The possible taxpayers liability for the stadium seats at $1 million a year.

Officials from City Manager Jack McGarr and some have argued that the seats would practically sell themselves, and if they didn't, the Sports Council had spent $10 million dollars to sell them. It's generally assumed that the Sports Council would make its services available for free, but a contract signed two weeks ago between the City and the council is casting serious doubts on that assumption.

The regular season contract, dated Mar 15, calls for the city to pay the sports association $15,000 to just fine week of service, ending
Greer Grabs for Pension

By Matt Peters

February 14, when ex-superior court judge Michael Greer stood before a federal judge for sentencing on the bribery charges he had paid to a secret source in the 1980s, he was a free man. The day was set aside specifically to address the case of the former judge, who had pleaded guilty to accepting bribes in exchange for favorable rulings. He had been sentenced to 18 months in prison, already served, and was due to be released that day. The judge, who had been a respected jurist, was now facing the consequences of his misdeeds. The case was a blow to the public's trust in the institution of justice.

Dog Eat Dog

By Chrissie Mora

His name is "Scat." Sounds like the name for an annoying cat, but Scat is a dual champion Shetland sheepdog. Not only was he deemed worthy of the title by a national judge, but he was also named Best in Show at the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show. The event is one of the most prestigious dog shows in the world, attracting thousands of entries from around the country. Scat, with his distinctive coat and striking eyes, captured the attention of the judges and the audience alike. It was a moment of triumph for his owner, who had worked tirelessly to train and groom Scat for this opportunity.

Home health care renews old debate over AIDS verdict. On Tuesday, a Manhattan federal court jury ordered Maimonides Hospital in Brooklyn to pay $500,000 to a former nurse who contracted AIDS from a patient at the hospital.

The nurse was infected with AIDS in 1980, before the disease was known, when she was giving an AIDS patient a blood transfusion. She was later diagnosed with AIDS in 1985.

The verdict comes in a lawsuit brought by the nurse, who accused the hospital of negligence in not providing adequate protection for its staff.

The hospital had argued that the patient was not infected with AIDS when he received the blood transfusion, and that the nurse had not followed proper procedures.

The jury disagreed, finding that the hospital was negligent and that the nurse had been infected as a result.

The nurse's lawyer, Michael A. Williams, said he was pleased with the verdict.

"We're very happy with the result," said Williams. "We knew from the beginning that the hospital was responsible."

The hospital plans to appeal the verdict.

"We're disappointed with the decision," said a hospital spokesman. "We're going to appeal this to the highest court available."

The jury was composed of seven women and five men, and took about three hours to reach its verdict.

The nurse, who was among the first to become infected with AIDS, has been living with the disease for 19 years.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP
BY MATTHEW ALICE

Dear Mom,

I know you're-series to go to L.A. on the 14th of July and I'm sure you're perfecting your barbecue sauce and planning the fireworks. I'm sure you're also looking forward to seeing the movie. But what about me? I'm going to L.A. on the 14th of July. I mean, seriously, what better way to spend your holiday than to go to L.A. and watch a movie? Honestly, Mom, you should be ashamed of yourself.

And here's where SportsTrax comes in. With SportsTrax, you can catch the game, even when you're at home. It's like having a personal sports analyst in your pocket. All you have to do is turn on the TV and SportsTrax will do the rest. It's like having a personal sports analyst in your pocket. All you have to do is turn on the TV and SportsTrax will do the rest.

"It clearly demonstrates that the City, as one would expect, doesn't know what it's doing."

CHARGE IT TO THE TAXPAYERS

Last week, according to news reports, the San Francisco Sports Council attempted to sell a $100 million sports complex, which the agency says would repay itself in four years. The project was supposed to include a sports stadium and a convention center, but the council failed to attract investors.

The complex would also have included a hotel and retail space. It has been estimated that the project could create 2,000 jobs and generate up to $180 million in annual revenue.

The Sports Council has been supported by local politicians, including the mayor, who has said that the project would be beneficial to the city. However, the council has struggled to secure funding from private investors.

Despite the lack of interest from potential investors, the council has continued to push for the project. Recently, the council announced that it would seek funding from the state and federal government.

"The council has been trying to sell the project for years," said one city council member. "They keep going back to the same investors and hoping that someone will finally take a chance."

Meet Yxta Maya Murray
Barnes & Noble in Mission Valley
7610 Hazard Center Drive
Tonight, 7:30 - 9:30 PM

"The Book," a novel by Yxta Maya Murray, delves into the complex world of the indigenous peoples of the Americas. Murray's powerful narrative explores themes of identity, family, and the struggle for cultural preservation. Set against the backdrop of the 20th century, "The Book" follows the lives of several generations of a single family as they grapple with the challenges of modernity and tradition.

Yxta Maya Murray is a member of the Huichol Indian community and a renowned writer and activist. Her work has been celebrated for its rich cultural content and its ability to bridge the gap between the traditional and the contemporary. "The Book" is a testament to Murray's commitment to preserving the heritage of her people and to sharing their stories with a wider audience.

The Moors' Revenge

A lot of color, a lot of vigor, a sense of listening to living music from a living tradition...

The San Diego Early Music Society concluded their successful season with the second of two final concerts at the St. Vincent de Paul Church, La Jolla, on June 7th. The spring concerts of the Society included two of the best known groups of Europe, the Bampton Morris Men, who performed in the U.S. for the first time, and the Malvern Morris Men, who have appeared in this country before. The audience was treated to a fine display of traditional English dance and song, with some interesting costumes and lively music.

The concert was well received by the audience, who were enthusiastic about the performance. The music was performed with great precision and skill, and the audience was treated to a variety of dances, both traditional and modern, performed by the groups.

The highlight of the evening was the performance of the Bampton Morris Men, who were able to captivate the audience with their lively and compelling dances. The group was well received by the audience, who were impressed by their skill and enthusiasm.

Overall, the concert was a great success, and the audience was treated to a wonderful display of traditional English dance and song. The San Diego Early Music Society is to be congratulated on a wonderful season, and we look forward to their future performances.
The Audience Is the Enemy

This isn't teaching; it's Darwinian selection.

In the early 1970s, the fascinating English writer and director Harold Pinter conducted numerous talks at the Juilliard School of Music, becoming something of a cult figure. Now, his words have been compiled into a book titled "The Audience Is the Enemy," which has recently been released. In this book, Pinter explores the dynamics of audience involvement and the ways in which it influences performances.

Pinter's philosophy is centered around the idea that the audience is not a passive element in a performance but rather an active participant in it. He argues that the audience's presence has a transformative effect on the actors, forcing them to adapt and change their performances to maintain the audience's interest.

The book includes excerpts from his lectures at Juilliard, as well as interviews and essays that delve into the nature of audience interaction and the role of the performer. Pinter's insights are particularly relevant to contemporary theater, where the boundaries between audience and performer have become increasingly blurred.

Overall, "The Audience Is the Enemy" is a thought-provoking read for anyone interested in the art of theater and the complex relationship between performers and their audiences.

Fill the Tank with Dreams

"There's a lot of folks living one step from the street. But they're free."

Terry Gross, the award-winning host of National Public Radio's "Fresh Air," was in Las Vegas recently, and as she listened to the stories of some of the city's working-class residents, she realized that they were living in a world of their own. She spoke with a group of people who work in the entertainment industry, and she was struck by the contrast between their lives and the glitz and glamour of Las Vegas. It was a world of hard work and low pay, but also one of camaraderie and resilience.

Interview with Terry Gross

Vivian's Story

Vivian, a 52-year-old single mother, has been working at the Bellagio hotel and casino for 10 years. She earns $8.25 an hour as a housekeeper, but she says she's grateful for the job. "This is the first time I've ever had a regular job," she says. "I have a place to live, and I can put food on the table."

Theresa's Story

Theresa, a 35-year-old single mother, works as a waitress at a restaurant in the Strip. She says she's never had it easy, but she's determined to make ends meet. "I have two kids to support, and I have to work hard to make ends meet," she says. "I have to be the best I can be, and I have to be strong for my kids."

Michelle's Story

Michelle, a 28-year-old single mother, works as a housekeeping supervisor at a casino. She says she's grateful for the job, but she's always looking for a way to improve her life. "I want to make something of myself," she says. "I want to make sure my family is taken care of."

These are just a few of the stories Terry Gross heard during her visit to Las Vegas. She was struck by the resilience and determination of these people, and she hopes to bring their stories to a wider audience.

A Loud Splash Followed by Hysterical Screams

By Anne Albright

Every day I eat at a TV stand McDonald's. I buy a TV, blow all the children's attention at the TV. McDonald's is not the most nutritious place to eat, but it is my go-to place because it's fast and convenient. I usually order the Big Mac or the Happy Meal, which comes with a side of fries and a drink.

Today, I was in line to order my lunch when I noticed something peculiar. A young girl, around 8 years old, was standing in front of the counter, sobbing. She was wearing a McDonald's uniform and appeared to be having a tantrum.

I looked around and saw a woman with her hand on the girl's shoulder. The woman was trying to calm the girl down, but she continued to cry. I wondered what was wrong.

As I waited for my order, I observed the girl more closely. She was wearing a McDonald's apron and had a McDonald's cap on her head. Her hair was wet, and she seemed to be in a state of distress.

I decided to approach the girl and ask if everything was okay. She looked up at me, tears streaming down her face, and said, "I can't have my Big Mac. I want my Happy Meal." I explained to her that she was wearing a uniform and that she had to follow the rules. She continued to cry, saying she didn't want to work.

I realized that she was a young McDonald's employee who had been forced to work despite her emotional issues. I felt pity for her and decided to comfort her.

I offered to buy her a Big Mac and a soft drink. She accepted, and I handed her the food. She smiled, and her sobbing stopped.

"Thank you," she said, wiping her tears. "I'm sorry for crying in front of you. I just had a really bad day." I replied, "It's okay. Everyone has bad days. How can I help you today?"

She told me she was having a tough time with the customers and didn't know how to handle their demands. I gave her some advice on how to deal with customers and told her I was proud of her for working hard.

"Thank you," she said, "I feel better now. I have to go back to work, but I'm feeling better." I wished her good luck and watched as she walked away.

I felt good about helping her, and I felt proud of her for her hard work. I knew she would be okay.

As I finished my meal, I thought about the young girl and the challenges she faced. I realized that everyone has their struggles, and it's important to support each other.

I paid for my meal and left, feeling content and satisfied. I knew I had made a positive impact on the young girl's day.
