Crazy Verdi Your classical music reviewer. lonathan Saville, spends three-fourths of his review of Verdi's Macheth (Classical Music. April 6) saying that a) be doesn't like the opera; b) he doesn't like the opera; b) he doesn't understand why Verdi was so crazy to write an opera about Macbeth; c) he s read all the relevant sources and listened to all the first-rate recordings; and d) he still doesn't like Macbeth. In fairness to the San Diece Opera. ness to the San Diego Opera, the singers, and Verdi, let me now review the performance, at least as my husband and i heard and saw it at the soldout Sunday matinee (April 2), also broadcast over KFSD on

also broadcast over KFSD on April 11.

Verdi, these days, like Shakespeare, is hard to do well. It takes great singers (in short supply), but above all it takes great conductors who know how to drive this music (nothing can nut one to skeep (nothing can put one to sleep faster than a Traviata, say, taken at cautious, Richard Bonynge-like tempi), James Levine, Giuseppe Sinopoli, Claudio Abbado, and Ric-cardo Muti are among the few today who can conduct these operas with any conviction. Edoardo Muller — who was for many years a teacher at La Scala's School for Advanced Scala's School for Advanced Studies — is another, and except when he slowed down to help a singer (for example, in Lady Macbeth's sieep-walking scene) he conducted splendidly. Verdi's Macbeth is mainly school exerces and Sen Disso-

Verdi's Macbeth is mainly a choral open, and San Diego Open's chorus was also much to be admired. The wirches, who can often seem silly, both ang and moved with conviction. It was a pleasure not to see the typical "dancing around the boiling cauddron scene, and the wirches" appearance in Macbeth's study for their second prophesy (rather than in the forest was amounted in coordinates). a genuine directorial inspira-tion and very effective. Only in the banquet scene was their

But the chorus imale and femalle) was most potent in the concerted endings to Acts I and II — particularly in Act I, with its a appella beginning, blossoming into a scene Verdi was not to repeat until Simon Boccanegra and Otello. In fact, no of the things that makes Macheth so fascinating to the modern listener are the makes Macheib so fascinating to the modern listener are the foreshadowings of Verdi's later developments as a composer; a duel between Macheth and Lafty Macheth, for example, foreshadows the first vengeance duet between Orello and lago at the end of Verdi's areer.

husband and I have heard of-ten in the past in both Santa Fe and San Francisco, is enter-ing the prime of his career. His baritone, which was always sturdy and well-produced, has suddenly become warm and pliable. While still not the pitable. While still not the equal of the great Leonard Warren, he already sounds better than Renato Bruson, when that baritone was in his prime. I believe he will have a great career and that Macbeth

Doer Matthew-Alice.

When I was serving a sentence in the Nasy in the 70s, there was a salty names floating around it lancepoin as goapel. First. The Coronado bridge is disigned to float in case of a collapse of that the product could early unbolick the channel leading out of the 33rd. The foreign earlier that they could early after they to. The entire of the readous that they could early after thy to so. Therefore arounding the fatting bridge. What y M.A.?

Dear Matthew Aice:
A friend of since told me that the Coronado bridge and the Silver Strand are lined with explaines to that in case of sixe they can Se blown up and the Navy ships can get our faster. It this rure? It is, is there any chance that we may accidentally be blown to bits while driving on the bridge;

Personally, I'd be more concerned about bands of disgruntled Coronadary (Coronadore) concondedered supung us of the eyan like its cans of a fence. Most of the town has been unhapped about the bridge ance San Degrant first started discussing in the most 18-50 about the bridge ance San Degrant first started discussing in the most 18-50 the burbor of the bridge were subeaged. Soor course, there is a contingency plan, Special units of the New are trained to clear bridge debts in case of a collapse, and that does include planing explosives in predetermined locations to break up the fallen structure and make it easier to remove. All this was considered unity in the higher design, but there is no dynamize stratally built into it. As for rumors about 18-bowing up the Strand, could they come from the on-again of again discussions about cutting a chumed cross its soral bloots angel in and our of the larber faster. This is more a civilian than a militare plan, and for the moment, the bivey is against a critical trained to the control of the control of he disembarked on the docks at the foot of Broadway. I rode in an airporter to the care rental office across from the Naval Training Center, watching the unfamiliar freeway ribbons unroll, skirting downtown, and passing airplane hangars. My only fellow passenger, a 50ish business executive in a suit, loosens up as we chat He tells me he left San Diego when he was 19 to go to college at UC-Berkeley. He graduated in time to miss the hippies, he says. As a kel din San Diego the drive to the beach was simple. "Now it's all freeways." He says he doesn't miss it.

To get to Coronado, where Kate had her first nursery (with two partners) and ran the florist shop at the Hotel Del Coronado, Kate would have taken the ferry. Her white horse, Charlie, who made the round trip at least once a day, got so wobbly from seasickness as soon as he stepped onto the ferry that Alice Rainford, Kate's devoted assistant, feared he'd fall down between the traces. Once on shore, he acted like a colt.

"The brightest of the band is gone. We do not know how soon it may be our turn. Oh, death thou art so mesterious [sic] & dreadful. I cannot satisfy my mind... Death is birth."

Kate wrote that in her diary, mourning for her 19-year-old friend, Willie Clayton, who died of a gruesome, unnamed disease. Doctors finally had to amputate his leg. "After the operation the Dr. came back & took away blood & sewed it completely up & he suffered intensely," Kate writes. The year was 1877, and Kate Sessions had lost

The year was 1877, and Kate Sessions had lost the man who may have been the only one she loved. She was about to turn 20.

"(The things the town has forgotten live somewhere still...lin the ashes of a heart." the late critic and novelist Mark Schorer wrote in A House Too Old, his historical epic novel about his Wisconsin historical.

In the ashes of Kate Sessions's heart can be found some truths about San Diego, her adopted home, and herself. Sure, there are cascades of newspaper clippings, affectionate profiles, plant lists, gardening columns, civic awards, tree-planting photos, diaries, letters, and citations that she and others collected about her. But they are overshadowed by what isn't there.

As Schorer warned, "The villagers...turned to old newspapers and to documents in the library, and they, they thought, found that which they were searching; but there are words never printed in newspapers, events not recorded in the documents stored in libraries, and if a forgetter comes at last to revive an ancient dream, he will not find it" without that crucial ingredient, "the words written still in a scar."

In her highly disciplined life, Kate did her best to cover over the scar. She shaped herself into a thoroughly public woman and imposed the strictest limits on her private feelings. "A waste of time," they were.

Eastertime 55 years ago, Kate was laid to rest in the earth she knew so well. As she would have expected, with a few venerable exceptions, her plantings are all but gone. Highways rip up landscapes; houses are torn down and with them the gardens that made them homes; trees are killed by bad pruning or not enough water, or they simply die of old age.

Her most visible monument has made her a staple of burist brochures. Like an oversized statue from Soviet Russia, she looms, smooth-featured, familiar, benign: the officially sanctified "Mother of Balboa

That title would make the modest Kate squim, but otherwise she'o be pleased at how she's been frozen in the amber of civic virtue. For her, gardening was a public act, a duty even.

Kate extended her reach well beyond the potting shed. She lobbied planning loards and posed for dedications (though she hated having her picture taken); she was a lifelong garden columnist/correspondent for the San Diego Union and later the influential San Diego-based magazine California Garden, which kept her name before the

"There's not much left," veteran San Diego horticulturist Lucy Warren agrees when I talk about trying to find Kate. Most of her designs were rough stoches, usually on the backs of old envolpes.

"She was an intuitive gardener, like so many of us... Unfortunately, many plants have shorter lifespans than see do," Warren says.

"In a way she was more important as a horticulturist than a gardener," says David Streatfield in an interview from his office at the University of Washington, Seattle, where he chairs the

In his latest book, California Gardens: Creating a New Eden (Abbeville Press, 1994), he writes about the Albatros houses and another of Kate's gardens. In his conclusion, he ranks Kate among, "pioneering figures" like Theodore Payne, Lockwood de Forest, and Thomas Church, who helped California find is own garden

She's important because "she was very much against the she's important occause she was very much against the fashionable tendency for creating styles from all over the world. She was a pioneer in recognizing that San Diego was a droughty area, "he says. Her reputation was enhanced by her association with Gill and other Arts & Crafts advocates. In his book, Streatfield explains how Kate interpreted that aesthetic differently than her counterparts did in Berkeley, where they made the hills shaggy and shingle-covered. Streatfield uses the oss houses as an example.

They are a "completely different form of hillside garden....

The mesalike landscape... with its steep canyons lacked native trees and never developed the luxuriantly wooded character of the Berkeley hills. These southern hillside gardens featured a variety of drought-tolerant plants and low walls built of local cobbles or continue to be willing to do the work, particularly after Rodda mowed to Bethlehem and lost the-Pennsylvania Duch also supply. In 1933 no mechanical means existed for making three-dimensional marshmallow figures. It took a while, she sald, to figure out the process. "But the payoff was an enormously increased speed in which Peeps could be made."

Yellow Peeps are made one day, white another, pink another, and now on yet another day, lavender. Peeps begin as the quintuple row of extruded marshmallow blobs. The blobs bob along a conveyor belt. Automated systems move stacks of still-sightless, colorless Peeps in and out of drying rooms. On a yellow day, yellow sugar is sprayed onto the white marshmallow extrations, on a pink day, johk augar, and so on.

"History is a series of atrocities that have been committed by peoples of all races." Camille Paglia<sup>2</sup>

"Popule meus, quid feci tibi. uut in quo contristavi te? Responde mihi,"

"Oh. my people, what have I done to you, or in what have I offended you?

I sought work. and you exploited my hunger.

I agreed to work for a pittance, and you called the migru on pay day.

I picked your fruits and your vegetables, you poisoned me with pesticides,

I tended your gardens, your fields of flowers and you flogged me with thistles of sound bytes.

I made your food, served you in your restaurant and you have heaped my plate with bile

I sewed your clothes in your storefront sweat shops, you threw me out naked into the night.

I watched over your children and loved them, and you would terrorize even my unborn babies.

I cared for your incontinent and troubled old folks. you turned my aged ones out to perish.

I cleaned your warm homes and filled them with love. and you sent me into the pitiless night

I have come whenever it suited you you have thrown me out when you were through with me; you use my country as one would a whore house:

Take — without consequence, without responsibility.

And now let me tell you what will happen to you

God will curse you and divide you and you will be confounded. You will attack others as you sing of "your country," and the world will condemn you.

The land that we would make great will become the Divided States of North America; you will be nobody's country until you are everybody's country.

And so we pray: Our Lady of Guadalupe, Patroness of the Americas, Pray for us.

Frances Cabrini, North American saint and patroness of Pray for us.

And finally, with the prayer of the United Nations, we ask for

"Strike from our hearts the national self-righteousness that causes hatred and division between persons and countries," we beseech thee, O Lord.

Beethoven and His Servants

At certain moments the playing rose even beyond its normal exalted level.

ianist David Golub is a frequent visitor to San Diego. He has performed here in var-ious chamber ensembles of the La Jolla ulous technique; the mixture of profound inwardness and the extravert exuberance of a inwardness and the extravert exuberance of a broad Romantic temperament; the extreme free-dom and subtlety of expression; the ability to make the piano sing; the complex identification with the composer's imagination; the grasp of the music's structure, in its large-scale movement and its smallest details; the imaginative sweep; the discipline; the passion — all these were ap-plied to Beethoven's most intense and dramatic concerto, with stunning effect.

Everything in this performance was superbly Everything in this performance was superfor-realized, and the experience of listening to it was compelling from first to last. But at certain mo-ments the playing rose even beyond its normal exalted level, notably in the first-movement ca-denza and the entire slow movement. The cadenza was played with an assertive authority and a de-Smill Joing S. He has performen nere in various in some seven seven some proposed in the seven s ing but has at last found a place beyond the world's conflicts, where it can see the human condition from the point of view of eternity. At the end of the movement, played with such overwhelming truth, it seemed that northing more could possi-bly be said. But there was still the third movement to plunge into, the recovery of the dynamic will, driving forward with relentless dramatic energy—and here, once again, Golub gave full realization to the score with his commanding sense of musical shape and human meaning.

Golub's collaborators in the con Golub's collaborators in the con-certo—the orchestra, and conductor Murry Sidlin—were as disciplined and intense as the plaints himself. In-deed, one of the most impressive aspects of this concert was the power of the conducting and the orchestral playing, Sidlin's lively, sensible, infor-mative, but charty lecturing at the beginning of each piece may put some listeners off (although he has a de-voted audience to whom the voted audience to whom the talkative introductions are among the "Classical Hits" series' chief at tractions). But once he has put his microphone away, turned his back on the auditorium, and raised his baton, he is every bit the intelligent and forceful conductor a program such as this one — all-Beethoven — demands. Parti-

The Third Leonar Overture, which began the program, was given a strong and vivid reading, with something of the same ex-pressive freedom David Golub exhibited in the Third Concerto. The "Eroica" Symphony, which filled the program's second halt, was exciting both for its power

It is not action we are shown — reading, assembling, a hammock — but the poised inactivity of the no-longer, the not-yet, or the timeless right-now. The framework for visual reality is omitted, along with the density of existent objects in the world, because reality here. the world, because reality here is not what we know or see but what implinges meaningfully on our imagination, when we are in a state of utter relaxation, driven by no pressures of the will, caught up in Being itself. The chosen objects and their mode of perception suggest a personality behind the paint-ings, a self hovering in the penumbra of our perceptions

Pruddin in Pret
Cheryl L West's for the Floor explodes like a time bomb and reveals the interactions among four generations of women. The play is specific, focused, and grounded with the feel of psychological truth. West's Pouldin 'N Pret, a "Fable of a Nahrriago," floats about no never lands. It trees to be universal by talking about universal— in '11' to Eupters of a weralk—it's 10 chapters of a primer on mariage — but it didac-tic scenes lack drams, the general/symbolic characters lack in-terest, and its conclusions about matrimony are small reward for its two and a half plus bours running time. The play has some unements. (West writes funny dislogue and some scenes, like a party for Pad-din's yappie friends, work nicely, And the exat all necessories to be.

presence—much move so than before the thin presence of the Pre some scenes, like a party for Pud-din's yuppe friends, work nicely). And the cast, all newcomers to the Old Globe, is obviously talented. Robert Barry Flenning plays an Eden-like seepent. He uithers across Greg Lucas's too Dianey-teed gar-den-set and tells the story with bal-letic gestures and grammastic flips. West also has a four-person chorus

Some people like that kind of stuff, but there again, some of them don't like it because of all the extra space in between. It screws the CD up somehow, I don't know why, like when we put that remix version of "Mother" on thrall-demonstrative or the secret trak on the record. Seems like we can't give people enough winy like we used to. So we do hidden before the control of the c

Mer Do you have any family, children?
EY.No, I'm not married. None of us is married or has any kids. There's girlfriends and stuff, but no one has a family. Just whatever moms and dads and aunts and uncles are still around. They all come out to the shows when we play New York.

I giggle inanely.

Me: I have a couple silly questions now. What's it like being able to touch Glenn?

The Advocate — Right on screen at the outset, the viewer, or reviewer, is enjoined not to reveal the identity of "the client." (The Mirranax company, hoping to recapture past fortune, even makes specific reference to its The Crying Game, But this willfully misrepresents, or misunderstands, the nature of the narrative. The client's ident is not a secret, is not a surprise, is plainly forecast in the printed prologue, is in fact meant to be (along with several acres of flesh) the principal selling point of the moves; the client (clow your eyes if you still don't want to know') is a pic, charged with murder. The movie overall, set in a 15th-century France populated chiefly by British ers (Colin, Irith, Jan Holm, Donald common practice in historical fiction of carrying a torch into the Dark Ages (the light of latter day knowledge, wisdom, humor, superiority), when of course the trickier task would be to carry the Darkness irtot the glare of today. Written and directed by Leslie Megable, 1994.

PICTURE STORY

by the San Diego Historical Society

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

orothy LaMour and Harry "Bing" Crosby smile for the camera here on the July 3, 1937 opening day at the new Del Mar Turf Club. (The fellow with the stogie and the chap thrusting the microphone into Ms. LaMour's face remain unidentified.) Crosby, together with fellow Hollywood luminary Pat O'Brien and assorted Southern California businessmen, became a major backer of the posh club in the early 1930s. (The federal WPA had advanced $500,000 to the 22nd Agricultural District to build new county fairgrounds in the Del Mar area; when the money ran out and the track's future looked dim, Crosby stepped in and lent the enterprise several thousand dollars.)

Crosby saw the cornerstone for his enterprise laid in 1931. The resulting Turf Club was built in Mission-style adobe and stucco and modeled upon the actual Californian missions. Some 55 years after this photo was snapped, the house that Crosby built was torn down as part of an $80 million complete rebuild.

When I was 18, I marveled at my mother's ability to make me feel guilty. We lived in a tiny blip on the map 20 miles : outh of Mammoth Lakes in the Eastern Sierra. I went to school in Mammoth. Both my parents worked in Mammoth, my parents worked in Mammoth, my mom as a bookkeeper, and what is a second of the mom as a bookkeeper and my dad as a baker. We lived paycheck to paycheck; my parents never hid our financial crises from me. If I wanted to go to a movie or go to a friend's house or go shopping. I had to borrow my mother's car and drive to Mammoth. My mother would stand by the front door. "Have fun," she would say as I walked out. "And remember, that car is our livelihood." I had visions of our family dressed in rags, standing on the curb in front of our house, a few tattered possessions our house, a few tattered possessions gathered around us. "If only you hadn't crashed the car. Anne, we'd still have a place to live."

Now that I have two small children, Rebecca, two, and Angela, three months, I understand why still here a place to live.

Now that I have two small children, Rebecca, two, and Angela, there mouths, but understand why mother project guilt we effectively, with guilt, guilt pours from us and gets on all the people we love. I've been feeling especially guilty similar was proposed in her bound for the first syrold. Angela do and gets on all the people we love. I've been feeling especially guilty similar lays with guilt, guilt pour from us and gets on all the people we love. I've been feeling especially guilty similar lays with guilt, guilt promised feebec and the same and gets on all the people we love. I've been feeling especially guilty similar lays with guilty flowers of the first syrol file. Angela and something the first syrol file. Angela was horn.
