MCA Poor Blink 182 was dubbed a Green Day clone almost before Green Day had achieved any national prominence. The comparison was obvious, since both acts are trios, and both play swift, catchy punk pop with lyrics fixated on girls, sex, and suburban-adolescent angst. Now, in rock criticism, it's a widely accepted axiom that the second band in a stylistic series — i.e. Bush-after-Nirvana, for example, or STP-after-Pearl Jam — is nothing but a copy-catter-dirty-ratter. That being so, why the hell do I like Blink 182 so much?

a lot since hearing the band's new record Dude Ranch, and I've decided that, 40 years into the history of rock and roll, that axiom does not always hold, and in the case of this type of derivative, vernacular music, "who did it first" becomes a specious question. True, Green Day crossed the Beatles with the Buzzcocks for an effective and exciting mix, but come to think of it, that's not really progressions and area't afraid to use a minor key too brilliant or original a concept. In fact, it's a notion that could have on occasion; also, they have not one but two great and easily distinguishable occurred to anyone at any time — to the members of
