Refuge for Canaries in the Mine

by Bill Mazer

Where do you find a refuge from the 20th Century? Down a dusty drive in the hilly backwoods of Petenjo, about 40 miles out of San Diego. We seek out the home of Barbara and Pauline Johnson and find them with their children, Peter, 10, and Mark, 6, and their mother, who made the journey with them. The Johnsons are the owners of an old mission, the San Diego Mission, which was burned in 1824 and never rebuilt. They have spent many years restoring it, and now they live there with their children. The Johnsons are trying to preserve the mission's history and culture, and they have opened it to the public. The children love living there, and they get to see many different animals, such as birds and flowers. They also get to learn about the history of the mission and how it was once a place of worship. They are proud of their heritage and hope to share it with others.
“We’re finally coming out.”

"At discreet private parties, attended by re- nalable men of a generation and prominence that keeps them in the closet, Andrew Cunanan was a regular," wrote the Philadelphia Inquirer. "The San Diego gay community can be partic- ularly secretive, even from the inside. Gay mili- men and women based in San Diego fear their careers will be destroyed if they are dis- covered, and so they retire to political circles."

As a result, news of a murder scandal in the gay community has been shrouded in mystery, and the investigation has been hampered by the lack of cooperation from witnesses and victims. When the Carrillo family was contacted by the FBI, they were told that the murder was a case of self-defense. However, the family was skeptical and demanded to speak to the investigating agents in person. They were informed that the agents were not available and that the investigation would continue at a later date.

"The Carrillo family is determined to get to the bottom of this case," said a family member. "We have no intention of letting this go unpunished. We want justice for our son, and we want to know the truth about what happened."

Take Every Critic with a Grain of Salt

Musicians like to play these pieces, because they pose such great technical challenges.

A conductor decides to go hear the violin and piano by Bartok, the piece being the main event. The conductor is interested in what the musicians will do with the piece, but also in what the audience will think of it. The conductor goes to the concert, and listens attentively. When the performance is over, the conductor approaches the musicians and asks, "How did you think it went?" The musicians reply, "It was great!" The conductor smiles and says, "We did a good job," and the musicians nod in agreement.

Later, the conductor writes a review for the newspaper. In the review, he says, "The musicians did a great job with the Bartok piece. The technical challenges were well handled, and the musicians showed great technical skill. Overall, it was a wonderful performance."

Shadow Puppets in Their Tent

The border guard seemed satisfied with Jim's claim of having only "mucho beer."

On April 28, 27 44 at 8:29 p.m. by a small group of four people, Shadow Puppets Tent was founded on the boardwalk.

A few seconds later, they began their performance. Shadow Puppets Tent is a small group of people who perform with shadow puppets.

They are known for their unique and creative performances, often incorporating local history and culture into their shows.

The Shadow Puppets Tent is located on the boardwalk and is a popular attraction for visitors.

Their shows are performed in a small tent and are free to the public.

The Shadow Puppets Tent is a great place to see a unique and entertaining performance.
