WHEN YOU DON'T KNOW HOW TO TURN ON YOUR RADIO

Don Norman Is On Your Side  By Jeannette De Wyze

Don Norman wanted a large latte made with decaffeinated coffee and low-fat milk. He told this to the college student behind the counter at the Green Coffee, the coffeehouse set among one of the stands of eucalyptus at UCSD. Then Norman, who's been a professor here for almost 30 years, stepped back to wait. (continued on page 16)
Am I Right?

This letter is a response to the recent letter "Mom's Candy in La Jolla." (November 21) The La Jolla Historical Society has been working very hard to preserve and protect the candy store. My husband and I went by the store on Tuesday night to see if they were open. We saw a sign that read "Closed for the night." I hope they will remain in business for a long time as it is a unique place in La Jolla.

Where Susan Golding Meets the Treadmill

By Bill Mamson

A lot of important feet climb these staircases. Every day, from the 10th floor of the La Jolla Center to its posh offices, San Diego's financial and business leaders take the stairs to their offices. For many, it's not just a way to get to work. It's also a way to keep fit. The stairs are a popular spot for people to work out, and the gym on the 10th floor is often crowded. But for Susan Golding, the stairs are more than just a way to get to her office. She uses them to stay in shape, and she's not alone. Many others do the same, making the stairwell a hub of activity and social interaction. The stairs are a great way to stay healthy and make new friends. And for Susan, they're a daily reminder of her commitment to fitness and well-being.
From Patagonia to the Supreme Court, This Lawyer Takes a RICO Roll

By Bill Manley

San Diego attorney Glenn Stewart Warren is about to do what every lawyer dreams of — and dreads. He’s off to Washington to plead a case before the Supreme Court.

"I don’t walk in under those imposing pillars," says Warren, "and nobody looks at me as if I don’t belong. I can just walk in there, and they can’t even tell I’m a lawyer." Warren, who is often referred to as a "grassroots" lawyer, is expected to make his mark in the courtroom.

Warren is taking on a drug case in which he is representing a former federal prosecutor who was charged with racketeering and conspiracy.

The case involves a drug ring that Warren claims is just one of many across the country. He hopes to use his experience as a grassroots attorney to help bring about change in the justice system.

Warren has been practicing law for over 20 years, and he has a reputation for being a tenacious advocate for his clients.

Educating Peter

Peter Hoang's bestselling novel Smallele's Scent of Love was published last year to a chorus of critical acclaim, with True magazine declaring it the "Best Book of 1993." This makes it a tough act to follow, but the Danish author has managed quite nicely with Borderlines, a very different—yet equally satisfying and brilliant—new novel.

The narrative of this sometimes brutal tale of Peter, an orphan who has spent his young life being denied from questionnaire to institutionalization. For reasons he at first doesn't understand, he is sent to Hoel's Academy, an elite private school with high academic standards. In describing Peter's life at the academy, Hoang gives us a personal portrait of a sexual minority in which the outside world doesn't even exist.

Peter want bullies into others students. Karinna, a young woman, whose mother and father recently died, and August, a predatory boy who maintained his shifty parents. Both Peter and Karinna become convinced that the school has a secret agenda. They don't understand the rules, the strict schedule and, perhaps most importantly, the school's acceptance, despite the long waiting list to get in of what Peter calls "borderlines"—those children like Peter and August who have been somehow damaged.

After listening to a talk by the headmaster on Deviation, Peter begins to understand: it was a love that was what these young men's. It selected none, and some it turned into predators, but for those on the borderline, work was being done to affect the consequences. For Peter, there was a chance. Hoel's Academy was the chance. "Little by little, Peter and Karinna are on the school's frightening experiment in controlling children—far reaching, perhaps even well-intentioned, but almost certain to end in tragic consequences."

Hoang has written a riveting, often suspenseful novel that takes an unfathomable look at the nature of childhood, while challenging many of society's notions about these issues. Borderlines is guaranteed to shock you, and—like all good novels—it forces you to rethink ideas you may have long accepted as true.

Love, War and Politics

As writers, if any, have used the art of fiction to chronicle the American experience in Vietnam better than Tim O'Brien. His National Book Award-winning 1979 novel, Going After Cacciato, has been acknowledged as a masterpiece of contemporary American literature, and The Things They Carried (1984) earned critical praise for its depiction of the difficulness veterans had in readjusting to the changed nation they fought for and returned to. The war again plays a central role in O'Brien's brilliant new novel, though it tells a contemporary story. Vietnam's impact haunts the central characters, as it continues to haunt our nation.

John Wade, once a rising political star, has just suffered a crushing defeat in a race for the Senate, where secrets long buried are suddenly splashed across the front pages. Charges about his conduct in Vietnam effectively ruin his political career. John and his wife Kathy flee to a cabin on a remote Minnesota lake to recover from this devastating blow, to try to put their lives and marriage back together. But after only a few days, Kathy disappears. Was it a boating accident? Has she run away? Did John murder her?

O'Brien is not content to unfold a traditional mystery or simply show us the deterioration of a marriage. Through John and Kathy's story he probes the darker sides of contemporary American life, the violence and anxiety beneath the surface of the placid surface. The shadowy legacy of Vietnam stands here as a symbol for the wrenching changes in our society over the past few decades—alterations in the national consciousness from which we are still reeling.

As the author himself writes away layers of deceit and corruption, we come to see this marriage as a metaphor for America's crumbling value system. O'Brien uses lucid, penetrating prose to examine the darker recesses of the human heart in a beautifully crafted, devastating work of fiction.

Muses help set out this dealing array of verse by providing useful literary and historical insights into the poets and the war itself. Arranged thematically, the poems cover such subjects as the death of Abraham Lincoln, important figures such as Frederick Douglass and Robert E. Lee, sectionalism, abolitionism and mental chaos, and the war's aftermath.
Earth: A Road Map

A person who remembers the sixties remembers The Whole Earth Catalog. Originally published in 1968 by Stewart Brand, a Vietnam vet and former hippie, it became the bible of the counterculture, a how-to guide for everything from building your own log cabin to delivering babies in Zen meditation. It sold more than a million copies, won the National Book award, and was a permanent fixture in dorm rooms and stores across America. Although it was periodically updated in the seventies and eighties, its essential back-to-basics hippie ethos has begun to seep back into contemporary society.

A Tale of Four Mice

A mouse's city mouse/country mouse tale has stood the test of time—over 250 years. It goes to the heart of such childhood (and adult) problems as envy, fear of the unknown and dissatisfaction with one's lot in life. In These Mouse, Country Mouse, Jan Brett illustrates the same moral tale with stunningly detailed paintings, any one of which is worth framing.

Brett has also doubled the traditional cast. In this classic tale, two cousins, each certain that the grass is greener in the other's yard, trade visits and come away with a new appreciation of their old homes. Here, both country and town mice become married couples who trade houses for extended vacations. They come up against a series of unhappy happenings—a broad leaf fall, a mouse trap and a car for the rural couple's rain, snow and an owl for the city dwellers. Each couple dashes back home, wiser and less certain of the other's good fortune.

You might think that any country mouse would be familiar with a car, or that the moonlight glistens in the sun. But the illustrations take you into another world entirely, one that makes you forget any reservations.

The double-page, three-part pictures—a large central painting flanked by two smaller ones—dissolve with a masterful sense of detail, the lines sharp and exact, the colors rich as jam and jelly.

The outdoor country scenes are as peaceful as life in any woodland clearing. Hidden predators peek at the innocent city slickers, and trees look just a little bit like trees.

The city house is filled with the easy, easy joys of Ulrich's clear cupcakes, bath cushions, leather-bound books—all slightly sinister to the country visitors. And the country's clothing, from the town husband's home-smoking jacket to the country woman's grass-green dress, are beautiful enough to make you weep.

Even if there were no words with this story at all, this would still be a picture book that could speak to any age, child or adult.

Once Upon a Purina
Once Upon a Purina is a story about a little boy and his pet dog. Jan Brett's watercolors and illustrations add to the heartwarming story of their friendship.
The Book of Ruth is justly famous for the extraordinary words with which Ruth, a young widow, pledges to merge her fate with that of her aging mother-in-law, Naomi. "Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Despite the plot twists and turns, the story remains a testament to the strength of familial bonds.

In the tradition of the Tanakh, the stories are grouped in chapters that focus on a single verse. Selections include: a selection from the story of Ruth; a selection from the story of Esther; a selection from the story of Job; and a selection from the story of the Twelve Prophets. Each selection is accompanied by an analysis of the text and its historical context.

Dalton's News
By Liza Browne

Recent events in San Diego have been nothing short of exciting - even for those who aren't fans of heart-pumping action. Let's dive into the unfolding stories that have captured the attention of the city and beyond.

Chapter Twenty-Six: The Storm

The last thing I wanted was to soak in the luxurious bath - not with raging waters outside. But I'll do it later..."

"The last thing I want is for them to start rain or anything," Bear declared. "We need to find shelter!"

Bear, Dalton, and Tom bundled up and ran towards the nearest building. The storm was relentless, but they refused to let the elements get the best of them.

Chapter Twenty-Seven: The Flood

When they got to the drop off, their faces were wet and cold. " vlan! We're going to wash the lot of us down. Stop standing here like cattle, and get off the wall! Let's hit the road," Bear said.

"Yeah, let's take a break," Dalton said. "I can't believe we made it to the drop off."

"Don't worry," Bear said. "We'll make it through."

Bear stopped and took a deep breath. He turned towards the group and spoke confidently. "We're going to make it through this."

When the sun came up, the weather had cleared. The group was able to continue on their journey, grateful for the unexpected break. Slowly but surely, the storm subsided, and they continued on their adventure.

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about the ongoing conflict in Kiev and its impact on the local community. The situation is escalating rapidly and it is important that we all come together to support one another.

Sincerely,

HELLA.A.

Use of the word "hella" is a common form of slang in Los Angeles and the surrounding area. It is often used as a substitute for the word "very" or "extremely." In this context, it is used to emphasize the enthusiasm of the reviewer. The reviewer describes a performance or event that left a strong impression on them, using "hella" to express their excitement and positive reaction.

Now Let's Hope He Stays This Way

I mounted to my upper balcony seat with a heavy load of skepticism in my heart.

The schedule of premiere music in San Diego during recent months has not been uneventful. Often, it seems as though every concert or performance I attend is accompanied by some form of disappointment. However, this was not the case with the performance I attended last Thursday evening at the La Jolla Playhouse. The orchestra and the San Diego Symphony's performance of "Jesus Christ Superstar" was nothing short of spectacular. The music was powerful and the acting was top-notch. The audience was captivated by the performance and the atmosphere was electric. It was a night to remember, one that I will cherish for years to come.

We took back from New York, which a great deal of people going to or from the city or the suburbs, and from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, with a pothole in the snow, a snow scene by Monet, its almost total whiteness magically punctuated by a single black magpie sitting on a gate.

In its art gallery, the Metropolitan Museum of Art stands in the middle of a snow scene, its almost total whiteness magically punctuated by a single black magpie sitting on a gate.

The snow scene is a marvelously tight view of the winter atmosphere within which impressionism grew. Yet it is not the dominating color of the scene, but rather the surrounding landscape, which is still rich in color, even with the white snow.

A Different Kind of Trip

It was estimated his body was in the water for a week to ten days.

"Like this is a real trick, if I'm standing here," said Bob Gold about being interviewed in a week's time of the disappearance of friend and fellow musician Dave Lemmer from Chicago. Gold, who was also found with Lemmer's body, said he had been struggling with the loss of Lemmer and that he was trying to stay positive. "I was trying to keep myself busy, doing as much as I could, trying to stay out of the way and just let things happen," Gold said.

What did matters to some folks was an item in the next meeting's agenda. Mark Green, Director of the city's parks and recreation department, said the recommendation came from a group of volunteers who had been working on the project for several months.

Two Decades Of Verse & Vision In '75 Minutes.

The show was divided into two parts: the first to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the National Park Service's establishment of the National Historic Preservation Act, and the second to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the National Park Service itself.

1-800-ASK TOWER

What do you do when you're having a hard time, and you're looking for someone to talk to? You call your parents, of course! But what do you do if you can't reach them, or if you're not comfortable talking to them? You call a professional. And who's the best possible person to talk to? A trained therapist, of course! Therapists are trained to help people work through their problems, and they have experience dealing with a wide range of issues. So if you're having a hard time, don't worry about it. Just do what's right for you."

People are reacting to the news in various ways. Some are feeling a sense of loss and despair, while others are expressing anger and frustration. Still others are simply in shock, unable to process what has happened. The community is coming together to support one another, offering condolences and expressing love and support for those affected by this tragedy.

MUSIC SCENE

Up above, it would be the Friday night of a full moon, the last of the quarter. Under the bright lights, the L.A. Times' music critic told Led Zeppelin that they were "really something." Led Zeppelin will play tonight. The moonlight will shine over the stage, and the sound of the band will fill the air.

On theAve, the town will be alive with music. At the Showroom, a local group will be performing. Across town, the Blue Room will be hosting a new band from London. The crowd will dance the night away to the music, and the energy will be electric.

I Was Dating One of These Fascinating People

We hung out at the Safari, the Caliph, the Lost Knight, the Lamplighter...

The following piece was submitted in response to an advertisement in the Reader soliciting local love

I'm afraid I don't have exact dates before I heard about these people. I can tell you that I heard about them in the early 1980s. They were part of the downtown club scene. I think they were popular at the time. I think they were popular because they were different. They were not like the typical club scene of the time. They were more experimental and edgy. They were more fun to hang out with.

There were the usual gun and drugs at these places, but there was also a lot of music. I remember hearing a lot of punk and hardcore music. I remember hearing a lot of noise and experimental music. I remember hearing a lot of music that was not like the typical club scene of the time. They were more fun to hang out with.

pleasure nostalgic and the moment was very strong. I felt that a great opportunity was being presented to me and I recognized the moment. I knew that I would not be able to let this opportunity slip by.

When I saw the phone, I knew what I had to do. I called my father in New York. He was working late, as usual, but he answered the phone immediately.

"Dad, I have a pretty good idea. I want to buy a plane and fly to New York. I want to see you and try to convince you that I can do this. How about it?" I asked.

My father was surprised, but he said, "Sure, go ahead. I'll be there in a few days."

We met at the airport and I showed him the plane. He was shocked. "What are you doing? This is a very dangerous thing to do. You're too young and inexperienced," he said.

"But Dad, I can do it. I've been flying for a long time and I'm good at it," I replied.

My father took a deep breath and said, "Okay, but be careful. And call me every day." He gave me a hug and we said our goodbyes.

I flew to New York and saw my father. We talked for hours about my plan. He gave me advice and encouragement, but he was still worried about my safety.

"You're taking a huge risk, Son," he said. "But if you're going to do it, I support you.

I'm proud of you for having the courage to try."

The year is 1913: this team of white horses is being looked over by prospective buyers at one of the San Diego Fire Department's periodic livestock auctions. While the caption on the photo laments the "passing" of the fire horses, with "modern fire-fighting apparatus" (it) "thrown out," in reality the remainder of the city's four-legged water-puffers weren't completely phased out of the department until 1919.

That was the year "The Medicine Wagon," San Diego's last horse-drawn firefighting vehicle, was pulled into the City Barns at 29th and B Streets for its retirement. The "Wagon" got its colorful name from its cargo of copper tanks full of bicarbonate of soda and sulfuric acid, the combination of which acted as a rudimentary presurizing system for squirting water on a blaze.

SONG OF THE DUCK

I CAN SEE THE HAIR ON MY LEGS GROW
By Anne Albright

I am now officially marked by a sign of pregnancy known as "Hi G." I have found that my hair growth, especially in the scalp, appears as though I have a thick and glossy coat of hair. I have experienced this phenomenon for several years, and it is quite a sight to behold.

The baby is due in three weeks, and I have been keeping track of its growth. The baby has been growing steadily, and I can feel it move inside me. It is quite an experience to be able to feel the baby moving inside me.

The baby's head is now quite developed, and I can feel it move around inside me. I have been told that the baby's head is quite large, and I am beginning to wonder if it will fit through the birth canal.

I have been trying to prepare myself for the birth, and I have been doing a lot of reading about pregnancy and childbirth. I have found that there are a lot of resources available, and I have been able to find a lot of helpful information.

I am looking forward to meeting the baby and getting to know it. I am sure that it will be a wonderful experience to be able to meet the baby for the first time.

I am also looking forward to getting some rest and relaxation after the birth. I have been working hard to prepare myself for the birth, and I am looking forward to some much-needed rest.

I am grateful for the support of my family and friends, and I am looking forward to sharing this experience with them. I am sure that it will be a wonderful experience for all of us.

The baby is due in three weeks, and I am looking forward to meeting it. I am grateful for the support of my family and friends, and I am looking forward to sharing this experience with them. I am sure that it will be a wonderful experience for all of us.
I Absolutely Love San Diego

By Alfredo Cardenas

The San Diego Independent School Board last month overturned the suspension of six students after a mother filed a complaint with parents last Thursday. The board overturned the suspension after hearing that the students had broken school rules.

The Texas Commission on Fire Protection has recommended that San Diego be moved from an "approved status." The decision comes after a series of inspections that found the city's fire protection system to be inadequate.

Dr. Thomas H. Rees, a professor at the University of Illinois, said, "The city's fire protection system is not adequate." He added, "The city needs to improve its fire protection system before it can be considered "approved status.""

Matteo Cardenas, a student at San Diego High School, has been working on a project to improve the city's fire protection system. He said, "I want to help my city by improving its fire protection system." He added, "I believe that the city should improve its fire protection system to ensure the safety of its citizens."

As of Monday, Michael Jordan was leading the All-Star voting with 1.74 million votes, 7.2% ahead of the second-place vote getter, All-Star guard Tracy McGrady. Jordan leads the voting in the Eastern Conference and is one of 14 players with at least 1 million votes.

One month ago, the Miami Heat were on the verge of eliminating the Chicago Bulls. But after losing Game 4 of their NBA Championship Series, Heat center Shaquille O'Neal said he was "pretty sure" the Bulls were going to win the series in Game 5. O'Neal, who scored 30 points in the Heat's Game 4 victory, said he didn't expect to see much of the Bulls' defense in Game 5.

The Heat, who lost Game 5 of the NBA Championship Series to the Bulls, 122-118, on Wednesday, have been eliminated from the playoffs. The Heat were a 2-1 underdog in the series, and the Bulls were favored to win the championship.

The Heat were led by guard Tim Hardaway, who scored 25 points. Forward Alonzo Mourning added 18 points, while guard Walt Frazier had 13 points.

The Bulls were led by guard Michael Jordan, who scored 37 points. Forward Scottie Pippen added 25 points, while guard Dennis Rodman had 13 points.
