Roben: The deleted word in my ad was "callipygous." It means "firm and shapely buttock." I thought it would insure that whoever read it and responded would have a sense of humor and be intelligent enough to look something up in the dictionary.

Martha: The "outdoorsy" word caught me. And I liked all the activities he listed. Beards interest me, and so do scientists.

Robert: Martha says if she had seen the original version, she probably wouldn't have called. Thank goodness you have editors there.

Robert: I'm an early riser. What else am I going to do?

Martha: I had moved to California nine months before we met with the idea of doing the singles ads once I got here. So I answered a couple of ads and went out with another engineer. In fact ne was a stress analyst, like Robert.

Martha: The very first time we met was on Little Black Hill in Rancho Bernardo. I was supposed to watch Robert and his buddies go paragliding. But one of Robert's friends was an instructor, and the next thing I knew I was flying off the 300-foot hill.

Robert: Then I discovered that she can outski me in her

Martha: We continued to paraglide and ski and fiddle around with boats. Although a lot of our dates were at Home Depot.

Robert: We even thought about getting married there. Instead we put some grass in the backyard and got married overlooking the ocean. It was pretty dramatic. Especially when a friend of ours paraglided off one of the cliffs.

Martha: The wedding was on November 11. We still have leftovers in the freezer. Neither of us had been married before, and now we're newlyweds.

Robert: We've encouraged some of our single friends to advertise in Phone Matches', and several of them are alvarious stages of trying it. I started out by looking at the women's ads, but then I remembered the time I tred to buy an engine lather through the newspaper; it would always be gone by the time I called. "At night, lobsters come out of their caves and sit on top of the rocks. If you dive n with a flashlight, you tentacles. The tentacles cast a inches ahead of the lobste and shine your flashlight right in front of him. Lobst are heat sensitive. One of the ways they get their prey is by sensing their heat. When you put the flashlight right in front of the lobster, he backs away. Then you put your other hand behind him and grab him behind his legs. You have to be careful not to grab too close to the tail, though. The lobster will snap his tail to try to swim away. He has hooks under his tail that will go through your leather glove and cut your hand."

If you're like me, diving into a cold, black ocean clutching a flashlight has the same appeal as collecting same appeal as collecting body parts in an alligator-and snake-infested Florida swamp. There is an easier way to find out what lobsters do at night. July 15 and 16, the Stephen Birch Aquarium-Museum offers "Asleep in the Deep." I would not, however, want to ness, its atavism, its primitivism. Film, as we have all been instructed but haven't all yet learned, is a visual medium, and the scale of these otherworldly spacecraft (dwarfing the twinkling Christmans decoration at the end of Close Encounters of the Third Kind'i in relation to the stubby Manhattan skyscrapers and the gnatlike Marine Corps fighter jets is something quite new. The only thing close to it in terms of jaw-dropping awe is per-haps the nebulous menace advancing toward Earth in the original Star Trek, a much better movie, incidentelly, as measured in its ability to complement the awe with elements like suspense, mystification, curiosity, surprise.

Navy NC flying "boat" drifts forlornly in A Navy NC flying boat drifts folioffly in the Pacific Ocean in this 1920 photo. The plane — the NC-5 — was part of a flying armada of 12 F-5-Ls and two NC boats that had taken off from San Diego Bay on a 7000-mile round-trip journey to the Panama Canal Zone. Although the F-5-Ls arrived in Balboa Heights, Panama, in an impressive battle formation, neither of the NCs survived the trip.

While the NC-6, her hull leaking badly, had taxied to shore north of a landmark known as "San Juan del Sur," the NC-5 met her end in the high seas pictured above. After some cursory salvage efforts, the NC-5 met a particularly ignoble end: she was sunk by gunfire in order to clear the shipping lanes.
