STINK BOMBS AT TACO BELL

By Alice Reynolds / News for San Diego

Early one morning, we were in a hurry to pick up our daughter at the airport. We watched her get on the bus and get into the car. We went to Taco Bell for a quick bite, but there was no time to waste. We saw her, and I went to look for a pay phone. I called the restaurant and explained the situation. The manager was less than pleased, but we agreed to a $50 tip. It was the least we could do.
A Lawsuit for the Homeless
By Melinda Powelson
Finding a temporary shelter to house San Diego's homeless community this winter has been one of the year's most contentious battles at city hall. City council members have been frustrated by homeless advocates such as Father Le Grice and Tomás Murrieta, who have fought to open public parks to the homeless. As the issue moved to the City Council, there was a strong push for a shelter that would be acceptable to the public. This push led to the creation of a temporary shelter program for the homeless.

Father Le Grice, a longtime advocate for the homeless, said he was pleased with the decision. "We have been working on this for months," he said. "We are happy to see that the council has finally come to a decision."

The decision came after a series of meetings between the council and representatives from the homeless community. The council members were divided on the issue, with some in favor of opening public parks to the homeless and others in favor of a temporary shelter.

The decision was made on a 4-3 vote, with Councilman Le Grice, Councilwoman Murrieta, and Councilman Le Grice voting in favor of the shelter. Councilman Le Grice, who has been a vocal supporter of the homeless, said he was pleased with the decision. "We have been working on this for months," he said. "We are happy to see that the council has finally come to a decision."

There isn't enough in the economy to support the large homeless populations to really get the people in a position to help. It is important to keep these people in mind and help them in the ways that we can.

The Republican landslide that swept across the United States two weeks ago was particularly evident in San Diego County. Proposition 187 gained an overwhelming 67 percent majority. Governor Pete Wilson, whose campaign was largely an attack on the state's welfare system, received a vote of confidence from San Diegans. The measure, which would deny state services to illegal aliens, was approved by a wide margin.

However, the victory was not without controversy. Critics argued that the measure would lead to a state of lawlessness and that it would harm the state's economy. Proponents, on the other hand, believed that the state was being taken advantage of by illegal immigrants.

San Diego's response to the Proposition 187 victory was mixed. While many of the city's residents supported the measure, there were also concerns about its impact on the city's diverse population.

In other news, San Diego's economy was growing steadily. The city's unemployment rate was lower than the national average, and the city was attracting new businesses.

Overall, San Diego's two-week period was marked by a mix of victory and controversy. The city looked forward to the challenges and opportunities that lay ahead.
Dear Matthew Alice

The recent election has raised a question in my mind. The Department of Taxes is asking people who own a car or truck to return their vehicles so that they can be assessed for property tax. What would happen if the department decided to do the same thing for the department of health? Wouldn't that be a major inconvenience for everyone? I don't think so.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

Matthew Alice

He was definitely a strange bird. He told me that when he was a child he would often sneak into the movies and watch them from behind the stage. He claimed to have seen every movie that was ever made and that he could remember every line of dialogue. I was skeptical, but he seemed to be serious. He was always dressed in his usual black suit and tie, and he carried a cane. I asked him why he was so interested in movies and he told me that he had a dream of being a film director. He had written a script and he wanted me to help him raise money to make the film. I was hesitant at first, but he was persistent. He offered me a share of the profits if I would help him. I agreed, and we began our journey to make the film. The process was long and difficult, but we persevered. Finally, the day came when we were able to screen our film. It was a huge success, and we became rich. But our happiness was short-lived, for a rival film company had made a copy of our film and was showing it in theaters across the country. We were forced to sue, and the court ruled in our favor. We were finally able to put an end to the piracy of our film. We were vindicated, and I never looked back. But the memory of that experience stayed with me, and it was the inspiration for my writing. I still write about the film industry and the struggles of the independent filmmaker.

He stood straight up in the cab, jamming down on the brake pedal with all his might.

The next time, several days later, we were going to take off at night from the city to Washington state with several passengers. We were told that there would be a stop at 11 p.m. in a little town named Little Dixie. There had been a report of a dead body being found there, but it was not confirmed. We drove all night and arrived at the stop just after midnight. We were greeted by a group of people who asked if we needed any help. We declined and continued on our journey.

During this fake pregnancy they kept in touch because they wanted their "baby."
Once had enough to stand and the evening had not begun. Christmas music was flowing in the air, and the lights were twinkling. The children were already getting restless, ready to decorate the tree._Questions of the time had risen to the top, and the children were eager to help decorate. As usual, the children were scattered around the room, some chatting, some playing games. It was Christmas, and the children were all looking forward to the tree lighting ceremony, which was to start soon.

A WOODCHUCK FOR A GARDEN
By Rosemary Stay / 11th Mar

A year ago, I was living in the beautiful state of Vermont. The winters were long and hard. There was a special bond of tight-knit families that we shared, and this bond was the only comfort we found in the harsh winter months. The town we lived in was small, but it was a close-knit community.

One day, while walking through the woods, I came across a woodchuck. It was a beautiful creature, with a fluffy coat and a friendly face. I was struck by its beauty and decided to take it home. The woodchuck was happy to be in the care of a family, and it brought joy to our lives. When the winter finally came to an end, I released the woodchuck back into the wild. It was a bittersweet moment, but I knew it was the right thing to do. The woodchuck continued to live in the woods, bringing joy to many more people. It was a reminder that beauty can be found in the simplest of things.

For more information on the woodchuck, please visit our website. We are always looking for new ways to connect with nature and learn more about the environment.
I could hardly contain my swoon. I started crying the first time I heard the music. I turned around and saw the woman dancing, and I knew I had to get my hands on that dress. It was the perfect size for me and I knew it would look stunning on me. I could not wait to wear it to the prom. I knew it was the dress of my dreams.

THE FAKE MEMO
By Jackson Dade
From the Archives

I was walking on a morning dew-drenched street, when I suddenly felt a gentle tap on my shoulder. It was a young boy, no more than ten years old, who noticed my tears and asked me if I was okay. I told him yes, but he persisted, asking if I needed help. I explained that I was just being emotional over something, but he insisted on helping me. He offered to take me to a nearby store to buy something that would make me feel better. I accepted, and we walked to the store. I bought a beautiful dress, and we both cried. It was a beautiful moment that I will always cherish.

I started crying the second time I heard the music. It was the perfect moment, and I knew I had to get my hands on that dress. I could not wait to wear it to the prom. I knew it was the dress of my dreams.

The store owner, a kind and gentle man, offered to take me to a nearby park to enjoy the beautiful scenery. We sat on a bench, and I told him all about the dress. He listened intently, and we both cried. It was a beautiful moment that I will always cherish.

HIT ON ME AND DIE
By Robert Wardwell  Pacific Beach

While recovering from a hangover several years ago, I wandered into a small clothes shop with a friend. We wandered in an attractive young woman named Lisa. Lisa seemed so nice. She said we could have our choice of dresses, and she gave us a free makeup sample to try. We then decided to order some coffee to go.

The wendy's had a huge line, but it didn't seem to bother me. I was fascinated by Lisa's flawless makeup and elegant hair. We chatted and laughed through the whole process. Lisa then showed me a beautiful dress that she thought would look great on me. I tried it on, and she helped me with all of the alterations. She was so friendly and helpful.

I realized that my underwear was missing.

Lisa: The dress had been altered. Lisa seemed so kind, but I didn't want to hurt her feelings. I told her, "It's okay, I can fix it myself." She smiled and said, "No problem, it will be fine." Lisa then gave me some extra sewing pins and a needle. I took my dress home and fixed it myself. I was so grateful to Lisa for her help.

I learned a valuable lesson about the importance of being kind and helpful to others. Lisa was a true professional, and I will never forget her kindness.

THE OLD WRIGLEY'S GUM TRICK
By K. Fink

This isn't a trick, it's just a funny story. I was at a party recently, and I noticed a man wearing a red suit. He was talking to everyone and seemed to be the life of the party. I decided to approach him and strike up a conversation.

He was very friendly and seemed to be enjoying himself. We chatted for a while, and I learned that he was a retired army captain. He had been in the service for over 30 years and had seen a lot of the world. He was always ready to help anyone in need.

I then noticed that he was wearing a red suit. I asked him, "Why are you wearing a red suit?" He laughed and said, "It's the color of my heart. I wear it to show everyone how much I care for others." I was so impressed by his kindness and generosity.

I learned a valuable lesson about the importance of being kind and helpful to others. The man in the red suit was a true professional, and I will never forget his kindness.

His response was, "Take me to court, I can outlast you."

Mr. Justice: "Or I'll get him."

His response was, "Take me to court, I can outlast you."

Mr. Justice: "Or I'll get him."

The case continued in a similar vein, with Mr. Justice and Mr. Defendant engaging in a verbal duel, each trying to outlast the other. The audience was on the edge of their seats, waiting to see who would come out on top. The case dragged on for hours, with both sides presenting their arguments, evidence, and counter-arguments.

In the end, the judge ruled in favor of Mr. Justice, finding Mr. Defendant guilty of all charges. The room erupted in applause, and Mr. Justice was hailed as a hero. Mr. Defendant, on the other hand, was taken into custody and sent to jail.

The case was a landmark decision, setting a new precedent for legal battles. It was a victory for Mr. Justice, who had proven that with determination and perseverance, one could overcome even the most powerful enemies. The lesson was clear: never underestimate the power of justice, and always stand up for what is right.
A SHIRT FOR A SURF HERO

When every garage in North County had a start-up beachwear company

By Steve Sorensen

Rusty Friendendt was the first name in the surf industry for 30 years, and no one else could cover the spectrum of surf clothing and footwear. Rusty's company was a major player in the world of surfwear, and his influence on the industry cannot be overstated.

The story of Rusty Friendendt is one of innovation and creativity, and his success was due largely to his ability to anticipate the needs of surfers and create products that met those needs. Rusty's designs were not only functional, but they were also stylish, and they helped to shape the look of surfing.

Rusty's first major contribution to the surfwear industry was his line of wetsuits. These suits were made from a new material that was both comfortable and effective in keeping surfers warm in the cold water. Rusty's wetsuits quickly became the standard in the industry, and his reputation as a surfwear innovator grew.

Rusty's company also produced a wide range of surf accessories, including surfboards, surf fins, and surf leashes. His surfboards were known for their performance, and his fins were designed to improve the efficiency of surfers in the water.

In addition to his work in surfwear, Rusty was also a pioneer in the world of surf photography. He was known for his ability to capture the beauty of the ocean and the surfers who rode it, and his work has been featured in numerous publications and exhibitions.

Rusty's influence on the world of surfing and surfwear cannot be overstated. His contributions have helped to shape the industry, and his legacy will continue to inspire surfers for generations to come.

The First Poet in America With Power Brakes

Delmore Schwartz and Friends
By Judith Moore

Delmore Schwartz

Born: May 31, 1907, in the Lower East Side of New York City
Died: October 1, 1966, in Venice, Italy

Schwartz was a poet, art critic, essayist, and translator. He is known for his groundbreaking work in modern American literature and for his influence on the Beat Generation. Schwartz was also a close friend of many prominent literary figures, including the poet T.S. Eliot.

Schwartz's early life was marked by poverty and hardship. His parents were immigrants from Russia who struggled to make ends meet. Despite these circumstances, Schwartz was a gifted writer and artist from a young age. He attended the High School of Commerce in New York City, where he was known for his sharp wit and literary talent.

Schwartz's first major work was a collection of poems titled "The New American" (1928), which was published by the struggling magazine "The New Masses." This work earned him the attention of other prominent writers and established him as a significant figure in the literary world.

Schwartz's friendship with T.S. Eliot, who was then a young poet, was instrumental in his career. Schwartz helped introduce Eliot to the American literary scene and was instrumental in bringing Eliot's work to the United States.

Schwartz's work continued to evolve throughout his life, and he was known for his explorations of modernist themes and techniques. His poetry was often characterized by its use of symbolism, imagery, and allusion, and he was particularly known for his evocative descriptions of New York City.

Schwartz's contributions to literature were recognized with several awards, including the National Book Award for Poetry in 1959. He was also a close friend of many of the most influential figures of his time, including Gertrude Stein, Ezra Pound, and the Beat Generation poets.

In his later years, Schwartz's health declined, and he moved to Italy to seek treatment for his illness. Despite the challenges he faced, Schwartz continued to write and create until his death in 1966.
Don't look for new telephone outlets in San Francisco. There are a lot of them in the Bay Area - in the East Bay, in the Peninsula, in San Jose, in San Bruno, in Sunnyvale. They're all doing a pretty good job. I don't think we're going to see any new ones here. But you never know. Maybe we'll see one in San Francisco someday.

Plays of Magic and Wonder in Smogland By Adam Poffenbraun

The lights dim, the curtain rises, and the magic begins. As the audience settles into their seats, the performers take to the stage. The air is thick with the mist of fog machines, and the audience can feel the coolness that permeates the room. The stage is set with a collection of props, including a large Faraday cage and a holographic display of a Greek philosopher.

The performers begin their act, using a variety of props and techniques to create a sense of wonder and magic. They move gracefully across the stage, their movements precise and deliberate. The audience is captivated as they watch the performers create illusions, using the fog machines to create a misty atmosphere that adds to the magical feel of the production.

One of the highlights of the show is the use of holography. The performers bring a Greek philosopher to life, using a holographic display that is projected onto the stage. The audience watches in amazement as the philosopher talks and moves around, as if he were really there.

The show ends with a final illusion, using the Faraday cage to create a sense of mystery and wonder. The performers disappear into the cage, and the audience is left in awe of what they have just witnessed.

As the curtain falls, the audience is left with a sense of magic and imagination. The performers have created a truly magical experience, using their skills and creativity to transport the audience into a world of wonder and fantasy.
It Doesn't Have to Be a Rembrandt to Be Worth Looking at

At bottom connoisseurship is a talent, not hard science.

The page numbers and dates indicate that the document is from 1994, with articles and advertisements. The content appears to be a mix of art-related articles, news, and business information. The articles discuss various topics related to art and culture, including Rembrandt's works and the art market. The advertisements include offers for dining cruises, discounts on watches, and television commercials and voice-over training. The layout is typical of a newspaper or magazine from that era, with distinct sections for different types of content.

With long hair and flowers and rings. His singing partners, a hearty girl and a manly man, she couldn't cope with the material. She couldn't get the humor out of it. After a year, I was disheartened, and I decided to leave the group.

Nirvana was a very different experience. I was very spontaneous. I didn't have a lot of rules. I had to rely on my instincts. I had to trust that people would be good to me. I had to trust that people would take care of me. I had to trust that people would be honest with me.

Nirvana's second album, released in '88, had a cover that was still from a film by Nazi propagandist Leni Riefenstahl.

Montana is an American rock band fronted by Michael Geary and Todd Murphy. Despite the psychadelic nature of their music, listeners may have trouble identifying the band's name or the album title due to the cover art. The album features a unique design with many small, intricate details that require close inspection.

The Moody Blues' concert in the La Jolla Village Square is a popular event for music lovers. The concert is expected to draw a large crowd, so it's advisable to arrive early to secure your spot. The event will feature a variety of musical performances, with the Moody Blues being the headliners. Tickets are available online or at the venue's box office, and there is also a special ticket offer for students.
The weekly salary made you feel like part of a family. You would see all the bands in the office every Friday, coming in for their wages.

Phone Matches’ Success Stories:
Randall Smith and Stacy Berrington

We ended up having a date and sharing a few laughs at El Primo. Stacy came back to my house and we talked until 2 A.M. We talked on the phone the next day, and used a mutual friend for introductions.

Randall: We had a great conversation and decided to meet again.
Stacy: I felt very comfortable with him, as he was a good listener and easy-going.

Randall: I was very impressed with her honesty and openness.
Stacy: I enjoyed the conversation and was eager to see him again.

Randall: We decided to take things slow and get to know each other better.
Stacy: I was happy to see him again and was looking forward to getting to know him better.

Randall: We continued to date and developed a strong connection.
Stacy: I felt closer to him and enjoyed spending time with him.

Randall: We eventually began a serious relationship and are now engaged.
Stacy: I am very happy to be with him and look forward to our future together.

Randall: I am grateful to Phone Matches for helping us find each other and start our relationship.
Stacy: I am thankful for the platform that allowed me to meet someone special.

Phone Matches is one of those things that works.

Hunting Lease Leads to Death

By Alfredo Cardenas

A San Diego County district attorney official said the hunting death of a 58-year-old man in the Ilopango area of Costa Rica on Saturday, June 15, appears to be an accident.

The victim, identified as John M. B. Smith, was shot while hunting for jungle fowl in the Ilopango area, according to the official.

The official said the investigation is ongoing and that the cause of death is still under investigation.

The official added that the victim had been hunting in the area for several years and was familiar with the terrain.

He said that the weather conditions on the day of the accident were favorable for hunting.

The victim's family members were informed of the death and are being assisted by the local authorities.

The district attorney's office is working closely with the Costa Rican authorities to ensure a thorough investigation.

The official also emphasized the importance of following safety guidelines while hunting.

He said that the district attorney's office is committed to ensuring the safety of residents and visitors alike.

The official concluded by expressing sympathy to the victim's family and friends.

The San Diego City Council will review its options on what to do to provide more water to the city's public schools and facilities, which are currently facing a significant water shortage.

The council members discussed the potential impacts of the drought and the need for an immediate solution.

Councilman John Vargas proposed that the city explore the possibility of importing water from other sources.

Councilwoman Maria Salas suggested that the city implement water conservation measures, such as reducing the water usage in public parks and playgrounds.

Councilman Joe D'Agostino argued in favor of investing in alternative water sources, such as desalination and recycling.

The council will hold a special meeting next week to discuss the matter further and make a decision on the next steps.

The meeting will be held at the city hall, and members of the public are encouraged to attend and voice their opinions.

The city's water supply has been strained due to the ongoing drought, which has resulted in lower water levels in the local reservoirs.

The city has been forced to implement water restrictions, including limiting the amount of water that can be used for certain uses, such as landscaping and commercial purposes.

The city's residents have been asked to conserve water and avoid wasting it.
The Restaurant Time Forgot

By Ed Bedford

We all sit at the counter writing our novel. Time has stopped over this restaurant, but it hasn't stopped. It isn't even moving. No matter how quickly you put a cookie into the shopping cart, it's always there. The universe is static, and our bodies are frozen in time. All of us are here...and yet, somehow, we're not.

The corner seat is a favorite. You sit there and watch the world go by, but it doesn't move. You order a cup of coffee, but it doesn't change. The seats are soft, and the walls are warm. It's like sitting in a time machine.

What's the point? I don't know. It feels good, though. To be a part of something that's not real. To exist in a world where nothing changes.

The restaurant is called the Corner Cafe. It's located in the heart of the city, and it's been there for years. The walls are covered in pictures of old Hollywood stars, and the menu is filled with classic dishes. It's like stepping back in time.

The coffee is good, but it's the atmosphere that makes the Corner Cafe special. The walls are covered in posters of old movies, and the music playing in the background is timeless. It's a place where you can relax and forget about the rest of the world.

I think about the place a lot. I walk by it on the way to work, and I always wonder what's going on inside. Is it still there? Is it still the same? I don't know, but I hope so.

The Corner Cafe is a piece of history, and I'm grateful to have a place like it in my city. It's a reminder that sometimes, even in a world that's changing all the time, there are places that stay the same.
