Firetown, Not Firehouse

This is to correct the wrong information given by Gina Arnold in the "Of Note" article (May 9). It is Firetown, not Firehouse, that the male members of Garbage participated in. Before Firetown, they were in a group called Spooner. Both these bands put out some fine albums of rootsy rock with many good pop songs. I know that Doug and Butch (of Garbage) have been playing together since the late '70s. So besides being good producers and recording engineers, they are also seasoned musicians. With Garbage, they take their fine pop songs and give them an interesting, updated sound.

The Same Judy

Man, did Judy Henske bring back a flood of mostly great memories ("Spam Teriyaki," May 2). I was a regular at her folksinging appearances at Upper Cellar and Mantiki back there in the early '60s. Her description of the Mantiki crowd hit the mark. They/we were a strange mélange. (Referring to her article, I also enjoyed a variety of Spam concoctions in those days.) I read another article of hers a couple of weeks back and wondered if that was the same Judy. Good to see her surface in the Reader. Now, when do we get to hear that memorable voice and style again in concert?

Albright's Child Abuse

I usually ignored Anne Albright's feature "Kid Stuff," dismissing it as a series of numbing tales of mommyhood. I did read the latest offering, "Terror in Plestic" (May 2), because my attention was drawn by the fanged, glaring monster shown in the boxed article. It is an appropriate illustration for a story about child abuse.

In the article, Ms. Albright relates how she leaves two infants alone in a parked car. Having bribed one child with some unexamined food items, she goes to weigh her fat at Weight Watchers. The three-year-old is left to choke on her bag lunch, accompanied by the sleeping one-year-old; the two sit by themselves in the cold December air.

Ms. Albright supplies some weak justification for her actions, stating that her mother had done the same thing to her when she was a child. She says that it caused no harm to consider her well-being less important than a bag of Safeway dog food. The whereabouts of the father of the children while they are being neglected is not mentioned.

Ms. Albright learns a partial lesson from this, the result of the fear inspired by a gruesome toy. But instead of blaming McDonald's for frightening her children, she should be thankful for their bad taste.

Abominable Demonic Snowman

Ask Anne Albright if my four-year-old son can have the abominable "demonic" snowman ("Kid Stuff," May 2). He would love it!

P.S.: Does she have to keep having kids to keep her "Kid Stuff" article?

Jews Should Scream More

Regarding the letter from John Primavera (Letters, May 2) headed "Jews Scream, from Rooftops," I object to his statement that many Jews have become slave traders, gangsters, Wall Street embezzlers, atomic spies, big-time tax cheats, and junk-bond dealers. In each instance, with the exception of the slave traders and the atomic spies, I can think of only one or two Jews who were involved. As to the slave traders and the atomic spies, maybe Primavera can provide some names, as I can't think of any.

I imagine it would be a surprise for Primavera and other hatemongers to learn that like most people, most Jews work hard just to get by. The widespread belief that Jews have power and money was one of the reasons for the Holocaust, yet most of the victims lacked the price of a travel ticket to get out of Hitler's Europe.

Instead of Jews screaming from the rooftops, they don't defend themselves nearly enough.

Extraordinary Turbulence

I too, as might be expected, appreciated David Burge's extensive article about music in San Diego (I would have done it differently), and also the Reader's willingness to prominently publish it ("When the Soprano Hit the First High C," April 18).

Dingaling of Truth Back on April 20, Union-Tribune columnist Diane Bell reported that the local chamber of commerce was "exploring suing opponents of S.D.'s downtown convention center and stadium-expansion plans." Bell claimed that an effort led by anti-tax activist Richard Rider to put the stadium issue on the ballot for voters to decide "is adding thousands, even millions, to the expansion price tag." And she quoted city attorney-elect Casey Gwinn as saying the city's efforts to keep the expansion plan off the ballot had cost $450,000. What Bell failed to mention was that the city's legal bill is being run up by the politically well-connected downtown law firm of Luce, Forward, which was handed a no-bid contract by the city council in secret session. The deal calls for the lawyers to make from $215 to $350 an hour. This Tuesday, Bell's lead item reported that the chamber, along with other unnamed "local developer, tourism, and labor groups," is still thinking about suing the Rider group. Interviewed last week, chamber president and car dealer Steve Cushman said no decision had yet been made, and he declined to characterize the specific grounds of any action against the Rider group. For his part, Rider says he's tired of the bullying. "We're the only people in town who merit news coverage because someone might sue us," he says. "I hope the Union-Tribune is charging standard advertising rates for the intimidation notices posted in Diane Bell's column." Bell did not return phone calls. — M.P.

Paybacks are a bitch Ex-city councilman Bruce Henderson is seething over his former colleague's decision last week to take money allocated for the Japanese Friendship

Henderson

Garden, one of his pet projects while on the council, and give it to the Museum of Photographic Arts. He's even angrier that his Sixth District successor, Valerie Stallings, had originally requested that part of the $1.2 million should go to build new restrooms in Mission Bay Park. "I think back to when I was on the council, and if I had made a motion to transfer funds from an AIDS memorial to build a couple of toilets instead, how would the gay community have reacted?" says Henderson, who continues to spearhead the 11-acre garden project as a volunteer. "It's like making a statement that your project is worth flushing down the toilet." One city hall insider says the funding shift, and Stallings's proposal to divert $200,000 to DeAnza Cove restrooms, are political payback for Henderson's key role in the legal challenge to the city's stadium expansion plans. "As long as Bruce is on the board, I doubt there's going to be any money for the garden," the source says. Responds Henderson: "If they're trying to hurt me, fine. But this is an insult to the entire Asian community." — T.K.A.

Stallings

Protesting Pete San Diego has made it on the list of the AFL-CIO's first 18 sites for "Union Summer," the labor association's new campaign to deploy 1000 young workers and students into communities around the country for summer internships. Ten union activists will participate in a "Labor to Neighbor" program here, going door-to-door to recruit and mobilize other activists, plan and support house parties, and identify leaders in neighborhoods. Applicants will be paid $210 a week, in addition to training and free housing. While most internships last three weeks, the San Diego program will run for eight weeks, beginning next month. Donald Cohen, who's organizing the local effort, says 10 "young, energetic, enthusiastic union members" will participate. —T.K.A.

Poison pill It's been three years since undercooked burgers contaminated with the E.coli bacteria killed four children and sickened 600 others, but the fallout continues to hurt Jack in the Box. San Diego's homegrown burger chain has pulled out of Colorado, shutting down all 10 of its fast-food restaurants because they weren't making money, spokeswoman Shirley Gines reports. The restaurants, which employed upwards of 200 people, were abruptly shuttered on the same day earlier this month. Five were in Denver, while the others were in Lakewood, Colorado Springs, Loveland, and Boulder. All 10 were company-owned, and none had been in operation since 1969, Gines says. "They just didn't meet our sales target," she says. — T.K.A.

Steve Gunderson (R-WI) and Abner Mason at a Washington, D.C., Log Cabin reception

Gay Old Party

By Jamie Reno

When the arrives at the San Diego Convention Center on August 12 — the first day of the Republican National Convention — Abner Mason expects to be shouted down by gay and lesbian activists. Not because Mason is a gay basher, but because he is gay. "There will be people both outside the convention and inside who don't approve of me, for different reasons," he predicts. "I may even be physically tormented, I don't know. My hope is that people will be civil and will try to understand that my presence in San Diego is about bringing people together, not tearing them apart. Tolerance is what I'm hoping this convention will be all about."

Mason, a 33-year-old project manager for Boston's train system, is the first openly gay delegate to the Republican National Convention. He has already made some noise as vice chairman of the Log Cabin Club, a national gay Republican group, and admits that being gay and African-American makes him an oddity to some in his own party. But as one of three delegates from Massachusetts' eight congressional districts who will support Senator Robert Dole, the certain nominee, Mason is "honored to be a part of this historic convention. I'm really looking forward to it."

Helping Dole win the nomination isn't the only reason he's coming to San Diego. "I do have an agenda," he admits. "I want to make sure this convention doesn't turn out like the last one," Mason's referring to the 1992 Republican convention in Houston, identified by Pat Buchanan's fiery speech calling on the Republican Party's right wing to "take back America, street by street, block by block, if necessary."

Mason suggests the Buchanan speech on America's "cultural war" was "filled with bigotry, intolerance, and hate. If Senator Dole allows that kind of thing to define the convention this time around, he will lose big in November. I'm going to do all I can to keep that from happening."

Mason says his plan is four-fold. First he wants to lobby to prevent any gay bashing from taking place — inside or outside the convention center — by talking with convention planners. He's also determined to prevent Buchanan from speaking at all, although he admits that, with 198 delegates and a loyal following, Buchanan will probably get a speaking nod.

Mason also wants to influence the language of the Republican platform, which is drafted at the convention, and remove any anti-gay references. Finally he's hoping to convince convention planners to include at least one gay speaker during the four-day event.

Who would the best spokesman be? "I'd like it to be either myself or perhaps Steve Gunderson," says Mason, referring to Representative Steve Gunderson (R-Wisconsin), the nation's only openly gay Republican congressman. Gunderson and Dole have already interacted. Last year, Dole's presidential campaign, which had solicited a donation from the Log Cabin Club, returned a $1000 check from the group. At that point, Gunderson stepped in and made public a letter in which he asked Dole if he was rejecting the support of all gay Republicans, and if he was ready "to reject my support" as well.

Dole eventually accepted the gay group's donation and blamed the snub on a staff error. But with few exceptions, neither Dole nor other mainstream Republicans have tried to appease the gay and lesbian community. And they're not expected to in August. If anything, the party's attitude is becoming more conservative.

On May 8, a group of Republican lawmakers proposed federal legislation to bar the government from honoring homosexual unions and limit the legal impact of a 1993 decision by the Hawaii Supreme Court to allow gay marriages. Championed by Representative Steve Largent, the Oklahoma congressman and former football star, the Defense of Marriage Act would ensure that states not be forced to give same-sex marriages equal recognition under the law as heterosexual unions. It's one of several measures that the party's right wing hopes Dole will integrate into his platform at the convention.

Mason admits that most gay Republicans aren't sold on Dole. "Log Cabin hasn't decided whether or not we will formally endorse Senator Dole as our choice for president in 1996," he says. That decision, he notes, will be made in San Diego during the week preceding the GOP convention. Mason will arrive here on August 8 to attend Log Cabin's own national convention, which is always held before the Republican Party's main convention, in the same city.

Mason says he is eager to come to San Diego. "I've visited [San Diego] before, and I love your city," he says. "My hope is that someday, all Republicans will be more like your mayor, [Susan Golding]."

Mason says he met Golding in 1994 when he was in San Diego to attend a meeting of the Republican California League at the Emerald-Shapery Center and to speak at a function for the local Log Cabin Club. "We had dinner and a brief meeting. [Golding] was very nice. I remember her sincerity. She seems to understand that in order for Republicans to become the majority party, we need to reach out to people who share our basic beliefs. She's the kind of Republican I'm talking about, the kind that will move this party forward."

Alex Garner, a local gay activist and organizer of LGBT VOICES '96 (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Voters Organized in Coalition for the Election), disagrees with Mason's assessment of Golding. "The fact is, Susan Golding has not shown much real support for the gay community at all," says Garner. "She doesn't support gay marriages, she doesn't support clean needle exchanges. She has marched in the Gay Pride parade and has met with gay businesses and she has a gay and lesbian advisory commission, but it's posturing. I think she's created more obstacles to the gay community here than done good."

Shake, Rattle, and HUD

By Thomas K. Arnold

The classified ads running in the San Diego Union-Tribune the last few weeks look innocuous: the San Diego Housing Commission is soliciting proposals "for the lease and operation of the Del Mar Apartments as very low-income, sober and drug-free housing."

What the ads don't say is that the housing commission is trying to salvage a project into which it has sunk millions of dollars. After the housing was finished, federal authorities told the commission that the project's intended use — a home for mentally disabled adults — wouldn't fly because the 80-year-old apartment complex is located underneath the Lindbergh Field flight path. The noise, said the feds, would "threaten the recovery or stability of an already mentally or emotionally fragile person."

Even though housing commissioners spent a lot of money to soundproof the big yellow building on Front Street, department of Health and Urban Development (HUD) officials maintain it would be "ethically irresponsible" for them to allow mentally disabled adults to move in. Critics blasted the housing commission for not doing its homework before pursuing what they say is another wasteful, misguided project taxpayers will end up paying for.

"That building is no good, and the commission should have known it," says Marguerite Ferrante, a board member of the San Diego Housing Trust Fund, which had promised to chip in $400,000 to help renovate and operate the apartment complex. "We gave them that money for a specific reason, and now that HUD turned it down, they had better give us that money back."

Marguerite Ferrante

Mel Shapiro, a longtime critic of the housing commission, notes that the description in the classified ad is very similar to what the Del Mar Apartments were like before the housing commission bought the dilapidated complex from the Port District in 1990 for $81,560 — and began what became a very pricey, five-year renovation project.

"It's a boondoggle," Shapiro charges. "They basically took a building that had 34 low-income tenants, removed them, and put all this money into it while the building stood vacant for five years. And now that HUD says this is no suitable place for people with mental illness, they're looking to return it to its original use — as a low-income apartment house. Maybe they should have just left it alone in the first place before they spent I don't know how many millions of dollars."

Tim O'Connell, assistant to the executive director of the San Diego Housing Commission, puts the blame on HUD, accusing officials with the federal agency of changing their minds after commissioners had acted in good faith for five years to make the building suitable for the mentally disabled.

"It was a great surprise that they opposed us," O'Connell says. "We had been running on oral assurances from the HUD staff that we could use the site for that purpose, and there weren't any problems, but then at the last minute, boom, we were told we can't do that."

But Ferrante says the commission should have known better. "It's totally inappropriate to put mental health people in there," she says. "When they first came to the [Housing Trust Fund] board for money, saying they got this group from Los Angeles that wanted to use it as a home for the mentally ill, I said this is not the right place. I was the only one on the board who voted no on that, that they should not get the money. And that was after I sent my contractor out there and found out the condition of the place."

Del Mar Apartments

The primary source of funding for the Del Mar Apartments as a home for the mentally disabled was to come from HUD, through a $2.5 million grant to Shelter Care Plus of Los Angeles. The money was to provide 10 years of rental assistance for 56 studio apartments and 6 one-bedroom apartments. But in a letter sent to housing commissioners last December by Herbert L. Roberts, director of community planning and development at HUD's Los Angeles office, the grant offer was withdrawn unless an alternative site was selected. Roberts called the Del Mar Apartments "an unacceptable site" as a home for the mentally disabled "because of excessive noise contours due to the proximity of the property to Interstate 5 freeway and Lindbergh Field.... The consensus of the staff is that, given the landing patterns of air traffic approaching Lindbergh Field, which fly overhead at approximately 10-minute intervals, there is excessive noise and vibrations due to the aircraft traffic in the area immediately above the building." Particularly since there is no other housing choice in San Diego for chronically mentally ill homeless adults, Roberts wrote, HUD "cannot accept a site which would threaten the stability of this population through continued exposure to risk, excessive noise, vibration and assault to a person's senses."

The San Diego Housing Commission appealed the Los Angeles HUD office's decision to the main office in Washington, D.C., based on the fact that HUD officials in Los Angeles did not quote any regulation or law in turning down the commission's request. The appeal failed. "They were sympathetic, but ultimately said they support their L.A. staff decision," O'Connell says.

"From the outside, it looks very good," says Karen Potts, project manager for HUD's Special Needs Programs. "I know the city put a lot of federal resources into the acquisition and rehabilitation of the property," she says, "and I'm sure they want to see something for their investment." But as a home for the mentally disabled, she says, the building won't work, "for reasons we outlined in our letter — primarily, the environmental noise."

The three-story brick Del Mar Apartments complex was built in 1913 as a hotel. To clear the Lindbergh Field flight path of possible obstructions, the San Diego Unified Port District bought the building in 1972 and removed a fence and antenna from the roof. For the next two decades, the port rented out studio apartments at below-market rates. In 1990, rather than make expensive improvements to the building to bring it up to code, port commissioners approved its sale to the San Diego Housing Commission.

Remodeling began in 1991 with a $700,000 loan from the city's redevelopment agency.

Gay and Lesbian Times entitled "An Enemy Among Us," in which he referred to the idea of gay Republicanism as an "oxymoron." Says Garner, "No matter how much you say you are working within that party to change things, to change the attitudes, I still can't see someone being part of an organization that fundamentally opposes your very existence."

As might be expected, Mason is an enigma to many gay activists. Mark Johnson, news media director of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation in New York, says of Mason, "As a fellow gay, African-American male, I wonder how Abner can possibly be a Republican. I respect the man's intelligence — he's bright and articulate — but for the last 30 to 40 years, the Republican Party has stood completely against gays and against blacks, and I don't see a lot of change coming. If Abner thinks he can actually make positive changes from the inside, then I applaud him. But if he's a Republican for any other reason, I just don't understand it."

Abner Mason was born and raised in Durham, North Carolina, in a household of Democrats. He attended a private high school in Boston, where his interest in politics blossomed. Mason got his degree in chemistry and physics from Harvard, and in 1990 he began working on the first gubernatorial campaign of William Weld, the current Massachusetts governor and senatorial candidate.

AN OPEN INVITATION TO EXPERIENCE THE HEART OF CRAFT BREWING. COME TO PORTLAND.

If you would disagree that one city has emerged as the true center of the craft brewers' art, Portland, Oregon. And within this city resides a company who helped start it all ten years ago. Portland Brewing Company. (Not a very outrageous name by micro standards, but we think it speaks volumes.)

If you're a fancier of handmade beers, you owe us a visit. We'd love to show you around, explain some about how we work and, yes, sell you a cold one or two. You'll find we're more than a little proud of our imported Bavarian brew kettles, our attention to tradition and our tendency to fuss and stew over everything we brew. Which brings us to a consolation idea for those who can't make the trip to Portland just now: Savor the outcome of our efforts 12 ounces at a time in bottles or on draft. Five distinct brews with little in common other than the uncommon amount of work that goes into doing each one right. So consider yourself invited. Come to Portland in person. Or in spirit.

When Weld was elected, Mason joined his team in the transportation department and became a Republican. "Governor Weld is the most supportive governor of gay equality of any governor, bar none," says Mason. "He has set the standard for other Republicans to follow."

Weld's progressive views have alienated him from members of his own party. At the 1992 convention in Houston, Weld was the only speaker to challenge the far right. "He said it was wrong for the party to support the intrusion into the lives of our citizens, whether it be in their pockets or their bedrooms," Mason recalls. "For that, he was booed." ■

Less than a year later, an additional $200,000 was tacked on to make unexpected repairs to the wood floors and remove asbestos from the building. Then, in 1992, the commission spent an additional $337,583 for more repairs and to adapt two apartment units for handicapped use.

That same year, commissioners learned they would have to soundproof the building after the San Diego Association of Regional Governments (SANDAG) adopted a land-use plan for Lindbergh Field that required major remodeling jobs of buildings near the flight path to meet certain noise standards. The commission waited until late 1993 to order an acoustical study of the building, with work beginning the following year.

The work, which O'Connell says included replacing the old windows with "triple-pane, high-energy-efficient, noise reducing windows," was completed in March at a cost of thousands of dollars in state funds. Interior sound levels have been reduced to 45 decibels, O'Connell says, in full compliance with federal noise-abatement provisions.

"That's why we can't understand their reasoning," O'Connell says of HUD. "So now we're asking people in the community what they think [we should do with the building]. It is our hope that we will find a nonprofit community organization that wants to run it. We own the property outright, so the cost of operating the building doesn't include mortgage debt, and we should be able to make it available at a low cost. But if not, we could rent the units out again to low-income tenants, which is what the building was being used for when we acquired it. It's just been very frustrating to have it sit there, unoccupied." ■

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

ILLUSTRATION BY RICK GEARY

To: Matthew Alice:
You've got the life. As I hang out reading your stuff, I'm thinking, "I want to be you." Seems to me like a pretty good life. One catch. What do you make? I've got a family to support, and I suspect that you are grossly underpaid.
— Kinda Curious, Oxland

Okay, kinda. Walk a mile in my huaraches. You say, "I want to be you." Well, I gotta be me. But I'll let you be me temporarily. In fact, I'll give everybody a chance to be Matt for a Day and see how you like the headaches. If you are Matt for a Day, the research elves and I can take off and fish or whittle or have that long-overdue salon makeover. So here's the deal. I've selected two real questions that arrived in the Matt mail from two real Alicelanders. And all you wanna-bes, all you sufferers of genius envy can pick one, research it, and pound out an answer. I can blather on as much as I like; you're restricted to 150 or 200 words or so. I can take years to come up with an answer; you've got a month. Entries will be judged on (1) accuracy, (2) entertainment value, (3) impressiveness of bribe included with entry, though not necessarily in that order. (In lieu of accuracy, we'll consider very cleverly shoveled B.S., though the truth does have its charms.)

For my troubles every week, I make enough to support a nagging dried apricot habit. For your troubles, you'll get a couple of minutes of fame, depending on how long it takes people to read your answer. Oh, yes, and our traditional prize of a year's worth of free Readers. Can't forget that one. I'll pick the best of the lot and print them. So here are your questions.

Contest Question Number 1:
Dear Mr. (Ms., Mrs.?) Alice:
Okay, smartypants, I got one you'll never figure out. There is a champagne glass in downtown San Diego that is as tall as a building, but it's not as visible as it used to be. Where is it, exactly?
— Patrick Lockwood, San Diego

Smartypants that I am, I'll leave the impossible-to-figure-out questions for others to solve. Question number two is for those of you who live in trees in Rainbow or Dulzura and don't drive the buckboard into town very often.

Contest Question Number 2:
Dear Matthew Alice:
I've been in San Diego five years now and am continually amazed at the phenomenal percentage of left-handed people there are here! It's almost like something from the Twilight Zone!! Can you tell me the actual percentage of left-handed people in San Diego and how we compare to other cities in the U.S.?
— Feeling Left Out, San Diego

When I think of all the work you guys will save me by answering this one — well, it brings tears to my eyes. That is assuming this question is answerable at all in any realistic way. Well, now it's your problem, not mine. Try to have your answers in by mid-June so we here at Queries R Us can take the summer off. (Note post office/fax/e-mail address at the bottom of the column.) And here's a Matt-handled question to give you an idea of how it's done.

Dear Matthew Alice:
All my life I have adversely affected timepieces. Any clock that spends time near me gradually slows and eventually stops keeping time altogether. The process takes about five to ten months, no matter the brand or cost. That's why I cannot wear watches. I have tried wearing them around my wrist, tucked in a pocket, and also on a chain around my neck, but sooner or later they are broken! Kaput! Nada! A massage practitioner once told me she had heard about this condition before. It has to do with my personal electromagnetic field.
— Diane, SDSU

Well, you'll never convince M.A.'s own Dr. Fizzix of that. The human bod is pretty electrical, but there's not enough juice to stop a clock. (Assuming, of course, you don't have a big problem with paper clips and the odd roofing nail whipping through the air and sticking to you. If so, maybe you need Dr. Psychic, not Dr. Fizzix.) Being mostly water, we're full of hydrogen atoms, each of which contains a zippy proton that generates a tiny, tiny magnetic field as it whizzes around. And maybe that field can affect the cell next door, but it can't drain your battery or upset your mainspring, even on a wristwatch. Perspiration might corrode watch parts, but your electrical fields aren't sucking the life out of them. Dr. Fizzix suspects some faulty data-gathering on your part but figures a sundial or hourglass should solve all your problems.

To: Matmail:
What are those beach ball–shaped things that are strung on high-voltage power lines, such as the lines that cross I-15 at Poway Road? They are so obvious and so seemingly without purpose that I imagine you must have received dozens of perplexed inquires about them already. Please humor me....
— Ed LaFrance, Poway

Strung-out balls rate a zero on the inquirymeter, Ed. Yours is a first. The key to the answer is right in your question — "so obvious." Without the so-obvious orange/yellow/red plastic balls, the power lines would be nearly invisible against the bright blue sky. Consider the implications for low-flying aircraft.

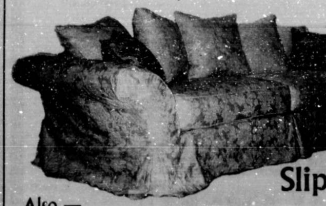

Got a question you need answered? Get it straight from the hip. Write to Matthew Alice, c/o the Reader, P. O. Box 85805, San Diego, CA 92186-5803, or fax your questions to 231-0489, or e-mail to matmail@aol.com via the Internet.

THERE WAS ANOTHER CUT LAST WEEK

SPORTING BOX

I am back at the ARCO Training Center, a.k.a. the United States Olympic Training Center, in Chula Vista.

I'm in the mess hall (athletes' dining facility), watching Jim Werland enjoy two large glasses of Gatorade and a plate of green peas, pasta, and corn. Werland has short brown hair, brown eyes, and a clean-shaven blocky face that is red enough to look freshly sunburned. He is 24 years old, and 190 pounds of less-than-five-percent body fat.

I ask, "What do you do and how did you get here?"

"I'm a canoer. There are singles and doubles and fours, but the fours are not in the Olympics." My companion was born and grew up in Ventura, California. In the sixth grade the coach of a nearby rowing club came to his middle school and gave a "big presentation in the school gymnasium. They brought in all the kids, from all the PE classes. He played a video about canoeing and had some boats set up in the gym. If you were interested you could go down to the marina and join his club.

"That was the fall of '83. In 1984, the Olympics were held in L.A. Our club was fortunate enough to be volunteers at the games. We worked at the canoe and kayak venue. I was on the dock, so I got to see the athletes; that was the clincher for me.

"I went to college at UC Irvine, majored in electrical engineering, graduated in 1994. The main reason I chose Irvine was because it's close to the Newport Aquatic Center, which is another canoe–kayak club.

"I've been to the nationals every year since I started paddling. I've won many national championships when I was younger. I've won the nationals in the four-man crew as a senior, but I haven't won any singles or doubles. Last year my partner and I were second in both doubles events. Then, at this year's Olympic team trials, we were first in one of the events, and a very close second in another. We are pretty much the top doubles team in the country."

Seems like a straightforward, straight-line bio. Just passing time now, I inquire. "Do you live on campus?"

"Yes, since March of this year. When I first moved down from Irvine, the dorms weren't open, so I had an apartment, lived by myself from November of '94 to March of '96. I would have moved earlier, but I didn't qualify for the team last year, and that's how they were deciding who got to move in."

"So you made the Olympic team!"

"I made the Olympic training squad."

"Does that mean you will be going to the Olympics, or was there another cut?"

"There was another cut; it was last week. Most of my teammates made it; unfortunately I did not."

"What happens to you now?"

"That's a really good question."

"Are you waiting for a knock on the door and a burly man announcing, 'Well, it's been a lot of fun, Jim, but...'?"

"No, I'm continuing to train. Ultimately, I'm planning on competing in the 2000 games. I'm still young compared to the rest of the athletes in the sport."

Four more years in the dorm. In a just world there would be immense amounts of money underneath this table. Moving on, I ask, "What's the most important skill in canoeing?"

"Canoeing, as opposed to kayaking, is very technical, extremely technical. Canoes don't have rudders and there are headwinds and water surface to consider. If you use brute force and paddle hard but neglect technique, then you'll be inefficient and you won't go very fast."

"What are the big countries in canoeing?"

"The Hungarians are definitely a powerhouse country; the Germans, the Swedish team, and Moldova, their doubles teams will be medal contenders."

I look into steady brown eyes, bleat, "This is your youth; why did you pick canoeing to spend it on?"

"The sport is so small in our country, we don't have very many races, maybe three or four a year. There's not much depth in canoeing in America. It's easier to become one of the top canoeists in this country because there's not very many people in the sport. But to be at the top still takes a lot of hard work. To be at the top competitively, with all the other countries in the world, is the same as any other sport.

"The people who just made the Olympic team, they're going to go race two races in Europe. Typically, they'll have a European tour, race a couple races there, plus the world championships, and a few races in our country. You'll get six or seven races if you are in that top group."

Werland's voice turns somber as he explains, "If you're in the top rung, you get to travel and race the big races. That's the ultimate. After seven years of competing, I've learned to love the competitive spirit. I want to continue training, because I want to get to that top level, the finals at the world championships."

Airwatch, a device that measures peak-flow breathing

Breathless

My sinuses were swelling, stiffening, filling up, my ears and cheeks were getting hot, my spine and my chin itched. Everything was closing in around my throat and chest; I felt a frightening internal claustrophobia, a sense of metabolic urgency rapidly mounting toward panic.

I already knew this was no ordinary asthma attack. I had my first attack nearly 30 years before, and over the years I came to recognize several kinds of asthma. Most were a lighter or heavier wheeze that came on gradually, last tiring at night, or more suddenly when shoveling snow in a heavy coat. They sounded like the word "asthma," a sibilant rasp. Three times since I'd turned 30, though, something entirely different had happened: a sudden, overwhelming assault had stormed through my whole body, seizing my throat and suffocating me. This felt like one of those asthmas.

I swung my legs over the side of the bed and put my palms on my knees in the classic asthma breathing position, wondering what the hell had brought on this attack. It felt as if I'd eaten something I was allergic to, what with the reaction throughout my whole body, the weird stomach. But what had I eaten? Fontina cheese and crackers; a bottle of Dos Equis and a bottle of Grolsch; pumpkin pie and ice cream — nothing I hadn't had before. Rolaids? I'd been taking them for a decade. They didn't contain aspirin, did they? Weren't they just chalk?

Well, what about stress? Christ, what stress wasn't I under? I was going through a divorce, I was teaching four classes at the university on top of my usual freelance writing — but could stress really cause an attack this bad?

I fumbled around on my night table and found a Primatene inhaler, the kind you see advertised on television with Jackie Joyner-Kersee taking a quick hit, recovering in 15 seconds, and then sprinting to a gold medal. It's an over-the-counter medication the doctors view askance, knowing its predilection for unfortunate cardiac side effects: raised blood pressure, even heart attacks. But my prescribed albuterol inhaler didn't seem to help much anymore; I suspected I was becoming allergic to the propellant — a disturbing thought. The Primatene seemed to work better, so my GP shrugged and said, "Sure. Give it a try." I squeezed the Primatene and drew the spray in deeply.

From the outside, the sufferer of asthmatic anaphylaxis looks as if he is collapsing inwards, drowning in an invisible sea of himself.

For a few seconds I thought it had worked. But even as I breathed a little more easily, I felt the mounting urgency of the attack in the rest of my system. My sinuses were now completely solid and swelling further, pressing against my cheeks and eyes. My face, ears, and neck burned, and a desperate itch ran up and down my spine.

I had to get to some epinephrine. Also known as adrenaline, it was one that I had been given when I was rushed to the hospital with my asthma emergency. Since then I had been trained to inject myself in the thigh and carried a kit (called Ana-Kit, short for anaphylaxis kit) around with me. Once, during a moderately severe attack, I had given myself a half-dose, just for practice, and it had worked fine: easy to inject, swift relief. I woke Barbara, my girlfriend. She had never seen a major asthma attack before; I knew that it would probably be more frightening for her than for me. From the outside, the sufferer of asthmatic anaphylaxis looks as if he is collapsing inwards, drowning in an invisible sea of himself. "In the car," I said, trying to show calm, measuring my phrases to fit the amount of air that I could muster. "In the glove compartment. Is my epinephrine syringe. Please go and get it. Right away. Here are the keys."

Alarmed, she dressed hurriedly and ran out.

The attack was mounting rapidly. By now I had two hearts, one in each ear. The effects of the Primatene had been overrun, and I felt my chest and throat tightening around my windpipe. My upper body had become panic, operating with a life and purpose of its own. I felt as if my intelligence had suddenly separated from a body gone amok and left alone and in charge, like the captain of a torpedoed ship with six deck-loads of passengers and crew milling around and beneath him, screaming, and the engines driving the ship straight down. But the epinephrine would stop all this. Everything would be all right as soon as the epinephrine arrived.

Barbara burst in with the kit, not the half-used Ana-Kit but an ostensibly more sophisticated tool I had been given since, an EpiPen syringe, commonly prescribed for those with potentially fatal bee-sting allergies. When I opened the tube, I saw that to my surprise it didn't look like a syringe but a large gray ballpoint without a nib. Press against thigh and hold in place for ten seconds. I did so. Nothing happened. I pressed my thumb against the butt-end; perhaps I had to push the needle in myself. Still nothing. How did this damn thing work? I jabbed it harder against my leg. There was a thudding noise, and I felt the needle ram into my muscle with not a stabbing pain, but that deep, unnerving thump that is the real sensation of a stab wound. I was startled — but at least the epinephrine was going in. Now things would be all right.

To be on the safe side, I waited 30 seconds before withdrawing the needle. As it came out I was surprised first at the length of it — no wonder they keep it retracted! — and then at the sudden rush of blood. This shouldn't be happening! I cupped my hand under it, yelling for a paper towel. Three fat drops seeped between my fingers and spread into the white cotton rug. Next morning they would be the only visible signs of the night's events.

Within a couple of minutes it became clear that the epinephrine wasn't working. Had it all bled out? Had I developed a resistance to it? What the hell was going on?

Asthma feeds on panic; asthma is panic. I breathed from my diaphragm and calculated. The Primatene, unlike the albuterol inhalers, contains epinephrine — 0.3 mg per dose, I thought. I had just injected myself with another 1 mg. How much would it take? What would happen if I took too much?

This is the paradox of chronic illness. The patient grows around the disease, like an oak tree engulfing a barbed-wire fence in its trunk. My own habits and shortcomings probably perpetuate the condition; the asthma disappears under the bark of my character where I am least likely to look for it. The answer, it would seem, is to remain vigilant, to inform oneself of the latest research, the newest medicines — but such vigilance shades into hypochondria; and, more importantly, anxiety brings on asthma. Research suggests that those who worry most about asthma are probably those who resort most swiftly to the inhaler; and there's nothing so terrible as the sight of someone sucking on an inhaler every half-hour, a slave to his own salvation. Breathe slowly, I told myself; think quickly.

It was an eerie, vertiginous feeling. I was confronting the normally unexamined mechanics of staying alive, like the clock face turning and staring at the movement in the case. What are the most vital functions? Breathing, heartbeat, brain activity. Of these only breathing is at all voluntary. The cardiac patient, sensing the onset of arrest, can't will his heart back to its measured beat, soothing it down from a frightening erratic fibrillation; he can't rip open his chest and squeeze once a second, his life literally in his own hands. Only with breathing are we given the devil's option, the chance to keep ourselves going by force of will.

Barbara hovered around me, trying to stroke my neck, asking questions. My irritation rose like the flush in my skin. I did not need love; I needed competence. "In the kitchen," I told her. "Opposite the sink. Top shelf. Ana-Kit. Orange plastic box. Rectangular. Under the sink. Bottle of alcohol. Get them both now."

She found the half-used Ana-Kit and the alcohol. I've used the needle before, so it will have to be sterilized, reasoned my intelligence, pacing the bridge, though I had no idea whether dipping the needle in alcohol would kill all the germs or whether at this stage that even mattered. I dabbled it briefly, then jabbed it at my thigh. It bounced off. Maybe the needle had been blunted and wouldn't work a second time? I pushed harder and it slid through the skin as if through linoleum. I gave myself another 0.5 mg of epinephrine. This, surely, would be enough.

I sat on the edge of the bed, naked, hauling in breath, bent over like a coal man hauling his sack. The epinephrine did not work.

I used to live near Accles & Pollock, in Worcestershire, England, the company that according to the Guinness Book of World Records made the thinnest tubing in the world at the time, its bore being a hundredth of an inch or so, more of a thread than a tube. That's what my trachea felt like. I can get just enough air to survive if I don't move or talk, if I can focus on the muscles in my throat and convince them not to contract still further. Even so, I realized I was better off than during my first major attack, in 1984, when that thread of a tube filled up with fluid, and I knew what it is like to drown.

I was dimly aware that Barbara was asking, "Shall I call an ambulance?" looking anxious. I nodded. My face felt stretched, like Edvard Munch's screamer. I thought of an elderly woman I once knew who died slowly, losing touch with her surroundings, sinking in on herself, confused, muffled, protected from knowing what was happening as if the body released some hormone that made it all not matter very much. That's how I want to die, I thought. Anything but dying fully aware and in a panic.

My head had started aching. By now sharp pains shot through my back whenever I breathed in. Technically, asthma is caused by not being able to breathe out; patients have died with substantial amounts of air trapped in their lungs. It doesn't feel that way to an asthmatic. Breathing in is inspiration, the grasp for the straw of air. Breathing in is the beginning of life, the first gulp as the diver reaches the surface. No asthmatic works to breathe out.

The fire crew arrived and flitted around like shadows — dark, unimportant, almost unreal. I've read that to an addict, nothing but his drug matters; and at this point I knew that this must be true in a literal sense: nothing but the drug has matter. Everything outside me was insubstantial, at most only a distraction, an irritation. Shades of people moved around the room, asking questions I couldn't answer, murmuring to each other, their walkie-talkies crackling. The only person I wanted to see was the one with the cure, which would give him or her definition and meaning. For once I could see what Sartre meant, we are given not only purpose but existence by our acts. Barbara and the fire crew couldn't help, so they vanished; I shrank further into myself and worked on giving myself existence by breathing.

At one point the panic rose like a wave and engulfed me. "Help me," I croaked to one of the fire crew. He stared at me. He doesn't know what to do, I thought. I shouldn't have involved him. I turned back into the internal world, where I was needed and could be of some use.

The ambulance crew arrived. "Do you feel as if you're going to pass out?" they asked. I worked up enough air to talk. "I feel. As if. I'm going to die." That answer didn't fit their criteria for an informative response, and at once it became clear that they couldn't do anything to help me either. But at least we would be off to the ER, which was only a few minutes up the hill.

First, though, they had to get me out of the house. "Can you put your clothes on? Can you get into the chair?" they asked; and when I didn't answer they thought I was being stubborn or I couldn't understand them, and they repeated the questions several times. But in the sick man's solipsistic wisdom, I knew better than they. The slightest movement, even talking, involved constricting some group of muscles, and every muscle was now connected to my chest, pressing on it. I had to plan every movement ahead, to imagine the most efficient, the most graceful way of doing it, then wait half a minute to relax as best I could, make the movement and collapse into myself afterward as my pulse shot up and my hearts pounded in my ears, my thread of air temporarily crushed. I felt like a dwarf — large head, barrel chest, puny arms, virtually nonexistent below the diaphragm. I had shrunk to all that mattered. It

A Brief Definition of Asthma

It's almost impossible to make any statement that is true of all asthmatics. Even the basic symptomatic wheeze, after which asthma gets its name (from the Greek word meaning to pant or breathe heavily), isn't common to all sufferers. A good hamster cough instead.

The accepted definitions of asthma seem to be getting steadily shorter and more inclusive, which is not a good sign. The current colloquial one — "reversible airway disease" — may seem as broad as it can get, but even that can be challenged. A 1021 edition in the journal Thorax says that asthma is arguably more a syndrome, a collection or concurrence of symptoms, than a disease. The National Asthma Education Program, called on to provide a state-of-the-physician's-art definition in its 1991 "Guidelines for the Diagnosis and Management of Asthma," produced 89 lines of hedgehedging and qualifications before eventually arriving at a "generally agreed-on working definition," which calls asthma "a lung disease with the following characteristics: (1) airway obstruction that is reversible (but not completely so in some patients) either spontaneously or with treatment, (2) airway inflammation, and (3) increased airway responsiveness to a variety of stimuli." Nothing, you'll note, about sneezing.

In fact, asthma is often diagnosed by the odd factor that it you can find a cause for the wheezing, it probably means you haven't got asthma. You've got bronchitis or one of the many other conditions that may mimic or aggravate asthma: bronchopulmonary aspergillosis, congestive heart failure, chronic infectious bronchitis resulting from cystic fibrosis, ciliary dysfunction syndrome, upper airway obstruction, pertussis syndrome, psychogenic cough, bronchiolitis obliterans, chronic eosinophilic pneumonia, paradoxical vocal cord dysfunction, and vasculitides. There's an even simpler but even more startling example of backwards logic at work, especially in the diagnosis of asthma in children: if you treat something as if it were asthma and it gets better, it was asthma.

If you're of the analytical cast of mind, and you don't care for the single-word definition that tries to cover everything that might be thought of as asthma, you can try giving a different name to each manifestation of asthma, but that way madness lies. Dorland's Illustrated Medical Dictionary, 27th Edition, 1988, gives us a few dozen asthmas to choose from, including abdominal asthma (asthma due to pressure on the diaphragm); allergic asthma (also called atopic asthma); bronchitic asthma (asthmatic disorder accompanying bronchitis, also known as asthma convulsivum or catarrhal asthma, even though catarrh seems to be one of those diseases like consumption or the flux that was once imminously popular but no longer exists); cardiac asthma (paroxysmal dyspnea that occurs in association with heart disease, also known as Rosenbach's asthma; this has nothing visual to do with asthma as we know it); cotton-dust asthma (byssinosis, a.k.a. cotton-mill or mill fever, an occupational respiratory disease of cotton, flax, or hemp workers); cutaneous asthma (rather asthma believed to be caused by irritation of the skin).

Elsner's asthma (aughts pectoris, which has nothing to do with asthma); prophylactic asthma (symptoms of the lungs attended with asthmatic paroxysms); essential asthma (asthma of unknown cause, also called "true" asthma; possibly the only other example of the usage of "true" is in the phrase "the real true Greg"); grinders's asthma (an occupational asthma brought on by inhaling fine particles while grinding metal); Hobendan's asthma (also angina pectoris, which by any other name still has nothing to do with asthma); hysterical asthma (not an actual asthmatic condition, but simply a wheeze that in every way wishes to be); intrinsic asthma (asthma attributed to pathophysiological disturbances and not to environmental factors: it was standard practice until recently to distinguish between intrinsic and extrinsic asthmas, but such a simple dichotomy is in danger of going the way of the dodo); isocyanate asthma (another occupational asthma, caused by allergy to toluene diisocyanate, an extremely nasty substance).

Kopp's asthma (a cynic's attribute, a fancy way of saying "a risky combination of the layers of no specific reason"); Miller's asthma (the same as Kopp's asthma, both guys must have come down with it at the same instant); miner's asthma (a byproduct of anthracosis); nasal asthma (asthma caused by "disease of the nose," a definition clearly held over since Dorland's First Edition, published in 1900; osler's asthma (see stern-Bier's asthma, yet another occupational asthma; there are many more than five included here); thymic asthma ("an alleged condition," the dictionary begins, not inspiring a lot of confidence, "occurring usually in children, associated with enlargement of the thymus, paroxysmal attacks of asthma, and a tendency to sudden death"); and Wichmann's asthma (yet another name for laryngismus stridulus).

Finally, no bestiary of alleged asthmatic or pseudo-asthmatic conditions would be complete without mention of stripper's asthma, which, disappointingly, turns out to be another asthma associated with hyperventilation and having nothing to do with sexual asthma, asthma resulting from sexual intercourse. I actually spent much of my adolescence wondering, somewhat anxiously, if I would start wheezing at the height of passion, but this turned out not to be the case, luckily.

In fact, I've found three references that connect asthma with sex. One, dated 1987, concerns involuntary release of histamines — note it's flushed cheeks — and therefore may cause asthma. More pensively, Thompson, et al., in their article "Sexual dysfunction in asthmatics," point out that "Depression, with concomitant loss of desire, as common in asthmatics. Psychological, physiological, and familial factors are closely interrelated and may combine to prevent healthy sexual functioning. Asthma patients who need to control their partners may use their illness to manipulate the sexual relationship. They may also shift from the dominant to the dependent role; this change can provoke a loss of self-esteem in the patient and cause rejection by the partner." This theory is perhaps born out by a study of four Indian men whose asthma turned out to be caused not by sexual intercourse, as they had thought (take that, Dorland's Illustrated Medical Dictionary, but by the fear of sex. Poor buttercup. ■ amazed me that when I finally half-stood, I was taller than they were.

Once in the ambulance, breathing oxygen through a mask, I hoped the worst was over. In the ER, the doctors and nurses asked me, "Can you tell us what's wrong?"; and, astonished and angry that they couldn't tell that I couldn't speak, I grabbed the pen from someone's breast pocket and wrote on the paper sheet on the examining table what had happened and how much epinephrine I had already taken. They changed my oxygen mask for an albuterol one, and within minutes my breathing began to clear — a strange sensation, like someone removing thick cobwebs one by one — and I began to notice my headache and nausea. "That'll be from the epinephrine," the nurse said, though she had no idea why, if I had so much of the drug in my system, the attack had ridden roughshod over it. She brought me a bowl, into which I threw up, and acetaminophen suppositories, which I accepted with the lack of dignity of one to whom other people barely exist.

Michael Welch

I sat on the table for an hour and a half, unwinding, my muscles unwrapping themselves until I was no longer a clenched triangle but could sit back against the pillow as the external world returned. I felt as if I had been inside out. The staff was as surprised that a major attack had passed so quickly as they were baffled about what had caused it. Within two hours I was shaky but breathing normally; at 4:00 a.m. I shuffled out to the lobby in lime-green hospital Styrofoam slippers and took a taxi home.

In the emergency room, as the attack eased away, I wondered if afterward I would have that transformative experience of seeing the world afresh and anew in all the glory that I had been overlooking; then, when that seemed unlikely, I wondered if I would emerge like Coleridge's wedding guest, a sadder but a wiser man. In fact, I was no wiser at all, as far as I could tell. Instead, it felt as if I had been visited during the night by a bear that filled the room with a blacker darkness for a terrifying long moment and then lumbered out, leaving me wondering how the hell it got in and whether it could return and leaving also a faint but perfectly distinct odor that might be the creature or might be my own smell of panic.

THE SHAPE OF THE LUNGS, you must understand, is significant.

They look like the roots of a tree, perhaps, though far spongier and more delicate. They begin with a single trunk, the trachea or windpipe, running down from the back of the throat, pink and purple, glistening with the fine coating of mucus that catches stray particles of dust, soot, etc., and is our airway's first line of defense. Below the base of the neck the trachea branches into two bronchi, one for each lung, each of them not merely a rubbery tube but a highly sensitive and complex environment, with muscled walls capable of expanding and contracting to allow more or less air to pass through (less if the air is suddenly cold, more as one exercises) and a highly specialized skin surface, or epithelium, patrolled by the myriad complex agents of our immune systems and studded with goblet cells that release more or less mucus as the situation demands. Each bronchus branches again and again into smaller and smaller airways called bronchioles (miles of them packed into less space than a gallon jug) and they continue branching until, at their tiniest and most threadlike ends, they blossom into a cluster of budlike alveoli, where the miracle of gas exchange takes place and oxygen passes into the bloodstream without blood seeping into the airways.

This is also what asthma is like. It may sound like one disease, but in fact it may have two entirely different primary symptoms: a wheeze or a cough. And the closer one examines asthma, the more it subdivides. Many people associate asthma with allergies, but it isn't clear why we have allergies or how we develop them or why they strike different people at different ages or why one person's allergic reaction takes place in the nose and is called hay fever (or allergic rhinitis) while another takes place in the skin and is called eczema (or atopic dermatitis, "atopic" simply meaning allergic), whereas others take place in the airways and are called asthma (or, nowadays, reactive airways disease). But many asthmas don't seem to involve allergens at all, being brought on by such apparently benign conditions as laughter or exercise or cold air.

The new thinking is that asthmatics have some unexplainable chronic inflammation that leaves our airway walls permanently swollen and hypersensitive, ready to cringe inward at the slightest threat, strangling our air supply. But neither of these branching, diving explanations accounts for the asthma attacks apparently started by moments of anxiety, nor the fact that an entirely different mechanism, involving an enzyme called cyclooxygenase, can bring on some of the most vicious attacks of all and mean that a single aspirin or ibuprofen tablet could kill me.

Between 1980 and 1987 the U.S. death rate from asthma rose 31 percent, and has almost doubled in the last ten years: in 1992 about 5000 Americans died of asthma.

This branching airway design is a metaphor for one other feature of asthma, in fact. When we look around us for the potential dangers, the items in the landscape that might kick off my asthma or yours or your neighbor's, they might be lurking literally anywhere. Allergies may bring it on, but the allergens themselves are almost infinitely diverse: dogweed, beer, shellfish, dust mites, molds, cockroach scales, red wine, grass pollen, peanuts, cat dander, and literally hundreds of others. Soot and dust particles may trigger an attack, or cigarette smoke or car exhaust. Thousands of substances in the workplace can be equally devastating: carpet-cleaning fluids, mildew, toluene diisocyanate, mites in grains and flours, chemicals with syllables too numerous to count, let alone pronounce. It is as if our whole environment in California in 1996 were peppered with asthma mines waiting to go off, or possibly the other way around, that our immune systems are alert to an increasing number of threats in a world we are constantly molding to fit what we think are our best interests.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta reported that between 1980 and 1987 the U.S. death rate from asthma rose 31 percent and has almost doubled in the last ten years. In 1992 about 5000 Americans died of asthma. Six percent of all hospital visits are a result of asthma, with asthma-related health care costing more than $4 billion a year. At least 12 million Americans, and 5 percent of all people in the world, have asthma. The death rate for asthma is rising everywhere. Nobody knows why.

Children in particular seem to be at risk, especially black children, especially those living in inner cities. Perhaps a million children have asthma, which is the commonest reason for them to miss school and one of the most frequent causes of their hospitalization. Childhood asthma deaths rise by about 6 per cent per year. Hospital admissions for childhood asthma almost tripled between 1970 and 1980, while all other childhood diseases remained stable. The bulk of the total hospital-admission increase was among children, with black children admitted four times more often as whites.

The official line is that asthma is an incurable but treatable disease, and the vast majority of asthma sufferers ought to be able to live normal lives. After a long period of free-for-all, there is now a set of official guidelines for diagnosis and treatment; and since the introduction of inhaled steroids a little less than a decade ago there are now good drugs that should have the whole issue under control.

Yet asthma is not going away. By the most optimistic estimates, it is as common as ever, and most physicians fear that unlike almost every other disease, it may actually be on the increase. As the '90s progressed, more and more doctors appeared in the newspapers admitting that the wonder drugs had not turned the tide, and every so often another death from asthma hits the local or national news, creating a small but disturbing ripple of alarm.

The more I find out about asthma, the less I think of it as a disease and the more it starts to seem like an index of dysfunction. No matter what avenue we venture down, sooner or later we run into a provocative silence or a flurry of contradictory answers.

Erhard Vogel demonstrates alternate-nostril breathing

We learn how our car works when it breaks down; similarly, the presence of a widespread chronic disease, incurable despite our belief in scientific medicine, often severe despite the fact that we should be able to control it easily, indicates an entire network of cracks in the smooth façade of our understanding — of disease, of agriculture and industry, of the family, of social welfare and public health, of ourselves. If we knew more about asthma, we would know a darn sight more about ourselves and about the world.

WHEN WE THINK OF DISEASE, we think of doctors, and we think of doctors curing our disease. This doesn't work with asthma, not only because asthma is incurable, but because a very strange and usually hidden dynamic exists between asthmatics, their doctors, and their medications. In short, asthmatics tend not to see doctors and not to take medications.

This apparently baffling behavior is due in part to the fact that some asthma medications don't work especially well, and some tend to draw attention to the self-conscious asthmatic. It's also due partly to the fact that the critical medications for controlling a long-term incurable disease are preventive and need to be taken for life, and we are accustomed to thinking of medication as something we take only when we absolutely have to and resent it. Above all, though, asthmatics need a very particular kind of doctor.

Michael Welch of the Allergy and Asthma Medical Group and Research Center on Granite Ridge Drive in Mission Village is widely regarded as one of the premier asthma physicians in the country. In part, his reputation comes from the cutting-edge research he and his colleagues are undertaking. (Most clinical allergists do virtually no research; some don't even read the research.) His associate Carol Gallet showed me what the Pentagon would call the new delivery systems. The aim is to get away from Freon and fluorocarbon propellants and to make more use of powders than atomized liquids. She showed me a state-of-the-art med dispenser that looked like a diaphragm case. You cock its release mechanism, trigger it, and it dispenses a measured dose, simultaneously recording on a small counter how many doses are left/have been used — a very useful safeguard against the panic of a severe attack and a virtually empty inhaler.

Dr. Welch's office is also testing the first nebulized, inhaled steroid. Previously this was a liquid spot. Small children have to use nebulizers (like small humidifiers in which the medication is dissolved) rather than inhalers because the latter require a coordinated in-breath as the med is released, which is too complicated for them. On the other hand, the inhaled steroids that would be very beneficial to young asthmatics wouldn't dissolve easily enough to be used in a nebulizer. Welch's office has the first prototype to solve the problem with new soluble steroids.

They've also created what Welch jocularly calls the Cat House, a trailer in which patients can be tested for cat allergy and also try out a new form of immunotherapy involving T-cells.

"You want to feel as if you have someone who can rescue you and rescue your child. Some of the best doctors in town don't get that."

The niftiest gadget, though, is called Airwatch. It looks like a three-tone stopwatch-cum-Sega game. This was especially appealing to a kid who had just come from being intubated but, as with many asthmatics, had no interest in learning more about his condition or monitoring his breathing with a peak-flow meter. He had been emptying a Ventolin inhaler a week — taking on it every half-hour, eight times the recommended rate. Airwatch is a small computer. The kid programs it with his normal peak-flow readings, then pulls out a small mouthpiece into which he blows. The reading tell him how freely he is breathing at the moment. At the end of a week he flips open a small cap at the base of the Airwatch to reveal a phone jack. He plugs in the phone line and his readings for the week are transmitted to Palo Alto, where the service is based, and then faxed to his family doctor. It's something of an upscale service and not cheap — $163 for the first year for the Airwatch plus the service and $100 a year thereafter. But all asthma meds are expensive. The important thing is that the boy might actually use it.

Yet probably the most important reason why Mike Welch is so highly regarded by his patients has nothing to do with his research or his professional qualifications; it is that almost immediately you, the patient, realize he is going to be there for you, which, for someone with a chronic illness, is as important as any other feature of treatment. An asthmatic, whose illness is not only chronic but can be very frightening, needs someone to bond to, someone who is both skillful and caring. "The active presence of the physician," writes Eric Cassell in The Nature of Suffering, "is part of the treatment."

After my major attack in November of '91, I was referred to a physician who was generally regarded as a top asthma specialist. He gave me a prescription for Vanceril, some dosage instructions orally and in writing, and told me to come back once in a few weeks, again in April or May, at the beginning of the pollen season, and again in a year's time. I didn't go back for the next appointment; I went back several months later and then skipped the spring appointment and one-year follow-up.

Tai-Nan Wang

I didn't go back because I just didn't believe he was sincerely interested in my welfare. "If you have another attack as serious as this one," he instructed me, "you must see me at once"; but as I was enfolding myself gratefully in his concern, he added, "during office hours on the next working day."

To hell with that, I thought. When six or eight weeks went by and no receptionist called to jog my memory about the next appointment, I knew. He didn't care. He was a specialist with a full waiting room. At a rough guess, he made five times my annual salary, yet the sign in the front office still demanded payment in full at each visit. Fuck him. When I did return, it was, though I didn't realize it, to prove him wrong. He had said I was probably suffering permanently reduced lung function, by implication because I hadn't come to see him sooner. When I went back, not having wheezed for four months, I blew so hard into the peak-flow meter the needle went off the chart. Take that.

He had done his best, but instead of getting me to follow the precise duplicated instructions he had handed me, he had pushed me — to be more accurate, I had retreated — into the shadows of medicine. And virtually every asthmatic I've talked to has had a similar experience, often, sadly, with more than one doctor. Sara Sweet, of the group Parents of Children with Asthma, took her daughter Bonnie to see one of her HMO's allergists, who showed her glossy pictures of dust mites and then asked, "Well? Any other questions?" The pediatrician was no better. "Lousy. Unsupportive." She now pays out of her own pocket to see Welch, who is not on her HMO's roster.

The three most important qualities for a doctor, wrote Sir William Osler, the great turn-of-the-century physician, are availability, affability, and ability, in that order, and for chronic disease at least, that is still true.

This may be even more true for the parent of a severely asthmatic child, as he or she is not only helpless in the face of an attack but also in the face of his or her failure as a parent. She has tried everything she can for her child, and he is still in unpredictable and desperate danger. In those dark times, it is vital to have a physician who is caring for the parent as well as the child.

"You want to feel as if you have someone who can rescue you and rescue your child," explained Lynn Devine, who now sees Dr. Welch with her son Alex. "Some of the best doctors in town don't get that." Before she saw Mike Welsh she took Alex to a doctor named Nevin Wilson, who has since left the area. Wilson recognized the value of Osler's doctrine to such a degree that he once saw Alex at 10:00 a.m. on Christmas Day.

Without someone to bond to, we may do almost anything, trying increasingly desperate alternative remedies, visit well-meaning and likable doctors who know relatively little about asthma (all too common, sadly), or convince ourselves that our asthma is not all that bad anyway, pushing ourselves further and further into the shadows of medicine and settling ourselves up for that final desperate dash to the ER.

Our defiant and resentful behavior is officially called "noncompliance." I talked to two nurses in San Diego who couldn't understand why people with asthma keep smoking, don't take their meds, or leave it until the last minute to come to the ER. "Most people are really, really stupid," said one. "No, I think people are just lazy," said the other.

This is quite wrong and shows how wide a gap now yawns between the world of medicine and the world that medicine is intended to serve. Asthmatics "fail to comply" not because we are congenitally stupid, lazy, or stubborn, but because severe asthma causes a double rejection of reason. In the throes of suffocation we don't want a cool medical intervention, we want someone to cling to in abject terror. (Lacking a doctor, I called, "Help me. Help me," to a fireman, who was as helpless as I.)

Some San Diego school districts have no full-time nurse, so the inhaler has to be kept locked up, and the kid has to get someone to open the nurse's office.

"Asthma is such a frightening disease," said one of the few doctors I've met who understood the needs of the asthmatic, "that an asthmatic wants someone to bond to" — and as soon as he said "bond," I vividly imagined the doctor I've never had, a knowledgeable friend, present and comforting. I saw myself bent over, gripping his arm, trying to breathe, knowing that he could be trusted and that I could allow myself to be seen in this moment of panic and weakness.

Which is, of course, the second rejection of reason. Once the attack is over — which may, after all, be only a few minutes later — the disease seems to vanish, and we are left feeling not only scared to the core but also very foolish. It's as if a tidal wave had crashed in through our bedroom window in Kansas, overwhelming us, taking us to the point of drowning, and then withdrawing without a trace, the carpet not muddy, the bedclothes not even damp. How can we not be ashamed of our panic, our moment of weakness? This makes it all the harder to go to see a doctor when we have no symptoms to justify our poaching of his time, only an emotional residue that is all the more uncomfortable for having no cause that we can show.

His cool professional manner rebukes our desire to blurt out, "Doctor, I'm scared"; and his trained reply, "What seems to be the trouble?" reminds us that this is supposed to be an intelligent exchange of medical information. So he dismisses and we beg for something more, or else our pride tells us we'd rather go with the patent medicines and try to suppress the anxiety, though to do so will lead us to be accused of denial. All medicine is driven and distorted by fear, and asthmatics are merely an extreme case because the condition is so common, so frightening, and so quickly over. Or maybe the ideal of cool professional detachment is simply the wrong model.

ONE COMMON REASON asthmatics don't take their meds as prescribed is that they don't trust drug companies — a distrust that is often so deep that it sucks in doctors who prescribe and therefore apparently endorse not only the drug companies' products but also their actions. Physicians are, in fact, in a very tricky position in being beholden to their pharmaceutical cousins while having virtually no control over them. Quite the reverse, in fact; the drug companies are not above trying to mislead doctors — indeed, they must impress their products' effectiveness and reliability on the doctors who will prescribe them or use them in hospitals.

You'd imagine that in the professional periodicals, at least, drug companies would be kept to the straight and narrow, but a 1992 UCLA study of 109 ads in 10 leading medical journals found that 100 contained "deficiencies in areas for which the FDA has established explicit standards for quality." Forty percent of the ads reviewed exaggerated a drug's benefits or downplayed its known hazards; 30 percent cited statistics from "inconclusive, dissimilar, or poorly designed studies"; and 30 percent included misleading graphs or tables. If these are the ads directed at those most likely to spot their errors or liberties with the truth, what chance does that leave the muddled layman who is still at the kindergarten level of trying to spell "relief"?

It leaves us watching television news, but there too the drug companies have exerted their influence. A notorious example was the Billie Bloom videotape, which looked like a locally produced spot in the evening news, which aired on KGTV, Channel 10 in San Diego and in other cities in early 1987. Actually, it was a "video news release" produced by a public relations agency in New York, nominally on behalf of the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America but paid for by Key Pharmaceuticals, a contributor to the foundation and maker of a drug that got a favorable mention in the tape. Billie Bloom, an 11-year-old asthmatic, reenacted on camera an asthma attack that occurred after she had switched medicines. The thrust of the message was that generic drugs can be less safe than brand names — a message that the FDA cont'd-ered misleading, but it took no action. In all, the New York Times reported, the tape was aired 31 times by 23 stations and was seen by an estimated 1.3 million people.

ONE OF THE PLOY MIRAGES CAUSED BY ASTHMA is the belief that if we look at what helps the condition, we may better understand what causes it. The trouble is that over the centuries sufferers have been lured by a wide variety of so-called cures, and astonishingly, many of them have done at least some good. In a sense, asthma is the perfect advertisement for a holistic approach, because any improvement in what is now called "baseline health" tends to lessen asthma symptoms. Or maybe it's the other way around: asthma, or at least some asthmas, is an illustration of our general health — as a person, as a society, as a planet.

Lynn Devine

An Egyptian asthmatic of the 16th Century B.C. might have been handed a papyrus prescribing boiled and strained colocynth, onion, goose fat, beer, and decayed flesh. Chinese remedies included dried geckos and tea made from cockroach entrails. In fact, many traditional Chinese acupuncture herbal remedies involve making a small beetle eat the herbs and then eating the beetle. In classical Greece it was thought that sulfur, which induces coughing, would help asthmatics cough up whatever was making them wheeze, so kindly guides led asthmatics up to the crater of Mount Etna to inhale the fumes. American folk treatments have included licorice water, apple water, mullein, gum ammoniac, vitamins, cider vinegar, marijuana, and cocaine. Asthmatics have been sent to clinics at the tops of mountains and in the depths of salt mines.

I myself have had desensitizing injections, preventive medications, steroid shots, psychotherapy, and even a course of injections of tobacco leaf, silver, and blackthorn prescribed by a homeopath and gingerly administered by my girlfriend, who was understandably reluctant to jab me in the back of my neck.

Perhaps as many as 80 percent of asthma sufferers have tried a non-mainstream treatment at some time. Our faith in alternative medicine echoes the creed of an earlier doctor, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: when you have eliminated the impossible, whatever remains, however improbable, is the truth. If Western medicine says asthma is incurable, we're straight off into the realms of the improbable, sniffing along the trail laid by none other than Sherlock Holmes. This is a logical fallacy, of course — just because orthodox Western medicine has no cure, it doesn't mean that anyone else does either. But if the local MD can't do it, then it takes no more than optimism to ferry us into the colorful land of the unlicensed and the unproved; and the hooting derision of the crowd in the white lab coats standing on the shore behind us makes us only more determined to prove them wrong.

In San Diego, I decided to investigate three that were still relatively unfamiliar to me: hypnotherapy, yoga, and acupuncture.

JUST WHEN YOU THOUGHT ASTHMA WAS SIMPLY a matter of allergens and inflammation and could safely be left in the hands of the allergists and immunologists who understand antibodies and chemotactic mediators, Dr. George Pratt of Scripps Memorial Hospital and UCSD includes in his book A Clinical Hypnosis Primer the statement, "By current estimates, 50 to 80 percent of all illness is psychosomatic rather than organic." This does not mean they are self-inflicted or "all in the mind." It means that "strong emotional states or unconscious psychological conflicts can in time cause organic symptoms or exacerbate existing organic pathology." In short, he says, stress can produce just about any physical symptom we can imagine.

Exactly how hypnosis works is something of a mystery, he concedes. The American Society of Clinical Hypnosis has written, "None of the definitions of hypnosis satisfies the criteria for a good scientific theory." (When I read that I cackled with glee and rubbed my hands together. Exactly the same is true of asthma.) All the same, in 22 years of using hypnosis as a psychotherapeutic tool, he has found it frequently very helpful in treating people to relax, to feel in control, to reduce the frequency and severity of attacks, perhaps by reducing anticipatory anxiety and the fight-or-flight response that sets off the immunological cascade that feels like panic.

His most successful patient, though, was himself. In the early '80s, at a time of enormous personal stress, he developed adult-onset asthma serious enough to leave him unable to run or take part in sports and to require daily Prednisone and a variety of other meds. After some time he realized he might try some of his own techniques for his own benefit.

By the time she gets to the ER, she has large clumps of thick mucus that can't be dissolved, her airways are so swollen they are clamped shut, and she dies.

"I was so panicked over this I hadn't thought of doing what theoretically I knew I could do." He set aside half an hour twice a day to practice self-hypnotic techniques, listening to relaxation tapes that he devised for himself, imagining his muscles getting heavy, feeling comfortable, picturing pleasant scenes, his body beginning to heal, breathing better. He also set up a cue to trigger this relaxation and got to the point where he only had to take a break from whatever he was doing, relax his neck and shoulders, and touch his thumb and forefinger. Ten years later he is completely free of asthma symptoms; his chief of staff, Dr. Adrian Jaffer, a renowned allergist, can't believe it.

The success of Pratt's hypnosis shows the strange interknotted cause-and-effect in asthma. For many asthmatics — but not all — one of our most frightening experiences is that of a severe asthma attack. If fear can provoke asthma, then, fear of asthma can provoke asthma. By extension, anything that mimics asthmatic symptoms can potentially have the same effect, though such facsimiles vary widely from person to person. For years I started wheezing as soon as I swam underwater, as if the sensation of pressure on my chest were a threat in itself or a threat of a threat. (I can't stand clothes that are tight around my neck either.) A friend is sensitive to rooms with low ceilings, as if physical claustrophobia were a reminder of the internal claustrophobia of asthma. Maybe this is why some of us even seem to be sensitive to changes in air pressure.

This is called "one-trial learning," Pratt explained. "Anything that reminds you in the least triggers a biological-psychological event." This is why, he said, panic attacks and anxiety disorders respond so well to hypnosis. "If you can change the message you're sending yourself while simultaneously relaxing yourself, you can make a harmless process out of going through an event that would normally elicit a tremendous response."

Edward Golub

Who knows how far afield we scan for such danger signs? Being trapped in an elevator has virtually nothing in common with the physical experience of an asthma attack, yet the fact that we asthmatics instinctively talk of our physical experience in terms of claustrophobia, and the claustrophobe talks of feeling as if he can't breathe suggests that we feel (the very word has both meanings) in both dimensions. In my phone conversations with my ex-wife, I felt trapped, helpless, unable to speak my mind, forced to hold my breath in the hope that the threat would go away. Is it too fanciful to suggest that in doing so I was creating an emotional-physical landscape that was all too reminiscent of asthma, setting off my own alarm system?

A note: Pratt writes that "a hypnotic suggestion is only effective to the extent that it is accepted by the patient." The proof of a drug, on the other hand, is that it works irrespective of the patient's will, and we have come to believe that (1) drugs can cure anything, and (2) because they don't need our help, we don't need to make any adjustment in our attitudes or behaviors. We have externalized the responsibility for health and cast it in pill form. Yet this leaves us with profoundly ambivalent attitudes to medicine, as the phrase "a bitter pill" reflects. We want the immediate cure, the magic shot, yet we are terrified of the needle. We want the miracle cure but despise the drug company.

Nowhere is this better illustrated than with asthma, where the miracle drugs — the inhaled steroids — arrived at the beginning of the decade with a loud fanfare that became increasingly muted as asthma continued to flourish. The fact is that drugs, too, are largely dependent for their effectiveness on the patient's acceptance. If we don't believe in our meds, we simply don't take them, or don't take them properly, or often enough. Meds, like a good diet and regular exercise, must be part of our desires and habits if they are to do any good. The future is not pharmacological.

LINDA ROBINSON DEVELOPED ASTHMA during a bout of pneumonia five years ago. Thereafter, whenever she became anxious or upset, especially during family conflicts with her daughter, she found herself wheezing heavily, unable to finish a sentence. She also wheezed whenever she had a cold or respiratory infection or with exercise.

Six months later she started attending yoga and meditation classes at the Vogel Institute in San Diego. "Almost immediately I noticed a difference. I could stop an attack in the middle." While arguing with her daughter, "I'm fighting for air, and she got really scared, and she's freaking out, which helps [the asthma] escalate even more. Right in the middle of it I was able to relax and change my breathing, so I was breathing diaphragmatically and under control, and after a few minutes my breathing was back to normal." She still uses her inhaler when she gets a cold, but otherwise she has barely wheezed since.

Yoga has generally good press among asthmatics, but I had never given it a real try, because the only time I took a yoga class I got bored. I decide to give the Vogel Institute a call, and one Thursday evening I find myself in an airy, high-ceilinged room under exposed beams, taking a yoga class with Ken Temple.

The reviewer, he explains, essentially works at stress reduction and breathing techniques. Yoga, meditation, and deep relaxation, that is breathing techniques called pranayama, or the supercontrolled breath, to give more control of breathing, are areas of great. More noticeably, they teach alternate nostril breathing, "a way to fine-tune the body's neurological system." The spine has two energy systems, he said, one of which arouses at each second. "One heats the system up, the other cools it down." Breathing with electronic exercise in a specific way, he said, helps balance the two systems. "The breathing goes to the cerebellum brain. It really gets into bone, deep and old."

This sounds groovy exotic, but the basic concept — breathing from the diaphragm — is familiar to Western medicine. Many respiratory nurses teach children to breathe from the diaphragm, which lessens the strain on the chest, neck, throat, and back and thus gets more air in with less muscular fatigue and less consequent increase in tension. I can remember relearning out of asthma attacks up until the age of about 23, after that they seemed to take a firmer grip, and only meds would work.

On the 15th, I find that the breathing and stretching lessen up muscles I didn't know was there, relax muscles I didn't know I was clenching. I sniff, clear my throat, settle more deeply into the mat. Old injuries reappear in short, sharp twinges; I had no idea I was still guarding them with such silent vehemence. Find the source of the tension; reassure it; relax through and past it. Gone.

Stretching muscles breaks up knots, allowing blood to bring in oxygen and begin healing, flushes out the lactic acid that burns. It releases memories, too. I am 24 again, hunched over in a locker room after a game of squash, feeling the crawling sensation at the base of my throat, trying to release it, feeling with each exhalation the unnaturally long final tapering-off. Don't fight to breathe in again too soon. Draw down the diaphragm as if it were the bottom of a balloon, pulling air into the lungs without having to use the chest muscles, because they are the ones in trouble, already cramping and twitching, tense, exhausted, sending small stabbing pains between your shoulder blades. Draw down the diaphragm. Let the breath go, slowly, taking its own time. The last few inches of air take forever, but don't be afraid. Don't clench. Don't worry about the wheeze, almost musical at times like a discord on a tiny electric organ. The last few inches of air take forever.

Relaxation is an acquired skill. We are overtly taught how to be busy or dutiful, how to fight or to grin and bear it, but not how to focus on a particular muscle and relax it. Which is unfortunate, as relaxing is intimately connected to self-knowledge, discovering the body from inside out and thereby discovering the mind and its unexpected quiet authority. After I developed asthma at the age of 11, my mother taught me a few of these tricks, working down the body, focusing on each muscle group in turn, but I suspect she was unusual in this. If you try to force a muscle to stretch, Ken says, it resists — and I'm thinking muscles are like asthma patients, resistant, noncompliant. Fear is

Why Is Asthma on the Increase?

Some doctors argue that it isn't; it is simply better and more frequently diagnosed. The success of spacer, though, is that now we know the importance of good inhaler technique, not just how much is squeezed out from canister with each, and recent research has shown how high levels of cat dander in smoky homes in which no one has ever lived.

Dust Mites. In a curious way, dust mites augment a weird line between asthma and comfort. For example, in a group of refugees in Papua New Guinea, the incidence of asthma has been found virtually nothing to more than 7 percent (in other words, Westernized) in the last quarter-century. Researchers discovered that was the period the Rice Cat arrived, who crept hand in hand with dust mites. Kerr occupied Manhattan, and the blankets were the first soft materials in those Spartan villages where dust mites couldn't live and breed. Dust mites also flourish in electric other modern conveniences.

Dander Hacking. Modern dentists contend that asthma ensures that dust mites and some insects can now have a year-round growing season.

Laundry Detergents. Fifty years ago, everyone washed clothes and linens in hot water, which rinse the chemicals of dust mites including them. Now that we have detergents that water detergents, the mites remain encased and change undisturbed by either or soap.

Waste-wall Computing. Once the presence of this ash, it's not a common feature of tract homes. The more the carpet, the more the mites.

Smoking. The only growth factor in the foreseeable future is cancer, in recent years has been young women in their late teens and early 20s — in other words, in their prime of childbearing years. Smoking both during and after pregnancy correlates with a greater likelihood of the child developing allergies, asthma, and respiratory problems of all kinds. But smoking is unlikely to be a growth factor in San Diego, which, according to the American Lung Association, has a lower smoking rate than any other major U.S. city. ■ stronger than good intentions.

"Asthma is simply a habit of fear, a pattern that can be discarded," Temple says after the class. "That's why there is a real cure for asthma in this program. It takes care of that underlying fear." Everybody has fear, he adds; different people express it in different ways. The crucial thing is not to accept that crippled posture, that crippled self-image, "knowing that our real identity is not the disease." (He is one of a number of people who believe that to call oneself an asthmatic or an alcoholic is not an acceptance of responsibility for one's condition but a dangerous tarnishing of one's own identity.) "We are not isolated beings but are connected within ourselves, with each other, and with the universe."

Later, a couple of echoes come back to me. Erhard Vogel's Expert in Life program sounds very much like the advice that physicians who work with chronic illnesses such as asthma and multiple sclerosis give their patients: become an expert in your condition. The take-charge attitude that Mike Welch advocates reappears here, only writ larger and broader. Take charge not only of your illness but of your life in general. It's a sign of how disease-focused Western medicine has been that we have swallowed this perspective. How can we take charge of a disease without addressing the rest of our lives? This is one of the central problems of asthma. Monitoring my symptoms with a peak-flow meter is indeed one step toward understanding and taking charge of my condition. But how much good does it do if I am stuck in poverty or addicted to cigarettes, or my parents won't take my illness seriously, or my husband is an alcoholic, and it's all I can do to keep myself intact?

I can't speak for Erhard Vogel's philosophical and therapeutic approaches, having seen virtually nothing of them, but I can't see how yoga itself can do anything but good -- unless it becomes too soothing and we use it as a way to ignore learning about our disease. (It's all too easy to take Ken Temple's "Asthma is simply a habit of fear" at face value, nod, and remain in near-total ignorance about what triggers our illness.) Many practitioners of Western medicine are open-minded enough to recommend yoga as part of an asthma treatment; their fear, and mine too, is that their Eastern counterparts won't grant them the same respect. Taking charge of chronic illness is very difficult without taking a broader grip on one's situation in life. But taking charge of one's life should also involve learning about one's illness, moving back and forth between Eastern and Western approaches with ease, speaking both languages.

George Pratt and Ken Temple use different techniques toward a similar end. Some may work better for some patients, others for others; the degree of belief, in itself, may affect the degree of commitment, of relaxation, and therefore of response. We're in gray area here, impossible to quantify. No wonder allergy, with its precise numbers of IgE antibodies, seems so much more credible, so much safer. Whether alternate-nostril breathing really purifies the anabolic and catabolic motor fibers in the spine (as the Vogel Institute literature promises), I can't say; being a novice, I didn't do it. In general, this stuff is impossible to quantify. How much benefit did I get from it, on a scale of 1 to 10? How much did the guy next to me get out of it? How quickly did it act? Why didn't I respond as well to yoga when I first tried it 15 years ago? Can the instructor guarantee that his results are reproducible? Are they more effective than placebo in double-blind crossover trials?

(Yet even in conventional medicine, one patient is said to "respond well" to a drug, while another responds less well; we all have different tolerances and different side effects to differing degrees, and when one starts to include the mysterious power of the placebo effect, this yoga stuff is not so weird after all.)

On my way home, I encounter a couple of nurses from Children's Hospital. They see a lot of asthma: in-patient, ICU, ER. It's a terrifying thing, they say — for the patient, for the family, for the caregiver. The staff can administer the meds, but then all they can do is watch. Everyone is tense; the families, too, can hardly breathe. The patients are usually silent, hunched over in the classic tripod position, unless they're very young. The meds make the two-year-olds ballistic, they say; the heart rate way up. Then they may crash, suddenly, then respirations rate dropping like a rock, and then it's time to intubate them. But this is a last resort. The tube itself is invasive and can make the airways clamp down still harder. And in any case, the respirator tends to work only one way; the positive pressure forces the oxygen in, but there's no corresponding pressure to force the carbon dioxide out. Asthmatics die with their lungs full of trapped, stale air. This is what we talk

Phone Matches™ Success Stories:

Shelly & Curtis Ohl

ALL IN ONE! Tall, attractive, mature, confident, sincere, unique, enjoys new adventures, seeks (6'+) 26-33, open, romantic, honest, secure, outgoing professional for relationship and commitment. ☎

EMPOWERING, energetic, emotionally/financially secure, 6'6", 33, serious fun, educated, humorous, physically/socially outgoing. Wanting to share life's romantic adventures. I will return all calls. ☎

Curtis: I advertised in Phone Matches™ for about a year, talked to lots of women over the phone, and met quite a few. I think I must have dated everyone in North America. It kept me so busy I didn't have time to answer other people's ads. But on this particular week, something inside me said: "You better start searching yourself."

Shelly: It wasn't a good week for me either. I had this height requirement – I'm six foot tall – so a lot of people I had to cross off right away. I never did see Curtis's ad. And by the time I heard from him, I had already called back a few guys and set up some meetings.

Curtis: Shelly and I talked on the phone four or five times and each conversation lasted four or five hours. By the time we met, a lot of the "first date" conversation was out of the way.

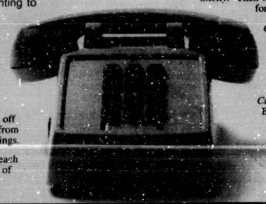

Shelly: We went to Seaport Village and sat on a bench and talked. Then all of a sudden, it was 2:00 a.m. Curtis says he "knew" right away.

Curtis: I'm a counselor, so I can identify people's "issues" rather quickly. I was looking for someone who knew who she was and what she wanted in life.

Shelly: I also knew it was going to be something good, but I wasn't going to jump the gun and say, "This is it."

Curtis: We got engaged after eight months of dating. We took a sunset cruise on the Hornblower and I asked Shelly to marry me on the bow of the boat. Meanwhile, our friends were going around the boat telling the other passengers and passing out noise makers. When we came back inside they all applauded.

Shelly: Then we spent the next year planning the wedding. It was small, formal and intimate.

Curtis: Our honeymoon was on St. Lucia in the Caribbean. No phones, no faxes, no newspapers.

Shelly: I used to be a person who liked to go to bars and party with a gazillion people. Now I enjoy staying home on Saturday nights and watching "Cops" with Curtis.

Curtis: When you're in your twenties, dating is not much trouble. But when you have a career and a house and everything, it takes a lot of energy. And then, to find the right person is like finding a needle in a haystack. That's why Shelly and I turned to the Reader.

Shelly: I don't think that advertising for someone is considered a "bad" thing anymore. My mother did it back in Minneapolis and she's been with the same guy for six or seven years. So after I moved to San Diego I thought, "I'll just do what my mom did." I liked being able to just place the ads and then screen the calls.

Curtis: I found the whole process very interesting. Some women even introduced me to their friends when it didn't work out between us. You have to be tenacious, though. You won't be successful if you go on two or three dates and then give up. Phone Matches™ provides you with the hay, and eventually, you can find the needle.

about over pad thai and red curry, this and their plans to get away from their work, to visit Australia for a month, to visit the chateaux of the Loire Valley.

THE AIR IN TAI-HAN WANG'S OFFICE IN CLAIREMONT is thick with the strong, barky smell of a thousand herbs. On his desk, under a hundred or so papers, he finds William Chang's Catalogue and Reference Guide of "Jen-on" Chinese Herbs and Formulas and shows me some of its descriptions of various asthmas and the recommended remedies. On his shelves stand a collection of mysterious jars of apothecaria and a remarkable range of books in both English and Chinese. books about herbs, about standard Western medicine, a translation of The Yellow Emperor's Classic of Internal Medicine, which includes what is thought to be the first recorded description of asthma, and, as if to complete the trilogy of alternative cures, Helping Yourself with Self-Hypnosis. I seem to have come full circle.

Wang grew up and trained in Taiwan and came to the U.S. in 1970. He diagnoses by looking at the tongue, reading six pulses on each wrist, palpating key points, testing sensitivity to heat and conductivity. He thereby arrives at a holistic picture of the patient's general health, the overall flow of his chi energy (a combination of the nervous system plus the electromagnetic closed-circuit system among the tissues, the wired and the wireless) through the meridians that serve the major organs. The flow of energy is regulated by inserting and manipulating needles to stimulate or suppress it. He begins to treat the most acute conditions, then moves on to restore and maintain a general balance of health, both physiological and psychological. Treatment is with needles in the office, with herbs at home, traditionally in tea form, now available as capsules.

He shows me a needle, then with a swift and unexpected flick of the wrist he inserts it into my arm, on the outer curve of the crook of the elbow. It doesn't hurt as it goes in — a slight shock, perhaps — but after a moment it seems to expand and take up more space, to affect an area roughly the size of a tennis ball. This region feels slightly uncomfortable, a dull ache with an overtone of annoyance, like something that needs to be taken care of but has been put off as long as possible.

As the interview goes on, I find myself clearing my throat every few minutes and am a little embarrassed, then think, screw it, I'm an asthmatic. I produce more mucus than some people. If he can't deal with it, then he doesn't deserve to be a doctor.

Two days later I recall this and realize that I don't clear my throat like that all the time — in fact, the looseness of the mucus started shortly after Wang inserted the needle in my lung meridian and lasted for perhaps half an hour. Have I, in effect, received the beginnings of an acupuncture treatment without even knowing it? My mind boggles, uneasily.

Meanwhile, he reassures me that he refers emergency cases of asthma to the ER, recognizing the need for extreme measures in extreme cases, and advises asthmatics against eating anything cold, such as ice cream, whose temperature "affects the energetic system and delays the recovery."

In Western terms, these techniques simply shouldn't work. Some are untested, some unproved, some based on principles that we claim don't exist. Which is why I am particularly interested to meet Alex Morales, one of Wang's patients, and his mother, Martha. Before our meeting, she sends a two-and-a-half-page letter explaining her ordeal with Alex's asthma.

I meet them at Wang's office. Alex does not look like a sufferer. Now 14, he shakes hands firmly, looks relaxed and fit in sneakers, shorts, polo shirt, with longish dirty-blond surfer hair. He starts on the soccer and football teams at Francis Parker School.

Alex suffered his first attack at nine months. Martha says, reading from her account, when the family was living in Phoenix. "I have been blessed with good health, stamina, and vigor all my life. At that time I could not have imagined how his illness would impact our lives." Over the next five years Alex took Alupent, Bronkosol, Slo-bid, Prednisone, theophylline, epinephrine, Vetolin, and other drugs. "It has been ten years since he took those drugs, and I still remember their names." He was twice hospitalized; he suffered from accelerated heartbeat, bronchitis, sinus infections, and pneumonia. "He was sick every month for the first 5 years of his life.... He has gone through seven or eight cycles of antibiotics every year for at least 7

New Miller Beer joins America's popular beer family

Miller introduces brand new beer bearing family name

Brewmaster: "Miller Beer makes thirst worthwhile"

By Mike Gilman

When you craft a beer that stands out from the crowd, picking a name is easy – you name it after yourself. That's what Miller Brewing Company has done with its new creation – Miller Beer.

"We take a lot of pride in creating a beer so good, we're just calling it who we are," says Miller Brewmaster David Ryder.

Available nationwide this spring, Miller Beer is a premium, mainstream beer with a full, rich flavor. The secret is a special brewing process using the best part of the hops — what Miller calls the "heart of the hops."

"Hops are what give beers their individual, distinct taste," says Ryder. "Using the heart of the hop results in a beer that's big in flavor, short on bitterness and a taste that goes down easy."

Tastes and preferences in beers are evolving, adds Ryder, who points out that the popularity of light beers indicates some people want beers that are easy to drink and not bitter or filling. At the same time, other people want fuller-flavored beers – witness the interest in micro-brews and specialty beers.

"The special brewing method used in new Miller Beer lets us strike a perfect balance between taste and drinkability that meets the changing tastes of today's beer drinkers," says Ryder.

Miller Beer is brewed to satisfy that wide array of tastes and preferences.

"Miller Beer is truly a new, distinctive beer that stands out from the crowd," says Ryder. "One taste and you'll know the difference."

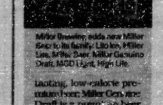

"For a beer that's full of flavor with less bitterness, and remarkably easy to drink."

New Miller Beer stands out on the shelf, too. A striking red, blue and white logo in a traditional brown bottle makes it easy to identify.

Miller Brewing Company expresses confidence that Miller Beer represents a new standard for premium, mainstream beers.

Miller Beer's distinct red label makes big impact with beer drinkers.

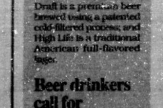

Miller Brewing adds new Miller Beer to its family. Lite ice, Miller Lite, Miller Beer, Miller Genuine Draft, MGD Light, High Life.

Lasting, low-calorie premium beer, Miller Genuine Draft is a premium beer brewed using a patented cold-filtered process, and High Life is a traditional American full-flavored lager.

Beer drinkers call for Miller Beer – the one with the red label

As new Miller Beer becomes available in bars and restaurants across the country, the brand is quickly becoming known as "Miller with the red label."

Paul Reiter, president of Miller Brands, a Miller wholesaler in Milwaukee, Wis., says that referring to the brand's distinctive red packaging graphics is an easy way for beer drinkers to order the beer.

WHEN BUSINESS BRINGS YOU TO... THINK

Experts agree: New Miller Beer dethrones the competition

By Peter Martin

Throughout time, the ultimate test for an up-and-comer has been to challenge the champion. In the beer industry, where taste is king, the most direct challenge is a taste test.

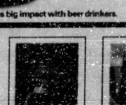

In an independent, blind taste test conducted by a major metropolitan daily newspaper with three well-known beer experts, new Miller Beer soundly defeated the top-selling beer in the American premium mainstream beer category, which is the largest segment in the beer industry and includes a variety of full-calorie products.

"It's a better beer."
-Dennis Davison, beer judge

Following the conventional rules for a taste test, the three experts, all of whom have judged numerous professional beer competitions in the past, scrutinized their beers for nearly half an hour and then all three – one a native of England, one German-born and one a Milwaukee native, scored new Miller Beer the taste champion.

With comments such as "...good malt balance," "...fuller flavor, nice finish," "...nice follow-through with hop flavors," "...it's a better beer," the experts were unanimous in their assessment of Miller Beer.

We found out how you can conduct your own taste test. Here's how.

The smell, the look, the taste. Professional beer tasters judged new Miller Beer; (from left to right) Dennis Davison, Jerry Uthemann and Brian North.

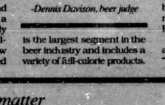

The heart of the matter

Quality hops mean big flavor, smooth taste

In a proprietary brewing method, Miller Brewing Company is using "the heart of the hops" to brew a beer with full flavor but very little bitterness – new Miller Beer.

With 140 years of brewing under its belt, Miller spent more than two years crafting this new beer, brewed with only the best part of select hops.

"Hops are the spice of beer adding their own special taste, aroma, texture but also bitterness," explains David Ryder, brewmaster for Miller.

Hops are the spice of beer: adding flavor, texture and aroma.

"When brewing new Miller Beer, we use only the heart of the hop to produce a rich flavor that diminishes the bitter characteristics typically associated with full-flavored beers," says Ryder. "This gives Miller Beer its smooth taste and rich texture."

"More hops means more flavor, richer texture, but in the case of new Miller Beer, less bitterness," says Ryder.

Gather some friends or "testers." Two glasses per tester. Miller Beer and another American lager of your choice. Score each one on color, aroma, flavor, smoothness / easy to drink and less bitter aftertaste.

Chill both beers before you begin. Pour both beers behind a shield to remove an objective "label" factor. Ask each participant to taste the beer and record their rating in each category, using 1 (poor) to 5 (great) for each chosen brands. Gather all score cards and compare. The beer with the higher score is your winner.

years. At age 14 he has taken more antibiotics than I have in 41 years."

The worst and most constant symptom, Alex adds, was his blocked nose. "It was like I had two pieces of marble shoved up it. I couldn't sleep well. Phys ed was a no-no. To keep up with my friends when they were running around the playground was hard also. I had to chew with my mouth open, and some days even to talk was hard."

In 1986, she goes on, she turned to alternative medicines in an effort to wean Alex from the 15 or 20 pills he was taking each day. Over the next six or seven years, Alex submitted to tea of catnip, comfrey, lobelia extract, castor oil packs on the chest and back, glycothalmine in water, steam treatments, Mother Earth cough syrup, massage, postural cupping, herbs of fenugreek and thyme, and chiropractic care to free up the nerves to the nose.

"The beet juice was the worst," Alex interjects. "It was horrendous."

"He submitted to everything I did to him," Martha replies, "but if he had a choice between beet juice and dying, I think he'd rather die."

She eliminated all meat, dairy, corn, soy, orange juice, artificial coloring and flavoring, sugar, and salt from his diet, then gradually reintroduced each to determine their effects. An allergist said that he was allergic to olive trees. A CAT scan showed nothing wrong with the structure of his skull.

The Morales family had and still has no health insurance. "I have paid out of my pocket for everything," Martha says.

In the fall of 1995, the Morales family moved to San Diego. "He is now 13," Martha reads, "and still does not breathe through his nose. Alex has come to accept it. He says, 'Mom, that is just how I am.' I say, 'No. We are treating symptoms and not solving problems.' He gets sick again. It is now October of 1995. My husband saw Dr. Wang's ad in the newspaper. I call Dr. Wang. It is 11:30 at night. He answers the phone. Says to bring him in tomorrow at noon. We go. [Dr. Wang] is wonderful. We go 12 times or so, and Alex finally breathes through his nose, slowly at first but then more openly. Dr. Wang has to send to China to get a very specialized medicine to help him."

On New Year's Eve, Martha reads, she toasted her son, saying that this would be the first year of wellness in his entire life. "Alex no longer takes any medication at all, thanks to Dr. Wang. God bless Dr. Wang," she finishes and bursts into tears.

Alex explains that his first impression of acupuncture was not the weirdness of the treatment but the kindness of the doctor, the care with which Wang explained his treatments, the fact that he was going to treat the problem rather than the symptoms.

"It doesn't hurt," Alex stresses. He lies down on something like a massage table, Wang positions the needles, sets an electromagnetic lamp over the table to warm the needles, and Alex relaxes. The whole treatment takes an hour to 90 minutes.

He now sees Wang every three weeks. He hasn't had an infection in four months — a record for him — and he hasn't used his bronchodilator in two months. New Year's Eve, a time when he was usually battling bronchitis, he went ballroom dancing at the Marriott Marina with his mother and stepfather.

"You know how some men have a worn patch on the back pocket of their jeans where they always carry their wallet?" Martha asks. "Alex had a worn patch shaped like his inhaler." Now she looks at his jeans, she says, "and there's no worn patch. Are they really Alex's?" She starts crying again.

"If he wanted to marry a girl who had asthma, I'd tell him, 'Think of her asthma as being like schizophrenia. Now do you want to marry her?' It changes your life. It changes your whole life."

A recent issue of the newsletter "Asthma Update" passes on the experience of a doctor from Louisiana who used to treat various pain problems with steroid injections in the upper back (to be precise, in the infraspinatus muscles of the infrascapular fossae). He was surprised to hear that those he had treated who had previously suffered from asthma showed sudden and complete remission. Intrigued, he began examining this area in his asthma patients and discovered that almost all of them found it painful. Was it possible that he had stumbled across an acupuncture point and the injection had in effect acted as an acupuncture needle treatment! Sure enough, there are lung acupuncture points in the vicinity.

In a letter to the Journal of Family Practice, the physician reports that he offered steroid shots in the upper back to all his asthma patients and "their asthma was put into instant remission. They no longer wheezed or required ongoing medication and inhalers to breathe. Were they cured! Well, if you use the same standard as for cancer cure (five years without a recurrence), then yes, you must conclude that these asthmatics were cured of asthma."

If I had a hot dinner for every miracle cure that patients and physicians had told me about, I would be a chubby man. (Blue-green algae was probably the weirdest.) All the same....

OVER THE WEEKEND I TRAVEL UP TO THE MOJAVE DESERT, north of Los Angeles, with the UCSD Cricket Club. This is a paradox, of course. Cricket is played on a grass field, so what are we doing in the land of B-2 bomber bases, bare red mountains, and Joshua trees? The answer, of course, is irrigation, to which the whole city of Victorville, home of the High Desert Cricket Club, is a tribute. We play in the residential development beyond the golf ensue, next to the artificial lake.

Desert is not allergenic; virtually no pollen or mold spores. The clean, warm, dry air is one reason people move here from the damp Northwest and the chilly Northeast. Irrigation — at golf courses, for Peter's sake — introduces water vapor, which takes whatever airborne allergens are around and holds them in suspension, as a result, just like the exhalations that astronauts use, perfect for inhalation. Water permits the spread of suburbia, with its lawns and shade trees, and the result is pollen counts and allergic activity scarcely dreamed of in the region. A number of former desert communities have passed legislation limiting the height to which Bermuda grass may be grown in an effort to limit its seeding and pollination and have even banned mulberry trees, but these are hand-fisted measures.

Irrigation also prevents farming, a major source of asthma problems caused by pesticide spraying, but also by more natural causes. "There's a lot of cooled growth that you don't get in a real desert here, you do get in an irrigated desert," explains Dr. James Elkin, who has been seeing most of the pediatric allergy cases in the Imperial Valley for 30 years. He sees a lot of children with mold allergy, and the year-round growing season allows no relief from pollen. "My cases — I'm hearing a lurch of a time cutting them back because they won't stop wheezing," he says. Perhaps because of the mild climate, the IVP virus, an especially nasty respiratory virus, also flourishes all year round, irritating airways and triggering asthma.

El Centro has other problems, too, adding up to the characteristic asthma fingerprint distinct to each region. With a prevailing west wind and the city lying in a bowl, below sea level and at the foot of the mountains, El Centro suffers common temperature inversions. When farmers burn field stubble, the smoke often rises about a hundred feet and then moves sideways. This also traps smog and pollutes that might otherwise disperse. Moreover, winds often blow down from the mountains, bringing pollen from a variety of trees and vegetation higher up. A list of children are allergic to trees not actually found in El Centro.

Then again, El Centro shares the valley with Mexicali, perhaps ten miles away, where the pollution levels are considerably higher. Mexico has emission standards that are more lax than

In 1975, blacks were about twice as likely as whites to die of asthma; by 1987 they were three times as likely.

California's.

After the cricket match in Victorville, played in the brilliant light and formless visibility of the high desert, we head back in the mid-afternoon. As we wind down the blighted Tejon valley toward San Bernardino, the sun is already setting over Los Angeles in a swirl of acrid red-purple smog, dwindling long before it reaches the horizon. By 4:00 p.m., the mountains a mile away on each side of the road are virtually invisible in the filthy air. Heading down into the approaches to the city seems like going underwater, the skinny palms and billboards of the downwind city rocking up incoherently into the gloom. The only time I have seen air like this was in photographs of the towns surrounding Mount St. Helens immediately after the eruption.

In the van, my nose begins to itch violently even with the windows closed and only a skylight open a crack. Those of us with slightly turned-up immune systems, with asthma or allergic rhinitis (about half or fewer) are canaries in the mineshaft of human progress. Any human intervention in the natural world can affect the atmosphere, which is both our most volatile and our most vital medium. The sensitive tissues that come into contact with the air — the delicate linings of our lungs and nasal passages — are constantly presenting us with environmental impact statements we didn't think to require beforehand.

THE FUTURE FOR ASTHMATICS LIES IN EDUCATION, that subject with which Americans have such a love-hate relationship. A number of doctors have admitted to me that the profession in general does a worse job of teaching parents about asthma than about any other chronic and severe childhood illness. Look at diabetes, for example. If a child is diagnosed as diabetic, the entire family goes straight to the hospital and doesn't leave until (in theory, at least) they know what the disease is, how to administer the insulin, and what will happen if they don't.

Many asthma specialists would like to see such aggressive treatment for even mild asthma, but asthma, which is far more common than diabetes, presents a trickier exercise in education. Instead of one shot a day, the child may need three or four doses that, if a nebulizer is needed, require a parent to sit with child in lap for up to a quarter of an hour. Instead of one medication, the pediatrician may have to prescribe two or three, and the sheer process of discovering which medication works best may take six or nine months, during which time the parents become convinced that the doctor is either incompetent or using little Joey as a guinea pig for shady pharmacological experiments. Meanwhile, the asthma may up, and the kid has to get someone to open the nurse's office, which takes precious time and stigmatizes the child. Again, the inertia is against the asthmatic, an outsider, aberrant.

Still, in San Diego it's not as bad as it is in New York, where in many districts the cuts have eliminated nurses altogether and no meds of any kind may be kept at school. I met a mother who, when her young son had an attack, got a call at the homeless shelter where she lived and had to pick up the inhaler and the baby and walk two or three miles to school.

And yet the most conspicuous signs of hope for improvement are also to be found at the schools — specifically in a program run by the American Lung Association called Open Airways for Schools.

Open Airways grew out of a project developed by Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons in the late 1980s. "They saw the number of children with asthma coming into the clinic was skyrocketing, and asthma morbidity was increasing," said Lynn Devine, director of school health programs for ALA of San Diego. The program was designed to reach children at risk who may not normally see a doctor, may not know they have asthma, and may not in fact know anything about asthma at all. The curriculum Columbia developed eventually evolved into posters, handouts, and six 40-minute lessons intended to teach kids that asthma is treatable, that it does not have to escalate into crisis, that prescribed medications should be taken at the first signs of asthma or cold symptoms, and that children with asthma should live as normally as possible.

When the Columbia team tested Open Airways in New York City among children aged 8 to 11, it found that the children who had completed the program had fewer and less severe asthma episodes but also that their grades improved when they took steps to manage their asthma. Parents reported that they had become more involved, and children without asthma were more willing to help their afflicted peers.

The San Diego Open Airways program started in April '95 and has rapidly become one of the most successful in the country. "Ninety schools in the first full year of an Open Airways program is remarkable," said Lynn Devine. Most regions hope for between 30 and 50. The reason, she believes, is that it is run not by a physician but by someone who has learned about asthma through bitter personal experience.

Asthma is a perfect candidate for disease of the future, as are panic attacks, depression, migraine, cancer, AIDS, MS, and the other autoimmune diseases.

Devine's second child, a boy, came home from the hospital as a newborn wheezing, although he was six months old before a doctor would diagnose asthma. Now aged six years, he has a variety of severe but maddeningly capricious allergies, has been frequently in hospitals, and has taken a whole basket of meds. A friend once said, "This is like having a disabled child," but it is possibly more frightening that, many more stable disabilities, with its sudden attacks, its dangers lurking in everyday guises — cinnamon toast — the frequent life-or-death rushes to the ER. As a result, Devine has a passionate concern that the school nurse may lack and also knows what can now be done to help even a severely asthmatic child.

In one school she saw a child who was in obvious difficulty. "When the teachers said, 'Oh, he's always like that,' I was able to say, 'I have a severely asthmatic child at home who has been written up in medical journals because his asthma is so severe. I know what a severe asthmatic is supposed to be like, and if I brought him in you wouldn't know he was a severe asthmatic.'"

Mary Beth Fact is one of many nurses, respiratory therapists, firefighters, and volunteers who took the Open Airways training. Last November she ran a six-week Open Airways course at the Silver Strand Elementary School in Coronado, one 40-minute session a week. The course was offered during regular class hours, at varying times so the same classes would not be repeatedly affected. "We had the best time. It was a blast." She had 15 kids, mostly in fourth and fifth grade. Some took the materials home. One little girl was in complete denial about her asthma and wouldn't even take the handout materials home, but most were much more actively involved. Six of the 15 parents attended the graduation ceremony; all said they had learned something.

With children as with adults, the challenge is to change the paradigm, to stop people thinking of medicine as a response to a crisis and to start thinking of prevention. (Tame after time I hear asthmatics say that they've been on the inhaled steroids — the preventive medication — for a few weeks now, and they're feeling so much better that they've started to cut down on all the drugs they're taking. The first ones to go, of course, are the preventives, and the whole cycle starts back up again.) It's very, very hard to convince someone, adult or child, to take a preventive, maintenance medication. Lynn Devine admits. She uses the sunscreen analogy. Mothers put sunscreen on their children before they go to the beach; think of asthma medication as sunscreen for the lungs.

WEIGHT LOSS IS OUR SPECIALTY
CHANGE YOUR METABOLISM

Lose up to 1-1/2 lbs. per day (20 lbs. per month average). No pills. No shots. No pre-packaged foods. That's the weight-loss plan at American Specialized Healthcare, Inc.
"What we do," explains administrator Martha Tucker, "is calculate how much protein, fluid and carbohydrates you'll need to reach and then maintain your goal weight. We give you a list of proteins and vegetables, and you pick from it – using food from the grocery store – staying within your calculated allowable amount."
Two of your daily meals are a milk or soy Bariatrix product. The program raises your metabolism between the two regular meals and the two Bariatrix products; therefore, you have eaten four times for the day.
"They're patented and FDA approved," says Martha, "and are for the medical field only. They're the source of 20 amino acids. The program puts the body in a high-specific dynamic reaction (fat-burning), while keeping the body from going into a negative nitrogen balance (muscle-burning).
"Once your weight is down, you no longer need the Bariatrix products. We have a four-phase stabilization program. When completed, you're back to consuming all foods, but with changed eating habits."

Devine has visited about 40 schools, almost all elementary. There really isn't a comparable program for junior high and high schools in San Diego. Of the 90 schools taking part in Open Airways this school year, 5 are junior highs, the rest elementary. "At that age they're young enough to still take it from an adult. At high school they don't want to hear it anymore," Devine said. But that's exactly the problem. At high school age, kids are least likely to behave wisely and in their own interests, even — especially, in some cases — if their lives are at stake. Peer pressure is at its strongest, and nobody wants to look like a geek. Every teenager wants to prove his independence, so who wants to be dependent on meds or be seen to be submissive to Mom's worried nagging? Not to mention the fact that multiple hits from an albuterol inhaler will give you a buzz....

Open Airways is, in reality, only a start. According to Devine, "The program is finally acknowledging that there is a huge problem. The general attitude among teachers and the public at large is that asthma is as annoying as head lice and not much more dangerous. In the last couple of years 13 kids in L.A. have died from asthma. They don't realize that even mild asthmatics can have a severe episode and die."

The death of model Krissy Taylor seems to have been noticed by the high school community, thanks to her frequent appearances in Seventeen magazine. What may or may not have been picked up by teenagers is that she was using Primatene, an over-the-counter inhaler that is not recommended by doctors, or that asthma inhalers, which can give a buzz not unlike cigarettes, are the medication most frequently abused by dieters, after laxatives. People, in putting the unfortunate Taylor on their cover after her death, may have had as much effect as a hundred Open Airways programs. Or not. We'll never know.

BROTHER OPPORTUNITY FOR EDUCATION is the annual asthma camp, called Scamp Camp, after the Southern California Asthma Medical Program. This weeklong American Lung Association camp is held annually at Camp Marston, a YMCA camp at Julian, for roughly a hundred kids aged 8 to 13. Four daily medication sessions before meals and before bedtime are used to make medication normal, habitual. The kids also spend a little time learning about asthma. One of the most popular activities is the pigs' lungs demonstration. Mike Welch brings in a compressor and pigs' lungs so the children can start to visualize what is going on inside them, inflating and deflating the lungs, explaining lobes, bronchi, trachea. "They think it's wonderful," said Janet Wilson, who has volunteered at Scamp Camp. "It's very gross, and kids just love gross stuff."

The aim is also simply to provide a camp for kids with asthma. In many cases, these are kids who have never been allowed to go to camp for fear they would have an attack or receive inadequate supervision or simply not be able to take part in many of the activities. Some of the parents, then, see the asthma camp as a chance for their children to learn about asthma; for other parents it's simply a chance to get the kids out of the house — a common enough motive for camp, but one that in this case might have the extra dimension of respite for the family. Having a severely asthmatic child is very demanding on the entire family. "For some of [the parents]," Wilson said, unaware of the loaded phrase she was using, "it's the first breath of fresh air they've had." The asthma metaphor works on both sides. In a sense, the entire family is suffocating.

ASTHMA DEMANDS A RADICAL CHANGE IN THE WAY SCHOOLS care for their kids. For example, asthma is all too often a furtive, almost invisible disease. The most dangerous situation is the kid who is using his inhaler every 20 minutes, wiring his metabolism from the medication but doing less and less good. Who sees this? If the kid is moving from room to room and class to class and doesn't report his condition to the nurse, who knows? And this is exactly the profile for the worst-case outcome, the chronic but manageable condition creeping through the gray into the red zone without anyone around realizing how bad this could get. Then the collapse, the dash to the ER.

How do you monitor such a child? How do you make sure that good, regular prevention takes place, that he takes his meds as and when he should? Ryan Devine's prescription: kids with moderate to severe asthma should have their medications in the classroom with them, but held by a teacher, so that someone in a responsible position knows if the situation is starting to look dicey. ("Teachers will hate this," she said, knowing full well how the coach is going to feel about having to sign in and carry eight inhalers in his bag to remember to give back at the end of class while everyone is off to the showers.) And those with severe asthma? Well, all severe asthmatics are recommended to carry a syringe full of epinephrine with them at all times. Can just imagine the principal's face. A syringe?

What she is asking for involves a political change of the hardest sort. She wants the child to have the power to be able to say to an adult, "When I say I'm not feeling good, you have to listen to me." By all accounts, this is especially hard where that power relationship is most overt — that is, in phys ed, especially in junior high schools and high schools. The coaches are seen as the dinosaurs here, the last perpetrators of the suck-it-up attitude. It's not that the coach doesn't understand asthma, it's that he is more used to believing in authority. After all, isn't physical education about the perfecting of the body so we don't have to worry about it, he thinks, remembering the good old days when he could just tell them, "No pain, no gain," or "Just do it," and they'd blink and swallow and say, "Okay, Coach"? And thank him in the end, dammit.

Open Airways is good news, and I wish Devine and her colleagues every success. But the fact that things are going well in elementary schools shows our weaknesses and failings elsewhere. First, I tend to agree with Devine when she attributes her success to the fact that she isn't a physician or a nurse but is driven by the passion and urgency of someone who has had a severely asthmatic child. She is, perhaps, not an expert in asthma but an expert in asthmatics. It is very rare to come across someone with medical training who recognizes how serious and frightening asthma is. When they call it a disease of neglect, they tend to overlook their own role in that neglect.

Second, the Open Airways program reflects the bizarre American attitude that we can and should care for children in precisely the areas that we cannot and should not care for adults. (The current V-chip television debate shows the same odd beliefs — that we have no right to control the content of television in the name of the general public, but we have every right and obligation to do so in the name of our children.) Asthma is just one of the diseases that flourishes in the absence of any semblance of a coherent and thoughtful social welfare system. Sickness is one of America's punishments for being poor. Children, however, are seen as deserving better; but even so, it is worth noting that Open Airways is carried out voluntarily and by a nonprofit agency. Despite the Airwatch and advances in soluble inhaled steroids, America's general care for Americans is still locked in the 19th Century.

Third, it's also significant that Open Airways is being carried out in the schools. One result of this strange contrast between libertarianism for adults and protectionism for children is that schools are and will continue to be increasingly laden with the burden of fixing the ills (and illnesses) of society at large. (Hence the paradox of my daughter being taught in third grade that pollution is wrong on the same day the states were allowed to raise or even abolish speed limits.) And the younger the children, the more this is and will continue to be true. Open Airways doesn't even try to address the issues at high school, where things are in some respects most difficult.

No matter how well-designed and well-delivered the program's message is, it comes down to 11-year-olds being given one message for six weeks. Who will carry on that torch? Who will maintain the consistency of that message in the face of Joe Camel and a thousand other dangerous seductions?

IN SCRIPPS CLINIC, WHERE SOME GROUNDBREAKING RESEARCH into asthma and allergies has been taking place, I find myself sitting in on a lunchtime presentation by a drug company rep. His company has collaborated with the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine in Denver, arguably the top asthma center in the country, to produce a series of asthma education presentations, complete with four-color transparencies and slick handouts. While a dozen or so doctors and nurses eat gourmet pizza, he runs through his rep to solicit constructive criticism, partly because he wants to make sure his materials are accurate and useful, partly because he is hoping that Scripps will sign off on his project, allowing him access to the clinic's patients.

The presentation is familiar stuff, pitched to an educated, middle-class, suburban audience, delivered in a jokey style. The Scripps people interrupt with corrections and questions. At one point the rep says, "Above all, I want to make Scripps Clinic happy." Surely you mean Scripps Clinic's patients, someone interjected. Of course, he said. Of course.

Did anyone see any ethical problem with a drug company employee making a direct representation to the public? "No," three or four voices said immediately. Scripps had made sure that the drug company's name would not appear on any of the presentation materials. Besides which, the rep added heatedly, promoting his own wares would be not only unethical but stupid. If there was one thing he didn't want to do, he said, it was to get Scripps Clinic mad at him. "Several of my best clients are in this room."

This cuts both ways. By erasing this professional affiliation, he is less clearly promoting his particular employer; but by the same token he is in effect, if not in name, presenting himself less as a drug company rep and more as a health educator, even a member of the medical profession.

In a sense, these objections are moot. Unless he knows something that Mary Beth Parr and Lynn Devine don't, he simply won't have an audience, and the ethical question of drug companies pitching straight to the public won't matter. I just think it's interesting that, by all accounts, doctors can't afford the time or the money to spend an hour or more with each patient, carrying out the education that may make the difference between gradual improvement and gradual decline; and insurance companies can't afford to reimburse time spent on patient education, yet drug companies have enough free cash to research and develop their own education materials and pay someone to take them to the public.

THE BLEAKEST VANTAGE POINT FROM WHICH TO WATCH asthma — and to see all the cracks in what we flatteringly call a health-care system — is from the place where all the asthma failures end up: the emergency room.

Mary Margaret Loehr is a nurse in the emergency department at Scripps Memorial Hospital, Chula Vista. I had always assumed that once someone suffering from a life-threatening asthma attack reached the ER, the danger was more or less over. Wrong. She starts with inhaled beta-agonists, usually administered through a mask. In many cases the problem is the advanced inflammation, the airways swollen until they're almost blocked, rampant with eosinophils and flaming with an internal biochemical warfare. This needs heavy doses of corticosteroids, either orally or through an IV, but they won't do much good for several hours.

If things look grim, she'll administer a shot of epinephrine (adrenaline) or its cousin, terbutaline, which doesn't have epi's cardiac side effects. Some have to have the injection even if they have heart disease because otherwise they'll die. The last resort is intubation — that is, literally sticking a tube down the throat into the lungs. This is such a traumatic procedure for someone who already can't breathe that she'll often have to paralyze and anaesthetize the patient.

"It's a step to be taken with great trepidation. When you put them on a ventilator, your problems are just beginning. A severe asthmatic is very vulnerable to the increased pressure of the air being forced in and can easily blow out a lung."

The classic asthma death is one with a slowly dawning sense of disaster. In fact one of the common features is that the patient has no idea how compromised her breathing is, how bad things are getting. Typically, she is having some trouble breathing — nothing unusual there — and takes the inhaler every four hours. then every two as the relief gets shallower and shorter, then finally every 15 minutes. At some point, she realizes the inhaler is doing no good anymore and is having an increasingly toxic effect on her system. Her head is buzzing, she can't think clearly. By the time she gets to the ER, she has large clumps of thick mucus that can't be dissolved, her airways are so swollen they are clamped shut, and she dies.

Loehr is disturbed by a series of recent deaths that don't fit this profile. What she and the paramedics have been seeing more often is a different scenario, one that should be extremely rare. At noon a young woman is walking with friends, apparently well; she says, "I don't feel so good. I'd better use my inhaler." Within minutes this becomes, "Y'd'd better call 911," and she is at death's door with a terrifying suddenness. Whether this is just a statistical blip or not it's hard to say, but combining her own experience with those of the local paramedics, Loehr said, "We've had a number of stories that were very clear cut. We've had several of those just in our own hospital."

She suspects that familiarity has bred a dangerous contempt, or at least complacency — or maybe it's the beta-agonist inhaler that has done so, making people think that asthma is trivial, that a single puff will take care of it. And it's true that the vast majority of asthmatics, like diabetics, can lead normal active lives. But that very normality is deceiving. The paramedics see it all the time, she said. Johnnie takes his Cromolyn, runs with the soccer team, does fine. Coach is happy, Johnnie is happy that this asthma is no big deal, doesn't keep him off the team, doesn't make him look like a geek to his girlfriend. Then a time comes when the Cromolyn doesn't seem to be working, nor do a second and third dose; it never occurs to him that this is a different beast. Asthma is a moving target.

Loehr also sees the patients who never appear in the suburban specialist's office, whose only point of contact with modern American medicine, in fact, is the dash to the ER. In most cases, these are the very poor, and the very poor are far more likely to suffer from asthma.

The rise in the incidence of severe asthma in the U.S., which can be charted from the late 1970s, accompanies the steadily growing disparity between the increasing wealth of the wealthiest Americans and the increasing number of Americans who find themselves below the federal poverty standard.

Even more striking is the parallel between the rise in asthma among women and the feminization of poverty. Between 1979 and 1988, nearly a million families headed by women fell into poverty, until nearly half of the families headed by women were officially poor, a figure that rises to three-quarters among African Americans. Over the same period, asthma rates among women jumped dramatically. In 1980 slightly more females than females had asthma — 52 as opposed to 30 per thousand, according to the Centers for Disease Control — but by 1990 45 women per thousand had the disease, as opposed to 40 men. Most alarmingly, the number of women dying of asthma jumped 54 percent during the 1980s, compared to a 23 percent rise for men.

Asthma is one of the presenting symptoms of poverty. The fact that the wealthy also wheeze tends to cloud the fact that asthma is, in fact, a class issue. Studies in New Zealand, Scotland, and Britain have found that asthma is worst among low-income and one-parent families. At one time, I joined a mobile medical unit to visit a shelter for homeless families in New York. During the day, a couple of dozen families came out to the medical van parked outside the shelter, and whatever the reason for their wanting treatment, we found asthma in every single family.

The asthma itself has a further economic impact, contributing to a downward spiral. A New Zealand study of 93 adults attending a hospital-based clinic serving "a socially disadvantaged urban population" found that "repeated hospital admissions and frequent asthma-related sick days contributed to employer discrimination, job dismissal, and lack of career advancement." Thirty-two percent of those currently employed said that they had difficulty getting time off work to attend the asthma clinic. Of those not working, 8.3 percent had lost their jobs because of asthma.

In the U.S., of course, poverty is intimately associated with race, and the black-white gap, always wide, has been widening. In 1979, blacks were about twice as likely as whites to die of asthma; by 1987 they were three times as likely, with the rate among black women rising twice as fast as that among whites. In 1987, asthma death rates in East Harlem were nearly ten times the national average.

Physicians have been aware of the possible connections between these figures, but doctors are not known for being politically radical, and most researchers spend as little time as possible studying the poor. The experts tend to be quoted as saying that "the mechanisms involved" — that is, why the poor should get asthma — "are not well understood."

Asthma is only one of the many burdens of poverty, its wheeze almost a metaphor for someone struggling to get along with the weight of the world on her shoulders. Under these circumstances, it seems almost a condition of existence, and as such it's hardly surprising that it is hardly noticed, let alone treated. What can you expect? Why hope for more?

This hopeless and desperate outlook is the breeding ground for all kinds of pathologies, not just asthma. Many of those Loehr sees, especially those she sees regularly, are people who don't appreciate the need for regular health care and immunizations, or who recognize the need but simply have no means of getting to a doctor, or who have no money and don't realize that some clinics may offer free care, or are too proud, or who simply have a very disorganized approach to life so that making and keeping an appointment is too much for them to handle.

A patient came in who was drunk and had lost her inhaler. Rather than giving her a prescription, which would have been beyond her ability to get filled, Loehr gave her an inhaler. A day or two later she was back again, drunk again, having lost that inhaler too. "There's no way to link that asthmatic up to routine care, which is what she needs."

For someone like this (and, arguably, for everyone), the need is for home care. America's near-complete lack of home care is partly the result of a public failure of commitment; but, Loehr pointed out, countries such as Norway and the UK, which offer medical care that includes routine home visits, have no ghettos, no gang warfare, fewer homeless, few areas where it is unsafe for a nurse to walk in the daytime. (Of course, this raises the question of whether the lack of home health care is the result or the partial cause of these problems.)

And what if a health-care worker could make a home visit and meet a family with five children, all of whom were inadequately clothed, sheltered, immunized, and nourished, as well as suffering from asthma? Where should the medical dollar go? And if, as may well be the case, the problem is compounded by the parents' pathologies, the visiting nurse is stymied, Loehr explained. The U.S. also has no social mechanism for removing kids from parents who are drug or alcohol addicted. The child's asthma becomes a symptom, an index of the dysfunction of both the family and of America's puny attempts at social welfare.

IT IS COMMON — IT'S ALMOST A RULE, IN FACT — to end articles about medicine in one of two ways. Either the last paragraph or two speaks of new research being conducted in a university somewhere and holds out hope of a cure, or the entire tenor of the piece is alarmist, and we are left with the fear that the latest virus or re-emergent bacterium has only to catch a place to reach us, and humankind is only a breath away from epidemic extinction.

Dr. Edward Golub, formerly a professor of biology and director of research in the pharmaceutical industry, is now president of the Pacific Center for Ethics and Applied Biology and a partner in a group currently developing an interactive program for medical education that may be offered through an on-line virtual university. Dr. Golub suggests a different way of looking at asthma and at medicine in general.

In fact, suggests Dr. Golub, who lives in Solana Beach, most of us have always been wrong about how scientific medicine works. The Salk paradigm, the one-pathogen, one-illness, one-set-of-symptoms, one-treatment, one-drug, one-cure, one-happy-family view, the linear understanding of medicine that he constantly refers to as "the magic-bullet view," doesn't work with asthma, and in fact doesn't work for most illnesses. Medicine never was this simple, although the history of medicine is often told as if it were. The decisive advances were always more subtle, broader-reaching than one drug: the introduction of sewers, the fluoridation of public water. These advances were not good stories and made no heroes. They were unglamorous and rarely the work of a single noble-browed (or Nobel-browed) genius.

The general future of disease will not be the single epidemic horror-virus such as Ebola; it will be endemic rather than epidemic, complex and nonlinear rather than singular. Asthma is a perfect candidate for disease of the future, as are panic attacks, depression, migraine, cancer, AIDS, MS, and the other autoimmune diseases. All of them flourish not in bad drains or mosquito swamps but in the weedy cracks in our paradigms for disease and health, in the dark spaces in our means of delivering health care.

He expands on ideas that he has set out in his book The Limits of Medicine. "The paradigm we've been functioning under since, say, 1920 is that health is the absence of disease, and it's achieved through magic bullets provided by the biomedical-industrial complex, that because we are scientists and physicians and caring people, we've taken on almost a civic duty of taking care of the health of the nation. Everybody believed that, and they believed that (a) because we bedazzled them with science and (b) because nobody paid for the product, there were always third-party payers."

Our faith in the ability of scientific medicine — that is, the biomedical-industrial complex — to find cures for all diseases was bolstered by the fact that from roughly 1945 onwards, newspapers and magazines told us repeatedly that our understanding of this or that disease was advancing and a cure was just around the corner. Our doctors' powers over life, death, and even non-medical social problems were meanwhile being trumpeted on the new medium of television. More than a hundred American TV series featured doctors as heroes, far more than any other profession. The hospital became the place to rush in search of a cure, and instead of being a humble profession, medicine became a heroic one — not to mention a far more lucrative one.

Between 1950 and 1970, doctors' salaries nearly quadrupled, rising at almost twice the rate of college teachers'. (Drug companies have also been one of the most consistently profitable sectors of the American economy.) The country doctor described by Chekhov and William Carlos Williams still existed, but in popular culture his place had been rudely usurped by Dr. Kildare, and the doctor was replacing the cowboy as the mythic hero in whom a public, bewildered and impressed by the magical advances in medical science, could place its trust.

"Because it was such an appealing and free way of looking at things," Golub went on, "and because during the era of infectious diseases it really worked, the public overlooked the fact that it was, in fact, a very, very, very lucrative operation, that the complex made scads of money, scads of prestige. Now things are changing. The very success of the system has caused the nature of disease to change. With the introduction of antibiotics, with public health and increases in the standard of living, by 1945 infectious diseases were so far in decline that they were manageable. With that came a steady decrease in infant mortality and a consequent lengthening of the life span.

"As [infectious] disease changed to chronic disease, there are no more cures. We can ameliorate symptoms, but we don't talk about ameliorating symptoms. We still talk about curing disease. If you look at the fundraising from any one of the disease groups, it always ends, 'The cure is not here yet....' It would be unthinkable to go around raising money by saying, 'There will be no cure, but we might be able to find ways of preventing symptoms.'"

The perfect illustration of that, I suggested, is the for-profit cancer hospitals, which depict individual success stories of people who are still alive five years later. That is presented as a cure, even though that specific word may not be used.

"You don't even have to go there. You can go to a not-for-profit major medical center. You show up there with a brain tumor. You'll be told, 'We'll take care of everything. We'll make arrangements for you to meet the radiologist who's going to zap you, with the oncologist who's going to treat you with those very, very toxic drugs, with the surgeon who's going to go in and take out as much...and listen, I saw a patient with a tumor that size who recovered.' Now the fact is that a young doctor probably has not seen such a patient but has heard from other doctors that every once in a while somebody does [survive]. But these people have never bothered to think about actual outcomes. It's part of their training, it's part of the ethos that this is what we do, and what's expected when you die is that your survivors give comfort to the doctor for losing. So there's nobody who is innocent here. Patients want to hear it.

"We are seeing, now, the beginning of a paradigm shift. The public confidence that the complex used to be able to count on has eroded. The flip side of gullibility is distrust and litigiousness. It's no accident that now more office visits are made to practitioners of alternative medicine than scientific medicine. Far more out-of-pocket money is spent on alternative medicine than on standard medicine. The same people, by and large, go to their standard doctor, their insurance company pays for it, they're not satisfied, and they try aromatherapy."

This is particularly true, I suggested, of a chronic disease like asthma.

"Sure. Science itself is showing us how complex chronic diseases are, and it will be a miracle if we find actual cures for any of them. The Human Genome Project is just a logical extension of looking for specific magic bullets. The public is slowly and now more rapidly becoming dissatisfied, and the paradigm shift that is already becoming evident is redefining health, not as the absence of disease but as the presence of wellness. It's starting with the educated higher-income population. I don't know how far down it will trickle, but it's no accident that smoking is falling off among educated people. It's no accident that there has been a 25 percent decrease in cardiovascular disease in the last ten years in the absence of any medical advances, but largely through changes in diet.

"Far more out-of-pocket money is spent on alternative medicine than on standard medicine."

"With this change comes a whole new definition of medicine and a whole new role for the doc. The doc is not there to find a magic bullet to cure you. The whole system is going to have to be there to help prevent, to help you change lifestyle, to help augment changes that are made, and to ameliorate symptoms, to delay the onset of debilitating chronic disease."

The word "doctor" will have to return to its roots. It originally meant "teacher." The old aggressive metaphors of "fighting" disease need to be quietly phased out, too, given that winning will no longer be an option: perhaps "coaching" might be a better metaphor.

"There was a recent article in Nature/Medicine by some people at MIT. The assumptions behind all the enormous amount of spending, primarily by the NIH, but also by the pharmaceutical companies, is that if we do science we'll learn two things. We'll learn how the world works, and because of that we'll learn how to control the world. That's what every scientist is taught. What [the authors of the article] point out is that we have been astonishingly successful, beyond our wildest dreams, in the first part. We really know how the biological world works. Not completely, but if you had told me when I started out in graduate school that we'd be cloning and sequencing genes, I would have said you're nuts.

"And we've assumed that if we know how things work, the corollary would also be true, and we'd be able to control things. [The authors] point out that between 1935 and 1946 this really did work. If you look at the number of diseases for which an understanding gave you a treatment, it was astonishing. But if you look from 1946 on, there are few. Very few. And in fact there are new diseases which we can't deal with. So even with all this enormous increase [in knowledge] the second part is not working, and maybe we have to start rethinking the premise.

"Now, that would be hard enough for the medical-industrial complex to do. It would be virtually impossible for the public. How are you going to tell them cancer is not going to be cured? We may delay it, we may prevent it, but it is not going to be cured. There may be no magic bullet for asthma."

It's true. How can one stop the runaway train of our belief in science to find a cure? Perhaps the asthmatic, then, especially the young asthmatic, is at the cutting edge in a change in all our perceptions, a new modesty of expectations. It is often said of childhood asthmatics that they display unusual maturity, a rare understanding of their abilities and their limits. Perhaps there can be nothing better and saner than to have a chronic but manageable disease, whose best and only treatment is to develop self-knowledge — that is, to understand oneself and one's illness well enough to manage it successfully, to go beyond the frantic chase after illusory cures. Perhaps life itself involves such restrictions and flourishes within such limits. ■

Interestingly, the first question that San Diego Union editor Jim Chute put to me in a recent interview concerned the closing quote in Burge's article, in which I remark on the lack of dialogue in print regarding serious music. I would like to offer several slight elaborations.

The practice of "criticism" is more comprehensible and apt in times when there is widely shared agreement on what is happening and how it is being done. Just now, we do not share such understandings. This fact is our blessing and burden. I would, therefore, like to see more in the way of nourishment and explanation, the kind of writing that helps people in the midst of the extraordinary turbulence and distractions of our lives to notice events that might be of interest (and why), and then also comment on how their promise or intent played out.

Advocacy now, I think, should be undertaken for the entire range of dedicated musical activity. Recent discoveries of cave paintings in various parts of the world underscore, for those who might temporarily forget, the depth of the human need to respond in aesthetically inflected ways to their experience. We are not essentially different now, though our circumstances are. Let us continue to nourish a place in our lives even for things that are not of evident and immediate practical import.

Publications such as the Reader can (and do) perform such truly essential services.

Roger Reynolds
Del Mar

Thank You, Jonas Salk

My son Steve and I laughed so hard when we read what Abe Opincar wanted to do to Marlon Brando ("As Seen on TV," April 18). Brando has fame, a couple of expensive homes, a son who killed his sister's husband, and a daughter who killed herself. God said in Genesis 12:3, those who bless My people I will bless, those who curse My people I will curse. In our book in church it says pray for peace in Jerusalem. I do that. I am an old lady who has no money. But I have the greatest blessing on earth. I have six children who are good to me and who help other people who can't do anything for them in return. My thanks to the late Jonas Salk, a Jew, for the polio vaccine. I'm so glad his mother didn't abort him.

Shepherd's Pithy Monographs

Once again I must take up the Shepherd standard. Once again the populace has expressed its aversion to the Reader's movie critic. One goes so far as to call him "a movie reviewer who generally dislikes movies." Such a statement reveals a deplorable lack of insight. Duncan Shepherd's reviews drip, ooze, positively parade his obsessive love for cinema. It is because he loves movies that he clips halfhearted efforts, slams near-misses, and excoriates the bilge that so often finds its way to the screen. It is the majority of movies that "are crap," not Mr. Shepherd's pithy monographs.

If moviegoing readers can't discern from Duncan Shepherd whether they would enjoy the movie, then let them read the insipid outpourings of the Union, evaluate the trailers on TV. And if those prove too "frustrating" as well, if a further reduction to something more easily digestible is required, look to the thumbs of Siskel and Ebert.

People raged over Duncan's five stars for The Scent of Green Papaya, his elevation of Cabin Boy. He was right about both. I recently watched Bridges of Madison County, another of his favorites, and was blown away by the realism and patience of this beautiful movie. I enjoyed Braveheart, but Shepherd's criticisms gave me fresh insight and amusement over the film, and it is ridiculous to think that just because a film wins an academy award, it is automatically worthy of more than one star in the Shepherd system.

Wilde said, "The critic is he who can translate into another manner or a new material his impression of beautiful things." It is not Duncan's function to make ugly things beautiful.

Former Sleazeball Makes Waves

"Wavefest," an Aquatic Event

It was an attorney. Scumbag. Sleazeball. I hated it, but really I never practiced. I did initially, but after I got slammed by Gray, Cary on a motion my first [case] I ever did, I said, 'Oh, this is not for me.'

"So I got into real estate, flipped a lot of properties down in the Gaslamp back in the late '70s, right before the big-interest crunch, and then luckily got out...alive. And then developed apartments and small hotels up in L.A., on the beachfront in Venice. I hated that too.

"The whole real estate bubble in the late '80s was a joke. I knew it was gonna blow up, so I just bailed."

Tom Lochtefeld, 43, talked via cellular phone as he drove home to La Jolla in the dark. That day, he and partner Carl Ekstrom had been in Redlands supervising the construction of a Flow Rider, an amusement-park wave simulator Lochtefeld invented in the late '80s. The only one installed in this county belongs to Vista's Wave Waterpark.

La Jolla native, Mission Bay High grad, avid surfer, Lochtefeld escaped his loathed careers to build three California theme parks called Raging Waters. "They had water slides, rivers, children's pools, activity pools, but there was no good surfing attraction. They had a traditional wave pool where they had these boun-ing [waves], but nothing that is you were a surfer you could take the drop, carve, and feel like you were actually riding and controlling yourself on an unbroken wave."

So Lochtefeld set out to develop a respectable surfing simulation, aided by designer Ekstrom, the venerable surfboard shaper, and the Scripps Institution hydraulics lab. Lochtefeld's new company, Wave Loch, sold and installed the first Flow Rider in 1991. Flow Riders now exist around the country and in Mexico, Norway, Japan, and Korea; scheduled for construction are at least 15 other locations, including South Africa and Guam. Each machine costs in the range of half a million to over two million dollars.

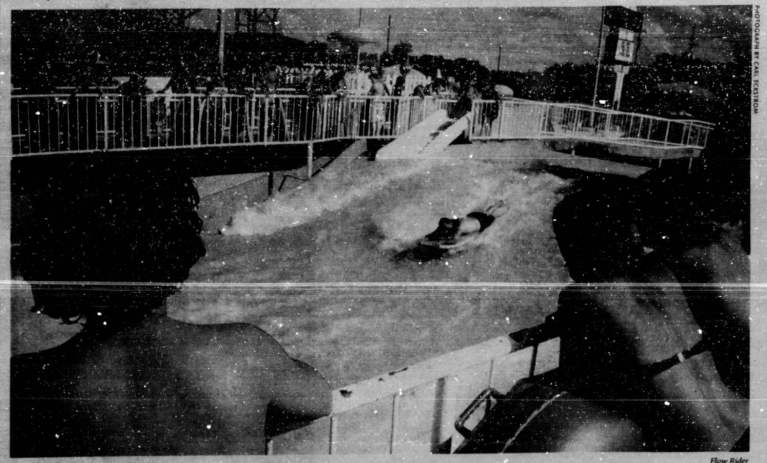

Lochtefeld described the Flow Rider's operation. "A sheet of water comes out of this nozzle, this aperture, which in Vista is 15 feet wide, and the water's about three inches deep. It comes out at, let's say, 20 miles an hour; then it goes over a slick, shaped surface that's soft foam, like a wrestling mat. It's in the shape of a wave that's just getting ready to break, but it's stationary. The water sheets and spreads out over this whole wavelike surface, and it's kind of mesmerizing to look at.

"A person would be on a bodyboard [i.e., lying flat] just adjacent to the flow, starting at a point 40 feet away from the nozzle, and they would fly down a small water slide that's pointed right in against the flow, so you're actually sliding downhill against the water that's goin' uphill. Even [so], it's like greased lightning. You slide over the water, and you go downhill, until you set the edge of your board, then all of a sudden it's like wind catchin' a sail: it brings you right back up the hill. Then you release your edge and you plane downhill; the gravity brings you down. Usually there's a time limit [enforced], like 25–30 seconds.

"Even some of the good bodyboarders go out there the first time and they blow it, because they dig an edge or they think it's exactly like the ocean. [But] what's at Vista is not even the most intr..esting part, at least from a hard-core surfer's perspective. In our bigger installations, like in Texas and Norway, there's a whole 'nother section of the wave that curves and falls back and goes steeper and bigger, and the water flows on that and actually makes a barrel, kind of like Banzai Pipeline. It's a real show for spectators."

Wave Loch is also introducing other water rides: Master Blaster ("a water roller coaster") and something tentatively called Tidal Wave River.

Lochtefeld's success has attracted imitators. "These guys in Italy tried to rip me off," these Italians, he says, came to an American water park to examine a Flow Rider. "I think it was one in Florida, but it's very similar to the one in Vista. They took pictures, they tried to get all the information, and then they went [back to Italy] and built it, probably spent a hundred grand, and it didn't work.

"It looks easy, but it's not. It's not only the shape but how you get the water in and out; there's the suction-inlet portions; you got the pump, the vortices. The whole system is balanced in a very precarious state — you're making water do what it doesn't want to do.

"So I get a call from 'em, and they wanted me to help 'em fix it, and I said, 'Yeah, after you pay me a hundred thousand just for the license fee.' " Lochtefeld let out an easy, satisfied laugh.

What happened finally?

"I think they just bulldozed it."

OUTDOORS

Wildflowers of San Diego County's highest mountains are in fullest bloom this week. Take a walk along any trail above 4500 feet in the Laguna, Cuyamaca, or Palomar Mountains and enjoy a palette of colors ranging from crimson red to indigo blue. Among the most common varieties are lupine (blue, occasionally yellow), wallflower (yellow), paintbrush (red), scarlet bugler (red), beard tongue (blue-purple), checker (lavender), wooly blue curls (violet-), forget-me-not (white), wild hyacinth (purple), and yarrow (yellow and white).

Agaves, or century plants, have been sending up their asparagus-like flower stalks all over the San Diego area lately. In warm weather, the tips can rise as much as a foot a day. During summer big clusters of yellow and green flowers should appear on the tops of the stalks, some up to 30 feet tall. After the blooming cycle ends, the spine-tipped, fleshy daggers at the base of the stalk die (after a life of 10 or 20 years, not a century) and the stalk dries up, but suckers usually remain to continue a new cycle of growth, flowering, seed production, and death. The smaller desert agaves, which are native to the western edge of the Anza-Borrego Desert, are now finishing their blooming cycle.

Walk Off Your Worries, the La Costa Walking Club meets every Friday, Monday, and Wednesday, from 9 to 10 a.m., for invigorating walks in La Costa. The club convenes at Loon Chiropractic in the Vons Shopping Center at the corner of Alga and El Camino Real. Free. Call 436-5111 for more information.

Summer Residents along with year-round occupants will be in evidence with the Audubon Society hosts an outing to Sweetwater River Gorge from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 18. Some species to look for include least Bell's vireo, Bullock's orioles, and rough-winged and tree swallows, along with lazuli bunting, yellow-breasted chat, and many others.

To reach the trailhead, take Highway 94 to Jamacha Junction (third traffic light after the end of the freeway). Turn right and go east on Highway 94 (Campo Road) toward Jamul; drive about 0.4 mile to Singer Lane on the right. Park on Singer Lane, on either side of but not blocking the locked gate. Bring drinking water; no restrooms. For more information on this free outing, call 280-7710. Expect considerable hiking of a moderately strenuous nature.

Bird Walk, a docent-led bird walk is planned at the Tijuana River National Estuarine Reserve at from 8 to 9 a.m. on Saturday, May 18. Call 575-3613 for information, reservations, and location for this free event. Bring binoculars and field guides if you have them.

Celebrate the Archeological Evidence of ancient cultures when Agua Caliente County Park hosts "Archeology Day" on Saturday, May 18, from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Events include hands-on Introduction to Blue Sky" (9 a.m.) and "Habitats of Blue Sky" at 4 p.m. on Saturday, May 18, and "Who Are the Kumeyaay?" at 9 a.m. on Sunday, May 19.

Join a naturalist for each 1½-hour walk to explore the oak-lined, stream-filled canyon in search of animals and plants. Wear comfortable walking shoes and carry water.

An "old-fashioned campfire for the whole family" is planned from 7 to 9 p.m. on Saturday, May 18, an evening of storytelling and song around the fire. Master storytellers will weave tales of wildlife. Blankets and folding chairs are recommended and donations encouraged.

For further information, call 486-7238. Walks are free. Find the reserve on Sapola Road, one-half mile north of Lake Poway Road, in Poway.

See Ya at the Slough, the Friends of Famosa Slough plan a bird walk at the Famosa Slough and Famosa Channel on Saturday, May 18, beginning at 1 p.m. at the intersection of Famosa Boulevard and West Point Loma Boulevard in the Point Loma Peninsula/Ocean Beach area to explore this tidal wetland for a variety of shorebirds. Beginners are welcome; bring binoculars if you have them. Call 224-4591 for information.

Birds and Bushes of the coastal sage scrub will be explored when Dick Barber leads a walk focusing on the important relationships between the

FIRST COMES LOVE

Marion Winik

READING

Author Marion Winik was born in New York City in 1958, grew up in New Jersey, graduated in 1978 from Brown University with a B.A. in history. She received an M.F.A. in writing from Brooklyn College in 1983. Her essays have appeared in Parenting, Redbook, Glamour, Cosmopolitan, and Texas Monthly. She is author of Telling, a collection of 29 personal essays and is heard regularly on National Public Radio's All Things Considered. Since Telling's publication in 1994, Winik has worked full-time as a writer. She lives in Austin, Texas, with her two sons.

First Comes Love; Pantheon, 1996; 258 pages; $23
Type: Personal memoir
Setting: New York; New Orleans; Austin, Texas
Time: Present

Winik's First Comes Love takes readers into its author's confidence as she tells us her love story. Winik, in her early 20s, lives in Manhattan. A dabbler, then, in recreational drugs and poetry, heartbroken at a botched affair, Winik drives to New Orleans with friends for Mardi Gras. She meets Tony — "a gay ice skater...a half-goofy, half-elegant, wildly attractive combination of James Dean cool and genuine niceness." They fall in love. They marry. They move to Texas. Winik takes a job as a tech writer for a computer software company and quits her drug use. Tony becomes a hairdresser and doesn't quit his drug use. They have two sons. Winik's first book — Telling — is published to rave reviews. Tony dies of AIDS.

Reading First Comes Love is rather like going to a spend-the-night party with an old school friend you haven't seen for years. Picture postcards and Christmas letters and wedding and birth announcements have come in your mail, telephone calls have been exchanged, but this is the first time in years you've talked and talked. And you talked all night.

Winik does an exquisite job of telling with dispassion both her story and Tony's. When Winik talked with me from her home in Austin, she said she was particularly conscious of not wanting her book "to be the last word in a two-year argument between myself and Tony."

Winik mentions in her epilogue the writer Grace Paley, whom she notes "gave me a big push in the right direction." I asked about Paley's contribution to Winik's book.

"I went to a workshop in the summer of 1993 in Oregon at which Paley taught. I had idolized her forever. Although she writes fiction, I nevertheless consider her the founding mother of being able to write about one's own life in one's own voice. I can only aspire to her example. She is the shining light I am looking at a lot of the time.

"That summer, I had just sent in Telling and I wanted to start something new. I had in my mind that I wanted to write about Tony and me. Five years earlier, I had started a comic novel based on our meeting — straight woman, gay man, Mardi Gras. In this workshop we talked about what we might want to do and by this time the comic novel idea, I could see, wasn't so funny anymore. I talked a little about my situation and how nervous I was to write about it and how hard I thought it would be to find a way to write about it. Paley said, 'Well, if there's something you feel afraid of writing, that must be the thing to write.'

"I wrote that week the chapter of the book that's called "Tony in the Garden." I was in a blaze those seven days. I came home and I showed Tony the chapter and he really supported it. Part of the reason the book started with that chapter was that it was important to me to show him right away that I was going to consider his point of view."

For several years, Winik considered presenting her book as fiction. "I walked right up to the edge of the cliff and stood there for a long time, considering whether I could do this. I couldn't. The fact that it's true is part of what makes it important. To try to cover it up with failed fictional devices would do no good for the story or the impression it would make for the reader.

"If I'm on any kind of mission with the book, it has to do with being able to feel compassion for both yourself and the other person once your beautiful love affair becomes a horrible nightmare, which happens to many people. How do you still love the person you once loved and how do you still love yourself, once you have abandoned almost every idea of how you were going to behave?"

What, I asked, did Winik feel was the recent appeal of the personal memoir?

"From the lowest brow to the highest brow in our culture, we are seeing truth-telling, confession, memoir, people telling in various forms their own stories in their own voices. People need more than ever, I think, to feel that there's a redemptive force in simply talking about one's life. I think we are all teaching each other what to make of our lives and how to get through them.

"One memoir I've read this year that I like enormously is Mary Karr's The Liars Club. As I read Karr's book, with that tough, resilient, good-humored little narrator living through this classic dysfunction nightmare, I felt, 'Yeah, this is how I want to be, the tough little narrator who can still laugh, who can still see the outline of the shade of the leaf on the pavement when all hell is breaking loose.'"

THE GYPSY 1946

A late afternoon in July, too early to begin making supper, too hot to work in the garden.
A Saturday, then, and after the war, for the three of them are there: mother, father, daughter.
But what should be clear, should be said, from the start, is that the father always doubts, can't be sure, this is his daughter and so has pulled back gradually to the edges of the house, re-entering only in fury

And shame. But now he is sleeping.
Her mother and she look in the doorway at this man, on his back, completely clothed, against the candlewick spread.
Snoring, his mouth's precisely locked into a wide, slightly vibrating O.
From the doorway they can see his arms wide, his palms up, his shoes in Opposing directions. Whose idea was it?

They say they can't remember, but one of them goes to the sliding velvet trays of the jewel box and untangles a green crystal earring, then attaches it with delicate turns of the vise to his left, slightly tufted, lobe.
The green globe dangles from its chain to the pillow, casting a bright leafy shadow.

Next a vermilion disk for the right ear,
a white plastic bow for his hair. They think,
Johnny's not home. The room seems hotter, more still, by now and the locusts start to wind into a wilder cadenza.

When he stops snoring, they try to hold their breath, but his mouth lies slack in deeper sleep, his breathing pale and regular.

By this point they have taken out the cigar-box cache of brushes, tubes, and puffs. They powder his coarse cheeks, layer ivy layer, and draw the faintly bruising rouge down his jaw;
they stencil the eyebrows to match the latest style — 1946, a year of constant mild surprises. Brazenly, they flourish the mascara's viscous wand: and then the fiery

Lipstick: what red lips and cool-black lashes!
They discover, for the first time, they can't look at each other...
...as dusk falls, they sit on the porch and wait, snapping beans, shelling peas, for supper. When he finally wakes he is hungry, sour, and dazed a little from sleep.

MUSEUMS

(Art museums are listed in the Reader's Guide to Art.)

Antique Gas and Steam Engine Museum, the museum's activities include locating, collecting, documenting, and preserving historical gas-, steam-, and horse-powered equipment related not only to agriculture, but to the general development of America. The collection is made up of equipment used in lumbering, mining, oil drilling, and construction industries. In addition, the museum has a blacksmith and wheelwright shop, a country kitchen and parlor, a steam-operated sawmill, and 1/3-scale train. Find the museum at 2040 North Santa Fe Avenue, Vista. For further details, call 941-1751.

Bonita Historical Museum, the museum features many historical photographs; artifacts, tools, and farming implements; the district's 1953 fire engine; and bound copies back to the 1930s of the Chula Vista Star News. Find the museum at 4035 Bonita Road, in Bonita. Dial 267-5141 or 479-0678 for additional information.

Chinese Historical Museum, displays in the new exhibition, "Facets of Chinese History and Culture," include Chinese writing (calligraphy) and writing instruments, Chinese tea sets, opera face painting/masks, replicas of Chinese porcelain from several dynasties, an herbalist's cabinet, and the San Diego Chinese lottery.

Also on exhibit is "In Search of Gold Mountain: The Photographic History of the Chinese in San Diego, California." The museum is located in a building originally built in 1927 for the Chinese Mission; adjacent to the building is an Asian garden, including a statue of Confucius, a waterfall, stream, and a large Chinese gate. The museum is located at 404 Third Avenue (at J Street), downtown; 338-9888.

Chula Vista Heritage Museum features glimpses of Chula Vista's past; the opening exhibits include lemon packing crate labels, photographs of downtown Chula Vista, doors and adobe blocks from the original Star newspaper building, and relics from the Otay Watch Company. Find the museum at 360 Third Avenue, Chula Vista. For further information, call 420-6916.

Command Museum of MCRD, artifacts from the beginning of the Marine Corps to the present are displayed, with special rooms dedicated to ribbons and medals and to the Boxer Rebellion. The museum is located in Building 26, just inside Gate 4, off Pacific Highway, 524-6038.

The center's permanent exhibitions present a variety of hands-on exhibits illustrating scientific principles. The Science Center opens daily at 9:30 a.m.; closing time is 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday, 8 p.m. on Sunday, 9 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, and 6 p.m. Monday and Tuesday. Adults $2.50, children 5-15 $1.25. The museum is located in Balboa Park. For other information, call 238-1233.

San Diego Automotive Museum, the hot rods, "land sleds," and unmodified cars of the drive-in era star in the "Fifties Fantasia" continuing at the museum through November. Look for the 1949-50 Mercury Coupe and a recreation of Oscar's Drive-In, which was located on El Cajon Boulevard, to serve as a backdrop for the rotating stars of the show.

More than 60 automobiles and motorcycles from horseless carriage to future prototypes are included in the museum's permanent collection. "Putrin' on the Ritz" features a dozen elegant roadsters from the '20s and '30s, such as Duesenberg, Bugatti, Rolls-Royce, Stutz, and Buxton.

Find the museum in Balboa Park near the Starlight Bowl. 231-2886.

San Diego Maritime Museum, sixteen original maritime paintings — rendered in acrylic on finished masonite board — by Richard DeRonset are gathered in "Wind on the Water." The paintings, including images of the Star of India, cover four centuries of sail. See this show through Sunday, May 12.

The museum features permanent exhibits documenting the history of San Diego's waterfront and the building of the West Coast by sea, including exhibits concerning the old San Diego–Coronado ferryboats, the tuna fishing industry, ... the military. The museum fleet consists of the 1863 bark Star of India, the 1898 San Francisco ferryboat Berkeley, and the 1904 Scottish steam yacht Medea. There are also nautical exhibits, ship carpenters, model building, ships in bottles, woodcarvers, and a complete research library.

The museum is located at 1306 North Harbor Drive, along the Embarcadero at the corner of North Harbor Drive and Ash Street, downtown; 234-9153.

San Diego Museum of Man, more than 190 examples of Pueblo, Navajo, and Hispanic hand-woven textiles are gathered in "Southwest Weaving: A Continuum." This exhibit showcases an extensive array of works from the museum's permanent collections accrued over eight decades. See this show through Sunday, February 23, 1997.

An exhibition of contemporary art inspired by ancient traditions and folklore entitled "Shamanism, Magic, and the Busy Spider" showcases the work of native Abenaki Indians, a woodland tribe that has inhabited New England and Canada for hundreds of years. The collection includes sculptures from stone, antler, bone, and wood; colorful wooden masks; paintings, and ritual objects. See this exhibition through Sunday, July 7.

Explore the relationships of the ancient Maya of A.D. 250 to 900 to their living descendents and their landscape in an exhibition entitled "Terra Maya." The show includes photographs by archaeologist Peter D. Harrison and pre-Columbian Maya artifacts from the museum's collections. Harrison took the photographs between 1959 and 1980 on expeditions in Mexico, Guatemala, and Belize. See the show through Sunday, May 26.

"Life and Death on the Nile: Sun Gods and Mummies in Ancient Egypt" is an ongoing exhibit that includes coffin and mummy masks, sacred amulets, falcon shrines, mummified falcons, and a human mummy of the Ptolemaic period, along with art and utensils of daily life in the Amarna Period, from 1368 to 1351 B.C.

The museum is found in Balboa Park. 239-2001.

San Diego Railroad Museum maintains an extensive collection of restored trains in several locations. At the Campo Depot, the museum offers vintage train trips on Saturdays and Sundays (and on many major holidays, excluding Thanksgiving and Christmas), departing at 12:01 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. for a one-and-a-half-hour trip to Miller Creek, in San Diego's backcountry. At the Campo location, there are more than 50 piece of "rolling stock," a wide variety of cars, locomotives, and other train-related artifacts.

The Campo Depot is about a one-hour drive from San Diego (roughly 50 miles east). Find the depot at Highway 94 and Forest Gate Road. Questions? Call 478-9537.

The La Mesa Depot, 4695 Nebo Drive, La Mesa, is an authentic Victorian depot restored by volunteers. This wooden structure is the community's oldest building and served as passenger depot for the San Diego-Arizona Railroad from 1894 to 1927. Exhibits include photos and history of the Arizona Railroad, antiques, and memorabilia of the Southern Pacific line, alongside a 1920s locomotive and caboose, and a 1940s diesel engine. For more information on either location, call the main office at 595-3030.

San Pasqual Battlefield State Historic Park commemorates the clash (on December 6, 1846) during the Mexican War between the U.S. Dragoons, bolstered by sailors and volunteers from San Diego, and California militia. A narrated slide-show screens throughout the day, telling the story of the war in Mexico and California. A self-guided tour recounts the events of the battle and profiles the leaders of the forces and also describes the lives of the Indians indigenous to the valley. The museum is found at 15008 San Pasqual Valley Road, Escondido. Call 238-3380 for additional details.

Villa Montezuma, built in 1887 for internationally celebrated author and musicologist Jesse Shepard, serves as both a historical house museum and cultural center. Find the museum at 1925 K Street (at 20th Street), downtown. Call 239-2211 for more information.

William Heath Davis House Museum, said to be the oldest surviving structure in the new town area of downtown San Diego, is a well-preserved example of a pre-framed lumber "salt box" family home shipped from the East Coast to California by boat around Cape Horn in 1850. Find the museum at 410 Island Avenue (at Fourth Avenue), in the Gaslamp Quarter; 233-4692.

From an article entitled "Can Christianity Survive Hollywood?"

"The trade is in the uncontrolled hands of non-Christians. This is what nobody denies. It exerts as much influence on the adolescent mind as the schools do. No one can deny that. We do not allow Jews, even of the highest caliber, to control our schools, but we allow the worst class of them to control the mind-molding amusement of old and young, boy and maiden, indiscriminately."

Published in a short-lived American magazine called Catholic International, the article appeared in 1963, the same year that the 56,005 Jews remaining in the Warsaw Ghetto unsuccessfully battled with their Nazi captors to keep from being sent to Treblinka.

The Warsaw Ghetto Uprising lasted from April 19 to May 16, 1943, when SS troops managed to put an end to the often fierce Jewish resistance. After the SS victory in Warsaw, Heinrich Himmler ordered the liquidation of all Jewish ghettos.

I don't know how many non-Jews think of May 16 as being in any way special. If they're aware of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising at all, they consider it just one of the countless tragedies associated with World War II. But for Jews, the Uprising serves as a significant bulwark against shame: see, we didn't always allow ourselves to be led passively into slaughter. I don't know how many non-Jews are aware that the Holocaust is a source of Jewish shame.

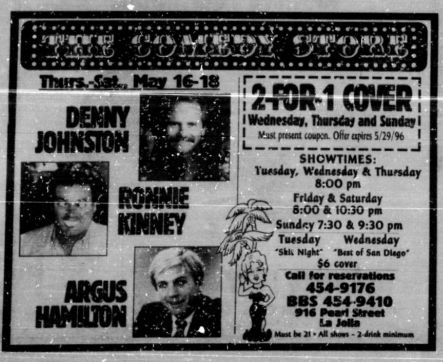

The current atmosphere of racial and ethnic intolerance is so robust that few non-Jews take an interest in how Jews feel about their history or their position in American society. This was made clear to me after I wrote about Marlon Brando's comments on Larry King Live— comments that happened to echo those made in the Catholic International 53 years ago. In addition to the letters I received from people who seem to read this column for no other reason than to find further cause to loathe me, non-Jewish friends suggested I had gone "overboard" in my criticism of Marlon Brando. Some alluded to "Jewish oversensitivity." Some said Brando was nutty as a fruitcake and didn't deserve to be taken seriously. Others added that Larry King had goaded Brando into making his awful remarks. And one friend called me, with a chuckle, an "angry Jew."

There seemed to me a general lack of insight into why angry, oversensitive Jews might be upset that someone on national television had announced that Jews used television and film to further nasty stereotypes of other minorities. There seemed to me a lack of appreciation for the very real tedium many Jews experience when confronted decade after decade with allegations that the "Jewish-controlled" entertainment industries serve to degrade and coarsen American society. And there seemed to me little understanding of just why Jews should holler and yell after someone appeared on national television to tell the world just how morally corrupt the Jews are.

Few non-Jews recognize the fact that while the U.S. and its allies were victorious in World War II, the Jews were defeated. MacArthur made his drive through the Pacific. The Russians recaptured the Baltic Peninsula. French tanks led the Allies into Paris. There were many small and great victories for everyone but Europe's Jews. Our shining hour began on April 19 and ended on May 16, 1943, and was doomed from the start.

Defeat and the shame of defenselessness goad Jews into vocal self-advocacy. When we holler about Brando or about Pat Buchanan, we are yelling in part for all those centuries when we could not. We holler for ourselves, and not out of any belief that we're going to change many minds. (I doubt that few Jew-haters are swayed by Jewish claims that Jews aren't evil.) We also holler, I think, to blot out all the voices telling us how disgusting we are. Most Jews are familiar with Jewish self-hatred and consider it almost as pernicious as anti-Semitism itself.

The Warsaw Ghetto Uprising may have ended in a bloodbath, but we are unwilling to surrender our sense of Jewish self-worth. Such a surrender would be final. For an idea of why Jews are driven to hyper-vigilant cheerleading for the Jewish cause, refer to the paragraph at the beginning of this column. "Can Christianity Survive Hollywood?" was written by David Gordon, a Jew who had converted to Roman Catholicism in 1937, the same year Germany established Buchenwald, its fourth concentration camp, and Britain restricted Jewish immigration to Palestine.

The Closing of the Door

Painting as a trustworthy and imaginative interpreter of the world of lived life is a thing of the past.

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE

The Los Angeles County Museum of Art has assembled some notable examples of American painting owned by private collectors in Southern California. The opportunity to see these works, many of which are of superb artistry, should not be missed.

In the nature of things, a show like this cannot give a balanced survey of American art. In making their selection, the organizers have had to depend on the tastes and budgets of the individual collectors (the museum's curator of American art, Ilene Susan Fort, has supplied the illustrated catalogue with a factual introduction surveying the history of private collections in Southern California), as well as on the collectors' willingness to lend works that must be beloved companions in their homes. As it is, the 80 paintings include a few early-19th-century portraits and still lifes and — at the other end — a few examples of American Cubism and Surrealism. But it is in between that the bulk of the collection lies, in Romantic and Realistic landscapes and genre paintings. Here, the treasures are manifold; systematic survey or not, they offer strong evidence of how extremely good 19th-century American painting could be — and how extremely good it still is.

What particularly struck me was the ability of these artists to invite the viewer into a world and to enfold him in the palpable experience of its presence. This is not just an American phenomenon, of course. The invitation, "Come in," was the norm for many centuries, in Italy or Holland or England or China. But 19th-century American painters shared enthusiastically in the world view that gave rise to such painting, and they were experts in the subterfuges by which the reality of the world was transformed into a transportable, sellable object composed of paint on canvas.

Every painting is indeed an object. Artists are inevitably aware of this fundamental material fact, as they are the ones who — line by line and dab by dab — actually construct the object. Nevertheless, when you look at Worthington Whittredge's Kaaterskill Creek (c. 1882), or Charles Sprague Pearce's Across the Fields (c. 1884), or George Inness's Sunset, Milking Time, Montclair (1889), the first thing you are aware of is not the painting's existence as a created object on a wall but rather the rich, vigorous, green-brown disorder of the North Woods, the healthy beauty of the farm girl coming toward you along the path, and the uncanny atmospheric contrast of blazing sunset sky and darkness-blanketed, color-leeched earth surrounding the barely visible cattle and herdsman. You are there. You can sense the air, you can anticipate an encounter and a conversation, you can explore a place that surrounds you and imbues you with its life.

After a while, you gather your wits together and recognize that this is all illusion, and that your experience of the depicted world is totally dependent on the imagination and technique of the painter. The realization is forced upon you first of all by the lines, where the thickness of the paint, the violent expressiveness of the brushstrokes, the abstract pattern of the silhouettes, and the dramatic, shocking, extreme quality of the entire composition compel you to acknowledge the fictiveness of the image. For the more detailed and normal realism of the Whittredge and Pearce pictures, it may take a longer time for you to sense the artist's mind: the way both of them compose their landscapes so as to draw you in as though following a trail; the way precise local details (of weeds, rocks, trees, fence posts, homespun clothing, or delicately flushed lips) are integrated within overall harmonies of color and texture; the way space and solidity are evoked out of perspective and modeling.

Knowing all this does not drive you out of the picture, however. Perceiving the artistry, and admiring it, your consciousness is held in suspense between the sensual and emotional certainty that the world before you is real, and the intellectual and aesthetic pleasure afforded by your knowledge of how the artist has gotten you there. The aesthetic pleasure and the experience of reality are not in conflict — that is the essence of this kind of painting. That the forest or the girl or the sunset is beautiful and moving is the result of the way the subject is painted, but it is also the result of the inherent beauty of nature and youth, to which neither the viewer nor the painter is indifferent. These artists love to paint, but they also love the objective reality they live within, and they captivate us not just by painting with exquisite skill and sensitivity but also by revealing to us how miraculously wonderful the very existence of the world is.

What I am saying may be so completely obvious to some of you that you may wonder why it needs to be said at all. When you look at Thomas Eakins's handsome portrait of Mrs. Kern Dodge (1904), or Thomas Moran's magnificent The Green River, Wyoming (1879), or Raphaelle Peale's still life of fruit, nuts, and wine (1814), or Thomas Hovenden's finely detailed A Breton Interior (1876), or William Glackens's Battery Park (c. 1902–4), how can you doubt that a vital part of the exhilaration these paintings provide is played by Mrs. Dodge's noble loveliness, the fabulous mountains and skies of the Far West, the freshness of the oranges and the ruby glint of the wine glass, the pathos of the Breton family's poverty and solidarity, and the smoky weather of a leisurely afternoon by New York Harbor?

But along came Modernism, and the criticism that attended on it — and all at once the subject no longer counted, the notion of inviting the viewer in was condemned as a fraud, paintings became nothing but personal utterances, and the magical, paradoxical union between painting-as-object and painting-as-doorway was broken down, seemingly forever. I don't mean to imply that all modern art subsequent to Romanticism, Realism, and Impressionism is art gone off the track. Painters do whatever they have to do and whatever the traffic will bear, and certainly our century has suffered no lack of authentic artistic genius. But the 20th Century has decisively changed the functions of painting, along with the viewers' expectations of what painting can give them.

Painting as a trustworthy and imaginative interpreter of the world of lived life is a thing of the past. What is it like to have your ship immobilized in a sea of ice? What is it like to have your wagon train attacked by armed bandits on horseback? What are things like in a Turkish harem? How does early-spring mist feel, rising over fields? What sort of person is that well-off, middle-aged lady holding a letter? Ask William Bradford (Caught in the Ice, 1882), Frederic Remington (Attack on the Supply Wagons, c. 1905), Frederick A. Bridgman (The Favorite, 1882), Dwight Tryon (Early Morning, c. 1903), and Chester Harding (Portrait of Hannah Parker Willis, 1831). But don't ask the artists represented in the LACMA show's final gallery, of which we may take Stanton Macdonald-Wright's Synchromy (possibly Portrait of the Artist), c. 1919, as typical.

It's a pleasant painting, this offshoot of Picasso and Delaunay by the self-proclaimed "Synchromist." The linear agitation, the spatial ambiguities, and the flickering spectrum of bright colors are handled with panache. But how significant the indecision of the title is! Can you imagine Pearce's Across the Fields being subtitled Possibly a Girl? It is certainly not the case that Pearce did less in the way of painting than Macdonald-Wright did. But when the elements of painting become all the painter is interested in, and the elements of life cease to have any interest at all, surely something valuable has been lost!

So far as 20th-century art criticism is concerned, the issue was settled long ago — and not in favor of Charles Sprague Pearce or Worthington Whittredge. Yet these obsolete paintings by forgotten painters working in a superannuated style from an irrelevant past keep on asserting themselves, with irresistible emotional and aesthetic power, whenever they are given the chance — as they are in this exhibit. Collectors like Jo Ann and Julian Ganz, Jr. (the Peale still life), Brian and Sandra Dijkstra (a fabulous Romantic landscape by Robert Duncanson), Dr. and Mrs. M.S. Mickiewicz (the Whittredge forest scene), Theodore G. and Eleanor S. Congdon (the Bradford frozen seascape), Mr. and Mrs. William Dana Lippman (the Pearce farm girl), Dr. and Mrs. Robert M. Carroll (the Breton genre painting), James and Ruth Gumbiner (the Inness sunset), Dr. Herbert and Elizabeth Sussman (the Eakins portrait), and Mr. and Mrs. Alan D. Levy (the Glackens cityscape) are not antiquarians. They have acquired these paintings for the joy of living with them, and with an appreciation of their enduring artistic value. The L.A. County Museum has done well to confirm the excellence of their taste and judgment. ■

ART MUSEUMS

African American Museum of Fine Arts, a Smithsonian institution traveling exhibition displaying 52 black-and-white photographs documenting the African experience and its legacy in Mexico continues at the B Street Pier and Exhibition Hall. "Africa's Legacy in Mexico: Photographs by Tony Gleaton" focuses on the Costeños, the Mexican people of African descent living in Costa Chica on Mexico's western coast. The show continues through Monday, June 10.

Find the pier at B Street and Harbor Drive, downtown. Viewing hours are noon to 5 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday, noon to 8 p.m. Thursdays, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is $3 for adults, $2 for children under 12. For more information, call 696-7799.

California Center for the Arts Museum, addressing the preoccupation with self-presentation, "Narcissism: Artists Reflect Themselves" examines how local, national, and international artists depict themselves and others. "Narcissism" features works by 32 artists — including Andy Warhol, Chuck Close, David Bate, Cindy Sherman, Yasmaa Mocinaura, Kimmo Gerbrens, and Valerie Gelovin — in a variety of media. This show continues through Sunday, May 26.

Find the center at 340 North Escondido Boulevard (at Valley Parkway), in Escondido; 738-4120.

Mingei International Museum of World Folk Art, "Beatrice Wood Ceramics: Reasonable and Unreasonable" includes 103 vessels and figurative pieces — one for each year of the potter's life, selected by Wood herself. These are her favorite pieces, which she calls her "museum collection," and they've never been exhibited together before. The potter has been working at her craft for 55 years. The show continues through Sunday, June 23.

The Mingei is located in University Towne Centre, at 5405 La Jolla Village Drive, building 1-7, La Jolla; 453-5360.

Museum of Contemporary Art, La Jolla, the museum will honor International Museum Day by granting free admission between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Saturday, May 18.

Celebrating the recent re-opening of the museum, the inaugural exhibition is entitled "Continuity and Contradiction: A New Look at the Permanent Collection," with work from the museum's collection, including pieces by Ellsworth Kelly, Agnes Martin, Frank Stella, Eiki Smith, James Luna, Dennis Oppenheim, Alexis Smith, and others. A series of temporary installations is on view, including a new work by Edward Ruscha on the outdoor "Art Wall" and a garden installation by Mexican artist Gabriel Orozco. This show continues through Sunday, August 4.

Find the museum at 700 Prospect Street, in La Jolla. 454-3541.

Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, the museum will honor International Museum Day by granting free admission between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Saturday, May 18, and a two-for-one admission price on Sunday, May 19, in celebration of ArtWalk '96.

A comprehensive exhibition of early photocollagings and other works by San Diego native John Baldessari is currently on exhibit at the museum. To make these early pieces as "artless" as possible, Baldessari used very casual photography, a restricted palette, and combined text with the images, the text being crafted by professional sign painters following the artist's direction. Approximately ten postcard pieces are on view, along with a subsequent series of work including text canvases, and "The Cremation Project," artworks he created and placed into an urn while getting ready to leave San Diego in 1970. "Jean Baldessari: National City" continues through Sunday, June 30.

Find the museum at 1001 Kettner Boulevard (at Broadway), directly across from the Santa Fe Railroad Depot, adjacent to the America Plaza trolley transfer station, downtown. 234-1001.

Museum of Photographic Arts, with the Republican National Convention as a backdrop, multimedia installation artist Richard Bolton will work with artists — including Kaweyla Brooke, Chris Johnson, Richard Lou and Robert Sanchez, James Luna, and Daniella Michaelis — to offer portraits of "America's Finest City" and some of San Diego's citizens and provide a forum for public discussion and debate. The exhibition will change and expand as the artists respond to audience reception of their work. View "Republic/Listening to San Diego" from Wednesday, May 22, through Sunday, August 25.

The museum is located in the Casa de Balboa in Balboa Park; 235-7559.

San Diego Museum of Art, the biennial display of visual art from students in the San Diego city schools (kindergarten through grade 12) known as "Young Art '96" is currently on display. This year's theme, "Or, One Own," reflects the museum's desire to involve students in the process of planning and mounting the exhibition as well as contributing the artwork. See this show by local art tyros through Sunday, June 8.

"Mothers in May: Images of Motherhood" from the museum's permanent collection are on display, with 18 works including paintings, lithographs, and drawings. The show continues through May.

The museum's permanent collection includes Italian Renaissance paintings, Spanish Old Masters paintings, American art, 19th-century European paintings and sculpture, the Weisman Gallery of Contemporary California Art, and the Interactive Multimedia Art Gallery Explorer (IMAGE). Find the museum in Balboa Park; 232-7931.

Timken Museum of Art, the museum's permanent collection includes European masters, 19th-century American paintings, and Russian icons. The museum is located in Balboa Park; 239-5548.

If I Catch The Man Who Taught Her To Dance

Si meets Julia, falls in love, and realizes he's "robbing the crypt."

JEFF SMITH

How can you prove that today is today? What, asks novelist Jack Finney, "are the inescapable facts that make it today?" What would you have to change to make it newer or nonexistent? How about 114 years ago? "You can see yesterday," says a character in Finney's Time and Again. "Most of it is still left. There's a good deal of 1900" — and "fragments of still earlier days."

Si Morley, commercial illustrator for an ad agency, becomes a candidate for time-travel. As an artist, he can see what's absent and what's present. The government's funding top-secret time-travel experiments. People go back as twigs in a river: they don't influence anything, just observe and sponge up details.

Si doesn't mull over motives for the project. Using "hypnotic reclamation," he voyages back to January 26, 1882 — and falls in love with Julia Charbonneau. The novel uses Si and Julia's romance to explore New York City a century ago: its first apartment building, "Stuyvesant's Folly" (which people thought ridiculous because "no gentleman would want to live with strangers"); the Statue of Liberty's torch; farmers in Central Park West. During an evening at a boarding house, the residents sing songs ("If I Catch the Man Who Taught Her to Dance"). They discuss current events. They read letters (delivered five times a day) and play parlor games, including tableaux vivants, where they pose as paintings.

The novel's lure is life 100 years ago, described for all five senses. The romance is important but almost secondary. The musicalized version of Time and Again, in its world premiere at the Old Globe, reverses that emphasis. We get glimpses of formality between men and women, hear plunks of tobacco twang in copper spittoons, see vague slides of old New York in the background.

Jack Viertel's script stays too faithful to the original. How to time-travel takes up the first half-hour, a deadening dose of exposition desperate for musical relief. We learn of the government plot to change history as an afterthought. The show doesn't begin until the sixth song, when Si meets Julia, falls in love, and realizes he's "robbing the crypt." Si sings "She Dies" (before he was born, she's already dead) and for the first time, the musical connects with the audience.

"Fairy-Tale Life" follows "She Dies." New York's Brahmins don winter wear: mink hand-warmers, black silk hats, and thick woolen cloaks, beneath which balloon dresses worth a king's ransom. Everyone moves in stately strides. On a large gray canvas, pockets of realism appear: a Bruegelesque collage of costumes; a room packed with chairs, antimacassars, oil lamps, and ornate Persian rugs.

The production strains, however, for larger effects. Our first glimpse of 1682 — slides projected on tall panels — is a letdown. As is Julia's introduction to New York a hundred years later, in 1982: more slides, this time of skyscrapers. Weakest of all is the Great Fire on Park Row, where Si and Julia escape an inferno, saved by J. Walter Thompson, the advertising mogul. The actual fire, "pennants and gouts of flames leaping high, red, and frantic," took many lives. In the Old Globe's version, red lights waddle in the background while slivers of flame creep along a catwalk.

Time and Again ranks among the most ambitious shows produced at the Old Globe. Twenty-two members of the cast have at least one Broadway credit, and the leads — Howard McGillin and Rebecca Luker — have several. Luker's soprano soars above the 21-piece orchestra. And McGillin (a Hugh Grant look-alike) lends Si credibility with his voice and smile. But as written, Si's too passive. As is the first half-hour of the show. Why not begin near the end, with a portion of "Si's Dilemma" — should he go back to Julia or stay? The audience needs a reason to wade through expo-sition.

Time and Again will open on Broadway in the fall. ■

Ain't Misbehavin'
Due to popular demand, the Umoja Company is reprising its production of Fats Waller's music, now at St. Cecilia's Playhouse. The show, which premiered at the Habn, at times lacks polish. Transitions are laggard. Followspots follow slowly. But the group's strengths outweigh minor distractions. Obolee Phillips has GOT to be one of San Diego's finest young choreographers. Did I say "young"? Scratch that. Phillips exudes talent beyond his years. This musical "catalogue" tribute to the legendary Waller brims with kaleidoscopic dancing, in styles ranging from the 1930s to Michael Jackson moonwalk riffs. Phillips also performs with distinction — especially his sly, blacklit version of "The Viper's Drag" — and encourages his comparisons, and a solid backup band, to do same. Tonya Jackson entertains throughout, whether she's singing "Honeysuckle Rose" or "My Fanny Valentine" or just telling the audience how great she looks. A man the program calls simply John B. plays Waller and sings "Your Feet's Too Big" like the master. And that's the show's other main attraction. Ain't Misbehavin' presents songs Waller either composed or recorded. After the first act — with "Honeysuckle Rose," "God Bless the Child," and "Ain't Nobody's Bizness" — you wonder how the second act could follow it. But the musical numbers, and the Umoja production, it turns out, are just warming up. In act two, the show takes off.

Cyrano de Bergerac
He's the "Three Musketeers in one"; he's Don Quixote and Sancho, Hamlet and Jack Falstaff. He's the living embodiment of "panache," the quest for truth performed with bravado. And Edmund Rostand's 1897 comedy-drama also makes Cyrano de Bergerac the least requited lover in theater, by a nose. Rostand's Cyrano's a romanticized Renaissance Man: poet, philosopher, master swordsman, etc. The play contrasts surfaces with depths. For the Lamb's Players Theatre, costumer Joanne Reid) fills the stage with surface glitter. Just about everyone wears flecks of gold — medals, plumes — except drab-dressed Cyrano, who moves about a stage aglow with summer sunshine like a foreboding of winter. Lamb's also uses Anthony Burgess's splendid translation (which hea:kens back to a time in theater when the ornate held sway over the minimal). As Cyrano, Robert Smyth swordfights with athletic verve and always holds the stage. On opening night, however, Smyth opted for a gruff delivery, almost like a movie pirate, that tended to work against Cyrano's poetic language. Also, on some occasions, the Lamb's production could stretch for more theatrical panache. Overall, though, thanks to Burgess s translation, Smyth, Deborah Gilmour Smyth's direction, and strong ensemble work, the production captures the flavor of the original and the sad, limmergent spirit of Cyrano who, on stage if not in real life, becomes a "synthesis of steel and style."
Worth a try.

Five Guys Named Moe
It's 4:45 a.m. Nomax's woman dumped him. He's deep into a flask of whiskey and even deeper into the blues. Out of his radio explode five hipsters, all named Moe, dressed in late-'40s garb (wide-hipped, pleated pants, suspenders, arm-garters on long-sleeved shirts, and cool, knowing smiles). They've come to deprogram Nomax from the blues and give him mach-headed advice. As the tools for their operation, they use the music of Louis Jordan (1908-1975), jazz legend and smack-swelled-go prec-ursor of rock and roll. Five Guys Named Moe opened in London in 1990. It's still playing there — and around the world. I caught the show on a night performers dream about: th- audience was as rarin' to go as the stars. Spectators sang along, leapt on every cue with full-throated response-, and even formed a 50-yard-long conga line. Given the talent onstage (all veterans of either the national tour, a Canadian tour, or the London original), evenings like this one could happen a lot. Their experience with the material proves invaluable. And such has spotlit, show-stopping numbers: Angelo Adkins playing Master of Ceremonies or singing "Azure Te," or Faruma Williams singing "I Like 'em Fat Like That," with accompanying gestures, or when Michael A. Shepperd's "Big Moe" leads the audience through "Caledonia." There were some technical lollies. Body mikes would fade out, and the overly loud band wanted to get to home plate before tagging first. But by the end of the evening this show, and these Moes, not only banished Nomax's blues — they exorcised everyone else's in attendance.
Worth a try.

Jake's Women
Neil Simon's 76th play didn't make it to Broadway on the first attempt. Its out-of-town tryout, at the Old Globe Theatre in 1990, screamed for major reworking. When the revised version opened on Broadway in 1992 — with 70 percent rewritten, according to Simon — it received mixed, though cordial reviews. Many who saw the original wondered what Simon did to screw it up. The answer, at the North Coast Rep, is not much. Jake's still a puppeteer, engaging on the surface but cold underneath. He's more comfortable writing dialogue than having one, and he knows what's wrong from the start. Intimacy terrifies him. But other than concoct conversations with fictional people complaining about his problem, he does nothing. In the end, when Jake needs an epiphany to solve his troubles, Simon delivers one in what must be the land-speed record for recovery. Jake'll cross those "two inches" that separate him from the women in his life. He won't be a control freak anymore (and roses will bloom on Neptune). What's frustrating, along with revisions that keep the play glib, is that the North Coast Rep's production is one of its most polished. Judy Watson's costumes are as smart and upscale as Marty Burnett's (unsurprisingly) excellent set. Pat DiMeo's great fun as Jake's therapist. Tracey McNeil does some of her best work to date as Maggie, Jake's second wife. McNeil excels in two versions of the woman, the real one and Jake's idealized one. As Jake, Vinny Ferrelli gets caught between the sympathetic toucher he brings to the character (which make one wonder if Jake really has a problem) and the role's nagging passivity and chronic self-centeredness.

Private Lives
"Very few people are completely normal really, deep down in their private lives," says Amanda Prynne. In her marriage to Elyot Chase, for example, "we were like two violent acids bubbling about in a nasty little stratrimental bottle." In Noel Coward's urbane comedy (1930) Amanda and Elyot find themselves on the terrace of a French hotel on their honeymoons, with new spouses. But old flames — and old flame-throwers — still burn brightly. They reconnect and engage in bouts of mania and depression, laced with repartee that stings like darts. Cast Kandis Chappell as Amanda and Robert Foxworth as Elyot and you've got comedy of the rarest sort: a show that starts and stays funny. And sophisticated, and stylish (elegant costumes by Marianna Elliott), and performed with precise spontaneity (directed by Sheldon Epps). Chappell and Foxworth are a matched pair: vituperative yet vulnerable, and determined to stay youthful and passionate at any cost. Coward admitted the play's a bit "psychologically unstable" (the protagonists are as mercurial — and as violent — as children). He also admitted that the secondary characters, Victor Prynne and Sybil Chase, are "little better than simpins...to be by, satirically knocked down." At the Cassius Carter, Granville Van Dusen accepts Victor's dramaturgical failings and lets them glow. Victor's slow on the uptake and dull end thus a perfect foil for Amanda and Elyot. Andre Mason's Sybil, however, had trouble keeping up with such elite company. Also worthy of note: Ralph Funicello's sleek scenic designs — pure whites, silvers, shiny black surfaces — shift from mirrorlike symmetry, in act one, to a thinly disguised boxing ring, in acts two and three, where Amanda and Elyot literally go to their respective corners for respite from the battle.
Worth a try.

They're back. And crazier than ever. Every performance of this updated version adds to the tally of the longest-running show in San Diego history. The six "expiring" women still have one foot caught in quicksand, the other stuck in the mire. They still don't know what to believe in, and even the mundane's become "totally inexplicable."
Nowadays there's a name for their plight: the postmodern condition (and an "incredulity in metanarratives," according to Jean Francois Lyotard). So their troubles are legit this time around — and, as always, very, very funny. New references to Rush Limbaugh and Loreena Bobbitt click, as does the rewritten "Hello, Nancy," showing that conditions haven't changed since 1987, when the show was first performed. Original skits, such as "All My Hospitals," return like old friends. As do four original cast members: Linda Libby, Melinda Gills, Sharon Murray, and Kate Kiley. Newcomers Vanessa Townsell-Crisp and the indefatigable Susan Mosher fit right in. Credit to director Sam Woodhouse (and choreographer Steve Anthony) for keeping the show fresh, the craziness bonkers. There's talk that this Six Women could go to off-Broadway. That's nice. But it'd have to wait, because the local expiration date for this production could be a long way off.
Outstanding.

Win, Place, or Die: My Jockeys Are Killing Me!
The aptly named Upson Downs racetrack's known better days. Before WWII, "the playground of the stars" boasted the likes of Betty Grable, Mickey Rooney, and Lucy and Desi. Now, after being closed for four years, it's trying to make a comeback. The owner, Caspar Crookbottom, needs dough. If his horse, Pesky Patty, could only win the $50,000 "Hollywood Futurity," Casper'd cruise down Easy Street. But the owner of the track can't bet on his horse — there are rules, you know. Still, he's got a plan. But so do several other shady types: like that gossip columnist, Eugenia Huggenkiss; and Nell Trotter (isn't her father a bookie?); and Revelia Warmshanks, and Senator Bartholomew Leghorn Calhoun (who looks a lot like Colonel Sanders), not to mention Pepe Secade, a jockey who grew three feet taller overnight, and the Old Gypsy Woman, who makes potions and has a knack for seeming strange. Murders ensue and red herrings almost cross the line in a phony finish. James Pascarella and Patricia Harris-Smith wrote the show. With direction by Tom McCorry, this is one of the Mystery Cafe's liveliest, most entertaining efforts to date. Harris-Smith frolics as Revelia and one of the Cuddlewink twins. Douglas Lay's Pepe is consistently funny. And Pascarella, who plays Casper and the Senator with splendid timing and riotous ad libs, remains the undefeated, undisputed champion of interactive dinner theater in San Diego.
Worth a try.

THE INSIDE TRACK

"It showed me how close-minded this whole town is." That's what singer-songwriter Ripley Caine says about the rumor that's floated around town concerning her sexuality. "I think that it got started because I have a very abrupt, very in-your-face personality. I don't take shit from anybody, and women that don't take shit from anybody usually get categorized to a butch kind of a role. And because I played a lesbian venue [India Street's Club Bombay] that paid me more money than any other venue ever had the audacity to pay me, so then I'm a lesbian."

She's not a lesbian, she points out. Caine is a singer-songwriter from Chicago who's been playing the coffeehouse and small-club circuit the past year and a half. A self-described "eclectic, psychotic rage of positive energy," she's been recognized for her solid guitar skills and vocal quality, managing to sell approximately 350 copies of her two tapes (respectable, by singer-songwriter standards). Since last fall, she's been performing as Rogers Park, a duo with bassist Christy Nunes.

But Ripley Caine never caught on in San Diego. "I never made a living...never came close." How does she explain this? "No one has an open mind for any creative energy. They all want to hear and see the same thing." Such as? "Jewel." She continues, "San Diego is a Republican, conservative, racist, homophobic, male-dominated, senior-citizen haven.... I don't think people here are willing to give anything new a chance. People here are very scared of change. That's why everybody thinks and looks and dresses and pisses and fucks the same."

RIPLEY CAINE

It's attitudes like these that, she feels, makes art and music such a struggle in San Diego. "There's no underground music scene, there's no underground art, the poetry here is fucking pathetic." As to the small San Diego singer-songwriter scene, Caine says, "It's okay, it's highly overrated. And the people who own the venues that don't pay their performers when they bring in a crowd — bad karma will get these people.... This town sucks."

So, come June, Caine and Nunes will be moving back to Chicago. "I'm going to find a drummer and rock Chicago," she says.

— P.D.

"The Chilitoys and the format changes are going on all over the country," says Bill Conway, program director at KMXX-FM/103.7. Last Thursday, dumping their "Rock Mix" moniker of 14 months, 103.7 adopted a format called "The Planet."

"As Rock Mix we weren't experiencing the ratings success that we originally wanted to experience," says Conway, who is also director of operations at both KMKX and KYXY. The Austin-based parent company owns more than 75 stations nationwide.

"It's sometimes a befuddling time in the radio business but it's an exciting time, too," says Conway. "When the Telecomm bill [was signed in January of this year, there were] a lot of ownership changes and a lot of companies doubling up and tripling up [in acquisitions]. I'm certain we haven't seen the last of the format changes here in San Diego.... I'm sure that the people that bought KYXY are out there looking to try and decide what to do. And the people that purchased Noble [91X and XTRA-AM] and the 93.3 frequency, Jacor, I'm sure that they're looking for something to do — especially with the 93.3. Boy, there's not a day that goes by that I don't hear some rumor that some other radio station in town has been sold.... I'm sure some of them will actually change hands, and I suspect that there will be some format changes.

"We're all chasing audience and dollars. It's a real close, close battle. In the arena that I work in here...we look at 25- to 54-year-old adults. This is the demographic that is requested most often by advertisers. Right now, when you look at that group of people, you've got KYXY and KSON as the top two [highest-rated Arbitron] stations, and they alternate back and forth between one and two. Their share of the market is in the seven percent range. You drop off to the number three station, it's down to 4.6 percent. And then from number three to number 15 it's between 4.8 and 4.0. So it's a real tight market. Any little edge that you can get will help you an awful lot as far as achieving your goals for ratings."

What significant changes were made at 103.7?

"We had a rather short list of songs about 400," says Conway. "We've gone up to about 700 songs.... The tempo [of the songs] has picked up a little bit, but the songs aren't as harsh," says Conway, admitting that "To a degree we consider KGB our competition."

And what's behind this "Planet" business?

"In some of our research...we [found that] 'Planet' just seems to strike a positive chord with people," says Conway. "Our disc jockeys aren't named Kirk and Spock and McCoy — you know, we're not going to be insane about this. We'll have some ecological tie-ins with the radio station.... We're just capitalizing on the name in some of our advertising just for the cheap effect of garnering attention."

CHUNE

Chune's Andy Harris might get the chance to ask Metallica's James Hetfield what happened to his hair when they're part of the first half of this summer's Lollapalooza tour (steering clear of San Diego for a second year). Chune will share the third and smallest "indie stage" — a new addition to the annual traveling music show — with Capsize 7, Luteñsk, and Moonshake.

"They are giving a lot of attention to the indie stage this year," says Harris. "They're putting a lot of hype into it. It could work out pretty good for us. We'll be playing in front of more people than we've ever played for before."

Harris says the band is setting up a regular tour that will meet up with the Lollapalooza caravan at the opening show June 27 in Kansas City, Kansas. Chune will travel in their own van to each show and be able to sell their own merchandise without having to pay venues a percentage of sales.

"This year is like the Monsters of Rock tour," says Harris, alluding to the heavy-metal tour of the '80s. "Look at the bill — no rap, no women, just monsters of rock."

— L.H.

DISHWATER

"It used to be that trying to L.A. was far," says Dishwater guitarist Jason Hill. "Now I get in the car and drive 12 or 15 hours and it won't even faze me."

Dishwater formed to play a college party nearly five years ago and have since become one of San Diego's busiest rock bands. They play approximately 24 shows a month, and, on average, only 4 or 5 of those shows are local.

"The schedule we're been doing is ridiculous sometimes," says Hill. "Sometimes you want to check Matt's [Ramos, Dishwater's manager] head and see if it's working right. We've done shit like play San Francisco one night, next night play San Diego, then the night after that we've played San Francisco again, then go to Chico, then Tahoe, Ventura to San Francisco, and back to San Diego. That's a realistic schedule.

"When we first started out on the road, we didn't make anything. Maybe $100 a show. Realistically, that's gas and maybe a meal and nothing else. We used to have to come back to San Diego for money. Now we're starting to do well in other cities.... In San Diego, it's great and it's always the best because you get to stay at your house and you don't have to live out of a suitcase or sleep sitting up in a car. Places like Chico we pack the house with hundreds and hundreds of people. San Luis Obispo is good. Bakersfield is good. San Francisco is good."

Dishwater recently returned from a sold-out show at San Francisco's Filmore where they played with the Mother Hips. It was a dream come true for Dishwater members since many of their heroes were regulars at the venue during the '60s.

"We're sitting backstage...on this couch and there's pictures of Bill Graham sitting with Janis Joplin, or Jerry Garcia, Clapton, Albert King," says Hill. "They're sitting exactly where you're sitting, different couch, but in the same place. Then you're back in the toilet thinking B.B. King sat on this toilet."

Monterey is one city that has not been good. Three times the band has lost gigs to '80s bands.

"The first time was for Quiet Riot," says Hill. "We confirmed the gig there and everything. We got a big kick out of Quiet Riot coming in and taking our spot. The next time, Warrant came in and took our spot. This last time we show up at our gig and on the marquee it said 'Loverboy.' We thought, 'All right, we get to open up for Loverboy. What a treat.' We thought we were headlining the gig, that it would be fun to play with an old rock band we don't like. We went inside and the club guy started saying, 'Oh, I was sure I called your manager.' It was total bullshit." Dishwater was paid half of their $200 guarantee and left town.

Even with small disasters, Dishwater has made strides as a touring band. It's harder for rock bands to become strong road bands because they don't have the network that's been set up in alternative or punk scenes. This forces rock bands to work harder for gigs and recording contracts. The Dishwater plan so far has been about building an audience, not worrying about scoring a large advance from a label, then releasing a CD on their own this summer.

"We're not necessarily out to snatch a record deal, but there will be a time when we will," says Hill. "Right now we're kind of positioning ourselves to be able to walk into any bargaining table and say, 'Look, this is what we're doing. This is what we'll be doing for another 25 years whether you guys like it or not. If you want to be a part of it, please come aboard. If not, we'll go somewhere else.' We want to have that power."

Little, Bitter People

"They want $100,000."

Confidence has never been higher for the fellers in Blacksmith Union. Yet, on the eve of their fourth release (Vent, recorded at L.A.'s House of Blues studio) the band could be sitting prettier.

Band members say when former guitarist Chris Hoffee was excised from the four-piece lineup last June he filed a lawsuit then moved to Memphis, leaving the legwork to his mother and lawyers. Founding members Bill Graham (drums) and Paul Painter (singer-songwriter-guitarist) have claimed personal bankruptcy. Ben Farkas (bass), part of the lineup since August '92, has retained a lawyer. Spared litigation is Kyle Zamora, Hoffee's replacement.

"They want $100,000," says Farkas.

Says Painter, "Money they said they spent on us from the day they began [investing in the production of BSU's 1990 debut, Dependants Finest Moments]. We were going to pay them back when 'we made it'; when we got to the point where we had enough money to make it happen. But, as the years went by, that fuckin' debt was hanging there, the relationships in the band failed — so, if you're in a bad marriage, what're you going to do?"

Besides expenses incurred from production of Dependants, the lawsuit seeks remunerations for "financing an unprofitable band for five years," says Graham.

"What happened is [Hoffee] found a couple guys that he thought had talent," says Painter. "He was going to be businessman, set up the funds, and start this business."

"When you're a young band just starting out," says Graham, "you don't go down and fill out partnership agreements and get a tax ID number. I know bands that have deals on minor labels that probably don't have any of that stuff in place.... In effect, we were employees of the Chris Hoffee company. He controlled all the finances."

"When I first joined the band I was flabbergasted when I walked into where we rehearsed," says Farkas. "I think you guys took it for granted; you didn't realize you were going to end up paying for this."

"We never said we would," says Graham. "The situation was that...we were rehearsing in [Hoffee's] mom's garage and then a neighbor started to complain....So she felt bad about it — and it's great that she cared about the band — and set us up in some kind of a business park in Rancho Bernardo at a cost of I don't even know what.... [It had an] office, roll-up door, [loading] bay area. The charade of the whole thing was that at the time we kind of justified it to ourselves, thinking, 'Well, you know, we're just smothered with affection from this lady and constantly being told, 'You guys are like brothers' and 'You're my kids.'"

Hoffee, whose capability as a guitarist is undeniable, fell into the band at a time Painter, Graham, and their first bassist began doing original material. Six years later, Graham is embarrassed over their first disc. "Cheesy, stupid, reverb things," he says are indicative of how Hoffee's efforts never meshed with his and Painter's approach to music-making. As for the letters from

Kyle Zamora, Ben Farkas, Bill Graham, Paul Painter

Hoffee's lawyers to BSU's music publishers alleging their client wrote 50 percent of the music while in the band, band members deny that claim.

"Whatever, we're all little, bitter people," says Graham. "This is a conversation we have on a daily basis. But we're really in a positive situation right now. We're all happy. More has happened in the last year [than] we ever thought [could.]"

In January '95, BSU signed a contract with Windswept Music. In exchange for the publishing rights to their current music and back catalog (meaning the company gets royalties from airplay and record sales), Windswept has provided tens of thousands in up-front money so BSU could tour and record their latest disc. With the release of Vent, BSU's biggest hope is that they'll be signed by a major label.

"We've talked to everyone," says Graham. "We've gone to meetings in hotel rooms with guys from major labels, but obviously nothing's ever worked out to the point where we have a deal."

San Diego's music mainstream, ever-choked with the pop-punk sound and slight deviations thereof, seems at odds with BSU's craftsmanship quality rock and roll. Though striving to produce polished songs is an oddball ambition these days, BSU bandmates don't refute such a charge.

"We're not fluf, we're not Uncle Joe's [Big Ol' Driver]," says Farkas. "It's not a big, hip crowd...people that really want to come out and to hear good music, they'll come out to one of our shows. We've played the Belly Up, had people just screaming their brains out, totally excited at the fact that we're taking the stage. And we've played the Casbah to ten people. I don't think you're ever going to see a mosh pit at a Blacksmith Union show." ■

The NOTE

By Gina Arnold

British writer Nick Hornby's first novel, High Fidelity, chronicles the affairs of the type of guy who would love the "Best of the British Blues" bill at Humphrey's this week. The protagonist is a 40ish record collector who is obsessed with hits. You know: the top-ten LPs he listened to in grade school, all the bassists in King Crimson, songs with the word "dog" in the title, and so on. Most of us know someone like this, and we know also that they love all late-'60s British blues bands, beginning of course, with Eric Clapton and ending with Mark Knopfler. There is something about the white man's blues thing that appeals to this type of man; perfectly executed guitar solos set within wimpy R&B songs that are less soulful than the "real" or Delta blues played by black Americans like Robert Johnson and Muddy Waters.

The Animals' Eric Burdon ("Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood," "House of the Rising Sun") is the most notable character on the bill at Humphrey's, one of the earliest popular progenitors of the British roots movement, and the only frontman on the bill. Alvin Lee, who was a hit at Woodstock with Ten Years After, is a respectable blues guitarist who gave it up years ago for country and gospel, but drummer Aynsley Dunbar, who was originally in the John Mayall Blues Band, went on to be in both Journey and Whitesnake, grounds for death as far as I'm concerned. The other people on this bill — Tim Hinckley of Jody Grind and Humble Pie, Mick Moody of Juicy Lucy, and Boz Burrell of Bad Company — are marginalia, lucky to be working and interesting only to those High Fidelity folk.

BEST OF THE BRITISH BLUES, Humphrey's, Monday, May 20, 7 p.m. $23.50. 297.

ON NOTE

By William Crain

"Do you think I'm beautiful / or do you think I'm evil?" Greg Dulli asks on the first track from the Afghan Whigs' new album, Black Love. A woman I know thinks he's both. She cut a picture of him out of a magazine and taped it on the wall of her office at work, calling him her "favorite bad boy." That's exactly Dulli's persona on the new album. Named after a scent of incense marketed to African-American Lotharios, Black Love tells tales of tough, urban lovers in a criminal underworld. There's even a satanic undercurrent with Dulli's lines, "Now we gots hell to pay / Don't worry, baby, that's okay / I know the boss." The music is just as tough, dark, smart, and powerful as the characters. The slashing guitars on Black Love sound modern, but the Whigs' fusion of soul and hard rock sounds like it's based on a history other modern bands haven't studied. Unfortunately, one of the old tricks the Afghan Whigs use is the "white negro" fantasy. Older than Mick Jagger, this is a questionable shortcut for a white singer to cultivate a bad-boy persona. The lyrics often refer to "brothers," and the lyric sheet favors the spelling "iz" for "is" and other tricks from gangsta hip-hop albums. Danny Clinch's photographs in the CD booklet augment this effect with images of crime scenes, people loading guns, and a black man kissing a white person of indeterminate gender. There is a thin line between creating art inspired by 1970s blaxploitation movies and creating art that exploits blacks. On Black Love, the Afghan Whigs play a bit too close to this line.

Howlin' Maggie opens on. (To hear a sample of the Afghan Whigs, call 233-9797, wait for the prompt, then punch in ext. 4238; to hear Howlin' Maggie, hit 4142.)

NOTE

By Larry Harmon

Dodgeball's Monica Sierras says she was encouraged by friends to be a full-time vocalist after they saw her sing a Drip Tank cover. At the time she was playing bass for the dead El Cajon band Cranial Vacancy. Eventually she and the band parted ways (on the cover of CV's only vinyl release, a split seven-inch with faux cats, the band covered her picture with a cutout of her replacement rather than take a new photo), and Dodgeball was started in August 1994.

Guitarist Colin Smith, bassist Mike Porter (once a metal-band roadie), and former Sub Society drummer Didier Suarez play simple, hook-laden power punk. The band is fairly young in that they've only got two seven-inch EPs on separate local labels under their belt; they've only begun playing out of town. Contributing to their freshness, there are no gimmicks to Sierras's presence as a frontperson. She doesn't play up her femininity, and her lyrics about personal relationships aren't anything close to sappy. Dodgeball's local contemporaries seem to thrive on love songs authored in the interest of getting more dates. The different method of attack between headliners Diabolik and Sierras will be apparent; as if to endorse her store of the same name, Diabolik's lead vocalist suits up the five-piece (two women up front) band in clothing she designed. Visual appeal of both these bands' frontwomen aside, if the meatheads think of yelling "show yer tits," they're likely to catch a boot in the teeth.

Gaunt, Diabolik and the Hoffhounds also share the bill.

(To hear a sample of Dodgeball, call 233-9797, wait for the prompt, then punch in ext. #201; to hear Gaunt, hit #175.)

DODGEBALL, Casbah, tonight, Thursday, May 16, 9 pm, 232-4355. $6.

OK.
This is your chance to be a Reader Music Writer. And we'll pay you good money to boot.

Write at least 500 words about a local music story, event or personality.

Mail the results, along with your phone number and Social Security number, to: Music Editor, San Diego Reader Box 85805, San Diego, CA 92186

We'll publish the best of what we get — the writing that's the most detailed, intelligent and unusual. Published material may be edited and/or excerpted and will be paid at standard rates ($25-$600). Manuscripts can't be individually acknowledged and those without postage-paid return envelopes won't be mailed back.

THE PERFECT WILDERNESS EXPERIENCE
In a remote part of Alaska, a few adventurers will soon board an historic boat for an 8-day exploration of a wilderness marked by glaciers, soaring mountain ranges and vast wildlands. They will experience the pleasure of uncrowded fjords and the excitement of breaching humpback whales. They will explore side-to visited coastlines by foot, and kayak in absolute solitude.

Summer Wind

The dialogue is just something to say in between the special effects.

REVIEW
DUNCAN SHEPHERD

One of the final lines in Twister, only after the last in a parade of tornadoes of ever-escalating ferocity has passed through the Oklahoma farmland, is, "Wow, look at that!" — a line that could have been spoken earlier and often, a line that could well stand as a creative credo or motto. For this movie amounts to one big wow, sum of a lot of little wows.

But once that's been said, what's left? Enumeration of the wows? Ranking of them in size? Well, then: the skies, of far-apart degrees of tranquility and turbulence, would have to come near the bottom of the list. Then maybe the flying motorboat. (And a pox on the first person to use the word "surreal.") Then the flying cow ("Nother cow!" "I think that was the same one"). Then the pickup truck getting picked up from the drainage ditch and plopped down, upside-down, in the middle of the road several seconds later. Then the crash-landing oil tanker exploding into a fireball on impact. Then the entire house somersaulting across the road. Then the avalanche, or boulder-sized hailstorm, of a large fleet of heavy farm equipment. Then the disintegrating drive-in movie screen (right during the climax of The Shining). Then the daughter's-eye-view of Dad getting sucked up out of the cyclone cellar. And interspersed through all those wows (and others), the various funnels themselves, ranged mere or less in order of their placement on the Fujita scale, from the measly F1 to the mile-wide F5. Different viewers will differ on their wows.

Twister

It must be said (periodically, if not necessarily now) that the artistic vision of any movie that puts special effects ahead of everything else can fairly be classified as myopic. To say nothing of increasingly common. And, to generalize further, as special effects become more and more facile, they become proportionately less and less special. Jumanji's rampaging rhinos can be seen running alongside a Volvo in a half-minute TV spot. In the same format, the unleashed demons of the Hellraiser series (or their ilk) are bested on a soccer field by some guys in Nikes. The shape-shifter of Terminator 2 is multiplied by nine or ten in a Schick commercial. And so on and so forth. Little wonder that wonder is so little nowadays.

Twister at least shows us some things we have not seen before, but its attempt to anthropomorphize these storms into a guêtre of Godzilla-Rodan-Ghidrah-Mothra monsters seems a little silly in light of their fickleness and fleetingness. Or maybe it's just silly to try to cram so many of them into so brief a time and so small a space. (Plot rationale from in front of the radar screen at Weather Central: "You know, if these cells keep building like this, there could be a record outbreak of tornadoes.") The parallels and overlaps in storyline and characterization between Twister and Fox TV's beat-it-to-the-punch Tornado! three days ahead of the premiere — the storm chasers here are trying to put a data-gathering tin can named Dorothy into the tornado's path, while in that other it's a tin can named Patti; and here it's the heroine who in childhood witnessed a parent vacuumed up into the heavens, while in that other it's leathery old Grandpa — would indicate either how restricting the subject matter is, or, more likely, how restricted the Hollywood imagination is. (The storm-chaser vocation at any rate allows second-time director Jan De Bont to maintain, or even to increase, foot pressure on his reputation for Speed.)

The dialogue, credited to Michael Crichton and his wife Anne-Marie Martin, is just something to say in between, and in the earsplitting midst of, the special effects. It consists in large part, possibly because of the spousal nature of the collaboration, of wrangling between a made-for-each-other divorcing couple (Helen Hunt, Bill Paxton) and the man's brand-new fiancée (Jami Gertz), "whose presence [the press notes assert]... makes for a three-sided relationship as stormy as the weather around them." Somehow this relationship failed to register on my personal scale of wows. Still, the fiancée's profession as psychotherapist makes for a smattering of ha-has, as when she fields client calls on her cellular phone on the fringes of a twister or delivers her expert opinion on her new circle of acquaintances: "You people are all crazy, do you know that?"

We may reasonably hope there will be better movies among the summer "blockbusters." We may be absolutely sure there will be a lot worse.

Many blocks away....

I Shot Andy Warhol, at the Hillcrest Cinemas from Friday, could be about no one but Valerie Solanas, the militant lesbian, founder of the one-member Society for Cutting Up Men (S.C.U.M.) and author of its "manifesto," would-be playwright, part-time panhandler and streetwalker, full-time chainsmoker, who in 1968 pumped a couple of slugs at point-blank range into the then King of Pop: symbol of male oppression to Solanas alone. This, the first feature film of British documentarian Mary Harron, so diminished is its cast of characters (when it can bother to identify them) that we must wonder why we ought still to be interested in them a quarter of a century later. The recent documentary Nico Icon aroused, out of the same milieu, a far more complex response than that. Whatever vestigial thrill there might be in gaining entrée to the Factory (tin foil as wallpaper) is offset by the barrenness and sterility of the ambience therein, as well as of the ambience outside. Lili Taylor is intense and eccentric in the lead role, but then Lili Taylor is intense and eccentric in any role. Jared Harris (son of Richard Harris) fails to penetrate the monosyllabic and noncommittal defense mechanisms of the silver-wigged Warhol, the laissez-faire creative overlord. And Stephen Dorff, entering the heated sweepstakes of screen drag queens, does not get below the surface as Warhol "superstar" Candy Darling, but at least gets the surface: "I did my Kim Novak for him, and he was very impressed." Other personages famous, forgotten, or unheard-of are even less individualized.

Man of the Year, at the Guild from Friday, is not just a movie title, but an honorific conferred by Playgirl magazine on its readership's annual favorite centerfold. For the year 1992, that was Dirk Shafer, thus officially inducted into the army of male sex symbols who in their private lives prefer males themselves. A pregnant topic for a movie, no doubt. But not this movie, written and directed by the selfsame Dirk Shafer, in the form of a "mockumentary" about his experiences during his year-long reign, with real footage from TV talk shows (Phil Donahue's, Joan Rivers's, et al.) and a handful of as-themselves performers intermixed with Spinal Tap-style falsifications. These latter, by a wide margin the bulk of the material, are so ill-conceived and even inconceivable (cinéma-verité coverage of a Win-a-Date night on the town, all the way into the lucky lady's hotel room at evening's end), and so badly, broadly played, as to reduce the informational interest to less than nil. Unless perhaps you can take an interest in the spectacle of self-satisfaction.

The Young Poisoner's Handbook, yet another directorial debut (by Benjamin Ross) and yet another Friday start (at the Ken), was screened too close to deadline to permit me to say much more than that it's worth seeing — a British black comedy with a lightness of touch, though not of shade, and with a Heavenly Creatures sort of cheekiness about a case of True Crime. It languishes a bit during the psychopathic hero's rehabilitation and never fully recovers from his relapse, but the cartoonishly uncomplicated face of Hugh O'Conor — that of a demented Little Nemo — is a delightful constant. And the selection of pop songs of the Sixties period is a delightful intermittent. ■

MOVIE LISTINGS

All reviews are by Duncan Shepherd. Priorities are indicated by one to five stars and antipathies by the black spot. Unrated movies are for now unreviewed.

Antonia's Line — On the day she determines to be her last, the aged heroine, with much help from a third-person narrator (her great-granddaughter, it turns out), looks back on several decades of life in a quaint Dutch village, peopled almost exclusively by extraordinary, strong, self-sufficient women and ordinary, subnormal, brutish, beastly, sexist-piggish men. Putting aside genealogy, the titular line is less a plotline than a party line, less a course than a discourse. With Willeke van Ammelrooy, Els Dottermans, Veerle Van Overloop; written and directed by Marleen Gorris. 1995. ❖ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

Bach Wire — Casablanca re-located in the free city of Steel Harbor during the Second American Civil War, 2017 A.D. Rick's Cafe Americain has been renamed and refurbished as the Hammerhead, and the proprietor — the eponymous heroine of the Dark Horse comic book — is resolutely "neutral," until an ex-lover turns up with a fugitive resistance leader in tow. And so on and so on. Unapologetically sophomoric. Ribticklingly spectacular action climax, a man-against-woman mano-a-mano atop a fork-lift-motorcycle-automobile sandwich suspended in midair from a construction crane. And the well-endowed (as they say) Pamela Anderson Lee (or overendowed, as they ought to say) extends her acting range from the sustained beach bunny in TV's Baywatch to the leather-fetishist S&M queen here — not at all beyond her easy reach, in fact very much nearer her natural sneer and her unnatural hardness. With Temeura Morrison, Victoria Rowell, Steve Railsback, Udo Kier; directed by David Hogan. 1996.
★ (CINEMA STAR 6; GROVE 9; MIRA MESA 4; MISSION VALLEY 20; OCEANSIDE 6; SWEETWATER 9; UA HORTON PLAZA 14)

Beat the Devil — A uranium treasure hunt in very clique-y company (Humphrey Bogart, Peter Lorre, Robert Morley, Gina Lollobrigida, Jennifer Jones), this cult item is often pulled down from the shelves as an early example of conscious Camping (not to be confused with unconscious Camp), although another Bogart-Huston collaboration, The Maltese Falcon, a decade earlier, demonstrated an attitude toward masculine adventure stories which was no less prone to theatricality, exoticism, and mincing facetiousness. Oswald Morris's parched Neo-realist image throws a harsh light on the goings-on, however, and creates a sort of documentary detachment, so that you are better able to see the moviemakers laughing up their sleeves. Behind-the-scenes anecdotes abound about this production: e.g., writer Truman Capote beats Bogie in an Indian wrestling match, and the star has to keep his incapacitated hand out of the camera's sight ever after. The newest footnote: the name of the Bogart character, "Billy Dannreuther," pops in Alan Sharp's script of Night Moves, in Jennifer Warren's reminiscence about the first boy to touch her breast — an insider's reference to a quintessential insider's movie. 1954.

From Bolivia • An original comedy full of tenderness & melancholy.
Cuestión de Fe
Director Marcos Loayza calls this gentle comedy a "journey beyond dreams" that began when the evil Sapo Estivariz orders a woodcarver to craft a life-size statue of the Madonna which he then wants delivered to a village in the mysterious Yungas jungle. When Joaquín—a man of little faith but great gambler's instincts—offers to take them in his flower-decorated, rattle-trap truck (La Ramona), the trip embark on the strangest trip of their lives.

Before and After — A murder mystery for only part of the way, after which it applies itself to outlining areas of moral curiosity and courage, and demonstrates thereby that emotional complexity is a satisfying substitute for the idle trickiness and fogginess we are more accustomed to in the crime field. It puts us, at the outset, snugly in the shoes of the parents of a teenage boy suspected of bludgeoning to death his backalley girlfriend, and compels us to consider what we would do if we found, ahead of the police, a bloody glove, among other incriminating items, in the trunk of the family car. From that point on, the movie proceeds deliberately and deliberatingly; involvingly; convincingly — if not always in perfect concord with your own inner voice. Barbet Schroeder directs with a level head and an even hand; and his regular cameraman, Luciano Tovoli, decorates the family home (though not the coldly institutional settings of courthouse and jailhouse) with his distinctive delicate shadows and gentle light. Meryl Streep makes a completely believable bewildered parent, and a fine fool of herself in an awkward run-in with the mother (a clenched Ann Magnuson) of the dead girl. Less completely believable, closer even to completely unbelievable, is Liam Neeson, handicapped in part by the exotic accent, in part by the "glamour" profession of Successful Artist, and in largest part by the greedy neediness of that yearning-burning gaze of his. Edward Furlong tilts the scales back toward the believable as the sullen silent teen, albeit a somewhat puny one to have issued from these strapping adults. And Alfred Molina, enlivening the movie with each fleeting appearance, is believable, too, as the Greek-American attorney whose loyalty lies strictly with his client, and none to spare for those paying his bills or for something known to the lay person as The Truth. "I'm gonna defend your son even if you don't," he rips into the scruple-burdened mother. "When I'm done with you, you're gonna look like Medea!" 1996.
★★★ (CENTURY TWIN)

The Birdcage — Even filmmakers of the status of Nichols and May (director Mike, writer Elaine) follow the crowd and go for inspiration to the French, and they do not go for something recherché the low-brow gender-bender farce La Cage aux Folles. The major makeover: in order to "explain" why an engaged couple must hide the homosexuality of the groom-to-be's father, the bride-to-be's aunt be turned into a far-right Republican Senator (and V.P. of the Coalition for Moral Order) currently on the campaign trail. This adds more in the way of liberal editorials than plausibility, never mind humor. But if you think of the thing as essentially and simply a repertory piece, it's well played by its American cast, especially Nathan Lane, who makes a strong case that the temperamental drag queen (stage name: Starina) is a role he was born to play. Best bits, as in Edouard Molinaro's 1978 French version: the queen's crash course in playing it "straight." With Robin Williams, Gene Hackman, Dianne Wiest. 1996.
★ (CARMEL MOUNTAIN; CINEMA STAR 10; GROSSMONT TROLLEY; LA JOLLA VILLAGE, FROM 5/17; MIRA MESA 8; MISSION VALLEY 20; OCEANSIDE 8; POWAY THEATER, FROM 5/17; SANTEE DRIVE IN; SWEETWATER 8; UA ESCONDIDO 8; UA GLASSHOUSE 8; UA HORTON PLAZA 14; WEGAND PLAZA)

Flipper

Celtic Pride — Maladroit basketball fantasy that speaks to the current miseries of the Boston fan: the Celts are back in the NBA finals, in the old Garden, and two local zealots kidnap the opposing team's ruly star (the shaven-headed as well as shaven-armpitted Damon Wayans) before Game Seven. The actual effect is apt only to intensify nostalgia and withdrawal. Cameo appearances by Larry Bird and Bob Cousy accelerate the effect. With Daniel Stern and Dan Aykroyd; directed by Tom De Cercbio. 1996.
● (HAZARD CENTER 7; UA ESCONDIDO 8)

Cemetery Man — Italian zombie film (practically like saying Italian lasagna). For some unknown reason, the dead are rising a week after being laid to rest, and the impassive graveyard watchmen must split open their skulls, one way or another, to lay them back down. Fine all-around production — sets, lighting, color — degraded by a sniggering underground-comics sensibility. With Rupert Everett; directed by Michele Soavi. 1995.
● (GUILD, 5/16)

The Craft — The new girl in school, revealing an ability to stand a pencil on its point, completes the circle of an extracurricular coven. An "empowerment" fantasy, for feminist teens in particular. But power corrupts, doesn't it? The inevitable falling-out (with the tranquilized Robin Tunney representing Good, the flamboyant Fairuza Balk representing Evil) is too long in coming, but something to see — including an old-fashioned unspectacular effect, out of the pages of M.R. James, of a framed photograph shifting into reasons. With Assumpta Serna, Helen Shaver; directed by Andrew Fleming. 1996.
★ (CINEMA STAR GALAXY; CINEMA STAR 10; DEL MAR HIGHLANDS; GROSSMONT CENTER; GROVE 9; HAZARD CENTER 7; LA JOLLA 12; MIRA MESA 8; POWAY 10; RANCHO BERNARDO 8; SAN MARCOS CINEMAS; SPORTS ARENA 6; SWEETWATER 9; TOWN AND COUNTRY; UA HORTON PLAZA 14; VALLEY DRIVE IN; WEGAND PLAZA)

Dead Man Walking — A debate-form movie, a chew-over of the topic of capital punishment, complete with de rigueur attention to the moment-by-moment minutiae of death-day prison procedure (frequent shots of the clock on the wall along the way). As seemingly dissimilar as it is from writer-director Tim Robbins's first effort — the political spoofery of Bob Roberts — it is united to that one, all the same, in its close connections to television. Much of the material, like much of Bob Roberts's material, seems simply a dutiful dramatic elaboration of things witnessed on the six-o'clock news, or, unlike Bob Roberts's on true-crime tabloid shows: re-enactments of the crime, interviews with family members, coverage of courtroom appearances and protest demonstrations, behind-bars "exclusives." And the presentation always remains journalistically balanced, fair-minded, nonincendiary, a bit timid, after the fashion of TV docudramas when the facts are still in dispute. Susan Sarandon, Robbins's off-screen mate, is somewhat gushy and cozy as the real-life Sister Helen Prejean, official spiritual advisor to a fictitious prisoner on death row. But a sleepy-eyed, soufflé-haired Sean Penn, as the doomed inmate, dispenses a precisely calibrated characterization, never giving out too much at one time, that reaffirms his serious candidacy as the Finest Actor of His Generation. Or some such post. His manacled cigarette-lighting technique, a brilliant bit of gestural portraiture, is alone enough to distinguish this convict from all others in screen history. And that's only a starting point. With Robert Prosky, Scott Wilson. 1995.
★★ (LA PALOMA, FROM 5/17)

Diabolique — The first remake of the Clouzot Diabolique under the same name. (But see Games, ees Reflections of Murder.) The retention of the French title emphasizes that this is frankly a film for those who refuse to read subtitles, or who are blind to black-and-white, or who are find no way to identify with actors who haven't been profiled in People magazine. For anyone, however, who knows movies (what more damning way could it be put?), this remake can offer nothing but drudgery. Some minor revisions have done more harm than good. Who, for instance, is supposed to have taken those snapshots of the wife and mistress loading the body of their shared man into the trunk of the car? And the stamping-out of any supernatural suggestion increases dullness more than it increases credibility. Kathy Bates, a fair trade for Charles Vanel, brings to the wily police detective a totally different gender, one in keeping with the new, updated, politically corrected, feminist slant to the thing. But the altered ending is brought into line with that slant only at a cost of turning our ingenious criminal into a complete nincompoop (let's check the pulse before we pop the cork, chall we?), and of making nonsense of everything that preceded it. And the drawing-out of this ending, the compulsory-coming-back-to-life of a presumed corpse (or two or three), adds only drudgery of a new and different kind. Sharon Stone, Isabelle Adjani, Chazz Palminteri; directed by Jeremiah Chechik. 1996.

Executive Decision — An unassuming, undemanding, and utterly unconvincing disaster thriller, or pendid-disaster thriller, to be more exact. We hadn't had an entry in the Airport series since 1979, or significantly ver since the advent of the Aerplane! series. his, braving the possible raspberry, serves a revival. It distinguishes itself from the rototypical Nineties thriller by concentrating on disentangling a single complex problem — how to board a hijacked airliner in midflight without the hijackers knowing it, and how to discover and disarm a nerve-gas device of science-fictional potency — before the shooting can start. Once the shooting does start, the movie succumbs to the fashionable excesses: the bad guy never stays down the first time, and there is always at least one more crisis than a straight face can bear. Steven Seagal is well used in what may be described (to tip off older-generation film buffs only) as essentially the Sophia Loren role in Operation Crossbow. And the whole thing presents Kurt Russell (as a four-eyed intelligence advisor called away from a D.G. soiree in full Lando. "Who's this? James Bond?") with a severe test of his vinshakable honesty. He passes it with flying colors. Halle Berry, John Leguizamo, Oliver Platt; directed by Stuart Baird. 1996.

A Family Thing — A letter from beyond the grave informs an old Arkansas yokel (off whose tongue, "nigger" rolls easily) that his departed mother was not his biological mother, that he in fact is half black, and it dispatches him on a solemn odyssey to Chicago to look up his fully black half-brother. The bumpkin-in-the-big-city material is sharply imagined, and the meeting of the men, and eventually of their minds, is not too heavy, not too sweet. The inspiration runs down in the last half-hour, with monochromed flashbacks of pantomimed histrionics, and no sure way how to finish. But there is much to admire. Straightforward direction by Richard Pearce (who, in the same vein, made the fine Long Walk Home). Clean, bright, spacious photography by Fred Murphy. Comfortably tailored roles for Robert Duvall and James Earl Jones (exhibiting a slight stammer, especially on r's, especially words like respect and responsibility). Solid support from Michael Beach as the black man's brother, and Irma P. Hall as his blind Aunt T., who does not miss much. Her recital of the grocery list is a delightful piece of "found poetry." 1996.

Fargo — Above and beyond all else, around and through all else, the Coen brothers have assembled here a timeless document on their native state, Minnesota. On its notorious winters. On its snow shovels and its ice scrapers (implement of an uproarious temper tantrum). On its parkas and mittens and gloves and galoshes (standard tidy row of them inside the front door). On its pancake houses and Swedish-smorgasbord cafeterias ("How's the fricassee?"). On its Paul Bunyan and his Babe, the Blue Ox. But mostly, and most hilariously, on its language. Its vernacular: "Oh, jeez" and "Okey-dokey" and the punctuation of sentences with a superfluous "here" or "now" or "there" or "then" at the end of them. Its place-names: Wayzata, Chaska, White Bear Lake, Moose Lake. Its people-names: Lundegaard, Gustafson, Gundewson ("So, ya married Norm Son-of-a-Gunderson!"). Its corporate names: Honeywell, Anthem, Ecklund Swedlund. And of course, encompassing and permeating all that, its regional accent: a clipped, choppy bastardization of the Scandinavian (or for the jocular, the Scandihoovian). Even a lap-anese-American resident comes off sounding like the spawn of John Ford's stock Swede, John Qualen, and sure enough, like an echo out of Monument Valley, somebody actually says "Ye darn tootin'!" Is this portrait not, however, perhaps just a little bit narrow? (Surely everyone in Minnesota can't talk like that!) Is it not, even, a little bit unkind? Well, the same questions could be asked of, let's say, Ring Lardner or (Minnesota's own) Sinclair Lewis, two of the scrupulous chroniclers of American speech and manners with whom the Coens can justly and comfortably be grouped. And the more than just functional narrative — the allegedly "true story" of a Minneapolis car salesman who hires two mercenaries to kidnap his wife as a money-making scheme, ransom to be paid by his wealthy and thrifty father-in-law — is rich in thematic implications: the universal vices of the car dealer (a dealer by profession and by nature) set against the Minnesota virtues of a seven-months-pregnant small-town police chief. "It's not a lie than a little money, ya know. Doncha know that?" With William H. Macy, Frances McDormand, Steve Buscemi, Peter Stormare, Harve Presnell. 1996.

Fear — Elemental protecting-the-host embolezia about an innocent chick who brings home a bad egg. The family tensions are believably drawn and ably acted (William Petersen, Amy Brenneman, Reese Witherspoon), and Mark Wahlberg frowns fiercely and sweet-talks dulcetly as the two-faced psychotic. The finale aspires to something on the scale of Straw Dogs, if not quite the scale of Night of the Living Dead, but director James Foley, emboldened to some true nastiness with the family dog and a dispensable bit-player, retreats at last into comfortable conventions: every family member gets a moment of glory, none gets too badly hurt or humiliated, and there is no limit to the number of times the villain can put a gun to someone's head without pulling the trigger. The suspense is excruciating. Or anyhow something is. 1996.

Flirting with Disaster — This is perhaps, just barely, recognizable as the work of the Spanking the Monkey team, if not for its gen...dial title, then for its stressful fascination with family dysfunction. David O. Russell's move into or toward the commercial mainstream, though, has meant an accelerated, assembly-line manufacture of jokes, and damn quality control. Right along with the intermittently funny, we get the merely naughty (the boner in the boxer shorts), merely nervy (the senior citizen's push-up bra), merely kinky (the armpit fetish), merely what-have-you. Certainly the premise — the search of an adopted teen, now with a wife and four-months-old, as-yet-unnamed son of his own, for his biological parents — affords plenty of latitude to explore different types of familial embarrassment, especially because the adoption agency sends him twice to an incorrect address. (Plenty of latitude there, too, to explore different types of geography: sunny San Diego, snowy Michigan, spooky New Mexico.) And the cast is surprising, if not consistently and equally amusing, in its breadth and diversity: Ben Stiller (a little too sitcommy or comic-sketchy), Patricia Arquette (natural as can be, under the circumstances), Téa Leoni, Mary Tyler Moore, George Segal, Alan Alda, Lily Tomlin, and lesser. But the fresh material — blood-drawing jabs at the hallowed institution of B&B's — is overpowered by the stale: the caricatured Jewish couple, the pop-song montage, the booking with a frying pan. The term "screwball comedy" will inevitably come to mind, prudently to be followed by a reminder that that's just a label, not a laurel. 1996.

Frank and Ollie — Flattering portrait of long-time Disney animators (from the Thirties into the Seventies) and longer-time friends, Frank Thomas and Ollie Johnston. The filmmaker is Frank's son, Theodore, and the tone, somewhat lulling, is one of unquestioning veneration. Clips from their later work, The Sword in the Stone, The Jungle Book, and Robin Hood, provide evidence to the contrary, but the rest make a good case, and the behind-scenes insights into their methods are illuminating regardless. 1995.

Goldeneye — The years and the decades roll on, and Agent 007 gets no older, even if it necessitates expanding the tag team to include Pierce Brosnan — like Roger Moore before him, a made-for-TV actor, a James Bland. The implication would seem to be that the aftermath of the Cold War is as congenial an environment for him as the arctic middle of it. The more sensible view would surely be that he had his day, and it's over and done, and no self-conscious put-down of him as a "sexist misogynist dinosaur" is going to cover the problem. By sticking to an unchanging formula, he's fallen back into the pack. Or the pack has overtaken him. Either way, he's become just one of the boys: Rambo, Ryback, McClane, and Bond, better dressed, better mannered, but in the upmanship cinema of stunts and special effects, of chases and detonations, the differences blur. Famke Janssen enjoys some amusing moments as a giddily sadomasochistic villainess with the witless surname of Onatopp, and Judy Dench as the new "M" delivers the movie's best lines.

James and the Giant Peach — Mixed-media adaptation (live action, cartoon, stop-motion animation) of the Roald Dahl children's book, from the Disney studio, and more specifically from Henry Selick of Tim Burton's The Nightmare before Christmas. The self-consciously "dreamlike" narrative concerns an unloved orphan who, accompanied by oversized English-speaking insects, sails off for the Big Apple in a huge peach attached by spider-thread to a hundred seagulls. The villainous aunts (the warty tubby Sponge, the wrinkly cadaverous Spiker) and the comical-sidekick animals (vampirish spider, ladylike ladybug, etc.) are well within the traditions of Disney animation, but the entire thing is so unremittingly weird and bizarre that no single thing in it can stand out as distinctly weird or bizarre. (By its own words, it is not intended to make sense "up here," but instead only "in there.") A couple of possible highlights: the moment when the night lights of Manhattan appear through an opening in the clouds, and the moment immediately thereafter when a fast-closing storm cloud unleashes the Great Rhinoceros of Death. With Paul Terry, Miriam Margolyes, Joanna Lumley, and the voices of Susan Sarandon, Richard Dreyfuss, Simon Callow. 1996.

Jane Eyre — The chief reason to see this remake, and sufficient reason to have made it, is for the spectacle of the bony Charlotte Gainsbourg nibbling away at the meaty title role. For that, we have to wait half an hour while the protagonist goes through her ill-used childhood ("At Lowood, we shall tame her unruly spirit") and her first incarnation in the form of Anna Paquin. Paquin is a good little actress as little actresses go, and she is not a bad match for her adult successor as such matches go. But that's not enough to compensate for the crudely imagined opening stretch of the story. Only the arrival of Gainsbourg, at the other end of an eight-year time-jump, is enough to compensate for it. Her face, perfect for the part, is not such as to contradict the character completely, much less deride her supposed sensitivity and intelligence and veracity, when she must describe herself as "plain." (We have "supermodel" Elle Macpherson, with Shirley Temple dimples and ringlets, for emphatic contrast.) All the same, we are free to disagree. Plainly exquisite, Jane. Exquisite, plainly. The natural pout of her outthrust chin, chipmunky stuffed cheeks, swollen lower lip, makes the slightest smile ("Do you never laugh, Miss Eyre?") all the more precious and touching. And her neck, seemingly in a state of constant craning, gives to every facial expression and every glance an extra increment of curiosity, uncertainty, innocence, strain. Gainsbourg may be a somewhat limited actress, but her limits far surpass the rudimentary demands of this Ugly Duckling-cum-Cinderella archetype. The same cannot be said of William Hurt, who lacks some of the ruined nobility required in the role of Rochester. He doesn't lack the required adjective. He lacks the noun. With Joan Plowright, Fiona Shaw, John Wood, Amanda Root; directed by Franco Zeffirelli. 1996.

Kaganosho — This would be a formidable entrant in any cinematic beauty contest. The rich, dark, earth colors and heaven-sent lighting effects frequently bring to mind one or another of the Old Masters (Caravaggio or Zurbarán or some other), only unlike them Kurosawa can make you look at his images exactly as long as he wants you to, less any stolen glances at your wristwatch. The Prisoner of Zenda storyline, about a lowly peasant who is a dead ringer for a powerful lord and stands in for him after his death in an effort to avert war, is so burdened down by the studied pictorial effects that it takes seemingly forever to drag itself to an ending that seems hardly worth the bother, when war comes anyway (offscreen) and with the humiliating casualty count of something like 800 to nothing. Slow and stubborn, laboriously lugging his precious visuals over a merely anecdotal plotline, Kurosawa seems to be working more out of pride than inspiration, although there are plenty of moments when the latter is evident too. He commands a certain respect, somewhat in the manner of an imperious schoolmaster, and in that same manner he induces a certain amount of squirms and mutters. With Tatsuya Nakadai. 1980.

Last Dance — Sharon Stone on death row, and evidently after graduation from the Farrah Fawcett School of Serious Acting: minimal makeup; minimal hair care; maximal Southern White Trash accent ("Ye-ou probby 'wunk ya know everthang 'bout my"). Legends of the Fall — Edward Zwick, one-time director of Glory, has here reassumed some epic aspirations, or epic postures and gestures at any rate, in the matter of an all-snake family of four on a Montana horse ranch reminiscent of Bonanza's Ponderosa (Eng. trans., ponderous; labored; lumpish). The unspooling storylize, however, never generates the kind or amount of incident to live up to the epic aspirations, much less to the relentlessly billowing musical score of James Horner. Mostly it doles out a monotonous lump-in-the-throat diet of mushily photographed homecomings and departures and trips up to the family burial plot. There are certainly some good things along the way, especially early: Anthony Hopkins's flinch at a kiss on the cheek from his daughter-in-law-to-be (definitely not her demi-Long John Silver or quasi-Quasimodo contortions following his stroke); the sure-fire heart-tug of three brothers going off to war; and a harrowing night-time battle charge that fleetingly recaptures Glory. However, when one of the brothers (Brad Pitt), with strong Indian affinities extending to the well-brushed tips of his fountain of hair, cuts out the heart of his fallen brother and begins to collect scalps from the culpable Germans, we are compelled to remember that the movie is based on a novel by Jim Harrison (—wella, not epic, not saga). And the ensuing image of the brother's grief and torment and despair and self-recrimination and exile and martyrdom (mere images, without much dramatization) mark an irreversible cross-over from the conventionally sentimental to the overreachingly ridiculous. Julia Ormond, Aidan Quinn. 1994.

The Monster — Roberto Benigni, the silent-style clown of Johnny Stecchino, has had his identity mistaken again, this time as a serial sex killer, occasion for a brutal spree of visual blue jokes. Mr. Holland's Opus — Unabashedly cornball tribute to the inspirational educator, from the director of the unabashedly boneheaded Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure, Stephen Herek. It's from the Disney folks as well, who have made the subject into something of a stripe: Dead Poets Society, Renaissance Man, Dangerous Minds, not to mention the attached branch of films to do with athletic coaches whipping into shape a ragtag sports team (e.g., Herek's own The Mighty Ducks). In this case our hero is a high-school music teacher, who pushes aside his preferred vocation as a composer while he supplements his class load with private tutorials, summer driving instruction, extracurricular band practice, senior-class plays, plus a deaf son (oh, cruel irony!) with the first name of Coltrane and the middle name of Gershwin. When we finally hear the piece of music he has been tinkering on in his spare time for thirty years — "The American Symphony" — it lasts but a few minutes and sounds like John-Tesh-with-Strings. It chills the heart. Richard Dreyfuss, Glenne Headly, Olympia Dukakis, W.H. Macy. 1995.

Mrs. Winterbourne — Cornell Woolrich's dog-eared mistaken-identity thriller (filmed twice before as No Man of Her Own and, in France, I Married a Shadow) has here been converted into a mistaken-identity comedy. The plot — a pregnant woman in a train wreck trades places with another pregnant woman killed in the wreck; the other woman's rich husband is also killed, but he has an identical twin — is plainly ridiculous, but not exactly funny, and director Richard Benjamin has a terrible time finding and sustaining a comic tone. His wife, Paula Prentiss, has a cameo as a maternity nurse. With Ricki Lake, Shirley MacLaine, Brendan Fraser. 1996.

Motherland Falls — Back in the good old days of carte blanche police brutality: L.A. in the early Fifties, in the company of the four felt-hatted musketeers — the hard-punching untouchables — of Nick Nolte, Chaz Palminteri, Michael Madsen, Chris Penn. (The New Zealand director, Lee Tamahori, proven poet of bar fights and spousal battery in Once Were Warriors, has been summoned to Hollywood to keep the action abrupt and ferocious.) The murder-mystery plotline, after an intriguing set-up, is fairly straight-ahead and genteelly cheerful, the twists in it easily negotiable, the rounded-up suspects very few, and the thematic implications — despite earth-shaking encounters with the head of the Atomic Energy Commission and musclemen on behalf of the U.S. military and the FBI — are quite humble. And we get little out of the period aside from a nice selection of its clothes, cars, architecture. And oh yes, that bitter-sweetly re-enacted police brutality. A dead-end nostalgia voyage on all fronts. Nolte, by custom, is top-notch — simultaneously tough and tortured, intimidating and vulnerable. And Palminteri is indeed immeasurably by the role requirement that keeps his hairpiece hidden beneath the unremovable hat. Only these two of the fearsome four-some (character names: Hoover and Goodlegs) have much to do, though. Madsen and Penn look no less splendid in their duds. Melanie Griffith, Jennifer Connelly, Treat Williams, Andrew McCarthy, John Malkovich. 1996.

Oliver and Company — The twenty-seventh, so they say, full-length cartoon feature from the Disney people: it takes only as much as it can use from Dickens's Oliver Twist and throws it to a pack of stray dogs and an alley kitten. The narrative moves along briskly, unchecked even by several song-and-dance interludes; there's a steady flow of well-conceived, if not always executed, scenes and shots (a quickie of the fluffed kitten after getting a blow-dry on a subway grate), with especially careful attention to the intimidations of Manhattan from the ankle-high perspective of a cat; the characters, if not fully and fatly Dickensian, are vivid and varied (the haughty show dog who enunciates the canine vocable as "Bark, bark, bark," the proper British manservant with a secret taste for TV wrestling, the cultured bulldog who prefers Shakespeare on PBS and whose thespian bent is put to use on the street in feigned injuries beneath car bumpers); the voices behind them, in the latter-day Disney manner, are in too many cases intrusively and distractingly recognizable. Bette Midler's, Dom DeLuise's, Robert Loggia's, Cheech Marin's — his, especially. 1988.

Original Gangstas — Two bad-ass dudes a generation past their prime, co-founders of the Rebels street gang in their salad days, return to their hometown of Gary, Ind., to kick the butts of their murderous successors. The slowness and thickness of Fred Williamson and Jim Brown underline the element of wishful fantasy — a dual fantasy of regaining youth and reclaiming the streets. The Pallbearer — David Schwimmer makes the jump from the little screen's Friends, and backwards to the big screen's The Graduate a Hoffman-esque figure drawn into a romantic triangle with an older woman and a same-aged woman; boyish and puppyish; helpless and needy; innocent and adorable. Or that's the hope, anyhow. The story angle — an unemployed twentysomething receives an irresistible invitation from a bereaved mother to take part in the funeral of a high-school mate he cannot for the life of him remember — has its amusements, and the dead man's mother (a platinum-haired, dark-rooted Barbara Hershey) is vividly, overpoweringly visualized. The younger woman (the willowy, verging on wispy Gwyneth Paltrow) pales in comparison. Or even without comparison. Carol Kane, Toni Collette, Michael Rapaport; directed by Matt Reeves. 1996.

The Postman — From the exiled Chilean communist poet Pablo Neruda, the temporary mailman on an illiterate Italian island learns about language, about love, about life (Ironically enough, the actor in the part, Massimo Troisi, died immediately after the completion of shooting.) The teacher-pupil stuff — "What are metaphors?" etc. — is palatably sweet, but the little-man stuff — the ingenuous, self-abasing, sadsack, lovesick, lockjawed, calf-eyed hero — presses on into doving. And the ending is not just sadistic tearjerking, but dishonest. Once Neruda departs the island, there's no evidence that the hero does anything other than pine after the man, no evidence that he puts the lessons learned to good use, no evidence that he himself gets anything out of the waves, the wind, the stars. The Rain People — Francis Ford Coppola's Odyssey-in-reverse about a pregnant wife stealing away from home and husband in the quiet of a wet morning while only the milkman is about, and hitting the road to who-knows-where. Shirley Knight maintains an always-on-edge performance, sometimes quite compelling (a long-distance call to her husband from the Jersey Turnpike is nicely played for its steady irritations: the outside noise of the traffic, the inside noise of the telephone, the stubborn incomprehension of the party at the other end of the line). Still, less anchored and weighted than his subsequent work, Coppola's modish road movie drifts away by degrees from the central figure and finds greater interest in two men — one she picks up, the other picks her up — who block her route to independence. These two actors, both of whom Coppola re-enlisted on The Godfather, are very adept here — James Caan as an ex-collegiate football star, now a basket case with a metal plate in his head, and Robert Duvall as a motorcycle cop living in a trailer park with his obstreperous, foul-mouthed daughter. 1969.

Sense and Sensibility — From the Jane Austen shelf, a cinematic classics illustrated. And altogether an agreeable comedy of manners, though hardly on course to become a classic in its own right, in its own medium, to be more precise. Ang Lee, of Eat Drink Man Woman and The Wedding Banquet, is the perhaps unexpected director of the thing. And it's something of a measure of the power of Miss Austen that her personality in the end submerses that of Mr. Lee: her clear biases, her fastidious apportionment of approval and reproof, overwhelm his broad tolerances, his predilection to see from everyone's angle. Emma Thompson, although quite expected (and expectedly adept) in the central role of the saintly Elinor, is totally unexpected herself in the job of scriptwriter. And in that capacity she manages to move matters along steadily, if at first a little abruptly, to and beyond the climactic moment that encapsulates, as well as any single moment can, the Jane Austen ethos, the moment for which a Jane Austen heroine, with bated breath, lives. "Do you compare your conduct with his?" inquires Elinor, typically concerned with levels and degrees of blameworthiness, of her chastened younger sister, Marianne. "No," comes the earnest and unironic reply. "I compare it with what it ought to be — with yours." The portrayal of Marianne is the real revelation of the movie. Kate Winslet was not heretofore well enough known to arouse any expectations whatever, and her Marianne would seem to be worlds apart from her blood-stained adolescent fantasist in Heavenly Creatures. But at a second glance, perhaps not worlds apart after all, perhaps only one world, perhaps only a continent. The hotly romantic and highly improper Marianne, who fancies herself so full of emotions that she cannot possibly contain them, is the most modern character in the entire group, and consequently the most immediately sympathetic. And thanks to Winslet, it most deservedly is. Hugh Grant, Alan Rickman. 1995.

He was a centerfold who revealed everything... But the truth.

★★ (LA JOLLA VILLAGE)

Sgt. Bilko — Take away Phil Silvers, and you take away any point. Steve Martin, Dan Aykroyd, Phil Hartman, Glenne Headly, and company are just good little soldiers, and their commander, director Jonathan Lynn, is strictly by-the-book. 1996.

The Young Poisoner's Handbook

The Substitute — A reform-minded high school teacher (the earthy Diane Venora) gets kneecapped, or Nancy Kerrigan-ed, while jogging and her boyfriend (Tom Berenger), who happens to be a recently laid-off soldier of fortune, gets himself assigned to her classroom, hellbent on ferreting out the gaiety parlors, with a ready-mode commando team at his beck and call. Bearingly murderous make-believe about battling back against gangs and drugs. Preposterous but involving. With Ernie Hudson, William Forsythe; directed by Robert Mandel. 1996.
★★ (CINEMA STAR 8; CINEMA STAR 10; GROVE 9; MISSION VALLEY 20; STUDIO 3 CINEMAS; SWEETWATER 9; UNIVERSITY TOWNE CENTRE; WEGAND PLAZA)

The Truth about Cats and Dogs — Didactic romantic comedy founded on the hypothesis — the cold hard fact — that a terrific female mind and personality will not get a second look glance unless they come in a package rash as Uma Thurman. The premise is further chilled and hardened by endowing Thurman with a decidedly subpar mind and personality. (Why does the terrific one tolerate the subpar one as a friend?) But the point is a little fudged by putting the terrific female in the admittedly very much shorter and somewhat wider form of Janeane Garofalo, a charmer and even a cutie in her own right. And the Cyrano-like donation, protracted beyond belief, reduces the desirable male (the British-accented Ben Chaplin) to a dodo: why can't he recognize the voice that's coming out of Garofalo's face? Still, Garofalo delivers her (or screenwriter Audrey Wells's) wry comments as if she well knows what she's talking about, and the lessons never become overbearing, though sometimes overgratifying. Directed by Michael Lehmann. 1996.

Up Close and Personal — Puff piece on the exciting and demanding and rewarding field of TV journalism. The names of the savvy veteran and his protégé, eventually husband and wife, has-been and star-in-born, tell you all you need to know: Warren Justice and Tally Atwater. (They are acted, with soggy chemistry, by the former golden boy, now golden old man, Robert Redford, and the moreish android, Michelle Pfeiffer.) Incredibly enough, the script is credited to Joan Didion and John Gregory Dunne, who must have bills to pay like anyone else. With Kate McGuan, Joe Mantegna, Stockard Channing; directed by Jon Avnet. 1996.

Nights of Wonder

Docility and silence are not characteristic of me.

REVIEW
ELEANOR WIDMER

I have always remembered my experiences at the Rancho Bernardo Inn's El Bizcocho restaurant as nights of wonder. About a decade ago, El Bizcocho's management pioneered gourmet food and wine dinners in San Diego. La Semaine du Culinaire was a week of extraordinary food preparation, when chef Christian Gaborit, flown in from Tours, France, and the hotel chef turned out meals of dazzling presentation. I attended them three consecutive years and then quit. Since I doubted that other wine dinners could compete with those of El Bizcocho, I never frequented any again.

My most unusual recollection of El Bizcocho, however, relates to the evening I brought my ex-husband there in an attempt to persuade him to attend our elder son's wedding. The father of my children is a man of intense complexity and diffidence. He is, to quote the poet Richard Bernfield, "constant in nothing but inconstancy." Therefore, I was pained but not surprised when he announced to me that he would pass on his son's wedding. To confront him head-on would only solidify his negative position. I decided to treat him to an evening at El Bizcocho.

The dining room offers old-style luxury — nothing showy, nothing ostentatious. Tables are large, placed far apart, and set with fine china and silver. The service is impeccable. Waiters go about their business but never hover, never breathe down your neck. Dishes carved tableside are done quickly and without fuss.

Because I had so much riding on the evening with my ex-husband, I made as few comments as possible. When he suggested the Chateaubriand (tenderloin steak prepared for two), I hastily complied. The meat was superb, and the accompanying sauces and wines were above reproach.

Docility and silence are not characteristic of me, but what molded my behavior that night was the image of my son's crushing disappointment if his father failed to show up at the wedding. I willed myself to listen to stories I had heard dozens of times during our marriage, to laugh appropriately at the punch lines. He continued his self-satisfying monologue beyond dinner and during the ride to my house. As we reached my door, I remarked casually, throwing away my line as if it had just come to me, "it would be nice if you came to the wedding. You don't have to stay more than an hour."

I credit the mellowness of El Bizcocho's food and wine for helping my ex-husband in his decision. He arrived just as the ceremony was to start. Whatever the evening had cost me emotionally, it was worth it to witness my son's pleasure in having his father present.

And this brings me to my recent dinner. It had been about seven years since I'd dined at El Bizcocho when my wine-merchant friend, who eats there often, urged me to try the work of Brian Johnston, the current chef de cuisine. I brought along a woman friend who is fairly new to San Diego. Our dinner party can be described as magical.

As we walked up to the hotel, two attendants opened the heavy wooden double doors, setting the tone for the understated grandeur within. The three of us occupied a table large enough for twice as many people. Though it was Monday night, the room was filled to capacity. Some diners may have been staying at the hotel, but many were from North County. Like Mlle Fleurs, business is sustained by a steady clientele who patronize the restaurant regularly.

Our wine-expert friend suggested we drink Kistler Chardonnay, McCrea Vineyard, 1992, a wine I'm especially fond of, and we ended with a pinot noir, Los Encantos Reserve, 1994. In addition, he asked that Brian Johnston surprise us with a first course.

Thirty-two-year-old Johnston was born and raised in San Diego. His Texan grandmother's Southern meals sparked his interest in cooking. When Johnston became serious about the culinary arts, he headed for Paris, where he attended the famous La Varenne cooking school headed by Anne Willan. In 1985, 21-year-old Johnston, raised on fried chicken and biscuits with gravy, received his Grand Diplome in traditional French cooking. He's worked at El Bizcocho three times; once he left to work at the Hyatt Regency La Jolla, and another time to work at Top of the Cove. Now he's in charge at El Bizcocho.

For our first course we each had one shrimp, one scallop, one mussel. The shrimp was sautéed and presented in a ginger-butter sauce; the scallop resided in a lobster-lemon-thyme sauce and was topped with crispy fried leeks; the mussel was covered with stewed yellow tomatoes and onions plus bread crumbs, then tossed with Parmesan and basil aioli (garlic-based mayonnaise sauce).

We skipped salad and went directly to our entrées. The menu is divided into two parts. "El Bizcocho Traditions," that is, Norwegian salmon, Long Island duckling, rack of lamb, and steaks, have been prepared since the restaurant's inception. "Seasonal Specialties" include such items as smoked rainbow trout, sautéed ostrich with morel mushroom risotto, and halibut with fresh mango salsa and coconut-basil sauce.

My friends selected Norwegian salmon ($22.00) and honey-glazed veal ($29.00); I opted for rack of lamb carved tableside ($30.00). Each entrée was accompanied by French beans, carrots baby turnips, and sunburst squash. My lamb came from Colorado and was served with a rosemary sauce and gratin potatoes.

The salmon (with garlic mashed potatoes and portobello mushrooms) was finished with a vermouth-cream sauce, fresh basil, and diced tomatoes. The veal lay on a bed of morel-cream sauce and asparagus.

I had ordered a strawberry soufflé when we arrived. I adore soufflés, and this one personified spring and a sense of renewal.

If you haven't tried Brian Johnston's outstanding cooking, you should do so. The service, the setting, and the food testify to the great gastronomic strides we have made in San Diego. Our meal at El Bizcocho could compete with that of any restaurant in California. ■

"Eating flesh causes dirty thoughts. Meat incites sexual sin. Meat feeds our animal nature."

REVIEW
MAX NASH

Four kilos of cocaine," murmurs a plump, scurly haired blonde seated at the table near the window. "My client passes four kilos of cocaine in a paper bag to a narc."

Her dinner companions — a thin, bearded, bow-tied fellow and a weary matron in tinted glasses — stare at her. They wave their forks and knives above their plates, unsure whether to spear a baby carrot or infant turnip or focus their attention on the murmuring blonde.

She takes a sip of wine and with an ironic little chuckle asks, "So, you want to tell me there's no such thing as a loser case for an attorney? You want to tell me there's no such thing as a deal?"

The beautiful dining room at Top of the Cove is so cozy you can't help eavesdropping. Despite the first-class prices on the menu, dining here is a lot like flying coach: you're constantly aware of your shoulders, knees, and feet, of where to put them or arrange them so they won't cause trouble. I and Elizabeth, the young woman I've invited to eat with me, end up reading our menus with our elbows perched upon our sternums — a supplicant posture, like that assumed by newly hatched baby birds.

In this nestlike setting, we find ourselves sweating. The evening is warm. The ceiling is low, so low Elizabeth winces whenever Lee, our tall, dashing waiter, steps down into the dining room. She is afraid he's going to bump his head. His scalp grazes the ceiling as he chants his way through the evening's specials.

"Loin of ostrich, blah-blah-blah..."

In the dry air, Lee's brisk comings and goings have generated so much static electricity that strands of his brown hair rise on their own toward the ceiling. I imagine if he held a light bulb between his teeth he could probably make it glow.

Our adventure with Lee, so far, has been something of a mixed bag. Elizabeth and I have a definite feeling that Lee would not have been surprised to see us enter the restaurant on all fours. He does not appear altogether convinced that we know how to eat with knives and forks. An otherwise pleasant and handsome human being, Lee is in the thrall of Top of the Cove's bizarre and long-standing obsession with "class." The restaurant embraces an arch formality, the likes of which haven't been seen since Mamie Eisenhower was setting standards for American taste and sensibility.

For one thing, the waiters, Lee included, address every female in the restaurant as "Madame," as in "Would Madame care for some freshly ground pepper?" (But not as in "Would Madame care for me to put a cork in this preposterous manner of speaking?") For another thing, the tiny pats of butter in our butter dish have been embossed in molds that read "Top of the Cove," as if customers were in danger of forgetting where they were and butter pats the precise medium through which to remind them.

While we scan our menus, Elizabeth and I discuss the lost art of butter molds, and if it's important that such artisanal touches should disappear from the American table.

"I just don't have the time for molding butter pats," Elizabeth sighs. "Maybe on weekends. Maybe on weekends I could find a few hours to mold butter pats that said 'Casa de Elizabeth,' or 'Chez Elizabeth.' I think my guests might appreciate that. Especially my father. He has Alzheimer's."

Lee has been waiting patiently through all our prattle. He did not laugh when I asked if the ostrich were served with its head buried in a bed of rock salt. He did not laugh at Elizabeth's remarks about Alzheimer's and butter pats. With more and more of his hair clinging to the ceiling, Lee has stood quietly while we made up our minds. And when I tell him that I want the $16 white asparagus as a first course and the $33 Kobe beefsteak for my entrée, he bugs his eyes out of their sockets and rocks forward on the balls of his feet.

(Although I am wearing a $795 navy blue Dunhill blazer, I am also wearing a wrinkled white cotton polo shirt, jeans, and Reebok high-top tennis shoes. Elizabeth is wearing a rumpled, beige Geoffrey Beene number she dug out of her laundry basket. Her hair is dump from the shower. But still. There was no reason for Lee to rock forward on the balls of his feet and cause his eyes to bug from their sockets.)

"And how would you like your steak?" asks Lee, retracting his eyeballs a little.

"Rare."

"Good boy!" Lee crows, his eyeballs again protruding as if I'd just promised not to eat the steak with my hands or blow my nose on the tablecloth.

Elizabeth, a pristine vegetarian, opts for a grilled tuna appetizer and a Caesar salad as her entrée. We together choose a $48 bottle of Merlot that Lee assures us is quite tasty. None of these choices appears to have an appreciable impact on the remarkable mobility of Lee's eyeballs. He thanks us and trots away.

I invited Elizabeth to dinner because I thought it might be fun to eat a $75 steak in the presence of a devout vegetarian. I explained to Elizabeth that Kobe beef was, in its way, the antithesis of veal: in Kobe, Japan, the cows who produce its world-famous beef lead lives of luxury unsurpassed in the annals of animal husbandry. The cows drink sake and are massaged with beer. (Or perhaps it's the other way 'round; I can never remember.) So the animals won't exert themselves with unnecessary activity, like standing or lying down, the Japanese suspend them in midair with massive elastic straps. As a result, veins of pearly fat marble their indolent flesh. And Lee informs me that Kobe beef is aged for three months, unlike American beef that in even the finest steak houses is aged on average for only six weeks.

Aging is a crucial issue in meat-eating culture. Its duration and manner — dry aging as opposed to wet aging, for example — are a source of great debate and extensive research. The tenor of this controversy has grown increasingly shrill since the mid-'80s, when diet-mad Americans began demanding leaner and leaner meat while simultaneously complaining that lean beef lacked tenderness and flavor. The meat industry has since grown desperate in its attempts to engineer a cow that is both anorectic and flavorful. (Several years ago the American meat industry was gladdened to learn that scientists had discovered the molecule in beef responsible for its meaty flavor. Giddy industry leaders speculated that someday fat-free beef could be injected with this substance to make it more palatable.) While the search continues for a cow-that-tastes-good-and-is-good-for-you, restaurateurs have started to experiment with aging. The exact biochemistry of how this process works of how enzymes in decaying meat break down muscle fiber and connective tissue to produce tenderness and rich flavor, is still little understood. In the past year, however, blind taste tests have shown that nice, fatty, prime-grade beef, aged for six weeks, beats the pants off choice cuts cooked shortly after slaughter.

I tried to interest Elizabeth in these issues, but she remained irresponsive. When Lee brought my steak to the table, Elizabeth gazed at it and grew pale, announcing, "Last week the mayor of Kobe committed suicide by dousing himself with kerosene and setting himself on fire. People said he was overwrought with the task of rebuilding his city after the earthquake."

Lee sort of stared at her, set her Caesar salad in front of her, and said, "I hope you enjoy your meals."

My Kobe steak was about the size of a smallish grapefruit.

"I guess you're really going to eat that, aren't you?" Elizabeth gulped her wine. "My guru says eating flesh causes dirty thoughts. He says meat excites carnal desires. He says meat incites sexual sin. Meat feeds our animal nature."

I palpated my $75 steak with the tips of my fingers. (I first checked to make sure Lee wasn't watching. I didn't want to upset him.)

"Yes. I am going to eat it. I'm going to incite my animal nature."

To my fingers, the steak was as supple as a perky female breast. The moist meat almost jiggled. I cut into it with my fork. Pale red blood flowed from the wound. Inside, the meat was soft, soft pink. I took a bite and imagined cows suspended from a barn's ceiling by elastic straps. Kobe beef is very interesting. It is almost too rich and its flavor may be too ripe for the many Americans who value the blandness of freshness.

Entire cuisines, you must remember, are built upon decay. Most of the food the French put into their mouths has been allowed, one way or another, to rot by slow degrees. Lusty Frenchmen, for example, enjoy Muenster cheese when it has decayed to the point that it is syrupy. The runny stuff stinks to high heaven, smelling of body parts left unwashed after long summer days. And the French enjoy this hyper-ripe, stinky Muenster with the addition of a few cumin seeds, as if the cheese didn't already have enough flavor in the first place.

There's something very honest about the taste of well-aged beef — there's no convincing yourself that you're eating something that isn't absolutely dead. And, strangely enough, decay doesn't taste bland — it's gussey, or in other words, it tastes lively. The contradiction, of course, is how something that tastes so complex, so mature, can feel so soft and young in the mouth.

"What does it taste like?" Elizabeth asked, crunching a garlicky crouton with her molars.

"Very good. Would you like to try some? I mean, if a vegetarian's going to eat meat, she might as well eat a $75 steak."

"You're trying to corrupt me."

"Just try it," I whispered, offering her a morsel with the tines of my fork. "You don't have to eat it. You don't have to chew it. Just kiss it. Kiss it for me."

Elizabeth glanced around the room as if she expected Lee suddenly to appear and slap the corrupting tidbit from my hand.

I brought the meat close to her lips. She looked at it with downcast eyes, and for a second I thought she might take a bite. Instead, she nudged at it with her lips and licked at it with the tip of her demure tongue.

"Okay," she said, pushing my hand away. "That's enough. I get the idea. It's very good."

People, I noticed, at a nearby table were staring at us.

"Do you feel guilty?" I asked, between bites.

"You must never tell anyone what I've done. Never."

"Your secret's safe with me, babe."

I eat. I sweat. I guzzle my wine. The stuffiness of the Top of the Cove dining room has served not so much to intimidate as to relax me. You're sitting so close to the other patrons you can watch perspiration bead their foreheads and upper lips. You can smell the food that they've ordered. You can smell their perfume (Chanel's Cristalle), their cologne (Chanel's Pour Homme), and the acrid hint of dry-cleaning fluid in their jackets and neckties. I almost feel as though I've stumbled into an intimate family dinner.

When we finish, Lee rushes to our table with the $170 bill for our dinners. He asks us, with minimal expectation, if we'd like coffee. When we tell him no, that we'll have coffee upstairs on the bar's balcony, he seems relieved.

"If you'll hurry you can catch the sunset. I hear the colors are magnificent!"

On the balcony Elizabeth and I sip coffee and Sambuca and watch the perfect orange disk of the sun surrender itself to the clean line of the Pacific horizon. I try to engage her with a discussion of whether or not Lee thought we were white trash, but Elizabeth seems troubled. She feels, I realize, guilty about her flirtation with dead meat.

After a few minutes she takes my hand and places it atop her knee. She smiles at me, and I know she has found some way to forgive herself for her dietary transgression. She seems happy now, the way most of us feel when we recognize that sin's pleasure is largely in its ultimate justification. ■

RESTAURANT LISTINGS

The Reader's Guide to Restaurants is compiled by Eleanor Widmer and represents a selective listing of recommended San Diego County and Tijuana dining establishments. Individual restaurants will appear once or twice a month. Price estimates are based on the latest information available for a mid-range entrée. Low: below $10. Moderate: $10 to $16. Expensive: more than $16. Please call restaurants in advance for operating hours, reservations, and other specific information.

NORTH COASTAL

THE ARMENIAN CAFE 3126 Carlsbad Boulevard, Carlsbad, 720-2233. Both the zucnis and the physical setting have been expanded — you may now sit on the deck and watch the sunset. Don't overlook potajen (apricot, beef, and potatoes topped with cheese), the pepared-on-the-premises gyros, and a variety of combination plates. Rack of lamb is also a fine choice. The soups and desserts are terrific. Unique breakfasts that include omelets with shish kebobs served Saturday and Sunday from 8:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Music and belly dancing Friday and Saturday. Closed Monday and Tuesday. Lunch and dinner. Wednesday through Sunday; breakfast Saturday and Sunday. Low to moderate.

THE BRASSERIE La Costa Resort & Spa, Costa Del Mar Road off El Camino Real, Carlsbad, 438-9111, x4500. This hotel dining room offers breakfast, lunch, and dinner. All-you-can-eat Sunday buffet brunch with champagne is $28.00. Outstanding service. Reservations recommended. Pisces Delicacies of the Sea is also located in this complex. Expensive.

CHANTROS RESTAURANT AND MARKETPLACE 3702 Via de la Valle, Del Mar, 259-8777. This Southwestern dining room offers a constantly expanding and changing menu. Among the entrées are a full range of tapas, wonderful tortilla soup, house-smoked baby-back ribs, Navajo flatbread pizzas, and spit-roasted chicken. Sunday brunch includes eggs, fish, and regular lunch menu, with free champagne or mimosa. Very sennous desserts. Open daily. Continuous service, lunch and dinner. Moderate to expensive.

D. B. HACKERS SEAFOOD CAFE AND GRILL 101 Old Highway 101, Encinitas, 436-3162. This simple dining room isn't impressive looking, but the all-you-can-eat fish and chips served Monday through Thursday for $7.95 are terrific. The fish (New Zealand hoki) arrives in a golden crust, is well-drained and delicious. Also available, all-you-can-eat fish tacos. If you would like small portions, try the "fiddle" serving. Fresh fish, pastas, and daily specials also worthwhile. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

FIDEL'S CARLSBAD 3093 Carlsbad Boulevard, Carlsbad, 729-0903. A sister restaurant to the venerable establishment in Solana Beach, the stars here are carnitas; cozumelitas with chicken, beef, or pork; tostada supreme; and breast of chicken Milanesa. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low.

JAKE'S DEL MAR 1660 Coast Boulevard Del Mar, 755-2002. Jake's is the forefather of what people visualize when they say "Southern California." Most of the tables have an ocean view and everyone has a good time, which counts as much as the food. Fresh fish is the best bet here and is accompanied by rice or pasta. Steak lovers won't be disappointed. Nothing fancy, but high spirited. Open daily. Lunch, Tuesday through Saturday; dinner nightly. Sunday brunch from the menu. Moderate to expensive.

MILTON'S DELICATESSEN, GRILL AND BAKERY 2660 Via de la Valle, Flower Hill Mall, Del Mar, 792-2225. You'll find 270 items on this menu. They include Jewish deli; Chicago-style pizza; and grilled ribs, steaks, vegetables. Two recommended items: Chinese chicken salad and skirt steak sandwich. Not the greatest Jewish deli; not the worst. Open daily; breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low to moderate.

OSCAR'S 1505 Encinitas Boulevard, Encinitas, 943-0222. Here's a good place to take children or to enjoy a low-cost, unpretentious meal. The menu consists of pizza, barbecue chicken and ribs, sandwiches, salads. The best bet is the chicken-rib combination for two with salad-in-a-bowl large enough for four and hot bread sticks. This place is unpretentious and without frills — you place your order at the counter and a waiter brings it to your table; — no nic...s no fuss. It's a few notches above fast food but fun for a casual meal. Same menu lunch and dinner, continuous service. Branches in Carmel Mountain and Mission Valley. Open daily. Low.

OVERSEAS RESTAURANT 2818 Roosevelt Street, Carlsbad, 729-0368. This superior Chinese restaurant offers specialties from Hong Kong and Singapore as well as Mandarin and Szechuan dishes. Some of the best appear on a menu printed in Chinese; ask the owner to translate the offerings from that list. Some of the best in the house include Overseas Supreme (cuicken, shrimp, beef and cashews placed in a ring of deep-fried mashed potatoes) and shark's fin served with lettuce cups. Satay preparations are also interesting. Gorgeous presentation includes carved vegetables. Open daily, continuous service lunch and dinner. Moderate.

PACIFIC COAST GRILL 437 South Highway 101, Solana Beach, 794-4632. Many dishes here are under $10.00. The most expensive is steak for $18.95 but it's enough for two people. Best bets: baby back ribs, fresh fish, variety of burgers served with salad and fries presented in a paper bag. Warm, casual atmosphere. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to expensive.

RED TRACTOR'S 550 Via de la Valle, Del Mar, 755-6600. If you like truly mammoth portions of prime rib, steak, chicken, or fish that's fresh, plain, and unadorned, served in a lovely surrounding, try this former L.A. family restaurant. Dinners come with corn on the cob (when in season) or oiled potatoes or vegetables — salads are à la carte. Each portion is enough for two people, especially the salads and broccoli. The pan-broiled chicken is a best bet. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinners nightly. Moderate to expensive.

SPICES THAI CAFE 5810 Valley Center Drive, Plaza Carmel Shopping Center, Del Mar (east of Carmel Valley turnoff), 259-0889. This is a superb Thai restaurant whose cuisine is not only elegant but also contains no MSG and very little fat. The menu is varied and you may have a delightful meal by ordering several appetizers. The seafood dishes are highly, especially seafood panang, which contains shrimp, crab legs, scallops, and mussels. Among other delicacies are duck and frog legs. It's all glorious. Put Spices Thai Café at the top of your list. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

NORTH INLAND

DANTE'S 9379 Mira Mesa Boulevard, 693-3252. Well-prepared Italian and Continental dinners include soup or salad, entrée, vegetables, and pasta or rice. The best buys here are the outstanding early bird dinners, served Tuesday through Thursday, 5:00 to 7:00 p.m., they include appetizer, soup or salad, choice of ten entrées, vegetables, and pasta or rice pilaf for $3.95. Karaoke entertainment Friday and Saturday nights. You get your money's worth here. Closed Sunday and Monday. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner Tuesday through Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

DICRESCENZO'S 11625 Dunda Road, Westwood Shopping Center, Rancho Bernardo, 487-2776. Should you be in Rancho Bernardo and setting great Italian sandwiches or pizzas to eat in or take out, keep this Chicago-style "deli" in mind. The Italian beef and Rocco's imperial sub are knockouts. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday, 11:00 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Low.

GOLDEN BAGEL CAFE 2628 Del Mar Heights Road, Del Mar Heights Village, 259-4886. This café serves 27 varieties of bagels with toppings, giant focaccia sandwiches, salads, individual pizzas, and 24-ounce smoothies. You really get your money's worth here. Fine quality and top price of $4.95. Open daily to 7:00 p.m., Monday to Saturday; to 6:00 p.m. Sunday. Low.

HERNANDEZ' RIDE-AWAY Rancho and Lake Drives, Del Dios, Lake Hodges, 746-1444. Noted for its authentic Mexican cooking and very large portions, its followers remain so steadfast that weekends are inevitably crowded. That's because the breakfast/brunch served both Saturday and Sunday until 2:00 p.m. offers outstanding value: steak and eggs, chilaquiles, sausage, beans, and omelets. Fine entrées are chicken enchiladas with spicy sour cream, stuffed quesadillas, tamales, and chiles rellenos. Because it's not easy to find, call for driving instructions. Closed Monday. Breakfast/brunch, Saturday and Sunday. Lunch and dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to moderate.

MANDARIN GARDEN RESTAURANT 8242 Mira Mesa Boulevard, Mira Mesa, 566-4720. From the 60m seen served Saturday and Sunday to its variety of exotic dishes, this restaurant is worth seeking out, especially at dinner. Located in the Mira Mesa Mall, it offers many unusual and hard-to-find appetizers. The noteworthy main dishes are steamed whole fish, twice-cooked pork (spicy), fresh eel served in brown sauce. The extensive menu includes standard dish-s favored by Americans. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

150 GRAND CAFE 150 West Grand Avenue, Escondido, 738-6868. This is one of the few gourmet restaurants in Escondido. It's beautifully decorated and offers a large and separate bar. Try one of the tempting salads or 3 pasta dish. Sunday brunch from the menu from 10:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. If you're in the neighborhood, drop in. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner; Sunday, brunch and dinner. Low to upper moderate.

ORIGINAL PANCAKE HOUSE 14905 Pomerado Road, Poway, 679-0186. Everything you loved and adored at the Convoy Street address is available here, such as apple pancakes, Swedish pancakes, omelets, coffee with real cream. Open from 7:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. daily. If you love pancakes, this is not to be missed. Open daily. Low.

REAL TEXAS BBQ 6904 Miramar Road, 566-5235. Texas barbecue consists of meat, chicken, and links that are smoked rather than cooked over a fire. The best bet is the half-and-half sandwich, half pork and half brisket served with two side dishes plus a drink (ice tea, lemonade, coffee). Two all-you-can-eat dinners are $9.99 and the other $12.75, served from 3:00 to 9:00 p.m. weekdays and from opening to closing Saturday and Sunday. The room is unadorned but very clean. Same menu lunch and dinner. Open daily, continuous service. Low.

SHINO'S 113 West Grand Avenue, Escondido, 745-3835. There are several reasons to dine here. The restaurant is within two blocks of the California Center for the Arts, Escondido; dinner begins at 4:00 p.m.; the room is charming. For the most part, the cuisine is of high quality, although salads are carelessly done and some preparations are erratic. Try the nightly specials, which may be French, Italian, Spanish, or Asian. Basic menu is French/Italian. Desserts are superb. Closed Sunday and Monday. Dinner only, Tuesday through Saturday, 6:00 to 10:00 p.m. Moderate to expensive.

STELLA'S HIDEAWAY POLISH RESTAURANT Pebasquitos Village Shopping Center, 14323 Pebasquitos Drive, Rancho Peñasquitos, 672-3604. This mom-and-pop Polish dining room serves home-style sauerkraut or dill pickle soup and 18 pungent entrées. Among the best are beef roll-up (roulades), the Polish combination plate, and the boneless chicken breasts. The pierogi are a bit doughy, but all dishes are prepared from scratch. The food is robust, the portions large, the atmosphere induces you to order more than you can eat. Soup or salad and dessert are included with dinner. Closed Monday. Dinners Tuesday through Sunday. Moderate.

LA JOLLA

AESOP'S TABLES 8650 Genesee Avenue, Costa Verde Shopping Center, #108, 455-1515. The chef-attributes of this Greek and Mediterranean restaurant are fresh food, tasty preparation, and low cost. You may have dinner here for $10.00 or less if you select a "pitza" — hot pita bread covered with chicken, lamb sausage, or vegetables, plus a salad or soup. The salads are a good buy. Entrées are large enough for two. Reservations for five or more only. Arrive early. All items available for takeout. Lunch and dinner, Monday through Saturday; dinner only Sunday. Low to moderate.

AVANTI RESTAURANT 575 Prospect Street, 454-4288. You won't be disappointed with the Northern Italian food here. Fresh fish and pastas do especially well. Five-course lobster dinner Thursday and Sunday, $15.95. Apart from the fine food, there is dancing every night. Dinner only, Sunday through Thursday 5:30 to 11:30 p.m. and to 12:30 a.m. on Friday and Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

CHANG CUISINE OF CHINA 8670 Genesee Avenue, Costa Verde Shopping Center, 546-2288. The palatial setting and beautiful art carry this restaurant. The best dishes here are crispy boef, minced chicken in lettuce cups, and honey chicken. The Mandarin and Szechuan dishes are all of average competence. Dim sum daily at lunch. Open daily, lunch and dinner. (Saturday and Sunday, dinners start at noon.) Separate dining rooms available. Low.

RESTAURANTS

CINDY BLACK'S 5721 La Jolla Boulevard. 456-6295. Cindy Black prepares excellent French provincial dishes. Her fresh, innovative entrées provide good value. Those on a budget may limit themselves to pasta, rice, or chicken dishes. Fixed-price dinner Monday through Friday from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. includes soup or salad, entrée, and dessert, $12.95. Fixed-price dinner Sunday (call for price). Some outstanding entrées are the Norwegian salmon and the duck with crispy carrots and leeks. Vegetarian dishes available upon request. Superb service. Open nightly for dinner. Moderate to expensive.

DYLAN PIZZA AND PASTA 7514 Girard Avenue, 459-8112. If you've tried the other branches, you know that the salads are huge and fresh, the pizzas and pastas good-tasting. This branch also offers seafood dishes, fish, gourmet burgers, rotisserie chicken, homemade desserts. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

KHATOON PERSIAN CUISINE 639 Pearl Street, 459-4016. This Persian cuisine is very healthy, non-fat or low-fat, and the menu consists mostly of meat, fish, and skewered chicken kabobs served with basmati rice and broiled tomatoes. Best bets are the chicken kabobs or the ground beef and filet combinations. Same menu of larger portions is available for lunch and dinner. Families with children frequent this home-style restaurant. Good-tasting fresh food, but not too exotic. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

MILLIGAN'S BAR & GRILL 5786 La Jolla Boulevard. 459-7511. Old-style American food is at its best here, especially the fried-chicken dinner, baby back ribs, and fresh fish. The mashed potatoes are terrific. The upstairs dining room offers an ocean view and is a fine spot for Sunday's à la carte brunch. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

RUSTY PELICAN 4340 La Jolla Village Drive, 587-1188. Prices are affordable for almost everyone. The fish and seafood are fresh and the preparations innovative. However, the best bet is the sunset dinner served daily until 6:30 p.m. It offers salad or soup, fish, vegetables, bread, dessert, and beverage for $8.95 to $10.95. Setting is lovely for up to a table overlooking the man-made lagoon) and service nedi. Open daily, lunch Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

SAMMY'S CALIFORNIA WOOD-FIRED PIZZA 703 Pearl Street, 456-3222. You have a choice of 26 wood-fired pizzas, most with exotic toppings. Many combs here just for the salads: Caesar, chopped salad, Thai chicken salad, or grilled breast of chicken salad with walnuts. Each portion is large enough for two. Half orders are served for most salads. Since the place is always crowded, the service may be frantic. Choose off hours if possible. Same menu lunch and dinner. Continuous service. Open daily, till 11:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Downtown location, 230-8888. Del Mar location, 259-6600. Carlsbad location, 438-1212. Low.

SANTE RISTORANTE 7811 Herschel Avenue, 454-1315. Though this northern Italian restaurant is pricey, the room is soothing and quiet and the pasta dishes outstanding. Tony Buonsante will prepare any pasta you like in any manner you prefer, but don't overlook bread-stick noodles with shiitake mushrooms and sautéed mushrooms. Lunch is a best bet and shouldn't be missed if you are entertaining visitors. Closed Sunday. Lunch Monday through Friday, dinner Monday through Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

THE SHORES RESTAURANT Sea Lodge Hotel, 8110 Camino del Oro. La Jolla Shores, 459-8271. One of the best early bird dinners is located at this oceanfront restaurant. The view is stunning, and the meal's value and good taste will surprise you. For $9.95 you have a two-course fixed-price meal. First course: crab cakes or Caesar salad or corn clam chowder. Entrées: salmon (or lagoon) and service nedi. Open daily, lunch Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

THAI HOUSE OF LA JOLLA 5771 La Jolla Boulevard, 459-6279. The elegant decor matches the gourmet food. Each dish is as beautiful as a picture. There are 74 items on the menu. You can make a meal from appetizers plus one of the curries. Very romantic spot. Lovely owners. Open daily, lunch Monday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Low to upper moderate

TRIANGLES RESTAURANT 4370 La Jolla Village Drive, 453-6050. The California Cuisine menu has been completely revised. Best bets are Norwegian salmon, filet of beef. Or try the $19.95 complete dinner, served Monday through Thursday. Very good food. Low moderate to expensive.

THE GOOD EGG 7947 Balboa Avenue, Kearny Mesa, 565-4244. The menu offers omelets, gourmet pancakes, waffles, and several different kinds of frittatas. Freshly squeezed fruit juices are available, and for lunch there are burgers, salads, and a long list of sandwiches. Good value here. Open approximately 6:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Low.

HSU'S SZECHUAN CUISINE Hazard Village, 5350 F-G Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Kearny Mesa, 279-9799. This restaurant is noted for its hot and spicy Szechuan dishes as well as for its Mandarin specialties. For Mongolian Barbeque, you have a choice of beef, pork, lamb, or turkey with six stir-fried vegetables. Extensive menu with many unusual dishes. Open daily, lunch and dinner. (Mongolian Barbeque is not available Sunday morning.) Low to moderate.

KHYBER PASS 4647 Convoy Street, Empire Square, 571-3749. This Afghan restaurant offers very fine appetizers, tasty entrées, and sandwich specials. Vegetarians will enjoy the appetizers, soup, à la carte vegetable dishes (try the banana squash with garlic-yogurt sauce), and vegetable plates. Tempting lamb, chicken, and rice dishes. Open daily. Lunch and dinner, Monday through Saturday; dinner only Sunday. Lunch, low; dinner, moderate.

MANDARIN WOK 4227 Balboa Avenue, Clairemont, 272-3972. The chef, born in mainland China, has spent years in Korea, Taiwan, and Japan. The fusion of these cuisines provides some interesting accents to basic Mandarin and Szechuan cooking. Try the Yu Chang spicy pork, tung ting shrimp with barbecued pork, and lemon chicken. Huge portions, all visually attractive (two dishes will serve three hungry), and impeccable table settings. Closed Monday. Lunch, Tuesday through Friday; dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Dinner served from noon to closing on weekends. Low to moderate.

THE BEACHES

GUAVA BEACH BAR AND GRILL 3714 Mission Boulevard, Mission Beach, 488-6688. This attractive restaurant serve old-fashioned American delights as well as Mexican items. Be sure to try meat loaf with mashed potatoes, macaroni and cheese (on children's menu), and fresh seafood. Many items are under $7.00, so it's possible to eat inexpensively but well here. Try happy hour bargain items. Dinners nightly, lunch Saturday and Sunday. Low.

HARBOR'S EDGE Sheraton Harbor Island Resort. 1380 Harbor Island Drive (across from airport), 291-2900. The newly refurbished hotel is glittering and so is the restaurant with its stunning bay view. The food is American plus pasta and pizza. Entrées include vegetables and potatoes (some entrées include dessert). Pastries and desserts served from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. in a separate area called the Bakery. Try the desserts called chocolate plate. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, dinner, and Sunday brunch. Low to upper moderate.

HUDSON BAY SEAFOOD 1601 Scott Street, 222-8787. Fresh fish and seafood, burgers, and salads served in room on the dock. Great view and you may eat on the outside deck or inside. Very casual. Best bets: fish and chips and fresh fish sandwiches. Pets welcome on decks. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low.

ISLANDIA BAR AND GRILL Hyatt Islandia Hotel, 1441 Quivera Basin, Mission Beach, 224-1234. Although this American and Continental dining room with its view of the bay is noted for its overwhelming Sunday brunch, the à la carte dinners prepared by the chef are excellent in appearance, taste, and high quality. Fresh fish entrées are especially recommended. Some ideal dishes are lobster bisque soup, fresh crab cakes, pan-seared halibut, salmon filet with poblano pepper sauce. Closed Monday. Dinner Tuesday through Saturday. Cupid's Sunday brunch, fixed-price, all-you-can-eat buffet is one of the most worthwhile in the city. Upper moderate to expensive.

LAMONT STREET GRILL 4445 Lamont Street, Pacific Beach, 270-3060 The best bets here are the entrees, which range from $11.95 to $16.95 and include salad or soup. Most of these are chicken preparations and are accompanied by potatoes and vegetables. Other entrees may be pricey compared to the going rates. Fresh fruit dipped in chocolate is included with the meal. This restaurant boasts an outstanding physical feature: a real fireplace and fire in the brand outdoor patio. It's really romantic. Dinners only, nightly. Moderate.

PALENQUE 1655 Garnet Avenue, Pacific Beach, 272-7816. If you adore La Fonda Robertos in Tijuana, you'll love Palenque. It serves regional dishes from Puebla, Guatrrero, Nuevo León, and Mexico City. All the dishes are quite spicy, so if you prefer fewer chiles, say so before ordering. The best preparations are tortilla soup, pozole (spicy broth with hominy topped with fresh lettuce), tinga poblana (shredded pork with sausage and salsa), machaca (an unusual grilled preparation of sun-dried beef and eggs), and chile relleno topped with fresh tomato sauce. For authentic regional cooking, it's not to be missed. Open daily, lunch Tuesday through Sunday, dinner nightly. Low to moderate.

PIZZERIA UNO 4455 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach, 483-8143. The menu has been expanded and you will now find lots of salads and low-calorie items as well as pizzas. The shift has been to healthier offerings which include pastas with light sauces. Try it. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

PRETZEL ART 4936 Voltaire Street, Ocean Beach, 224-9245. Nine varieties of soft, New York–style bread pretzels — a corn between rolls and bagels — are baked here. Low calorie and virtually fat-free, they are excellent for sandwiches, toast, snacks. Open daily 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Call before you go to be certain of hours.

SHELDON'S CAFE 4711 Mission Bay Drive, Pacific Beach, 273-3633. Although the old favorites are still on hand — chicken-fried steak, fried chicken, old-fashioned croquettes and liver and onions — the menu has been revised toward healthier dining. All vegetables are fresh, more fresh fish appears daily, and the breakfast buffet offers lots of fresh fruit. Menu includes light Mexican items. Breakfast buffet every day. Open daily, 24 hours. Low.

THEE BUNGLOW 4996 West Point Loma Boulevard, Ocean Beach, 224-2884. Located in a charming bungalow with a roaring fireplace, this is one of the landmarks of Ocean Beach. The restaurant offers French/Continental food that's well prepared. Evening special Sunday through Thursday, all evening long, includes soup or salad and entrée, $9.95 to $11.95. This special is also available Friday and Saturday, 5:00 to 5:45 p.m. The regular menu, which features fresh fish, seafood, fowl, and meat, is more costly.

Price of entrées includes soup or salad. Attractive patio. Dinners only, nightly. Early bird special moderate; dinner from the menu, moderate to expensive.

MIDWAY, OLD TOWN & MISSION VALLEY

GEORGIA'S GREEK CUISINE 3550 Rosecrans Street, Grossmor Square Center, 523-1007. This small, immaculate Greek restaurant serves food that will please anyone on a budget. Lunch is an especially good buy — a half chicken with rice and salad is $5.95. All entrees, as well as sandwiches and appetizers, are prepared for takeout. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

NICOLOSI'S 5351 Adobe Falls Road (Waring exit on I-8), 287-5757. Nicolosi's has been serving good pizzas and terrific torpedo sandwiches for decades. The same menu is served for lunch and dinner and it offers old favorites, such as a "pail of pasta" that's enough for at least four people at minimal costs. This is an unpretentious family restaurant that offers good value. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

OLD TOWN MEXICAN CAFE 2489 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 297-4330. This boisterous cafe is noted for its excellent breakfasts, served from opening to closing. Try also the rotisserie-roasted chicken, the carnitas, or the fajitas. Open daily from 7:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m., with the same menu served throughout. Appetizer menus available until the bar closes. Low to moderate.

EAST COUNTY & STATE COLLEGE

BARNES BAR-B-QUE 9725 Campo Road, Spring Valley, 697-3033. Barbecue Memphis-style, with an emphasis on pork sandwiches served with tangy sauce and coleslaw that resembles sauerkraut. Sandwiches are outrageous, but so are ribs, hot links, chicken, and beef brisket. The owner is famous for his sweet potato pie and fruit cobbler. On Fridays, a catfish fry is prepared from catfish filet. Catfish dinner includes salad and French fries for $7.70. Hushpuppies are also available. The restaurant is tiny, but the food for takeout or eating on the premises is delicious. Same menu, opening to closing. Open daily; call for hours. Don't miss this one. Low.

DANSK RESTAURANT 8425 La Mesa Boulevard, La Mesa, 463-0646. Located in a charming lace-curtained cottage, this restaurant prepares elegant Scandinavian food — delights from Sweden and Deamark. Dinners are served Wednesday through Sunday nights and include soup or salad. You have 15 entrées to choose from. Some best choices are pork tenderloin with red cabbage, "Midnight Sun" salmon, Swedish meatballs, and cabbage rolls. Bread and desserts prepared on the premises. Very high quality product. Well worth the trip to La Mesa. Patio available. Closed Monday. Breakfast and lunch, Tuesday through Sunday; dinner, Wednesday through Sunday. Moderate.

KOOTER'S BAR-B-QUE 75 Towne Center Parkway (off Mission Gorge Road), Santee, 562-7402. You'll love the immaculate, cheerful premises, the friendly service, but most of all the barbecue. All-you-can-eat ribs Tuesday nights, $10.99. All-you-can-eat catfish Wednesday, $10.95. Onion-ring loaf and large baked potato also available. Open daily, continuous service lunch and dinner. Low.

LADER'S ITALIAN-CALIFORNIAN RESTAURANT 3654 Lake Murray Boulevard, 463-9919. This charming dining room offers artistic, innovative dishes with hearty recipes from southern Italy and elegant ones from the north. All entrées include soup or salad. Excellent pasta and chicken dishes as well as cuts of lamb, steaks, and chops. Special emphasis on fresh fish and seafood, including crabcakes. Closed Monday. Lunch Tuesday through Friday; dinners Tuesday through Sunday; served very early on Saturday and Sunday. Low to moderate.

LEGGIO'S ITALIAN PIZZA AND DELICATESSEN 1384 North Second Street, El Cajon, 440-2676. The old-fashioned pizza house also prepares superb Italian sandwiches that include Italian roast beef, meatball, sausage, and various combination sandwiches. Pasta dishes with salad and bread have a top price of $5.95. Seating available for 22, or takeout from excellent deli and market. Open daily, continuous service 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Monday and Tuesday, to 10:00 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday. Sunday 11:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Low.

LY'S GARDEN 6011 El Cajon Boulevard, 265-1885. Although the extensive menu offers Chinese as well as Cambodian specials, it's best to order the Cambodian food. Be sure to ask Mr. Ly for suggestions, but the following are surefire hits: fire pot soup, salted shrimp-clams with ginger sauce, hot-and-sour shrimp, and chicken with lemon grass. Live crab and lobster as well as fresh oysters and shrimp available. Continuous service, open daily for lunch and dinner. Low to moderate.

MARIO'S DE LA MESA 8187 Center Street, La Mesa, 461-9390. Located in an industrial area, this restaurant is worth seeking out. The food and value more than make up for the simple dining room. You'll find the best tamales outside of Mexico and amazing shrimp with a green salsa that's incomparable. The soups (which include menudo) are also outstanding and so are the fajitas and chicken and pork mole. For dinner all items are $7.95 or less. Sunday brunch à la carte from $5.95. Huge portions; low costs. Not to be missed. Monday, breakfast and lunch only; Tuesday through Saturday, 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. and Sunday, brunch only, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Low.

SALA THAI 6161 El Cajon Boulevard, Campus Plaza, 229-9050. You will find this Thai restaurant as charming as its owner. The menu is extensive, the service attentive. Try the spicy seafood combination or the Chinese specialties such as won ton soup and fried rice with fresh pineapple. Loving experience and gas-tronomically satisfying. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

VICENTE'S KITCHEN 6315 University Avenue, 287-4443. A small, immaculate, family-run restaurant, it serves excellent barbecue dishes as well as Mexican specialties at amazingly low cost. The barbecue sampler with chicken, pork ribs, beef short ribs, plus beans, rice, salad, and tortillas easily serves two. An all-meat platter called parrillada is available for $12.95. Every item, including the barbecue sauce, is made on the premises. Well worth the trip. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

CENTRAL SAN DIEGO

THE BAKERYMORE 4116 Adams Avenue, Kensington, 281-8021. This stunning restaurant seats only 28. Though the cooking is California Cuisine, you're served whopping amounts. All dinners come with soup or salad. Best bets: filet mignon, Long Island duck, Cornish game hens, fettuccine with chicken breast, lobster penne. Vegetarian dishes available upon request. Excellent spot for party of 28. Open for dinner Tuesday through Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

CHICKEN PIE SHOP OF SAN DIEGO 2633 El Cajon Boulevard, 295-0156 You'll get lots of fried chicken, chicken and turkey pies, mashed potatoes, and desserts for prices that don't seem to have changed much since the shop opened over 30 years ago. It's like the Fourth of July in a small town, and a great bargain. Steaks also available at low cost. Open daily from 10:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. Low.

LITTLE ITALY 4367 University Avenue (at Fairmount Avenue), East San Diego, 281-4949. Spirited calzone and pizzas (old-fashioned style with lots of stuffing and toppings), as well as a bargain dinner for two ($10.99) that includes salad, cheese pizza, lasagne, spaghetti, and garlic bread, make this long-established restaurant worth noting. Simple surroundings, hearty portions. Please note the late closing: 2:00 a.m. daily, which permits insomniacs to have pizza in the middle of the night. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low.

MAMA'S BAKERY AND LEBANESE DELICATESSEN 4212 Alabama Street, Normal Heights (south of El Cajon Boulevard), 688-0717. If you're searching for an unusual light meat or takeout, try the Lebanese sandwiches here. Handmade whole wheat dough is rolled to the size of a small pizza and then filled with the ingredients of your choice: cheese, beef, chicken, or beef. All sandwiches are served hot and are cooked in a dome-shaped Lebanese oven. Excellent tabbouleh. The food is fresh, unusual, and very low in cost. Dining in the patio only. Open Monday 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.; Tuesday to Saturday, 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.; Sunday 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Low.

UPTOWN

BREAD AND CIE 350 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 683-9322. Twenty-one varieties of bread are baked daily in a special 10,000-pound French stone hearth oven. Outrageously good because of the crusty exteriors and density. Among the best are multi-grain, sourdough wheat, and fig-anise. Baguettes are outstanding and should not be missed. The sandwiches are eat-in or take out are spectacular. Don't miss this one. Open daily.

BUSALACCHI'S RISTORANTE 3683 Fifth Avenue, 298-0119. If you like old-fashioned Sicilian-style cooking — tons of tomato sauce, olive oil, and garlic — then try this converted cottage which serves it. Tomato sauce is so prevalent that even the bean-and-pasta soup is flavored with it. Sauces tend to be heavy and rich. Lots of pasta dishes, veal, chicken, and fish. Open daily, Lunch, Monday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.; dinners nightly to 9:45 p.m.; Friday and Saturday to 10:45 p.m. Moderate to expensive.

CHILANGO'S MEXICO CITY GRILL 142 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 294-8646. Looking for a bargain restaurant with very low prices and tasty food? Try Chilango's. Daily specials are posted on a board. Food is served on paper plates with plastic utensils, and every item is available for takeout. There are only about a dozen tables at this storefront, so try to eat at odd hours. Breakfast served from 9:00 a.m. Friday through Sunday. Lunch and dinner daily. Low.

CITY DELICATESSEN 535 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 295-2747. Jewish specialties available here include brisket of beef, chicken-in-the-pot, chopped liver, and a wide variety of sandwiches. Vegetarian items include grilled eggplant sandwich, vegetarian chile, and spinach-lasagne. Breakfast specials for $1.99, early bird dinner for $6.75. The great advantage of City Deli is that it's open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner, to midnight during the week and to 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Low.

CREST CAFE 425 Robinson Avenue, 295-2310. Onion rings served in a loaf, homemade potato chips, chicken, steak, pasta, and a variety of extra-lean charbroiled hamburgers, plus the continuous service from breakfast to late-night keep this cafe crowded. The chicken artrichole salad, the sandwiches, and the breakfast omelets deserve particular attention. Desserts are homemade. Noisy and high-spirited, this cafe is open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner, 7:00 a.m. to midnight. Low.

EL INDIO SHOP 3695 India Street, 299-0333. The shop has an indoor dining area, or you may have the elements (such as they are in San Diego) on benches across the street. You won't be disappointed by the pungent, mouth-watering specialties. The entire menu is available for takeout, as are huge bags of tortilla chips. A good value and very good, inexpensive food. Open daily 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Low.

KUNG FOOD VEGETARIAN RESTAURANT 2949 Fifth Avenue, 295-7302. At breakfast, lunch, and dinner, vegetarian and egg dishes are available that are low in fat, salt, and cholesterol. Many entrees contain dairy products. The good dinner menu includes specialties, pan-grilled vegetables, and spinach/mushroom lasagne. Brunch, Saturday and Sunday, 8:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. L. Sat. 2 and dinner daily. Low to low moderate.

LIAISON 2202 Fourth Avenue (Fourth and Ivy), 234-5540. This French restaurant with its romantic atmosphere offers an a la carte menu and fixed-price meals. Dinners with soup or salad range in price from $10.50 to $18.75. Include $5.00 more for choice of appetizer and dessert. Pleasant food, excellent service. Patio dining, weather permitting. Closed Monday. Open Tuesday through Sunday, dinner only. Low moderate to expensive.

MONSOON 3975 Fifth Avenue (next to the Hillcrest Cinema), 298-3155. This is an interesting vegetarian restaurant. One wall simulates a colorful rain forest and the other is devoted to a steam table that offers soups, salads, curries, and a variety of specialties. For lunch or dinner, the specialties may have Indian influence, others are Mexican or American. Of particular interest are the samosas (a meat pie), curries, pad thai lasagne, and the veggie burger. Indoor and outdoor seating. Open daily. Some menu for lunch and dinner. Low.

SAFFRON 3731-B India Street, 574-0177. Very fine grilled chicken is available for take-out or it may be eaten on benches outdoors. Side dishes such as Cambodian salad (cabbage with prawns) or rice paper stuffed with noodles and vegetables, curried dishes (on Wednesdays), or fried vegetables are also prepared. Excellent healthy product with lots of flavor. Seating outdoors only is limited. Take-out fare popular here. Open daily, with continuous service. Call for exact hours. Low.

THE SECOND CUP 4030 Goldfinch, Mission Hills, 692-3355. The only Romanian restaurant in the city exists in this tiny shop that seats 24 people. The cooking is done by the mother of the owner and it is excellent: wonderful chicken vegetable soup, chicken schnitzel, cabbage rolls, chicken with fresh tomato sauce, and feathery meatballs and goulash. Same menu for lunch and dinner. Dinner is served only Friday night and by appointment. All food may be to go including suede-on-the-premises strudel and chocolate torte. This authentic European café is one of the city's hidden treasures. Closed Sunday and Monday. Breakfast and lunch, Tuesday through Saturday. Dinner Friday and only by appointment (dinner other weeknights, by appointment, for groups of ten or more). Low moderate. (Prices of several-course dinners vary.)

TASTE OF SZECHUAN 4701 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 291-1668. The Mandarin Szechuan menu offers standards with few surprises. But the three best features are the lovely room, the astonishing friendliness of the management, and the late hours. The Peking duck is excellent and so is the chopped chicken in lettuce cups. If you have favorite dishes they will be prepared upon request in advance. Open daily. Continuous service, lunch and dinner. Open to 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday; to midnight Sunday through Thursday. Low to moderate.

DOWNTOWN

CAFE SEVILLA 555 Fourth Avenue, downtown, 233-5979. Funky is the word for the room and the setting. However, the tapas (Spanish appetizers) are robust in taste and high in portion, two of them will satisfy your hunger. Try paella Valenciana (saffron rice with seafood and chicken), shrimp in olive oil and fresh garlic, excellent garlic soup, beans with bacon. Many hot tapas are small versions of the dinner entrees. Fixed-price, three-course meal with flamenco show served downstairs every Friday and Saturday. Dinners only, nightly. Friday and Saturday, dinner served to midnight. Low to expensive.

CEVECERIA SANTA FE 600 West Broadway (Broadway and India). American Plaza Building, 696-0003. Some of the best Mexican fish and seafood is to be found here. Operated by Adrian Romero, the restaurant offers 70 items from which to choose. Food is prepared from authentic Mexican recipes. Try the shrimp, the excellent oysters, the seven-sea soup, the whole fried fish, or the fresh fish filet. You won't find a better place. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner. Low to expensive.

THE CHEESE SHOP 401 G Street, 232-3505. This cafe offers outrageously good sandwiches of which my favorites are the Black Forest ham and the roast pork. Muffins and cookies are based on the premises. Paper plates for food but real mugs for coffee and tea. All items available from 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Saturday. Closed Sunday. Low. Branch in La Jolla, 2165 Avenida de la Playa, La Jolla Shores, 459-3921.

CRAMER'S AT OLD COLUMBIA 1167 Columbia Street (at B), 230-1891. The menu is completely different from that of the Old Columbia Brewery next door (there's no fried food, for example). The interior has been redone and boasts maple floors and tables. Best bets are three cold salads on one plate, healthy-style pizzas, smoked turkey sandwich, vegetarian lasagne, lamb stew, Long and varied menu. Top price $14.95. Closed Sunday. Lunch and dinner, Monday through Friday. Dinner only, Saturday. Low to moderate.

DE MEDICI CUCINA ITALIANA 835 Fifth Avenue, Gaslamp District, 702-7228. You'll find much to enjoy and admire at this restaurant with its 18th-century pictures. You have a choice of 13 pastas. Grilled prawns in their shells (gamberoni) are outstanding. Don't leave without the stuffed crêpe for dessert; it's a work of art. Lunch Monday through Friday. Dinner nightly. To midnight Friday and Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

FIO'S 801 Fifth Avenue (corner of F Street), 234-3467. Northern Italian cooking is served in two stylish dining rooms. Regardless of the hour, Fio's is always crowded. For light meals, your best bet is the pizza bar, where you may order pizza or salad, as well as any other menu item. Daily specials and pastas are recommended. Open for lunch, Monday through Friday. Dinner nightly, to midnight Friday and Saturday. Moderate to expensive.

GRANT GRILL U.S. Grant Hotel, 326 Broadway, 239-6806. The chef, Gunther Ensthinger, does wonders here. Best bets are rack of lamb, Chateaubriand, and nightly fish dishes. Every item appears now and then. Open daily for lunch and dinner; a la carte brunch menu Saturday and Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

LAEL'S RESTAURANT 1531 Garnet Hotel, One Market Street, 687-6066. All-you-can-eat fish-and-seafood buffet, Friday nights only 6:00 to 9:00 p.m., $18.95. All-you-can-eat roast beef buffet, Thursday nights, $12.95. Worth trying for lovers of buffets.

PACHANGA MEXICAN BAR AND GRILL 314 Fifth Avenue (corner of K), Gaslamp District, 235-0345. The name means "happy times," and you'll enjoy this lively restaurant for its dancing instructors mid-week and during weekends as well as for the food. The menu runs to five pages and offers Mexican standards that are fresh, well presented, and fairly priced. Among the best bets are albondigas soup with meatballs, vegetarian fajitas, chicken tamales, carnitas (pork, with all the trimmings). Very crowded weekends. Open daily, lunch, 11:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.; dinner nightly. Food served to 11:00 p.m. and dancing to 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Low to moderate.

7TH NEAR B 1146 Seventh Avenue, 696-7071. Susan Garrett, who operates this establishment, is wonderful to talk to, and she stocks papers and magazines from Denver as well as from dozens of cities across the United States. Among the goodies are tuske, with herb butter on a roll, focaccia bread with pesto or herb-butter, fresh fruit pies, bagels, muffins, pastries, coffee, and tea. Open Monday to Friday, 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.; Saturday, 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Closed Sunday. Smoking at outdoor seating. Low.

STAR OF INDIA 423 F Street, 544-9891. This Indian restaurant is most popular for the all-you-can-eat buffet, available weekdays from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from noon to 3:00 p.m. The weekend brunch costs a dollar more ($8.95) but includes champagne. Vegetarians should make note of the many vegetable and rice dishes with innovative preparations. Restful atmosphere, good service. Be aware that breads are a la carte and the costs may mount if you aren't careful. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to upper moderate.

SOUTH BAY & CORONADO

AZZURA POINT Loews Coronado Bay Resort, 4000 Coronado Bay Road, Coronado, 424-4000. Chef James Povce (from Le Cirque in New York) changes the menu occasionally. The restaurant boasts several fish and seafood entrees, all surprising. Beef and chicken also available as are old favorites: egg rolls and Chinese-style smoked lobster. Don't overlook swordfish wrapped in bacon. Arrive early to enjoy bay view. Open dinner only, nightly. Expensive.

BARRIO FIESTA OF MANILA 1510-D Sweetwater Road, Town & Country Shopping Center, National City, 474-0177. This is the mother of all Filipino restaurants. It serves authentic preparations in a beautifully appointed room that resembles a garden. If you like the exotic, try squid in garlic sauce, crispy pata (a deep-fried pig's knuckle), or kare-kare, a meat stew with peanut sauce. If you want to eat more conservatively, order crispy chicken, beef Tagalog, or possibly milkfish. Don't overlook the noodle and rice dishes and the lumpia. Many dishes prepared family style for three or four people. Open daily, continuous service, lunch and dinner; same menu all meals. Low to moderate.

CROWN ROOM, HOTEL DEL CORONADO 1500 Orange Avenue, Coronado, 435-6611, ext. 7284. A sunset dinner, called menu du jour, is served from 5:00 to 6:15 p.m. for $17.95, Monday through Saturday, and is worth noting. It includes soup or salad, choice of three entrées, dessert, and coffee. The food is competent. The regular menu offers Continental specialties. The Crown Room is still noted for its lavish all-you-can-eat Sunday brunch. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Expensive.

MARIUS Le Meridien Hotel, 2000 Second Street, Coronado, 435-3000. Open for dinner only, this gourmet room offers French Provençal cuisine served in elegant surroundings. Marius has fixed-price meals for $39.00, $45.03, and $56.00. Closed Sunday and Monday; open Tuesday through Saturday. Expensive.

TIJUANA

(The prefix for all Tijuana numbers is 011-52-66. From the United States use the prefix 011-52-66 when calling Tijuana, when calling in Tijuana use only the restaurant's six-digit number.)

EL TAURINO 7531 Sixth Street (off Revolución), 83-39-75. Located in the heart of the old section of Tijuana, three blocks west of Revolución, this restaurant will provide superb value in an excellent setting. Basically a steak house, it also offers fish, seafood, and fowl. The price of the entrée includes grilled pasta, soup or salad, and mammoth amounts of the main course. Almost everyone orders carnitas, or try empapelado, fish and shrimp soaked in silver foil. Superb service. The menu is printed in Spanish and English, and the maitre d' speaks perfect English. First-rate bargain for high quality. Open daily 11:00 a.m. to midnight. Continuous service. Low to moderate except for lobster.

LA COSTA 4131 Gateana (Seventh Street between Revolución and Constitución), 85-54-94 or 85-31-24. An extensive menu, consistently fresh product, and huge portions have made La Costa the reigning seafood house for Americans. Identical lunch and dinner menu offer lobster, shrimp, grilled fish, fish with sauces, squid, abalone, and oysters, all in a variety of preparations. Price of entrées includes soup, salad, rice, dessert, beverage, and after-dinner drink. Almost always crowded. Open daily from 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. to midnight Friday through Sunday. Moderate to expensive.

LA LENA 11191 Blvd. Agua Caliente, 80-29-20. The most fastidious American would feel comfortable here because of the charming room, the open grill, and the tortilla maker who prepares fresh tortillas as the diners are seated. Diners come with an appetizer and soup, and some of the entrées are extraordinary. Try the puerco ("fat") prepared from marinated beef that's roasted and combined with bacon, large grilled green onions, and melted cheese, and served with hot tortillas. Roasted quail and chicken are also first-rate. Open daily, lunch to late dinner. Take Revolución to the left-hand bend where it becomes Agua Caliente. Continue on the twin high-rise towers of the Fiesta Americana. A large sign marks the restaurant on the right side of the road). Low to moderate.

YOUR DE FRANCE Gobernador Ibarra 252 (past the Rio section), 81-75-42. This French restaurant will provide you with wonderful food, incredible service, and an extensive menu printed in French, Spanish, and English. The presentation, preparation, and quality of the food are first-rate, from the escargots in puff pastry to the salmon in olive sauce, the duck in garlic and honey sauce to the finest steaks. Don't miss the desserts, especially chestnut soufflé. Closed Sunday. Open daily 8:00 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. weekdays and to 11:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Reservations on weekends a must. Phone for directions. Moderate to expensive.

OFF THE CUFF by Greg Lay

Why are people embarrassed about religion?

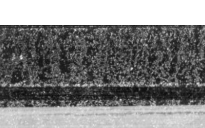

Wann Gamble
Student
Hillcrest

I think people are very embarrassed. I do talk about religion because it's along the lines of it's hard to talk about other people's beliefs and desires and who they are praying to and what they believe in without bringing up your own and then feeling ashamed about your own. We live in such a society where everybody's beliefs are supposed to be legitimate, that when you come across someone really kooky, you don't feel like putting them down for their beliefs. So I think it is always an embarrassing subject. You don't want to bring it up yourself because faith is based on faith. It's embarrassing sometimes the things that you may believe. You always have to start up a conversation about religion with, "Well I know not everybody believes this, but here's what I think...." So it's so based on faith that people get embarrassed if there's something way out there that they believe. It's hard to talk about something way out. The other part of it is that society is so secular now that you're almost a throwback to the Middle Ages if you start talking about religion. That's probably about 50 percent of it.

They don't know about the church. I teach no classes about religion. I don't know why. You know religions try, "You can't do this, you can't do that." Sometimes people just don't believe in God. I think that's what it is because they can't do this, they can't do that, so they really don't care too much about religion. My thoughts is I can't be embarrassed no matter what. But I'll talk about it. I like to hear what people think. I was at this church, one of the ex's that ask you to share your faith with people and they wanted me to talk to this person who looked like he didn't care about God, so I talked to him and he was like, "Yeah, yeah, that's good but I don't want to trust in God." Some people think that people into religion are kind of screwed up; so I think that's the number one reason. They think that we don't deal with life but that we only care about our religion. They think that we want to shave our hair off—I'll wear crazy clothes. Me too. Sometimes I see religious people and I think they're screwed up, because I go to church and the things they say and do, I say, "No, that doesn't sound right."

Frieda Kennedy

Hillcrest

I'm not religious. A lot of people are. I don't know why I am and then they're embarrassed because there's a part of them that thinks that they should be religious and they're embarrassed to say, "Well, I'm not religious." People who are religious are embarrassed because they don't do as much as they think they should do. Like they don't go to church as often and they don't involve themselves in community issues often. If they don't help people that often—which is what most religions say that you should do—underneath they say they are religious but they don't do the things that hold up religion. That can embarrass them. I've been a little embarrassed, I suppose, to say, "Well, that's not really what I believe" and then you have to get into this big conversation, "What do you mean, you don't believe in God?" "I don't know. I believe there may be. But I wouldn't say that I absolutely believe that there's this almighty person up there." Mainly that I just don't want to get into a conversation with someone who is really religious. I get embarrassed by maybe the strength of their belief and trying to make me believe that way. I get embarrassed more for them actually. "Sorry I don't believe that."

Someone would have to be living in solitude from a technological society for believing in what doesn't submit to measurement and scientific utility. Scientists seek to understand nature quantitatively and depend upon the probable certainty of empiricism. Technicians also depend on that same probability in order to manipulate that understanding for refining one's immediate discomfort. In today's instantly gratified culture of "self" it is not surprising to see these guys ostracized. But why is someone who seeks to transcend all this so often ridiculed? I think the reason why is because of the common misconception that empirical science is morality each. one of the supernatural. To someone determined to maintain a self-absorbed culture, blessed by science and technology with countless products of pleasure, comfort, and leisure, such a misconception quickly turns religion and God into a cultural threat. But the idea that science and religion are mutually exclusive is wrong. To me the real conflict is between either acknowledging a being beyond our comprehension or believing man to be the master manipulator of reality. Can we truly comprehend—let along replicate—the Big Bang?

There are several reasons why I do. I think people are embarrassed about religion. Religion is the door to the soul. When asked about it people feel that you are prying into a very personal subject, especially if they aren't sure if you share their beliefs. This tends to make religion a bit embarrassing. Another reason is that many people there days look down on religion and consider people with faith to be foolish. They say, "How can you believe in a God that you can't even see?" or, "How can there be a God if there is so much evil in the world?" When you hear questions like these most people would clam up and want to keep their religion to themselves. Often someone admits to their religion it is like saying "I love you" to God. Now everyone knows that it isn't easy to say this, especially with somebody else looking on. All these things combine to make people embarrassed about religion. But you still have get to deal with your embarrassment an I overcome it.

THE READER PUZZLE by Don Rubin

#911 Eye Cues

We're reading a message written in big block letters, but all you can see is our eyes.

Take the first few eye cues: lower right, middle right, top right, top left, middle left, middle right. That's the letter P. (It would be backwards, remember.)

We'll blink between letters.

RULES OF THE GAME

1. The prize for solving the Reader Puzzle will be a Reader T-shirt.
2. All entries in the Reader Puzzle contest must be received by the Reader (addressed to Reader Puzzle, P.O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803) by 9:00 a.m., Wednesday, six days following the issue date.
3. All entries must be accompanied by your name, address, and shirt size S, M, L, XL.
4. Employees of the Reader and their immediate families are not eligible.
5. In the event of disputes or ties, decisions of the judges will be final and arbitrary. We've only got five prizes each week to give away, so if there are more than five winners, we'll have a lottery.
6. All answers must be entered in the space allowed on the puzzle page. And please, no phone calls or trips to our office.
7. One entry per person.

Picture Story

by the San Diego Historical Society

Judge Jacob Weinberger, seen here in a 1946 photo, was San Diego's first federal district court judge. Appointed to the post by President Harry Truman, Weinberger was so renowned for his fairness and legal acumen that his name now graces the portico of the federal bankruptcy courthouse in downtown San Diego. The judge is also known for his co-authorship of Arizona's fledgling state constitution in 1912; in 1962, as the constitution's sole surviving coauthor, he addressed the Arizona Senate on that state's 50th anniversary.

Weinberger was born in Hungary in 1882 and emigrated to the United States at age seven. Originally a member of the Colorado state bar (admitted in 1904), Weinberger moved to San Diego in 1911 and cofounded the respected firm of Weinberger & Miller. After being appointed to the federal bench, Weinberger claimed that his greatest joy was presiding over American citizenship ceremonies: during his storied career, the judge witnessed some 16,000 new citizens leave his courtroom. He died in 1974.

WOMEN SEEKING MEN

READER PHONE MATCHES TIPS: We want you to enjoy meeting others through Phone Matches, so we encourage you to follow these common-sense reminders: 1) Take the time to conduct a phone interview before scheduling a personal meeting. Is the person similar to or compatible with you? 2) Consider asking for information and check them out. Prudent employers do it. You can, too. 3) When meeting the person for the first time, do so in a public, well-lit place. Let someone know where you'll be. 4) Finally, be honest, have fun, and trust your intuition!

I've cheated.
I still love
the way I look and feel with a tan, but I want to care for my skin too.

I've been around and have tanned on tanning beds. They were much nicer than the sun, but I still wanted a faster, better, longer lasting tan.

My affair
always Tan Tanning Resorts' incredible "Ultrabronz" sunbeds is now a permanent relationship.

I was tan in just 3 sessions and I only go back twice a month to always look fabulous. The "Ultrabronz" beds filter out the drying, harmful burning rays so my skin loves it too.

Don't be jealous. Call ...

Kid Stuff

I don't trust anyone. I assume that if I leave my purse sitting on the front seat of my car when I go into the convenience store, a slick-talking, smooth-as-silk con artist will steal the purse. I keep the purse under the front seat. I keep the doors locked. When I grocery shop with my 3-year-old Rebecca and 15-month-old Angela, I put my diaper bag with my wallet and checkbook in the bottom of the cart. I cover the wallet with a spit rag and a ZipLoc bag full of Rice Chex so no one can reach in and swipe the wallet when I'm grabbing Pampers off the bottom shelf.

But even I was shocked when two little girls tried to steal my money at the park last Sunday. For the last four months, Rebecca has been hounding me to go on a picnic. Sunday afternoon, I finally gave in. While dusty late afternoon sunlight filtered through the kitchen louvers, my husband, Jack, packed tuna sandwiches, Fritos, and a cold fruit salad of strawberries, cantaloupe, and grapes into Tupperware containers. I chopped ham into tiny cubes for Angela. Rebecca pranced around the kitchen doing a happy dance. Angela tried to imitate her. After watching Rebecca twirl around two or three times, Angela started her own slow, unsteady circles. She made it around three times before she became dizzy and slammed into the refrigerator door. Rebecca laughed.

I looked up from the ham, "Are you okay?"

Angela gazed at me for a moment then started circling again. She laughed with Rebecca.

When we finished packing the food, Jack loaded the car. I checked the diaper bag to make sure I had my wallet, Angela's diapers and wipes, and juice for both girls.

At the park, we set out our dinner on a round picnic table on the grass near the sandy playground. Jack hooked Angela's portable highchair onto the cement table, and Rebecca climbed up onto the curved cement bench. Angela licked her chubby legs and stuffed fistfuls of ham into her mouth. The mayonnaisey tuna sandwiches, salty Fritos, and cold, sweet fruit salad tasted like a gourmet feast in the now-cool evening air.

Across the grass from our table, a woman and three girls played with a black-and-white puppy. The puppy looked like a Husky mix, with a long, white nose and long, gangbuilding black legs. Angela twisted in her highchair and pointed at the puppy. "Whuhh, whuhh, whuhh," Angela pretended to bark.

One girl had my wallet in one hand and my cash in the other.

"That's right," Jack told her. "That's the sound a doggy makes."

"Whuhh, whuhh, whuhh," Angela kept pointing.

"Do you want to go see the doggy?" Jack asked.

"Please, Daddy, can we go see the doggy?" Rebecca asked.

"Sure." Jack lifted Angela from her highchair while I wiped Rebecca's face and hands. "Let's all go see the doggy."

"I'll clean up a little bit first," I told Jack. "You guys go ahead." I watched Angela and Jack run after Rebecca, their long shadows rippling across the grass.

"Do you think our stuff will be okay?" Jack called back to me.

"Sure," I answered. "I'll keep an eye on the table. We won't be that far away."

After I threw away the trash, I piled our leftover food in the center of the table. I buried the diaper bag under our sweatshirts and followed Jack and the girls across the grass. Jack, Rebecca, and Angela crouched together while the woman held the puppy still. "You can pet her," the woman said. "She's really good with children." Rebecca reached out a tentative hand and stroked the puppy's silky black-and-white neck. The puppy flopped over onto his back and licked Rebecca's hand with his dripping, pink tongue.

When I reached the group, two of the girls with the woman broke away and ran toward the playground. They didn't look much older than Rebecca, maybe five or six. As they ran across the grass, they held hands and giggled.

I crouched next to Rebecca. Jack held Angela's hand out toward the puppy. When the puppy licked Angela's fingers, Angela turned and clung to Jack's neck. I turned to look at our table. The two little girls marched atop the cement benches, making circles around our stuff. While I watched, one girl jumped up on the table and lifted the sweatshirts off the diaper bag. I stood up and ran back to the table.

By the time I reached them, both girls sat on the table. One girl had my wallet in one hand and my cash in the other. She looked up when I approached. "Oh," she looked surprised, "is this yours?"

"Yes, it is."

The little girl with the money set the wallet and the cash on top of the diaper bag. The other little girl said, "We were just wondering whose it was."

"Don't you girls know you should never take someone else's money?" I asked. "It's called stealing. And it's very wrong."

The girls jumped off the table and ran laughing toward the swings. I put my money back in the wallet and sat down on the bench. I was too shocked to say anything else.
