Sources say Copley expected the same fawning respect she had always gotten when she called Wilson to advise him of her wishes.

Friday afternoon in late August, a week after Wilson pulled out of the presidential race. John Davies picked up the phone and arranged a conference call with selected reporters — none from the Copley papers — to announce the results of his "investigation" into Maidgate. A few weeks after the scandal had broken that April, Wilson, claiming lack of knowledge, assigned Davies to look into the matter of how the maid had been placed on the Wilsons' household payroll and whether she was working in the country illegally. Davies's findings became the campaign's epitaph and launched an orgy of speculation among San Diego politics and media watchers.

The maid, reported Davies, had been referred to the Walsons by Neil Morgan's wife. The legality of her work status was still not known, said Davies. He said Wilson's exwife Betty had handled all of the other details and kept Wilson in the dark. The case, he added, was closed. When Government attention final-by did apply some serious heat to J. August 6, 1968, must have been one of the hap-pier days in the long life of C. Arnhold Smith. It was the second day of that year's Republican national convention, held in Mami. At a dele-gates' reception, Smith and his wife were unb-ered to the front of the line where Pat and Dick. Nison were to greet some 5500 well-wishers. The Smi Diego business tycoon got hearty hand-shakes from the First-Couple to the, the San' shakes from the Pirst-Couple-to-Be, the Sam Diego Union gushed the next day, while Mrs. Smith received kisses. That Wall Street Journal article would be the first signi article would be the first significant public warning that something within Smith's financial kingdom was rotten. Under the headline "Self-Dealing Tycoon — How a Californian Uses Publicly Owned Firms to Aid Private Ventures," it presented evidence that Smith "and certain earliers." presented evidence simith "and certain relatives and associates" in escence were looting the publicly owned Westgate-California and U.S. National Bank.

National Bank.
Here's one example as described by the Journal article:
Smith in 1956 had invested $25,000 to start a small Arizona insurance firm that he later transferred to a subsidiary wned by him and some fam owned by him and some family members. In 1963 this sub-sidiary sold the insurance com-pany for $610,000 to another subsidiary owned by Smith's brother John. Just months later, John's firm sold the company to the Westgate-California Corporation for $1,260,000. Arnholt told the 51,260,300. Arrholt told the journal's reporter that "there must have been something" to account for the jump in price, but he didn't elaborate upon what that might have been. The article recounted several other shady-sounding deals that Smith also failed to explain in print. But at the annual meeting of the Westgate-California's Corporation's stockholders — which had been scheduled for the day after the scheduled for the day after the Journal article ran — Smith was urbane and confident. The price of Westgate's stock had declined, he suggested, not because corporate funds were being used to pay inflated prices for properties held by him and other corporate insid-ers, but because "not enough people are aware of the stock's) intrinsic value" and "there's not enough retailing of [it]."

but serious damage had already been done. Later in 1971, both the Federal Bureau of Inves-and Exchange Commission quietly began probing into Smith's affairs. In early 1972, Smith fired Touche, Ross & Co., successors to Haskins & Sells. Once again, "[W]e were unhappy with the type of footnotes they put together," Smith was quoted as saying.

(The Westgate-California

Corp. reported a net loss of $2,621,000 for 1971.) Smith faced worse publicity in March of 1972, when a Life magazine article titled "Tampering with Justice in San Diego" accused some of Smith's government connections with shielding him and two friends (John Alessio and Frank Curran) from prosecution for a num-

Lightning finally struck in June of 1973, when the SEC filed a 31-page civil lawsuit against Smith, asking that the industrialist be barred from ever serving as an officer of any public company. Although the details of the suit were eyecrossing in their complexity, the central thrust was that Smith and his lieutenants had engaged in a massive fraud, manipulating the assets of Westgate-California and the U.S. National Bank to enrich themselves.

Scorching charges from other sectors soon followed.

The news emerged that the U.S. Comptroller of the Cur rency had issued a cease and give up his bank posts and dis-engage from USNB's operations. In October of 1973, the U.S. comptroller declared the bank to be insolvent. (Crocker National Bank took over branch operations, while the Federal Deposit Insurance Corpora tion got $420 million in loans that USNB had made to companies owned or con-trolled by Smith.) A blizzard of civil suits against Smith and/or his holdings ensued. And then in November of 1973, the Internal Revenue Service filed a $22.8 million civil tax assessment against Smith, the largest income tax claim (up to that time) ever made against an individual for

made against an individual for a single year.

The thick batch of newspa-per clips on C. Arnholt Smith filed in the central library's California Room are messy, densely written, decaying — an apt record of a disheveled, deca-dent period. The inky headlines still shout, "USNB stockholders file new suit against Smith,"
"Smith enters plea in funds "Smith enters plea in funds case." "FDIC sues directors in USNB failure," "Smith faces new counts of theft, tax eva-sion," on and on through a couple of inches of tanned and crumbling newsprint. THE AYATOLLAH OF REAGANOMICS

People in This Town Took Her Seriously

It seems like only yesterday that San Diego was filled with legions of men and women who drove thashy cars adorned with "Prosperity, Your Divine Right" bumper stickers. These people had bright, locid, rabbit eyes and evinced toward all things, a fanatical optimism. They were the Hezbollah of

There had, of course, been indications from the very beginning that Whittaker was more opportunist than evangelist. But none of these eminent modern sculptors, with all their cleverness, boldess, sensuality, and construness, sensuality, and construc-tive power, actually makes us see a creature who might be alive, who might, after a sudden magical transformation, shake itself, give a whinny, and amble gate. But a figural subject made of identifiable objects belonging to other areas of existence necessarily produces an aesthetic effect different from that of a statue made out of marble. One of the chief aesthetic effects of Butterfield's scrap-metal horses is precisely the incongruity of subject and medium. The typical product of modern civ itization is the detritus of manufacturing, the junk that is left over when a machine has become obsolete, when a factory has been abandoned, when the demolition experts have at-

That But-terfield transforms this ugly, lifeless, mechanical stuff into the living substance of a species that has been on earth for millions of years (and in amiable association with human beings for some 6000 of those) has to be perceived as an act of spir-itual revolution, a radical reformation of modern mater alistic values in favor of en during attachments to the earth and its life. It is no surprise tha Butterfield lives on a Montana
