Just Stop

To Peter Navarro, Stop. Just To Peter Navarro. Stop. Just stop. We don't care about you. You are irrelevant. Your skewed views on local issues and na-tional issues are irrelevant. You are irrelevant, you sniveling, whining, bitching, puling little shit. Stop. You're a shitty writer, and you're a shitty hu-man being. There is a reason why you continuously, repeat-edly get trounced in elections. Open your eyes, quit smok-ing whatever drugs you're on, and get a clue. Just stop writ-ing. And for the Reader, you obviously have no standards, no standards whatsoever to no standards whatsoever to print this trash. I've seen bet-ter writing in the Scripps Ranch High newspaper than what I've seen in the Reader in what I've seen in the Reader in just this one issue. I haven't read the Reader for a while, and if you keep printing crap like this, I won't read it ever again. ill McEwan's life reads like a Dick Francis novel. McEwan, a graduate of USC's paralegal program, is a racehorse trainer who mixes horses and the law.

"I'm just like a home ap-praiser, except I appraise horses," she says. But in the moneydriven, compulsive world of horseracing, she often becomes a linchpin in disputes that range from car-horse collisions to murder. Take the 1995 trial over the 1977 disappearance of Brach candy heiress Helen Vorbers Brach. The widow had been ro-Brach. The widow had been ro-manced by a horse trader named Richard Balley. Prosecu-tors alleged Balley defrauded Brach out of hundreds of thou-ands of dollars by selling her loser houses at inflated prices. At the Chicago trial in May 1995, where Balley stond charged with soliciting Brach's murde, Issoyse for the Rach e-state claimed Balley seduced the wealthy downer; most spending.

worthless race and show horses. Worthless? Not so, said Jill McEwan, equine appraiser, who was hired as an expert who was hired as an expert witness by Bailey's defense team. McEwan say the horses Bailey found for Brach came from good stock. Two of the three had been strained too hard and had sustained "bowed ten-dons," susually career ending in-juries, according to McEwan. And besides, McEwan onseed, Helen Brach was experienced in horses, not label to be hood-winked into buying bad prospects. The beiress subse-spectagly bought several success-ful reachment.

McEvan says she's discov-ered the acting industry is in many ways "much worse than we all imagined. We all love the horses. But in the lustiness, some people can lose their integrity. And there's no blue book on horses."

According to Time magazine, in the 1994 investigation of the Helen Brach disappearance/murdet, the long inquiry opened up a Pandors' box investigators broadened their search to include once-prest race/hores that had been "dabbed, electrocuted, and burned alive" so owners could collect insurance money. Appraising a hores's value, the ups, can be a lot more than names and figure. Now're pot to know the horne, the genetics, and other circumstances. If it's a reachoner being raised in quarterhoree country, its value diminishes. "At any single moment, a horse can have over a dozen diffusion to the control of the control o could collect insurance money.

The mare I was valuing had a foul by the company of the torney who hired me and said, 'I bet you didn't know about the foal."

McEwan found the case so McEwan found the case so interesting, she started looking at the legal side of appraising. In 1991 she went to USD and got a paralegal degree. Her big break came while she was staying with her mom in Florida in early 1995. A pro-duction company asked her to do some research for a movie on the Helen Brach murder story.

The more she researched, the The more she researched, the less she could see why horse trader Richard Bailey had been charged with solicitation of murder and swindling Brach with 'worthless' horses.

Dear Mr. Alice:
Why do country singers yodel? What could have been the connection that brought yodeling from the Swis Alps to Nathville, or did yodeling crop up independently as a form of expression among country-western singers? Or did the Swiss really start yodeling only after seeing their first Grie Autry film? I gotta know!

Polly's mom's best friend is Marlyse Fitzwater. You say her name, "Mar-lease."

Marlyse has commandeered Polly's kitchen. Marlyse's determined they're going to eat Texas trash, which is why she's at the kitchen table with Polly and Polly's mom, making the list for Frito Pie. "Easy," she assures Polly. Marlyse sips a margarita and writes that she needs Fritos, kidney beans, tomato paste, hamburger, sharp cheddar, chili powder, onions, chopped green chilies, black olives. Polly's mom, looking vaguely sad, leans back in her chair. She's so bored and restless, I almost set her to tapping her foot.

In my novel, where Marlyse is, it's Memorial Day weekend, early in the 1970s in the Pacific Northwest. We're in Phil and Polly's two-story house in the town I call Coraville. Phil and Polly have been reasonably happily married for nine years. They've got two sons, Matt and Danny. Matt, a big blonde like his dad, just finished first grade, and Danny, a freckled redhead like his mom, goes next year. Who's here in my novel this preternaturally hot Saturday are Phil, Polly, the boys, and Polly's mother Edith and Marlyse, who's about to head for the store. Edith and Marlyse flew in for the three-day weekend.

It's winter in California while I write how hot Coraville is. I remember last summer that sweat ran into my eyes and stung. I remember how hot my kitchen was and how I hated running the stove. And it's a quarter century since 1970, so I try to remember what music, back then, played on the radio.

Marlyse's a blue-eyed bottle blonde from Dallas, and she's what, back in the days

I'm writing about, people called an old maid. Marlyse's maybe 5'10". She wears short skirts to show off her very long, long, and exceptionally shapely legs. If you don't look at her face, you could make Marlyse for a Vogue model. But when she turns to you, you see she's got a nubbin of chin, bucked teeth, and acne-scarred skin. Phil's dad calls her "pug ugly."

Edith, Polly's morn, 5'1" in heels and even in her late 40s, with her heart-shaped face and auburn bob, is adorable. Edith and Marlyse, given their height difference, laughingly call each other "Mutt and Jeff." "Hey, Mutt," Marlyse will say, and then address a jocular comment to Polly's mom.

Both women teach in the drama department at a college in Oregon. It's Methodist, and the drama school is full of what Edith and Marlyse refer to as "losers, but sweet losers." Only years later will it occur to Polly that her mom and Marlyss were also losers, but sweet losers, and ir that way were like all of us.

Marlyse showed up on the page one orning: name, blond beehive, booze habit, and all. She was hanging out with Polly's mom. I liked her. I was scared, though, because every time somebody new meanders into my novel, he or she creates problems. But I thought of that Bible verse from Hebrews — "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares" — and went ahead and let Marlyse talk.

Marlyse started out to be a comedienne. Not that her act got her master's in drama. She'd been at this Methodist school for years and was there when Polly's mom, with 12-year-old Polly, arrived. Marlyse and Edith go everywhere together. New York and Big D and San Francisco and green sundress and size-ten lime Her deep voice booms around the kitchen. Polly glances across the table at her mom, who's got on pink linen and circles beneath her eyes. "You feel okay, Mama?" Polly asks. "I do," she answers, in the loose-jointed body, and a nice clean cinnamon smell. "How's it going?" Phil asks. He gets a kick out of Marlyse, but Polly's mom drives him nuts. He blames her lousy rearing for the problems he has with his wife. A clad would have gotten more love from an alley cat than Polly from But no sooner is Marlyse out the door than Edith rises from her chair and says, "You don't mind if I run upstairs and catch two Polly shrugs. She means to romy strugs, site means to be niore grown-up with her mother. She always fails. Polly asks in a voice even she hears as strained, "Can I get you any thing?" Her mother assures her she's fine and almost rains toward the state. P. Die show.

More somber tokens accord pany this heady teenage smile gallery: crosses, wreaths of artificial poinsettias, a crude grave are outlined in stones, ported flowers along the fence. Flow ers — cut, potted, artificial recalling the Tame Death period when it was believed that the dead await salvation peacefully at rest in a flower garden. Thir mixture of the sentimental and macabre typifies road shrines, tokening our ambivalent feel-ings about that place where deep water meets the shore, for which this culture offers

Death is improper in Amer-ica. "To be shunned, avoided, denied, and, if possible, con-quered," writes David Moller believe they actually exist? You can buy products for all other aspects of life at American shopping malls — anal supposito ries, sex aids, zit medicine, toe quered," writes David Moller in Confecting Drath. An incon-venience we cannot tolerate. The ultimate bad credit report. We prefer to view our dead through video hookups at the rice, sex ards, 2rt medicine, toe-jam relief, illegal drugs (from kids out front) — but you won't find coffins sold there. Worst possible business venture: open a death accessory shop at North County Pair! Like homeless-ness, death is one of those mishaps that happens to other coroner's and hide their corpses away in hospital basements. Many Americans have never seen a corpse. Why should they people, not to us. When some-one we know dies, we think as Ivan Illich's contemporaries did in Tolstoy's story. "Well, he's dead, but I'm alive!" We turn dead, but I'm alive? We turn away from death and hurry out the door. We find it hard even to say the D-word, instead say, "He passed away, expired, went sour, didn't make it, kis ked the bucket, croaked... He's been restructured," or "lit up," as they said in Vietnam.

Stoan went over the 17-page accident report with the CHP, walked the site, noting slad marks and car parts. Despite Laura's head injuries, Cheri Smith insisted on seeing her daughter's body and was bewil-dered that all the injuries were on Laura's left side when she had been sitting on the right. Three weeks after the accident, she went with Marcie to inspect the wrecked car. Clumps of Laura's blond hair still hung out the window, and she real-ized that Laura was ejected out

It's reinforcing it in your head that, because you can't see her anymore, and you can't hear her voice anymore, and you can't touch her, that this was the last connection point where she stopped being here." Before the huge, yawn-ing, incomprehensible mys-tery of sudden death, young death, we must know. X marks the spot.

Sloan's daughter Kristina, a junior studying dance at Cal State, Long Beach, and Laura's 11th-grade sister Rebekah find Laura's death site more soothing than her grave site. The family has not yet even pur-chased a headstone. "The site is where she was alive," Rebelah is where the was alive, Rebelah says, "and the cometery is where the was buried." But when nothing has been put up at the state, the finds it "cold and creepy." Other times it's just "a fun thing to do."

Like Greg Smith, the fam-ily is gratified when someone leaves something — a balloon, dried flowers — evidence that Laura remains alive in some-one's thoughts. Occasionally, her friends hang a banner on the fence: THINK OF LAURA "She was, like, a real goof, and she loved to call attention to her-self," her mother says. She adopted Christopher Cross's "Think of Laura" as a theme song. They plan to inscribe her headstone with its words: "Think of Laura and laugh don't cry, for I know she'd want

To mark the spot, to stay connected, to ware other "that this did happen and it could happen again, "roadside memorials are a postmortem advertisement of a life lived, inspired. Sloan thinks, by fear that the loved one will be forgotten by all but their immediate circle. "It will just be another face that, you know, 'comething." that, you know, 'something happened, poor girl, she's gone' type of a thing." Moreover, shrines provide an outlet for anguish and aid in the process of grieving and acceptance. Rebekah Smith and Kristina Sloan tell me coping with Laura's death has been easier than they expected. Kristina part of their lives, nor shore aspect of the openness that helps them cope with loss. They talk about her a lot, and Kristina the accident, she looked up

She lost her partner."

Losing a child, Smith says, can cause health problems, sleeplessness, a sense of ennui. At first, she moved "in a fog or a dream." Now, after four years, she says, "I'm just waking up." She recalls a woman who'd lost her 16-year-old son approaching her shortly after the accident and advising. "The things that pierce your heart and hurt so much now will become your best friend a while from now." It's true. Smith says. Now the remembers Laura says. Now she remembers Laura less with pain than warmth. Her voice goes husky. "I think the only thing that I really strug-gle with still is that I miss her."

I'm told shrines are "a Hispanic thing," "a Catholic thing," "a European thing." Yes, all of these. But memorials that identify victims in San Diego County are predomi-nately Anglo and secular. Most to accident victims under 25, many killed by drunk drivers, often young themselves. Chris Marra, whose 18-year-old daughter Noelle was killed by a drunk driver on Pomerado Road in Scripps Ranch, says that when older people die we don't bother putting up a mon-ument because there isn't "the unfinishedness or the feeling of tragedy as with a young person of so much promise. It's just so unnatural." Young, tragic death so marks a life that death out-weighs the living of it, becoming one's singular accom-plishment. Adults don't need nemorials, they erect monu memorials, they erect monu-ments of their lives, as the young, dead have no chance to do. According to Mark Gregg of the CHP, 29 percent of all fatal accidents in California are alcohol-related. Paula Myers, vic-tim services director for Moth-ers Against Drunk Driving, feels that many shrines are inspired by outrage as much as grief. People want to call attention to what happened in that spot and plead to end as novelist John Irving notes, we must distinguish between sentimentality and true senti-ment, without which the world is a cold zone. It occurs to me that road shrines encompass the full range of Western atti-tudes about death; the Middle Ages' communal sharing of grief and stigmatization of sudden, violent death; a ghost of the 14th to 16th Centuries' "danse macabre" in dancing roadside skeletons and fascination with death's gory details; something of the 17th and 18th Centuries' eroticization of death — supercharged by pop culture's hard-core morbidity fetish (e.g., Anne Rice, L.G. Ballard's en to crushed steel and splintered glass in Crash); flowers, gaspy poems, and deckle-edged excess suggest Victorian senti izing of death; roadside vigils echo the Puritan taming of loss and fear via communal ritual: resonances, too, of today's reluc-tance to accept loss. in late December, I wend out Rancho Santa Fe Road through upscale North County burbs. Faux adobe walls encompass half-acre lots. The Fulkerson house is palatial, archways and glass, lit up like an ocean liner in the day's gloom. Carol Fulk-erson answers the door in jeans, a peach turtleneck sweater, a stately woman with short blond hair and a preoccupied man-ner, her plump dog Gidgett beside her. Rooms lead off the spacious atrium, a staircase winds up to Mike Fulkerson's office suite; high ceilings, a gas-log fireplace alight in the living room, another in a homey room in back, wreather and glistening Christmas decor. A photo col-lage features Brent. Carol Fulklage leatures Seent. Carol Pulk-erson makes coffee and tells me Christmas isn't what it once was. Sadness endemic to her eyes and the set of her mouth. No denying the grief and pain that motivates such shrines. But victimization is at work here too, an attempt to deny what role — however slight — the young may play in their own deaths. As Cheri Smith says of the drunk driver who killed her daughter, "He was just a kid being reckless, and my daughter was reckless for being in the car with him. The kids were being kids. Torrey Alkire and Chris Colgan, arrive in a black pickup. Torrey a tall, imposing, thoughtful girl in a black sack dress, broad, puffy cheeks, eyes naked and direct. Chris lanky and nerlenses. They stop by "at least once a week," he says. "Hang out," she says, "tell 'em what's going on." Torrey says the Barry brothers were "good at every-thing" and "made kind of a mark wherever they went." I ask if they've left any objects here Chris says his little brother Mikey left the gum, huskying his voice, "'Oh, I'm gonna give 'em all a happen to all of us."

Ron adds, "It shows that people care about other people." A place of pilgrimage, shout of outrage, reminder, final song of affection, a community created around death and caring a way to look death squarely in the eye. A tree, a pole, a corner, a cyclone fence, a crash site. A damp spot under the overpass. In a mechanistic world that denies the primacy of feeling, that hides death away and disavows it, road shrines put it right up front and make a cult of it.

Ron points to rocks on a hill Ron points to rocks on a hill to the east by some palm trees. He tells me Wendy lived in a house just below there when they first "got together" 23 years ago. "So we thought that was unusual that the boys died right here. What is, it, a mile away?" here. What is it, a mile away! Wendy nods. "Where we

The overall central theme of Pete, 1 got creamed because some idiot of an opponent stole all of my votes. He or she was running for the same office. The first edition of this serial of born losers had the photo of Pete Navarro and Lyan Schenk halking hands. Schenk had the honor of serving a congressional district for match with Brian Bilbray, Lyan Schenk lived on the heady wine of power, being heady wine of power, being heady wine of power, being in touch with President Clin-ton and then flying home on Air Force I with Congressman Bob Filner.

They forgot one principal law of politics, that it's the people that vote you into of-fice and out of office. This lesson has been forever lost to Peter Navarro as well. Schenk in her rerun match ran TV ads that emulated Governor Wilson: she was shown climbing buildings in progress with hard hat in hand to speak to the construction workers; on the streets, women gathered to hear her pearls of wisdom; at the congressional office, she was patiently educating her constituents to the political facts of life. All of this TV Disneyland political landscape was as authentic as a three-dollar bill.

Lynn Schenk's little-known life history is that she is the daughter of Jewish martyrs

As for the actual writing, West said, "I tried to find a voice in which I could narrate. It took me a limle while to learn that. I'd never written this kind of marrative before. I proceeded on the assumption that I had a good story to tell and that there were people who would want to know it. So I suppose there's an attempt to reach the reader on a personal level, an individual level, another challenge I had was to work Syron's voice into the marrative because, you see, as a biographer you have your subject's voices, really included the proceeding of the proceeding to the proceeding to the process of the proceeding to the proceeding to the proceeding work of the proceeding to the proceeding with the proceeding to the proceeding to the proceeding with the proceeding to the proceeding to the proceeding the proceeding to the proceeding to

Not All the Right Stuff

Only in America could one of the best opera singers of his generation contemplate playing a role on a soap opera.

en Diego Opera concluded a triumphant season with an uneven production of Mozar? The Marriage of Figure mosically excellent, but often weak and inept in its staging. The musical success — which of course is pri-mary — was due to the energetic mary — was due to the energetic and supple conducting of the al-ways reliable Edoardo Müller, the disciplined playing by the equally reliable San Diego Opera Orchesreliable San Diego Opera Orches-tra (evident immediately in the zestful overture), and a beautifully balanced group of talented and stylish singers, just the sort of ensemble we have come to expect from the company's general di-rector, Ian Campbell, sith his sure taste in voices and his canny ability at casting.

The cast included — along with such famil-iar favorites as François Loup (Bartolo) and Judith Chetici. Oka edilica.

Christin (Marcellina) — some singers new to Sun Diego, notably sopranos Ute Selbig and Emily Magee (as, respectively, Susanna and the Count-ess Almaviva), both of whom proved to be expert Mozart interpreters, with attractive, well-produced voices. The Cherubino of Margaret Lattimore was delightful; Francis Egerton was vividly comical as Don Basilio and Don Curzio and there was some lively, idiomatic singing from Andrew Wentzel as Figaro, although his rather dry (if nicely inflected) baritone tended to get a bit lost in the cavernous Civic Theatre.

The most interesting of the singers was Rodner Giffry, as a commanding Count Almaviva.
Giffry appeared on this stage 11 years ago, when he sang the few lines of Fiorello in San Diego Opera's Barber of Seville, but even in that negligible role, he already revealed himself as potentially a major operatic rists, with a silky, powerful, virile baritone voice, and an assertive flair for vocal characterization. Since then, he has built an incharacterization. Since then, he has built an in-ternational career, performing leading roles in the world's foreinost opera houses. His record-ings — less numerous than one might have expected, given the quality of his voice and artistry — have been almost exclusively in assoartistry — have been almost exclusively in asso-ciation with John Eliot Gardiner. Recognizing Gilfry's outstanding gifts (along with the metic-

Listening to Gilfry, either on disc or in San Diego Opera's Figuro, on its impressed by his evident seriousness as musician: the careful preparation, the thoughtful interpretation of the words, the refined use of every vocal resource to enhance musical meaning. Two Opical examples might be Almarvia's inflatedly dramatis: "Hat gia virtue la causa" and — at the other end of the musical control of the control of the

How dismaying, then, to read a recent news-paper interview with Gilfry, copies of which were distributed with the San Diego Opera's press kits. Of course, no one should ever trust the press, and Of course, no one should ever trust the press, and it may be the fault of the reporter that in this intereview the singer comes across as shockingly crass and shallow, with no sense of the uniqueness of his misscal talent or his responsibility toward it. We find out that he got into open because "I realized that if I vanted to make it to the top in the concert field, the only onen suking any money were open singers, so that's the direction 1, those. No, no, I choose to blame all this on the journalist. Gilfry couldn't have said those things — not the Rodney Gilfry whose glorious voice and musicianship I hope to keep on enjoying for hope to keep on enjoying for decades to come. Surely he knows that he can't become "more than an opera singer." Singing and acting Mozart or Verdi or Strauss is the top!

and status. Unfortunately, stage director Lesley Keenig chose to convert the characters into shallow shick-figures (a bit like the portrait of Rodency Giffry conveyed by that appalling newspaper article). Virtually everything they did on stage, instead of rising naturally out of their characters, was plastered on, as a supposedly comic piece of Dustiness, belonging merces on Dustiness and Dustiness piece of business, belonging en-tirely to the cheap shots of the stage — as though they, too, wanted to be seen as "enter-tainers." The result was a high degree of artificiality and fussi-ness (their hands were always all over the mores, probine, nick. over the props, probing, pick-ing, folding, waving), and an interminable series of extranesingers were in constant move-ment, forever "reacting." Every moment had to be filled with visual devires, crossings, dou-ble-takes, exaggerated physical responses — the vast majority of them totally unnecessary and the music or by any commo

Because of this directorial tone, all the singers — includ-ing Rodney Gilfry — seemed to act amateorishly, in the phony, unmotivated, and in-flated way of actors desperately flated way of actors desperately hoping to look aller, at all costs, and the weakness and unnaturalness of the physical acting was all the more irritating in that the vocal acting by the same singers was usually skill full and untufful. Koenig was so intent on gooping up the stage action that she even invented occasioms to do so—as when, at the end of act one, at they are the stage of the stage action that she continue to the hoping so cortical aris addressed to the hapless Cherubino (New più andrai). This was contrary to the liberto, which gets rid to the libretto, which gets ric to the libretto, which gets rid of the Count precisely because he has nothing to do in the scene and because his presence would detract from the comic intimacy of the Figaro-Cheru-bino interaction. But Koenig wanted Almavius there so that he could "react"—which poor he could 'react' — which poor ciliffy was compleid to do, without any meaning and with-out any conviction. If only San Diego Opera's Figaro had been directed by Michael Hampe, who did all the right things with the com-pany's recent Barber of Swells, finding the exact visual ele-ments to underline the humor assuming (correctly) that the libretist and the composer knew what they were doing and that their ideas did not need to be corrected or to be drowned be corrected or to be drowned out with a lot of stuff. The Man riage of Figuro is a far greater musical-dramatic masterpiece than The Barber of Seville, and it's too bad San Diego Op ra's production of it fell down so stupidly on the dramatic end.

A performing will accommodatingly be above in active performance, however much might be lost in mistation. But a writer, even a master of the epiggam such as Occar Wilde, cannot so economistic accordingly be above in the state of the control of the property of this hard truth of the writer, and thus the more definite my own ideas of the sound of his "voice," the less interested I are in seeing him depicted on screen. If I am McKellen wants to make a bloody fool out of wants to make a bloody fool out of himself as D.H. Lawrence or Fred Ward wants to make a bloody bore of himself as Henry Miller, what's that Lady Windermere's Fan, fame, fortune, assorted naked Adonises in bed, the irreplaceable "Bosie," the latter's brutish father — and with this last, the sadistic Marquess, we have arrived at the courthouse. (The legal action at the courthouse. (The legal action was the more restricted focus of a couple of simultaneous British films in 1960, Oscar Wilde and The Trials of Oscar Wilde, with Robert Morley and Peter Finch in the title roles.) Nothing is made here of the social disease, of I am remembering right, under whose threat of rot and decay and pre-nature death the author lived most of his adult life. It wouldn't work at all their works — for those, in this intheir works — for those, in this in-sance, whose sense of tragedy will be sufficiently aroused over losses in the yuppie-esque areas of "prosperity" and "lifestyle" — Wilde will perhaps meet the bare-bones need. For those, et the bare-bones need. For those, anntime, who prefer the first-hand ntact, it will perhaps fall short of in-ting, but not short of disappointing, pressing, boring, irritating. I keep aring that Stephen Fry bears an un-nay resemblance to the real Owar, and it's true that he parts his hair is the middle, so I suppose there must be something wrong with either my eyes or my mind's eye. But unless there is or my mind's eye. But unless there is also something wrong with my math. I am sure that when he picks up the role in Okar's twenties, he is already much too far along into middle-aged spongines. Bis awakening to his true self seems in consequence to come even later in the day than the compe-rable awakening on TV's Ellen.

Kurt and Couriney, the Movie That Courtney Love Did Not Want You to A sewell as the Movie That Was Too Hot for the Sundance Film Fes-tival (But Just Right for the Slamdunk Counter-Fessival), is a brazely sleaze-ball documentary that pokes and pries Counter-Fessival), is a brazenly slean-ball documentary that poles and pries into the 'various conspiracy theories' around the apparent suicide in 1994— one must restrain oneself from saying the obvious saicide— of grunge-rocker Kurt Cobsin. It is a reeling, furching mess of a movie, assembled in slap-dash fashion from archive footage. interviews, and travelling shoten route to interviews, all plastered together with the phlegmatic first-per-son narration of British filmmaker Nick Broomfield ("My co-funders in his way to making a specialty of in rerviewing people who cannot be believed (Heidi Fleiss: Hollywood Madam), is forever thrusting himself etween the titular twosome singers of Nirvana and Hole, respec-tively, besides husband and wife — into the role of torch-bearing, stone overturning, trufn-seeking hero. (And I thought Michael Moore, in The Big One, was getting a fat head!) The crowning touch of this self-promo-tional campaign is his party-pooping crowing touch of this self-promo-tional campaign is his party-pooping seizure of the podium at an ACLU awards dinner in order to finger the guest of honor, Courtney Love, as an opponent of a free press. Among the obstacles she has thrown in the path of our interest in particular is her. of our intrepid investigator is her re-fusal, first, to submit to an interview and, second, to grant him permissio to use any music. (As Cobain's wido and executor — not to be confused, please, with executioner — she has the right.) We can scarcely blame her for the first, and we might like to thank her for the second. Although the ab-sence of the music leaves a gaping hole

(or Hole) in the movie, rock fans will know quite well how it sounds, and the rest of us won't feel the need to

The general drift of the investiga tion, like that in any hard-boiled detective novel, moves further and further towards the fringe, with a further towards the fringe, with a lineup of interviewees that stretches through Kurt's Aunt Mary (playing audio tapes of her nephew's singing career circu age two), his carliest girl-friend (showing off Kurt's 2-dolescent artwork, scrutinized for evidence of an unbalanced mind), Courtney's es-tranged father ("I"m not in the business of trying to get Courtney to business of trying to get Courtney to love me"), a Los Angeles private eye hired at one time by Courtney and hired at one time by Courtney and now dedicated to proving her culpa-bility in her husband's death, Kurt's long-time best friend (whose sentence structure is founded unfailingly on the building block of "I mean, it's like..."), a couple of 'stalkarazn' celebrity pho-tographers, a puunchy rock singer with tographers, a paunchy rock singer with the hybrid name of "El Duce" who claims Courtney offered him $50,000 to kill Kurt ("People might think," ob-serves Broomfield in his astuteiournalist mode, "you're not the most reliable witness") and who has since gotten himself run over by a train (ah, ha!), and others. Aunt Mary may be hal), and others. Aunt Mary may be the only one of them you'd let sleep on your couch. The movie, on its relat-less trek to the fringes, becomes more entertaining — more like a segment on Unsolved Mysteries, with Broomfield pinch-hitting for Robert Stack — as it becomes more discreditable. But even becomes more discreditable. But even then you might get a bit tired of try-ing to calculate the kind and amount of mind-altering substance ingested by a given interviewee. Belief in Cobain's standing as in Broomfield's narration) a "brilliant artist." a "folk hero," and an 'toon," to say nothing of belief in his standing as a murder victim, would doubtless give a boost to your stamina.

Excuse me a moment while I check the calendar. This issue of the Reader should hit the streets on May 21, which should hit the streets on May 21, which will leave just one more issue prior to the previously announced opening date of the inaugural San Diego World Film Festival (obliged to change its middle name after it was forcefully notified that there already estats a San Diego International Film Festival) on the property of iune 2. And as of my latest weekly stop whether the festival would indeed come off as scheduled, where it would take piace, what it would consist of, who would be the guests, anything at all. Not a fax, not a letter, not a word. all. Not a fax, not a letter, not a word. Had I not spoken in casual conversa-tion with people who have been volunteering their services, I would have no reason to believe in its exis-tence. And had I not read of the tence. And had I not read of the experience and expertise and professionalism of its organizers in a fax to my publisher (not to me personally) early in the year, I would have every reason to doubt those qualities. I might still have a reason or two, even so. But excuse me once again while I check the dictionary.

the hotel and admired its view of the lagoon and the hills in the distrance. I maveded ance at the floral arrangements by Tam Ashworth. Violet-colored orchids swayed from brass pots, and at the entrance to California Bistro a massive vase held more than a hundred brilliant flowers. Seating began promptly at 5:30, we had a table-overlooking the terrace. I walked to the buffet three times; once for the cold seaflood, once for the hot, tast for dessert. The menu changes weekly, so fish cast for dessert. The menu changes weekly, so fish cones you will encounter. On the night we visited, unus and salmon sushim, calamar saled, and sisce of smooted fish were of high quality. Red potatoes in the sulder inspise were undercooked, but it is in the salade niçoise were undercooked freshly cooked tuna couldn't be faulted.

FIND LOVE IN CYBERSPACE!

Come to Cafe Cybernet and be ove of the first to see how you can use our new service to quickly and easily browse through the Reader Marches and narrow down your search using various criteria — including the ability to specify the age range you're interested in! You'll also learn how to respond to ads via anonymous e-mail. Whether you're an Internet virgin or write code all day, this fun, casual evening will allow you to mingle with others around the hard drives, flirt over steaming cups of latte, sample treats from the Cafe's chefs, and write your very own free 50-word Reader Matches ad ($30 value) that will appear in print and online. $5 cover includes use of computers during event. Cafe Cybernet is located in La Jolla Village Square between Ralphs and Trader Joe's. Make your reservations today by calling 619-235-8200 x266.

FRIDAY, JUNE 12 . 6:00-8:30 PM IT'S THE SUMMER OF LOVE! Shake off your June gloom and join us at the Cat for a great evening of dancing and mixing! The Rhythm Dogs will set the mood and get you on the dance floor, the Catamaran staff will serve up great hors d'oeuvres as the sun sets over the bay, and to get you started on a hot summer romance, we'll give you a FREE 50-word Marches ad ($30 value). To complete the evening, at 9:00, Beatle Magic, part of the cast from Beatlemania, will take the stage with a magical mystery tour back to another time. You don't want to miss it! Heck, we'll even throw in a cash prize of 50 bucks to the person dressed in the most authentic '60s or '70s garb. All this for a mere $5. Call in your reservation today at 619-235-8200, x266. Peace. Can We Pleeeeez Play Out in the Rain?

Kid Stuff

nights cooped up in the ark, fetid straw covering the floor, the hot breath of animals making the air heavy with barnyard smells, while outside the skies poured and the earth lay covered under a sea of muddy water. Okay, so I've got carpet instead of straw. And no animals, just three small children. Still, this winter, for every day my girls rode their bikes up and down the sidewalk in front of our house, we spent two days sitting inside while the sidewalks coursed with rain. Last Wednesday, we awoke to Last Wednesday, we awoke to more rain. Lying in bed with 19-month-old Lucy curled against my side, I listened while a squall swirled against the window. I thought of my plans to take Lucy and her older sisters Rebecca and Angela to the park with some friends. "Oh," my heart sank in the gray light, "what are we going to do now?"

An hour later, the girls sat at their little table in the kitchen spooning milky Cheerios into their mouths. The phone rang. When I picked up the phone, my friend's voice crackled over the line. "I guess Lucy down in her crib, the storm the park is out. Want to go to story broke over my house. Great gusts of

hour at the library?"

At 10:30, more fat, warm raindrops fell from the sky while we sprinted from our car toward the San Marcos library door. Inside, we shook off the rain and wound our way through the stacks to the story room. About 20 preschool-aged children sat on rectangular cushions and listened to a pleasant 50-1sh woman introduce the first story. My girls smiled at each other when the woman pulled two puppets from a cardboard box. "This is a story from Mexico about Señor Coyote and the rabbit," the woman told the children in a sing-song voice.

A half hour later,

hamburger day at McDonald's. Want to drive through and get the kids some lunch? You guys can come over and eat at our house." The girls clapped their hands and danced in circles amid the bookshelves. After lunch, the kids played out rain pounded the roof with a sound like pebbles poured from a bucket. Downstairs, Rebecca and Angela stood at the sliding door that leads to our back porch and pressed their noses against the glass. "Mommy." Rebecca looked up at me with her most imploring look, "can we pleceeez, pleeeez play out in the rain?" I looked at the breakfast dishes still sitting unwashed on the kitchen counter and the pile of laundry waiting to be folded.

"Okey," I said. "Have fun. When slid the door open and stepped out into the downpour. "Come on, Angie," Rebecca yelled like a Marine platoon leader, "let's find some shelter."

While I stacked and washed the while I stacked and washed the dishes, the girls turned their molded on my friend's soggy back porch. Although the sky overhead show a brilliant blue, heavy, black clouds loomed to the west. Thanks, I said, herding my girls toward the door. "We need to get home for Lucy's nap."

Fifteen minutes later as I set Lucy down in her crib, the storm

"NO," they answered together. I could see them talking, playing some make-believe game while I folded white shirts and underwear and socks and laid them in piles on the couch. When I'd stacked the last pile back into the clothes basket, Rebecca knocked on the glass door. "Can we come in?" she asked

Rebecca and Angela stared at me reappeared, Jack and I walked the girls to a park up the hill from our house. The setting sun turned the leftover clouds the color of French vanilla ice cream, rich and yellow. lack and I sat at a picnic table and watched Rebecca, Angela, and Lucy trudge up a small hill. When they reached the top, they turned around reached the top, they turned around and paused for a moment. With Rebecca leading the way, they ran down through the wet grass, arms flailing, feet and legs akimbo. I held my breath, so sure was I that they would pitch toward and fall on their faces. They didn't. We all laughed. As the girls marched back up the hill, Jack joined them. I watched them run for the next ten minutes.

We walked back home together as the sun set behind another bank of clouds. As we headed down the hill, I half expected to see a dove bearing an olive branch fly overhead.
