada Pinkett, Bokeem Woodbine, Forest Whitaker; directed by Doug McHenry. 1994.
● (CINERAMA 6; NICKELODEON 10; SWEETWATER 6; TOWN AND COUNTRY)

Little Giants — Brother Nerd coaches his Scrubs (including his tomboy daughter nicknamed — brace yourself — Icebox) against Brother All-Star and his Bullies in a Pee-Wee Football playoff. The winner is never in doubt: first one to fall behind by twenty-one points. With Rick Moranis, Ed O'Neill, and Shawna Waldron; directed by Duwayne Dunham. 1994.

The Little Rascals — All the old gang — beanie, derby, cowlick, bowtie, overalls, and all — living in a time warp in contemporary Los Angeles. Director Penelope Spheeris regularly speeds up the physical action, but there's nothing she can do about the draggy voices, or their piercing pitch. (The spectator, of course, can exit screaming.) If there were any great demand for this kind of thing, or any desire to pay tribute to the real thing, why not a compilation of a half-dozen or so of the original shorts? 1994.

Love Affair — The second remake of Leo McCarey's 1939 shipboard romance, with Warren Beatty and Annette Bening, directed by Glenn Gordon Caron.

The Mask — Comic-book fantasy about a nebbishy bank clerk who fishes a 4th- or 5th-century Scandinavian mask out of the bay, and is transformed by it into the pea-headed embodiment — pea-like in color, that is, not size, and canned not frozen — of his wildest dreams. There's no stinting on the special effects: something like Claymation renderings of Roger Rabbit & Co., with full Toontown elasticity and resiliency. The form adopted by the hero is "explained" by his fondness for old cartoons, but no explanation is forthcoming for why, when he can conjure up clothes, guns, whatever his imagination can picture, he must resort to bank robbery when he desires cash. A far larger area of neglect is the reaction to him, or lack of same, from the mere mortals around him: if a man, even an odd-looking one with a green head and a yellow zoot suit, were seen at a nightclub to pop his eyeballs a good foot out of their sockets, to drop his jaw all the way to the table top, and to roll out his tongue like a red carpet, the spectacle would be at least as astonishing, among other things, as, say, the arrival of the aliens from space at the end of Close Encounters or the appearance of living dinosaurs in Jurassic Park. And for all the hard work, and sometimes even humorous work, of the effects themselves, they are never less than ugly. Very often more: tasteless, garish, overstated, out of control. Jim Carrey, who from inside his disguise gets to broadcast vocal impressions of Clint Eastwood, Clark Gable, James Cagney, Edward G. Robinson, et al., seems to be an agile and an ingratiating funnyman, but he is herein demoted to second banana by the special effects. Directed by Charles Russell. 1994.
★ (CLAIREMONT; GROVE 9; NICKELODEON 10)

Milk Money — Streetwalker's fairy tale, down a somewhat different street from that of Pretty Woman, a quiet suburban one, into a ready-made family composed of an ecologically conscious widower and his prepubescent son. Grace Kelly is the working girl's avowed ideal ("She married a prince, and never grew old"), but seeing as how she is played by Melanie (wee high voice) Griffith, her actual model would seem to be much more Marilyn Monroe. Ed (wee high hair) Harris is as manly as ever, but more useless than usual. The unctuous complications and resolutions, to say nothing of the prevailing tone of tee-hee, are strictly for kids. Or the birds. With Michael Patrick Carter and Malcolm McDowell; directed by Richard Benjamin. 1994.
● (NICKELODEON 10; VILLAGE, FROM 10/21)

Natural Born Killers — Oliver Stone's ballad of the alliterative Mickey and Mallory (Woody Harrelson, Juliette Lewis), who crisscross the American Southwest on a Charles Starkweather-ish murder spree, but multiplied many times for purposes of "satire." Also part of the picture, also part of the "satire," is a tabloid TV show called American Maniacs, hosted by an Aussie-accented Steve Dunleavy soundalike (Robert Downey, Jr.), who helps to promote the pair into cult figures of indeterminate magnitude. The chief feature of the movie is nothing it has to say about American society and the proclivity therein for violence, but is rather the stylistic smoke screen that clouds the nothing it has to say. (Partly clouds, let's clarify. Patchily clouds. Unconcealingly clouds.) Stone throws in everything and the kitchen sink: willy-nilly alternations between color and black-and-white (grainy overexposed black-and-white as well as romantically backlit black-and-white); collage-like combinations of the two; color tints; fuzzy video (for family-life flashbacks presented in a television-sitcom format, complete with laugh track); animation; archival footage; nonsequential editing; tilted cameras (to the left, to the right, ticktock, ticktock); and much, much more. And over and over. Mix and match. Or mix and mismatch. No turn left un-Stoned. The effect of this cinematic cocktail shaker is like an extended music video or blue-jeans ad, and is even more like torture. Just the movie, in fact, to show to Malcolm McDowell with his eyelids pinned open during the deprogramming episode of A Clockwork Orange. With Tom Sizemore, Tommy Lee Jones. 1994.
● (GROVE 9)

North — Nonstop groaner: a Children's Liberation fantasy about a gifted but neglected lad who divorces his natural parents and entertains offers from prospective adoptive ones all over the globe. (Caricatures of differing degrees of broadness and insultingness.) Bruce Willis, in addition to narrating the action, pops up in various costumes in various locales as the hero's guardian angel. It doesn't help (nor does it surprise) that the whole thing turns out to be a dream. With Elijah Wood, Jason Alexander, Julia Louis-Dreyfus, Jon Lovitz; directed by Rob Reiner. 1994.
● (VALLEY DRIVE IN, FROM 10/21)

Only You — Coyly girlish romance (written by Diane Drake), dealing with soul mates, destiny, happiness ever after, and other pajama-party topics: it catches a wave in the wake of Sleepless in Seattle, and Norman Jewison throws in several shots of the night sky to remind you that he once directed Moonstruck. The frigid chemistry between a couple of narcissistic clothes horses (Marisa Tomei, Robert Downey, Jr.) doesn't lend credibility. Bonnie Hunt, however, makes a swell bosom buddy. 1994.

Pulp Fiction — A title as self-conscious although not as accurate as Samuel Beckett's Film. Yes, Quentin Tarantino's cast of characters accommodates some staple figures of the form: the small-time heisters, the mob torpedoes, Mr. Big's sex-bomb mate, the boxer bribed to throw a fight. But the writer-director borrows his narrative devices from a more "experimental" stripe of novelist: the nonlinear storyline (the unattuned spectator might suspect a reel out of order when a dead character resurfaces near movie's end, and an earlier plot thread is picked up right where it was left); no single focal character or situation, but instead an idle shuffle of them; the leaping-over of a climactic bit of action. (Maybe Meta-Pulp Fiction would be more accurate, without being a lot more self-conscious.) And the first and foremost thing to be said about his dialogue would be that it is "bookish": Elmore Leonard-ish tangents of doubtful relevance. Tarantino is, so to speak, a man who loves to hear himself write. One of the inherent perils of this verbal exhibitionism, though, is the tendency to fall into the sentimentality of the "colorful" character (the mystical hitman, the human pincushion with eighteen ring-holes from ear to nose to tongue to clitoris), such that Tarantino seems at times to be cultivating a new idiom, a new milieu, in which to transplant the term "Runyon-esque": more colorful, more florid, more lurid. And hence more sentimental, inverted and twisted though the sentiment may be. There are plenty of things to snicker and cackle at (nothing heartier) along the way, especially in the long interlude subtitled "Vincent Vega and Marcellus Wallace's Wife." There are plenty of other things merely to wince and grimace at. John Travolta, Samuel L. Jackson, Uma Thurman, Bruce Willis. 1994.

Quiz Show — Robert Redford's tardy exposé of the TV game-show scandals of the late Fifties has the common drawbacks of the docudrama. The drama, as such, is already well documented (foreknown, foregone), and, to the extent that it remains tied to the facts of the case, is perforce not terribly dramatic (formful, thrustful). The maker of such a thing is typically less a story-spinner than a lecture-giver and a lesson-drawer. Redford is no exception. Once more combing the library for a project on which he could wear his directorial hat (not his thespian one), but roaming for the first time into the nonfiction section and down from the literary empyrean, he has fingered a volume entitled Remembering America: A Voice from the Sixties (or more precisely, one chapter therein) by Richard N. Goodwin, the one-time Kennedy speech writer and another-time investigator for the Congressional Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight, in which capacity he nosed into the rigged prime-time game show, Twenty-One. Where the movie advances furthest into entertainment if not full-fledged drama is in the characterization of Herbie Stempel of Queens ("Now there's a face for radio!"), the long-running champion of Twenty-One who is unseated by the Ivy Leaguer Charles Van Doren, and who then has to watch with escalating envy as this silver-spoon egghead (son of Mark, nephew of Carl) enjoys an even longer run, with commensurate fortune and fame. John Turturro, an Italian-American who has made something of a specialty of loony Jews (Barton Fink, Miller's Crossing, Mo' Better Blues, Brain Donors), sketches an always lively caricature of intellectual grandiosity, wounded ego (it really sticks in his craw that he is asked to take his dive on the duck-soup question of the Academy Award winner for 1955: Marty of all movies!), and ethnic paranoia. The casting of Ralph Fiennes as Van Doren, fresh from his command post at the Nazi labor camp of Schindler's List, perhaps gives undue justification to the paranoia. Or if not undue, then unearned. With Rob Morrow, Paul Scofield. 1994.

Radioland Murders — Throwback screwball comedy, set in the screwball heyday (1939), with corpses piling up backstage (subgenre of Murder at the Vanities and Lady of Burlesque) during the premiere of a new radio network, WBN. Fast-talking, fast-cutting, and fast-tiring. Any show of affection for an antiquated art form is trampled in the rush. With Mary Stuart Masterson, Brian Benben, Ned Beatty, Christopher Lloyd; directed by Mel Smith. 1994.

Renaissance Man — An unemployed Detroit ad man accepts a short-term position teaching English — ultimately and primarily Hamlet — at Fort McClane to an octet of boot-camp laggards (a.k.a., "squeakers," a.k.a., "double D's," i.e., "dumb as dogshit"). The classroom sessions, especially the early, feeling-out ones, are enjoyable in their patly written way. (The level of stupidity in the students is never convincing, much less daunting: just a sitcom assortment of two-dimensional "types.") But wave after wave of triumph and uplift near the end is too much to bear; is tantamount to gloating. (Even the flinty drill sergeant gets won over by a foot soldier's rain-drenched rendition of the Crispin's Day speech from Henry V.) The motto of the army base is "Victory Starts Here"; the motto of the movie is "Victory Never Stops." With Danny DeVito, James Remar, Gregory Hines; written by Jim Burnstein; directed by Penny Marshall. 1994.

★ (STUDIO 3 CINEMAS)

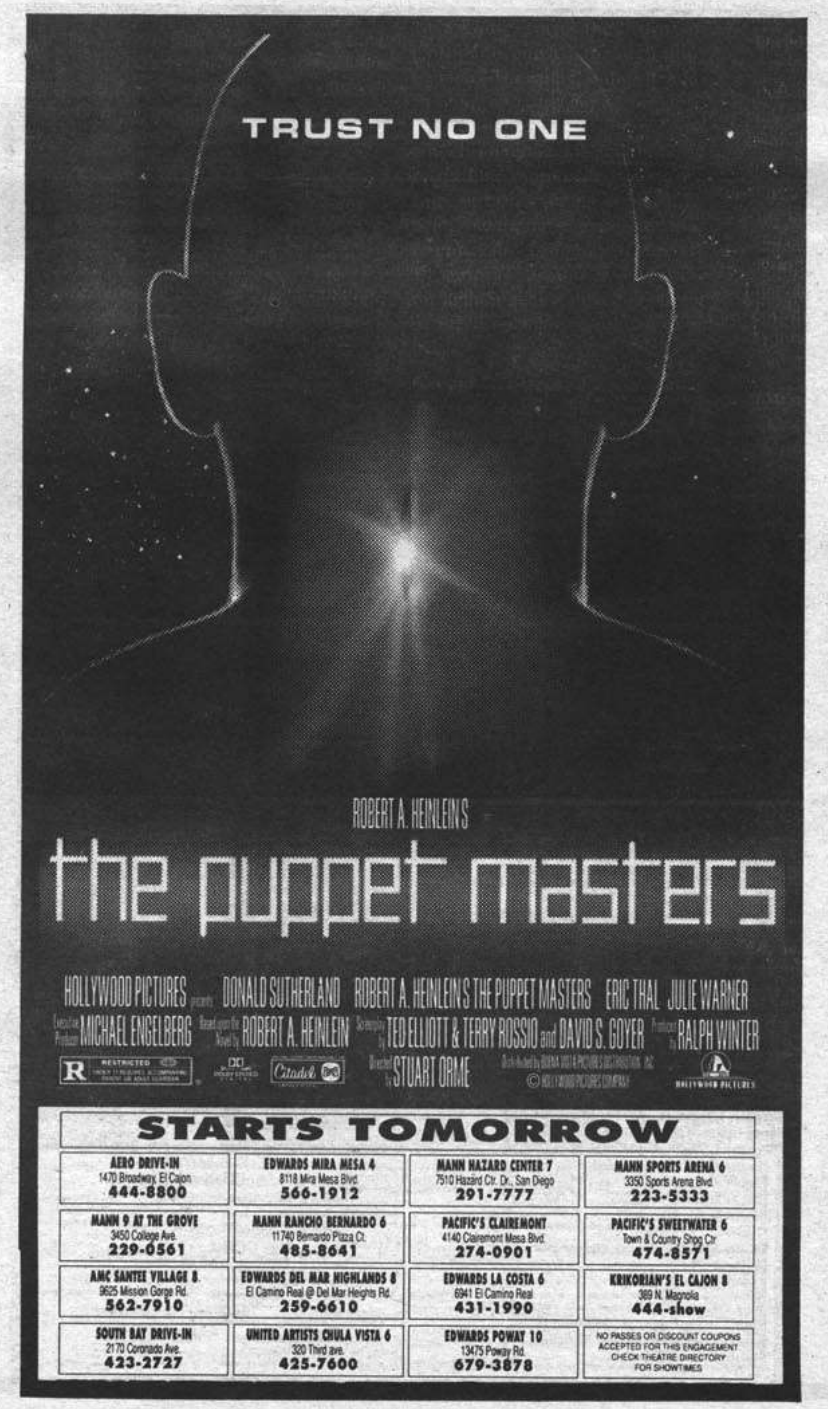

Reservoir Dogs — The directorial (also auctorial) debut of Quentin Tarantino, a past actor with a small part here. (Initial impression of him: a bit of a showoff.) In its essentials, it's a conventional heist movie, and there is not a lot more to it than essentials: an ad hoc gang of jewel thieves uniformed in dark suits, ties, and glasses (a larger family of Blues Brothers sans hats), and differentiated chiefly by the code names of Mr. White, Mr. Blonde, Mr. Blue, Mr. Brown, Mr. Orange, and Mr. Pink (the last of whom objects to his handle: "Why can't I be Mr. Purple?"), and ticketed to a common destiny of crime not paying. What some viewers will be prone to see as vacuous will be seen by others as minimalist, pure, elemental. But where other minimalists, purists, and elementalists — Joel Coen in Miller's Crossing, for example, or the Americophile Jean-Pierre Melville in several things — will prove their devotion through their generosity with plot, not to mention with between-the-lines sentiment and comment, Tarantino is generous only with his actors, the most facile, most superficial means of emulation. (If he's a showoff, at least he doesn't mind sharing the spotlight.) In place of plot complication, Tarantino has substituted a nonlinear narrative technique that disguises (for a time) the stuntedness of the storyline, shuttling back and forth between the planning stages of the heist and its extremely bloody aftermath, and never quite closing in on the heist itself. There are other curious omissions right under our noses, thanks to a camera that has a mind of its own and is apt to be pondering issues of "the frame-edge" and "off-screen space" while pertinent events go unobserved. By far the bulk of the action takes place at the rendezvous, where the decimated troops try to puzzle out what went wrong. (It's not much of a puzzle.) And as the movie takes shape, and its proportions sort themselves out, it almost comes to resemble a stage piece that has been "opened up" and padded out with largely superfluous "flashbacks. " Harvey Keitel, Tim Roth, Steve Buscemi, Michael Madsen, Chris Penn, Lawrence Tierney. 1992.

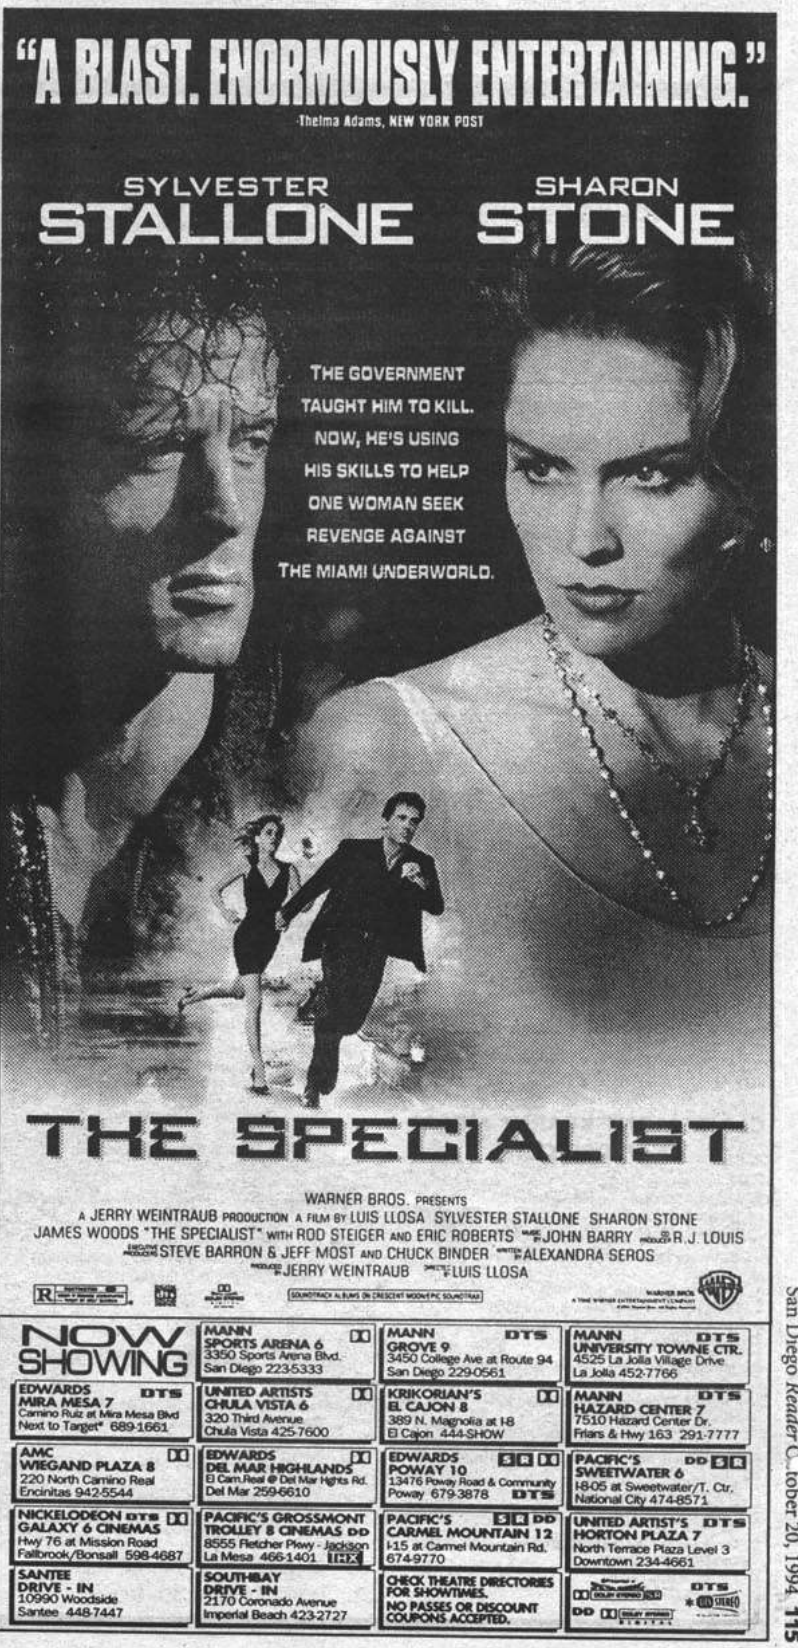

★★ (KEN, 10/21 MIDNIGHT)

The River Wild — Something in the fashion of A River Runs through It, only with pace and plot. The essential situation is simple enough: a team of armed robbers, making their getaway down a turbulent Montana river, co-opts a vacationing family going the same direction. It also is complicated enough: the expert rafter among the robbers, wounded in the holdup, will soon die. The mother in the family, a native of these parts, is herself an expert rafter. Her son, celebrating a birthday, will receive en route such handy gifts as a waterproof camera and a Swiss army knife. The mother's father's deafness will permit all the family members to communicate by sign language. Etc., etc. Solidly constructed, masterly crafted thriller from Curtis Hanson (Bedroom Window, Bad Influence, The Hand That Rocks the Cradle). Meryl Streep, who perhaps puts more into her role than required or wanted (one laughing jag particularly), doesn't miss the chance to show off new and unsuspected facets of herself: a gracefully maturing body and an impressive set of rower's shoulders and biceps. With Kevin Bacon, David Strathairn, Joseph Mazzello. 1994.

The Shawshank Redemption — One of the worst titles to the left or right of the Robert Ludlum portion of the bookshelves. But then, the original title of the Stephen King novella, Rita Hayworth and Shawshank Redemption, belongs with When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder? and Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean in a special display case of the worst titles, period. The movie proper does not quite live down to its name. Overloading itself with Significance, it badly misjudges its episodic drolleries detailing the twenty-year prison career of a wrongly accused murderer (Tim Robbins, talking in a sotto voce monotone), who makes many friends on the inside and one above all (the formidable Morgan Freeman), and who single-handedly builds up the prison library, serves as financial consultant to the guards (besides money-launderer to the warden), and pulls a locked-room disappearing act that will momentarily tantalize the fans of John Dickson Carr. Writer and director Frank Darabont, however, mistakes brutality, crudity, and sentimentality for power, earthiness, and empathy, respectively. Or irrespectively. He needs desperately to pick up the pace, to shave off somewhere between a half and a whole hour, to be disabused of Sleep with Me — Love triangle in the form of an hour-and-a-half beer ad: attractive young Angelenos being cool and casual and clever and self-conscious and completely uninteresting. Occasional title cards (e.g., "Nothing happened for a few weeks") punctuate the tedium. With Eric Stoltz, Meg Tilly, and Craig Sheffer; directed and co-written (with five others, each working separately according to plan) by Rory Kelly. 1994.

The Specialist — Lazy daydream by, or for, a subscriber to Soldier of Fortune magazine: an ex-CIA demolitions mercenary (personal code: no innocent bystanders hurt) hired by a fatal lady nursing a twenty-year vendetta against the Miami mob. Brief interruption by, or for, a reader of Playboy: a literally steamy wrestling match in a hotel shower, between a pair of overcompensating weight-room mighty mites, Sylvester Stallone and Sharon Stone. Rod Steiger provides campy relief as a bald-pated Cuban crime boss: "Jew go out an' fine thees esplosives espert...." With James Woods, Eric Roberts; directed by Luis Llosa. 1994.

Terminal Velocity — Terminal volume, too. Terminal explosives. Terminal stunts. Terminal wisecracks. Terminal lots of things, in this sub-sub-neo-neo-Hitchcock thriller concerning a daredevil skydiver battling with agents of the "KG-used-to-B" to avert a renewed Cold War. Charlie Sheen, Nastassja Kinski; directed by Deran Sarafian. 1994.

Timecop — Time-travel convolutions, tangled and strangled in illogicalities. Of course, mere martial-arts fans (Jean-Claude van Damme Chapter) won't be bothered by those, and serious science-fiction fans will unprotestingly yield. With Ron Silver and Mia Sara; directed (and photographed) by Peter Hyams. 1994.

Totally F*ed Up — Gregg Araki's dramatization of the problems of contemporary teenage homosexuals.
(KEN, 10/21 THROUGH 27)

True Lies — It is fitting that James Cameron would get around (sooner than later) to doing a James Bond spoof, since the creative corner into which he had painted himself is the same as that of the Bond films: the self-imposed obligation, the necessity, the pressure of "topping" whatever has come before. (Terminator 2, The Abyss, Aliens, in reverse chronology.) Whether or not this effort is successful on its own terms, or on the Bond films' terms, is a matter of taste. But the long detour into marital and domestic matters throughout the paunchy middle of the movie — if not exactly "topping" what has come before, at least "stretching" beyond it, "expanding" it — is a total disaster, starting with the top-billed actor. Arnold Schwarzenegger, the proverbial sore thumb, is not fit for much in the dramatic repertoire (the Terminator, sure; Conan, okay; Mickey Hargitay, perfect); and, if not unfitted here by his accent, he is surely unfitted by his physique for the role of a U.S. secret agent who for fifteen years has been passing himself off as a commonplace computer sales representative with a cozy home in the suburbs. He's additionally and painfully unfit for the cutesy comedy of fretting over his wayward teenager and the apparent infidelity of his wife. Not actual infidelity: Schwarzenegger's manly ego, never mind his acting abilities, will not countenance that. Jamie Lee Curtis, Tia Carrere, Tom Arnold, Bill Paxton. 1994.
● (CENTURY TWIN, FROM 10/21; VINEYARD TWIN)

Wes Craven's New Nightmare — Self-reflexive horror movie in which the director of the original Nightmare on Elm Street grapples with the monster that he unleashed ten years earlier, and that now has a life of its own. "I thought Wes stopped doing horror movies," observes Heather Langenkamp (as herself); she at least, now a mom, has serious qualms about the genre. The movie gives you more to chew on than all previous Freddy adventures combined. There is a creepy spatial illusion at the bottom of an open grave ("only" a dream) and a hair-raising scene of an eight-year-old boy crossing a busy freeway with his mother in hot pursuit. The finale, though, is unsatisfying, overblown, tedious, and ugly-as-sin. With Robert Englund, John Saxon. 1994.

When a Man Loves a Woman — The American way, the Hollywood way, the TV-movie-of-the-week way, to do a Problem Picture: if we are going to take on alcoholism, we are going to take it on to the exclusion of all else. It has got to be front and center and solo. The chief difference between the big-screen way and the little-screen way is that the first way will include a number of pop-song montages, and the second way will instead include commercials. Co-written and co-executive-produced by comedian Al Franken, the movie is the flip side — the sincere side, that would be — of his persona as the self-esteem guru, Stuart Smalley, on Saturday Night Live. Like Smalley, Franken has total faith in the efficacy of talking a problem out. And talking and talking and talking and talking and talking. One acceptable alcoholic anecdote is added to the Everest-sized pile of them: the middle-of-the-night trip to the curbside garbage can to dispose of the incriminating bottle, the last fortifying swig from it, and the locked front door on the return trip to bed. Elsewhere, however, the vignette of the wise-sad-adorable little girl clutching her dolly and watching Mommy in the closet with the upturned bottle is dramatization on the level of a thirty-second TV spot (dial 1-800-GET-HELP). More often, the scenes unfold like re-enactments of the Representative Examples from a self-help bestseller: Women Who Drink Too Much, maybe. Meg Ryan, Andy Garcia, Lauren Tom, Ellen Burstyn; directed by Luis Mandoki. 1994.

Italian Only in Theory

The tomato sauce was more like soup than the thick sauce we know and love.

The Restaurant: La Spezia
The Location: Paseo de los Héroes #50, Zona Río, Tijuana (34-29-41)
Type of Food: Italian, Mexican-style
Price Range: entrées approximately $8.00 to $16.00 U.S.
Hours: Open daily, same menu, continuous service, noon to 2:00 a.m.; food to 1:00 a.m.
The Restaurant/Disco: ¡No Que No!
The Location: Avenida Sanchez Taboada at Avenida Antonio Caso, Zona Río, Tijuana (84-27-91)
Type of Food: Mexican, but mostly for dancing
Price Range: entrées approximately $7.00 to $14.00
Hours: Noon to 2:00 a.m.

My sister, who lives in Canada, visited me last week. Late one night, she had the dizzy idea that we should rush to Tijuana for dancing. It was one of those crazy moments that we all experience. But before we bounded out of the house, my brother-in-law reminded us that they were leaving for Vancouver early in the morning. So my sister and I executed a less-than-smooth tango in my living room, then went to bed.

The next day, however, after my relatives left, a friend and I set out for the Zona Río in Tijuana, which is bursting with new eateries and dancing palaces. In order to critique the discos, I would have to stay in Tijuana for several nights. As a compromise, at about 5:00 p.m. we stopped by ¡No Que No!, a venue that combines dancing with dining. (The name is the colloquial equivalent of the American "Not!")

The decor and food at ¡No Que No! are a poorer version of San Diego's Guadalajara Grill. We entered ¡No Que No! through an interior courtyard, where George Segal-like soft sculptures perch on a ledge. Once inside, we saw an ample wooden dance floor surrounded by tables. Technicians were tinkering with speakers and picking up the music stands that lay scattered across the floor.

Though a large staff was in attendance, the place appeared disorganized. It may have been the hour: too late for lunch, too soon for dinner. The waiter served us a complimentary appetizer on a plate with cracked and broken edges; suddenly, I regretted being there. The food served us next — potato soup overpowered by hot peppers, and a dish that combined chicken, shrimp, and beef fajitas — was not as good as its typical San Diego counterpart. These two items cost $17.00. If you go to ¡No Que No! for dancing, be aware that food prices are those of a nightclub.

We swung back from Avenida Sanchez Taboada to Paseo de los Héroes to have dinner at a dining room called La Spezia Ristorante (Italian for "the spicery"). La Spezia, one of Tijuana's few Italian restaurants, serves food Italian in theory, but not in literal achievement. What La Spezia does offer is stunning ambiance — it's one of the prettiest rooms in Tijuana.

You walk up carpeted steps and enter a room that boasts against its far wall a floor-to-ceiling brick fireplace. You will see, painted on another wall, Botticelli's own Venus; she rises from her shell, light hair streaming around her voluptuous body. An adjacent, well-stocked bar is enclosed at both ends by panels of etched glass.

The chef uses quality ingredients. The menu is happily printed in Italian, Spanish, and English; its offerings resemble those of our better Italian establishments with the expectable run of appetizers, soups, pastas, and entrées. Prices are reasonable — fresh grilled salmon with vegetables is about $11.50.

The sauces are a problem. A good bechamela sauce, prepared from milk, butter, and a bit of flour, is not available here. Nor does the tomato sauce compare favorably with the typical marinara sauce at a U.S. restaurant. Both of the entrées we sampled, grilled salmon and chicken Florentine (chicken breast on a bed of fresh spinach), were covered with white sauce that was thick with flour. Once we pushed aside the sauce, we found the chicken flavorful and tender, and the salmon meaty and grilled to perfection. Lemon and drawn butter for the fish (or lemon alone), and for the chicken, a light gravy with only enough flour to hold it together, would have done the trick.

The fettuccine La Spezia was prepared with good spinach pasta and plump shrimp, but the tomato sauce was more like soup than the thick sauce we know and love. With an experienced saucier, however, La Spezia could be one of Tijuana's top restaurants. Even at present, if you order grilled fish or seafood and beg, "no sauce," you'll enjoy your meal. Our dinner, one pasta dish, two entrées, mineral water, and one dessert (meringue filled with dried fruit) came to $35.00.

The restaurant is easy to find (take Paseo de los Héroes from the border). It offers free valet parking. After dinner, if you still want to dance, OH! Laser Disco is directly next door.

One of the first Mexican restaurants I reviewed — 20 years ago now — was the Market Cafe, on Valley Street in Solana Beach. It was a source of great pleasure to me, to my family, and to friends. Clyde Hadley was recently obliged to close his Market Cafe. We wish Clyde the best. ■

RESTAURANT LISTINGS

The Reader*'s Guide to Restaurants is compiled by Eleanor Widmer and represents a selective listing of recommended San Diego County and Tijuana dining establishments. Individual restaurants will appear once or twice a month. Price estimates are based on the latest information available for a mid-range entrée.* Low: below $10; moderate: $10 to $16; expensive: more than $16. Please call restaurants in advance for operating hours, reservations, and other specific information.

NORTH COASTAL

CHEZ HENRI 1555 Camino Del Mar, Del Mar Plaza, Market Level, Del Mar, 793-0067. This traditional French restaurant is invariably crowded and for good reason. You'll find excellent salads and French onion soup, along with a whole fish baked in salt, filet mignon with or without goose liver, and various chicken preparations. Specials are highly recommended: Tuesday, cassoulet (white bean stew with duck, lamb, and sausage); Thursday, bouillabaisse fish stew with lots of clams and mussels. Both cost $29.50 for two. Or, try the four-course fixed-price meal, Sunday through Wednesday, $16.50. Open daily, lunch Monday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

CIAO LUNA 87 Encinitas Boulevard, Radisson Hotel, Encinitas, 944-1338. The top price at this Italian-American restaurant is $9.95. Entrées include rack of lamb, salmon, top sirloin, sea bass, plus potato and vegetables. Or try the pastas. Same menu lunch and dinner. At lunch, salad included; salad à la carte for dinner. Dining room 1970s, but view and good service. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday, dinner nightly.

DEL MAR PIZZA 211 15th Street, Del Mar, 481-8088. If you've heard about, dreamed about, or were merely curious about New York pizza, the best practitioner is now in Del Mar complete with New York manners. The hot sandwiches are good, but the pizza is in a league by itself. The secret lies in the crust. Lasagne and stuffed eggplant also available as well as cannoli for dessert. Open daily, weekdays to 9:00 p.m., Friday and Saturday to approximately 10:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

EPAZOTE'S SOUTHWEST RESTAURANT 1555 Camino Del Mar, Del Mar Plaza, Del Mar, 259-9966. Epazote's is the sister restaurant of Cilantro's, so if you've enjoyed the latter, you'll know what to expect here: high intensity, noise, a young professional crowd, a terrace with a view. You can make a meal from the Southwestern appetizers, most of them $6.00 or under. Or try spit-roasted items. Sunday brunch à la carte. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

FREDERICK'S BISTRO RESTAURANT 128 South Acacia, Solana Beach, 755-2432. Frederick's is open for dinner Tuesday through Sunday and offers California-style cuisine and fixed-price meals that cost $16.00 to $27.00. Menus change weekly. The restaurant is housed in an old cottage and has an outstanding wine list. Huge portions. Dinner only, Tuesday through Sunday. Upper moderate to expensive.

JAVA DEPOT 243 North Highway 101, Solana Beach, 259-0308. A variety of non-alcoholic drinks is served here and the sandwiches and salads are fine. The cakes could use improvement. Pleasant outdoor seating area as well as large interior room. Open daily, early morning until late at night. (Call for hours.) Food served until 9:00 p.m. Low.

KIM'S RESTAURANT 745 First Street, Lumberyard Shopping Center, Encinitas, 942-4816. For low cost and high quality, Kim's is the best Vietnamese restaurant in North County. From the overwhelming, extensive menu, try spring rolls, stuffed grape leaves, stuffed crêpes, whole roasted Cornish hens, lemon grass chicken, steamed fish. The food is fresh, beautifully prepared, and highly satisfying. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Continuous service. Low to low-moderate.

LE BAMBOU 2634 Del Mar Heights Road, Del Mar, 259-8138. Nouvelle Vietnamese cuisine is prepared here that's fresh, light, delicate. But the portions are small and two people should order three entrées for a satisfactory meal. Soups are outstanding and the imperial rolls, lemon grass chicken, charbroiled pork do well here. The menu has been expanded and the wine list includes 40 items. Fast service and aesthetic surroundings. The management tends to be somewhat aloof. Closed Monday. Lunch Tuesday to Friday; dinner Tuesday to Sunday. Moderate.

NEIMAN'S AT THE TWIN INNS 2978 Carlsbad Boulevard, Carlsbad, 729-4131. If you have nostalgia for the chicken dinners that used to be served at the Twin Inns, you may enjoy them every night as well as on Sunday after 2:00 p.m. when the buffet brunch is concluded. During the week, competent American cuisine is available for dinners only, nightly. The high peaked room with its turrets does much to enhance the proceedings. The Café, in the bar, also offers a lunch and dinner menu. Moderate to expensive.

PACIFICA DEL MAR 1555 Pacific Coast Highway, Del Mar Plaza, Del Mar, 792-0476. Select the fresh fish prepared in the simplest manner and you'll do fine here. The setting and view remain delightful and the service is excellent. Sunset dinners during the week are an incentive to dine early. Open daily. Lunch daily; à la carte brunch Sunday; early bird dinners nightly. Moderate to expensive.

PETER CHANG'S 1441 Encinitas Boulevard, Encinitas, 942-5159. You have to look carefully to discover the location, but the natural-style Chinese cooking (no MSG or starch in the sauces, upon request) is a cut above most. Try the all-you-can-eat lunch buffet, Monday through Friday ($4.50), but be sure you arrive early. For dinner, select sautéed shrimp, string beans, chicken in plum sauce, or the combination dinner for $14.99. Or ask Mr. Chang to cook for you. Open daily. Lunch buffet weekdays (regular menu on Saturday and Sunday), and dinners nightly. Low to moderate.

PISCES DELICACIES OF THE SEA La Costa Spa, 2100 Costa Del Mar Road, Carlsbad, 438-9111. This long-established and still-excellent restaurant is located at the spa itself, in a gorgeous room one flight down from the lobby. The menu includes fresh Maine lobster, lobster Thermidor, Maryland soft-shell crabs, abalone, and Dover sole. Please call for directions and remember that it is closed Sunday and Wednesday. Dinners only. Expensive.

SHIRAHAMA 1101 Camino del Mar, Del Mar, 755-2969. At the superior sushi bar, you may obtain 30 different kinds of raw fish, including "special eel in secret sauce" and yamakake (grated raw potatoes and raw tuna). But the cooked menu is equally fine. Closed Monday. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to moderate.

NORTH INLAND

BRASSERIE AND WINESELLAR 9550 Waples Street #115, 450-9576. This restaurant has been voted one of the 25 best in the United States. The chef, Douglas Organ, does a remarkable job in contemporary French cooking and the food is visually exciting and a delight to the palate. The Sunday night fixed-price dinner is an especially good value at $17.95. Jazz Tuesday through Friday.

HARBOR'S EDGE RESTAURANT
1380 HARBOR ISLAND DRIVE

Lunch, Saturday 11:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. by itself or in conjunction with the winetasting held during the same hours. Dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. No smoking at any time. Lunch moderate, dinner expensive. Must call for instructions to get there.

CAJUN CONNECTION 740 Nordahl Road (off Highway 78), San Marcos, 741-5680. If you're planning a visit to the Wild Animal Park, try this unpretentious New Orleans–style restaurant. The menu is most extensive weekends when crawfish étouffée, jambalaya, and shrimp creole are available. Don't leave without tasting the bread pudding. Closed Monday. Lunch Tuesday through Friday, dinner Tuesday through Sunday. Moderate.

CANYON GRILL 9823 Carroll Canyon Road, Scripps Ranch, 271-4052. You'll be pleasantly surprised by the attractive setting, which includes a glassed-in patio that's open to the sky and a Southwestern interior. The food is delightful. Everyone seems to love the pastas, fresh fish, and "kick-ass ribs" as well as the focaccia pizzas. Closed Sunday. Lunch and dinner, continuous service, Monday through Saturday. Low to upper moderate.

FISH HOUSE VERA CRUZ Suite 124 Old California Row Shopping Center, 1020 West San Marcos Boulevard, San Marcos, 744-8000. Located in a shopping center that houses restaurants and food stores only, this family-style restaurant serves seafood and fresh fish that changes daily. Simple but honest preparation, good value. Open daily, lunch Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

THE FORTUNE COOKIE 16425 Bernardo Center Drive, Rancho Bernardo, 451-8958. We are fortunate to have a Chinese restaurant of such quality in North County. The chef, Henry Yang, comes from a five-star restaurant and his cooking may be characterized as Chinese with French influence. Open daily, lunch 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.; dinner to 10:00 p.m. and to 11:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Low to expensive.

MILLE FLEURS 6009 Paseo Delicias, Rancho Santa Fe, 756-3085. There's no doubt that in Rancho Santa Fe, this restaurant walks away with the prizes. The à la carte menu, which changes daily, provides exquisite appetizers, soup, and entrées. When available, try breaded lotte (fish), white sea bass, dover sole, or salmon and halibut in rice paper. The wine list is stunning, and the host-owner is Bertrand, who adds a special cachet to the proceedings. Count on $65.00 per person for dinner. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Expensive.

MING COURT 12750 Carmel Country Road (Country Plaza Shopping Center), North City West (adjacent to Del Mar), 793-2933. Elegance describes the interior of this restaurant and especially if you are seated at a view table, you'll love the setting. The Cantonese/Mandarin/Szechuan cuisine offers some wonderful preparations, most especially cilantro chicken, pungent shrimp, three mushroom delight, and tangerine beef. All the items on the Ming Court specialty list are noteworthy. Service is first-rate. Open daily, lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinners nightly. Moderate to expensive.

PANEVINO GASTRONOMIA 3050 Pio Pico Drive (off Carlsbad Village Drive), Carlsbad, 720-3377. A sister restaurant to the Fifth Avenue branch downtown, this one offers three dining rooms, one of them a pizzeria downstairs. The Tuscany-style food remains as excellent as ever, especially the daily ravioli specials, the risotto, and the shrimp served with white beans and lentils, which is not to be missed. This branch is more family oriented and informal, though you'll enjoy the marble tables, the murals, and the open kitchen. Late hours allow you to enjoy the pizza nightly. Open daily, lunch Monday through Friday, dinner nightly, to 11:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Moderate.

THE QUAIL'S INN 1035 La Bonita Drive, San Marcos, 436-2445 or 744-2445. It's worth the ride to dine in this charming location on a picture-postcard man-made lake. Invariably crowded and for good reason, the Inn offers fresh American fare: fish, seafood, prime rib, steaks. Dinner entrées include an all-you-can-eat seafood salad bar. The copious champagne Sunday buffet includes the seafood bar. Dine here as early as possible for all meals, but especially for the Sunday brunch. Lunch, Monday through Saturday. Sunday brunch. Dinner nightly. Lunch, low; dinner, moderate to expensive.

LA JOLLA

AVALON 6941 La Jolla Boulevard, 456-2535. Here's a restaurant where you really get your money's worth for fresh fish, prime rib, and seafood. Almost every night there are low-cost dinners and entrées. These change frequently, so call to discover what's available the night you wish to dine. Simple surroundings but good service. Open daily for dinner. Moderate.

BERNINI'S 7550 Fay Avenue, 454-5013. This coffeehouse is immaculate and elegant. It offers a light lunch and dinner menu as well as gelato and many low-cal, nonfat items including pita sandwiches and pastries. Magazines and newspapers available. Open daily to midnight. No smoking inside; smoking at tables outdoors. Low.

CAFE JAPENGO 8960 University Center Lane, Aventine complex, 450-3355. The decor is smashing and the Pacific Rim food — from Japan, China, Hawaii, Thailand, and California — is beautiful to behold and taste. It's possible to make a meal from such stimulating appetizers as grilled teriyaki chicken skewers, sake shrimp, and ahi layered with wontons. For entrées, try roasted duck with crispy vegetables or shrimp and scallops over spicy noodles. The sushi bar is one of the best in the city. Please make note of the prices — if you get carried away you may be in for a large bill. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinners nightly. Sushi bar open to midnight Friday and Saturday nights. Expensive.

DAILY'S 8915 Towne Centre Drive, Renaissance Towne Centre, 453-1112. The restaurant is owned by a doctor who has devised a menu that's low-fat, low-calorie, low-sodium. All the dishes look and taste wonderful, and the top price is $6.95. All items available for takeout. Same menu lunch and dinner. Open daily. Low.

HOPS! BISTRO AND BREWERY 4353 La Jolla Village Drive (north of the Broadway in University Towne Centre), 587-6677. Hops! serves the best food of any brewery in San Diego. Even if you don't drink you will appreciate the room with its exposed ceiling and the tasty food. The same menu is served continuously from lunch to closing. Among the best dishes are spit-roasted chicken and penne with salmon and shrimp. All beers are brewed on the premises and include a raspberry lager, Scottish ales, and several more varieties. Open daily, 11:30 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday. Friday and Saturday, food available to 11:30 p.m., closes at midnight. Low to moderate.

PANDA COUNTRY 4150 Regents Park Row #190, University Towne Center, 552-1345. Gorgeous surroundings and stunning presentations carry the day here. The extensive menu does particularly well with its 13 appetizers and its 28 seafood and fish dishes prepared Mandarin- or Szechuan-style. Scallops and shrimp receive special treatment. Open daily, lunch, dinner. Low to expensive.

THE PANNIKIN CAFE 7467 Girard Avenue, 454-5453. The outdoor seating area is almost always crowded with tea and coffee drinkers who sun themselves, read, or chat. Light meals, including breakfast (steamed eggs, bagels, fruit plates) and sandwiches, soup, salads, are served only till 2:00 p.m. After that it's beverages and sweets. Open daily from 6:00 a.m. weekdays and 7:00 a.m. weekends. Close at 10:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 11:00 p.m. Friday through Sunday. It is a well-known hangout and always crowded. Low.

PAPALULU'S 3368 Governor Drive, University City, 453-4844. If you're searching for an eclectic menu, try Papalulu's. Dishes have Mexican influences, Southwestern flavors, Jamaican flavors, or there's plain vegetarian. The bestseller is the spinach burger on whole wheat bun, or order the Baja vegetarian lasagne prepared from masa (corn meal), fresh corn, cheese, lasagne noodles, and tomato sauce. Another interesting dish is the "papadilla," two flour tortillas stuffed with mashed potatoes and topped with two cheeses. Massive portions may be shared. This neighborhood family restaurant gives good value. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low.

SKY ROOM La Valencia Hotel, 1132 Prospect Street, 454-0771. This gourmet dining room is located on the tenth floor of the hotel. It offers a sweeping view of the coast, elegant atmosphere, and, if you're entertaining an out-of-town visitor, this room will impress your guests. At dinner the menu is à la carte and has such items as fresh fish, shrimp, lobster, filet mignon. Count on about $45.00 for dinner. Fixed-price four-course dinner which changes nightly is available for $42.50. Sky Room is closed Sunday. Dinner, Monday through Saturday. Expensive.

STAR OF INDIA 1000 Prospect Street, 459-3355. The Indian food is first-rate and the menu is extensive; however, the items are somewhat pricey. If you'd like to sample a little of everything, try the all-you-can-eat buffet lunch or the Saturday and Sunday champagne brunch. The tandoori chicken and lamb dishes are outstanding. Vegetarians will adore the rice dishes as well as vegetable specialties. Open daily, lunch and dinner; brunch Saturday and Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

TUTTO MARE 4365 Executive Drive, Pacifica Towers, La Jolla East, 597-1188. The name means everything from the sea. Most of the Italian dishes are based on fish and seafood, but chicken and meat are available. The menu offers exciting appetizers, pastas, and entrées, with recipes that come from the Italian Riviera and coastal areas. Pizzas are available for lunch and dinner. Very stylish interior, beautiful outdoor patio, and loving service. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Friday; dinner nightly, Friday and Saturday to midnight. Moderate.

ZOOT'S ROTISSERIE CHICKEN 8650 Genesee Avenue, Costa Verde Shopping Center, La Jolla, 450-9094. If you're searching for a light meal, try the excellent pita wrap sandwiches (ten different kinds), all available in half orders. The house speciality is hormone-free rotisserie chicken, and the side orders are potatoes, steamed vegetables, beans, and salad. The chicken chile is worth noting. Same menu day and night. Open Monday through Saturday 11:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Sunday noon to 8:00 p.m. Low.

CLAIREMONT & KEARNY MESA

ALADDIN 5420 Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, 573-0000. Aladdin is a coffeehouse with beverages as diverse as Turkish coffee, Italian sodas, and espresso. It offers a full line of bakery goods and a Middle Eastern gourmet market. It's also a restaurant with a menu that offers tabbouleh, baba ghanouj, pita sandwiches, kabobs, rotisserie chicken. It's a good spot for grazing, for a snack. But watch what you order. If you get carried away, you may run up a large bill. Open daily. Same menu lunch and dinner, continuous service. Low to low moderate.

FONG FONG CHINESE CAFE 3755 Murphy Canyon Road, Kearny Mesa, 541-0728. The best items at this Cantonese restaurant, operated by a delightful family, are Peking duck, chicken in lettuce cups, and egg roll. The first two must be ordered 24 hours in advance. From the menu, select potstickers, shrimp in garlic sauce, mixed vegetables. Fixed-price dinners for two cost about $9.75 each. Bland food but healthy and tasty. Hawaiian breakfast Saturday and Sunday features locomoco, hamburger topped with rice and an egg or Chinese or Portuguese sausage with eggs. Lunch and dinner daily, breakfast Saturday and Sunday. Low to low moderate.

HIDEYOSHI JAPANESE RESTAURANT Hazard Village, 9340-B Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Kearny Mesa, 569-9595. A delightful restaurant tucked away at the far end of a small shopping center. The product is fresh,

CHATEAU ORLEANS
A TOUCH OF CAJUN

A FEW FROM OUR MENU

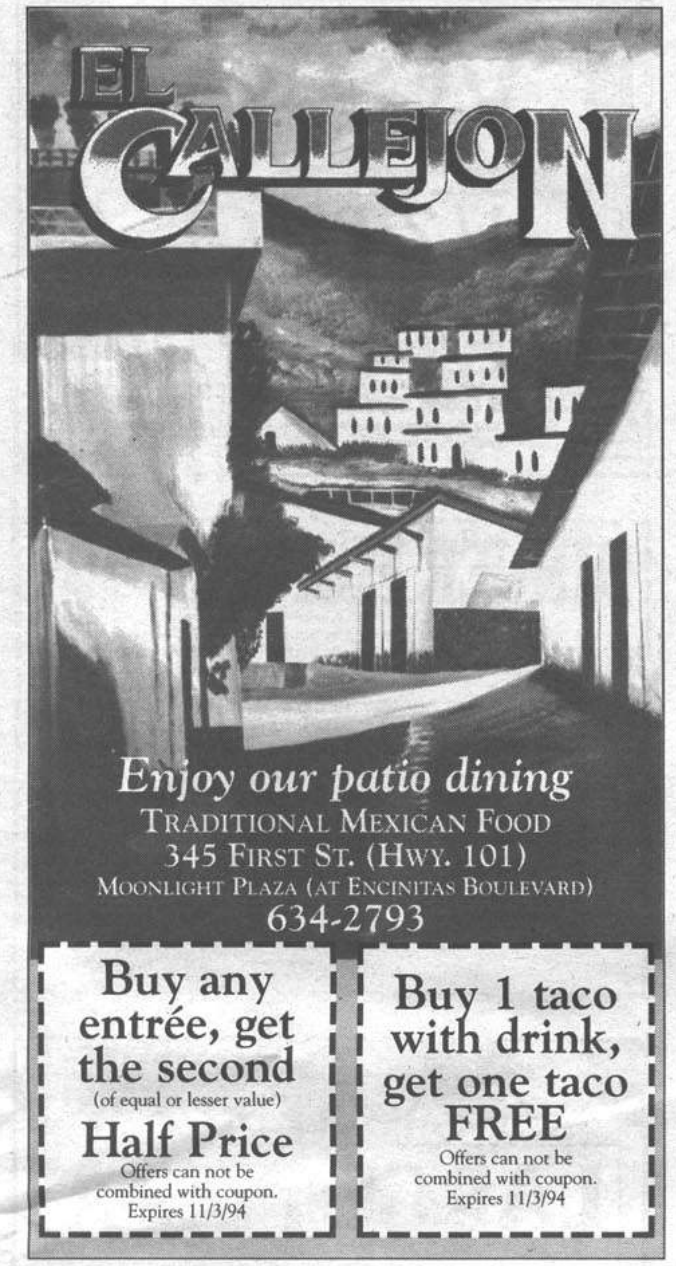

Jambalaya
Shrimp, crawfish, mussels, scallops, chicken and Cajun sausages in a Creole rice.

Cajun Cordon Bleu
A chicken breast stuffed with crayfish and cheese, served with a hot pepper mushroom sauce.

Combination Platter
Soft shell crab, scampi shrimp, alligator filet & pan-blackened fish.

Cajun Pasta
Linguini covered with shrimp, chicken and Cajun sausages with a Cajun red sauce.

Blackened Eggplant
Pan-blackened in a lemon caper sauce with tomatoes, mushrooms and veggies.

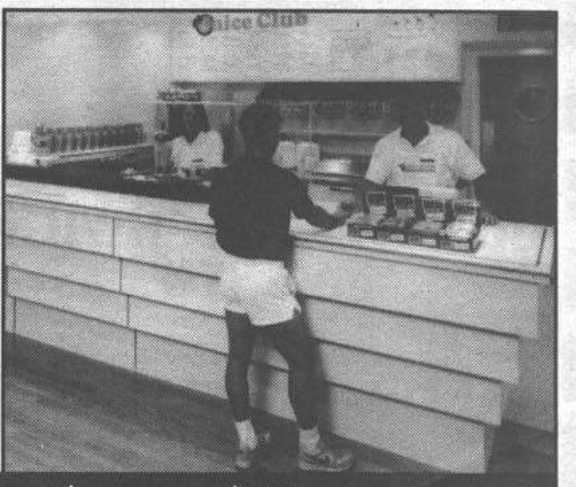

sprightly, and generous. In addition to the fine sushi bar, try the unusual appetizers. For entrées, select sukiyaki, broiled salmon or yellowtail, the chicken katzu, or the feast named "Taiko special," for two or more. Visually and gastronomically a treat. Closed Sunday. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Low to expensive.

LORNA'S ITALIAN KITCHEN 3945 Governor Drive, Vons Shopping Center, University City, 452-0661. Twenty pasta dishes are prepared here, all from scratch, as well as hot sandwiches, pizza, calzone. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Reservations not accepted. Low to moderate.

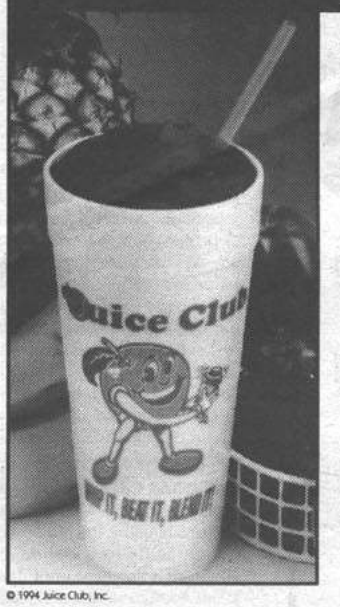

SORRENTINO'S RISTORANTE ITALIANO 4724 Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Diane Shopping Center, 483-1811. Excellent gourmet pizza and outstanding soups are some of the hallmarks of this Italian restaurant. Best bets are dishes with fresh tomato sauce such as angel hair pasta, or fettuccine with chiles. Ask for light fresh sauce if you prefer it to Sicilian style. Good shrimp dishes. The bianca pizza is a knockout. Please note the deli to the rear, called Pizza and More, which offers pasta by the bucket to go, Italian sandwiches, and pizza. Open 7 days a week. Dinners only. Moderate.

THAI HOUSE CUISINE 4225 Convoy Street, Kearny Mesa, 278-1800. Not to be confused with Thai House in Point Loma, this attractive and well-decorated Thai restaurant serves fine gourmet Thai specialties. Since the dishes are prepared individually, you may have yours as mild or spicy as you like. The menu includes appetizers, soups, salads, rice and noodle dishes, curries, house specialties and whole fish preparations, and an extensive list of vegetarian offerings. Avoid dishes where tofu, stamped out in various forms, takes the place of seafood or duck. But do try the Thai Boat filled with seafood. The appetizer prepared from ground shrimp and chicken is a delight. Top price for an individual dish is $10.95. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch. Dinner nightly and from 4:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. Sunday. Low moderate to expensive.

THE BEACHES

CHATEAU ORLEANS 926 Turquoise Street, Pacific Beach, 488-6744. This Cajun and New Orleans restaurant has a new owner and the interior has rarely looked better. It's a pleasure to eat in the renovated dining rooms. All dinners include house salad, a Cajun stuffed pastry, and popovers. The menu offers blackened prime rib, crawfish étouffée, and Cajun-style chicken, fish, and pasta. The food is very spicy, so if you would like it less hot, please be sure to say so when you order. Stuffed pork chops with a fruit glaze will not set your mouth on fire. Very large portions, excellent service. Open daily. Dinners only. Low moderate to expensive.

KONO'S 704 Garnet (end of street towards ocean), Pacific Beach, 483-1669. If you want an inexpensive but hearty breakfast, you can't get a better deal than you'll find here. The "Big Breakfast" consists of eggs, pancakes, potatoes, bacon and English muffin for $3.75. It's served from 7:00 a.m. to 3:00-4:00 p.m. Paper plates and plastic utensils are used. On weekends, arrive early to avoid a wait. A lunch menu (salads and sandwiches) is also available and hamburgers are cooked from noon to closing. Although the decor is minimal, the owners are charming. Open daily. Low.

QUE PASA ROCKIN' CANTINA 4287 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach, 273-5076. As its name implies, this Mexican restaurant in a new building is a "happening" place: loud music and a gathering spot for the youthful. The food can best be described as Californian-Mexican. Made-on-the-premises tortillas are served with honey butter as well as salsas — the tomatillo will send you to the fire extinguisher. Three types of beans are available, all excellent (no lard is used), but the best are the pintos. Many dishes are low in cost and the top price is $13.95. Good chimichangas, soft-shell tacos, swordfish fajitas. Bargain specials during happy hour. Breakfast, lunch, and dinner served weekends; Monday through Friday, dinner only. Late hours nightly. Low to moderate.

Find a Dining Oasis and a Great Value!

It's Sunset Jazz at Victor's Restaurant. This little gem is tucked away right in the heart of the city, at Mission Bay Golf Resort. Victor's patio is a casual and friendly place; outdoor dining in a cool oasis of duck ponds and roses, with soothing fountains and waterfalls. And live "Jazz on The Green" every Friday and Saturday night starting at 6:00 pm. Enjoy our barbecue featuring delicious grilled sirloin, halibut or chicken. Dinners start at a surprisingly low price of $7.95.

Enjoy Victor's anytime. Our dining room is open for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Reservations are recommended for Jazz on the Green.

It's the perfect place to get with friends and relax ... it's a surprising find.

RESTAURANTS

QWIIGS BAR & GRILL 5083 Santa Monica Avenue, Ocean Beach, 222-1101. A splendid ocean view, a good oyster bar, sprightly salads, and fresh fish are the main attractions here. Stay with the fresh items; avoid fish and chips. Friendly service. Long flight of stairs to the dining room, with an elevator for wheelchair access. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, nightly. Sunday brunch 10:00 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Moderate.

SASKA'S 3768 Mission Boulevard, Mission Beach, 488-7311. There's no doubt about it — Saska's is the perfect spot for insomniacs. Hearty breakfasts, which include carne asada and eggs, or pork chops and eggs, as well as steak and eggs, are served Sunday through Thursday from 11:00 p.m. to 2:00 a.m.; to 3:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. The dinner hour extends to 2:00 a.m. as well. Steak lovers shouldn't overlook the prime beef "Saska steak," while the fresh nightly fish is a good choice for lighter fare. Saturday and Sunday brunches offer Mexican specialties that provide good value. Beachcomber atmosphere. Lunch daily; dinner and late-hour breakfasts nightly. Low to moderate.

TOSCA'S PASTA AND PIZZA 3780 Ingraham Street, Pacific Beach, 274-2408. Not the same old dishes doused with tomato sauce. The soup, served in a hard roll, is delightful and so are the pasta dishes, especially the quatratini, pasta with fresh spinach in Alfredo sauce. All pizzas are available on whole wheat or semolina dough crust. For a filling, healthy meal, try the soup-in-a-roll and half a salad. All portions mammoth. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

ZANZIBAR CAFE 976 Garnet Avenue, Pacific Beach, 272-4762. Located in an old bank building, this huge coffeehouse with art-filled walls is jammed and noisy all through the night until dawn. The salads, focaccia sandwiches, Italian specialties, pastries, sodas with Torani syrups, as well as tea and coffee, are excellent. However, almost everyone here smokes. This is the perfect spot if you're an insomniac — as long as smoke doesn't bother you. Open daily, 6:00 a.m. to 4:00 a.m.

MIDWAY, OLD TOWN & MISSION VALLEY

CAFE COYOTE Y CANTINA 2461 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 291-4695. Cafe Coyote has moved downstairs and is a good spot for a light Mexican meal with Southwest influences. Best bets à la carte are black bean chile, quesadilla with mango relish, carne asada, carnitas, and Margarita chicken. Breakfast includes blue corn pancakes and American dishes. Young adults gather here. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low.

EL TECOLOTE 6110 Friars Road (between I-163 and Sea World Drive), 295-2087. Popular for over a decade, this Mexican restaurant with three seating areas serves Mexico City–style food that's not too spicy and uses 100 percent vegetable oils. Among its specialties are chicken in molé sauce, two styles of carne asada, and a sensuous dish called pastel Azteca prepared from layers of corn tortillas, sausage, chiles, cheese, and enchilada sauce. All vegetarian dishes filled with cheese. Very tasty food. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly. Low to moderate.

FAIROUZ CAFE AND GALLERY 3166 Midway Drive, 225-0308. Seek out this family owned and operated restaurant for wonderful Lebanese and Greek food served in highly aesthetic surroundings. The owner, a noted artist, displays his paintings. The extensive menu offers excellent lamb dishes, stuffed grape leaves, and a wide selection of exotic vegetarian meals. Copious all-you-can-eat buffet available at lunch or dinner in addition to the regular menu. Given 24 hours, this café will prepare an astonishing Lebanese feast at low cost. Not to be missed. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

JACK AND GIULIO'S SPAGHETTI WESTERN 2391 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 294-2074. The restaurant named Giulio's that you knew and loved for 30 years in Pacific Beach is now Jack and Giulio's. The top price for any entrée with salad is $10.95. Best bets are angel hair pasta, minestrone soup, their famous scampi, and the pasta and chili. Pizza and giant hero sandwiches are available. Outdoor patio is one of the strong features. This is a low-cost family restaurant with fresh, casual food. Open daily, lunch and dinner; continuous service weekends. Low.

RUSTY PELICAN 5010 Mission Center Road, 291-6974. This is a very good spot for fish and seafood. The menu is the same as at the La Jolla branch, but the bargain dinner for $8.95 to $9.95 (soup or salad, entrée, vegetable, dessert, tea or coffee), served daily, starts at 4:00 p.m. and ends at 6:00 p.m. Very fresh product. Open daily, lunch and dinner Monday through Saturday. Sunday, all-you-can-eat buffet brunch from 10:00 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and dinner from 4:00 p.m. Low moderate to moderate.

EAST COUNTY & STATE COLLEGE

ALPINE INN 2225 Alpine Boulevard, 445-5172. If you're a beef lover, arrive on Sunday after 2:30 p.m. for the mountaineer cut of prime rib of beef, available that day only. For $10.95, you'll get huge amounts of good beef plus baked potato, but only on a Sunday. Soup or salad are included, but neither is more than average. Another good buy is the surprisingly vast and tasty Texas burger served on a Kaiser roll with steak fries. Many arrive just for the burgers. Stay with beef here. Dark interior with large booths. Open daily. Very crowded for both brunch and dinner on Sunday. Lunch Monday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Brunch Saturday and Sunday. Early bird dinner Monday through Saturday includes soup or salad plus entrée for $7.95. Call for hours. Low moderate to expensive.

ARIGATO 5575 Baltimore Drive, Suite 110, La Mesa, 469-3157. Here's a great bargain Japanese restaurant. Some dishes are as low as $3.50. Among the best are the combination plates which contain sesame chicken, tempura, and gyoza dumplings. The vegetable and shrimp tempura is outstanding. Almost all items are available to go. We need more of this kind of family restaurant. Open Monday through Saturday. Lunch, Monday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m., Saturday, noon to 3:00 p.m.; dinner 5:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. Closed Sundays. Low.

BESSIE'S GARITE 954 Cardiff Street (edge of Lemon Grove and Spring Valley), 463-5539. The best Southern food in San Diego is served here. The smothered pork chops, the cornbread dressing and gravy are mouthwatering and so is the fried chicken. Made-from-scratch hushpuppies. Chit'lins and catfish also available, and you can't leave without trying the peach cobbler. Fried green tomatoes offered May through August (call about availability). Tons of wonderful and authentic food. Creole dishes also prepared. Closed Monday. Dinner Tuesday to Friday, 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m., except Friday, close at 10:00 p.m.; Saturday, 11:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; Sunday, noon to 8:00 p.m. Same menu, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate. Call for directions.

CAMELOT 6942 University Avenue, La Mesa, 462-0042. One of the two best Vietnamese restaurants in the county, Camelot serves Chinese as well as Vietnamese food. The menu offers 215 items which include 35 soups and an equal number of rice dishes. Best bets: spring rolls, grape leaves stuffed with beef, chicken noodle soup with fish and shrimp, lemon grass chicken, and the whole steamed fish with ginger. Excellent cooking and service includes hot towels and a change of plates for each course. First-rate dining. Closed Monday. Lunch Tuesday through Friday and Sunday, dinner Tuesday through Sunday. Same menu lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

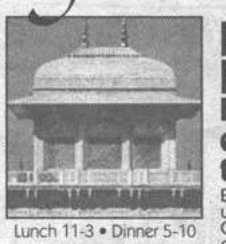

CLAIM JUMPER 5500 Grossmont Center Drive (across from Montgomery Ward), La Mesa, 469-3927. The wait here ranges from 40 minutes to 2 to 3 hours on weekends. The portions are so large they elicit gasps. Many of the restaurant's fans sing its praises because they are beef eaters and enjoy extra-large portions (the prime rib served weekends is 26 ounces). The food isn't memorable, just more than any one person can eat. Huge salad bar, many vegetarian dishes and sandwiches as well as barbecued chicken, ribs, and turkey dinners. Open daily to 10:00 p.m. Sunday and Monday, to 11:00 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday, and to midnight Friday and Saturday. Low to expensive.

VILLAGE EMPORIUM 8384 La Mesa Boulevard, La Mesa, 464-0611. This beautiful shop offers retail items as well as coffee, tea, espresso, salad, sandwiches, bagels, and dessert. Tasty, very light meals served breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Desserts include tortes, pies, cheesecake, and gelato. Very pleasant atmosphere, good selections, quite soothing. Open daily, 7:00 a.m. to 11 p.m., Sunday through Thursday, to midnight Friday and Saturday.

CENTRAL SAN DIEGO

CANTON SEAFOOD RESTAURANT 4134 University Avenue, 281-6008. The dim sum served Monday through Friday from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. is outstanding, but the variety increases during the weekends. Be sure to arrive early on Saturday and Sunday for dim sum from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. At dinner, try whole fish in ginger, fresh clams and scallops. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, dim sum, dinner. Low to moderate.

LITTLE ITALY 4367 University Avenue (at Fairmount Avenue), East San Diego, 281-4949. Spirited calzone and pizzas (old-fashioned style with lots of stuffing and toppings), as well as a bargain dinner for two ($10.99) that includes salad, cheese pizza, lasagne, spaghetti, and garlic bread, make this long-established restaurant worth noting. Simple surroundings, hearty portions. Please note the late closing: 2:00 a.m. daily, which permits insomniacs to have pizza in the middle of the night. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low.

RED SEA RESTAURANT 4717 University Avenue, East San Diego, 285-9722. This Ethiopian restaurant offers a charming bar and authentic Ethiopian cooking. All preparations are served over injera, a sponge-like bread which sops up the gravies and is considered one of the best parts of the meal. Chicken fares better here than beef, which tends to be chewy. Chicken wat (stew) with hard-boiled egg, sambusa (stuffed pastries) and the vegetarian plates are among your best bets. On weekends students congregate here, so it's very lively. The area is not the greatest, but the trade-off is exotic food at low prices. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low.

UPTOWN

BANZAI CANTINA 3667 India Street, 298-6388. Here's a cross-over restaurant: Mexican-American and Pacific Rim food is served. Service is fast, the atmosphere is soothing, and you may dine here at affordable prices. This place is full of surprises. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Moderate.

CANES CALIFORNIA BISTRO Uptown District (at the end of Vermont, one block north of University), 299-3551. Operated by Piret and George Munger, this casual dining room offers gourmet pizzas, pastas, and California cuisine. The outdoor seating area is especially pleasant and during the summer, barbecue is prepared there Wednesdays. (Call to find out exact times.) Saturday breakfast à la carte. Sunday all-you-can-eat buffet brunch plus à la carte items plus lunch items. Open daily; lunch and dinner daily, breakfast Saturday and Sunday. Low to moderate.

CELADON 3628 Fifth Avenue, Hillcrest, 295-8800. Very fine Thai food is served here and the decor, service, and cuisine are uniformly appealing. However, the food tends to be very spicy. If you want milder dishes, be sure to say so when you order so spices can be adjusted. Note that you can make a meal from appetizers, all of which are mild. Closed Sunday. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Moderate.

COTTAGE CAFE 2321 Fifth Avenue (corner of Juniper), 696-0071. Russian and Polish dinners are served Friday and Saturday nights only: excellent soups, which include borscht; good chicken Kiev; stuffed cabbage; pirogi and palmeni (stuffed dumplings). All items prepared home-style by loving mom and pop. Simple but pleasant surroundings. Some Russian and Polish items at lunch, but midday meals consist mostly of sandwiches. Modest surroundings but honest food. Closed Sunday. Monday through Thursday, open breakfast and lunch. Friday and Saturday, breakfast, lunch, and dinner.

EXTRAORDINARY DESSERTS 2929 Fifth Avenue, 294-7001. If you've been searching for a place for dessert after a movie or other cultural event, this is one of the first places that should come to mind. The baker-owner prepares sensuous cakes, tarts, cookies, and all manner of chocolate goodies. Teas and coffees are uniformly good. In the summer, the patio is an especially charming place. Please note the late hours: Sunday through Thursday to 11:00 p.m. and Friday and Saturday to midnight. Low.

MANDARIN DYNASTY 1458 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 298-8899. A splendid place to order a feast in advance for a large party. Some of the dishes for which you must give the chef at least four hours' notice are casserole soup, Chinese broccoli in oyster sauce, and whole steamed fish, which is good, but costly. Dishes from the menu may be Americanized; the above selections, as well as the Yu Hsiang beef, scallops in pepper, General Tao's chicken, shrimp in Chinese sauce, and ginger chicken, are first-rate. Sunday through Thursday open to 10:00 p. m.; Friday and Saturday to 11:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

STEFANO'S 3671 Fifth Avenue, 296-0975. This restaurant remains a good place for Old World Italian. The decor is charming and European in feeling. One of the best features is that the pastas are served in half orders. If you order a full entrée, you may obtain a salad for $2.00 that almost resembles antipasto. The best bets are the pastas, fresh fish, and chicken dishes. Attentive service. Open for dinner nightly from 5:00 p.m. Late closing Friday and Saturday. Low to moderate.

DOWNTOWN

ALIZE 777 Front Street, Paladion building, downtown, 234-0411. Don't miss this luxurious dining room at the top of the building with its fixed-price, four-course Caribbean meals. The food has French influences with Caribbean spices and includes appetizer, choice of soup or salad, dessert. Among the entrées are fish and seafood, chicken and shrimp "Kary" (curry), steak, lamb, and lobster. Stunning presentation and excellent value. Great place for à la carte lunch. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner; Sunday, dinner only. Expensive.

BELLA LUNA 748 Fifth Avenue (Gaslamp District), 239-3222. This delightful restaurant serves recipes from the isle of Capri, Italy, and the menu is sure to please you. The entrées, with their light sauces, are quite stunning, especially the skinless breast of chicken rolled with cheese and ham — it's the Italian version of chicken cordon bleu — and the rack of lamb. The side dishes that accompany the entrées can't be found anywhere else in the city. One consists of rice dipped in egg yolk and pan fried. Don't leave without trying the semi-frozen coffee dessert. The room is decorated with pictures of the moon, and the cooking demonstrates that there is something new under the beautiful moon. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Saturday. Dinner nightly, to midnight Friday and Saturday. Moderate.

CROCE'S RESTAURANT AND JAZZ BAR 802 Fifth Avenue, 233-4355. Here's a place to remember for either a light or full meal. The cuisine is identified as American-International, and the appetizers, pastas, salads, and entrées are well achieved. Menus change seasonally. During spring and summer, try Norwegian salmon with vegetables, or lightly breaded halibut topped with a sautéed prawn. Outdoor as well as indoor seating. Nightly jazz. Dinner only, served 4:00 p.m. to midnight. Moderate to expensive.

FONTAINEBLEAU RESTAURANT Westgate Little America Hotel, 1055 Second Avenue, 238-1818. Traditional Continental meals are served in an elegant Old World dining room where the best bets are roast beef, lamb chops, and fresh fish. Fresh Maine lobster may be ordered in advance. Buffet brunch, all-you-can-eat, includes caviar, sushi, omelet station, roast beef, turkey, and many surprises. It's a treat. High tea 2:30 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. in the lobby Monday through Saturday for $12.00. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Buffet brunch Sunday only. Expensive.

KARL STRAUSS' OLD COLUMBIA BREWERY AND GRILL 1157 Columbia Street (between B and C Streets), 234-2739. The star attractions here are the ales and beers brewed on the premises. Half a dozen to a dozen beers are available nightly, depending upon the season. The Gaslamp Gold is especially good with the food: burgers, pastas, soup and salad, fish and chips, grilled sausage. During weekends the noise can be shattering, but it's fun. Lunch and dinner daily. Food served 11:30 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., Sunday through Wednesday; to midnight, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Bar open to 1:00 a.m., Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Low to low moderate. Branch at 9675 Scranton Road, Sorrento Valley, 587-2739. Please note that it's closed Saturday and open 11:30 a.m. to sunset on Sunday; Monday through Friday to approximately 10:00 p.m.

KIYO'S JAPANESE RESTAURANT 531 F Street (between Fifth and Sixth avenues), 238-1726. Lovely, warm, personal service, wholesome fresh food, and low prices mark this delightful spot in bustling downtown. The owner, Kiyo, presides over the excellent sushi bar, and you may order any favorite sushi item, even if it's not on the menu. Lunch is especially good for its low-cost dishes such as yaki soba (a noodle dish) or gyoza (dumplings), as well as combo plates. You have a fairly wide choice of nicely prepared hot dinner entrées. These include tempura, sukiyaki (meat, mushrooms in saki sauce), and chicken dishes. Closed Sunday. Lunch Monday through Friday, dinner Monday through Saturday. Low.

LA GRAN TAPA 611 B Street, 234-8272. Here is a good spot for a light meal, especially before or after a cultural event. Tapas, Spanish appetizers, are prepared hot or cold, and the seafood, such as shrimp in garlic butter and fresh octopus, is always fine. Try beans with sausage, tortilla española (cold potato and egg "pie"), and paella. Lively, casual atmosphere. Lunch Monday through Friday. Dinner nightly, late hours on the weekend. Low to moderate.

LA STRADA 702 Fifth Avenue (at Fifth and G), 239-3400. If you like Northern Italian food with specialties from Florence and Tuscany, don't miss La Strada. Best pasta dishes are gnocchi (potato dumplings) and tortelli filled with cheese. For entrées, try chicken dishes, filet mignon, or grilled fresh fish. Every item is prepared from scratch. The service is excellent and the interior highly pleasing. In spite of the proliferation of Italian restaurants, this one is exciting and original. Not to be missed. Lunch and dinner, continuous service. Lunch, Monday to Friday; dinner served to 11:30 p.m. nightly, to 12:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Low to upper moderate.

MEKKA JAVA 412 K Street (Fourth and K), 234-8843. The seating at this coffeehouse consists of antique pieces and since one wall is glass, you may think you're seeing double when you enter. Tea, coffee, juice, scones, sandwiches, salads, and desserts. Open 7:00 a.m. Monday through Saturday, 8:00 a.m. Sunday; close at 2:00 a.m. Monday through Thursday, 3:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday, 1:00 a.m. Sunday. No smoking indoors, smoking on patio.

PACIFICA GRILL AND ROTISSERIE 1202 Kettner Boulevard, 696-9226. The expanded menu offers lowered prices, many new dishes as well as the old favorites. These include rotisserie chicken, baby back ribs, barbecued King salmon, and grilled ahi. Pastas are also a best bet and so is paella. Pacifica Grill has now regained its youthful vigor. Try it — you'll enjoy the food and atmosphere. Early bird fixed-price meal served from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. daily includes soup or salad, entrée with vegetable, tea or coffee. Open daily. Lunch, Monday to Friday; dinners nightly. Low moderate to expensive.

SOUTH BAY & CORONADO

AZZURA POINT Loew's Coronado Bay Resort, 4000 Coronado Bay Road, Coronado, 424-4000. The present menu is Pacific Rim: fish, seafood, and meat, all with Asian influences. The best bet is the fixed-price, three-course meal for $28.50. Everything is à la carte, including rice and vegetables. Try halibut and salmon here. Beautiful view of the bay. Open nightly, dinners only. Expensive.

CECIL'S CORONADO 1031 Orange Avenue, Coronado, 435-4660. The decor won't feed your soul, but the breakfasts, served Saturday and Sunday, are $4.95 or less, and lunch is an especially good buy. For dinner, try the roasted organic chicken with squash and a mountain of string potatoes, spicy seafood stew, and nightly fresh fish. The presentation and preparation will surprise and please you. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly; breakfast Saturday and Sunday. Moderate plus a few dishes expensive.

CENTER CUT RESTAURANT 534 Broadway, Chula Vista, 476-1144. You'll enjoy the structure and appealing decor as well as excellent service. The American cuisine is straightforward and well prepared. The price of the entrées includes soup or salad — select the salad. Although the restaurant specializes in steaks and prime rib (regular or large cuts), the fish and seafood are also fine. At present, if you buy one dinner, the second is $2.99 and you have a choice of any item on the menu. Sunday buffet brunch includes egg dishes, ham, roast beef, salads. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; buffet brunch, Sunday; dinner and dancing nightly. Moderate to expensive.

NEW MEXICO RESTAURANT 1794 Newton Avenue, Barrio Logan, 233-5052. This family restaurant specializes in seafood and Mexican food. If you've visited a seafood restaurant in Tijuana, you'll know what to expect: simple dining room, extensive menu, large entrées served with rice and beans, low prices. Mexican breakfasts served from opening to closing. If you're in the area, seek out this café. Open daily, breakfast, lunch and dinner, continuous service. Low to low moderate.

THE OLD BONITA STORE 4014 Bonita Road, Bonita, 479-3537. The menu is strongly influenced by Baja Californian/Mexican cooking. When in season, lobster are prepared as they are in Puerto Nuevo. But you must call to find out if they are available. The signature dish is the bucket of Baja-style lobster for two for $25.95. The bucket includes baby lobster tails, shrimp, grilled chicken, and carne asada. This is accompanied by Caesar salad, rice and beans, and tortillas. Other dishes are fish tacos, fajitas with rice and beans, and some pastas. Open daily, same menu lunch and dinner. Moderate.

PEOHE'S, the Landing, 1201 First Street, Coronado, 437-4474. This waterfront fish and seafood restaurant offers a gorgeous view, interior waterfalls, pools of water threading behind tables, and fresh fish daily, some flown in from Hawaii. The menu changes daily. The fresh fish dishes are excellent. The portions are huge. Reservations recommended. Open daily, lunch and dinner; Sunday brunch includes items from menu. Expensive.

TIJUANA

(The prefix for all Tijuana numbers is 011-52-66. From the United States use the prefix 011-52-66 when calling Tijuana; when calling in Tijuana use only the restaurant's six-digit number.)

CHIKI JAI No. 1050, Avenida Revolución (corner of Seventh and Avenida Revolución), 85-49-55. Noted for its Basque-style food (Spanish, as distinct from Mexican), this restaurant pioneered squid in its own ink, Basque-style chicken, broiled mushrooms, and its trademark — hot crusty rolls served with bleu cheese. Shrimp and filet mignon are also good choices here. The setting, tables, and silverware are simple and unpretentious, and during its many years, this restaurant has not capitulated to Americanization. Closed Wednesday. Open Thursday through Tuesday, 11:30 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Low to moderate.

EL RODEO 1647 Blvd. Salinas, 86-56-40. Steak lovers will have a field day here with a variety of cuts, some cooked right at your table. The accompaniments are wonderful: an appetizer and quesadilla, a crisp salad, beans served in their own liquid — even a dessert is included in the price of the entrée. Cheese soup, burritos, and tripe are also available. Vaquero decor, wood-paneled rooms. Good value if you like beef. Open daily. Take Revolución until it bends to the left to become Agua Caliente; proceed past the twin high-rise towers. Turn left, and left again, onto the one-way street, Blvd. Salinas. El Rodeo is on the right side of the street. Highly visible and easy to find. Moderate.

LA ESCONDIDA Santa Monica #1 in Fraccionamiento Las Palmas, 81-44-58. "The Hidden One," located in a converted mansion, boasts two gardens and patio dining, and is especially beautiful at night. The Caesar salad, the bone marrow or oxtail soups, the roasted baby goat and roasted quail, and the Châteaubriand steak (for two) are all worthwhile. Dishes with sauces are not as satisfying as those that are charbroiled or roasted. Very civilized experience, complete with piano player on Fridays and Saturdays. Take Revolución until it bends to the left to become Agua Caliente. Proceed on Agua Caliente past the racetrack, approximately one-half mile. Turn right at Las Palmas. Two short blocks up, turn left at the "Pastelería/Navy" sign. The entryway to La Escondida is straight ahead. Open daily, 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 a.m. Moderate.

LA ESPADANA 10813 Avenida Sanchez Taboada, Zona Rio, 34-14-88 or 34-14-89. Beautifully prepared meals that include appetizer, soup or salad, and entrée are available in this structure whose name means bell tower and whose exterior resembles a mission. Best bets here are filet steak on a skewer (brocheta de filete), baby back ribs (costillar de puerco), shrimp and mushrooms in butter sauce (camarones con champiñones), and leg of lamb (pierna de borrego). The portions are mammoth, and the breakfast is excellent. Superb service, delightful atmosphere. Menus are printed in Spanish and English. Some English spoken. Open daily, 7:30 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. Continuous service. Same menu lunch and dinner. Moderate.

Where's the last place on earth we'd find you?

Michael Johnston

When I drove across country with my mom a year and a half ago, we drove 15 north, through Las Vegas. Driving through Las Vegas at 3:00 a.m., looking at everything all lit up — that's about as close as I'd want to get. What I've seen on TV and movies is enough. I have no desire to see the shows, and gambling's something I've never been interested in. Driving through Utah, I thought it was beautiful country, but the people I met... The people were pale white — translucent white. The only people of color we saw were driving through the rest stops. Not enough diversity as far as people. You wouldn't find me there. As far as my musical tastes, I like listening to everything. Country music here and there, but I wouldn't make it my life. Listening to it all the time, dressing it, dancing it — no thank you. You wouldn't find me in a country-western bar at last call.

The last place anyone would find me would be at the bottom of the ocean in a submarine. I'm scared of water and closed spaces, and I hate feeling trapped, so you'd never find me there. Also you'd never find me in a small plane, hot air balloon, or anything less substantial than a commercial jet — if I have to be in the air at all. I guess you could say I like to feel connected to the earth. I also would hate to be anywhere where I couldn't get away from people and be alone if I wanted to... A place like Hong Kong where space is hard to come by. A vacation with relatives and kids where activities are all done together all the time for a whole week would be my idea of hell. You'd never find me in suburbia with husband, dog, and kids. I'd feel like I was stuck in the backwaters of life, away from where everything's happening.

You wouldn't find me if I hid up on the shelf in the hall closet. That's a really good hiding place. You wouldn't find me underneath the kitchen sink. I'm just small enough to crawl under there. You wouldn't find me underneath the coffee table because it's all closed and I can fit under. That's one of the first places he looks though — my brother. He says he has radar that can find me no matter where I hide, but I don't believe him. He tries to get me to play hide-and-seek. I hide but then he don't seek. He goes and runs away with Michael and they ditch me. And Michael? I don't like him anymore. He's not nice anymore. He's going to move away and I don't care. Boys are mostly trouble anyway. They say you're always tattling on them, but that's because they do stuff. You won't find me running away with any boy. I don't know what girls see in 'em.

It would probably be Antarctica because there's no sunshine and there's no surf. I dread winter, and I search for summer year round. Last year I went from the San Diego summer to the Australian summer — an endless summer. That way I knew that when I came back to San Diego I'd have endless sunshine. I'm a typical sun worshipper. The last place you'd find me is in a damp cave hibernating till the next Santa Ana. Or, as a corporate businessman, working eight to five with a suit and tie living in a cubicle with no windows. I work the opposite shift — two days a week working, and five days off. I love my life, I wouldn't want to work for someone telling me I needed a haircut. Basically, when I go to work I wear shorts and no shirt. Life's too short to have a real job. Travel and see the world is my motto.

The better question to ask would probably be where would you find me? You wouldn't find me in Asia, in Africa, in Europe. You wouldn't find me in Canada or Mexico or South America. I've already traveled and seen the world, and I have no desire ever to do it again. You wouldn't find me on the freeway in rush-hour traffic. You wouldn't find me at a sporting event or at a rock concert. I don't like crowd mentality. You'd most often find me behind my computer, or sitting out on the patio with a yellow pad, or reading a journal, or tending my roses. You wouldn't find me laying on the beach, or eating in a crowded restaurant, although you might find me cooking a gourmet dinner for a few friends. We stay home on weekends if at all possible. There was a time when I had to travel a lot. I can't tell you all the frequent-flyer mileage I logged. All the cities, all the hotels, all the restaurants. At the time I was doing a lot of consulting. All over the world. I just reached a point where I said, "That's it. Enough."

HOW TO RESPOND TO PHONE MATCHES™

98¢/minute, $1.98 first minute (18+ only)

To respond to Reader Phone Matches™ ads call 1-900-844-MATCH (844-6282) any time, 24 hours a day!

If you choose an ad from the Phone Matches™ column, use the 5-digit mailbox number printed in the ad to listen to the person's introduction and leave a response. (An advertiser may not have recorded an introduction by the time you call. If not, you can still leave a message in his or her mailbox.) The date at the end of the ad is the last day to reply to the mailbox. Or you can "browse" through all the introductions and respond to the ones that suit you. You must have a touch-tone phone. Use of cordless phones should be avoided as some models may cause the system not to respond.

The charge for using Phone Matches™ will appear on your phone bill under "DATING." If you have any questions, call 235-8200, x268.

If you're calling from a rotary phone, you cannot listen to box holders' introductions. To use the system, stay on the line until you hear the rotary phone instructions. After the tone, leave your message including the number of the mailbox you're responding to. Rotary phone users can only respond to one ad per call; you must call back to respond to another ad.

#831 Dear Me!

We'd sincerely like you to match the autographs at the right with the signatories below.

___ Eric Arthur Blair
___ Lewis Carroll
___ Thomas L. Williams
___ David Berkowitz
___ Marian Evans
___ Marion Morrison
___ Paul VI
___ Mark Twain
___ Margaretha Geertruida Zelle
___ Lawrence of Arabia
___ Ms. Black
___ Edson Arantes do Nascimento
___ V.I. Lenin
___ William Sydney Porter

RULES OF THE GAME

1. The prize for solving the Reader Puzzle will be a Reader T-shirt.
2. All entries in the Reader Puzzle contest must be received by the Reader (addressed to Reader Puzzle, P.O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803) by 9:00 a.m., Wednesday, six days following the issue date.
3. All entries must be accompanied by your name, address, and shirt size S, M, L, XL.
4. Employees of the Reader and their immediate families are not eligible.
5. In the event of disputes or ties, decisions of the judges will be final and arbitrary. We've only got five prizes each week to give away, so if there are more than five winners, we'll have a lottery.
6. All answers must be entered in the space allowed on the puzzle page. And please, no phone calls or trips to our office.
7. One entry per person.

Answers to and winners of Reader Puzzle #829, First Class.

7) 89109 (Las Vegas)
5) 19106 (Philadelphia)
1) 38116 (Memphis)
6) 90028 (Hollywood)
8) 08401 (Atlantic City)
4) 94109 (San Francisco)
2) 20500 (Washington, DC)
3) 10166 (New York City)

ZIP code numbers are higher the farther west one travels, which should have provided a few clues. The Memphis stamp featured an engraving of Graceland, along with a postmark commemorating Elvis's death (August 8, 1977). The perforations on the cancellation were the opening notes from "Love Me Tender." The DC stamp was shredded. The New York City stamps were gridlocked. The (19)06-cent San Francisco stamp was perforated along an earthquake fault line. The Philadelphia stamp showed Independence Hall with perforations like the crack in the Liberty Bell. The coil of Hollywood stamps featured frames of film from Some Like It Hot. Howard Hughes and Donald Trump were on the Vegas and Atlantic City stamps respectively.

PICTURE STORY

by the San Diego Historical Society

As if the elephants didn't appear large enough already, organizers at the 1935 California Pacific International Exposition in Balboa Park saw fit to invite them to a tea in the whimsically named "Midget Village." Village denizens amused expo visitors by posing and acting out various living arrangements — just like real folks! The village and accompanying "Midget Farm" were popular destinations for paying customers tired of peeping at the nudist colony or watching a tightrope-walking goat do its stuff.

The 1935–1936 exposition was admittedly an attempt to pull San Diego out of the Depression doldrums; organizers hoped to repeat the success of the 1915–1916 Panama-California Exposition at the same Balboa Park site. Over seven million expo visitors enjoyed its attractions that ranged from the mundane (logrolling and snake pits) to the more cultural (Spanish Village and a replica of the Old Globe Theatre). Alas, the logrollers have since departed.

Respond to Roommate Ads Free

Yes, it's free to call ads that list the Roommate Response Line 235-2297. By using the 5-digit extension number included in the ad, you will hear the advertiser's recorded description of his or her roommate needs. You can then leave a message if you like.

Get a jump on your competition. Hear the newest ads before they're printed. Call the Roommate Hotline!

Soon after an advertiser places an ad, his or her spoken introduction goes on the Roommate Hotline. This means you can hear new roommate ads before they appear in the Reader. You can access the Hotline 24 hours, 7 days a week by calling 1-900-844-4663. The cost is just 49¢/minute and you can select the listings by gender, price range and area. New listings are added daily (you'll find the largest selection of listings a few days prior to publication)

Roommates

READER ROOMMATE TIPS. Finding someone that you like and trust enough to share your home with isn't always easy. However, by following these common-sense tips, the search for a compatible roommate will be easier: 1) Take the time to conduct a phone interview before scheduling a personal meeting. Is the person employed with a reliable source of income? Is the person similar to, or compatible with you? Why is the person seeking a new living situation? 2) When scheduling your initial meeting with a prospective roommate in your home, make sure you have someone else there with you — another roommate, a friend or a family member. If you are answering roommate ads, take along a friend when you go to check out a living situation. 3) Finally, take enough time to make a thoughtful decision on whom to choose, and trust your instincts.

Don't wait until the deadline ...

Place your Reader roommate ad today and get responses tomorrow!

Even if it's 2 am on a Friday morning, you can pick up your phone and place your ad on our computer. You could get responses within 24 hours and have a roommate by the end of the weekend! For just $16/week you get the following :

A 25-word printed ad in the Reader

which contains a general description of your roommate situation. You can now place your roommate ad 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, from any touch-tone phone by calling into the Reader Roommate Line at 235-2415.

24-hour voice mailbox service which will allow you to leave a 60-second recorded message describing in detail your available roommate situation. If you're looking for a roommate who shares your passions for Cole Porter tunes, popcorn at midnight and volleyball games at the beach, this is your opportunity to say so and more. We will also use this recording to write your 25-word printed ad.

Respondents who see your ad in the paper will call into the free response line, hear your detailed mailbox message and leave a message for you. At your convenience, you can call 235-2415 day or night, pick up your messages and choose whom to call back.

Get response before your ad appears!

Soon after you record your mailbox message, it will be placed on the Roommate Hotline. Respondents who call the Roommate Hotline will have access to your recorded message before the Reader even hits the streets on Thursday. If you record your message on Monday, you could be interviewing potential roommates on Wednesday and collecting rent on Thursday!

To place your roommate ad, call 235-2415 day or night.

For questions regarding Roommate ads call 235-8200, ext. 265.

1. Pay with Visa, MasterCard, Discover, check or cash.
The cost is $16. However you pay, you must first call 235-2415 to place your ad.

2. Prepare to record your one-minute message (about 125 words) for your voice mailbox. Follow the sample message below:

State your neighborhood first.	Clairemont. 2 women seeking nonsmoking male, 25-35, to share 3 bedroom house. Large room, private bath. Pool, off-street parking. $350 plus 1/3 utilities. Available immediately.
We will use the first 25 words of your verbal message as your printed ad in the Reader.	We pursue an active outdoor lifestyle and you'll probably have more luck finding us at Mission Bay playing volleyball than at home in front of the TV. We like to entertain and our back yard is a great spot for barbecues. We're seeking a person who is conscientious, financially stable and a good communicator. And, we have one cat named Spike!
When you are finished recording, press 2.	Please tell us about yourself and don't forget to leave your phone number and the best time to reach you. Thanks!

3. Write your __ mailbox number __ & __ security code __.

4. To retrieve your messages
call 235-2415. You may get responses on the hotline before your ad is printed, so call frequently. Messages are erased after you hear them, so be sure to have a pen and paper ready. Your mailbox will expire at midnight, the Wednesday following publication.

5. The deadline for placing voice mail ads is Monday at 1 pm; however, print ads can be placed until Tuesday at 6 pm by calling 235-8200. All voice mail ads will be placed on the Roommate Hotline within 24 hours. So call today!

No cancellations accepted. Advertisers are responsible for checking their Roommate ads for accuracy and reporting errors by 11 am, Tuesday, following publication.

6. To renew your mailbox
If you don't need to make any changes, you may renew your mailbox by calling 235-2415 and choosing the renewal option. You may renew your mailbox Thursday through Monday 1 pm.

Mail in payment: Reader Roommate Line
P.O. Box 85803, San Diego, 92186.
Walk-in payment: 1703 India (at Date), downtown San Diego.

Respond to Roommate Ads Free

Yes, it's free to call ads that list the Roommate Response Line 235-2297. By using the 5-digit extension number included in the ad, you will hear the advertiser's recorded description of his or her roommate needs. You can then leave a message if you like.

Get a jump on your competition. Hear the newest ads before they're printed. Call the Roommate Hotline!

Soon after an advertiser places an ad, his or her spoken introduction goes on the Roommate Hotline. This means you can hear new roommate ads before they appear in the Reader. You can access the Hotline 24 hours, 7 days a week by calling 1-900-844-4663. The cost is just 49¢/minute and you can select the listings by gender, price range and area. New listings are added daily (you'll find the largest selection of listings a few days prior to publication)

Respond to Roommate Ads Free

Yes, it's free to call ads that list the Roommate Response Line 235-2297. By using the 5-digit extension number included in the ad, you will hear the advertiser's recorded description of his or her roommate needs. You can then leave a message if you like.

Get a jump on your competition. Hear the newest ads before they're printed. Call the Roommate Hotline!

Soon after an advertiser places an ad, his or her spoken introduction goes on the Roommate Hotline. This means you can hear new roommate ads before they appear in the Reader. You can access the Hotline 24 hours, 7 days a week by calling 1-900-844-4663. The cost is just 49¢/minute and you can select the listings by gender, price range and area. New listings are added daily (you'll find the largest selection of listings a few days prior to publication)

Mother Courage

By Anne Albright

Kid Stuff

Ethel doesn't complain. It's the hottest day in five years, and 18-year-old Ethel and I are sitting in the non–air-conditioned visitors' room at Casa Maria, one of Catholic Charities' homes for single mothers. While I melt into one end of the couch, Ethel's seven-month-old daughter Jessimena sits between us repeatedly stuffing my car keys into her mouth and then dropping them onto the floor.

"I had a rough background," Ethel tells me. "I left my mom when I was 13, because she abused me." For the next two years Ethel was passed from one family member to another. When she turned 15, Ethel moved in with an aunt and became friends with the aunt's 28-year-old boyfriend. Several years later, Ethel's aunt talked Ethel into entering into a three-way sexual relationship with herself and this same boyfriend. What Ethel's aunt apparently didn't know was that Ethel was already secretly involved with the boyfriend. When Ethel got pregnant, the aunt thought the pregnancy a result of the sexual threesome and insisted Ethel get an abortion. "I was scared. I thought she was going to be there for me. But she was totally against me. She said, 'Go to the doctor, do what you have to do.' And that was it."

Ethel left her aunt's house. She lived in a foster home, then quit school and moved in with the aunt's boyfriend. "It didn't work out right. I was subjected to a lot of drugs, people who were prostitutes, addicts." It was around this time that Ethel became pregnant with Jessimena. "I didn't know. I was doing drugs. I wasn't an addict, but I was having fun a lot."

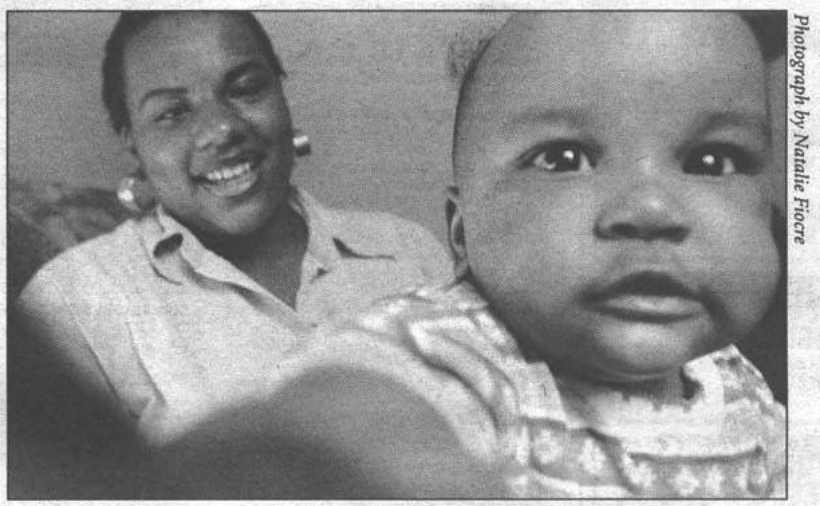

By the time Ethel realized she was pregnant, she was already seven months along. She stopped using drugs. "Everything changed for me. I really started getting into my pregnancy. My face glowed. My hair grew. I felt so happy, and I said, 'I know this is a blessing. I know God did this to me. From this day on I have to be an adult.'" In a month's time, Ethel lived at three separate homeless shelters and then ended up at Casa Maria. The program there provides counseling, group meetings, parenting classes, and educational programs on topics like nutrition, childcare, and domestic violence prevention. Ethel plans to stay at Casa Maria as long as she can, until Jessimena is one year old. Between now and then she plans to take the high school equivalence exam and enroll at City College. She eventually wants to become a licensed childcare provider.

What does Ethel want for Jessimena? "Basically, my philosophy is that she is a person. I have no control over her. I don't want to judge her. I think I came out great. My mom was very strict. She raised me good. But there were a lot of other things, the abuse, the drinking. I want to be able to raise Jessimena without all those things. I want her to know that she can always come and lean on me for anything because I could never do that with my mom. It's something that's very important, especially to a girl, to have one parent.

"My father died when I was four. I witnessed it. I've been without him all my life. I have almost no memories of when I was little, but I do have a memory of him. He was shot by my grandfather, my dad's dad. My grandfather was an alcoholic. My grandfather I guess just clicked one day, and he went upstairs and did it and then pulled the gun on me and my brother. I don't think he did it intentionally. But I think he looked at us and was angry and didn't realize that the gun was pointed at his own grandkids. We ran.

"I just want Jessimena to be healthy mentally. And I want her to know that when all else fails, Mommy's there for anything. Because of all the things I've been through, I feel like I've handled them very well, but I've handled them on my own. Usually at a young age when you've gone through a lot of the things that I have with only yourself to depend on, you can be very mentally messed up. I think my mom is that way. She's admitted herself into CMH before. She's subjected herself to abuse by men. I analyze the way I grew up and I analyze my mom and I respect her. She is a strong woman. She lets herself be weak. I use that to make myself stronger."

What's the best thing about being a mom? "To have someone to give my love to. One of the things I've always wanted was to show my love to someone who would want it or appreciate it. With my mom, I don't think she knew how to accept it because she's been abused all her life. With Jessimena's father, with my aunt, every time I tried to put out that love it was taken advantage of. In a way I needed someone. She's my flesh and blood. She's Jessimena. And I have all that love to give to her. And that's great."

Life Saved at Septic Tank

By Alfredo Cardenas

SAN DIEGO TEXAS

• Venessa Perez is a bright four-year-old who lives with her grandmother in a ranch between Realitos and Concepción. Good thing for Grandmother — this bundle of energy saved her grandmother's life. It's hard to get help in this remote area of the county; the nearest emergency unit is in Benavides about half an hour away. Neighbors, mostly family, live beyond hollering distance. So when Maria Almaraz was working on her yard and fell into the home's septic tank, Venessa was the only help available.

• The San Diego Vaqueros are in for a long season defending their district football championship after losing their district opener, 22–10, to Hebbronville. The Longhorns ran over the Vaqueros before a homecoming crowd.

• The San Diego City Council voted to issue $400,000 in Certificates of Obligation to develop a housing subdivision on the city's south side. The council has entered into an earnest-money contract with Ireneo and Evita Cadena for purchase of 16.9 acres of what is commonly known as the George Parr property.

• Four Duval County schools will receive cash awards from the Texas Education Agency under the Texas Successful School Awards System (TSSAS) because of 1993–94 TAAS scores. Both elementary and junior high schools in Benavides and Freer will receive the awards.

• The unemployment rate in Duval County fell by slightly over 1 percent in August but still remains at a region high of 15.3 percent. This is also slightly higher than the unemployment rate of a year ago.

• Residents of San Diego and Duval County are now able to speak to a Texas Employment Commission (TEC) representative here in San Diego. TEC will be coming to San Diego on Thursdays, from 1:00 to 4:00 p.m., until further notice, said Norma Benavides from the Alice TEC office.

TIN FORK

The masked figure leans over me. "So you'll go?"

I'm looking up through the harsh spotlight into Bea's eyes. My mouth is wide, bristling with metal-filling clamps, rods, mirrors, water squirters, cold-air nozzles, those mini-rolled towels stuffed like fenders around my teeth, bulging out my lips....

"So you're going?"

"Ga?"

"To Alex's Brown Bag? And you'll tell them I sent you?"

Bea looks at Dr. Diana the dentist. Diana moves in threateningly. Karen, her assistant, squirts in more water.

"Was that a yes?"

"Ga. Ga!"

Bea pulls back. "Okay, girls. Let him go. If he doesn't go to Alex's, we can always get him when he comes to replace his temps."

Bea has this thing. She and the whole dentist's office "do" Alex's religiously every Friday.

So here, Tuesday, for the future safety of what I laughingly call my teeth, I'm up here as promised on 5th and Kalmia.

Alex's Brown Bag? You expect it to be woody, greasy — Anglo, for God's sake. Instead it's red, white, and green canopies, white sidewalk tables, espresso coffee, and inside? Noise! Lots of noise.

"Napoli! Bella Napoli!" calls the chef. "Antonio, gimme a Philly to go, two lunch specials, one Californian. Mama — your large soup. Prego. Carlo: Ciao! Welcome! Mangia mangia mangia!"

La Famiglia! For a moment I feel I'm on the set of Moonstruck. La Famiglia! La Famiglia!

And that's what it really is: Young guy waiting to take my order is Benito. Benito Guadagni (pronounced Gwa-daan-yi). And that's Antonio, his brother, cutting a sandwich and Francesca, his mother, at the soup tureen, and Benito Sr., his father, at the grill. "This is the HOME of the Original Philadelphia Cheese Steak Sandwich!" shouts Benito Sr. from where he sizzles the meat.

"What would you like?" says Benito Jr. ("Junior" to his friends). I start perusing the signs that line the large grill area.

I don't have that much in the old cash pocket, so I go for the $2.95 Special of the Day, written on a piece of card. A grilled ham and cheese sandwich. I take a Peach Tea Snapple (99¢) out of the cooler. That's $4.22 including tax.

"Next time," says Benito Sr., "The Philly cheese steak sandwich, okay? Guaranteed original. I import the meat from New Jersey. See?" He holds up a 10-pound box of Deluxe Beef from Quality Foods, Camden, New Jersey, with slice after slice of squared-off beef. "Nothing but the best. It's got to be aged six months. We use six-ounce slices of this meat, sautéed bell peppers, onions, mushrooms, and melting mozzarella cheese — all on a nine-inch roll. $4.25. You got to try it. No one here in San Diego comes close!"

Junior brings my ham and cheese special. I see it's bulging with lettuce and tomato and a pile of french fries on the side. "My prices haven't changed in five years," says Junior. He's only 21 but he's in charge of buying. "That's because I don't just go to one distributor. I shop around."

"We've been in this business 150, going on 200 years," says Benito Sr., taking a moment when the line has finally disappeared. "For 150 years we owned a restaurant, La Bella Trattoria, in Napoli. It's still going. Me, I wanted to see the New World. But we keep our same values here. My father" — he crosses himself — "may he rest in peace, always said: 'Three things,' he told me, if you run a restaurant: '1. Respect. Above all, respect the customer. Don't lie. 2. Quality. 3. Quantity — give them plenty. Don't be mean. Give these three things and you will have customers' — and it happened!"

Photograph by Joe Klein

The Guadagni family: Antonio, Benito Jr., Benito Sr., Francesca

Now Antonio and Mama (Francesca) are here. "Mama's the brains behind the family," says Antonio. "She's the artist," says Papa. "Put it this way," says Francesca. "He's the cook. I'm the chef. My eggplant parmigiana is the best in the West. Way I cook — no measurement. Just toss in, like my grandmother taught me. Come back, try my lasagne."

Benito Sr. nods in agreement, but he's still thinking values. "Now, I teach same things to my kids," he says. "We're from the old Italian school. My customers — they love my kids. Because they have respect and kindness. And they don't take no drugs." His eyes suddenly become fierce. "That day I find them with drugs...." He slices his throat, ear to ear. "I CUT their heads off!"

Then his expression suddenly changes again. Junior has brought him a framed picture. He looks at it lovingly. "This is my paisan," he says proudly. "Same as me, he's not afraid to show his heart."

He points to the inscription, written in gold ink. "To Benito, with my very best wishes. God Bless. Frank Sinatra, 6-94."

Bea should be so lucky. As I leave, Papa throws a kiss. I'll pass it on next time I'm in that dentist's chair.

Las Vegas Hostage Crisis Ends Happily

By Patrick Daugherty

SPORTING BOX

I'm getting to like that little Sherman tank of a running back, Natrone Means. He ran for three TDs against the Saints; actually scored five TDs, but two were called back by penalties. Sunday's 36–22 San Diego victory at the Superdome was another quality win for the Bolts, now 6–0.

Last summer the Chargers were forecasted to wind up last in the AFC West. Prognosticators noted that during the off-season the Chargers had dropped 10 starters, more ominously, 6 of the departed had high salaries. Cynics suspected that general manager Bobby Beathard was pulling a Padres trick: strip the team of star players, put more money in the bank. That view was further enforced when four-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Anthony Miller was traded to division-rival Denver.

Instead, what Beathard did, virtually unnoticed, was put together a balanced team. That is, not to say a great team, but definitely a balanced team. The Chargers can run: regard 245-pound Natrone Means and Ronnie Harmon. They can pass: regard the AFC's highest-rated quarterback Stan Humphries, and the Chargers can kick and block. They do everything well.

The Chargers have the 10th-best rushing attack, the 11th-best passing attack, and the 12th-best defense in the NFL. Let's compare that to other AFC-West teams.

	Rushing	Passing	Defense
Kansas City	19th	5th	23rd
Seattle	8th	21st	13th
L.A. Raiders	23rd	13th	19th
Denver	14th	9th	25th

The key here is balance. San Diego does everything equally well and above average, which is great, but still a long way from doing everything brilliantly, which is what it takes to win a Super Bowl.

Even this early on the Chargers have a lock on the playoffs. This year they enjoy a significant advantage by playing a fourth-place schedule, earned from last year's dismal record of 8–8. Right now, the Bolts are 4 and 0 in the AFC West, winning 3 of those games on the road. Even if the Chargers collapse, utterly, and split the last 10 games — 5 and 5 — they would wind up at 11–5, in the playoffs as AFC-West champions.

The homeboys look smooth, smoother every week. All facets of the team are playing on the same level, an almost seamless performance by the offense, defense, and special teams, week in and week out. The Chargers are in top third of the class, which is a pleasure to watch and enjoy. But the top third is still a ways down the food chain from Dallas and San Francisco. Last year New Orleans started at 5–0 and ended 8–8. The Dolphins were 6–1 and failed to make the playoffs.

There are ten games left in the regular season; all things are possible. If San Diego continues to improve they could become a dangerous, frightening team. If they remain where they are they'll be nailed in the second round of the playoffs. This is a great season to be a Chargers fan.

And now for the good news! The Rollie Massimino hostage crisis is over! Basketball junkies will recall that Massimino was hired as UNLV's head basketball coach two years ago, replacing Jerry Tarkanian. The Tark, after 19 years and a national championship, was finally nailed by the NCAA police. Massimino was brought in to make UNLV basketball academically spotless, get the NCAA out of town, and keep the Runnin' Rebels in the top ten.

The problem was Rollie understood only part of the Vegas work ethic. He knew the part about brokering a secret, supplemental contract with former UNLV and current Long Beach State president, Robert Maxson. The secret deal was to pay Massimino an additional $375,000 on top of his annual salary of $511,000. Rollie got that right. The part he missed was going 15–13 last season and failing to gain a berth in the NCAA tournament for two years running. "Throw the bum out, buy out his contract," was the universal cry from the board of regents, politicians, faculty, students, alumni, casino executives, basketball fans, and right-thinking Americans wherever they may live.

UNLV offered Massimino a million bucks if he would leave. But Rollie refused, and began wandering Thomas and Mack Center with a whistle in his mouth, all alone. The man was holding himself hostage inside the bowels of a 20,000-seat basketball arena. No one would come within 20 feet of him.

Last Friday the news poured in from news services around the world. Help was on the way. Rollie had agreed to accept a new five-year severance package totaling $1.9 million. Relieved that his ordeal was over, Massimino told reporters, "This university is a great institution. I love Las Vegas. Unfortunately, this didn't work out."

Next time Rollie.
