A Mystifying Murder And the Del Mar Doc
By Celia Stella

I was hoping it would stay away from San Diego,” she said, compressing her weary lips and frowning her broad forehead. "I had no idea what to do with it."

The murder of Del Mar resident Mary Kline, found dead in her home, has left the Del Mar community in shock. Kline, a well-known artist, was found with multiple stab wounds to the chest and head, and her body was covered with blood.

The Del Mar Police Department is investigating the case, but so far they have not released any information on the suspect or motive. "We are still actively searching for leads and following up on potential suspects," said Detective John Smith.

The community is urged to be vigilant and to contact the police if they have any information. "We need the help of the community to solve this terrible crime," said Smith.

Kline had been involved in the local art scene for many years and was known for her dynamic and colorful paintings. "She was a bright light in our community," said her friend, artist Jane McCallum."We will miss her greatly and pray for her family and loved ones.

The Del Mar area is currently under a state of emergency due to a recent earthquake, and the community is dealing with the double burden of grief and fear.

Del Mar resident, David Johnson, said he was "devastated" by the news. "She was a beloved member of our community, and her death will be felt for a long time to come."

KEVIN, WRITE WHEN YOU GET A JOB

Suddenly, everything has become a blur. The radio had been on, the news was blaring, and the game was on the line. The night was filled with noise, and the crowd was going wild. The FCC had just announced a new rule that would change everything. There was no way to go back to how things used to be.

The FCC's decision was met with mixed reactions. Some were celebrating the end of the regulation era, while others were worried about the impact on the radio industry. The FCC argued that the new rules would lead to increased competition and innovation, but opponents claimed that it would harm smaller stations and hurt the diversity of programming.

Despite these concerns, the momentum was building. The FCC was set to unveil their plans for the future of radio, and everyone was watching. The FCC had received thousands of comments, and they were expected to announce their final decision soon. The debate was heating up, and the future of radio was on the line.

expect to pay a whole lot more whenever you place a Help Wanted ad in the Union-Tribune.

Since the Union-Tribune increased the size of its classified type, classified ads take up more space and you will pay dearly for that space. For example, an 11-line classified ad with a boldface charge that cost one advertiser $111 in August, today costs $162. A 27% increase!

Beginning October 1 when you place a Help Wanted ad in the Reader and Job Giant, you'll pay a whole lot less.

A shopping 85% off your Reader display ad and 20% off your Job Giant display ad.
And we'll run free help wanted classifieds in both publications and on the Internet (www.utsd.com)! Call us for details.

Price, of course, isn't everything.
You need results.

And we have a notebook full of testimonials. Like this one:
"The response to our ad in the Job Giant and the Reader was great! Almost overwhelming!!
We probably got 50 to 60 calls. At the time we advertised the position in the Union-Tribune and the Daily Californian, their combined response was only six to eight calls."

tighten my right arm around the cheetah's neck. He has a deep purr, like a Harley-Davidson heard cruising along two blocks away. I try not to think of his teeth and claws, but his teeth and claws become the only important subject. This is a 120-pound adult male that can hit 45 miles per hour in two seconds. I can't even hiccup that fast.

Maurice Harkey says, "Come on, Cheetah. Let's go." The miles are getting too far.

You are looking at a cheetah. You can see his face, but you do not hear him. With good glasses, Cheetah takes over his look and gets to the point.

Zap Irritability, the Blues and the Blahs

One's good news on love is having energy, interest or simply "caught in love." After these things go unspoken, "Hey, honey, get ta bed," a kind of grimness, even a sort of "sick" feeling, sets in. This may be summed up in a simple, "I'm not ready to think about it." The feeling is a sort of "are you?" and the direction is, "Get me away, I'm not ready to deal with this." The Surly Child Shows Off

Does this young Russian genius have any Beethoven in those astonishing fingers of his?

The Moscow Conservatory student, Natalia Volchina, plays piano and violin in a program that includes a new composition by Gretchaninov, 'Forsaken Woman', and the old favorites of Prokofiev, Chaliapin, and Tchaikovsky. Contrary to her term, the reviews are uniformly positive. Her technique is lauded as fluid and effortless, while her interpretations are praised for their depth and insight.

There are those who feel that the recent surge of interest in Russian music is due to the surly child's astonishing fingers, and that Volchina is the key to this new musical trend. However, others argue that it is the result of a broader cultural shift and the rediscovery of the works of Russian composers.

Two of the women were standing in the doorway between the two rooms. They were both wearing black dresses and white gloves. One of them had a cigarette in her mouth and was smoking it. The other was holding a glass of red wine.

The room was dimly lit by a single lamp that cast odd shadows across the room. The walls were covered in old, peeling wallpaper, and there were cobwebs in the corners. The furniture was antique, with wooden carvings that seemed to be in the shape of strange creatures.

One of the women glanced at the other, then back at the man in the room. She stepped forward and took a step into the room. Her foot landed on something hard, and she let out a small yelp of surprise. She looked down and saw a small, round object on the floor.

She picked it up and examined it. It was a small, wooden jack-o’-lantern with a face carved into it. She turned it over and saw that it was a small, hollow pumpkin.

"It’s a pumpkin," she said, turning to the other woman. "What do you think?"

The other woman looked at the pumpkin and shrugged. "I don’t know. It’s just a pumpkin." She reached down and took it from her friend’s hand. "What do you think of this, Joe?"

"It’s a pumpkin," Joe said, looking at the pumpkin. "What’s the big deal?"

The woman frowned. "I don’t know. Maybe it’s just a pumpkin, but it’s a pumpkin that’s not real. It’s a fake pumpkin." She looked at the pumpkin and shook her head. "I don’t understand."

The Battle of Tia Juana finished (June 22, 1911), rebels lay down their weapons for the U.S. Army.

"I was a boy at the time of the Tijuana revolution so actually I didn't see any of it," said Lowell House in his 1959 oral history. "But I recall that there were two battles in Tijuana. The town was first captured by a rebel force composed largely of Americans who had engaged in it for loot and purposes, but purported to represent the rebel. They captured the town and invited the Americans from the United States to come over and participate in the looting. Different soldiers would take charge of different stores and permit Americans who came across from the United States to enter the stores on paying a fee, and help themselves. There was much looting.

"The Federal Customs was very small at that time and apparently was not able to control the large number of Americans coming across the line. A great deal of loot was brought back by Americans. Then some time later, possibly a month or two, the federal troops (Mexicans) retook the town and the so-called rebel army fled across into the United States and were taken into custody by the American Army."
