DIARY OF AN ORANGE

ern childhood of Tang and frozen concentrate, tract houses where trees were too young to stand without green tape and crutches. Once a year, when the electric heaters dried our skin and ticked like pressure cookers in the rooms, the cold, sweet oranges would arrive by parcel post. They came around Christmas, when my Phoenix grandparents would send a white cardboard box of Valencias to Utah. For this annual occasion, we owned an electric juicer.

But my husband, Tom, was born in Orange County, California, in 1947, when oranges were as common as sun. In his black-and-white childhood photographs, citrus leaves are dark and eyeshaped, like leaves in a fable. (continued on page 20)

According to entomologist Enrique Ferro, the nesting whitefly isn't really a fly, and it came to San Diego about five years ago. Like the Mediterranean fruit fly, it probably traveled here in a package of fruit. "Most new pests arrive through the mail." When I ask if the earwigs in our grove are hunting whiteflies, Enrique says earwigs are not predation but savenegers, which means they eat what is left over. Most insect predators (with the exception of the ladybug, who east her victum) grab their prey and suck out liquids, a technique demonstrated by Bind Pitt in the poolds seene of Interview with the Vampire. Hazel & Jerry Siegel ROMANTIC JEWISH GENT, 50+, 5'8", 160 lbs., healthy. Dance, hike, beach, mountains. Seeking affectionate, sensual soul mate for laughter, love, communication, commitment. Let's hold hands, hearts.

Jerry: I was meeting women through different groups – Mensa, Parents Without Partners – but their focus was all wrong for me. They seemed more concerned with finances than anything else.

Hazel: I had always wanted to answer one of these ads. I had no reservations about doing so.

Jerry: I placed three different ads over a three-year period and got about 50 responses altogether. Hazel called the day before the mailbox was going to expire.

Hazel: In my message I told him I was Jewish, South African, white, and demonstrative, and if he couldn't handle all that, he shouldn't call me back.

Hazel: He called me on a Wednesday. I was working a retail job in Mission Valley at the time, and he agreed to meet me at a sandwich shop before my shift began. The first thing he did was take my hand. Then I knew I was in trouble.

Jerry: We're both very romantic. We like to be close, marry him the next morning. I would have done it, too, but I was already married and my husband was back in South Africa. I had come to this country on a vacation and never returned.

PICTURE STORY

by the San Diego Historical Society

Thile San Diego's recent storm waves may have seemed spectacular, their arrival here certainly wasn't the first time the power of the Pacific ravaged local coastlines. In this photo, snapped along Coronado's Ocean Boulevard on March 17, 1905, towering seas have already eaten away dozens of yards of the thoroughfare's hardpacked expanse.

During the storms. Coronado residents formed sandbag brigades and built bulwarks against the erosion that threatened the stately homes along "Mansion Row." The adolescent Hotel Del Coronado similarly benefited from elbow grease and ingenuity: visible in the right background are the rock jetties that helped (and continue to help) save the Del from crashing waves.
