Trade missions can be valuable because efforts to woo shippers "are a lot more effec-tive if you go to their em-barkation port and establish personal contact," he says, but at the same time, "you have to decide how many people really have to go, and at which point does it become financially in efficient." As for the confer-ences and expositions port commissioners traveled to in 1994, Newman asys, "I've never been to one, so I don't know whether they are events at which business is done or whether they are social occa-sions. It's only the people who have been there who know. As far as McDade is con-traved should be moot. First of all, bear in mind that the port is part government entity and part business enterprise, and uses no tax funds," he says.

"The money being spent is money being earned by the port operations. And the other thing is that those who think in terms of junkets must also realize the enormous amount of hours put into San Diego by port commissioners."

You take in views of '30s stucco storefronts and '70s convenience store strip malls, last night's graffiti, two (or three? is she?) hookers, two car washes, women veiled head to-toe in bright pink or turquoise, five supermarkets, two homeless men (it's a chilly day), potholes, three black boys in Kaiders jackets, hopeful immigrant storekeepers, embit-tered old-timers. The old-timers are embittered because they remember University Avenue's glory years. But the glory they recall was largely manufactured in memory. University Avenue never fulfilled its initial promise.

The avenue was built during the real estate boom of the 1880s. USC planned a San Diego College of Arts, to be erected near Normal Street and Campus Avenue. The development of businesses and housing near the site became University Heights; the principal east-west artery serving the neighborhood was named University Avenue.

Three months after the land went on sale, values plur meted for lack of interest. The university abandoned its plans. The cable car company serving the district went bus as well (nevertheless, city ordinance continued to forbid hitching a horse anywhere along University Avenue). Later, housing and business districts developed and expanded along its length, especially during the World War II housing short-age. The prosperity didn't last. Despite massive redevelopment in the late '50s, by the '60s, the avenue was dving, In 1962, 50 percent of the avenue's storefronts stood empty. Twenty-five years ago, sporadic redevelopment efforts improved University's prospects, at least in spots. Fifteen years ago, many of those efforts had failed. Now, a poorer class of entrepreneur has moved in. They manage to scrape together the capital to start small restaurants or retail shops in the decaying buildings built by their predecessors; the developers and r money have fled north along the 1-15 corridor

Washington Street to Park Boulevard / By John Brizzolara

I dreamed San Diego Bay rose hundreds of feet, crested the top of the Washington Strete bill, and flowed down University drown-ing people and neon and care headlights moved beneath the waters in a ponderous current. When the waters receded, there was a mark on the Union Bank building and the Pac Bell building like a bathitut ring. People shoot themselves like wet dogs and went on about their business as the trough beneath the bridge past Park stretch and the proper of the small black with Texas Street as the far the proper of the small black with Texas Street as tis far shore.

Southeast, behind the gas station, a woman in Somals dress crosses, slow-hipped, the glaring acres of Kmart's parking lot (barren as any desert in her past). Far behind her, the big red plastic K dominates the view. The kids at the bus stop are staring at that K, some of them, just like I used to do.

All this wide-open sky and range-spe uphan plasming.

All this wide-open sky and grand-scale urban planning made me think of a movie West-ern. The K could have been some ranch's brand. East from here, the bluffs north and south of University approach one another, narrowing in on what was once Chollas Creek's bed — perfect Choilas Creek's bed — perfect scene for cattle rusting, ambush by hostile tribes or bad guys. The open sewer as which the creek functioned had been cov-ered in a fit of '50s optimism, covered and paved with all this glorious Kmart parking lot, and the hillsides coated with bumpy gray segment—an exposion pre-

Marilyn & Larry Garrisi

ATTRACTIVE, 5'5", classy Italian lady, outgoing, fun-loving, Christ-centered Christian. Enjoy dancing, beach walks, humor, movies, cooking, dining, friendship, romance with nonsmoking gentleman, 45+12.

Marilyn: I had been going to Christian Singles events for three or four years, but I never found anyone. It seemed like the men my age were looking for women half their age. I became frustrated and lonely.

Larry: I was going through a divorce at the time, and I decided to put it all behind me, to get out of my sad mod and start having fun.

Murilin: When Larry left a message on my voice mail, he said he was legally blind. Of course I was concerned about that. But he also mentioned that he owned and operated his own cafeteria, so I figured he couldn't be that helpless.

Larry: I have 10 percent vision, so I was able to scan the Phone Matches" ads. Marilyn's ad popped out at me - especially the word "Bulain." When she called me back, we talked for a long time. I told her I couldn't drive. I said: "If you want to go out with me, voil il have to pick me up."

Marilyn: That was a big issue with me because I hate to drive.

Larry: But then we went to a Chinese restaurant and Marilyn's fortune cooke said. "Your place in the path of life is in the driver's seat."

Marilyn: Larry is pretty independent - more than most men, I think. Also, he's a lot of fun. I have friends who own Party Tyrne, a karaoke company, and we went to see them perform one night at the Hilton in Mission Bay. Larry got up there and started singing, even though he couldn't read all the words. He was a big hit. He even led the conga line.

Larry: I got to wear a hat with bananas and grapes on it.

Marilyn: That night my friend said, "If you two ever get married.

I want you to do it at my house. We'll put up a gazebo."

Larry: That's exactly what happened on March 19, 1994. It turned out really nice.

Marilyn: I almost called the wedding off a couple of times.

I've been married before, and I didn't want to make another mistake. But I always felt so comfortable around Larry, and I also liked his sensitivity and his thoughfulness.

Larry: Long before she met me, Marilyn made this list of 25 qualities she was looking for in a man.

Marilyn: Larry has 23 of them.

Larry: Now that we're married, I've come to realize what a real gem I have. After everything is said and done, I feel that God put us together.

Marilyn: But sometimes you have to help a little.
Before I node out my Phone Matches" ad people overe some kind of an effort. Finding someone to love as

Music lovers refer to PULSE! for choice record reviews

PULSEE is a magazine for culture vultures in general, and music lovers in particular. Its editorial mission is critical. To alert readers to the finest sonic (and visual) goods on the market; to open their eyes and ears to the new and innovative, to critically assess (and sometimes deflate) currently "hyped" artists and products. Each issue is written with a coherent, consistent voice, with a palpable sense of tradition and an ear bent on new sounds.

PULSE! made its debut at Tower Records/Video in 1983. Today, it continues to explore every variety of ment-music, film, video, games, multimedia. It is a magazine for people whose level of curiosity and sophistication goes beyond the ordinary and average, whose broad tastes are satisfied by the selection that only Tower has to offer.

PULSEE explores artistic expression of every variety—at last count, the editorial calendar included more than 50 categories of music. With news, reviews and interviews from the film and video world, monthly features on significant trends in multimedia and consumer electronics, and one of the most exhaustive lists of new releases to be found anywhere, readers enjoy complete entertainment coverage. Monthly special reports have included jazz, blues, country, world music, hip-hop, Latin, home entertainment, independent labels, children's entertainment and CD-ROM.

Based and produced in London, Tokyo and Taiper respectively, Top. BOUNCE and PASS share PULSE! editorial goals, with coverage reflecting their cwn national perspectives.

CLASSICAL PULSE! is designed to provide the classical listener with the latest information on the vast array of newly released classical recordings in audio and video formats. Each issue is packed with over 100 erudite, lively reviews in five fundamental categories: Orchestral, Chamber/Solo, Opera, Non-Opera Vocal and Video/Laserdisc. The selections span centuries of musical history and myriad varieties of performance style and repertoire. Like Pulse!, its classical sister regularly interviews the most creative, popular and noteworthy musicians, composers, singers and conductors in the field. Lengthy features and deeply-felt opinion pieces explore subjects of real importance to classical listeners, from the tate of the American symphony orchestra to trends in classical recordings.

PULSE! and CLASSICAL PULSE! are available free at every Tower store. For readers' can be found in each of the magazines. They can be accessed as well through the Electronic Newssiand, available free, gopher at internet.com. PULSE! will be available online beginning mid-year on America Online.
