DONT EVER TELL DEATH

HOW NOT TO TAKE A F of them—the kids, I mean—went to boot camp, came out of boot camp, got on an airplane to Viotnam, and went straight to the DMZ [Demilitarized Zone]. One such case was where we were up along the Laotian border, and we were getting replacements coming in. And it was up on a hillock kind o' directin' the helicopters. And of course anytime 'copters came in and bad guys were around, they would start mortaring us. Well, a helicopter landed and mortare started coming in. And the troops came out o' the back o' the helicopter and they just started running, you know, tryin' to get into cover. And I remember one kild came off, he ran over, he jumped into a foxhole, and a round came in right on top of him. He did not last more than a minute in combat. I don't even know his name.

Matt. We griffiend and I have seen these sun billboards around town lately that say, "Use your cabeas." We both have our guesses about what they're advertising, so we ended up making a bet. If I win, the has to walk around for a day wavering a cornvine, glack beard if she whis, I have to wear a tust for a day. She thinks it's an ad for a new suntan lotion, but I think it's an ad for a cuise line.

Dear Matt.
My boyfriend and I made a bet about a billboard. He always thinks he's right, in a kind of funny, boyth way. Two conditions: The loser has so do it on the weekend, and the loser can't stay home all day but has to go out and run errands. I'd laugh for a week if he had to wear a turil
—Kristin Scritter, San Diego
—Kristin Scritter, San Diego

Hey, Matt: What's the story with all these billboards with the sun peeking out from the bottom? I've also seen a pile of postcards with the same sun on them in a couple of bars. Is it some kind of environmental/global warming thing or a tourism thing? What's up?

— Jamie Robbins, San Diego

All three queries arrived in the same mail. Coincidence? Or does that little minx Kratin get around more than Paul knowe? I don't know how many environmentalists spent their off hours writing at more than Paul knowe? I don't know how many environmentalists spent their off hours writing at which the paul promise to the paul promise to me and the paul promise to me rands for one day dressed in heard and turn. Veature they fee both way off base. About five minutes into our research on this, we learned the billhoard company is sworn to secree. When they saw us coming up the walls with a pige each pie and some chocolate milit, our favorite social borisations, they alammed the doors and pulled one of the builded up and toused through a transmort that said something about all of Western civilization dishingerating if they told ut what was going on I don't recall any reference to global warming, but maybe that figures into the end times escentaio to. So. As he has a sever billioural. The ultimate noncommunication? So much for the logical approach.

As lack would have it, the class took off for a high weekend to recover from our rebuff on the label on 50 beers, a 100-year old Mexisan brew. You can see it advertised locally on Mexican IV satisfans, moodly during soccer matches. If you've seen in in TI bars, it's the one sold in a clear glass bortle with a slice of lime in the neck.

Matthew.

Okay, once and for all, please unswer the ultimate senseless question. Why the hell would a bank put Braille instructions on the drive-up ATM?

ATM machines are adapted to the blind in varying degree of helpfulnes, but the one found outside banks are usually the most detailed. Even owice the large blocks of Braille terrif Even motion of the Braille terrif Even motion of the Braille terrif Even to the Braille terrif Even and the Braille directive up ATMs, according to one local institution, have chosen to install only one type of Reptyad for all their machines, walk-up or drive-up type. And despite our suspicions, banks are not unwaver of the irony.

Now, ignore the preceding, A survey conducted with the help of the Service Center for the Bildin dis and Drego reveals that the bildin are smart enough not to use ATMs. If people with perfectly good vision can be tools time on us was guide dog triving to stick a cash card in that little sleft? One thing I respect is the will of death. I respect that. A couple of my firends said if the gotta die, get killed, they ddn't wanna get killed in the face. They ddn't wanna get killed in the face. They ddn't wanna get killed with their teeth blown out. And that's exactly how they died. So I don't ever tell death how not to take me, cause that's how death will come.

The most I can say for him on first encounter, and it is far from nothing, farther still from a negative, is that he reminded me at times, in his childlikeness and mischievousness and even in his exact facial expressions when peering over or around his ro-denty snout, of Pee-wee Herman; and denty snout, of Pee-wee Herman; and also, in his extended sequences of non-verbal slapstick, of Peter Sellers in collaboration with director Blake Ed-wards (The Pink Panther, The Party, etc.). At the same time, he lacks the innocence and fancifulness of the one (poo-poo and puke jokes are permis-sible), and, with Mel Smith in the director's chair, lacks the skilled cinema technician of the other.

The narrative premise, in sharp contrast to the equivalent Saturday Night Live spinrolfs listed above, has sufficient gas in it, with intermittent downhill coasting, to chug all the way through to the finish line: the Royal National Gallery of England, unable to fee it is consequently as the saturday of fire its snoozing museum guard be-cause of a friend in high places, and Whistler's Mother (or more formally, though no one in the movie identifies it as such, Ar the movie identifies it as such, Ar-rangement in Grey and Black-Portrait of the Pantler's Mother), Peter Mac-Nicol, one of the brighter spots in Mel Brooks's mostly lackluster Dracua-town of the Brooks's mostly lackluster Dracua-tion of the Brooks's mostly lackluster for the Brooks's mostly lackluster brooked from the Brooks's most brooks's may be to Beanatics, a light-fingered scene stealer.

Gaing All the Way, a nostalgic rec-ollection of Fifties America by way of the already nostalgic Seventies novel of Dan Wakefield, gets through its best material early: the Madison Av-enue-styled illustrations of a Dream America, to the accompaniment of "A White Sport Coat," behind the cred-its. (The Marty Robbins tune sets the period as three years later than the ac-tual one, 1954.) The ham-handed direction of Mark Pellington, how-ever, dashes all hopes within a quarter of an hour, plenty of time for an Army vet to be smothered in welcome-home smooches from his mother, for the smooches to be brusquely broken up by his father ("We're in a no-parking zone, folks"), for the gift of a puppy to be pushed into his face through a wide-angle lens, and for him to make it to the bathroom, hurried along thereto with pixillation, to throw up. Ben Affleck, of Chasing Amy, does well himself changing from an "outer-directed guy" into an "inner-directed." (He has read The Lonely Crowd, whether that was chicken or egg.) But Jeremy Davies, of Spanking the Mon-key, as the inexperienced home-front nerd, is so monotonously, so mad-deningly mumbly and gulpy that it's hard to see what he has to offer in the way of companionship. Both actors are in danger of making a habit of gerundial titles.

In Red Corner, Richard Gere puts his paycheck where his mouth is, and takes part in a huffy, sniffy reproof of Communist China on its human-rights record, although the whipped-up case of an American entrepreneur framed for murder while in the middle of negotiations to lift the Bamboo Curtain to the glories of Western television cannot be said to be typical. It might almost suggest that those Yellow Dev-ils have only gone too far when they monkey with a Yank. In his commitment to the cause, outwardly little different from his commitment to Final Analysis or First Knight, Gere runs through his normal portfolio of faces. He blinks, he crinkles his forehead, he knits his brows, he narrows one eye, he puckers his lips, he sticks out his lower teeth, he smiles that lopsided half-smile, he laughs through his nose. No new gear.
