THIS IS HOW IT HAPPENS. The little guy finds a fish. Not just any fish, but a special fish with a special taste and special size. He shows the fish to the lady of his choosing. Sometimes she gets annoyed. Sometimes she's got someone she likes better. But sometimes she looks the guy over and waits for what comes next. (continued on page 20)

Not An Opera At All In his article about Randy Newman and his musical Faunt, for Far errs (Pop Music, September 21). Charles Gounnd's 1859 opera, tittled Fautt, is indeed popular: but in its original form, Hector into of Fautt, was not an opera at all, but a "formatic legend" for the concert stage.

Dammation of Fauts was adapted for operatic performance by Raoul Gunsberg at Monte Carlo. The work was not performed in the Operation of the Carlo. The work was not performed in its original form in the U.S. until 1880 and in the operative wersion at Infont of the Institute of the I Not An Opere At All and in the operative version as the Metropolitan Opera House in 1906. It is seldom performed except as a concert work these days, so it could hardly be referred to as a second of the operation of the operation

Charlene Baldridge is the San Diego correspondent for Opera Canada.

Take Arm, Take Aim Tead with interest and dismay B. Werner's anti-Arnold letter (September 21) re Patti Smith's apparently not packing the B.U.T. Damn damn damn! I missed her performance and the Reader's mention of her! Ah well, I probably wouldn't have made it. I hate — er — crowds. More interesting, if not

More interesting, if not necessarily dismaying, was Werner's criticism of Smith's poetry. All right, all of her stuff is not Keats. But how can he so bithely dismiss the author of such simple, wonderfully evocative lines as "Take author, and the sim," "Why must we pray screaming," "The pride of our life sweats in the dark like a vace." and "Jesus died for a vace." and "Jesus died for the second state of the second seco tife sweats in the dark like a vase," and "Jesus died for somebody's sins, but not mine"? Smith's lyrics and verse are as original and vibrant as they are little known or appreciated. On her albums, she incorporates her own voice passionately reciting one or polares of metry. own voice passionately recit ing one or two layers of poetry ing one or woo layers of poetry over her singing like no other artist I have ever heard. After years of listening to rock and getting more austenance from some of the lytics than most of the music, in Smith I finally found a rock artist who could really deliver the goods, and with masterflat type. Werner is in agreement with Patti. Smith, who, amid our Warholian era with its glut of information, put it so pain.

information, put it so painfully well: "All must not be art. Some art we must disinte

I am curious about the meaning of your song "Wave," amous to find out if my theory is correct. I would also love to share with you a noen I worke several you a poem I wrote several years ago in which you hitch-hike with Arthur Rimbaud to a "Picnic of Poets" and carouse with such luminaries as Walt Whitman and Allen

Very Nice
I just wanted to let you know how much I enjoyed your article on cricket ("Everything Changes in Six Minutes," September 14). I have watched it up in Canada, and it was very nice to know it is down here now.

The Least Tern Says Something Ominous Is Coming by Stephen Dobyns PHOTOGRAPHS BY SANDY HUFFAKER, JR.

So the little guy approaches with the little fish and he does a little dainer. He switz this way, and he swirls that way, and he holds the little fish in his mouth, the little fish in his mouth. Sometimes the is charmed. She takes a few steps toward the guy. He takes a few steps toward her. Gently the slips the little fish into his lady's mouth and she awallows. Can there ever be such happiness compared to theirs?

Now let's examine another scenario.

This time it's a big guy, and instead of finding a little fish, he finds a little stick. But he too does bits dance, He extends his dark wings, and they are buge. Maybe eight feet from tip to tip, maybe tem. He takes a few stept to he left, a few steps to the right. He raises his wings, and the tips curred corward like the tips of Draculis's cape. Slowly he moves forward. Slowly his wings curve around the lady of his choosing.

Sometimes helf-lide it raised them. "See Wing Dusterhuis."

Habitat protection and ashift insocial and edu, atom priorities are needed so the public truly understands the problem. We also need a shift in the paradigm of what we are doing; growth mentality must succumb to the idea of a sustained yield. We can't allow humanity to destroy the environment for short-term economic gain. I think again of the endangered poet and the function of art. In his essay "What Is Art?" the Russian novelist Loo Tolstoy wrote that art can evoke "reverence for the dignity of every man and woman and for the life of every animal; can make people ashamed of luxury, of violence, of verenge, or of using for their own pleasure that which others need; can compel people freely, gladly, and gonnaneously to sacrifice themselves in the service of mankind."

pp., $39,95.), called them (1-800-777-7623) and ordered a copy, read it from cover to cover, and I know a lot more now than I used to. Because it is a history of gardens, it also takes in architecture, industry, agriculture. Hestyle, and economic shirts of all kinds. It accomplishes this in unassuming proce, even rather unprofessional in its boundless enhusiasms. The text is accompanied by many vintage photos and a few pages of rather wild.

vintage photos and a few pages of rather wild colored ones. Ms. Padilla is labor of love not only conveys the sweep of history, but also a set of values: the love of simpler times, the appreciation of vitality when informed by deep knowledge, and even wonder at the visionaries who nutrured seeds, imported plants, developed lybrids—and who instaired on street trees, parks, and the importance of civic beauty.

Her joy in their character is one of the pleasures of this book. Southern California Gardens is divided into a number of historical overviews, short biographies of important horticulturists, and a important horticulturists, and a shistory of selected plants (roses and carti for two). in five years' time. Alonzo E. Horton, the land developer responsible for this boom, convinced the city board of trusters to set aside 1400 acres to be used as a park— Balboa Park. He achieved this goal amid considerable hilarity because his scheme was so grandione for a city of 915 homes and 2310 inhabitants. He also planted eucalyptus and rubber trees in the old square, a first instance of civic planting.

According to Ms. Padilla, the years between 1880 and 1930 were the height of garden achievement. Land was cheap and so was labor.
Plant collectors abounded.
Industry had yet to happen.
California was still a paradise,
and the rich took an interest to extensive. The burn this the same excitement in the mind as strains of martial music. 'The Hotel Coronado, which opened at this time, became a rendezvous for plantsmen, the hotel baving a small botanic garden.'' Kate O. Sessions, the queen of the San Diego nursery trade, is showered with praite. She started her nursery in 1685, dominant horriculturist in San Diego. She popularized palms, trees, vines, and shrubs that are now part of the and the rich took an interest in gardening. "During this time, gardens flourished as they never had before, estates were never so numerous or so grand, plantsmen never so zealous or so active, and exotics never arrived in greater quantities or in larger variety." Often these great estates were open to the public and so famous that tourists came especially to visit them.

visit them.
In 1915, when San Diego grew to a respectable city of about 40,000, it announced that fact to the world with a garden fair, which "welded landscape, such as jasmines, bougainvilleas, eucalypti— even ice plant! Shallow, derivative, overblown, and basically amonymous as its Taneyes's Bano Quintet nevertheless has a flavor worth preserving. It carries with it the atmosphere of its time and place, as when the properties of the place of the place of the properties of the place of the place of the numerical commitment to the style, as though it were in fact the huge, turbulent, sensitive, turnuphant statement in pretend bullent, sensitive, turnuphant statement in pretend bullent, sensitive, turnuphant statement in pretending, and the place of t hardest, still could not attain the fiery abandon the music needs if it is not to seem an empty bal-loom; and — even more unhappily miscast — painsit bengwoon Park once again gave evidence of her cool technical perfection and her delicacy of temperament, qualities as suitable to Taneyev as mauve to a fire truck.

The real ratiy — and the real highlight — of this concert was the Schulhoff Sextet, a piece of dissonant, tormented, early-1920s expressionism that tested the La Jolla Chamber Music Society audience's shockability tolerance more severely than any other work this summer. The Prague-born Schulhoff (1894–1942) was one of those super-bly talented 20th -century composers who were extensive of a central stylistic language, capable of expressing a homogeneous audience's common experiences of being-in-the-world. (It also was viceous audience) and the super-blind history, dying in a German concentration camp for the double crime of being a lew and a communist.) hoff (1894-1942) was one of those Stylistically, Schulhoff floun-dered — or, to put a better light on it, he continuously exon it, he continuously ex-perimented with different modes of musical expression throughout his career. The Sextet (completed in 1924) shows the influence of Schoenberg in its frenzied emotionalism (anger and de-spair being the predominant feelings, as with most ex-ressionist music), in its pressionist music), in its eerie sound effects, and in its dissolution of tonality; but it is a startlingly original work, beautifully crafted for the six string instruments, deeply moving, and speak-ing from first to last with a distinctive creative voice of immense authority. You hear it—especially in sub-time—and you think. This is a great composer. Then you listen to pieces like the Concerto for Flute, Violin and O'rchestra or the Concer-and Orchestra or the Concerto for String Quar tet and Wind Orchestra, from just a few years later, and what you hear is expert, pleasing, in-offensive, workmanlike, fashionable neo-Baroquism — quite lovely, but without much identity. At the same time, Schulhoff was playing around with quarter-tone avant-gardism and classicized American jazz (he wrote a Hot Sonata for Alto Saxophone and Piano). Still another style that extreme form of visual realism had perceived that colors in nature — above all, in area of nature made up of multiple tim objects, lake fields of grass or grain — are themselves made up of multiple tim objects, of the fields of grass or grain — are themselves made up of multiple tim fleeks of varied colors. Monet and Pissarro, from whom Gauguin had learned so much, were true to the visual reality of land-scape than even Rubens had been. To neither Rubens for even less Pissarro would Gauguin's particular than the color and the color and the production of the color area in the painting, the sky, a dark, saturated blue, makes no seense in naturalistic terms. It lies — intense, monochrome, flat on the surface, and suggestive of nighttime—above fields crying on Noon'. But it does play an important role in the pixture. The blue of the 'distant' sky the same—in lote, in saturation, in flatness—as the blue of the girld blooks, or much closer to us. Similarly, the role blooks, or much closer to us. Similarly, the role same as the rose 'badrows' on the other colorate statue in the right foreground. All these identities of color have the effect of flattening the picture space even more. The "distant" blue, yellow-tan, rose, and olive look just as close as as the areas of the same colors in the foreground. Instead of feel-ing ourselves in front of a deeply receding space, as in Rubens's landscape, we seem to be confronting a bright, dec-orative pattern directly on the

It is not only the color rep-etitions that do this to our eyes. The enclosed, outlined shapes of the foreground figures echo the shapes of the background landscape (as well as each other). The curved, horizontal bands of the landscape, turned to the vertical axis, become the articulated bands of the girl's blouse. Her collar matches the blouse. Her collar matches the segmented fields in the back-ground, not only in shape but also in its apparent dimensions. There is a similar visual analogy between the upward-curving road and the narrow, straight-and-then-curved bant repersenting the girl's neck, beneath and behind her jaw. This sort of contrived structure, in which foreground and background shapes are made to resemble each other, was alien to — for example — the Impressionists, including Gauguin himself when he was one of them. They sought to portray natural scenes the way they ac-tually look, when happened upon at an arbitrary moment and regarded from a random point of view. To find consid-erations of design acting as a shaping force in paintings of figures with landscape, Gauguin had to escape the control of the naturalistic aesthetic. One way to do so was to go back to the late-medieval and early-Re-naissance painters whom he and his fellow arists referred to inaccurately as "primitives" (they were actually highly civ-ilized — but they did indeed

Look at Piero della Francesca's famous portrait of Federico da Monterelitro, the 15th-century Duke of Urbino. The formality of this picture immediately strikes the eye: the pose, the perfectly balanced placement of the figure, the framing of the face between the conference and other contents and other placements. framing of the face between the two almost geometrical solids of the hat and the upper torso thori of them in intense red. But there are sabled devices as well: the analogy between the thin, curving, horizontal, white band at the top of the Dicke collar, and the thin, curving, and the thin, curving, to the collar, and the thin, curving, to the collar, and the thin, curving, the collar, and the thin, curving, the collar collar to the left the collar collar to the collar collar to the collar coll neath it; or the way the curly outline of his dark hair is

The patterning in Piero's portrait in no way interferes portrait in no way interferes with the impression of immense background space the arists has established. In Gauguin's picture, in contrast, the same device intentionally confuses the near and the far. Although the equality of size between the girl's collar and the upper band of fields must in principle be due to linear perspective, the effect is quite the opposite: the fields seem to be and more distant. The fleur-de-lys pattern on the wallpaper at by pattern on the wallpaper at the left confuses our sense of space even further. The sil-houette — like a rampant, long-necked feline — that tops the wallpaper design appears to be on the wallpaper as well, yet it extends upward in front of what looks like an area of mossy earth outside the window. And below the wallpaper dow. And below the wallpaper pattern, as though itself part of the wallpaper, we see the artist's signature. "Poo" and the date "89", which have to be taken as written on the surface of the carvas. Yet the young woman's body at that point is slightly modeled, so that it seems to project in front of the carvas. Everywhere there are equiv-sications of this sort. The narrow, vertical strip at the right at first looks like part of

I've been mad at Gene ever since last sum-I've beleff mad at werne ever since latery before mer, when I discovered that loss over the that hand's import EP was the fastest selling record at my local revolutions. In this down and bought a copy right away, lengther may be when, instead own and thought 10 hear, I was confronted thought 10 hear, I was confronted by the another Shift hand, I fact, Gene's lead you another Shift in fact, Gene's lead yet another Smiths inpoff in fact, Gene's lead singer doosn't even try to sound like anybody but Morrissey (unless it's the guy in Prefab Sprout). The band's repetiore consists of wimpy, weepy vocals and a bunch of songs about how allenated the fellow is, Even the littles are reminiscent of Smiths songs.—

order to be filled at Denny's: an as-piring dancer (face of a papier-make death's head, temperament inclined towards squalls and tempests) hitch-hikes to Vegas with a solitary and soon stolen suitcase, works her way up from an infra-dig strip club to a chorus line on the Strip, then the the position of un-derstudy to the star (a Raquel Welch look-alike ca. 1967), then to top billing when she positions herself behind the star on a stairway and administers a de-cisive shove, then gives it all up in order to exact revenge on a Michael Bolton esque superstar for the rape of her roommate. (Standard male notion of the fitting punishment for that crime; a good but kicking.— and never mind that only one of the three deserving butts gets kicked.) The tem-porary layover in the strip club permits some groundbreaking, though un-convincing, big-screen documentation of the lay-dance phenomenon. But the backstage infighting, or catifight-ing, that makes up the bulk of the action is very old and soggy ground

Soon, of course, we're talking about El Salvador, Lupita's telling about the day peace was declared, and her mother and the rest of the children living on the side of the volcano near San abvador had to blied under her bed for three days while a battle raged across their garden. "I had just some here," Lipita says. It was very difficult. 'One-boother was kiled when rebeds stormed a fact the seven is in ga gaten a spelpe freed after three years in the notirious government Quezalopogue prison.

Tears are starting down Lupita's cheek. "She is a very brave person, my mother," she says. "You can't know what this freedom we have here is, unless you've lived like she has. I would love just to get her up "sere..." untess you've lived like she has. I would love just to get her up 'liere..."

She sucks hard from her cebada drink, an unspoken comfort from home. "It's a real nice place to go," says Nick, "but the situation makes you scared."

I finish off the platano frito. With that queso fresco, I'm full. I pay $4.28 and leave, somehow light-footed. All of a sudden, the challenge of walk-ing Imperial Avenue seems a little ridiculous.
