Judith Moore's hatchet-job re-view of Faye Resnick's book Nicole Brown Simpson: The Private Diary of a Life Inter-rupted ("How Not to Buy Your Great-Aunt a Dirty Book," December 1) is smug, arrogant, and sickeningly self-righteous. Does she know O.J., Marcus Allen, and Nicole Brown Simpson personally I guess not because Moore resents not one shred of evidence to refute any of Resnick's assertions. Furthermore, the stereotypes in the book that Moore denounces book that Moore denounces don't come out of thin air, they exist for a reason — most of them are true! If Moore can present scientific evidence, genuine empirical data refut-ing these stereotypes, I'd like to see it. In the meantime, she can get off her left wing, polit-ically correct high horse and get into reality.

Technically, Sanborn is listed as a "consultant" to the Sar as a "consultant" to the San Diego projects and not the sole developer. He says he will be paid a consultant's fee that will come from the development of the project. The development fee will be shared by the Associ-ation for Community Housing Solutions (TACHS), a San Diego-based, nonprofit organi-zation, formed in 1993. TACHS is headed by Jeffrey Schneider, a real estate and land use attorney who works for the down-town law firm of Solomon Ward. "We need Sanborn's ex-Wind. ll my showering goes down the drain as I hit Plan B. Take the bike and cut the monster off at Fourth, where it wastes time going to the Navy base. Five blocks later, a pint of sweat lighter, I zip across the main drag, jump off the bike, lock it to a signpost, just as the machine I've designed my entire morning around rolls up.

The bus. The damned bus. The main disciplinary instrument of my life. The wheels that will get me where I want to go, downtown. But God, if I had a car... If I only had a car.

Two things stop me. Okay, three. (1) Money. It keeps getting drained off elsewhere. (2) Stupid '60s idealism, like, One Man Crusades to Save the Planet by Taking a Diesel-Spewing Bus Downtown Instead of Adding Another Car to the Freeways. Passive resistance. An unknown Gandhi of the Eco-age. And (3) Unaccountably, I just love the damned things. They have been a part of my life from early childhood, when the double-deckers used to take my dad to fight the war at Eisenhower's headquarters in downtown London. And take us through the New Zealand bush to distant cousins on lonely farms. Then take me to and from forgotten little battles around the Golden Triangle in Southeast Asia, then through the daily madness of downtown Cairo in the fly-blown heat of the day. Then, the past ten years, up and down California and around and around San Diego.

Buses not romantic? These are the direct descendants of the stagecoaches of the Wild West. They sort of symbolize life, a bunch of human beings rocking down the road together, hoping like hell the Guy in Charge has his eyes on the road. They're about the last place where you can still meet the human race, where it's no big deal to talk to strangers, shabby, chic, or shady. The conversations, the friendships, the unfettered sleeps, the showmen.

year contracts with the farmers. Ocean Spray, he said, had contracts on most cranberries in Washington state, about 1500 acres of them.

While he stood with his back to the wind and tried to light his pipe (a corncob pipe like the pipe that Harry Truman's nemesis General

So how did cranberries get to Washington? "Not far from where we're parked, a Frenchman planted about 40 acres in vines that he'd hauled from New Jersey. He used Chinese labor along with the mild climate. There were now about 120 cranberry farmers in the Washing-ton counties along the Pacific, and most of them pretty much supported themselves off cranberries.

What, we asked, was this business about bogs? Cranberries, he explained, don't grow in ac-tively wet bogs, but in former bogs that have ei-ther dried up or been drained. What a cranberry needs is acid soil, and if you have that, you can grow them. Why, he said, people tend to think of cranberries as growing in water is that we see photographs of East Coast berries being wet-harvested. The cranberry fields back East are built up so they can be flooded in case there's frost and so they can be flooded for picking. The berries float to the surface of the water, and then mechanical beaters knock them off the

After she got dressed, and they walked out of the house hand in hand, he knew, looking at her, that there was a lot to work out, that there were wounds that were deep and still hurtful. But they weren't ready for that kind of work yet. They just wanted to laugh again. He pulled her to him. They had time, after all. They had the rest of their lives.

Epilogue The destroyer positioned itself off the small group of islands. The signal was sounded, and the gunners swarmed up the ladders for full-ordnance drill. Radar scanned the cliffs, computer sighting systems were engaged. The plugs were unscrewed from the mouths of the cannons.

The wreckage of the cabin cruiser was scattered on the shore rocks. Most of the body of the boat was under about ten feet of water, mostly out of sight. The ropes and canvas from the hold had come in handy — the lean-to was fairly sturdy, and thick bushes at each side formed walls. The front remained open. The cushions from the boat's one bunk and the long seats on deck served as a comfortable bed. A salvaged rain slicker was a perfectly good blanket. At the mouth of the lean-to, a small fire burned. he next time you kick out from shore in La Jolla Cove, fins churning, breath whistling through a snorkel, mask clamped to your forehead and cheeks like a glass abalone, think of Mrs. Billings's infamous midnight swim here in search of Perky. Immortalized by author Max

Miller in his 1948 collection of essays, The Town with the Funny Name, this incident involved a Name, this incident involved a La Jolla matrox known for the wild parties. One evening she went swimming after the object of her affection, "Perky," a man she thought had escaped the amorous clutches that night by sleeping it off in his rowbeat, which was anchored in the cove. Mrs. Billings, duly fortified by the contents of a glass bottle, announced she would be right

I should mention that in this second half of the program, the singers were appropriately dressed in casual tan pants and a diverse collec-tion of sports sackets and ties, some of them fairly sprightly. The costumes nicely expressed the cho-rus's unity as well as the individual singers' personalities, and the causal dress underlined the atmosphere of easygoing good humor that char-acterized the salifful but unpretentious music being performed. The weaknesses were many.
The sound (curiously for a chorus so colorful in other repertoire) was drab. The poly-phonic interweaving, which is the essence of this music, lacked lucidity. Most oppressive of all, there was a square, stolid, plod-ding quality about the rhythm, Linearity has not disappeared in Woman I, as one may see in the figure's outlines. But now much greater emphasis is placed on the violent application of thick paint in rough, theotic, scraped slashes. This applies both to the figure istelf and to the background, which is no longer a neutral ground on which the pitture's linear events take place, but itself a domain of intenes visual and ementional excitement. In fact, the distinction between figure

There is no real dif-ference between the treatment of paint in the figure and in the background; the background comes forward to the surface of the canvas, and he modeling of the figure sinks backward into the ground; and we see something like a unified field of exploding colors, in which the expressive energy is distributed everywhere.

After the woman series, de Kooning turns more and more toward the new features that have made themselves felt so strongly in these com-manding canvases. Violent emotive expression attacks the senses. Figuration almost entirely di

The aesthetics, of course, are those of abstract expressionism, which came into its own in the "New York" school of the 1950s, with painters such as Jackson Pollock, Mark Rothko, Adolf Gottlieb, Philip Guston, Clyfford Still, Han Hofmann, Franz Kline, James Brooks, and Robert Mother well. Each of these artists has well. Each of these artists ha his own recognizable manner but they share abstraction, for-mal freedom, intense emotion painterliness, and an emphasis on the communicated energetic on the communicated energetic gesture of the artist's hand. There are two main impulses behind their work: the expres-sion of personal feeling, and the use of line, color, and texture as autonomous elements of paint-ing, to be judged by their visual and visceral effectiveness alone. The world of nature is ex-cluded, as is an interest in human personality, society, his-tory, ideas, ideology, narrative, myth, religion, or anything at all objective or collective in human experience. All that counts is the individual artist, as a center of emotion and as a maker

This is the culmination of This is the culmination of the romanticism that begins with Jean-Jacques Rousseau more than two centuries ago (reality exists as a projection of the self, and the most important thing about the self is not what it thinks or believes but what it feels), and that develops into the cult of the artist as a sublime goot transcending culture and ego transcending culture and obliged only to his own vision of things. The abstract expresof things. The abstract expres-sionism of which de Kooning is such a characteristic represen-tative is also the culmination of a purely artistic process that has been going on since the 17th Century, the blurring of edges, the substitution of painterliness for linearity, the open revelation of brushstrokes - a process you can see in Rubens, Rembrandt Delacroix and Turner, for ex

I want to add a note about of de Kooning's interest in the female form. Elements of figuration continue to appear among all the slashes of paint, and in the '60s he often achieves a complete fusion of female fig-ures with landscape, with only the slightest literal references to either, yet carrying a per-ceptible conviction of their

I want to add a note about my own experience of this comprehensive exhibit — something that may be merely a matter of my own temperament, or that perhaps may have wider relevance. The individual paintings dazzled me. The power of the colors and the painterity gestures was irresistible. The communication of feelings of the communication of feelings. resence.
There are other develop-ments as well. The palette changes, often becoming warmer, more sensual, more crotic (at least by suggestive im-plication). The tense gestural communication of feeling was always effective: I always sensed violence is attenuated, giving way to a relative lightness and ease. In the '80s, there is a remyself to be in front of an em bodied emotional atmosphere, one that I could identify — at ease. In the '80s, there is a re-markable return to the lyrisans and linearity of paintings like fire fishand of rour decades be-fore fishand of rour decades be-sweeping, curvilinear, outlined hapes on a neutral ground. The suggestions of landscape and bodies have lost all trace of and bodies have lost all trace of conveyed through the flowing quality of the lines and the sparse yet blittle color palette. Above all, these paintings ra-diates an attemptive to one that I could identify—at least intutively and pre-ver-bally—as painful or joyful, angry or accepting. There was never a sense that anyone else but de kooning could have painted these paintings what-even the side and mood, they all eventually looked like eman-tions of the single personality in the country of the country of the Very many of them stude me as beautiful—beautiful in the very broad sense of visually ex-citing and pleasing. citing and pleasing.
Nevertheless, the experience of 78 such paintings, all at once, had its negative effects. The more of these individually beautiful pictures I looked at, the more I became oppressed by what I cannot help calling their emotional by what I cannot help calling their emptiness. The emotional states of Willem de Kooning, varied as they are throughout his career, are just not of that great interest to me. The ex-pressive brushstrokes and the exquisite color sense are not sufficient to satisfy my deeper pened for a deeper health. need for a deeper beauty. Rubens, Rembrandt, Delacroix, and Turner give me compara-bly authoritative use of color and texture, co.nparably pow erful emotional experies erful emotional experience, and a comparably sure sense of the personality behind the paintings. There is nothing de Kooning does that they do not do, as well or better. But they give me things de Koon ing cannot: a grasp on external reality as something objectively existent; a precise attachment of emotional states to specific persons, objects, and events; and a perception of personal feelings and objective reality within a larger understanding of the meaning, value, and purpose meaning, value, and purpose of life. Those paintings help me to live. De Kooning's paintings to live. De Kooning's paintings, finally, are merely entertaining. Let me go even further in expressing my skepticism about this modern icon of the art world (and about abstract ex-pressionism in general). I retract what I just said about de Kooning and Rubens et al baying a comparable mastery having a comparable mastery of the techniques of painting. The truth is that those old mas ters painted a lot better than de Kooning ever has done. Their composition is better, heir color is better, their line is better, their textures are better, heir subdety in the use of paint is at a far higher level than de Kooning at his best has ever attained. He is, of course, an artist of undoubted talent, as I have tried to indicate. But he isn' in the class of those great rs painted a lot better than isn't in the class of those great artists whose works fill the Met's galleries of European painting through the 19th Century.

The horrible thing is that he is just about the best the sec ond half of our own century has to offer.

It seems to me that whether listen casually or carefully the narrator is always. carefully the narrator is always one step ahead of me, both in what he's saying and in the tone or implication of it, is he insane? sympathetic? am I being threatened? am I a stranger, eavesdropper, friend, ex-lover? innocent victim of obsession?

And so forth. And so forth.

It sounds like I'm talking about the words, and I am, but it's also the subtle intelligence (and beauty) of the musical structure that supports the complexity here, that allows these tyrical phrases to take on so many shifting meanings. What's

And as I get to a deeper level of my relationiarity of the voice.

This Perfect World is music — 12 songs, some kind of intricate suite — to lose and find yourself in. And lose and find and find and lose som more. Words brilliantly crafted, more. And we can put aside Dicklosure very soon, even though it is assured of being as overrated—if not in actual scalaim, at least in amount of attention—as Parry Levinson's previous movie. Jimmy Hollywood, was underrated. The frequency of the phrase "penis in her mouth," or its variants, will see to Calendar MOVIES

I must confess straightaway that I did not understand the movie. Maybe the tonnage of computer mumbo-jumbo overloaded my liberal-arts brain. In any event, when it comes to light (a dim, glimmering light at most) that Boss Lady's sexual assault on Lower Man on the Totem Pole was not motivated by lust, but was rather not motivated by lust, but was rather a part of a calculated scheme to get rid of him, I did not see why it had been thought desirable to be rid of him, or why it was deemed necessary to go to such lengths, or what would have be-come of the scheme if he had not resisted her advances. What is "she" ging to do to him" More simply, the world of computers and corporate mergers and office politics tends to be a major bore on screen, even allowing a few points of credit for the sleek glassy opulence of the locales. That's why we have fairly tales, vampire myths, science fiction. Those are, al-most always, about power, too.

Heavenly Creatures. True-crime story, out of New Zealand, about two arrly-adolescent schoolgirls who form an "unwholesome attachment" and who bludgeon one of their mothers o death when the two of them are about to be forcibly pried apart. (One of the girls, so I hear, grew up in real life to be the mystery novelist, Anne Perry.) Directed with enormous energy by Peter Jackson, of Dead-Alive e or infamy, it is neither a very se rious treatment of the case, aiming to weigh the human cost of it, nor a very deep treatment, aiming at psychological elucidation. The recklessness and actlessness of it, almost lohn Watersy in impertinence, seem to put it on the passionate teens. (And yet there is no attempt to line up their enshrined hero-figures with latter-day tastes: Mario Lanza, James Mason, Mel Fer-, and "absolutely not Orson Welles, the most hideous man alive.") The period, come in for conventional period, come in for conventional adults, as well as the Fifties time-period, come in for conventional caricature: "Homosexuality!" — the pontificator's mouth fills the entire screen — "I agree, Mrs. Rieper, it's not a very pleasant word." But although the movie might not do justice to the "real story," it does justice to the "real story," it does justice to the most acry.

the voice-over diary excerpts ("real" ones), and the excursions into a make-believe universe (peopled with god-awful lifesized clay figures) prove to be highly efficient storytelling devices, propelling the action forward by leaps and bounds, and bypassing the brick-by-brick tedium of the conby leaps and bounds, and bypassing the brick-by-brick tedium of the conscientious nonfictionist. Boys Life — Collection of three homo-crotic short films, Brian Sloan's Pool Days, Raoul O'Donnell's A Friend of Dorothywand Robert Lee King's Disc Years. (KEN. 12/16 THROUGH 23)

Bringing UF Baby — Screwhall comedy involving, among others, a paleontologiat, a society glist with an uncorrectable high opinion of berneff and an unstoppathe word flow, a fast terries who has stolers and being an experiment of the participation of the game hauter, and a pet leopard whose temper can be confided by the singing of 11 Can't Give You Anrything But Love, Buly, all of whom, plus others, come together at top wolame for the finale in the abentiff of comes or much from Howard Hewkis' ditop volume for the finale in the sheriff's of fice. The infectiousness of the thing doesn' come so much from Howard Hawks's di-rectorial touch (he's normally light on drama and ham-handed on comedy), but from the perfectly natural, unselfconscious and idiosyncratic sense of humor. What Hawks finds funny is easy to identify be-cause of the persistent re-surfacing of the same ideas in other movies: a bookworm for a hero: Cary Grant in women's clothing: a woman oblivious to the fact that the back of her dress is missing; the nagging repeti-tion of a person's name until if begins to sound like an accusation, and so forth.

Many of my evenings at this first Piret's were made magical by the talents of ches's sixting from France or the East Coast. Piret's menu, French/Californian, was innovative; the pleasure gif gave me rarely abated. When Piret's was sold some years ago, I was desplate. its closing was a loss to all of us.

This brings me to La Bamba, which now occupies the site. The name appears in red script above the awnings of the building, now painted white with agua and black timi. La Bamba is op-erated by Dan Thomas, who owns the Gathering, right across the street on the restaurant's Goldfinch side.

when I stepped inside La Bamba. I was shocked by the physical transformation. The replaced with a grey blue flat carpet, wooden chairs with four back slats are painted a steel grey; the tables have efficient, easy to-clean surfaces in a dull red. The display counter has given way to a bar surrounded by high stocks. Blinding neon signs on the rear wall spell out Bud Light. Budwelver, and Das Egus.

If you never visited the site's former occupants, you may be content with La Bamba's interior. As for me, I ddn't know whether the decor was meant to resemble a dimyl lit neighborhood bar, a Mesican-style cantina, or a best of the content of the property of the prop western. However, my escort, who was raised in Mexico City, asked me after he tasted the food, "What kind of cooking is this? Is this what you street seconpany in senery dist $5.99 / friend, a mele masen, was not too enchanted with the chicken enchlanda, which is topped with cheese and roasted mole sauce (86.95). The sauce is not a traditional mole based on chiles and chocolate. We found it to be too sweet, and not thick enough, Perhaps the chef's desire to keep every item light and healthy is the reason for this departure from tradi-tion. We concluded our meal with a smooth bread pudding with a smooth bread pudding covered with a featulial cream overed with a tequila crean

Everyone on La Bamba's staff tries hard to please. However, I'm very influenced by aesthetics. I found the beer signs tacky, and the room's weird illumination reminded me of Picasso's blue period. This can be changed. I hope it will.

Phone Matches Success Stories:

Linda Forcier & Eric Lieberman

SORT OF A REBEL, looking for a woman that, like myself, cannot be described 50 words. I'm 5:77, 26, spontaneous, sincere, multidimensional, intellectual, like 190 to clubs or lounge around like a slug 1 speak French and my father is the ty Gleaner to the Stars. Call me.

This was my third Phone Matches 1M ad. The first one was really sappy.

Sincere, caring, warm, passionale man seeks same." Or something like that. I got a lot of women looking for this boring, pensive person. But I wanted to appeal to more quirky people. So the second ad-said. "Bright green dreadlocks, hair changes color weekly."

India: I had just moved to San Diego before I answered Fric's ad and was working a lot of hours. The people at my job were mostly married and/or old men. I was hoping to find some different kinds of people through the Reader.

Enc: We met for the first time in front of the ticket booth at the Belmont Park roller coaster, Over the phone I told her about the green dreadlocks, and I said, "Look, if you think I look like an idoot, just tell me. Please don't leave me standing there."

Janua: Lalmost did. I guess I had accepted some level of green hair, but 4 (din't expect neon green, Eric looked so happy, though. He had this big smile on his face. I thought, "Well, if he's that well adjusted,..."

Line: On our first date, after we had dinner and watched TV until three o'clock in the morning. I asked if I could kiss her. She said. "No: I said. "Will you ever want to kiss me?" She said. "I don't know. Maybe."

Linda: At that point I was just looking for friends. After Eric, I answered some other Phone Matches M ads. The men were nice, but too conservative.

Eric: On our third date I took her up to Mt. Soledad, which a total make-out place

Eric: She finally kissed me just to get me to stop talking about it. After that, we were O.K. Linda: I invited Eric over for dinner one night, and he met my sister and her husband. By that time he had dyed his hair daffodil yellow. They thought he was ... interesting.

Eric: My dad really is a dry cleaner to the stars. He runs this big industrial dry-cleaning operation in Ohio. He did the Beatles, Elvis Sinatra, Liberace....

Linda: The first time we went to the movies, Eric wanted to sit in the front row. I like to sit towards the back.

Eric: We spent our first two months pointing out all the ways we're not alike. I have a dry, sarcastic sense of humor Linda prefers slapstick. I used to eat Mexican food almost every night. Linda doesn't really like Mexican food.

Linda: But this is all superficial stuff. Our core values are aligned. We're both half French. And we were born the same day.

Eric: On our first birthday together, we ate at five different Denny's restaurants. They give you a free meal when it's your birthday, but they expect you to bring along someone else who has to pay.

Linda: That's what I like about Eric. He has new ideas.

Eric: In August I'm entering a Ph.D. program in industrial psychology. We're moving to New York City together.

Linda: I've always wanted to enroll in art school, and I can't imagine a better place to go. Or a better person to go with.

"Today I'm going to talk about nurturing self-esteem in children. Self-esteem is something children ran't create in themselves. It's a gift from parents to their children." Meineke cautioned against viewing self-esteem as a means to an end: i.e., if my child has strong self esteem, she'll get good grades in school. Rather, "Having positive self-esteem is itself being successful in school. Rather, "Having positive self-esteem is itself being successful in life." Meineke quoted an old chest-nut. "There are two things we can give our children. One is roots, the other wings. By giving children It wasn't hard to figure out where the Parent & Child Expo was at the Convention Center. From the parking lot I just walked upstream nto the river of couples pushing strollers and corralling older childre back toward their cars. I felt a little the an ant working its way toward the picnic. Everyone carried big, shirp bags bearing the Parents shirp bags bearing the Parents beautiful baby and her model the picnic state of the picnic shirp bags bulged with free samples and brochures. The bags bulged with free samples and brochures. I make the soaring-rick the anti-nest than the picnic. Row after owe of display bouths touted everything from Bear Botton Baby Products to the Family Chronopactic filled the wide saides and the PA spit filled the part of the PA spit filled the wide saides and the PA spit filled the part of the PA spit back toward their cars. neighborhood, church, school — and place ritual and tradition at the center of those communities. Children love ritual and tradition. For example, when my children started school, we always celebrated report card time by going to Swensen's for ice cream. It was a time to review their accomplishments and append time as a family. It was little girl named Rosanne please come to the main entrance. Rosanne is waiting for you."

On a small stage in one corner of the expo, a man in a suit shuffled merovoody through his notes while a family counselor from Solana Beach looks like he could have been a song leader at BYU or some other religious, clean-cut kind of college. After his introduction, he held this introduction, he had the site of the proposed of the propose own spiritual insights and experiences with your children."

Meineke defined "wings" as giving children the freedom and encouragement to discover life for giving children wings included giving them time and attention, respecting their privacy, and respecting their individual differences. Meinde also emphasized disciplining children in emphasized disciplining children way. "Parents need to be a lot less way." Parents need to be a lot less way. "Parents need to be a lot less word of the child needs to know our anger. The child doesn't need your anger. The child needs to know when they've crossed the line."

Encourage and praise your children, but do so sparingly.
Meineke thinks praise is often overdone. "You'll know your children have wings when they can encourage and praise themselves," said Meineke. Meineke's final encourage and praise themselves, said Meineke. Meineke's final suggestion to give your child wings your children. "One time I was driving along the coast with my your children." O'ne time I was driving along the coast with my then-eight-year-old son. The sun was out, the water was sparkling blue. It was a beautiful day. I couldn't help myself. I just let out a big hood. My you're a two-sided kind off guy. When I asked him what he meant, he said. They have won nine games in a row, averaging 32 points per game. It is rightening. I haven't seen any team, any year, play as well. Dallas head coach Barry "Good Times" Switzer understands, That team [San Francisco] is a machine. I believe they are playing even better now than they did when we saw them. Their offensive execution is pretty incredible. I was just sick after the way we lost to the Browns. Watching the 49ers didn't help me much."

Human tank Natrone Means has been averaging 4.2 yards a carry. In the first half of Sunday's game his average was 2.7 yards per carry. The Chargers went into the contest with two ideas: Means running, and a defense that could keep them in the game. Neither idea worked. Stan Humphries is four weeks into human melt-Humphries is four weeks into human melt-down, and getting abakier every week. So that leaves Means as entire offensive force. Then you look at the 49ers, a team with a full clip to play with. For openers: Young, Rice, Watters, Taylor, Young spain, and Dion Sanders who plays defensive him as part of the offensive. How good is Dion Sanders? In last sunday's game Sanders lade the 49ers with seven tackles, then scored the final suchdown. Sanders had five interceptions on the season. Of the 28 teams in the NFL, 37 are still eligible for the playoffs. including dark horse, USC.

Bettors have been loading up on New England for the last year. With Parcells as coach and Drew Bledose as starting quarterback, New England has been feeding a lot of families this year. But nobody thought, with two games left to play, they do be one game back in the AFC East. After a 3-6 start, the Patriots are on a five-game winning roll. Amazing. The best news out of Sunday's football was the loss of the Buffalo Bills to Minnesota 21-17. We could be looking down the barrel at the first Super Bowl in the 1990s without a Thurman Thomas fumble. However, Buffalo is the walking undead of professional football; that beast still controls its fate. If the Bills win their last two games they are THE VEGAS LINE

hal toothait, that beast sturt controls that the thills with that two only hope that the fills with the that two only hope that New England or Indianapolis will do what New England or Indianapolis will do what Decks and counting. Things are getting downright depressing around town. Los Angelos Time witter Mike Downey notes, Angelos Time witter Mike Downey notes, the properties of the things of the broke. The Raiders might leave. Their stadium is broken. The Dodgers are on strike. The Lakers play to two thirds a possible of the things of the things of the capacity. Shools everywhere are dropping sports.

Why not, they already dropped with, reading, bintory, and literature.

Why not, they already dropped math, reading, history, and literature. Of the 19 — count 'em — 19 bowls coming to a TV set near you, the one with the largest spread is SoCial's Rose Bowl where Penn State is favored by 17½ points over the Oregon Ducks. Quack, quack.
