SMASHED HERITAGE

When leaders of the National Trust for Historic Preservation met in San Diego in March, they were heartened by the city's efforts to revitalize North Park via the trust's Main Street Center program. They also saw, firsthand, results of the Gaslamp Quarter's resurrection.

The warm fuzzy feeling about the city's enthusiasm for historic preservation soon dissipated, however, during a quick tour of downtown just before

I Do Not Need To Be Drunk

It's hurtful that a gregarious person with a hearing disability is reported to be a "drunk" blond waitress ("Diver Down," June 17). I do not need to be drunk to have fun working at Nunu's.

Judy Lynn Watson

Justin Wolff responds: I offer to Judy Lynn Watson an unequivocal apology. Since I never saw a drunk blond waitress at Nunu's when I visited in February 1999, I assumed that Lina's description of "the blond waitress, who would be as drunk as you were by the end of the evening" referred to another waitress who worked at the bar in 1995.

Splendid Indeed

God bless Ulya Losinz and her views on art, education, and life ("America Was My Religion," June 17). The exchange program she proposes — to send American business and legal experts to Russia, and to have their great artists and musicians come here — is a splendid one indeed; I suggest that she submit a specific plan to both the U.S. and Russian governments at once. Then, by the time the proposal has passed through various committees and study groups, the plan may, with luck, be ready for implementation by the time Ulya's four-year-old daughter is a grandmother.

Incredibly Offensive Heterosexist Hegemony

I want to respond to the cover story (June 10). As a member of the gay and lesbian community, I find it incredibly offensive, especially the cover statement in terms of "They Pay Their Rent on Time, etc." making us sound more like pets than actual human beings. Further, I find it just comical that the Reader, of all newspapers, would even attempt to address the gay community, being as previously it may have never included or endorsed them in any way. I was actually at one of your dating-service occasions about a year ago and was told by one of your PR people that you were not allowed to place an ad in the Reader that was for a gay and lesbian relationship; you could put ads under "friendship," but only if they didn't include sex. So that, and then the fact that you seem to ignore all gay and lesbian events seem to me fairly evident of the fact that you do not endorse or support our community. And I think having an article, as this one is, specifically maligning our culture by our bar scene is incredibly offense, and I've found your paper very offensive and hegemonic in terms of celebrating the white upper-class heterosexual culture before, but this time it really goes a little too far. As a member of the gay and lesbian community, I'd really appreciate it if you people just kept your nose out of our business, because obviously you have no understanding or no respect for our community.

I Loved It

I want to inquire what happened to the "Sheep and Goats" column. I loved it, as I have been on a great quest of faith for the past year myself, and I enjoyed reading the ideas that the writer presented. I'm disappointed that it hasn't been in the Reader.

I Miss Sheep

I don't write much so I'll get to the point. Where is "Sheep and Goats"? I haven't seen it in a while and was just wondering. I miss the honest and open opinion of the different churches around San Diego.

Oh my, imagine our reaction at Steve Richards Realty when we saw the letter to the editor (June 10) reacting to a letter from a Steve Richards who used "name calling and verbal abuse." While we did not read the original letter, we do want to be sure no one thinks our mild-mannered real estate broker in Pacific Beach was that author. "Our" Steve Richards is obviously the "kinder, gentler" version. Thank God.

George's next cause With the downtown baseball stadium all tied up in knots, what's the next big municipal controversy to hit San Diego? Insiders say its charter reform. According to several reports, a group of self-appointed civic leaders, including Padres backer George Mitrovich and real estate mogul Malin Burnham, have been meeting with local bigwigs in an attempt to drum up support for a change to a strong-mayor form of government ... Governor Gray Davis has been taking his knocks for failure to fill important appointive jobs in state government. Now Kick Simpson, who Davis named legislative director in January, has handed in his resignation. Simpson, an education expert who guided Davis's education bills to legislative passage this spring, reportedly chafed under the governor's "hands-on" management style, according to last week's Sacramento Bee. His replacement? None other than former San Diego city councilman and assembly member Mike Gotch, the Bee reports. After two terms in the assembly, Gotch stayed in Sacramento to open a lobbying business with his wife ... Besides Gotch, another San Diego transplant to the state's capital is set for a makeover. The owners of the former City of San Diego, a decrepit ferry that used to ply the waters between downtown and Coronado in the days before the bridge, have asked the Sacramento City Council to let them convert the boat into a 500-seat restaurant near Old Sacramento. Renamed the City of Sacramento, the vessel was last owned by the City of Antioch, which auctioned it off after a waterfront redevelopment plan fizzled.

Cutting edge Gun lover Charlton Heston would probably like the latest statistics coming out of the San Diego Unified School District: back in fiscal year 1996, 12 firearms were "recovered" from students. In fiscal 1997, it dropped to 7, went back up to 12 in fiscal '98, and so far this fiscal year, which ends in two weeks, hovers at just 7. "Other Weapons Recovered," however, have been growing apace, with 108 seized in 1997, 154 in 1998, and, so far this fiscal year, 184 ... When House Minority Whip David Bonoir toured Tijuana in April of last year to highlight the shortcomings of NAFTA, it was national news. Now Bonoir is making news again: his recent financial-disclosure statement shows that the Tijuana trip was paid for by an outfit called Citizens Trade Campaign, sponsored by big labor.

It's not payola, really it's not It's time again for the Del Mar Fair and the usual round of hyperpublicity that greets the annual state-owned extravaganza. Before the fair gets underway each year, local media types partake in a lavish party that sources say is meant to ensure their goodwill during the run of the event. This year was no exception, with 1500 invites going out to the staffs of virtually every local media outlet in the county, from Airwatch America to the Microsoft Sidewalk website to the Valley Center Roadrunner. According to a list of RSVPs furnished by the fair, the free party was particularly popular at KFMB-TV, channel 8, where the number of party passes requested by employees who phoned to say they'd be attending totalled 96. At channel 10, KGTV, the number was 51; at NBC affiliate channel 39, KNSD, it was 40; at independents KUSI, channel 51, and KSWB, channel 69, it was 34 and 11, respectively. Places were held for 8 representatives of public station KPBS. Print media also took advantage of the fair's offer of good cheer, with staffers at the Union-Tribune calling in to reserve 87 spots, representatives from the North County Times booking 28 admissions, and employees of the Daily Californian calling for 14. Reservation recipients at each of the papers ranged from editors to reporters to photographers, according to the list supplied by the fair, which says that it doesn't know whether all who called in actually went to the party. "We also did not keep a headcount. Because of the prior night's rain and day's cold and windy weather, attendance was down somewhat from past years," wrote fair information officer Mike Walker. "My estimate is that attendance was in the 650–700 range over the course of the evening." He added that the fair "is self-supporting and does not receive any taxpayer revenues to support its activities," including the party.

Crime scene of Sammy Ippolito shooting

La Cosa Nostra Condo

By Bill Manson

It was March 10, 1998. A Tuesday. Early afternoon. Jim Schield and some colleagues pulled up quietly outside a block of condos in the tongue of land that hangs down into Mission Bay with Ingraham Street as its main artery. Number 3916 Riviera Drive. They glanced up at Unit 209. Inside, they hoped, was their man.

They had staked the place out before. All indications were that Neil G. Lombardo, alias Joseph Mercadante, and his wife, Maria, also known by her maiden name Maria Perrotta, also known by her alias Maria Soto, lived there with their kids, a son and a daughter.

It was just a case of getting lucky. Lombardo was as slippery as an eel, they believed; he knew the way cops, and especially U.S. marshals like Schield, operated. He had been on the run, successfully "disappeared" from New Jersey for seven years, ever since he'd stopped showing up at appointments with his parole officer in New Jersey in 1992. This was serious. He had been let out on parole after nearly a decade behind federal bars after being convicted on drug distribution charges.

But that problem paled in comparison to the job he allegedly botched on December 9, 1997. Authorities accuse him of trying to murder then-31-year-old Samuel Ippolito. Samuel's older and much-better-known brother Joseph Ippolito, 47, is serving a ten-year sentence for a federal narcotics offense. According to the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation, "Joey Ipp," as he is known, had ties to the Lucchese and DeCavalcante crime families. But then in 1997, word came out that Joey Ipp had decided to cooperate with the authorities in a drug probe.

In December of that year, New Jersey authorities say, Lombardo decided to — or was asked to — rub out Joey's brother Sammy to send a message to Joey to stop cooperating. If Lombardo was the hit man, he certainly didn't fail for lack of trying.

"Witnesses described the attempted murder as a ferocious attack upon [Samuel] Ippolito which began when he left his [Point Pleasant Beach] house for a quick trip to a nearby convenience store," reported Neptune, New Jersey's Ashbury Park Press last December 20. "Authorities contend Lombardo shot Ippolito in his chest and neck at point-blank range, and then, while in a car with another man, who has not been identified, ran over Ippolito, breaking his leg.

"After Ippolito was shot once, and run over by [the] car, an occupant of the car got out, lifted Ippolito off his feet and threw him several feet, witnesses said. Ippolito then was shot at least once more, although one witness reported hearing two additional shots.

"Investigators found two spent bullet shells on the sidewalk; one was found underneath a pile of Ippolito's blood-soaked clothes."

The paper says Patrolman Peter Z. Andreyev rushed in and provided first aid. Andreyev wrote in his report, "This officer asked the victim who had done this. And he replied, 'Neil Lombardo of Staten Island.' "

Then Ippolito told him, "Contact my brother [Joey] and he'll tell you why [Lombardo] shot me," according to what executive assistant Ocean County Prosecutor John J. Mercun told the paper.

3916 Riviera Shores

"Actually, the statement was taken by [the] police officer as a [death-bed] declaration," Ippolito's defense lawyer Thomas G. Roth later told a New Jersey superior court judge, "because nobody believed back in December of 1997 that Mr. Ippolito would live."

But live he did — to face multiple drug charges. When cops went into Sammy's house to see if there were any more victims of Neil Lombardo's alleged ire, they discovered large amounts of marijuana, quantities of heroin, and other drugs stuffed in plastic bags in closets, kitchen cabinets, and underneath beds. And in the hospital's ER where they took Sammy, they found two packets of heroin in his pants pocket.

But Sammy's brother Joey was no punk wrecking his life on the stuff that was supposed to make him rich. It shows how high Lombardo had climbed, that Joey, the guy he was trying to send a message to, had connections that went all the way to O.J. Simpson — if you believe Donald Freed and Raymond P. Briggs in their 1996 book Killing Time.

"Joey Ippolito is second-generation Mafia, one of several powerful successors of Meyer Lansky," say Freed and Briggs, quoting historian Alex Constantine. "Ippolito's influence in the Combination [organized crime] is felt from Philadelphia to Dade County, Florida, to

Sisterhood of The Damned

By Bill Manson

Can Palermo, Sicily, help save Tijuana from its crime wave? The surprising answer is maybe, even though Palermo is known as the headquarters of the Sicilian Mafia.

Tijuana teachers are learning that, as in Sicily, you have to start with the kids. Kids are easy pickings for drug dealers and gang members here at Delegación de la Presa, at the top of the Tijuana valley, where mothers all work at maquiladoras and fathers labor on building sites or are away "on the other side," working in North America.

Filemón Moreno Nuñez, 36, remembers what it was like before he started teaching in the neighborhood. Drug dealers would gather under the Mulberry trees at the school entrance near the low cinder-block houses and offer the kids samples or cut them in on the dealing inside. This is why Moreno is teaching these 13-year-olds values.

(He asked that his secundaria high school not be identified, so ongoing studies comparing it with other schools that don't benefit from the course he teaches there would not be influenced.)

"What's more important to teach?" Moreno says before class. "Once, only the gang members taught them values. 'Sell drugs. Get rich. Forget tomorrow. Don't worry about society.' Now I teach them values too, values to armor them with so they can speak out, not be silent and frightened anymore.

In his classes, Moreno teaches self-esteem, culture, reality, rules, laws, customs, and the conventions of civilization. "Especially when you break the law, the law and moral dilemmas, the law, justice and equality.

He also teaches the cold, unlovely realities of life in the ranks of organized crime and corrupt officials: how organized crime really functions; the business of organized crime, gangs, and drugs; organized crime and violence; and the danger of being a member of a gang.

Right now he's got 25 15- and 16-year-olds jotting down a list of good and bad tendencies and of the consequence of good and bad habits, virtue/vice; happiness/perdition; life/death.

What has this to do with Palermo, Sicily? Both cities have attracted plagues of criminal organizations. Both have had escalating robbery and murder rates. Both have had populations intimidated into silence by the violent people around them.

One difference is that Palermo's plague, the Mafia, has had its foothold in Palermo longer than the Arellano brothers have had theirs in Tijuana.

"Tijuana today is something like Palermo was a decade ago," Leoluca Orlando told journalists recently. Orlando, who is famous as Palermo's first anti-Mafia mayor, wants Tijuana to become Palermo's sister-city. "But people are starting to understand it's necessary to do something about organized crime. It is not possible to build a future unless you oppose the Mafia. And politicians, businessmen, normal people, even the church must speak out more strongly against organized crime."

Orlando speaks from experience. He came to power after mob hit men assassinated two crusading prosecutors in 1992. Protests broke out throughout the city. "Teachers, parents, and students rallied to demand that money pocketed by dishonest officials be used for new schools," said a report by the teacher-parent group CIVITAS.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JOE KLEIN

Filemón Moreno Nuñez in the classroom

CIVITAS International is a network of teachers and parents organizing against crime in more than 50 countries. It has come to the same conclusion as many teachers in crime-heavy Tijuana: it's time to start a culture war against criminals.

"Classes of students 'adopted' architectural and cultural monuments and demanded that they be restored," continues the report. "Priests called on their parishes to cooperate with law enforcement; journalists exposed tainted dealings; judges and prosecutors went after crime bosses."

Over the next three years, hundreds of Italian mobsters were arrested. Murders went down from 240 ten years ago to 7 last year, according to Orlando. Palermo went off the country's — and the world's — ten most violent cities list.

"The struggle against crime," said a report by CIVITAS, "is most effective when citizens themselves...stand up, expose abuses and make institutions of democracy work."

"To paraphrase the Mayor of Palermo," says Jeffrey Berman, a researcher from Georgetown University who was in San Diego-Tijuana last week looking at Filemón Moreno's work, " 'There are two wheels on a cart. In order for a cart to function and go down the street, both wheels have to turn at the same time — one wheel being traditional law enforcement, stopping people from committing crimes. And the second wheel on the cart, changing cultural values and societal norms.'

Berman and his boss Roy Godson, a professor in government at Georgetown who specializes in what he calls the "explosive growth of organized crime and corruption around the world," are the focal points for a new experiment in preparing children to deal with drugs and crime by educating them with an intensive 12-week course in values. Filemón Moreno's class and others in San Diego-Tijuana are pilot projects to iron out the kinks before the full pilot program begins next school year.

"Two years ago, in October 1997, we organized a conference in Mexico City for civic educators from around the world," says Berman. "It looked at the need to promote the culture of lawfulness, and the role that civic education can play in promoting this culture, and how crime and corruption hurts democratic movements and democratic institutions around the world. And as part of that conference, we looked at the successful efforts in Palermo, how they combined both traditional law-enforcement approach and a cultural approach, because there are problems with the Sicilian Mafia there."

Berman says that out of that Mexico City discussion came a recognition that there were lessons to be learned from Palermo's experience. "And the experience of Hong Kong as well," he says. "They've done some remarkable successful efforts there in changing societal values, not eliminating, but clearly beating back Chinese organized crime, the triads. That's a documented 25-year effort. So the interesting question is, can this effort be replicated and brought to this area?"

Yes, says Rosalía Salinas of San Diego's County Office of Education, who was inspired by the Mexico City conference. "This project to promote lawfulness," she says, "is a beautiful idea. And [professor Godson's] National Strategy Center out of Washington, D.C., as the facilitator-coordinator, has implemented a very small pilot [project] here in San Diego-Tijuana. But it is the perfect laboratory."

"There are three parts to the curriculum," explains Berman. "What it's trying to do is provide kids with substantive knowledge about the dangers of crime and corruption, so they demystify it and deglorify it, and at the same time provide the students with resistance techniques that help them do more than 'just say no.'

"For instance, what do you do if you're a 12-, 13-, 14-, 15-year-old kid, and somebody says, 'Here's $100. Take this package. Don't worry about it. There's nothing wrong with it. Take this package into school and deliver it to so-and-so.' For kids in Tijuana, kids in San Diego, kids anywhere, that's a very hard thing not to take the money.

"So that's what they're trying to do with this curriculum. They're presenting the kids with different scenarios and then letting them work their way through it, so they learn what works, what doesn't work.

"It's also showing them through the substantive part of it that the road towards crime and corruption is a very slippery slope, and you can get on it very innocently and innocuously without realizing what you've done. But once you get on that road, it's awfully hard to get off."

Berman says the curriculum is divided into three parts. "The first part looks at values, ethics, decision-making, and you get

Southern California. A former speedboat racer, he headed for California in 1988 after completing a 30-month prison sentence for marijuana smuggling. He opened, without flourish, Gerri Aarti, a fashionable Italian restaurant in Malibu, and distributed cocaine in Santa Monica and Brentwood."

Freed and Briggs claim O.J. Simpson's close buddy A.C. Cowlings was "allegedly an occasional bodyguard to Ippolito. When police came to arrest the gangster and found Cowlings visiting, they also questioned him about Joey the Ip's [sic] business."

The authors also quote an August 24, 1994, Boston Herald article by Ralph Ranalli on the Joey Ippolito-Cowlings-Simpson connection.

"Cowlings was a close associate of New Jersey Mafia soldier Joseph 'Joey' Ippolito when Ippolito was running a popular Santa Monica restaurant — and a thriving cocaine-dealing business.... Telephone records for the restaurant, obtained by federal prosecutors and the FBI in Los Angeles, also show calls from Ippolito's restaurant to O.J. Simpson's Brentwood estate...sources said."

But what about Neil Lombardo and the Pacific Beach connection? "As a fugitive he was very good," says John Cuff, a Newark, New Jersey–based U.S. Marshal's Service officer. Cuff is the man who tracked Lombardo down to San Diego. "Lombardo was on the run successfully for, what? [Seven] years? Our group, HIDTA [High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area] didn't get involved until after the shooting [of Samuel Ippolito]. It took us three months to [catch up with] him. We put an intense effort on it. He covered his tracks well. He successfully established a new identity. He maintained a network [of friends, safe houses], we believe."

San Diego's Jim Schields, supervisor of enforcement operations for the U.S. Marshal's Service, Southern District, and coordinator for the Fugitive Group of the Violent Crime Task Force, agrees.

"Lombardo was good at being a fugitive, and he managed to do that for a number of years, since 1992. And he knew how law enforcement worked. He knew the system. There's no doubt that he is an intelligent individual. I don't know if he was a 'made man.' I know that he had ties and associations with organized crime."

Did that make Lombardo a danger to his neighbors in the Mission Bay condos at 3916 Riviera Drive? "No. I think he felt he had just kind of assimilated here, the Southern California dress and attire and lifestyle.

"I think he had a feeling that he was pretty safe. He left the impression that he had a safe hiding place."

He did have a new name. Actually several new names. He had no obvious need for a regular job, he drove two cars, including a gold Lincoln, registered in the name of the friend whose moniker he had also borrowed, Donald Mercadante. He gave no impression of preparing to flee.

"He felt he was safe," says Schield.

But he wasn't. Last month's New York Law Journal outlines what happened next. Based on an affidavit Jim Schield penned in support of the application for a search warrant of Lombardo's condo, the Journal details how the marshals closed in on their man.

"Schield's affidavit detailed the [marshals'] tracking of Lombardo in New York City, Pennsylvania, and California, through information provided by a cooperating witness and uncovered by subpoenaing records of telephone calls made from telephones associated with a girlfriend of Lombardo, Lombardo's associate Donald Mercadante, and Lombardo's family. Calls were frequently made with the use of debit cards, from public pay phones, and to a pager purchased two days after Ippolito was shot. A call originating from a telephone number listed to a Maria Soto [a name they knew was an alias for Lombardo's wife, Maria Perrotta] at 3916 Riviera Drive, Unit 209, led investigators to the condominium complex [in San Diego]. The telephone had been activated five months after Lombardo became a fugitive in 1992.

"A representative of the property manager at the condominium complex on March 6, 1998, told law enforcement that he knew the residents of 3916 Riviera, unit 209 to be 'Joseph and Maria Mercadante' and that they had two children. The representative identified photographs of Lombardo and Maria Perrotta as the residents. A four-door Delta 88 was observed parked near 3916 Riviera Drive with a California license plate registered to a Donald Mercadante in San Diego."

After seven years, Neil Lombardo had been found.

Was it the kids, that Tuesday afternoon, March 10, who begged their dad to walk on the beach with them? Did he say, "Okay, let's go!" not realizing it would expose him to Jim Schield's field glasses?

"We had been watching this residence for a while," says Schield. "We knew that Mr. Lombardo had come and gone from that residence on a regular basis. But we weren't sure when he was going, so by there so we were watching it periodically. That day, we happened to spot him down on the beach. We called in additional units from our Violent Crimes Task Force and surrounded the place."

"Shortly thereafter," says Schield's affidavit, "a gold Lincoln... was observed leaving the complex. San Diego police stopped the car and identified Maria Perrotta as the driver. Perrotta initially denied knowing Lombardo but then reported that Lombardo was in unit 209 with their children. Surveillance units observed Lombardo [back from the beach] walking around the condominium complex."

"I had a feeling that he may have spotted some of our surveillance crew," Schield says. "Or some of the additional responding units. That may have caused him to decide that he was going to leave and try to send his wife out as a decoy to draw our attention away. But we had enough people that we were able to cover both of those situations.

"Things happened rather quickly. He exited the residence and was attempting to jump over a fence when our people moved in and arrested him. He's not a very large man. But he was fit, I think he has the potential to be aggressive and violent, but we just didn't give him a chance."

Neil Lombardo was taken to the downtown Metropolitan Correctional Center and finally was loaded aboard a Marshal's plane for New York. Last July, in Ocean County, New Jersey, they charged Lombardo with a total of ten crimes, including attempted murder. In October, a federal indictment returned by a grand jury also accused him of shooting Samuel Ippolito. He is still awaiting trial.

But why did he choose San Diego? Was it contacts? Schield says it certainly wasn't anything to do with the condo's owners. He says they had no cause to know anything of the Lombardos' background.

"Absolutely not. [The owner] is an innocent third party," says Schield. "I think [Lombardo] chose San Diego because of its close proximity to the international border, he could have all the amenities for living in the United States with an opportunity to drive south and get into another country. That is the reason a lot of [criminal] people do come here. Because they have the direct access to the international border if they need to have a quick getaway. You go to Tijuana, and you can get to just about anywhere in the world." ■ through to students, that your decisions have consequences, and you've got to make the right decisions in life, on any subject matter.

"The second part deals with 'What is crime? What is corruption?

"It shows the cold, hard reality of how bad it really is to get involved in this," reads the report. "There are no rich criminals who have retired and lived happily ever after. You either wind up dead or in prison."

The third part of the curriculum deals with resistance techniques.

Back in the classroom in Delegación de la Presa, Filemón Moreno is waxing philosophical. The discussion is about soul, the universe, liquid, solid and gaseous matter; life itself. And his class is completely engaged. Part of the reason, they say, is that Moreno has already changed their lives, by motivating them to act for themselves. The kids have learned to turn their backs on gangs when they come around the school.

Dealers used to crowd the road outside this school, looking sell drugs. "Now look," the students say, pointing to the empty road.

"Well, there's still a lot of selling and buying," says Paulo Salazar, 16. "You can get it outside the school if you know the right people. But [Filemón Moreno] has taught us to look at the consequences."

"I don't mix with those people," says Julia Zacarías, 17. "Before I didn't know that drugs could provoke so many bad things. Now, thanks to this class, it is easier to argue back on drugs."

"Yes, it has changed things for me," says Martina, who's 15.

"When I am going to do something wrong I think about what he tells me. I go ahead and read my notebook, so I can change a little bit. The most important things we have been taught are about corruption, and about drugs, and the sexual life. But the most important thing is about drugs."

On September 29, Mayor Francisco Vega de la Madrid plans to return the compliment and host a CIVITAS anti-corruption conference in Tijuana. According to organizers, the idea is to build civic resistance to crime, to get people to speak out against the Mafia, to break the silence. ■

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

Illustration by Rick Geary

Dear Matt:
What would happen if two Y chromosomes were fused together? If XX is female, and XY is male, what would YY be?

— SB at college

You'd think that a YY baby would be a potential WWF star, but no such luck. So let's talk fish, where this YY tinkering seems to have paid off in real cash. Aquaculturists raising food fish called tilapias, perch-like things, noticed the fish reached maturity fast, reproduced like crazy, crowded the ponds, and therefore never grew to profitable size. What to do, what to do. After five years of fiddling and pondering, they hit upon the idea of using fish sex hormones to reverse the gender of some male tilapias so they could be mated with other males. (Sexual identity in some of the fish world is tenuous, at best.) Researchers persisted in this gender bending, checking chromosomes in the offspring, until they had a small stock of fish that were YY males. When these superfish were mated with your ordinary XX females, about 95% of the babies were male (ordinary XY types). The females of this weird union remained sexually immature, so the pond eventually became a scaly stag party. With no overcrowding, the fish got big and fat and marketable.

In people and most other animals, the Y chromosome is the weak link in the genetic chain. If you look at a portrait of Ma and Pa Chromosome, you'll note that Pa has an amputated leg and he's real deficient in the DNA department. Ma, on the other hand, is packed with genetic information. Men and women get most of their characteristics from their X chromosomes; the Y kicks in after a few weeks in utero to turn the hermaphroditic baby into a boy. And that's pretty much all the Y is about.

There is a genetic condition in which males get an extra Y chromosome (XYY). Some wrongheaded research suggested this made males aggressive and good candidates for a criminal career. Later, it was determined that XYY might cause a slightly lower IQ, but not the urge to rob a bank.

And while we're on the subject...(of babies, not low IQs)...

Mattaboy!
My wife and I found out recently that she is pregnant, which brought to mind that old phrase, "The rabbit done died." This got me thinking about that wacky scientific/medical practice of using rabbits as a pregnancy test, and now I need some answers. What exactly did they do to the rabbit? Who came up with this? When? How? Why rabbits? Help me out, Matt.

— P, the net

He done died, eh. Well, I done found out what killed him. Her, actually. Wacky or not, the rabbit test was the first reliable medical pregnancy test, aside from waiting nine months. It was developed by a researcher in physiology at the University of Pennsylvania in the 1930s. Urine from a woman who suspected she was pregnant was injected into a female rabbit. Pregnant-lady urine contains a lot of chorionic gonadotrophin. If the woman was pregnant, the hormone jolt would cause the rabbit's ovaries to enlarge and develop characteristic surface changes. Unfortunately, the only way to read the test results was to open up bunny and look around. So it wasn't so much that the rabbit done died; more like the rabbit was done in. Hold on a moment while I envision a shelf full of 1950s-era home pregnancy tests. Lots of wiggling noses and a big knife.

Uphill 25%, Downhill 16%
To: Matthew Alice
From: Steve, Bay Park (not a science major)
Perhaps when you drove up Illion Street, the sight of the sky filling your windshield distracted you from your rearview mirror. When you drove down Illion, a sign announces that the grade is 16%, not the 25% that you claim. Is the hill steeper going up than coming down?

The elves are sick of the subject and refused to touch this one. So I've scrounged through their notes to see what's up. Or down, as the case may be. And it seems if you calculate the total grade on Illion, from Gardena to the top of the hill north of the church, you (or the elves, anyway) get 16.7%. But we only calculated the steepest tenth of a mile north of Gardena. Knowing a bit about the system, I figure it would be a life's work to trace back the origin of the city sign. I'll leave that to you.

Aliens Make Crank Calls to Hillcrest!
Dear Matthew Alice:
This may help. Mystified in Hillcrest. I had the same problem. My cordless phone rang once at about 12:30 a.m. every morning. I called the company that made the phone (not Pacific Bell). They said it was probably a satellite going over my house at the same time every day. They suggested that I change channels, as all cordless phones have 10 or 25 or whatever different channels. My own solution was to turn off the ringer.

— Matt's Helper, San Diego

We'll snoop around a little bit on this answer, but so far this is definitely the coolest suggestion we've heard.

Got a question you need answered? Get it straight from the hip. Write to Matthew Alice, c/o the Reader, P. O. Box 85803, San Diego, CA 92186-5803, or fax your questions to 619-231-0489, or e-mail to matmail@aol.com via the Internet.

UNDERSTANDING. TRUSTWORTHY. COMPETENT.

SPORTING BOX

I am concerned and depressed. Our Padres are in last place and sinking. At the same time filthy environmentalists and nervous Nellies have gotten to a Superior Court Judge, one Judith McConnell. The wench has issued an order halting all governmental land acquisition for the new Padres' stadium.

I am at a loss to explain this. Plus, it's bedtime and I can't sleep. One searches for hope, one picks up the Yellow Pages. It takes but a moment to place a call to the Santee office of San Diego Bail Bonds. I was drawn by their two page ad picturing a middle-aged male, dressed in a black suit, white shirt, and red tie. The smiling man is behind bars, but the bars are bent outwards leaving ample room to escape. I find this to be an uplifting image.

Ring-ring. A male voice answers, "Office."

I introduce self and say, "I'm calling bail bond offices asking anyone who answers the phone about the San Diego Padres' problems. We're in last place and some wacko judge has just croaked the new ball park. What does it mean?"

Silence.

"Padres. San Diego Padres."

No useful information was gleaned during that conversation. I am wildly disappointed and immediately call King Stahlman Bail Bonds, then Absolute, then A-1. Nothing. I turn to Aladdin Bail Bonds. A woman picks up the phone. She has a low voice. I imagine her to be a neighborhood bartendress, someone who has seen it all, perhaps a bit rough around the edges, but still, a lady who has kept an open heart. "What do you think about the Padres and this environmental ruling?"

"You've got to check all that environmental stuff out or they'll be a lot of problems later on."

"Do you follow the Pods?"

"Yeah, a little bit. I watch it once I get to work."

"Has a customer ever come into your office and talked about the Padres or wore a Padres cap?"

"Oh, yeah, lots of guys."

Hmm. Defendants and Padres. I decide to burrow in deeper. "What's fun about the bail bond business?"

"I bailed out a guy last night. If I hadn't run into him a couple of nights ago, and if he hadn't seen the bail bond stickers on my car, he probably wouldn't have gotten bailed out by anybody in this town. He'd only been here a month and didn't know anybody. Probably no one would have taken the time to make all the phone calls. I made so many phone calls yesterday. I finally found his dad, got the kid bailed out, and did him a big favor. That makes me happy."

"Where did you bump into him?"

"He worked at a hotel. I pulled in to park my car. He was outside, saw my stickers, and remarked, 'Oh, bail bonds! You work over there?' This just happened, not even a week ago. He asked if I worked in a nice place. I said, 'Yeah,' and he said, 'Well, you never know. I might need you.' I told him if he ever got in trouble to call and ask for Patty. And sure enough, he calls me Sunday."

Patty told a nice story, but had scant Padres news. I return to my phone book and confront Sharon's Bail Bonds. "24-Hour Service. Understanding. Trustworthy. Competent. Confidential. Professional. Quick Release." But, that's not the reason I called. And it wasn't the color photograph of three women dressed in business suits standing with their hands clasped together as if in prayer. No, what got me to call was the little imprint on the lower left corner of their ad. The imprint was a rendering of a Jesuit mission. Next to it was written, "I John 3:16."

"Hello, I'm calling about the Padres and . . ."

"Oh, it's me again."

"Patty!" I am filled with delight, like spotting an old friend in a strange, new place. "I see, you have different ads, people respond to the different ads, but all the calls go to the same place."

"Yup, yup. We own a lot of different companies."

"I called because of the three prayerful women and the Bible quote."

"That's Sharon's ad."

"What does Sharon's Bible quote say?"

"I have no idea. We bought that company."

"There's a Bible in my bedroom, shall we look it up?"

"Sure."

I retrieve the Good Book and return to the phone. Patty says, "You'd be surprised how many women call and ask if I'm a Christian bail bondsman. I always go, 'Yes, I am.' I'm not going to tell them any different."

I am busy riffling through the text. "John 1, John 2, John 3, ah yes, I John 3:16. 'We know love by this, that he laid down his life for us – and we ought to lay down our lives for one another.'" Hmmm. "Patty, I don't see a connection to bail bonds, much less the San Diego Padres."

"I don't either."

It's over. Environmentalists and their heathen feminist allies have won again. Our billion-dollar taxpayer funded stadium may not be built after all. I bid Patty farewell, then ask a last question. "Where did Sharon and her sisters go?"

"Those three? They work for us."

"Why Do Children Raised in a Christian Home Stray Away from God?" was the title of Pastor Allen Rudow's Father's Day sermon at Our Redeemer Lutheran Church in East San Diego. During his talk, Pastor Rudow alluded to his own child-rearing experiences, not all of which were positive. One of his six children, a daughter, it seems, has detoured from the straight and narrow, or at least gone AWOL from Missouri Synod Lutheranism. Pastor Rudow spoke about this child as if the details of her defection were well-known to the congregation, if not the nation. After the service, when I asked Pastor Rudow to elaborate how his daughter had strayed, he declined to comment, saying he preferred the matter remain within the confines of his church.

I then couldn't help but imagine all sorts of interesting things, and later, when at home, I went online and searched several databases, using strings of terms like "Lutheran pastor AND daughter AND most wanted AND bank heist" and "Lutheran pastor AND daughter AND nuclear missiles AND China." I found nothing. Pastor Rudow's daughter is perhaps no longer a Missouri Synod Lutheran, but she is not infamously so.

Pastor Rudow's congregation was even less forthcoming. They were unwilling to gossip with me about his daughter — "I really wouldn't know anything about that"; "If he ever mentioned anything about his daughter, I'm sure I've forgotten it" — and they wouldn't discuss the difficulties that over the past two years have dwindled their congregation from over 1000 to only 400 members. The best you could get out of them was distracted murmurings about "resistance to change" and "we're a very diverse congregation." Forty-year-old Elder David Lowe, who's attended the church since 1960, was a little more open.

"This past year," he said, "has been one of the most difficult in my life."

The situation he described was one common to many urban churches. Our Redeemer's core membership — older whites who contribute heavily to the church — are having a difficult time accepting change. Many different races now live in Our Redeemer's once predominately white neighborhood. Blacks, Hispanics, and a large number of Filipinos have started attending the church. Young white couples, some of whom home-school their children, have started attending, too. All these people have their own ideas about the kinds of worship and services the church should provide.

"It's extremely hard," says Elder Lowe, "to get everyone to agree."

In addition, the church has gone through several pastors over the past two years. (Pastor Rudow is serving in an interim capacity.) The process of finding an appropriate candidate to lead Our Redeemer has been trying too.

"None of the elders," says Elder Lowe, "decided to run for a second term. We all felt kind of beaten up."

Our Redeemer nonetheless gives the appearance of tranquility. Planted next to Highway 94, its exterior is unexceptional, but the sanctuary surprises with its softly lit cavernousness, its vaulted, open-beam ceiling. The floor is raked downward at a gentle angle toward the altar rail. A huge stained glass window in brilliant blues and yellows shines in a wall far above the high altar. When I walked into the church last Sunday morning, a flutist and violinist sat in one corner practicing the music they would play during Communion. You get the impression that Our Redeemer is, if not well-off, at least financially comfortable.

Before the rapid changes in pastors and the various internal squabbles, the church attracted members from 69 local zip codes. From the highly polished pews, the extravagant flower arrangement on the high altar, the dozen varieties of donuts offered in the social hall, you get a sense of how much the congregation cares for the church and an idea of the church's potential. Notes and cards on the social hall bulletin board attest that the congregation's sick are well looked after. One woman wrote that while in the hospital, some folks at Our Redeemer sent her cards not once, but two or three times. She said she owed her speedy recovery to the congregation's prayers.

There's a lot of good will at Our Redeemer. Guests are greeted warmly. The older people I met at last Sunday's 8:30 a.m. "traditional service" treated me with what I felt was genuine affection — they patted my back, pumped my hand, squeezed my shoulder by way of greeting. They were happy to see a new face. After talking with Elder Lowe, I wondered if Our Redeemer's troubles stemmed from too much love rather than from indifference.

"I've been coming here since I was a baby," Elder Lowe told me. "And it hasn't always been easy. Of course, I could have left and gone to another church. At times I've been tempted. But this is where I grew up. I have many memories connected to this place. My roots are here. This is my home."

SIGHTSEER

Ice and Sex

Though they have won the West Coast Hockey League's Taylor Cup championship several times, the San Diego Gulls find it hard to promote their sport in this surfing city. Spectators exhibited more fanaticism about hockey at the small, isolated Maine college where I went to school than they do in Southern California. On game nights, thousands of drunk students and locals packed the frigid rink where the Bowdoin Polar Bears played hockey. We shouted profanities at opposing teams, and when our team scored a goal, fans would throw fish at the humiliated goalie. Play would stop so the skaters could clear smelt, cod, and bluefish from the ice. Because they had such fans, the Polar Bears didn't need cheerleaders. But who's ever heard of hockey cheerleaders anyway?

A banner that scrolls across the top of the San Diego Gulls Girls website (www.gullsgirls.com) reads, "Intermission is more than just the Zamboni!" To say the least: intermission at Gulls games this 1998–1999 season has been Julie, Glynn, Erin, Shelby, Patty, Corina, Tiffany, Roxy, Brianne, Zabrena, Valerie, Cat, Jackee, Kristi, Angie, Christine, Lilah, Nicole, and Debbie. "The San Diego Gulls Girls," the site explains, "are a professional dance team, composed of talented dancers, models, and figure skaters [from] throughout Southern California...." The Gulls Girls "perform exciting dance and figure-skating routines" at "center ice at the San Diego Sports Arena...."

The Gulls Girls have blazed trails in the cheerleading world. Originally known as the Blades, the girls were supposed to be the pep squad for the San Diego Barracudas Roller Hockey Organization but were stranded when the Barracudas withdrew from the 1997 roller hockey season. When they first took the ice in 1997, there were no other hockey cheering squads they could study for tips on routines, attire, and most importantly, safety. None of the girls had ever danced on ice before, and the idea was a bit daunting at first. "We've had several practices on the ice," said Gulls Girls director Julie Daniels in 1997, "and we're getting more comfortable.... We go on before the Zamboni, so the ice is dirty and not as slippery."

"The first time we practiced on the ice, we were all tiptoeing," said ex–Gulls Girl Bernadette Bautista. "But it's really not as slippery as we thought, it's more the mental aspect of walking on ice."

With the introduction of new "high-traction" shoes this season, the squad's repertoire has expanded. "Our ability last year was limited in terms of what we could choreograph on the ice, now with the new shoes we can do anything," says director Daniels. The Gulls Girls now perform three different ice routines: jazz, hip-hop, and novelty numbers.

Hockey is not a sexy sport. For whatever reason, hockey players are the ugliest professional athletes, and not just because they miss teeth and have mounds of scar tissue on their foreheads. So besides learning to dance on ice, the biggest challenge the Gulls Girls faced was appealing to rough-and-tumble hockey fans, most of whom enjoy Pabst, body checks, and fist fights more than pompoms and spunky, rhyming cheers. Not to be deterred in their quest for celebrity, the Girls used a little business acumen and a lot of plastic surgery to sell their show to Gulls fans. "It's odd having cheerleaders in hockey," admits Bautista, "but as the fans saw the cheerleaders they really got into it." Another dancer, Brianne Gilchrist, explains, "The fans were very responsive. We greeted them at the doors and they were very positive." Now the fans are less tentative: "We really made a hit at the arena," Daniels says. "We're most popular with teenage boys...."

"It's odd having cheerleaders in hockey, but as the fans saw the cheerleaders they really got into it."

Success on the ice was not the Girls' only ambition, however. In order for the members of the squad to make a living, they had to reach out to the larger community. Performing at local charity events and promotions is admirable, but calendars and posters bring in the money. Ice and sex, however, don't mix: why would teenage boys buy posters of frigid women wrapped in scarves and down jackets? One way to overcome obstacles is to ignore them, so in a capricious move, the Girls opted for heat. "Finally, a calendar for the die-hard San Diego Gulls Hockey fan," the ad reads, "and anyone who would like to spice up their walls with a little Southern California scenery!"

In the Gulls Girls racy pictorials posted at their website, you won't see any references to hockey. Rather than showing themselves illuminated by cold stadium lighting, the Girls moved things outside, into the warm San Diego sun. Pictured with the Coronado Bridge in the background, the girls wear swimsuits and frolic in warm pools of water; they look more like water polo boosters than hockey cheerleaders. So hooray for the Gulls Girls, the pep squad you can put on ice but can't cool down.

Hemingway at Taco Bell

The author

When she asks me what I do for a living I tell her, "I'm with Pepsi-Cola, restaurant division. La Jolla."

I am looking at a job application for Jack In The Box and trying to talk myself out of turning the thing in. I have enough Prozac to see me through this — it is a means to an end pure and simple. suck it up, just do it — and I need the job to pay for the Prozac that I'm going to need to do the job and so on.

How did this happen? I am 47 years old with no marketable skills other than guitar playing and prose writing. But Christmas was, as they say, just around the corner and, shit, so is Jack In The Box.

I can't live on what I make even if I get this job, but maybe I can stop some of the financial bleeding and get a couple of Christmas gifts. Maybe I can use the experience in a big, realistic novel about America in the '90s — sort of like Bonfire of the Vanities only instead of a stockbroker, my character will be a fry cook. I will tell myself anything at this point to keep my head out of the oven.

The application in my jacket pocket, I walk home from Vons with my girlfriend, juggling bags of groceries. I pause in front of smiling Jack's clowny countenance and say, "I've got to stop in here for a minute."

"You're going to eat something from E. Coli in the Box? You always tell me not to eat there."

"I'm going to turn in a job application," I say casually, as if the idea just occurred to me on a whim and I hadn't been awake from 4:30 to 6:00 a.m. thinking about bills and eating Pepcid AC. "Why not?" I shrug.

"Why don't you just do some more writing?" She suggests this as if I hadn't thought of it: Why not just toss off an article or book proposal the next time you're in the bathroom for 45 minutes? Actually, she doesn't mean it that way, and I can't be angry — so I get mad at her because I can't be angry with her. Know what I mean?

"I'll see you at home," I tell her and carry my bags of cereal and frozen chicken into the restaurant.

Inside, I ask for the boss and inquire, "Are you hiring anyone?" The competent-looking woman in the blue managerial uniform is wearing one of those Madonna microphones around her jaw, and she takes my application saying, "We're almost always hiring." She smiles pleasantly but I imagine she is looking at me thinking, Why would an old guy like you want to work here?

Nervous, I blurt out, "I'll cut my sideburns." I realize how desperate I sound and add, "Shit." I say it out loud but I don't think she heard me. "Wait here," she says over her shoulder, then turns. She gestures at me to move to one side out of the way of paying customers. I turn and shuffle to the right. As I do so, I see, sitting alone at the front table and reading a paperback book while eating his lunch, television attorney Reed Langlois.

I am not kidding. Right in front of me is the guy you see on television at odd hours promising to bail you out of problems with bill collectors and the IRS. The "Debt Relief King" is right in front of me as I wait for the manager of Jack In The Box on Pearl Street in La Jolla.

As if in an out-of-body experience you hear about on the Sci-Fi Channel, I see myself crossing the distance to the table where the curly blond-haired lawyer is sucking on a soft drink, reading a paperback, and munching a sandwich. He appears unflappable, cool and secure in the knowledge that his finances are in order, his tax refund undoubtedly in the mail, and his credit card balance a manageable digit or two; his digestion is untroubled as he enjoys a sensibly frugal meal and a nonfiction bestseller.

Counselor Langlois is astounded at the outburst of this desperate, gray-haired stranger with a bag of groceries, which have suddenly been tossed aside. He looks up with horror as I fall to my knees blubbering, "For Chrissakes, you gotta help me, Reed! I owe money!" I seize him by the lapels and shake him. His head whips forward and back like one of those dashboard dolls. "I don't wanna work at Jack In The Box! I'll do whatever you say..."

Luckily I snap out of it before I actually do any of this. The manager, a polite, pretty round girl in her early 20s, emerges from the back of the restaurant holding my application. She smiles at me tentatively and gestures me to a table by the window.

Her name is Edna. She finds it interesting that I'm a writer and play in a rock band. "Do you ever play around here?" she asks.

I nod and mention Java Joe's and the La Jolla Museum of Contemporary Art. She is more impressed by Java Joe's.

"That's where jewel used to play," she says.

"Yes," I nod.

"What's the name of your band?" I tell her and she looks a little gaseous. She's never heard of us. "Well, it seems to me you're overqualified to work here." I should never have mentioned the museum gig. Or maybe she just means I'm too old. Of course, she can't say that. It's against the law. Age discrimination.

"No no. I'm really not qualified at all. Honestly. I've never worked in a fast-food restaurant. I have no idea what I'm doing."

"Well, I'm looking for someone who will stay on. How long would you work here?"

"Probably just for the holidays. I don't want to mislead you." I've probably blown it, but she seems so nice it wouldn't be right to tell her I have long-term fast-food ambitions with the corporation. She tells me she has two other applicants she is considering and she'll let me know. "Would you cut your sideburns?"

"Sure," I say and mean it.

Edna never calls. I return a few days later after cutting my sideburns back several inches. "See, I cut them?" I smile at her over the counter. She tells me she still hasn't made up her mind.

"So there's still a chance?" I am pathetic.

"There's a chance," she says but her smile is regretful.

A Help Wanted sign on the flower stand next door gives me pause, but I know nothing about flowers and seem to have a knack for killing them if anything. I don't even bother.

The next business over is "Pearl Wash." I can wash cars, all right. I've washed plenty of cars, just not for 30 years or so. The fact that Pearl Wash is manned by a platoon of mostly Mexican guys that might not welcome an old hippie Italian/gringo doesn't dissuade me. I can already picture myself, shirt off in the sun, getting in shape burnishing Jags and BMWs, bopping to norteño music with my homies, the carnauba wax glistening on my flabby pecs. I ask for an application. Abe, the manager, looks me up and down and warns me, "It's hard work."

"I can do hard work," I assure him.

"For how long?" He grins.

"How long is the shift?"

"Eight to five with a half hour to an hour for lunch."

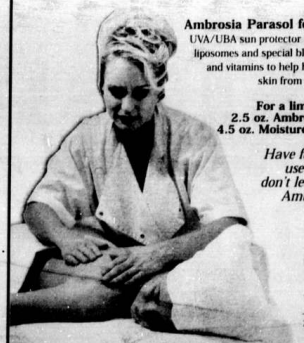

"Sure. Just give me a chance." I grin back at him, but I'm already feeling my back give out. I can just see these swarthy young bucks laughing, cracking Geritol jokes. "Try me out." God, I'm begging.

"Maybe I'll call you." Abe doesn't sound convinced. I feel like I've just tried to pick him up in a bar, and he's too polite to say he doesn't find me attractive.

Abe never calls. Fine. There's lots of jobs. I can wash dishes at the International House of Pancakes down the street. How can I not get that job? The economy is doing great. Jobs are everywhere. I grab an application, fill it out, and refuse. They never call. I refuse to be discouraged this easily. With renewed determination I walk into Taco Bell, and this is where I get lucky.

Anyway, I meet Lucky. The solid, gentle juggernaut of a man leans across the counter and presents me with an application in a meaty hand the color of devil's food cake. He also wears one of those Madonna microphones in order to take orders from La Jolla's only remaining drive-thru window (the girl at Jack In The Box wore hers to communicate only from the counter to the kitchen) since the local ordinance back in 1969, I believe. Lucky fixes me with one eye (the other is slightly lazy, maybe even glass) and extends his free hand in an offer to shake. He tells me to return the application early the following day. I am buoyed with prospects: I decide I will be promoted to the drive-thru window position at the earliest opportunity. Within months I will no doubt be perceived as assistant-manager material.

Lucky is not there the next day or the day after that. He leaves a message for me, however. He says he will call, but two days go by and there is no call. I begin to feel hurt and foolish. I was certain that Lucky and I had shared a moment back there over a handshake.

The following day I drop in at Taco Bell and Lucky apologizes, explaining that he had been off for two days. I tell him no problem. I will not make the same mistakes I made at Jack In The Box and the car wash. My air is that of a man on the go, with great expectations, places to go, people to see, I was just in the neighborhood and thinking about a Number 7 Value Meal and... I am asked if I can start tomorrow, Christmas Eve. I look at my watch as if I'm unsure. "Tomorrow? I can come by, sure."

"See you at 11:00 a.m."

I will never make fun of anyone working in a fast-food joint again, and neither should you. This work is relentless and demanding. It is scientific, exacting, and at times, hard on the back. Mexican Pizzas alone are the result of precision teamwork, rigorous preparation, and multiple tasks — they do not appear at the drive-thru window by magic, that's for sure.

My first day I pretty much sit outside at a table, smoke cigarettes, and read the Systems Operation Manual and its sequel, Receiving, Storing and Preparing Food. I am given two lengthy tests on this material in the Trainee Workbooks. After four hours I have a good theoretical knowledge of the Frymaster, the Rethermalizer and the Consistency Template for beans. Watching the Christmas Eve traffic on La Jolla Boulevard, the surfers and lifeguards coming and going from the Marine Street beach, the tourists from all over the world and schoolchildren alight with the promise of Christmas, I am struck with the solemn charge the Pepsi Cola Company (owner of Taco Bell) has given its employees. The general public is blissfully unaware of the pains taken with, for example, the ground beef in their burritos: the 30-minute preparation time until the hearty, nutritious meat product — precooked and packaged in Mexico by workers so dedicated they put in twice as many hours for half the money we make up here — is "evenly broken up with no lumps: not tough, mushy or chewy." The color consistently a "...medium brown with red and orange tones from spices" and maintained at a steady, bactericidal 190 degrees. Indeed, the public does not pause to think of these things, and we at Taco Bell don't feel that you should have to.

The day after Christmas is my second shift, and this time I'm doing actual work. Way too much of it. Dressed in my white T-shirt with that frightening little lemur-faced Chihuahua saying "Yo quiero Taco Bell!" and a corporate-issue jalapeño pepper baseball cap into which I have stuffed all of my hair, I am ready to work the cash register — only not quite.

I am surprised to see so many Mexican families coming in for this food.

I quickly learn that almost no one orders food the way the computer wants us to. I must constantly modify, for example, a Burrito Supreme (which is a bean and cheese burrito with onions, sour cream, and tomatoes) to a Burrito Supreme minus onions or with extra cheese — I must punch in BS - ON + CH — which renders the thing, you see, not a Burrito Supreme at all. The same with Gorditas and Fajitas, often confused (one has Fiesta Sauce, the other Southwestern Sauce; for Supremes add sour cream and tomatoes) with extra steak or chicken, no peppers or onions, three-cheese combo instead of just cheese, raspberry iced tea is ICED TEA + RED. No Coke, Pepsi. For lemonade you have to press ICED TEA + BLUE or something like that. The permutations are endless and things can get backed up and confused very quickly especially since no one speaks English very well except me and Lucky.

Esterania, a shy and smiley girl with striking eyes, rescues me from the cash register and suggests I wash dishes instead. This goes pretty well for a while; the simple rhythm of detergent sink, sanitizer sink, and rinse sink is pretty self-explanatory, but I screw this up as well. After an hour I have washed, rinsed, and sanitized cubing knives, "burger sauce stripper tools," "modular keepers," "false-bottomed corn and bean salsa containers," lids and pans from the steam-table line, spatulas, cinnamon twist basket fryers, and a dozen plastic sour cream and guacamole guns, which I have not, apparently, cleaned thoroughly enough: a pocket of soapy, watery green or white glop from previous use remains in the vacuum advance chambers. I am busted and the lunch rush is cranking up to disturbing proportions. I am yanked from the sinks and placed "on the line."

Miguel, Rene, and Esterania do what they can to explain to me how to fill and wrap tacos, burritos, bake Mexican pizzas in 35 seconds, cut them into fours, distribute green onions and shredded lettuce evenly so that all flavors are experienced uniformly in every bite. It is not long before I am cursing in Spanish and shift manager Carmen explains to me that pinche is not a Spanish word. I am to reach with both hands for a full pinch of lettuce, a quarter pinch of either three-cheese or regular cheese, a quarter pinch of tomatoes or onions, and I am chanting "Pinche cebollas, pinche tres quesos..." et cetera. Within minutes I am breaking taco shells, wrapping them in burrito paper, putting pizza sauce on cinnamon twists, mixing orders, bagging dining-room meals and sending drive-thru orders to the window on "for here" trays. I am now Lucille Ball in that I Love Lucy episode where she is trying to keep up with a conveyor belt full of chocolates by stuffing them into her mouth. I am eating shards of tortillas, licking frijoles off of my fingers, and filling iced tea requests with Mountain Dew. Lucky pulls me from the line.

Lucky is a formidable-looking guy. He's got to weigh in around 250 or so and has a rolling gait that implies both an irresistible force and an immovable object. His manner is that of a benevolent drill sergeant: patient and precise but unquestionably a guy you don't want to piss off. "We'll put you at the drive-thru register next week. You only have to make change, drinks, and ask people if they want hot, mild, or fire sauce."

What he is saying, basically, is, don't worry, we'll find something you won't fuck up. In the meantime he turns me over to Juan, who has me mop the floors. Every hour at Taco Bell, whether it's needed or not, the floors are cleaned and surfaces are wiped down (red Handi-Wipes for the dining room, blue ones for the prep and storage areas, or "backstage"). While mopping, I have a little time for my mind to wander.

I am thinking about a North County cocktail party I am invited to attend New Year's Eve. I am dressed in a tuxedo with a drink in my hand. A blonde babe in a black evening gown, encrusted with diamonds, is taking note of the trim form beneath my cummerbund. I am in good shape from hefting boxes of frozen chicken and ground beef, slinging a mop and scouring the Frymaster. When she asks me what I do for a living I tell her, "I'm with Pepsi-Cola, restaurant division. La Jolla." She purrs and drapes herself on my arm as I critically note the consistency of the bean dip and make a witty remark about the caterer's not "knowing beans."

"Don't drag the bucket all over the restaurant," Lucky is yelling across the room. "Just take the mop and carry it back and forth!"

My next shift involves chopping green onions, filling backup trays of meat, beans, and cheese, loading the guacamole and cream guns, and placing tortillas in the warmer. I write the prep time, the time expected on the line, and expiration time (after consulting the wall chart) along with my name and the date on all of these things. Next task is the Frymaster.

I am instructed by Miguel on loading the vat with a white Crisco-like lard substance (though it is not lard; no one really knows what it is) and dipping taco salad shells, tortillas, and cinnamon crisps (little churros) for exactly the right amount of time: respectively, 30 seconds, 25 seconds, and, if I recall correctly, one minute. It is an arcane form of artistry getting those taco salad shells into exactly the right configuration. Several failures are involved. I quickly eat as many of the rejects as possible while Lucky is in the office. But these are giant tortillas and I'm now standing in a generous deadfall of large crumbs and shards. I quickly grab a broom and go to work on the floor around my ankles just as Lucky comes out of the office and nods at me with approval. "When you're done with that, fry up the cinnamon twists. Miguel will show you how."

After frying the hard little pastries that look exactly like uncooked fusilli pasta (which blow up to resemble pork rinds), dusting them with cinnamon sugar, and then bagging them in plastic, I'm back on the register under Miguel's supervision.

I wait on a few customers, punch in their orders, make change and drinks — nothing too difficult. I am surprised to see so many Mexican families coming in for this food. Don't get me wrong, it's decent food, inoffensive certainly, and it will probably keep you alive, but as Mexican food goes, it is about as ho-hum as you can get — and the portions are tiny. Still, it's wonderfully cheap and I guess that's what we've got going for us.

One elderly man comes in and jokes with Juan about the newness of the $20 bill he is paying with. Something about how the bill is good because he just made it himself. Juan laughs dutifully but I doubt he has any idea what the guy said. The customer studies the menu — though, Miguel tells me, the man comes in every day and should long ago have memorized its contents. The old gentleman seems to be relishing his decision and anticipation, enjoying his one-sided English banter with Juan and Miguel, who do not mind; the store is empty. Even if it were not, the two younger men would take as much time with him as he wanted. It occurs to me that this is a very important social ritual for the customer, something Juan and Miguel understand implicitly.

Everyone is working much harder than I am, and I am working harder than I want to. My fellow employees are indulgent with me but cannot conceal a mild amusement that an old gringo is working here. Everyone knows gringos can't work worth a shit. Not really. And I sense their curiosity, an unspoken question in the fried, foody air: Shouldn't you be golfing or something?

The second to the last day of December I am, against all logic, promoted to the drive-thru window during the lunch rush. I am in a kind of toll booth with a cash register and a soda dispenser, boxes of hot sauce, napkins, straws, forks, and drink holders, all at the end of a conveyor belt on which food orders crawl toward me. Outside a parade of cars is snaking around the building, pulling up next to my window, their drivers extending fistfuls of cash.

"One large Slice," hand them the covered drink with a straw. "That will be $3.85. Hot sauce, mild, or fire sauce?" Punch in the amount they've given me, no need to worry about figuring change, the computer does it. I'm on a roll, I've got a rhythm going, smiling and bopping with the varieties of music swelling and fading from advancing dashboards. Two very young girls with Metallica cranked on the car stereo are shouting "No hot sauce!"

Car horns and car stereos vie with the squawking of the drive-thru intercom, the low humming of the conveyor belt, and the dinging of an electronic bell every time a new car pulls up to the window.

"No problem. Six-fifty altogether!"

"What!?"

"Six-fifty!"

"Cool." Hands me the amount in nickels, dimes, and pennies.

"Thanks. Rock on, dudes!"

"What!"

"Rock on!" I grin at them from beneath the brim of my cap, my head nodding to eighth notes. They exchange a look that can only mean, That is so sad, dude.

Carmen shows up to bail me out of a few tangled orders, which result in major traffic blockage on La Jolla Boulevard. Car horns and car stereos vie with the squawking of the drive-thru intercom, the low humming of the conveyor belt, and the dinging of an electronic bell every time a new car pulls up to the window. I can't hear myself think. Good thing I don't have to; the computer is a genius.

Oh no. I recognize the approaching pickup truck with the camper shell. It is the drummer in my band, Buddy Pastel Jr. He pulls to the window and does a double-take.

"Hiya, Buddy," I grin at him.

"Hey, Hemingway. Hehheh. Guess that writing thing didn't work out, huh!"

"Well, actually I'm still working on...."

"Yeah, whatever. Give me my chicken fajita and coffee, will ya? I gotta get goin.'"

"Here's your change. Would you like an ice cream taco with that?"

"No."

"Okay. Bye, Buddy."

"See ya, Hemingway."

I decide to take that telemarketing job I called about this morning: "You want to make $ IF YOU ARE A TOP PERFORMER WE WON'T STOP YOU!! Come work for us and set your own hourly pay. We offer a plush working environment with NO ceiling sales. We will show you how our product and your talents will not only make you money but will give you a career!"

That afternoon I leave my cap on Lucky's desk and buy a Taco Bell dog for my girlfriend at an employee discount ($1.61). When you squeeze it, it says, "Yo quiero Taco Bell."

The next morning I call Lucky and tell him I have another job, but I don't want to leave him in the lurch, I'll come in if he needs me. He quickly says, "Oh no. That's okay. I understand. I'll have a check for you on Tuesday. Good luck."

"Bye, Lucky."

I hang up the phone and notice for the first time the back of my Taco Bell T-shirt as it is draped over a chair where I tossed it. Beneath the shoulder blade area it reads "Want some?" ■

COLOR MY WORLD

CALL UP THE POPULAR MAPQUEST WEBSITE ON YOUR COMPUTER AND SEARCH FOR THE TOWN OF ELVIRA, CALIFORNIA. THE MAP ON YOUR SCREEN WILL SHOW IT AT THE INTERSECTION OF I-5 AND HIGHWAY 52, JUST EAST OF LA JOLLA. IF YOU'RE FAMILIAR WITH THE AREA, YOU KNOW THAT'S ACTUALLY THE WEST END OF TECOLOTE PARK. NO TOWN THERE, ELVIRA OR OTHERWISE.

As it happens, "Elvira" is the name given decades ago to a railroad spur line that ran east from the main Santa Fe tracks at Tecolote Canyon. On Santa Fe maps, spur-line names were significant bits of information for engineers and signalmen. For today's traveler who relies on a road map to plan a trip or to locate landmarks, Elvira is a cartographic red herring.

According to MapQuest's creators in Pennsylvania, railroad maps were among the eight databases used to assemble their product. That's how Elvira found her way into California. "We do our best to eliminate problems like that, but sometimes they do creep in," MapQuest explains.

To cartographer Hans Hesse and his wife, Maxine, owners of Global Graphics in Oceanside, this tells them something about the mapmakers' methods. "That's a very good example of how you make a cartographic decision," says Maxine. "In this case, they didn't. They took a database, and they just used what's in the database and didn't do enough research. Is it accurate? No. Is it going to get you to where you want to go? Maybe. Is it going to throw you off because you're looking for the town of Elvira? Yeah.

PHOTOGRAPH BY SANDY HUFFAKER

Hans and Maxine Hesse

"We've seen maps of San Diego," Maxine continues, "where we knew they were using an old database because they have streets down by Harbor Drive that were changed ten years ago, but they still have it the old way. So you know what they're doing and where they got their data. However, the consumer doesn't know."

The Hesses have been mapmakers in California for 13 years, the last 3 in Oceanside. Hans was born in Germany and received a degree in civil engineering in Berlin in preparation for a career as a cartographer. "When I finished my studies, I went to work for a map company in Switzerland to complete my skills, I thought, for 2 years. But I stayed in Zurich for 18 years." Switzerland is considered the world center of quality mapmaking, with a 400-year history in the art and science of cartography.

European cartographers can receive a degree in engineering with a specialty in cartography, but the Hesses aren't aware of an equivalent program in the United States. "That's one of the things Hans felt we could improve upon by making our own business here. The quality of American-made maps isn't as good, generally speaking, compared to what he was doing in Europe. So we decided, we can build a better mousetrap, be self-employed, and live in this climate." Maxine was born and raised in Southern California.

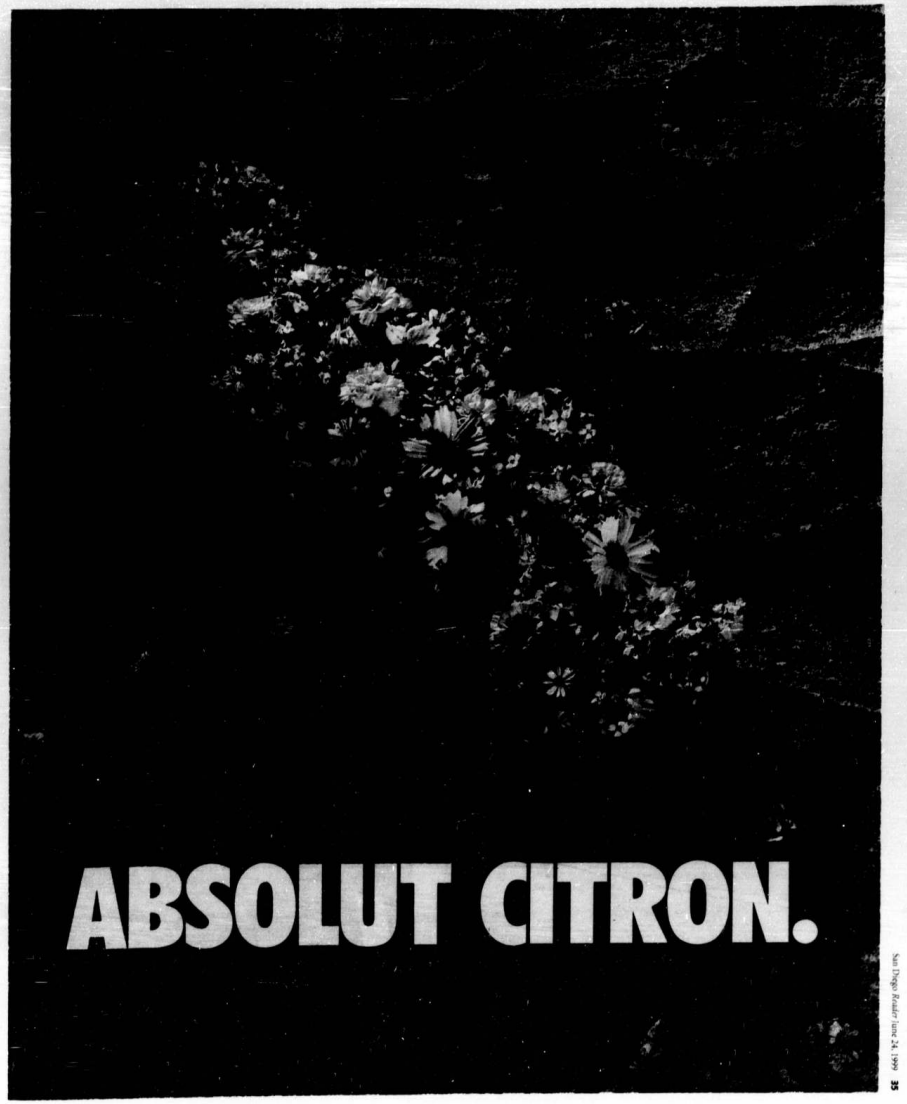

So what makes a superior map? "Accuracy," first and foremost, Hans says. "Accuracy and legibility. Most of the maps in America are not readable. The writing is so small. Thomas Brothers is on the better side, but Rand McNally, for example, the printing is just too small."

"And the symbology," Maxine adds, "the way color is used. Some products are very poor. They're using four-color, but they're not using it well."

Hans unfolds a commercial road map of the sprawling city of Houston and environs as an example. It's done in garish shades of green, yellow, peach, and gray. Street names are reduced to minuscule lines of type and virtually disappear in the areas colored a too-dark, too-saturated green. The lack of contrast between the type and the color makes them difficult to read.

This is one more of the editorial and planning decisions that goes into the making of a good map, says Maxine. "Scale is one of the most important considerations for legibility. They're using too small a scale for the size of the end product. You have a huge amount of land area covered on a sheet 28-by-36. Some of our maps are relatively small scale, similar perhaps to Rand McNally, but there are things we can do with colors and symbols and type to make them more readable."

With the population aging, our collective eyesight dimming, legibility is an increasing problem. "We have a map of San Francisco we've purposely done in larger scale, but to do that you have to go onto a larger sheet, and that's a marketing problem."

Global Graphics currently has 30 maps and guidebooks available, most intended for tourists and visitors. They produce a California road map and maps of the state's major cities and recreation areas, including a tourist guidebook to the San Diego/Tijuana area, plus tourist maps of Boston and New York City. Each represents at least a three- to four-month investment of time in development, says Hans. The compilation, checking, and preparation costs for a clean, accurate, legible map can cost from $5000 or $10,000 to $100,000.

To create a map from scratch, Global Graphics, like other mapmakers, makes a series of editorial decisions. "First, what is the market for the map?" Maxine explains. "This determines the area covered, and you can set your borders." Next comes historical data. "The layout of the earth, the geodetic base, that's provided by USGS [United States Geological Survey]. Basically, the land has been photographed at some point or another, either way back by USGS in the '70s and '80s, or before that if it's been flown over by airplane. So that's your base. That's public information, but it's way out of date.

"The main streets, the old, established streets are available. What becomes the problem is getting the accuracy to reflect the current situation. Someone's carving in a new street — now how do I know where the street's going to go, and what's the name of it? That's the hard part.

"We work primarily with cities and the county and various official bodies to get our data. You go to, say, the City of Carlsbad engineering department or planning, fire departments, parks and recreation, water districts. You get freeway information from Caltrans. You assemble maps and photographs and other data, then you can start."

Hans, the technician, the map artist, takes over from here. "You scan into the computer the geodetic information from USGS," he says, "then you draw over it [on the computer] in freehand in different layers," modifying the scale to match the scale of the USGS map.

He demonstrates the layer technique with a map of Los Angeles on the Mac in his home office, which runs a general graphics software package. He pulls down a list of 30 or so files on the screen. Each one is a layer of information to be overlaid on the basic USGS map, developed from historical maps and modified with current research. With a click of the mouse he can add or remove all the street names, or street numbers, or the city parks, or government buildings, freeways, the metro line, bus lines, neighborhood names, major boulevards, feeder streets, or other sets of detail. Standard fill-in colors for parks, buildings, freeways, and the like are stored in other files to make them uniform throughout the map and make them easy to change. Any of the layers can be placed selectively on the base map to modify it for a particular market. As the face of Los Angeles changes, the master street map is updated, then those changes are transferred to any specialty maps that may be made from that database.

What Hans now does on computer, he once did painstakingly by hand when he worked in Switzerland. There he learned the negative-engraving or scribing process, in which all roads, buildings, or other landmarks are drawn by engraving into the surface of a coated sheet of film, selectively removing the coating and creating a negative the size of the finished map. This film process, too, involves assembling many layers of information to produce a finished map.

According to Hans, "The main thing that's changed in cartography in the past ten years is the computer. The type of information you use hasn't changed for a hundred years. It's just the way you produce the map. The computer makes it easier to correct mistakes or update a map. With film, if you make a mistake you can change it once, and probably twice, but not a third time. Then you have a hole in the film."

"It's still difficult work, even on the computer," says Maxine, "but you're not sitting there with a scribing tool, looking through a magnifying glass."

But in the process, he admits, something of the art has been lost. "When you finish a map by hand and you look at it, you think, 'I did it myself.' When I finish one on the computer, it doesn't say anything to me."

Says Maxine, "You're one step removed. Like the difference between writing a letter by hand and typing it on the computer."

"Yes, exactly," Hans says with some regret, "but you have to do it on the computer today. There is no other way." He notes that even Swiss students of cartography are now working on Macs.

The Hesses' home is filled with originals and reproductions of mapmaking art from as far back as the 1400s. Until that time, when hand-engraved maps could be reproduced widely, a map was a singular work. Crude maps of game trails are found on cave walls; the Babylonians and Egyptians used maps as practical items for business or taxation; for the Greeks they were items of philosophical inquiry, an offshoot of mathematics, astronomy, and geography; Roman maps were made for the military and bureaucrats. In the Middle Ages, they mapped Eden and Paradise and destroyed many of the others.

In the age of exploration, maps and charts were as valuable as gold. Pirates stole them, Spain hid them in vaults. With the development of copper engraving and printing, maps became florid works of art, more beautiful than accurate. Information, right or wrong, was borrowed from map to map, confirming for the dubious that there really were sea monsters in the waters off Asia and mermaids in the tropics. As the sciences of measurement, surveying, and aeronautics progressed, maps became more accurate, more utilitarian, though they often retained some of their elaborate borders through the 19th Century.

Among the Hesses' collection are a 19th-century map of Africa, all but the coastline completely blank; and a map of Oceanside from the 1890s, the city a small dot near the huge Agua Hedionda ranch.

Among the Hesses' collection are a reproduction of a 15th-century portolan, a ports map of the Mediterranean, the original colorfully painted on hide; a 19th-century street map of Berlin, with a florid cartouche, bordered with etchings of the city's most significant buildings; a 19th-century map of Africa, all but the coastline completely blank; and a USGS map of Oceanside from the 1890s, the city a small dot near the huge Agua Hedionda ranch.

Some of the old touches are finding their way back into maps, as Hans demonstrates in a work-in-progress on his computer, a freeway map of Los Angeles that includes topographical features. Black snakes of freeway wind between pale-gray mountain terrain, with shaded peaks and ridges. Hans pulls a large sheet of frosted, translucent vellum from a file drawer. On it is a delicate, detailed pencil rendering of the mountains over which Hans has layered the freeway routes on his computer.

"The vellum is overlaid on a topographical map, and the artist does a pencil drawing from it. This was done in Europe by a cartographer who specializes in relief maps. I sent him the USGS maps, 250,000 scale, he put it underneath and drew it. It took him three to four weeks."

The valleys, where the freeways are to go, have been left blank at Hans's instruction. "So I just scan it in and put the map together."

Hans also called on a Swiss map specialist to help with a panoramic map of Yosemite Valley. One side is a typical topographic map with the rivers, peaks, valleys, and ridges labeled with names and elevations. To this they have added major driving routes and symbols locating ranger stations, museums, campgrounds, picnic areas, parking, lodging, grocery and retail shops, bike and hiking trails, churches, medical centers, gas stations, showers, swimming pools, and tour centers.

On the reverse side are two guides to the park's hiking trails. The first is a birds-eye-view painting of the Yosemite Valley, morning sunlight coming from the east, like seeing the valley to the horizon from a plane. The painting is complete with geologic formations, river, meadows, falls, sweeping stretches of pine trees, and the names of major distant peaks visible beyond the valley. A second painting is a detailed inset of Half Dome and its trails. The map is labeled in English, German, French, Spanish, and Japanese.

"These panoramic maps are very popular in Europe, especially Switzerland," says Hans, "and we are trying it here." Adds Maxine, "They interpret the topography in three dimensions, and it's useful for people who have difficulty reading maps."

According to Maxine, this commercial segment of the map market is probably the largest — maps for tourists and visitors. They are not only useful, they are often bought as souvenirs.

"And laminated maps are pretty popular," says Maxine, "even though they're more expensive than folding maps, because you can hold it easily, you can write on it. It's pretty indestructible."

She brings out a copy of Global Graphics' laminated gatefold "recreation map" of Southern California, in four languages, showing freeway routes and state highways, national parks and recreation areas, and cities, counties, and towns. The map is white, with pale shades of green, gray, pink, and lavender used for the basic features. Salted across the underlying map are bright red, blue, and green squares encoded with symbols for various types of recreation. On the back of the map is the interpretive key to state beaches and parks, horseback riding, fishing piers, off-road areas, public marinas and golf courses, surfing, whale-watching, diving, ballooning, camping, sky-diving, sailplaning, skiing, and hang-gliding.

Even with this kind of map, Maxine explains, there is a lot of editing and decision-making that must go into it. "You can't list every golf course in Southern California. You only list the major public courses." And in the data gathering, you must make sure your information is accurate.

Field checking is what the Hesses call it. Driving a route to make sure the information you've been given is accurate. It's the lack of field checking that puts towns like Elvira on the map.

Maxine recalls, "Someone had something on a map, and it looked like a little dead-end street with a name. And we didn't think it existed, so we drove out the — and looked, and it turns out it was just a [service] road that runs into the parking lot of a post office, not a real street. You have to be careful. The field check is a very, very important part of cartography." They've found errors in street names and spellings and other types of misinformation on source maps for their database.

In the case of the post office driveway, the original mapmaker had used that as what's known as a trap, a small, intentional "error" to help prevent wholesale copying of a map by someone else. "[The driveway] wasn't a real street, but they'd drawn it as a street just for that purpose. You have to protect yourself as best you can, and that is the only way cartographers can do that." Thomas Brothers are said to have at least one trap on virtually every page of their popular atlases.

But in a world that values speed over accuracy, can people really appreciate a quality map? One in seven people in the U.S. can't locate their own country on a map. One in four can't find the Pacific Ocean. According to Maxine, "Yes, I think people can appreciate a quality map. I think it's really the lack of education, the lack of using maps in school today. If you grow up and can understand how to read them, you're going to appreciate it more, and later on in life you're going to look for quality. In Germany and Switzerland, every schoolchild has an atlas with a lot of detailed maps, and they learn how to use them. If you're not exposed to them, you don't know.

"And in a way, maps are a utilitarian tool for people, kind of ho-hum. It's a thing that people take so much for granted that they don't appreciate it as much as they ought to.

"And another thing is — the useful life for a map of North County is about one year, with all the building and growth. The same for areas in south county like EastLake and Chula Vista. People know they really should get a new map, but a map is like an afterthought. Right? How old is the Thomas Brothers in your car?" ■

MAMAS FOR HIRE

A year or so ago, while watching a sitcom, I heard a single woman in her mid-30s proclaim her desire to get married so she could "have kids, then hire total strangers to raise them, then spend the rest of my life wondering where I went wrong." I laughed. But I started to wonder if I had seen a societal admission of guilt over day care. Suddenly it didn't seem funny. It seemed tasteless.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANDY MORALES

Balderrama Child Development Center

My 16 siblings and I were raised at home by our mother, who never worked — never even drove — while our father earned the money. My 88 nephews and nieces are being raised at home by my sisters and sisters-in-law. My own two children, Evelyn and Augustine, are at home with my wife Mary. Their best friend Finian is at home with his mother. So when I saw that TV show, I had no firsthand knowledge of day care. I only knew it was not the way I wanted to raise my kids. The sitcom made me curious.

I visited seven day-care centers — sometimes called preschools or child-care centers — in San Diego and talked to the director of each. What I found was a unified approach to child care with only subtle differences from place to place, just as one elementary school might differ from another. There were many constants. Each center follows the same basic daily plan: Open between 6:30 and 7:00 a.m.; breakfast and free play until 8:30 or 9:00 a.m.; then the curriculum portion of the day starts. At none of the schools does curriculum mean kids sitting at desks learning their ABCs and 1-2-3s by rote. Rather, children engage in child-directed activity, either at tables set up with paints, blocks, books, puzzles, games, and "manipulatives," such as Tinkertoys and Legos, or at sensory tables, plastic tubs mounted on legs and filled with water, sand, beans, shreds of paper, Jell-O, you name it. Depending on what station they choose, children acquire premath, prereading, prewriting, or pre-science skills. The other component of child-care curricula is circle time, when children sit on a rug while a teacher reads, sings, or directs another group activity or game. Before noontime lunch (provided in some centers, brought by students in others) is a period of outdoor play during which large motor skills are developed. After lunch, children nap on cots provided by the center. Then another circle time or indoor free-play period, a snack, and more outdoor play. By now it's late afternoon and parents are picking their children up. While they wait, children have their choice of toys and activities. Centers generally close between 5:00 and 6:00 p.m.

Regarding discipline, every center I visited employs a system of positive reinforcement and "redirection." This means promoting good behavior by calling attention to it and thwarting bad behavior by interesting the child in a new activity. Children are taught to "use their words" —as opposed to their fists or teeth — to manage conflicts. For example, "I don't like it when you push me. Please stop."

College Avenue Preschool
Location: College Area
Children: Licensed for 90 per day, aged 2 to 5
Staff: 12 teachers, director, assistant director
Teachers' salaries: $8–$9.25 per hour
Full-time tuition (5 days/week): $109 per week for 2-year-olds, $99 per week for 3- to 5-year-olds
Meals provided: 2 snacks, milk at lunch
Facilities: Located on church campus. Classrooms bright and airy. Concrete courtyard playground.

Donna Salmi directs College Avenue Preschool. The center is owned by College Avenue Baptist Church and is housed in several classrooms on the church campus. The building reminds me of my parochial school days — institutional but not industrial. Salmi, in her early 60s, with reddish gray hair and deep blue eyes, speaks in a quiet, measured way as she describes the center she's directed for the past ten years. "This school has been here since 1976," she says, "but it started out originally as a preschool. I think it was around 1990 or 1991 we added the day care."

The distinction is that children attend preschool from nine to noon two or three days a week, while day care is available all day, five days a week.

"The children don't all come every day," Salmi explains. "Some come five days a week, some just come two days. It varies. The turnover is tremendous, especially where we are located. We service SDSU students, and for one semester they are here and the child may be here every day. The next semester, they're only here two days a week. There's constant change."

Teachers at College Avenue must have at least two years of experience in the field and a minimum 24 units of early childhood education. (The State of California requires 12 units.) "Because our salaries are not as high as I would like them to be," Salmi laments, "to get teachers with BA degrees is not a reasonable possibility. I have a BA and most of the teachers have an AA."

But Salmi is quick to add, "A lot of teachers consider working here a ministry. Because of that, they're not here for the salary and they tend to stick with you longer. They are very nurturing and caring people. That's why they are working here. They just love kids. They'd like to make more money, but it's not the high priority."

College Avenue Preschool

Describing the homes the kids come from, Salmi says, "It's a little bit of everything. I'd say one-third of our school, the mother is at home and she has her child here for enrichment and socialization. Some children are here part-time because their mother works part-time. They are here only the times that mother works, maybe two or three days a week. Then the other third are full day care — either a single mom who has to work five days a week, or mom and dad both work. This year we have more two-parent families than we have single parents, but every year is different."

Asked how children react to being placed in day care, Salmi takes on the expression of a mother giving solace to a child with a boo-boo. "Some of them — it's so sad that it breaks my heart — the separation is very, very hard. I think the preschool children do better than the day-care students. The preschool students know that Mom is coming back. It's only going to be a short time. But the day-care students, some of them just know it's going to be a long day. Especially the younger children, it just breaks my heart that they have to be gone from their parents for so long. Some of them really have a hard time. In fact, occasionally we'll recommend that they put them in a smaller setting where they can get more one-to-one, maybe a small home day care as opposed to a larger setting. We just won't keep them if we feel like they're not ready. Sometimes it takes a week or so for them to get used to the idea that Mom is going off to work and won't be back. But because I have such nurturing teachers, it doesn't take that long for most of them. They just kind of fit in and they love their teachers."

I ask Salmi if day care is a good thing in itself or a necessary evil. Without pausing she answers, "I think it's a necessary evil. I think preschool is a great thing. When we first opened, we were only a preschool. It was basically three hours in the morning to give moms a break but also to give their children some activity that Mom couldn't do at home. But in our culture, there obviously is a need for day care because moms are working. Some moms don't have to work, they want to work. And other people, unfortunately, they have no choice. The dad and mom between them can hardly make it. I had a family here this past year and both mom and dad pretty much earned minimum wage as a waitress and waiter. They have part scholarship here, and I don't see how they make it from what I see on their pay stubs and rent. If they couldn't get a scholarship, their child wouldn't be here and I don't know how they'd survive."

Would these kids be better off at home with a parent?

"Yes, they would. There might be some exceptions to that. If you have a mom who—kids get on her nerves and she's a person who would be easily depressed staying at home, then she's probably better off working. But I would say for the majority of women that's probably not true. I think they'd be better off staying home with their children, especially those crucial first few years. I'm probably talking myself out of a job when I say that. But, you know, I used to teach kindergarten in public schools and I could always pick out the children in my kindergarten class who had been with their moms. You could just pick them out. You knew who they were because of their behavior in class. They didn't have that tension, they seemed more relaxed. It's hard to put your finger on it, but it's something about their emotional makeup."

Meals provided: Lunch, snack, optional breakfast ($1 per day)
Facilities: One large high-ceilinged room divided into four classrooms. A comfortable, homey setting for children. Playground a nice mixture of trees, grass, sand, and tricycle paths, but a little confined.

"I'll give you my spiel that I give to parents," says Angela Sirota, director of Lighthouse Early Childhood Center. "We take two-year-olds up to five-year-olds or up to kindergarten-age children, and then we have after-school care for just kindergarten-age children. The two-year-olds can be in diapers, they don't have to be potty-trained. We have two-, three-, and five-day programs for half-day and full day. Our hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. We are licensed for 48 children per day. We're divided into four classrooms by ages in the morning hours, and then in the afternoon they are grouped together. But we have two teachers in each classroom, so that gives us a one-to-six ratio overall."

Sirota, 40, is tall with long blond hair. In her small office near the door of the center, she talks with a friendly, enthusiastic manner. "Most of my kids," she tells me, "have two parents working. I have a couple of single parents but not very many. Some of them are here for the enrichment part and Mom isn't working. They've just decided that they want the socialization and they want the child to be ready for kindergarten."

Asked whether her childcare center stresses fun or learning, she replies, "Both. I love it when parents ask me this question. Lots of times, parents will say, 'Are my kids going to learn anything, or are they just going to play all day?' My answer is, 'They're going to do both.' They're going to play all day, because we really believe that that's how children learn, is through their play, and we just facilitate that learning by putting out lots of different activities for them to play with in all the different subject areas: math, science, language, music, movement, art, spiritual development, and they, as their interests pull them to the different areas, they're learning. A real simple example is easel painting. You could sit them down and teach them that red and white makes pink, or you could put red and white paint at the easel and let them experiment with it. They're going to come to the conclusion that, 'Hey, if I mix these together, they become pink.' In the process, they're also using the muscles in their arms, which they are going to need in kindergarten for writing. They're going to use the paintbrush to make curved lines, thin lines, thick lines, dots. They're gaining muscle control. But they are also gaining all the pre-language and prewriting skills because they are learning about symbols and all sorts of stuff. So just in that one easel painting, they are learning so much."

Sirota pauses, then adds, "We have fun here. Fun is important to the kids. I always tell parents, we're an ooey-gooey messy school. We get dirty and we sometimes paint each other accidentally. The kids play in the mud and run through the sprinklers and do all of that childhood stuff that they would be doing if we were at home."

Would the kids be better off at home?

"No. I think they are better off here because child care gives children opportunities to learn so much, share so much, and kind of be themselves, be their own little person. I personally would send all my kids to preschool even if I was home every day because I think it's so vital for their development because there's so much they can do and so much that they can learn that they wouldn't get.... In a lot of homes they're going to be sitting in front of the TV the majority of the day just because it's easy. They might read some books and have some puzzles and stuff. But most parents won't or can't offer them the different kind of activities that we do on a daily basis. I just think it's really important, especially now with kindergarten being so much more academic than it was. When I went to school, kindergarten was very much like this. I remember sitting on the ground and having cookies and milk and having the teacher play the piano and sing songs. That was where I learned how to use scissors and learned how to use glue. Now, they need to know all that by the time they get to kindergarten. They have to have all those tools, they have to be able to sit still and follow directions. There's so much that they have to learn before they even get there that, I think this really helps them."

Gale Walker (right), Children of the Rainbow

Children of the Rainbow
Location: Logan Heights
Children: Licensed for 14 per day, infants to age 10
Staff: 2 teachers, director, cook, administrative assistant
Teachers' salaries $6.75–$12 per hour
Tuition: Determined on a situational basis. Maximum, through subsidized program, $125 per week
Meals provided: Breakfast, lunch, dinner, 2 snacks
Facilities: A large Victorian house that sits high on a knoll along 32nd Street. Children play and sing in living room, parlor, and dining room and eat around a kitchen table. It feels like home. The large lot features a community garden, animals, and a swing set made from old telephone poles.

Eight years ago, Gale Walker was a single mother on welfare who wanted to be self-sufficient. With her caseworker's guidance, she completed the required early childhood education units and started a home day care in Encanto. In 1993, she moved into the big Victorian on 32nd Street that now houses her Children of the Rainbow child-care center. From the street, it looks like a hilltop oasis in this run-down neighborhood. The center's name and cheerful scenes are painted in bright colors on the block retaining wall in front. A vegetable garden grows in a side yard. In the back, chickens cluck and cocks crow. Walker and her two sons live in the second story of the house and the day-care center occupies the bottom floor.

A tall, smartly dressed woman in her early 40s, Walker tells me about Children of the Rainbow. "When I moved here in October of '93, there was a lot of graffiti on the walls outside. But Americorps painted the house for us. When I moved in, the first thing I did was incorporate our cook, Miss Gussie. I felt that it was very important that my children come in and get a good meal. Nutrition is a big thing for me, introducing children to the four food groups, getting them to understand that nutrition is the basis of being healthy, that they need to be healthy. I have two teachers, and I do work seven days a week. Not always do we have a full house, sometimes it's only three or four children. It depends on the needs of the clients. I open my facility based on what my clients' needs are. If they need me on Saturday, then I'm there. If they decide to take a class for a semester, or they are working that Saturday, we work with them. If I'm not able to actually provide the care, then one of our teachers comes in."

As Walker talks, a rooster crows outside the open window of her tiny office just off the dining room. I ask her about the animals. "I like to read and we read to the children quite a bit and we talk about the animals. One day I thought it was a better approach for them to see the animals and care for them. They love looking at them and feeding them. They like the garden too. I think it's really unique for the children to go out and pick vegetables. I just like that type of environment. It's kind of going back to the basics."

That's it, "going back to the basics," that's the feeling I've had since I walked into this grand old house. It feels like children belong here. The kids spend their time in rooms that were meant to be lived in, not offices converted into classrooms. Outside, they play in dirt; feed chickens, ducks, pigeons, and rabbits; and tend the garden instead of playing with hauled-in sand and climbing on plastic play structures. Walker nods. "Right, the chickens, the garden, all of this," she points up and around, "it's a way for the children to have a foundation. They need a foundation to feel secure, to believe in themselves. If they believe in themselves, then they can go to school, get an education, and be able to accomplish anything. That's the same type of energy we try to leave with the parents when they drop off their children. 'Your child is in a safe environment, now you go out and do what you have to do. We're here to support you so you can do what you need to do.'"

I ask if day care is a good thing or a necessary evil. She pauses pensively, then offers, "Society has set the standard of what success is and is not, and a lot of people chase the American Dream, whatever that means to them. When you're out there trying to attain whatever that dream is, sometimes kids are left to the wayside and child care becomes needed. So it's necessary, but it doesn't have to be an evil. The word 'evil' is evil to me. Child care is an evil when it is not a positive environment for children. But we're trying to give these children the best possible spot that they can possibly have. So I think it's a necessary thing, but not an evil. If it's being done correctly, it doesn't have to be an evil."

But would they be better off at home with a parent?

"I think so," she answers. "I really believe so. I think that the parent is the first and foremost teacher of that child. But that's unrealistic. Ninety percent of the kids I have here are from single-parent homes. But yes, of course, a child is better off with a parent. Especially in the first five years of their life when they are just like a sponge. If they are in a positive environment in a home situation, of course. It goes without saying."

Balderrama Child Development Center

Balderrama Child Development Center
(In July, name will change to North County Community Services Child Development Center)
Location: Oceanside
Children: Licensed for 84 per day, aged 2 to 5
Staff: 13 teachers, director, cook
Teachers' salaries: $7.75–$10.50 per hour
Tuition: $0–$24 per day depending on family size and income
Meals provided: Breakfast, lunch, 1 snack
Facilities: Block-walled building sitting on a corner of Balderrama Park. Rooms spacious and child-friendly. Two playgrounds: one all-concrete, the other sand and grass with climbing structures. A full-sized gym available on rainy days.

"We are a nonprofit agency," explains Balderrama director Donna Meester, "funded by the California Department of Education, that services low-income families. Probably 50 percent of our parents are on the California welfare-to-work plan. Most of them are working and going to school and a few are seeking employment. That's our population. They have to be low income to come here."

Meester, 34, sits behind her desk in her small, block-walled office, beneath a single high window. She's worked in child care for 14 years, the last 3 at Balderrama. She's clad in a silver-colored jacket over a red sweater and black slacks. "What is low income," she continues, "is determined by the Department of Education. The highest you can make for a family of three — which can be Mom and Dad and one child, it can be Mom and two children, it's a family income — is $2821 per month, and your fee would be $10 a day. That's the highest upon entry. But what happens is parents come in, they are just getting off welfare, they've got minimum-wage jobs, they are going from job to job. But finally a year later, they get it together, they get a good job, and they start working up the pay scale and getting pay raises. As long as they entered at $2821 or lower, it's okay. But the most you can make with a family of three is $3761 and your fee would be $24 a day, which is almost regular tuition at a private center. The scale goes up according to the number in the family."

There are five other eligibility factors. "If a parent is homeless," Meester explains,

"the child can come here all day every day until the parent finds a place to live, gets settled, and then finds something that they can do. The other eligibility factor is if it's a CPS [Child Protecti . Services] situation. The child comes here in order to keep the child from being separated from the parent. We're part of that reunification plan. The child comes here eight hours a day and then goes home to Mom or Dad in the evening. Those are the two situations in which the parent really doesn't have to be doing anything, where we're servicing what the child needs. Then, there's seeking employment. A parent can come in and say, 'Well, I don't have a job but I'm trying to find a job.' We can give them 60 days of child care to seek employment. The fourth eligibility factor is a parent going to school or training. So if they are going to Palomar College, MiraCosta College, or any kind of certified training, their child can come here while they go to that training. Finally, if the parent is working, their child can come here. If the parent is only going to school one day a week, their child can only come one day a week. Some parents work shifts 10:00 to 7:00 so their kid doesn't come in until 9:30 in the morning. So it depends on what the parents are doing, what their time schedule is as to when the kids come and go."

Paperwork, Meester says, is the means of enforcing these regulations. Parents supply letters from employers or schools to verify eligibility. There are other challenges to servicing a low-income population. One is language. Many of the children speak only Spanish, so one teacher in every classroom must be bilingual. Another is health and nutrition, which Bolderama addresses by serving hot breakfast and lunch for the children every day of the week but one, when the cook shops for groceries and the meals are cold. The most serious challenge, Meester says, is "neglect and physical and emotional abuse. I've had to report each one of those. One was a father who had custody of the child. He had a lot going on and he just couldn't get it together. He couldn't get five kid bathed every night. He didn't make sure the kid had clean clothes every night. It just was not his thing and he needed help. He didn't do it on purpose. I believed that child to death and he would have done anything for that child. But he just couldn't get it together. Regardless of what the situation was, the child was coming to school in unwashed clothing from the day before — unclean, not properly clothed, so on and so forth."

When I ask if child care is a good thing or a necessary evil, Meester responds, "My personal philosophy is children need to be home with a parent up to the age of five. But that's only if the parent knows what's in the best interest of the child. If you have a situation where Mom doesn't have enough money to feed the child so she's got to go out and get a job because she's a single parent and Dad has left her, is it better for the child to be home with Mom because he's under five at that point? No, it's better for the child to come here and Mom go out and get a job to better be able to support and keep the family alive. If the parent's abusing the child, then, no, the child doesn't need to be with "he parent. In an ideal world —I call it my white castle — Dad would go to work and bring home the money, Mom would stay home and care for the children in a proper environment. But that's not society, that's not reality. So society being what it is, child care is a good thing."

"The company that runs this facility," explains director Christine Williams, "is Children's Discovery Centers of America. We are contracted with the City of San Diego. center here in San Diego. But we are not city employees, we are a separate entity. Myself and the teachers are employees of Children's Discovery Centers."

Williams, a small, exuberant woman, speaks in louder tones than the average person, especially when one of the center's children comes in to her office. "Hi, TAYLOR," she greets one boy who has just arrived back at school after an absence. "Welcome baaaaaaaack! Hello. I missed you. I missed my T-Burger."

When Taylor leaves, Williams resumes her description. "Our center was intended for the convenience of city employees, but we are open to the community too. We give priority on our waiting list to city employees. Those people who are city employees get bumped up above those from the community. The ratio is right about 75 percent city to 25 percent community, maybe 65/35."

Williams, who is 30, says the center she's directed for three years stresses both fun and learning. "It goes both ways," she says. "At this facility we look at our staff as teachers, as educators for the children, because children do pick up so many things and they do learn at such a young age. So here at this facility, we do feel that education is very, very important to the children. There are a lot of articles about how children that don't go to day care at all don't have socialization skills before they go off to kindergarten. You see those children having more problems in comparison to children who have been in day care."

So you don't think these children would be better off at home with a parent?

"It depends on the parenting skill of the parents," Williams answers. "I think that kids gain so many positive attributes from being in preschool because they are much, much more prepared when they go to kindergarten and elementary school. They have socialization skills already. They are capable of following a regular daily schedule in a school setting. They are capable of being directed by somebody besides their parents. As for education, if a parent educates their child from a very young age and they have the skills that the facilitators do here and the teachers do here, then they can learn just as much. The only thing that they could be lacking is socialization skills, unless the parents take them to the park ..."

Or they have siblings.

"Exactly. But being in this type of atmosphere, especially when you have a really good day-care facility and you have the right facilitators and the right care providers, the children can gain much, much, much more than being at home with Mom or Dad."

Special Care
Location: Kearny Mesa
Children: Licensed for 50 per day, aged 6 weeks to 6 years (developmentally)
Staff: 9 teachers, 4 nurses, school director, nursing director
Teachers' salaries: Would not disclose
Full-time tuition (5 days/week): Aged 6 weeks to 2½ years, $143 per week; aged 2½ to 3½, $121 per week; aged 3½ to 6, $99 per week
Meals provided: 2 snacks
Facilities: Ugly concrete block of a building sitting among similar structures. Industrial rooms and halls with soft touches like quilts and posters hanging from walls. Nice indoor gym room. Classrooms are animal-themed. Outdoor play area has grass, trees, sand, and concrete but is very confined.

"I think you'll find that Special Care is unique from other centers that you've visited," Susan Adams, codirector of Special Care day-care center tells me, "in that we provide a lot of different services through our child care. We serve a lot of varying needs of children. Specifically, we provide care for children with medically fragile conditions. We have a full-time nursing staff that works with their children. These are skilled nurses. They are at either a licensed vocational nurse level or they are registered nurses. We provide care for children with tracheotomies, even children that are dependent on ventilators. We also have special-needs children. We have a full-time, special education teacher."

Meester: "The highest you can make for a family of three is $2821 per month, and your fee would be $10 per day."

Special Care child-care center is owned by a home healthcare corporation also called Special Care. The center serves "typical" children as well as medically fragile and special-needs children, though, Adams says. "We give first priority to our medically fragile and special-needs population. Children who need this type of situation, who are medically fragile, may not have many opportunities within the community. So we do give priority to them. After them, Special Care employees have a higher priority than someone from the community who isn't special-needs or medically fragile."

Adams and her codirector, Marty Cowden, say Special Care's curriculum is the same as most day-care centers' with a few key additions. "We add the element of sign language," Adams explains. "We integrate that with our typical children and special-needs and medically fragile children. We also incorporate things such as tactile associating components. Children that are visually impaired can relate to things tactually."

Children at Special Care punch a time clock upon entering or exiting the center. It seems a little odd to me, like children drinking coffee or chatting around the copier. But Adams assures me that the kids enjoy it. "It's an important part of the day for these kids. My two children have come through the center here, and I tell you, I couldn't touch their card. They would pick up their card and they would check in their card, thank you very much, and take it to their classroom and check out at the end of the day. It was real important."

"It has a little photograph of them on it," Cowden adds.

Is child care a good thing or a necessary evil?

Cowden, who directs teaching at the center while Adams supervises nursing, answers first. "I think," she says, "that it is something that is used in today's society because both people need to get out and work and they need to earn a living. I think that if you provide appropriate activities and good care givers, it's a positive thing."

Would they be better off at home with a parent?

Adams answers this time. "It would probably depend on what that family had to provide for their child in stimulation to foster growth and development. I think a child might be better off here in many ways rather than being in a home environment. If that home environment does not provide the things that child needs for growth and development."

Cowden adds, "That's not to say a parent couldn't provide that in the home."

If the parents could, would the child be better off at home with them?

"To make a blanket statement would not be appropriate," Adams answers. "I think it's an individual decision. It's absolutely an individual decision whether to put your child in a care facility where there are other children."

Gillispie School

Location: La Jolla

Children (preschool): Licensed for 165 per day, aged 18 months to 5 years

Staff: 14 teachers, 3 administrators

Teachers' salaries: Approximately $25,000 for 9-month school year

Full-time tuition (5 days/week): $600 per month

Meals provided: 2 snacks

Facilities: One main building designed to look like a house, plus four satellite buildings. Rooms comfortable and nicely furnished and decorated, though some lack windows. Playgrounds blacktop and sand. No grass.

Headmistress Moreen Fielden is a motherly-looking woman in her early 60s. She wears a simple black corduroy dress, and her silver hair is cut short. She speaks in soft, comforting tones. "The main idea of the school is to be a second home for the children where they can feel comfortable and learn all kinds of things at the same time. There are 307 children here, 18 months up to sixth grade. We try to look at the whole child. All the things we try to do are both for their academic progress and their physical growth and their social and emotional growth and creativity."

Assistant Headmaster Jim Stewart, a tall, slender man in his mid-30s, adds, "One thing Moreen does is she meets with all the children one-on-one individually for an hour to make sure they're a good match for the school."

"It's called an interview," Fielden explains, "that I do with the children before they enroll. The parents are in here, too, for the younger children. The older children from about second grade up, those are done without the parents."

Adams: "We provide care for children with tracheotomies, even children that are dependent on ventilators."

"Even two-year-olds can interview," Stewart interjects.

"It isn't that they need to speak yet," Fielden continues, "you can learn a lot just by having different activities for them to do. A puzzle, a game. I just put out different things for them to see how they handle it. Some children just play with the little toys nicely. Others take them all off and make a big mess. Some are very careful. You learn whether they are very organized or whether they work out of chaos. I'm looking for what the total child is like. Are they interested in learning? Are they creative? Do they appear to be happy children? Are they very angry? The child who comes into my office and just throws the toys everywhere ..."

"...runs out of the room," Stewart adds.

"...all of that, those children probably aren't ready for school."

Of the schools I've visited, Gillispie has the highest educational requirements for its teachers. "Well, to work with little children, you have to have 12 units of early childhood courses. But our teachers all have a BA or BS also."

Is child care a good thing or a necessary evil?

Fielden pauses to think, then answers, "When a child is very little, it's wonderful if they can stay home. By the time a child is two and a half, they really want relationships with other children. I think by two and a half, if they don't have any outside activities with their parents, they aren't as stimulated as they should be. I know why you're asking the question, but if it's handled in the right way I think it can be a good thing for the child to be in a school setting. It's nice if they don't have to stay very long hours, if they can just stay, when they're young, from 8:30 to lunchtime."

"A lot of parents ask me, 'How many days do you think my child should be in school?'" Stewart says. "I ask them, 'What are they going to be doing when they are not here?' 'Watching television.' Then, I would enroll them for five days. I wouldn't hesitate, if you don't have activities for them, to bring them here." ■

hitting the airport. The van full of history and architecture buffs visited the Balboa Theatre, the empty police station, John Ginty's Victorian house, Hotel San Diego, and several other buildings threatened by demolition or radical alteration. They also drove by the gaping hole where the T.M. Cobb warehouse had stood until it was leveled early this year.

Sitting in the burgundy van was trust president Richard Moe, who has led national crusades to save Civil War battlefields, presidential homes, old hotels, and entire neighborhoods.

The hourlong tour gave members of San Diego's Save Our Heritage Organisation, dubbed SOHO, a rare opportunity to bend Moe's ear. They joked that SOHO's lengthy list of local sites encroached by development could justify opening a trust branch in San Diego and keep it occupied full-time. Even Courtney Damkroger, an assistant director from the trust's regional office in San Francisco, along with Moe, was taken aback upon learning so many San Diego landmarks are under siege. "They did say they were in shock," recalled SOHO president Bruce Coons, who helped organize the tour.

Officials for the City of San Diego, which had helped finance the trust's meeting, were unaware that Moe departed with some concerns about their commitment to saving historic sites.

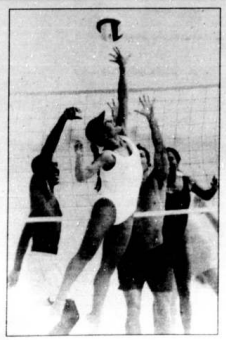

Consequently, political bigwigs were surprised, defensive, and shrill — almost to the point of outrage and contempt — last week, when the trust included San Diego's "Arts and Warehouse District" on its annual list of "America's most endangered historic places." To keep the neighborhood intact and also to maintain the nearby Gaslamp Quarter's ambience, Moe urged the city to consider moving the Padres' proposed baseball park farther east. During their downtown tour, Moe and other trust officials noted that San Diego's old police headquarters, a building on the National Register of Historic Places — which, at 801 W. Market Street, lies well outside the warehouse district — could also easily qualify for the endangered list.

Can the National Trust for Historic Preservation, which played a key role in running Walt Disney Co. out of rural Virginia, make a difference? Officials for San Diego and the Padres initially attacked the trust's announcement as misinformed, relatively meaningless, and coming too late. By midweek they said they cared deeply about historic preservation and would destroy only two buildings listed on the San Diego Historical Site Board's registry of landmarks: the Candy Factory at 305 Eighth Avenue and the San Diego Gas & Electric Co. office at 114 Tenth Avenue. Another five designated landmark buildings will be modified for the Padres' use, inviting scathing criticism from restoration purists who rail against what they call "facade-ectomies." One activist explained the term: "Saving the front of an old building and putting it on a new building is a trick developers use to say they're restoring the building. It's like appliqué." At least a dozen buildings, recently rejected for landmark status, are likely to be bulldozed or changed by the ballpark's placement in downtown San Diego's East Village. Many local preservationists, not to mention East Village's business owners and residents, support shifting the proposed ballpark to maintain the neighborhood's cohesiveness and

IS LASIK RIGHT FOR YOU?

The breakthrough I've been waiting for in LASIK procedure to correct nearsightedness, farsightedness and astigmatism has finally become available!

Until now, the instrument that was available to create the corneal "flap" had the potential to cause severe complications if it was not set up properly. A new upgraded instument has recently become available in San Diego which makes LASIK a very safe procedure with no potential for the severe complications that were possible with the original instrument.

Dr. Jay Berman is one of San Diego's most experienced eye specialists and has been performing refractive surgery since 1982. Dr. Berman is a voluntary Clinical Professor of Ophthalmology at UCSD and maintains a private practice in San Diego.

To learn more about LASIK and whether it would help you reduce your dependence on glasses or contacts, please call us for a complimentary in-office consultation. We are happy to offer you:

- Free information on PRK and LASIK procedures
- An easy, no-money-down payment plan
- A free screening evaluation

character.

Some people wonder why old brick warehouses — some of which are surrounded by vast empty lots — warrant all the fuss. Even though his family's produce business in East Village dates back to 1893, H. Wilton Williams does not feel sentimental about the neighborhood. "Many of these warehouses are 100 years old and are about to fall down," he said. "They should be condemned because they're not up to code and probably couldn't survive an earthquake."

Williams's 20,000-square-foot TR Produce warehouse at 808 J Street, across the street from the proposed ballpark, might become a restaurant, store, or marketing center for Padres owner John Moores, who bought it last year. The purchase closed escrow the day after San Diego voters approved the concept of a new baseball stadium. Williams is operating there under a lease "until they knock buildings down." Demolition to make way for the ballpark is scheduled for fall.

The wrecking ball's shadow often enhances a site's chances of making the trust's list of "America's most endangered historic places." A documentary on the History Channel last week featured San Diego's East Village and ten other sites on the 1999 list, including Angel Island Immigration Station in San Francisco Bay and Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, better known as "Amish country."

San Diego's scarcity of warehouses — structures that might be considered unremarkable in any large East Coast city — makes them precious in the eyes of local architects, historians and SOHO members. Besides the urgency factor, the trust considers historical as well as architectural significance, community support, and sites that exemplify problems repeated elsewhere. "San Diego isn't the only city in the country where you have a sports complex taking out a neighborhood," said James Mann, director of the trust's regional office in Chicago. "There's some similar controversy in Columbus, Ohio, and Pittsburgh, [Pennsylvania]." Mann is among preservationists who point to Denver as having successfully built a ballpark, Coors Stadium, without destroying downtown buildings.

The trust, which is based in Washington, D.C., does not discriminate. Its annual lists of "endangered historic places," published since 1988, contain it all: inner cities and rural areas, government buildings and commercial icons, pretty Victorian houses and industrial mines, boats and railroads, even a baseball stadium.

Congress created the trust in 1949 to help protect the nation's heritage, inspiring the motto "protecting the irreplaceable." Sites rescued range from the Congressional Cemetery, which was deteriorating from neglect as recently as two years ago, to one of the first McDonald's hamburger stands, built in 1953 in Downey, California.

The nonprofit organization weaned itself from federal funding during the past several years; its $38 million annual operating budget is now financed entirely by private donations, mostly from its 270,000 members. More than 300 employees scattered in nine offices have undertaken a seemingly overwhelming task to remember the past. They work to safeguard historic sites, educate the public, defend existing preservation laws, create new ones, and prevent urban sprawl — especially in northern Virginia, where the trust had a showdown with a multibillion-dollar corporation. In 1993 Walt Disney Co. quietly started acquiring land near Haymarket, Virginia, a village nestled in scenic countryside that scholars regard as "the cradle of democracy." The entertainment giant planned to erect an amusement park devoted to U.S. heritage, which ironically would compete with and compromise real historic sites nearby, not to mention forever mar the beautiful rolling terrain. The trust's full-page advertisement in The Washington Post rallied support to spare the region and helped convince Disney to abandon its plans. The trust, which also operates 20 landmarks, isn't always so adversarial.

Through its Main Street Center program, the organization encourages so-called smart development that satisfies the profit motives of businesses while maintaining the charm of old neighborhoods and small towns. For all the respect the trust has garnered from corporate, political, cultural, and academic circles nationwide, even San Diego's most die-hard preservationists question the organization's claim of not losing a single "endangered historic place." In sticking to that claim, trust officials explain that each site on their 11 annual lists typically involves a lengthy, ongoing rescue mission.

South Pasadena, which in 1989 became the first California site identified as "endangered," has been threatened by a highway project for decades. A recent federal court order halted the start of construction, a move that only temporarily spares the community.

"We're having some real close calls now," trust spokeswoman Siobhan Mueller said, noting that Tiger Stadium in Detroit may be doomed. Built in 1912, the classic baseball park appeared on the trust's endangered list in 1991. Next year, the team moves to a new stadium featuring skyboxes, more concessions, and other

AMERICA'S MOST ENDANGERED HISTORICAL PLACES, 1999

Richard H. Allen Memorial Auditorium, Sitka, Alaska
The 1910 building is the centerpiece of Sheldon Jackson College, Alaska's oldest educational institution. The auditorium is the victim of deferred maintenance and lack of money for repairs.

Angel Island Immigration Station, San Francisco Bay
This "Ellis Island of the West Coast" was a stopping point for more than 400,000 immigrants, mostly Chinese and Japanese, between 1910 and 1940. The crumbling offices and detention barracks represent chronic underfunding in the California state park system.

Country Estates of River Road, Louisville, Kentucky
The wealthy and famous of Louisville created beautiful homes and gardens along the bluffs of the Ohio River between 1870 and 1940. The scenic landscape may be invaded by a proposed highway, bridge, and water-treatment facility featuring towers five stories tall.

National Historic Landmark Hospitals, New York state
During the 1800s, some of the nation's greatest architects designed the first psychiatric hospitals to treat the mentally ill. The State of New York is trying to sell the buildings without regard to preservation.

Hulette Ore Unloaders, Cleveland, Ohio
Measuring 96 feet in height, three giant hydraulic machines unloaded ships for more than 90 years. The Cleveland Cuyahoga Port Authority plans to reduce them to scrap metal, destroying a symbol of industrial and engineering innovation.

Lancaster County, Pennsylvania
Dotted with farms and small towns, the county is best known for its population of Amish and Mennonites. Without careful planning, subdivisions of new houses and shopping centers could obliterate the picturesque landscape.

Pullman Factory, Chicago, Illinois
The factory with its clock tower anchored the company town of railcar baron George Mortimer Pullman. A fire recently ravaged the manufacturing complex that made Pullman palace cars, and the State of Illinois lacks the money to restore the landmark building.

Travelers' Rest, Lolo, Montana
Lewis and Clark stopped here in 1805 during their famous expedition and in 1806 on their return trip. A nearby trailer park and home construction could spoil this scenic spot.

San Diego Arts and Warehouse District
Downtown San Diego's East Village contains warehouses that have recently been restored and converted to work/live lofts, art galleries, and offices. The Padres' proposed baseball stadium would demolish or modify many of the buildings, while tearing apart the neighborhood.

Downtown Baltimore's West Side, Baltimore, Maryland
About 150 buildings feature neoclassical cornices, Romanesque arches, cast-iron facades, and Art Deco details. Yet the city plans to raze this architecturally rich neighborhood to build something new.

Corner of Main & Main, in Everytown, USA
Communities throughout America are losing their old, charming buildings on Main Street. Chain drugstores are replacing them with large stores and strip malls, which erase the unique character of many downtown neighborhoods.

accoutrements generating more revenue.

The City of Detroit is in no hurry to demolish Tiger Stadium, so it may sit empty indefinitely. That might leave room for San Diego's "Arts and Warehouse District" to earn the dubious distinction of becoming the trust's first loss, given the city's and the Padres' aggressive tinuetable to build the ballpark. Can the National Trust for Historic Preservation make a difference? Von Marie May, a former SOHO president, says, "About the only thing that will impact this project is if financing implodes."

Although May acknowledges that trying to rescue East Village warehouses appears to be a lost cause, she said she feels a moral obligation to fight to preserve the neighborhood. "Making a link between the past and present is protecting collective history for the future," she said. "When you go to an historic place with a child and explain the saga behind the site, that's folklore. That perpetuates American culture."

Appearing on the trust's endangered list should embarrass San Diego, but the city's top officials, May said, have no conscience.

"San Diego politicians use the trust's Main Street Center program to launder their image," she said, "but when it comes to real preservation, they're not there."

SAN DIEGO'S MOST ENDANGERED HISTORICAL SITES, 1999

Butterfield Stage Stop, Warner's Ranch
The adobe stage stop and timber-frame barn on the Missouri Trail date back to the 1850s. Now in a condition of neglect and deterioration, this National Historic Landmark sits on property owned by the Vista Irrigation District.

Coronado Railroad Right of Way
Built in 1888, this rail corridor linked Coronado to downtown San Diego. A portion in Chula Vista owned by the Metropolitan Transit Development Board could become a shopping center. That would nix plans of San Diego's Electric Railway Association and Railroad Museum to create a vintage train ride for tourists.

E. Miltan Barber House, 108 Robinson Street
The Tudor home designed by William Hebbard and Irving Gill anchors a historic neighborhood. A bureaucratic snafu resulted in the 1905 house being partially demolished before a public review. The owners still would like to follow through with total demolition.

Hotel San Diego, 339 W. Broadway
San Diego businessman John D. Spreckels built this early Edwardian hotel in 1910. Planned expansion of the federal courthouse and offices could level the building rather than reuse it.

John Sherman House, 1914 First Avenue
This 1887 Victorian home, built and occupied by John Sherman, is among a handful of its kind remaining in San Diego. They could form a historic district, but the John Sherman House is in danger of being remodeled by its owners.

Mrs. General Grant House, 535 Quince Street
First Lady Julia Dent Grant, wife of President Ulysses S. Grant, and their son, Jesse Grant, lived in this 1894 Colonial Revival home. Designed by architect William Hebbard, the house may be replaced by condominiums.

Olaf Wieghorst House, 301 Renette Avenue, El Cajon
This 1947 complex of workshops and buildings is where Western artist Olaf Wieghorst lived, painted, and exhibited his work. The adobe homestead could crumble if the city moves the complex closer to downtown.

Old San Diego Police Headquarters, 801 West Market Street
This 1939 structure designed by Albert Treganza and the Quayle Brothers is considered a masterpiece of Spanish Colonial Revival architecture. Listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the police station may be destroyed to make room for a parking garage for Seaport Village. The San Diego Unified Port District controls the property.

Red Roost and Red Rest, 1185 and 1189 Coast Boulevard, La Jolla
These 1890s Victorian beach cottages on La Jolla Cove are believed to have inspired the California bungalow style of architecture. They sit vacant and neglected.

Rosario Hall, 1145 K Street, downtown
Built in 1870, San Diego's oldest saloon and meeting hall also hosted Catholic church services and theatrical performances. The Padres' proposed baseball stadium would force removal of the building at 12th and K streets, which could damage it.

San Pasqual Valley, east of Escondido
The pristine valley contains prehistoric archaeological sites, Victorian homes, and San Diego County's only known adobe schoolhouse. Plans for a juvenile detention center could overwhelm the scenic landscape.

S.S. Catalina, in Ensenada's harbor, Mexico
The West Coast's last remaining steamer is a national as well as a California landmark. Dating back to 1924, the 1766-ton ship ferried people between San Pedro and Catalina Island for more than 50 years. Without a serious rescue effort, the S.S. Catalina may sink.

San Diego Warehouse District, downtown
This cluster of warehouses built during the early 1900s has recently been restored and converted to work-live lofts, art galleries, and offices. The Padres' proposed baseball park and related development would bulldoze or drastically modify many of the buildings, while destroying the neighborhood.

Source: Save Our Heritage Organisation or SOHO, 619-297-9327

Public records show the City of San Diego, through its Office of Small Business, spent $30,000 to host the trust's National Town Meeting on Main Street" in March. The event highlighted the economic contributions achieved through historic preservation.

After being pumped up about the city's efforts to improve North Park and other neighborhoods, trust officials were troubled by some of the vacant and deteriorating landmarks they saw downtown. They also heard about some of the struggles of fellow preservationists in San Diego.

Founded 30 years ago, SOHO claims to be California's oldest preservation group. One of the nonprofit, volunteer organization's first actions was to rescue a Victorian home, the Sherman-Gilbert House in Heritage Park. In emulating the trust, SOHO has published an annual endangered list for the past 17 years.

SOHO members can relate to the trust's experience that each endangered place represents a years-long battle that never seems to end. "It's never over," said Coons. "We've saved the Santa Fe Depot twice and the fountain in Horton Plaza three times." Five years ago, the organization sued the city to save the T.M. Cobb warehouse, which had contributed to making the Gaslamp Quarter a historic district, but lost the case. The developer demolished the building to make way for a highrise.

When trust officials saw John Ginty's Victorian house it was still intact, facing west atop one of downtown's highest hills. A developer who wanted that spot persuaded the city to authorize moving the historic structure to a lower lot facing east. Commencing earlier this month, relocation has resulted in severe damage to the house, Coons said, noting that portions of the kitchen and back porch were torn off, the original concrete destroyed and the chimneys removed, exposing the interior to water damage. "The front porch is coming apart. The tower is sagging. We don't think the plasterwork will survive the move."

Trust members entered the Balboa Theatre, a 1924 Vaudeville palace that has been neglected since the city assumed ownership 16 years ago. The city's move to condemn the building in 1983 prompted the formation of the Balboa Theatre Foundation to save it. Although the group was able to get the building listed on the National Register of Historic Places, it has been threatened by demolition and plans to convert it to offices or shops. Recently a developer has been interested in restoring the theater to its original use, a change that might bolster the city's claim of supporting historic preservation.

Earlier this year Mayor Susan Golding crushed efforts to create a historic warehouse district in East Village by removing discussion of the matter from the San Diego Historical Site Board's agenda. Several years ago, before the Padres' new baseball park was proposed for East Village, the city supported establishing such a district, but a few property owners opposed the measure. "I don't see a lot of hope with the city," Coons said. "The Padres are the ones with the power." Consequently, he and trust officials are scheduled to resume talks this week with the team's ballpark developers.

Getting the Padres to move the ballpark two blocks east to keep the neighborhood intact appears unlikely. While the alternate site suggested by the ParkBayDiagonal Collaborative would give the Gaslamp Quarter more breathing room and touch far fewer buildings in the East Village, ballpark developer Greg Shannon claims it would be more expensive, resulting in two to three times more condemnations of properties.

Shannon, who happens to be a member of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, said saving old buildings is only one of dozens of factors he must weigh. Residential neighborhoods farther east, such as Barrio Logan and Golden Hill, don't want the ballpark any closer, he said. "The National Trust is a single-purpose interest. We have to balance 30 different interests — budget, parking, transportation," Shannon also noted that some of the buildings in East Village that have been named local landmarks don't deserve the designation.

Although the trust employs crack lawyers who work to save sites, it usually relies on publicity and its powers of persuasion. "Lawsuits are a last resort," said Demkroger, who is also scheduled to meet this week with the Padres.

The trust is far too sophisticated and well connected to go around suing developers, Coons said. "They have influence with politicians in Washington [D.C.], even with the president and vice president. They have ways of putting pressure points on government entities that are supposed to be following environmental laws."

Preservationists aren't necessarily opposed to a new baseball stadium, what Coons calls "a ten-ton elephant." He said, "We're not interested in attacking the Padres. We want something that's mutually beneficial. We're trying to show them it's in their interest to bring in an historic district. It adds to the streetscape and ambience of the area."

Despite his optimism and diplomacy, Coons acknowledges that the battle to budge the ten-ton elephant may lapse into a building-by-building campaign. He is trying to pitch the idea of converting the Candy Factory's live-work lofts back to the structure's original use. Not only would that save the 30,000-square-foot factory but it would also make money for the Padres. The registered landmark currently is slated to be razed for a grass plot, which would be part of a park outside the stadium.

Lin Martin, a real estate broker who invested hundreds of thousands of dollars to buy and refurbish the Candy Factory, said he doubts whether the trust can make a difference. He resigned himself to losing the property last year after meeting with the Padres. "I decided not to have my heart broken," Martin emotionally disconnected himself from the place where he started his business, got married, began raising his children, and lived for three years.

"The city needs new revenue," Martin concedes, "and the only way to get it is to let John Moores develop." Last week, the city served Martin with a condemnation notice, giving him 90 days to empty the Candy Factory and cutting short his cash flow. This year represents the first time Martin would have received a return on his investment.

Surprisingly absent were property owners attending the trust's press conference identifying the San Diego Arts and Warehouse District as an endangered historic place. Yet, oddly present was a San Diego police patrol car monitoring the event. "We see the steamroller," Martin said. "That's why we weren't there."

Other property owners, including Harold Kvaass, said they didn't know about the announcement, and few were familiar with the trust and its work. That lack of awareness may be explained, in part, by their all-consuming efforts to negotiate with the Padres and Centre City Development Corporation (CCDC) about the value and future use of their real estate. Rather than unite businesses and home owners, condemnation proceedings tend to divide them into cutting their own deals with the city.

Like former city councilman Tom Hom, who owns the Farmer's Bazaar and Western Metal Supply buildings, Kvaass is trying to retain ownership and wrangle a baseball concession. Kvaass bought the Levi wholesale grocery building at 330 Eighth Avenue in 1983 for his family construction business and then spent more than $1 million on restoration, winning numerous awards in the process.

Can the National Trust for Historic Preservation make a difference? On the day the trust released its "endangered historic places" list, Kvaass said he didn't know. He was under the impression his building would be demolished to ease construction of an underground parking garage for the ballpark.

However, a few days later, Shannon, who claims the trust's action won't make a difference, said he is working to save the Kvaass Construction Company building. ■ the world) is not overpopulated; it is quickly becoming underpopulated. Think about it: if we were as overpopulated as the secular press claimed, would the government allow 10,000 Kosovars into this country? Seventy-five percent of us live on the coast, so if you want open spaces, go inland.

Heck, every few years more and more refugees are allowed into the United States.

The only reason we are not like Europe, a completely aged population, is because we continually have immigrants who still believe in having children. Europe has Muslim immigrants who, with their children, will keep Europe going.

What would happen if the government said in June of 2000, "For us to survive as a country, every married couple must have more than three children." Would you do it?

Of course, if you read the Bible from cover to cover, you soon come to know that children are to be treasured, not abhorred.

I hope everyone wakes up from this depopulation nightmare before we are unable to maintain civilization, projected to be in the 21st or 22nd Century.

This information is from Christian population analysts who have no desire to keep the pro-choice companies fat.

All you who repeatedly complain or comment on the lousy, self-aggrandizing, etc., reviews of D. Shepherd — get over it! He ain't goin' away!

I had been a long-time resident of San Diego till 1991. I moved back recently and found the Reader basically devoid of the meat I enjoyed in it back when. One unchanged aspect was Duncan Shepherd's worthless reviews and the complaints of readers about it.

Hey, he (if "he" is a real person) is in for the long haul. Do as I do: Ignore his main "review" and just read the little synopses to get the gist of what the movie is about. Forget the stars and thick buffs too.

Anymore, I just cut out the movie schedule (still very useful) and use the rest for Wesley, my parrot, to perch on in his cage. The reviews and foldout cigarette ads get best placement.

See, Shepherd is useful after all!

Faith in More Appealing Robes

Music of the California Missions

On June 26, the vocal ensemble Zephyr will return to the Mission San Luis Rey to perform a selection of sacred and secular music from the roughly 50-year heyday of the California Missions. Tenor Bob Gibson describes the acoustics of the Mission as "wonderful," and adds, "it's a glorious experience. The California Missions were some of the last they built in the world, so certainly they're drawing on some experience. There was a sort of mix of tradition and practicality, and it worked."

The thought that the missionary friars might have paid careful attention to acoustic effects is not so far-fetched, given the emphasis they placed on music in their work. According to Gibson, when the Franciscans began to make their way up the coast of what would eventually become California, founding missions along the way, "what the Padres found was that many of the tribes in the places where the missions cropped up had a great deal of talent." That "made for a good back and forth between the Padres and the natives. They enjoyed doing the music and excelled at it. It was one of the preferred things to do in a mission. And I'm sure once you get those things going, it makes quite a spectacle, and that helps in conversion."

Music at Mission Dolores

Though music served to build cultural bridges, the Padres' primary goal in teaching it was "to have a little orchestra and chorus to add to the experience of the Mass" — clothing the Mystery of Faith in more immediately appealing robes. "Their model was the European boys' and men's choir, so they would train the locals in that way. The ideal was to train the boys and men in both singing and instruments. Some of the music directors had them do both simultaneously. They would be trained in all the basic instruments of the orchestra — they had woodwinds and brass and percussion and strings. Some of the instruments were brought over, but eventually, they began to be made here.

"The basic style that was performed most of all was chant. It's the simplest, it's the most long-lasting, it's the kind of thing that was the hallmark of the Church. Even though they might have had an orchestral setting, it was simple and direct. The basic Mass we use is called Missa de Los Angeles. In many of the movements, we alternate a phrase in chant with a phrase in which there is a four-part choir and orchestra. Or in our case — when we do it live — a guitar."

Gibson places "the life of the missions as roughly contemporaneous with Beethoven," but notes that "the music wouldn't have been as current as Beethoven. The latest music they were using would be what you might call simplified Mozart. Simple harmonies, very direct melodies, and pretty much homophonic."

There were, however, exceptions to the simplicity. "The Renaissance tradition was continued when the Spaniards came over to Mexico. They had a much more sophisticated cathedral and Church operation there than the missions ever did. Some of the friars who had had earlier training, both in Spain and then from being in Mexico," might have been more familiar with the more complex music of the era, and brought with them the tradition of "the Renaissance polyphonic masters." In that tradition, "there were great amounts of counterpoint — very glorious music.

"We include some of both on our program," besides the Missa de Los Angeles, "one of the pieces that we sing is a Magnificat by a composer named Francisco Capillas. He composed music for the Mexican Cathedral in the late 17th Century."

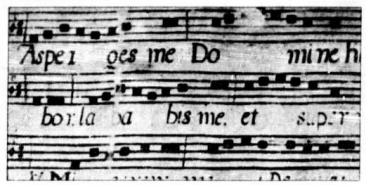

The friars' first concern was music for Mass, but as Gibson mentioned, music became a "preferred activity" in mission life, both in and out of the chapel. "Even though life was very structured, there was also a structured recreational period during the day when they could sing whatever they wanted. They could have sung some of their traditional ancestral chants, or some of the Spanish love songs. We have an example of an Indian chant from the Cahvilla tribe, and there's a love song [we perform] with guitar called 'La Noche Esta Serena.'

"They also had popular songs that were sung a lot — maybe daily, in the morning or the evening. One of the things the Padres used them for was to teach tenets of the faith, or moral lessons, or biblical stories. Because when you do these things over and over and over, it kind of sinks in."

In conclusion, Gibson offers an interesting historical note: European culture arrived in California from the East and from the South, and in at least one regard, the Southern influence was the more advanced of the two. "The music that was done on the West Coast during that period was much more sophisticated than what was done on the East Coast. The East Coast wasn't a unified thing. There wasn't an overall church fostering orchestral Masses, for example. There just wasn't the need in the culture on the East Coast. They developed their own music; it was kind of homespun and direct."

OUTDOORS

Colorful Foliage along San Diego's coastline lingers, despite the lack of rainfall and warmer, drier days. In the older, landscaped neighborhoods of Coronado, Point Loma, Pacific Beach, and La Jolla you'll find oleander and hibiscus blooming in many shades and colorful bougainvillea creeping over garden walls. Look for the magnificent clusters of red flowers adorning the crowns of the flame eucalyptus (red-flowering gum) trees.

June Bugs are emerging as summer's warmth is finally upon us. The green June beetle, only one of some 300 species of acarab beetles found in Southern California, flashes a metallic green underbelly as its buzzes about erratically. The mature scarabs flying about have spent at least a year underground in larval form munching at the roots of lawns or your favorite ornamental plants.

Under the Big Blue Sky, wildlife and plant walks are offered on an ongoing basis at the 700-acre Blue Sky Ecological Reserve. "Summer in Blue Sky" is the subject on Saturday, June 26; hear "Fun Nature Stories" on Sunday, June 27. Both hikes begin at 9 a.m.

TV

Hugh Grant, the Embodiment of the triumph of English manners (or at least English mannerisms — charm) over English morals (the English simply have a different understanding about sexual fidelity, don't you see?) bumbles through an attempt at playing something other than a bashful romantic in Extreme Measures. With Gene Hackman. Airs Friday, June 25, at 8 p.m. on TNT, Cox Cable Channel 34.

Cinematographer Conrad Hall has admitted that the famous raindrop/tear shot in In Cold Blood was a happy accident, but that doesn't mean he isn't a genius. His brilliance simply gave the spirit room to move. The film is powerfully stark in tone and appearance, faithful to fact, harrowing, and great. Airs Saturday, June 26, at 10 a.m. on A&E, Cox Cable Channel 41.

Those Who Fail to Understand the masterful Killer Klowns from Outer Space (see listing below) can always content themselves with watching truly awful movies, listening to a guy and two robots hurl incessant jokes at the screen. About one out of three jokes works — excellent percentage, given the total number. Mystery Science Theater 3000 airs Saturday, June 26, at 8 a.m. on the Sci Fi Channel, Cox Cable 44.

So Many Are So Quick to write off Killer Klowns from Outer Space as a so-bad-it's-good B horror flick. Don't let the general dunderheadedness faze you — the simplicity exists to better funnel the film to your inner child and explode all your worst fears about clowns and circuses. Truly terrifying. Airs Saturday, June 26, at 2 p.m. on the Sci Fi Channel, Cox Cable Channel 44.

Lord Knows we would never want to live in New York City — imagine being saddled with the idea that your address gave you legitimate cultural status — but we do get sick of hearing how it's the hot seat of culture, even as true culture is rapidly being replaced by buzz. Garth Brooks: Live from Central Park airs Saturday, June 26, at 8 p.m. on Fox Family Network, Cox Cable Channel 19.

Director Peter Weir — Dead Poets Society, The Truman Show — got started with Picnic at Hanging Rock, a story of girls who disappear from a Victorian boarding school, or escape the mores of staid Victorian life, or ascend to the rarefied realm of womanhood, depending on who you talk to. Airs Saturday, June 26, at 10 p.m. on TCM, Cox Cable Channel 74.

A Friendly Neighbor recently swapped video collections with us, and we were intrigued to find Highlander 2: The Director's Cut among their offerings. Why? Why not the original? Two certainly was worse, and the extra footage failed to provide extra thrills. But the TV series was better than either. Highlander airs Sunday, June 27, at 12:30 a.m. on TNT, Cox Cable Channel 34.

We Fell in Love with Geena Davis back in '88, when she lit up Beetlejuice. The world followed suit in '91 with Thelma and Louise. But then the star vehicle Angie ('94) flopped, and Michael Douglas pulled out of Cutthroat Island ('95) leaving her stranded with mushy Matthew Modine. Cutthroat Island airs Sunday, June 27, at 9 p.m. on KNSD, Channel 39.

Cary Grant, a suave, debonair man about whom swirled vague ambiguities regarding his sexuality, seems ideal to play Cole Porter, a homosexual stuck in a marriage of convenience as he conquered the world with his musical genius. But Grant plays it smilingly straight — a happy fantasy, not a bio. Night and Day airs Monday, June 28, at 12:30 a.m. on TCM, Cox Cable Channel 74.

We-Yell, them that hifalutin' folks over at PBS — now why is it that it's called Public Television, yet aims at some kinda exclusive intelligentsia? — finally came up with something worth watchin' — A Hot Dog Program. Journeys from Connecticut to California, exploring hot dog culture — even (gasp!) how they're made. Airs Wednesday, June 30, at 8 p.m. on KPBS, Channel 15.

The Great Patriotic War became the moniker for World War II in the Soviet Union after 1941, when the Russians lost an estimated 27 million people (both civilian and military) during the four years they were involved in the war. An exhibit entitled "World War II through Russian Eyes," featuring more than 300 artifacts, is currently on display at the Municipal Gym and Exhibit Hall (2111 Pan American Plaza). The show is said to present a glimpse of the struggle against Hitler's forces most Americans are not familiar with, since the Cold War blocked this chapter in history for most of the western world.

Visitors see a re-creation of Hitler's bunker and many of his personal artifacts, including his walking stick and a globe on which he'd written Veni, Vidi, Vici (in German); morale posters, partisan uniforms, personal artifacts of Josef Stalin, original oil paintings of battle scenes by Russian artists, and much more.

FINDING THE BOYFRIEND WITHIN

Brad Gooch

Author: Brad Gooch was born in 1952 in Kingston, Pennsylvania. "Sign," he said, on the morning that we talked, "Aquarius." And then he laughed, as he would many times during our chat. Gooch was an only child, "good practice," he said, "for being a writer." In high school, he wanted to be a poet. "I was interested then," he said, "in Frank O'Hara and Bob Dylan and T.S. Eliot." He attended Columbia College, studying with Kenneth Koch. Gooch graduated magna cum laude from Columbia in 1973. In New York, said Gooch, "I met lots of poets and painters, so that was a great experience for me." Gooch paused, asked, "Want me to keep going on this bio-curve?" I did, I said, and he continued. "After college, I went to live in Europe. For a while I wanted to be a monk. I was very influenced in Paris by medieval Christianity, and while I was there I read Aquinas's Treatise on Happiness, an excellent book in its own way. I came back to New York and went to graduate school and was teaching and working on a book of poems and a book of short stories and took this weird detour for three years and became a male model. From that experience, I wrote a novel, Scary Kisses. And after that, it was regular adulthood."

Finding the Boyfriend Within: A Practical Guide for Tapping into Your Own Source of Love, Happiness, and Respect; Simon & Schuster; 1999; 191 pages; $21
Type: nonfiction: an amalgam of self-help and memoir, complete with exercises whose general goal is to get you to treat yourself better Place: mostly Manhattan
Time: present

Gooch mentions in Finding the Boyfriend Within that he hates to shop for clothing. I said I thought it curious for someone who had worked as a model. "Even stranger," he said, "was being a model and hating to have my picture taken. Those people who are born to model come alive when their picture is being taken. If you are the kind who it makes nervous and you freeze, you are going to have trouble. And I did. But as for shopping and clothes, models never really dress all that well. There's a reverse chic — walking around in jeans and T-shirts all the time."

Gooch received a Ph.D. in English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University in 1986. He teaches at William Paterson University in Wayne, New Jersey. "Creative writing," he said, "and usually a course on the Beat Generation, because kids really like that." Gooch is author also of another novel, The Golden Age of Promiscuity, and of a biography of Frank O'Hara, City Poet: The Life and Times of Frank O'Hara.

Gooch's lover for more than a decade, filmmaker Howard Brookner, died from AIDS in 1989. "I miss him so much more than I ever thought I would," Gooch writes. "Somehow we stumbled into a kind of natural, brotherly camaraderie and a love that suited both of us. Actually, I thought my life would always be like that. If not with Howard, then with someone else." As the '90s passed and Gooch reached his 45th birthday, he began to "clean up." He quit drinking, quit smoking, began to meditate, tried to eat right. Still, though, no boyfriend. One night when Gooch looked around his filthy apartment and into his empty refrigerator, he said to himself that he would never let a boyfriend treat him the way he treated himself. If he didn't think he was worth the effort, why should anyone else? Gooch began, then, tinkering with methods for making friends with himself. From these methods emerged Finding the Boyfriend Within, which is nothing more or nothing less than a charming little book about how to make friends with yourself.

READING

The late James Schuyler, dumpy and overweight and a bit of a shambler, was a great poet and a great friend of Frank O'Hara's. Schuyler, gay in an age when gayness was still hidden, was notorious for mooning about over men who didn't return his affections. Teasingly, I asked Gooch how he would have advised Schuyler to find the boyfriend within.

"Well, Jimmy, whom I knew, in a way had the boyfriend within, big-time. The thing is that the boyfriend within is something that writers and painters develop automatically. Because this is talking about getting in touch with this inner transcendental part of yourself, or finding your voice. Schuyler, as unlikely as he might have seemed on the outside, obviously had this transcendental, slightly oracular voice, which at the same time was funny and self-deprecating. He was an amazing poet. He heated up late. Because for a while there it seemed that O'Hara was the big thing, then Ashbery became hot, and Schuyler not until later on, when he wrote those big poems. At the same time, I do think the lifestyle that was connected with the bohemian art life that I wrote about in City Poet, in a certain way, shows that this group of people weren't valuing the boyfriend within." Gooch laughed. "There was a kind of exasperating quality to them. They fed on this darker energy."

Gooch noted that for writers and artists, this process of making friends with yourself, or, finding this boyfriend within, comes naturally. "There's something about poets and painters, some kind of in-touchness with themselves, but their boyfriend within often is entirely fractured from their public persona. That's what you got with Schuyler."

Gooch suggests a series of exercises and tasks designed to help locate and "grow" this inner voice and to buddy up to one's boyfriend within. Gooch admitted that he didn't find some aspects of this all that easy. "Somehow, as an adult, to give yourself permission to be alone and to hang out with yourself and go to the movies alone, for a lot of people it's just something they don't think of. I had stopped thinking about it. It is surprising in me how much resistance there is to being alone. You know you need to unwind alone but there is some sort of impediment to that so you end up watching TV, going to a bar, talking on the telephone. It is embarrassing for some people to be alone or to do things alone. Having a boyfriend, a partner, a wife, a husband, all this is a kind of way people are validating they are okay. Someone likes them. Even if it's hell behind those doors, they need that. It is still difficult for me to go out somewhere and eat by myself. Me, the only child, me, the author of Finding the Boyfriend Within, so there is some kind of queasiness about it. I think it's partly insecurity, a fear that people will look at you as if something is wrong with you."

Gooch recommends that you make lists of aspects of yourself you like, aspects of yourself that could use some working on, etc. I asked if he really did all the stuff that in his book he suggests.

"Yes. I started doing those exercises and trying to figure it out for myself. Certainly, that getting-in-touch-with-my-voice stuff is something I do every day. One of the surprises for me was, having been in therapy forever, when I did that then I started noticing that some of my point of view on things was different than my therapist's. That's when you know you are on to something. I really have tried to solve my life problems in this way that I describe in the book. The impetus was deciding that happiness really was a goal, something that you can try to attain in different ways. So I really did that stuff. While I was writing this, all these lessons, insights and attitudes were part of my life. And now I find I have to go back and read my own book. I have taken a lot of flack from my friends about this book. They will say to me, 'Brad, are you staying home and making lists?' "

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN THE SOUL AND THE BODY

SOUL
O who shall, from this dungeon, raise
A soul enslav'd so many ways?
With bolts of bones, that fetter'd stands
In feet, and manacled in hands;
Here blinded with an eye, and there
Deaf with the drumming of an ear;
A soul hung up, as 'twere, in chains
Of nerves, and arteries, and veins;
Tortur'd, besides each other part,
In a vain head, and double heart.

BODY
O who shall me deliver whole
From bonds of this tyrannic soul?
Which, stretch'd upright, impales me so
That mine own precipice I go;
And warms and moves this needless frame,
(A fever could but do the same)
And, wanting where its spite to try,
Has made me live to let me die.
A body that could never rest,
Since this ill spirit it possest.

SOUL
What magic could me thus confine
Within another's grief to pine?
Where whatsoever it complain,
I feel, that cannot feel, the pain;
And all my care itself employs;
That to preserve which me destroys;
Constrain'd not only to endure
Diseases, but, what's worse, the cure;
And ready oft the port to gain,
Am shipwreck'd into health again.

BODY
But physic yet could never reach
The maladies thou me dost teach;
Whom first the cramp of hope does tear,
And then the palsy shakes of fear;
The pestilence of love does heat,
Or hatred's hidden ulcer eat;
Joy's cheerful madness does perplex,
Or sorrow's other madness vex;
Which knowledge forces me to know,
And memory will not forego.
What but a soul could have the wit
To build me up for sin so fit?
So architects do square and hew
Green trees that in the forest grew.

Roam-O-Rama

A Guide to Unexpected San Diego • By Jerry Schad

Eastbound in the right lane of Highway 52, the San Clemente Canyon Freeway, you can look down upon a long, slender, almost unbroken swath of natural vegetation: massive sycamores, stately live oaks, climbing vines and tangled shrubs. The freeway was built in the early '70s higher up on the slope of the canyon in an effort to spare most of the trees — appropriately so in view of the fact that such riparian, or stream-loving, vegetation covers less than 0.2 percent of San Diego County's land area.

Much of San Clemente Canyon and several of its steep finger canyons are included within the boundaries of Marian Bear Park, an area administered by the city of San Diego as natural open space. Facilities include parking areas, picnic tables and restrooms off Regents Road and Genesee Avenue, and a few benches scattered elsewhere. What you won't often find here is silence, though early Sunday morning is a good bet if you'd rather hear bird songs and not much freeway traffic.

The main hiking and mountain-biking pathway in the canyon stretches for three miles along the seasonal (now virtually dry) stream. The east end of the park, near I-805, offers the prettiest vegetation, the densest shade, and the biggest infestations of poison oak. The latter's vines drape across tree trunks and limbs like lacy curtains and sometimes spread laterally on the side of the trail.

San Clemente Canyon on a misty morning

Several back entrances into Marian Bear Park and San Clemente Canyon can be found. Mountain bikers frequently make use of a connection between San Clemente Canyon and a paved bike path paralleling Interstate 5 under Highway 52. From a point on the main trail between Regents Road and Genesee Avenue, a 0.5-mile-long trail goes north under Highway 52, follows a sage-scented ravine, zigzags through a grove of eucalyptus, and emerges at Standley Park in University City. On the south side of San Clemente Canyon, an obscure pathway goes up to Cobb Drive on the mesa above. Another eroded path follows high-voltage power lines up toward Kroc Junior High School.

The tour bus visits the Kay-Bee Toy Works, 1343 East Valley Parkway (760-743-6618), on Thursday and Friday, July 1 and 2. Next stop, the Kay-Bee Toy Works at 1044 El Camino Real (760-632-5526), on Saturday and Sunday, July 3 and 4. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day. Admission is free. (ESCONDIDO, ENCINITAS)

Children's Museum of San Diego, the newest exhibit is "Design Worlds/Diseño Mundos," a year-long exhibition nearly filling the entire museum. The exhibition includes 12 specially commissioned interactive installations by artists and designers; a central gallery is devoted to specific design principles and will change four times during the year. The central gallery opens with an industrial design theme, focusing on the roles and functions of common objects.

The second component of the show is entitled "Fashion Is," organized by international designer Zandra Rhodes. The installation begins outside the museum and continues inside. Visitors may see how they look in historical garb, handle the components of sewing, create fashion shows, and more. "Fashion Is" continues through the summer.

Continuing exhibits include "The Book Stop," "Improv Theater," "Cora's Rainhouse." Find the museum at 200 West Island Avenue. Dial 619-233-8792 for additional details. (DOWNTOWN) the Evolution of San Diego from the Early 1900s into the Year 2000." Automobiles representative of every decade of this century are featured in the exhibition, along with photographs and memorabilia. Example vehicles include: a 1902 Curved Dash Olds, a 1910 Hunt, 1925 Chrysler Imperial Airflow, 1949 Volkswagen Beetle, a 1953 Hudson Hornet, 1967 Corvair, and more. This show remains on display through January 31, 2000.

More than 80 automobiles and motorcycles from horseless carriages to future prototypes are included in the museum's permanent collection. Find the museum near the Starlight Bowl; 619-231-2886. (BALBOA PARK)

San Diego Hall of Champions, the museum reopens in its new facility, the restored Federal Building, with the touring exhibit "The Nazi Olympics, Berlin 1936," next Thursday, July 1. On the eve of World War II, Adolf Hitler ex, hoited the Olympic Games to promulgate myths of a peaceful Germany and Aryan racial superiority. The exhibitions explores the Nazis' exclusion of German-Jewish athletes, the ensuing international boycott efforts, and the unprecedented success of African American athletes. The show includes audio and video recordings, photo panels, and film footage of the heroes — and victims — of this history. See the exhibit through Thursday, September 30.

The Hall of Champions is now located at 2131 Pan American Plaza. Call 619-234-2544 for information. (BALBOA PARK)

San Diego Maritime Museum, the museum features permanent exhibits documenting the history of San Diego's waterfront and the building of the West Coast by sea, including exhibits concerning the old San Diego-Coronado ferryboats, the tuna fishing industry, and the military. The museum fleet consists of the 1863 bark Star of India, the 1898 San Francisco ferryboat Berkeley, and the 1904 Scottish steam yacht Medea. There are also nautical exhibits, ship carpenters, model building, ships in bottles, woodcarvers, and a complete research library.

The museum is located at 1306 North Harbor Drive, along the Embarcadero at the corner of North Harbor Drive and Ash Street; 619-234-9153. (DOWNTOWN)

San Diego Museum of Man, unravel the mysteries surrounding the aged art of mummification in the exhibit "Mysteries of the Mummies." Among the treasures featured in the exhibit are a multitude of mummified bodies and hundreds of related artifacts such as caskets, tombs, sacred skulls, and shrunken heads. Egyptian, Peruvian, and Mexican mummies are part of the exhibition, which includes animal and human relics, as well as two life-sized tableaux. See this show through Sunday, September 5.

An assortment of wood carvings and paintings from the Venezuelan states of Merida and Trujillo are showcased in "Images from the Andes: Venezuelan Folk Art," on exhibit through January 1, 2000. The colorful wood carvings and paintings reflect the rich variety of Venezuelan folk art, according to curator Grace Johnson. The works fit into three categories — daily life, political life, and religion.

"Conversations in Culture — A Tenth Anniversary Retrospective" focuses on both photographs and artworks by artists who have contributed their talents to the museum's annual Southwest Indian Arts Colloquium. Expect to see a diverse collection of carvings, figurines, jewelry, blown glass, and pottery by Native American artisans. The show closes on April 30, 2000.

Life in Egypt 3500 years ago is depicted in the museum's new Children's Discovery Center. "Time Travel to Ancient Egypt" features a walk-through rendition of a nobleman's home, and organizers promise a specific theme each month.

For more information, dial 619-239-2001. (BALBOA PARK)

San Pasqual Battlefield State Historic Park commemorates the clash (on December 6, 1846) during the Mexican War between the U.S. Dragoons, bolstered by sailors and volunteers from San Diego, and California militia. A narrated slide-show screens throughout the day, telling the story of the war in Mexico and California. A self-guided tour recounts the events of the battle and profiles the leaders of the forces and also describes the lives of the Indians indigenous to th, valley. The museum is found at 15808 San Pasqual Valley Road. Call 760-238-3380 for additional details. (ESCONDIDO)

Villa Montezuma, built in 1887 for internationally celebrated author and musician Jesse Shepard, serves as both a historical house museum and cultural center. Find the museum at 1925 K Street (at 20th Street). Call 619-239-2211 for more information. (DOWNTOWN)

William Heath Davis House Museum, said to be the oldest surviving structure in the new town area of downtown San Diego, is a well-preserved example of a pre-framed lumber "salt box" family home shipped from the East Coast to California by boat around Cape Horn in 1850. Find the museum at 410 Island Avenue (at Fourth Avenue); 619-233-4692. (GASLAMP QUARTER)

There is a wild impetuosity about Isserlis's playing.

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE

The La Jolla Chamber Music Society's "Reveille Series" concluded its splendid 1998–99 season with a spectacular but controversial duo-recital by cellist Steven Isserlis and pianist Stephen Hough.

Or, really, a solo recital by Isserlis, with Hough as accompanist — and this was one of the controversial aspects of the concert. The spectacular is Isserlis's chief defining characteristic. He looks spectacular, in his eccentric, holdover-from-the-Sixties way (although the young British cellist must have been an infant in the 1960s): the huge mass of disorderly, curly hair (what used to be called a "Jewish Afro"), the narrow, hawklike face peering from underneath it, the mesmerized, half-closed eyes focused on a world beyond our own, the slim, nimble body as taut and flexible as the strings of his Stradivarius. His stage deportment, balletic and theatrical, propels this appearance into dynamic motion: the head rolling in figure-eights of emotion, the wild tosses of the hair, the bow arm flying high in a triumphant gesture at the end of particularly heated phrase, the whole elegant figure weaving and wandering and twisting and soaring, like a flock of seagulls in a high wind.

And this is not mere outward show, for the music this musician produces has the same qualities as his flamboyant visual performance. There is a wild impetuosity about his playing, as though the score had invaded him, taken over his consciousness, and driven him to obey its every erratic whim. The sense of uninhibited spontaneity and of devil-may-care risk-taking imparts an irresistible sweep and vitality to Isserlis's style. It also results in sudden dynamic and rhythmic spurts and fadings, in a range of tone colors lying all over the place and changing as rapidly as thought, in a fabulously varied manipulation of vibrato (along with the abusively reiterated device of beginning a note with a white, vibrato-less timbre and then bringing in the throb, in the fashion of mannered pop singers), and — above all — in a pervasive emotionalism that, carrying everything else before it, threatens to inundate matters of formal structure.

In short, Isserlis's playing style is overwhelmingly Romantic, just as his appearance on stage makes one think of 19th-century musical showmen like Franz Liszt. This is someone (everything about him proclaims) who is in the grip of a higher power, who is illuminated by ecstatic revelations, who in his "Streben nach'dem Unendlichen" ("striving after the infinite") has been transformed into a different species of human being.

There are obvious advantages to such a Romantic approach when the musician's repertoire comes out of the same era and attitude. Hence the appropriateness of Isserlis's program at Sherwood Auditorium, which consisted exclusively of Romantic music: Mendelssohn's Second Cello Sonata, Schubert's "Arpeggione" Sonata, Liszt's arrangement of his quasi-religious song "Die Zelle in Nonnenwerth" ("The Cloisters in Nonnenwerth"), and Rachmaninoff's Cello Sonata. Except for a brief encore, the program was thus confined to the period between 1824 (the Schubert) and 1901 (the Rachmaninoff), all the works sharing a general Romantic notion about the relationship of form and expression — a notion Isserlis regularly carried to its extreme.

The cellist has concentrated on the same type of repertoire in his recordings, notable among which are Bloch's Schelomo, the Elgar Concerto, the complete cello music of Fauré, the Brahms and Mendelssohn Sonatas, works by the contemporary mystic-Romantic John Tavener, and cello pieces by Franck, Grieg, Liszt, Tchaikovsky, Glazunov, and others of their persuasion. This is evidently where his heart lies, and for all his eccentricities and idiosyncrasies, lovers of Romantic music must be grateful that Isserlis has chosen to devote himself to such music, for his immense talents and his inherent predilections enable him to communicate its meanings with a persuasive authenticity not many cellists have achieved. That precipitous plunge into the first theme of the Mendelssohn Sonata No. 2, that rapt, exalted concentration in the Liszt "Zelle," that magnificent brooding and yearning and ecstatic exuberance in the Rachmaninoff — by this unselfconscious identification with the Romantic vision Isserlis enables the music to speak eloquently in its native tongue, unrestrained by Classical ideas of decorum.

On the other hand, in all these composers there is a subtler balance between form and expression than what Isserlis tends to give us (it should be said that he is somewhat less of a wildman on his CDs than in the concert hall). And I cannot even imagine what his Bach or Beethoven would sound like (although his performances of those composers would certainly be worth hearing). More pertinent to the experience of the Sherwood recital, the extreme nature of Isserlis's style and temperament created some uncomfortable interpretive dissonances with pianist Hough's very different manner of playing.

Hough, too, is a powerful and intense musician, but balance, subtlety of expression, and an emphasis on structure are prominent characteristics of his playing. (He also wears his hair short and avoids theatrical gestures.) He and Isserlis have frequently performed together, but I found them quite ill-matched, with Isserlis's heart-on-the-sleeve flamboyance virtually blowing his colleague away, so that often enough one was scarcely aware of the pianist's presence. Only in the Rachmaninoff, with its very strong piano part, did Hough manage to make a mark comparable with what one hears on his recordings (for example, his complex and profound interpretations of Liszt). Even there, the general dominance of the cello skewed the performance and gave a distorted picture of the work — stupendously exciting (like everything in this concert), but not fully responsive to the composer's intentions. In Romantic music, Isserlis would find a better match in a pianist as theatrical and unrestrained as himself — someone like Arcadi Volodos. ■

The Thing Shines, Not the Maker

The trouble with much of his work is that it tries too hard to be masterful and noble.

REVIEW
W.S. DI PIERO

When I was growing up in South Philadelphia, boys were always getting jumped for walking past the wrong corner, or for giving somebody a look, or for no reason at all. But it was especially insulting if the jumpee was a neighborhood favorite son. So as a non-San Diegan, I'm a little hesitant to say unkind things about a highly regarded local artist. The sculptor Donal Hord lived most of his life here and is closely identified with the city, in part because of two major public works, the Guardian of the Waters outside the County Administration building and his Aztec on the San Diego State University campus. A retrospective of his work, from watercolors he did as a teenager to the big symbolical carvings of his late years, is running at the historical society, and the trouble with much of his work is that it tries too hard to be masterful and noble.

His favorite subjects were archetypal figures drawn from Meso-American cultures, in particular Aztec and Mayan, and he became famous for using exotic, extremely resistant hardwoods like lignum vitae and difficult-to-work stone like obsidian (a solid unstable volcanic glass), diorite (the hardest granite), and jade (favored by Mayan artisans). Two interesting pieces carved in 1928 from tropical hardwood mark out the dimensions of his ambition. One is of the mythic figure Tezcatlipoca, who, the catalog tells us, "tried to devour the morning sun but was repulsed by the guide of the morning star," the other of Ome-Tochtli, who "represents intoxication from the fermented juice of the maguey plant." The workmanship, as in everything he did, is very fine, and he's shaping the feeling from the inside out, drawing from the material a legendary suggestiveness, a stolid anonymity. He's not making extravagant claims for his subject matter, and he's not letting craft become melodrama.

But when the physiognomies are pumped up with heroic emotions, the work has the unwanted effect of patronizing the very culture and values it wants to celebrate. Hord dared to make an art without irony, but boldness needs an imaginative deftness and canniness to prevent it from becoming kitsch or illustration. In two statues titled Indigenus, his virile manipulations of the wood turn the subject of courageous humility into bombastic cultural piety. The woman holds a pine cone and maize while children peek from behind her dress; the thick-footed male, who looks like every broadly imagined Indian peasant fashioned by a white person, has an Olmec demeanor and Marvin Hagler physique. Hord had a Beaux Arts sensibility and went for big emotional effects. In superbly detailed mahogany reliefs like Chumash Fisherman and Swordfish Dancers, the workmanship is impeccable, but it's workmanship that applies feeling instead of releasing it.

Drawings by sculptors often jump alive because they register accident and discovery and because they anticipate sculptural action. Hord's drawings, though, are almost too carefully made. They have a stiff, academic exquisiteness. The stiffness carries over into the sculpture. The emotional content of nearly every piece on exhibit is overarticulated and oratorical. Hord took big risks in using materials that are themselves hyperarticulated. The lignum vitae of his later work swirls with nutty brown, black, and tan stripes that look like tattoos. Some of these pieces approach self-parody, in subject and manner, because there's so much declaration going on.

The exhibition includes a few male nudes, among them the famous, tensely languorous Young Bather. Hord fetishized the male body. His nudes have a beefcake dandyism, self-aware, exhibitionist, and contrived, but the eros in them is solemn and locked down. It's as if the artist is stroking the form into submission, not working it into excited existence. The nudes are monuments, really, and the difference between monument making and good figurative sculpture is that monuments are merely tenants in their space, whereas sculpture incites a rapturous relationship between matter and space.

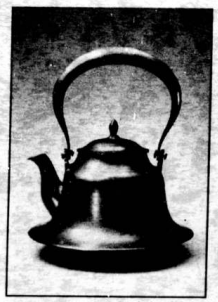

There are many excitements but no declarations of self-importance in the International Museum's "Mingei: Two Centuries of Japanese Folk Art." The objects in the show, which come from the Mingeikan (the Japan Folk Crafts Museum) in Tokyo, were not made to be attention-getting, though they are the purest results of attention rooted in necessity. The Mingeikan was founded in 1936 by Soetsu Yanagi, a philosopher-critic with a passion for William Blake and Walt Whitman, who coined the word mingei as an abbreviation of minshuteki kogei ("art of the people"). Yanagi was an aesthetician who believed in a generic Universal Beauty to be found in commonplace objects produced by nameless craftspeople everywhere. Complexity, he believed, lies in simplicity. He could have been speaking of Shaker furniture when he wrote: "Craftsmanship must not be impeded by individualism. The virtue of folk crafts is that one feels no obtruding personality in them. The thing shines, not the maker."

Most things here are from the 18th and 19th centuries. The forms are crafted to enable function. A tubby, three-legged brass hibachi has oval handles cut from the sides so that it can be carried on a stick. Like so many of the objects on display, it gives pleasure because we see necessity worked into the decorative shapes and textures. We experience these things, of course, as art objects because they're estranged from their context, displayed in an exclusionary museum-privileged way. But it doesn't take much to imagine use clinging to them like a handprint. One sumptuously crude teakettle, in fact, bears a deeply impressed handprint like a happy proprietary signature. There are enormous wooden hooks shaped like meerschaum pipes, their J's sliced with grooves where heavy iron kettles hung. There are imposing 19th-century deerskin firefighter coats bearing squad crests stenciled on with smoke fumes. There are kimono-shaped comforters that are like daytime's robes cast over sleep. Another comforter is blazoned with a fiery phoenix — it wraps the sleeper in a promise of reawakening.

Mingei stoneware, with its roughened drippy textures and asymmetries, is bound to enchant us because it looks so modernist. The runny, uneven glazes are supremely beautiful. The objects themselves are sometimes truly sculptural, like the vermilion tray with a heavily grooved surface of long, knifing channels. You could use and look at such an object every day and still see it. It boasts only its necessary presence, not its see-here importance. ■

ART MUSEUMS

California Center for the Arts Museum, Ansel Adams lived his entire life in California (1902-1984), and during his 50-year career he photographed many areas in the state, although his images of Yosemite and the Sierra Nevadas are arguably his best known. In "Ansel Adams & California," approximately 80 of Adams's California images are gathered, including signature examples of Adams's work, along with less-familiar images of the Golden State's rural agricultural areas, small-town architecture, and urban views. The show includes early and later prints of the same or related subjects, with differences in scale, paper, tonal value, and cropping apparent to demonstrate how the photographer's aesthetic concerns shifted over the course of his career. See the exhibit through Sunday, September 5.

Concurrently, the museum presents a complementary exhibition entitled "California: A Second Glance," examining the cultural and physical landscape of California through the work of artists said to "question the classic images and familiar stereotypes which have defined the Golden State throughout its history." The five artists featured in the show are Wick Alexander (paintings), Barbara Sexton (drawings), John Huggins (photographs), Edward Ruscha, and Johnny Coleman (installation). This show concludes on Sunday, August 29.

A temporary exhibit of three large-scale outdoor sculptures by Niki de Saint Phalle — Cat, Bird and Beast, and Nana and the Dolphin — is mounted in the arrival court of the center through Sunday, October 31.

Find the center at 340 North Escondido Boulevard (at Valley Parkway); 760-738-4120. (ESCONDIDO)

Mingei International Museum of Folk Art, objects from the permanent collection make up the pieces in the exhibition "Artes de Mexico." The show includes works by several renowned 20th-Century folk artists including Oaxacan potter Teodora Blanco and Jalisco's Rosendo Rodriguez, along with architectural pieces by Candelario Medrano and woodcarvings by Manuel Jiménez. All regions of Mexico are represented, with selections ranging from objects of daily use to those of ceremony. Enjoy the exhibit through May 2000.

Objects from "The Nippon Mingeikan Collection, Selections by Soetsu Yanagi" — the world's first museum dedicated to the arts of the people — are currently on exhibit. In the 1920s, scholar and aesthetician Soetsu Yanagi recognized the beauty of objects created for daily use and coined the word mingei by combining the Japanese words min (all people) and gei (art). The museum's director today is Sori Yanagi (Soetsu's son), who was also guest curator of this exhibition, made up of 140 objects, many from the 19th Century. See this show through Sunday, August 1.

The Mingei is located on the square with the San Diego Museum of Art and the Timken Museum of Art. For additional information, call 619-239-0003. (BALBOA PARK)

Museum of Contemporary Art, Downtown, the museum's collecting activity is documented in "Selections from the Permanent Collection: The 1960s." The exhibition features seminal transitional figures Jasper Johns and Robert Rauschenberg, along with work by Andy Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein, Claes Oldenburg, Carl Andre, John McCracken, Agnes Martin, Ellsworth Kelly, Robert Irwin, Edward Ruscha, John Baldessari, Joe Goode, and Craig Kauffman. The show closes on Sunday, July 18.

The museum's Pan-American Project series yields up "Marcos Ramirez ERRE: Amor Como Primer Idioma (Love as First Language)." For the exhibit, the artist has created an enormous steel heart displayed outside on the south plaza entitled Acorazado, a pun on the Spanish words cored (armour-plated) and corazón (heart). In his related installation indoors, ERRE presents several other pieces related to the themes of language and love. This show concludes on Sunday, July 18.

Find the museum at 1001 Kettner Boulevard (at Broadway), directly across from the Santa Fe Railroad Depot, adjacent to the America Plaza trolley transfer station; 619-234-1001. (DOWNTOWN)

Museum of Contemporary Art, La Jolla, contemporary life, art history, and global cultures are referenced in the realist images of "A Unique American Vision: The Paintings of Gregory Gillespie." The exhibition — the first in-depth survey of Gillespie's more than 20 years — includes 45 paintings dating from the late 1960s to the present, providing an overview of the evolution of the artist's imagery and style. Several of his self-portraits, "often compared with Rembrandt's records of his own aging process," are featured. See the exhibition through Sunday, September 12.

Find the museum at 700 Prospect Street. 619-454-3541. (LA JOLLA)

Museum of Photographic Arts, drawn from the museum's rarely seen permanent collection, "Facts Showcased with Logic: Selections from the Permanent Collection" explores the camera's unique means of translating the everyday world. The images included in the show represent a broad cross-section of 20th-Century photography and experience. Among the nearly 60 photographers featured are Berenice Abbott, Harry Callahan, Pak Chi Lau, John Gutmann, Nicholas Nixon, and Aaron Siskind. See the work through Sunday, July 18.

Oceanside Museum of Art, nature and technology are combined in the art gathered in "Neon/Nature," opening at the museum on Sunday, June 27. The five participating California artists combine natural elements with neon gas, electricity, and glass tubing; the exhibit features sculptural designs — unrelated to commercial signage — by guest curator David Svensen, Brian Coleman, Candice Gawne, Kunio Ohashi, and Jan Sanchez. See the exhibition through Sunday, August 22. The museum is located at 704 Pier View Way; 760-721-2787. (OCEANSIDE)

San Diego Historical Museum, sculptor Donal Hord was the first San Diegan to win two Guggenheim awards, among many other honors. His most famous sculpture internationally is Angel of Peace, presiding over the cemetery in Belgium honoring American soldiers who died during the Battle of the Bulge. Hord's sculptures continue to be prominent in San Diego.

The exhibition "Transcending the Solid: A Body of Work by Donal Hord" includes some 96 objects from the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library. Organized chronologically to illustrate Donal Hord's lifelong experimentation with materials — the show features sculptures in a variety of media including lignum vitae, jade, marble, rosewood, and terra cotta; watercolor, plaster maquettes, and pencil-on-paper works. See the exhibit through Sunday, October 10.

San Diego Museum of Art, journey to 5th-Century B.C. China in "Ringing Thunder: Tomb Treasures from Ancient China." Over 100 sets of objects discovered in several tombs in Hubei Province (in south-central China) are featured in the exhibition. The majority of objects on display were made during the Warring States Period (476-221 B.C.), when numerous feudal states battled for control of the area now encompassed by China. Many of the items were excavated from the tomb of the Marquis Yi, who was buried as befitting an aristocrat of the time — surrounded by possessions to ensure him to continue to live the life of aristocracy and power in the afterlife. See the show through Sunday, August 29.

JEFF SMITH

Jeffrey Jones, Bruce McKenzie in True West

True West, by Sam Shepard
Sledgehammer Theatre, 1602 Sixth Avenue, San Diego
Directed by Scott Feldsher; cast, Bruce McKenzie, Jeffrey Jones, Phil Johnson, Christina Courtenay; scenic design, Craig Siebels; costumes, Mary Larson; lighting, Ron Vodicka; sound, Pea Hicks; fight director, Martin Katz Playing through July 18; Thursday through Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Sunday at 7:00 p.m. For information call 619-544-1484.

Critics react to Sam Shepard's plays with language he'd never use: "myth" (even "mythopoeic"), "Jungian collective unconscious," and so on. Critics write as if the plays have core meanings, and the only way to unearth them is with tractor-sized abstractions.

Hey, I'm guilty too. I've used those words for Shepard. Then I realized his plays rarely "mean" any one thing. Also, he doesn't want just one reaction from the audience — or even have a unified audience in mind. The Tooth of Crime, Action, Buried Child, and True West are irreducibly plural. The person next to you could break into laughter at the precise moment you're peering into a fetid, uncharted cavern of your psyche.

When it premiered, in 1980, True West had an odd, anti-Shepard look: no rusted car chassis onstage, or bleached cow skulls, and nary a tumbleweed. Instead, the play's set in a kitchen, with houseplants — Shepard specifically requests Boston ferns — a working sink and refrigerator. No mythic landscape, no telephone poles queuing to the horizon in one point perspective. This is the "true" west?

On the surface, True West is a brusque version of The Odd Couple. Austin is a screenwriter and compulsive cleaner. He hates motels because they're so lonely. Lee, by contrast, is Cro-Magnon. He drinks enough for three, had a prize pit bull, and lurks beyond society's margins. Here's the clincher: sophisticated Austin and primitive Lee are brothers. And it doesn't take True West long before things get downright sibling.

They meet in their mother's home, 40 miles east of Los Angeles. She's vacationing in Alaska. Austin's working on a script. He hasn't seen Lee in five years. Lee, in from the desert, is on a working vacation: he's a thief, televisions mostly, and plans to case the neighborhood.

"I wanted to write a play about double nature," Shepard said. "I wanted to give a taste of what it feels like to be two-sided." Austin and Lee begin as opposites. Then they shred easy stereotypes. Lee, the macho outcast, plays a mean game of golf (which would have been more surprising to audiences in 1980). And Austin has got coyote wildness. Each is what he accuses the other of being. Each becomes a living deconstruction of the other.

Who has the pulse of the times: Lee, who in many ways recalls the legendary beatnik Neal Cassady? or Austin, who shouts, "I drive on the freeway every day. I swallow the smog. I watch the news in color. I shop in the Safeway. I'm the one who's in touch. Not him." Later he adds, "There's no such thing as the West anymore! It's a dead issue."

Saul, the producer — who's as much a hustler as the brothers — likes Lee's "real" take on things. He hires Lee to write a screenplay, and the brothers reverse roles. Lee tears his hair, and ribbons, behind a typewriter; Austin swills hard stuff on the kitchen floor and schemes of neighborhood thievery.

Things devolve. Like animals, and like brothers everywhere, Austin and Lee were territorial: Lee was the intellectual, Austin the desperado. In one of American theater's funniest scenes — an indoor chase scene — as the brothers trash their mother's kitchen (lovers of Freud feast on that one!), each confesses to disillusionment with his territory. Instead of a melioristic merging, however, confession enrages them all the more.

Years ago, Scott Feldsher turned Sam Shepard's Action into a compelling piece of odd chamber music. It remains one of my favorite local productions. Known for sledgehammering texts, and audiences, for True West, Feldsher hands the hammer to the play.

It's a terrific show, raw, vital, dangerous (Martin Katz's fight choreography bars no holds), and loaded with humor. Feldsher sticks to the script, with one stunning exception. Lee's outside the house, trying to get back in and inflict more damage on Austin. Lee tries the sliding-glass door. Nope. A hole in the wall. Nope. In a million-dollar move, actor Bruce McKenzie walks downstage, around the fake wall, and jumps back into the kitchen.

Purists might claim the move breaks the box set illusion. But does it? Maybe Lee's possessed McKenzie. Or maybe the actors have their own rivalry. Whatever, it's clear that Lee just had to get back inside.

He burps. He crushes a beer can on his temple. He scratches private parts with vigor. If Bruce McKenzie did these antics in a more delicate drama, the thespian police would scream. But McKenzie's near perfect as Lee, a maelstrom of untoward behavior. When asked what his plays are about, Shepard replied, "I never know what to say...They're about the moment of writing." I'd add, they're also about the moment of performance, which is where McKenzie excels.

McKenzie also did something opening night few could repeat. He placed a glass jar against the refrigerator. He hit five eight-foot putts at the jar — across linoleum as slick as Pinehurst's greens — and sank three of them! He was less successful chipping golf balls into an open stove — too wristy, left hand cuppy — but that putting touch brought a tear to a good man's eye.

McKenzie, who hasn't performed locally in some time, can dominate the stage. For Sledgehammer, however, he shares it with Jeffrey Jones, who does his best work ever as Austin. Jones shifts from Felix Unger to Oscar Madison and then to a Nietzschean pit bull drooling for payback. Phil Johnson's Saul is a comic delight, until you realize that this polyester-clad, movie doofus is a major shaper of our culture.

Christina Courtenay (like McKenzie, too long from a San Diego stage), does an eloquent cameo as Lee and Austin's spacey mother. Shepard underwrote the character, but Courtenay fills her with a ghostly emptiness. "He won't kill you," she tells Austin, who's strangling Lee, "he's your brother." ■

THEATER LISTINGS

Theater listings and commentary are by Jeff Smith. Information is accurate according to material given us, but it is always wise to phone the theater for any last-minute changes and to inquire about ticket availability. Many theaters offer discounts to students, senior citizens, and the military. Ask at the box office.

Angels in America, Part One
A good news, bad newser. Angels in America is the best American play in at least two decades. It's a two-part epic about the mid-1980s, in the "melting pot where nothing melted." In part one, currently at Diversionary Theatre, history begins to "crack." Republican turns against Republican, gay against gay, husband against wife. In part two, Kushner imagines new combinations of unlikely allies. Part one is a three-act amalgam of potboiling melodrama, high tragedy, and low comedy. The tone, with as many cracks as a faultline, mirrors the play's theme. On opening night, Diversionary hadn't solved these tricky tonal shifts. The actors gave their roles a single, usually comic trait and lacked the dimension and versatility the play demands. They got the jokes right, but not the drama (there were even times when some actors hadn't a clue what their characters were saying). If you don't count the sound of revolves creaking into place, or the occasional thump of objects colliding backstage, Diversionary gets a credible look for Angels. The play shines, but the acting falls flat. DIVERSIONARY THEATRE, THROUGH JUNE 26; THURSDAY THROUGH SATURDAY AT 8:00 P.M.

Arcadia
I won't be able to review Tom Stoppard's masterpiece because I was dramaturge for the North Coast Rep's production. The play's an all-time favorite, and I had to get involved. I'm glad I did. NORTH COAST REPERTORY THEATRE, THROUGH JULY 18; THURSDAY THROUGH SATURDAY AT 8:00 P.M. SUNDAY AT 7:00 P.M. MATINEE SUNDAY, JULY 18, AT 2:00 P.M.

Boogie Nights
Obaloc Phillips's 90-minute tribute to/parody of 1970s music is one of the hottest shows in town, but it probably needs a Surgeon General's warning — "Caution: Boogie Nights encourages audience participation." The five-person cast invites people to do small bits in scenes, to sing along to '70s tunes, and to dance. If you're allergic to performing in public, stay away. The cast won't force you to dance, but the music might. It's everything from ABBA's glitzy "Dancing Queen" to Donna Summer's "Hot Stuff." Phillips, a lanky, elastic, multidimensional performer, does a rendition of Wild Cherry's "Play That Funky Music" that stops the show. The cast, wearing the bizarre styles of the decade — mini- and maxiskirts, leisure suits, gold chains, basketball-sized Afros — does a medley of sitcom theme songs, along with a pop quiz about '70s TV that, if you get too many answers right, you should fear for your soul. The show opened at the 30-seat Fault Line Theater. Due to popular demand, it has moved to the Culy Theater. It isn't as polished as, say, Forever Plaid, but it's got heart, verve, style, and it captures the tinsel-tinged spirit of that flaky decade. Worth a try.

Forever Plaid
The four harmonizers in search of plaid sport coats are in their third year at the Theatre in Old Town, recently completed their 1000th show, in fact. Joseph Campbell urged everyone to "follow your bliss." Even if the tight harmonies of "50s "guy groups" aren't your particular bliss (I needed a quick fix of Otis and Hendrix after hearing them), you've got to admit the Plaids follow theirs with verve.

They dare to be square. They croon in lieu of having a life but put life into the greatest hits of Your Hit Parade (which crowned the most popular songs of the '50s until Elvis drove it off the airwaves). Stuart Ross, who conceived, directed, and choreographed the original New York version, directed the Old Town production with the aim of endearing everything to everyone. Terry O'Donnell plays an indefatigable piano and permits him- elf the occasional piece of always funny business. The set, which is either the Theatre in Old Town or a purgatory where the Plaids got stuck, is awfully drab for such a perky show, though Jane Reisman's savvy lighting knows when to tweak the brighteners. (Note: Current cast members are Michael Dalager, Scott Dreier, David Humphrey, and Kevin McMahon.)
Worth a try.

In the Heart of America
An anti-war drama, even anti-Gulf War, Naomi Wallace's script combines realism and surrealism to depict life for marginalized people: two Palestinian Arab Americans, a self-confessed "cracker," a ghostly Vietnamese woman, and a G.I. possessed by the soul of Lt. William "My Lai" Calley. It's an ambitious play, with important themes, loosely constructed. The Fritz Theater's production, directed by Bryan Bevell, felt a week of rehearsals away on opening night. The pace was sluggish, the acting uneven (basic stuff: like actors not connecting with each other), and several actors weak vocally. Some plusses: David Weiner's set plunks a desert in the small Fritz space; Jennifer Fenton's costumes and Christopher Wylie's lighting enhance mood and character. Heart jumps back and forth, in time and tone, and the cast made the leaps fitfully, more comfortable with realistic scenes than dreamscapes. It tends to preach, but Heart's strongest moments dissect matters of race, gender, sexual preference, and ugly Americans, at home and abroad, with a sharp scalpel. It's more about postwar fallout — mini-holocausts after a Holocaust — than war. Like a dispatch from America's front lines, at home, Heart serves as an antidote for officialdom's endless hype. The show opened June 17. It should be in better shape by now.

Loot

Worth a try.

Loot
The La Jolla Playhouse made a reputation for daring theater. Its current production, of Joe Orton's wicked comedy, is tame. Loot shocked people when it premiered in 1966, and might today, but this show is afraid to offend patrons. It's funny, well acted, handsomely mounted, but lacks bite — and the underlying terror Orton felt for loose-cannon authority figures. Director Neel Keller added apt external touches: McLeavy's wife dies in the preshow; and Orton's famous apartment, the wall-to-wall collage, looms above the stage. The farce features two randy young Brits (Matt McGrath and Nicholas Marcq as Austin Powers prototypes) and a lethal five-in nurse (a hilarious Fiona Gallagher) trying to hide stolen loot in a coffin. It's a surefire situation, and the Playhouse production garners many laughs. Nic Ullett merits special mention as the grieving McLeavy. It's as if Ullett's in another play, a serious piece, and the choice works wonders. As Truscott, the Scotland Yard detective-thug, Tom McGowan's a mite too glib. He stays on the surface and omits Truscott's darker resonances. Which is part of the reason why the Playhouse is offering a funny, though toothless Orton.
Worth a try.
LA JOLLA PLAYHOUSE, MANDELL WEISS FORUM. THROUGH JULY 11; TUESDAY THROUGH SATURDAY AT 8:00 P.M. SUNDAY AT 7:00 P.M. MATINEE SATURDAY AND SUNDAY AT 2:00 P.M.

Magic Fire
The title of Lillian Garrett-Groag's epic drama refers to the wall of flames Wotan built around his daughter, Brünnhilde. She's safe, sound asleep; in fact, and protected from the world. But as Magic Fire shows, miraculous sanctuaries have a downside: the flames block life as it is. Magic Fire is about exile, physical and emotional. The Berg and Guarneri families fled Fascist Europe during the rise of Nazism. Now it's 1952, in Buenos Aires and, once again, a police state terrorizes the streets. Lise Berg returns to her youth, only to find she has "borrowed memories." The truth was otherwise. Magic Fire unfolds like a long short story. Its size suggests grand themes, yet its best moments are the modest ones — and one could wish the narrator were, in the end, less evasive (you want to ask, "yeah, but how did you really feel about your parents?"). Jack O'Brien directed with obvious reverence for the material. The design work, especially Ralph Funicello's majestic set, is outstanding. Don't fault the actors for uneven acting.

The script tries, but doesn't always achieve, Chekhovian effects. However, the birthday party of act two, in O'Brien's hands, is one of the most deftly orchestrated extended scenes ever performed on a local stage.
Worth a try.

Picasso at the Lapin Agile
It's got more light than heat, but taken on its own terms, Steve Martin's tribute to 20th-Century geniuses is always funny, and the San Diego Rep's production's one of its best in years. The play's a sort of Cheers, set in a Montmartre bar in 1904. Instead of Norm and Cliff fused to barstools and dreading last call, Martin has Picasso, Albert Einstein, and others speculate about the coming century. Given the convergence of Picasso and Einstein, before each became famous, you'd expect pyrotechnics ablaze, high thought to match the comedy. But the situation builds expectations the play never fulfills; you get an almost speechless "wow" instead. A Mystery Man from the 1950s salvages a script that has begun to sink. Joan Schirle, of the Dell'Arte Players, directed with the buoyancy of a Magritte painting. The cast does sight gags and stands, on the raked stage, in odd Cubist angles. The actors are terrific, especially Jonathan McMurtry, Ron Campbell (who makes Einstein a young Charlie Chaplin), and Deborah Van Valkenburgh. Giulio Cesare Perrone's set, seen through a semi-surrealistic salmon and gray-blue tinted haze, is at once a dream and a reality. Trevor Norton's expressive lighting adds to this otherworldly sense, then converts the entire scene into a starry sky. Picasso, sounding like Carl Sagan, sees "millions and millions of stars"; Einstein replies, "You're way low."
Worth a try.

Sexual Perversity in Chicago
San Diego's Newest theater, the Cafe (pronounced "Kaff-fee"), opens its doors with one of the most popular shows in local history. David Mamet's grim comedy rats, off and on, for five years at the Fritz. It's back, once again directed by Duane Daniels, and it's as sharp as ever. The "perversity" in the title isn't what you think. It's the way veterans of the singles scene erect barriers to prevent themselves from intimacy. Danny and Deborah are on a collision course with love. His friend Bernie and her roommate Joan want to prevent it. Just because. Between Bernie's hatred of women, and Joan's of men, optimism hasn't a prayer. In the hourlong comedy-drama they function like evil angels as Danny and Deborah's ears. The Cafe production moves at a briskly Mametian clip. The modest set — screens and a few chairs — makes for fluid changes. The costumes and sound design catch the period (Chicago, 1976) and cause cringing musical memories. The acting is often most eloquent when no one speaks. During these moments we see how two angry single soloists — and this is one angry play — destroy something that might have turned out great.

Theatresports
A cross between improvisational comedy and Family Feud, Improv, making up a funny scene as you go along, is tough enough. Add competitive scene-making, with the audience awarding points to the winning team. Purists might balk at the odiousness of comparisons, but Theatresports' "game show" is a hoot. The 90-minute evening uses various formats. The show I caught had "Team Sports" — two pairs of players competed, taking suggestions from the audience; and "Godzilla Theatre" — five "directors" invented scenes, using the other four as actors. The winner got a banana, the loser a "heifer." Some attempts went nowhere (I repeat: improv is tough; I did it in my, as hindsight reveals, callow youth). Others made pointed points and turns. The group is talented enough (and know when to black-out best) to make the hits more frequent than the misses. Their guru, Keith Johnstone, has written one of the few brilliant books (Improv) I've ever read about making theater. And they put his pearls to good use. Their motto: "Remember, when it's not funny, it's art."

Three Days of Rain
Ned Janeway kept a diary so vague it's like trying to figure out one of those personalized license plates that are too personal. His children, however, treat it like the Rosetta Stone. Ned — the famous architect — died last year, and the children will "finally find out what belongs to us" and, should they decode the cryptic journal, what their parents were really like. Three Days of Rain is further proof, along with Eastern Standard, that Richard Greenberg is one of our wittiest, most literate playwrights. In Rain, he examines the myths we construct for our parents and how the myths prevent us from knowing them. Rain complicates things by double-casting three actors. The children of act one become their parents, 35 years earlier, in act two. The fruit never falls far from the tree? Well, this tree must've loomed over a cliff. The parents are opposite of the offspring. Reed Diamond, Michael Reilly Burke, and Francia Di Mase, under the expert direction of Andrew I. Traister, explore those differences to good effect. Act one's so funny, so coiled dramatically, however, it's inevitable act two will be a let-down. The revelations surprise, but the growing mysteries captivates. The Classical Actor Centre Stage, as intimate as it gets, is the perfect venue for Rain.

Triple Espresso: A Highly Caffeinated Comedy
Due to popular demand, the Horton Grand Theatre hosts a reprise of this comedy about three inept performers. Hugh Butternutt's done his lounge act at the Triple Espresso Coffeehouse 20 years to the day. While patrons sip one of the house blends — "Grape," "Scandinavian Blizzard," or "Mokolo Cocoa Mocha" — Hugh plays '70s tunes on the piano. He and his companions, here to celebrate Hugh's anniversary, got stuck in the '70s. The trio used to be Maxwell, Butternutt, and Bean, a comedy group that never went far. They're "losers," they admit, but not "ordinary" ones. And hey, their reunion could help them face searing issues from their mediocre pasts. A formulaic story line? Yep. Straight from Forever Plaid. The re's also the Forever Plaid problem: the three comedians are far too talented to play inept characters. One's a whiz at the piano. Another's a first-rate mime, and the third's a crackerjack magician. The trio's so talented, when the plot has them complain of difficulties to overcome, you wish they'd quit trumping up the pseudo-drama and get on with this entertaining, if lightweight show (note: the original cast members have been replaced).

THE INSIDE TRACK

"If nothing else pops up, I'll open it back up as a furniture store and forget about it," said Paul Coulan owner of the building that housed SOMA for six years. "I can't leave the building vacant."

But Coulan said leaving a vacancy is exactly what L.A. promotion company Goldenvoice and SOMA founder Len Paul have done with the SOMA building.

"Goldenvoice walked away, and Len voided the lease," said Coulan, who also owns the adjacent House of Paul furniture store. "Len told the city a fairy tale. He said he used it for a public assembly once in a while, he rented it out for PTA meetings and stuff like that. Then when the city started to investigate and they wanted Len to relicense, he sold [the business] to Goldenvoice. He took off with Goldenvoice's money before the switch [in license] was made. It's my understanding that part of the agreement was he would help transfer the license before he left. He knew how to go through the process and get it done as fast as possible. He took off with Goldenvoice's money before the switch was made. Lenny just disappeared."

JERRY B. WANTS TO RESURRECT SOMA

Len Paul left on a sailboat, according to those who know him.

"He has nothing to come back to here. Goldenvoice took a hit. I don't think we'll ever see him in San Diego again. But I do think Goldenvoice could have gotten the license," said Coulan.

After eight months of running SOMA, Goldenvoice gave up, according to Jerry B., SOMA manager for five years. "They told me they couldn't get permits from the city. Then they just gave up on it. I heard there was an open forum set up by the city for SOMA and local businessmen, and [Goldenvoice principal] Paul Tollet just didn't show up."

Tollet did not respond to a request for comment.

"They totally killed the scene when they closed it down," said Jerry B. "There's no place for the bands to play to get noticed and no place for the kids to go. All the other venues are [21 and up] bars or the Cox Arena, and that seats 10,000. There are a few teen centers...but those places are nothing like SOMA, where kids can go and be treated like adults."

Jerry B. said that's why he and SOMA lighting director Todd Erickson and Mike Nevison, who was head of SOMA's security for all of its 12 years, are looking for backers so they can bring SOMA back, either by buying the building (asking price: $1.3 million) or leasing it ($6000 monthly).

Another live music entrepreneur wonders about the viability of an all-ages venue with no alcohol.

"Kids want bands where they can mosh and let off steam. I can appreciate that. However, parents want to sue those venues, and I can understand that. And the kids don't spend enough money to cover lawsuits from the parents. It's a simple economics course: there isn't enough money for an all-ages venue.

—K.L.

The promise of porn star Hash induced the crowd of several hundred to shell out ten bucks a pop for the Electronica 2000 rave at 4th & B at the end of May. The place was filled with Deja Vu strippers and plenty of other women dressed like porn stars, but the real professionals were hard to spot in the mass of dirty dancers.

Brown-haired starlet Natasha Love (Sodomania) was all smiles as she wobbled unsteadily on sky-high heels. Bondage-inclined Jezebel Flair (Deep Throat: The Quest) was stunning despite having recently had her second child.

"I'm totally into being a mom now," she said. "I'm not even doing movies anymore, except behind the scenes doing makeup and stuff. I'm a licensed massage therapist too.... I'd rather be with my kids than with porn stars."

Another porn mom, Kelly O'Dell (Face Sitter), was almost unrecognizable, sporting a new set of what looked to be double-Ds (hard to say if it was due to the new baby or to surgical procedures).

"Even when I was pregnant, they wanted me to do films. My belly's out to here in one called Ready to Drop, but a lot of guys are turned on by that!"

—J.A.S.

"It's an annoyance," said Humphrey's Concerts promoter Kenny Weissberg about the practice of other venues presenting acts that are also set to play Humphrey's. He said the East County Performing Arts Center, Pechanga Indian Reservation, and Temecula's Thornton Winery have all double-dipped from the same talent pool as Humphrey's Concerts-by-the-Bay series.

"The acts run the risk of overexposure," he said.

The City of Oceanside's summertime Seagaze Concert Series also shares some of the same headliners as Humphrey's. The Everly Brothers headlined a poorly attended Humphrey's show three weeks ago and they will return to Seagaze Aug. 14. The Beach Boys (with original member Mike Love) are at Humphrey's Sept. 23, and the Beach Boys Family and Friends (with original Beach Boy Al Jardine) come to Seagaze July 17.

Adding to the confusion was North County Times columnist Tom Morrow, who reported that "The Beach Boys" were coming to Seagaze.

"Tom Morrow was misinformed," said David

THE BEACH FAMILY

Hadsell of the Seagaze Committee. "He assumed it was the Beach Boys, and he assumed it was Mike Love. He has since retracted it."

"There are two factions," explains Weissberg about the two Beach Boys camps. "One faction owns the name 'The Beach Boys.' The other faction with Al Jardine split off last year. He can't use the name 'The Beach Boys.' "

Weissberg said the two camps are not friendly.

Jardine's group includes Jardine's sons Matt and Adam, Brian Wilson's daughters Carnie and Wendy, and Owen Elliot (daughter of Mama Cass). The press photos of the Beach Boys Family and Friends include Daryl Dragon of the Captain and Tenille, but he is no longer part of the tour.

"The question is who is the Beach Boys?" said Weissberg. "Two of the original members, Dennis and Carl Wilson, are dead and Brian Wilson will not be touring [with the Beach Boys]. Mike Love and Bruce Johnston [Brian Wilson's replacement in the mid '60s] are in the one that I have."

—K.L.

"I can't guarantee anything," says Gina Champion-Cain about the House of Blues opening in San Diego. "From what I can tell you, as of right now, they are coming to our site."

That's as optimistic as Champion-Cain can get about the arrival of the House of Blues to the site of the former Woolworth and Jessop's Jewelers buildings downtown. She is president of American National Investment, the company that owns the adjacent buildings bounded by Fifth and Sixth Avenues, C Street, and Broadway.

After months of delays, she said an agreement has been reached and the lease has been sent out to House of Blues headquarters. She is waiting for it to be signed and returned.

Earlier this year House of Blues operatives were saying the San Diego HOB would open by this fall. Now Champion-Cain said it will be more like the summer of 2000 before it opens.

Champion-Cain says the delay came because the House of Blues chain was purchased by MCA. She confirms a rumor that HOB was considering not using the Woolworth site and instead locating in the East Village area to be closer to the new ballpark.

"They have opted to go with our site," says Champion-Cain. "Our enticement is they need to do a good lunch, and we will be able to provide bodies. We have a lot of offices around our site. You can't say that now about the ballpark area."

The House of Blues will occupy 25,000 square feet of the ground floor and basement of the 11-story complex. Originally there were plans for the whole complex to be dedicated to music-related businesses.

"Our emphasis has since shifted since we do not exclude other retailers who will come in." She said a fitness center will be one of the tenants and the top floors of the complex will be 48 work/live lofts.

House of Blues director of publicity Ann Wills said HOB San Diego will have an approximate 1000-person capacity and the restaurant will seat 240. She said the actual time of opening may be as soon as next spring.

"We will do some all-ages shows." She said all live music events at the House of Blues will be 18 and up.

Not so fast, says Bob Speth, owner of the nearby 4th & B. "Whether the city will allow them to do that is a completely different question. If the city lets them [admit 18-, 19-, and 20-year-olds], we'd apply to do the same thing. And the city will have to let everyone else down here do the same thing. All of a sudden you'll have hundreds of minors down here, and that might get a little heavy. If the House of Blues can do an all-ages venue, anyone can."

All seven House of Blues outlets across the country follow an 18-and-up format.

"We're more conservative here," said Speth. "We always have been. There is an element down here that doesn't want to see the L.A. mentality coming here."

We try to recreate the Renaissance ideal of a cleaner sound using the tuning of that era, which creates a ringing set of harmonics," Daniel Ratelle tells me. Ratelle is the choir director of Pacific Camerata, an early music choral ensemble.

"Our modern piano keyboard is tuned in 'equal temperament,' with all of the notes pretty much equidistant from one another. But if one tries to do early music using this tuning as a base, it doesn't sound right because they used different systems [to tune their instruments]....When you get these intervals in exactly the tune that the composer had in mind, the notes will reinforce the physical harmonics of the chord, and the sound will get a ringing quality, which is especially prominent in rooms with live acoustics, such as the palaces and cathedrals that these composers wrote for."

Ratelle tells me that there is often a connection between the poetry and meaning in Renaissance music. "Some composers use the text to change the music, which is called 'text painting,' when dark chords mean night, or high notes are used for sky or prayer.... Orlando di Lasso one time used as a text about a man who is cuckolded and the singers let him know by poking fun at him and the music sounds like laughter, 'ha ha ha ha.' "

I asked Ratelle to tell me his ideal San Diego spot for acoustics.

"My favorite spot is the Santa Fe train depot with the rotunda dome of a cathedral, but it's hard to find time when it's not busy. It would be like having a concert in the airport with all the cabs zooming around."

Pacific Camerata will perform "Musica Italiana" at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul this Sunday at 5 p.m and also at the San Diego Museum of Art Sunday, July 11, at 2 p.m.

A blurt from an anonymous e-mail correspondent:

I was at a party in Oceanside Sunday to see my friend's band play at this apartment complex by the beach. I say apartments, but they were like those little cottage things. There was another band already set up on the grass. I'd been there for like five minutes when I stepped into a circle where they were passin' a joint around. One of them asked if I was in band, and I go, "Yeah, hey do you know who I'd talk to about maybe playin' here sometime?" And he goes, "Yeah, there in the back house. I'll introduce ya."

So I followed him in, and he introduced me to the guy — tall, bald, no shoes or shirt, in swim trunks. I shake his hand and said, "Yeah I play in a band, just wanted to know if we could play here sometime."

He goes, "Yeah sure," with a crazy look. He seemed kinda pissed off, and the handshake was distant. I'd put my shades up on top of my head to make eye contact, and when I shook his hand, I read the tattoo on his neck, in small block letters, "KILL EVERYONE."

He saw that I'd read it, and I unsuccessfully tried to conceal my "whoa" reaction. So I kind of mosey'd on out of the kitchen to where my friends were outside. The band started to play. There was a small pit off to the side; people walkin' in circles kinda pushin' each other.

So the tattoo guy comes out of his house, all pissed, and shoves his way through the circle of dudes, and then walks back through them, cold-cocks a friend of mine, and goes stompin' back into the house. Next thing I know he comes half running out of the house and kicks one of the speaker monitors super hard; he probably broke his foot — it instantly started bleeding — and he yells, "Everyone get the fuck out of here! I'll fucking kill all of you!"

As he lumped bleeding to his truck, keys in hand, some girl ran out of the house after him and was screaming at him as he got into the truck. There was a boat parked right behind the truck, and some guy narrowly avoided being crushed as he moved his Harley out from behind the boat as the guy rammed the boat into the car behind it. The girl screamed, "You fucking asshole!" and smashed a full bottle of beer on the truck as he burned rubber, screechin' around the corner down the street towards the beach.

It turns out that after the guy punched my friend, he went into the bedroom of the house, shot some girl in the head, grabbed his keys, and took off.

I think I don't want to try and get my band any gigs at no parties man.

The Smell of Gas, Metal, and Rage

My sister's boyfriend got pissed off and kicked a pail of gasoline and carburetor parts across the floor.

SCENE
JOHN BRIZZOLARA

I was in the family car with my mother in 1965. She was driving me to a garage-band rehearsal. She kind of liked the idea of me in a "combo." (She was a jazz singer in the 1940s.)

The Who's "My Generation" came on the radio, and I wrenched the volume knob on the dashboard all the way up. Mom immediately turned it down but listened to the song. When she heard the line I hope I die before I get old, she turned to me and said, "They're kidding, right?" I nodded as if Townshend and I had discussed this many times.

"Oh, yeah. They're kidding...you know." But I didn't know. I suspected the Who pretty much meant what they said. I was 14 and I thought they had a point.

In the 34 years since then, the question has dangled unanswered, "How old is too old to play rock and roll?" By 1968, you weren't supposed to trust anyone over 30, but I pretty much trusted B.B. King and Carl Perkins. Mick Jagger said he couldn't imagine himself on a rock stage at 40 and then got over it. To this day you can see Grace Slick on VH1 sneering about how nobody wants to see a 50-year-old shaking her booty and — as far as it applies to Grace Slick — she's certainly right. That this same dictum does not apply to Tina Turner is interesting. And while Keith Richards has, as Dennis Miller observed, "turned into an old wallet that mumbles," you will hardly feel cheated out of the ticket price to see him play live.

But 70? Please. Let's not be ridiculous. Well, why not be ridiculous? Was Elvis a more serious artist on Ed Sullivan's show than as Jabba the King on a Las Vegas stage toward the end? What is the nature of rock and roll if not, to a large degree, the ridiculous?

"Youth," you say, "youth is a vital component of rock!" Go ahead and say it — I'm just not saying it anymore, especially after Link Wray's show at the Casbah over the Memorial Day weekend.

Whatever verities there are concerning rock and roll (and it is safe to include rebellion among them, I think) are embodied in the King of the Power Chord — legend Link Wray, the guitarist behind the 1958 45 rpm single "Rumble," and behind just about every other notable rock guitarist since then. What Wray may be rebelling against these days is stereotype and the myth of rock and youth.

He walked onstage at 11:35, well past my bedtime, grabbed a red piece-o'-shit Yamaha electric guitar from the 1970s with fat Firebird tuning pegs, and I thought, "Jeez, he looks kind of frail."

He smiled at everybody, a standing-room-only crowd, and proceeded to tune, demonstrating immediately that he is a better musician than Jerry Garcia ever was. He punched out a high-volume D and E chord through a 100-watt Marshall amp that was turned backward to face the wall, and a few hundred people may as well have been kicked in the solar plexus. The opening riff to "Rumble" was met with screams and applause, triggered to a large extent, no doubt, by Quentin Tarrantino's use of that instrumental savagery in Pulp Fiction. Most audience members weren't around in 1958 when that record hit the AM airwaves and so associate the stripper's stroll beat and swagger snarl riff with Uma Thurman going to the bathroom and snorting cocaine.

Me, I'll always link (heh, heh) that menacing little ditty with the memory of my older sister's greaser boyfriend rebuilding a carburetor in a garage in Illinois. I was seven years old and trying to learn something about mechanics as that song came on the radio; my sister's boyfriend got pissed off about something and kicked a pail of gasoline and carburetor parts across the floor. For me, the smell of gas, metal, and rage still permeates those chords.

Any concerns about Wray keeling over with a heart attack onstage were pretty much dispelled that night at the Casbah as he paced the stage like a caged tiger, smiling wickedly, lifting his eyebrows in mock-surprise at an audience that, for the most part, were the about the right age to be his grandchildren. Wray seemed to be asking the audience, "What were you expecting? David Crosby?"

Wray's wife stood to one side of the stage throughout the show, holding her husband's guitar when he switched to a mirror-finish Stratocaster. During every other song she whipped the guitarist's waist-length ponytail out of the up-turned collar on his black leather jacket with the Indian chief painted on the back (Wray is part Shawnee). If the ponytail wasn't real (and it was hard to tell), then it would be the only thing about him that wasn't.

Link Wray

The first (arguable but just barely) real punk rocker sang with echoey Elvisy authority on "Mystery Train," "I Got a Woman" and "That's All Right, Mama," sounding pretty boss for a man who lost a lung to tuberculosis contracted during the Korean War. The Casbah became every juke joint and whorehouse Wray played in for years with his brothers; the atmosphere had just long since seeped into the neck of his guitars.

With the cranked Marshall and distortion/echo footpedal, Wray was able to approximate the sound he had created five decades earlier (by poking a ballpoint pen through the fabric of a speaker cone in a recording studio in Virginia). Since then, every time players from Jeff Beck to Neil Young plug in, it is with Wray not far over their metaphorical shoulder. Pete Townshend is quoted as saying, "If it hadn't been for Link Wray and 'Rumble,' I never would have picked up a guitar."

Accompanied by drummer "Mister Spock" and bassist "Atom" Ellis (so young, he had to go directly from the stage to the sidewalk in front of the rock club so as not to jeopardize the liquor license), Wray played for an hour and a half with only two breaks between songs. The energy was a wall on the stage, and the young audience threw themselves against it like bugs on a windshield. Punk, hairless, and tattooed dudes chugging beer, pumping fists into the air, bounced in baggy pants next to baby girls in lipstick and Betty Page hairdos, all in a communion, not so much of the gleeful, repetitive, non sequitur licks from Wray's fretboard, as of the triumph of attitude over age. Link was showing us the way: life is not a middle-of-the-road sleepwalk to the grave, it's rubber squealing and smoking on pavement and kill-riff brakes.

In Guitar Player magazine Wray once recalled his ten-year-old son asking him, "Daddy, does God love rock'n'roll?" And Wray told him, "I know that some churches say rock'n'roll is evil. But, honey, He pulled me out of the death house and gave me 'Rumble.' I recorded it three months after I had my lung taken out. Yeah, I think God loves rock and roll."

Wray left the stage with Spock and Ellis still drilling away. Mrs. Link Wray grabbed the Yamaha with one hand and her husband with the other. Accompanied by two roadies, Wray was quickly ushered into a waiting van. He agreed to sign a couple of autographs and one guy's Fender Jazzmaster guitar. Leaning in the window I asked him, "Link, were you born in '30 or '35?"

"Twenty-nine," he said signing the guitar. "I wouldn't mind talkin' but I'm all wet and sweated up."

"I understand." Still I figured I could ask one, maybe two questions. "You think you could take Bill Wyman?"

No answer. He didn't hear me.

"Link! You still figure God loves rock and roll?"

He heard that all right, looked up and grinned, laughed a little. "Oh yeah," he said. "Oh yeah." ■

My Corn-Liquor-Sittin'-on-the-Porch-Swattin'-Flies Mode

He can be funny or deeply poignant. He's just got it; not too many country artists these days do.

REVIEW
AUGUST KLEINZAHLER

As I made ready to head out of Austin, Texas, which bills itself as having the biggest live music scene in the country, I figured I'd ask a couple of local musicians what they listened to, as opposed to what the record companies and radio stations were promoting. There's a standing joke here in town. How many Austinites does it take to change a light bulb? Three: one to change the light bulb and two to talk about how Austin was in the old days.

Austin has apparently changed a great deal in the last ten years and may well be the fastest growing city in the country. One gal who's been playing music here for a good long time just happens to be the girlfriend of my landlady. Austin has an entrenched lesbian community, and Gretchen Phillips is one of its brightest musical lights. Much of her work is not in print, but if you can find Like a Version, you'll thank me. It's a 1990 disc containing five covers (versions, get it?) and an original by Phillips called "I Spent My Last $10 (on Birth Control and Beer)," an unlikely theme for a militant lesbian who in another cut on another compilation recommends that all males be violently penetrated. The song explains that in the beginning the singer cared for nothing but the affection of women, "but then along came Lester and my tale of woe began."

> The love of strong hairy men > has turned my head, I fear, > and made me spend my last ten bucks > on birth control and beer.

Ms. Phillips has a lovely voice, true musical sense, and never overplays her hand, at least in this number. The song includes a nice pedal steel by Tom Pittman. Of the covers, there's a rocking version of a song by someone named Isnard called "Bang Bang," which is worth the price of the CD, which includes a nice cover of the Carpenters' "Top of the World." Much of Gretchen Phillips and Two Nice Girls is out of print or unavailable, which is not right. On an audiotape with a naked girl on the cover playing with herself is a delightful song called "Swimming," about picking up another woman at the local health club, which is just begging to be re-recorded and issued on a larger label.

I asked Ms. Phillips about some of the locals she listened to. She mentioned a bluegrass group called the Austin Lounge Lizards and another similar group called the Meat Purveyors, who have an album called Sweet in the Pants, the title of which appealed to me. The group consists of three fiddlers, an upright bass, mandolin, guitar, and vocals. The guitarist Bill Anderson penned four of the songs, the rest are either covers or by folks I haven't heard of. Among the covers are Merle Haggard's "The Bottle Let Me Down," Jimmie Rodgers's "Lady Muleskinner," and Ray Price's "I'll Be There." The set also includes a traditional number, "Willow Green." This style of music — bluegrass, fiddle, hillbilly, what-have-you — isn't my favorite, I'll confess. It can sound samey after a while, and there's not a great deal of range on this collection. They do a fine job throughout, do the Meat Purveyors, especially on the plaintive "Burning Love," another cover, but given my druthers I'd just as soon listen to Doc Watson or Bill Monroe if I want to be in my corn-liquor-sittin'-on-the-porch-swattin-flies mode.

Another of Gretchen Phillips's recommendations was Tish Hinojosa, largely for her voice, a crystalline marvel. I picked up a compilation of Hinojosa from her Watermelon years, which capture her before she gets slicker in the mid-'90s with her hybrid of pop, country, and folk for Warner Bros. This disc makes pleasant listening: Ms. Hinojosa does indeed have a memorable voice, and she sings about half the songs in Spanish, which probably hasn't helped her career. Quite apart from her voice, Tish Hinojosa is among the most beautiful women I've ever seen on the cover of an album, a magazine, or anywhere else. I could stare at her photograph for a week, but I wouldn't recommend the music. It's pleasant but lite.

A friend of mine here, a drummer recently moved from Phoenix named Scott L. French ("Original Drum," it says on his business card), put me on to a local country singer named Junior Brown. What a find! This guy is the real thing. Great voice and great guitar playing. I suppose what makes him noteworthy apart from his talent is a crazy guitar he concocted, which combines a six-string and steel guitar; he calls it a "git-steel." Brown is a champion picker and has a dream voice, a baritone mix of Ernest Tubb, Merle Haggard, and maybe Buck Owen. His song titles give away some part of where he's at: "My Wife Thinks You're Dead," "Venom Wearin' Denim," and "What's Left Just Won't Go Right."

Twelve Shades of Brown is his first release and a dandy. He can wail on his guitar with a ferocious virtuosity rivaling any of the psychedelic rockers. He can be funny or deeply poignant. He's just got it; not too many country artists these days do. His lyrics are very good:

> I got a gal in Cincinnati
> I had a woman in San Antone
> I always loved the girl next door
> But any place is home

Any Austinite, at least any Austinite worth his salt, will sing you the praises of Kinky Friedman and the Texas Jewboys, who, incidentally, was born in Palestine, Texas, but is very much a local hero. Kinky is probably even better known as a writer of detective novels, which, I am told, are popular and fun and very badly written. There are a couple of very talented satirical musicians like the jazz pianist and lyricist David Frishberg ("My Attorney Bernie," for instance), but none quite rocks as hard or offends with such enthusiasm as Kinky and his boys: "Asshole from El Paso," "They Ain't Makin' Jews Like Jesus Anymore," "Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in the Bed." The disc here under review is a good collection of Kinky recordings between 1964 and 1992. This is authentic Austin. Jump on it.

Another must, and a whole other thing, is this eponymous disc from the Golden Arm Trio, an experimental jazz group here in town. Don't let the "experimental jazz" handle put you off. These guys are terrific. I heard of them before I came to Austin from Tom Welsh of New Albion Music in San Francisco, which is not at all a strange link, given that both New Albion as the label and the Golden Arm Trio are in search of new sounds. The group is not properly a trio, alternating between solo piano riffs by the leader, Graham Reynolds, to group playing with up to six pieces. The lineup often uses piano, drums, and sax. One of the pieces, "The Rack," features a pair of empty steel trichloromonofluoromethane cans — and to good effect. The disc includes 26 numbers, quite a few of them under one minute in length and one almost five minutes long. The percussion seems the dominant element throughout but always in the service of the music, never simply banging. It's fascinating, smart music, and I know of no one doing experimental jazz in New York or anywhere else that's nearly as interesting. ■

OF NOTE

By Gina Arnold

QUIET RIOT

It probably shows what a mean person I am at heart, but one of the most entertaining concerts I've been to in recent years was that of Quiet Riot. The band was playing at an Italian restaurant in a bedroom suburb of Oakland, and the reason I found it so satisfying was that it proved that very occasionally there is justice. Talk about how low the mighty have fallen! The restaurant had pink carpet.

So even though the band was playing truly terrible music and making racist remarks about the awfulness of rap, it was a real pleasure to watch the band's horrid lead singer, Kevin DuBrow, prance inanely around on a stage that was way too small for him. One couldn't help but think, "HA! That's what you get, Mr. DuBrow, for fronting the worst pop metal act of all time."

Two of Quiet Riot's biggest hits were actually Slade covers. (And which was worse — "Cum On Feel the Noize" or "Mama Weer All Crazee Now" — is the unanswerable question.)

Quiet Riot is a band that doesn't deserve to be heard in any other context than by people who are eating spaghetti. The fact that the band made it at all just shows what a dismally stupid time 1983 was for rock music. (This was the year their Metal Health LP went to number one on the charts, thus ushering in what I now think of as the Headbanger's Ball years on MTV.)

The Riot was formed way back in 1975 and originally featured guitarist Randy Rhoads, who went on to play with Ozzy. But Rhoads wouldn't be playing at this gig even if he hadn't been killed in a plane crash in 1982. (The plane he was flying buzzed Osbourne's tour bus and crashed into a house in Leesburg, Florida.) Rhoads had too much dignity — i.e., any at all. DuBrow, on the other hand, has none — but then, judging by that one night, his punishment is just being him.

No Bargain and Pith open.

ON NOTE

By William Crain

Why Paul Simon is cooler than Bob Dylan:

1) Dylan writes great songs, but they always sound better when someone else sings them; Simon writes great songs and they always sound better when he or Art Garfunkel sings them.

2) Simon married Princess Leia — actress Carrie Fisher. Whether he gets additional cool points or a penalty for later marrying Edie Brickell of New Bohemians fame, I leave to you to decide.

3) Dylan pissed off a few cranky folkies (by going electric); Simon pissed off the United Nations (by recording with South African musicians during a cultural boycott).

4) Find a person between the ages 24 and 60 and mention to him or her the song titles "I Am a Rock," "Mrs. Robinson," or "Fifty Ways to Leave Your Lover" and that person will be able to sing at least one verse. Mention a Dylan song title such as "Tangled Up in Blue," and the person will be able to sing no more than an imitation of Dylan's peculiar pronunciation of the words in the title. Why? Because no one knows what the hell Dylan is going on about.

5) Ask the same people who is cooler and all will say Dylan. Why? Because no one understands him, but everyone says he's great, so he must be greater than we can understand. Besides, he recently won a Grammy, he almost died a couple of years ago, and his son is cute.

I argue: Dylan is on the comeback trail now, but Simon is still reeling from the failure of his Broadway musical, The Capeman. Blind acceptance of Dylan's coolness makes him less cool. Simon's struggle makes him cooler.

Bob Dylan also performs.

REVIEW
DUNCAN SHEPHERD

Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me

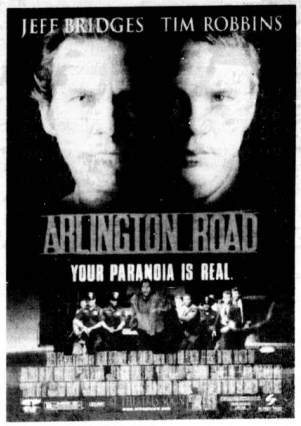

Before weighing in with an opinion on the dirt level in the title of Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me, I am waiting to see what the movie will be called in the U.K. If, as I am guessing, it is released under another name, we will then know for sure that Mike Myers and Company put one over on us Yanks. But then again, we know that already.

We know that the marketing strategy was sheer "genius." We know that this sequel pulled in more money in its opening weekend than the original pulled in in its entire run. We know therefore that the followup to the Star Wars trilogy got knocked off its Number One perch by a followup to a borderline flop. We know that grown-up film critics and social commentators have been peppering their notices with parroted words and phrases such as "Groovy" and "Yeah, baby" to prove themselves to be with-it. We know that Myers himself has not been so flattered by imitation since the resounding "No!" of Wayne's World (still in use by our local District Attorney in the Letters column last week). We know that the title character has attained a status as Cultural Icon and as approved spokesperson for the most mainstream of corporations. And we know, too — or at any rate we should know, those of us who have seen it — that the movie itself is a total fraud.

It and I did not get off on a good foot together. I can understand Myers wanting to free himself, or free Powers, from the carry-over encumbrance of Elizabeth Hurley as his romantic interest, and I suppose I know better than to look backwards when she is revealed in the pre-credits sequence to be a "fembot" (female robot), and to try to recall that she was introduced in the previous installment as the enlightened feminist daughter — was she not? — of one of Austin's old flames in the Swinging Sixties, and that she was his staunch ally throughout it. So, the legitimate question wouldn't be why she is now, in the Honeymoon Suite, spraying bullets at him out of her nipples. The question, or questions, that busied my mind were more along the lines of these: whether I was meant to recognize this gag as a direct theft from Ursula Andress in The Tenth Victim and thus find it funny because I'm so in-the-know; whether I was supposed to be able to recollect all the other times I had seen this gag plagiarized and thus find it funny as a sort of banana-peel staple of comedy; or whether the gag was really intended only for moviegoers who are relatively new to movies and who might have missed out on it up until now. While occupied with these questions, I forgot to laugh.

Immediately thereafter we're thrust into the credits sequence, a recycling, of sorts, of the scene of fig-leaf nudity from the preceding film, one of the more inventive bits in that film, as well as one of the more meaningful, with its parody of the discreet suggestiveness of the James Bond films in particular and the films of the Sixties in general. But that earlier scene took place in the meaningful context of a hotel tryst, whereas the new one has Powers parading exhibitionistically through the public areas of a crowded hotel and drawing shocked reactions from its patrons, and somehow through all of this I lost track of the meaning. It's true that the credits sequences of the Bond films abound in peek-a-boo nudity and sometimes make use of the lettering as fig leaves, but that's the only point of resemblance between this credits sequence and a Bond one, and frankly I didn't think of it at the time. Once more, I forgot to laugh.

A good share of the objections that might be raised against the movie are the standard ones that might be raised against any run-of-the-mill sequel. Something found to be inventive or clever the first time around — and there were not very many of those things in Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery — will not necessarily be found inventive or clever the next time. It will almost necessarily be found the opposite. Imitative, that is, and obvious. The term "shag-a-delic," for a specific, is perfectly in character, and perfectly in period, and funny enough the first time you hear it. The second time you hear it you will have the means to separate the men from the trained seals. Nor will inventiveness and cleverness be restored with the unveiling of a perfunctory new collection of double-entendre names: Felicity Shagwell, Ivana Humpalot, and Robin Swallows, née Spitz ("Well, which is it. Swallows or Spitz?"). This sort of thing got old in the Bond films, too. And the least that you could say for Myers on the first go-round, more than you could say for him in Wayne's World, namely that the character did not originate in a Saturday Night Live skit but was altogether original (I hope I'm not mistaken about this), is no longer worth saying. The character is now a retread.

Not only has the richest source of comedy material already been pretty well tapped out — the anachronism of Austin Powers, and by extension James Bond, in the Nineties — it is now also pretty well abandoned, with nothing comparable to take its place, once the hero returns via time machine to his proper period. (Where he runs across a silver-haired Burt Bacharach and a middle-aged Elvis Costello in a musical duet: anything goes.) The same jokes, done in reverse, do not play the same. It was funny enough in the first outing when Myers's Dr. Evil, fresh from three decades of suspended animation, emboldened himself to demand from the world leaders a ransom of one million dollars. But where's the joke in having him now go back to the Sixties and demand trillions? The proper joke, if I may embolden myself, would have been to have him ask again for a mere million and be reassured to get an aghast reaction. But far be it from me to tell Mike Myers, or his re-enlisted director Jay Roach, what's funny. Just because I could hardly bear to look at the screen whenever Myers appears (unrecognizably) in his new persona of Fat Bastard — a Scottish hit man in a latex fatsuit — doesn't mean there isn't an appreciative audience for the drool, the spittle, the perspiration, the rolls of fat, the jowls of jelly, the food that misses the mouth and lands instead on chin and chest, and so on. It only means I didn't laugh. And didn't laugh. And didn't laugh. And didn't laugh.

I may have laughed, if only the once, when Dr. Evil was entertaining his minions at the keyboard with a sketchy rendition of "(What If God Was) One of Us," but there are any number of songs that might also have made me laugh in that spot. And I thought, whether I laughed at it or not, that the chain of brief scenes, each of which starts out with the utterance of a different synonym for the male sex organ ("wiener," "privates," "Johnson," etc.), was pretty clever. I did not think the passing rocketship that occasions these synonyms — a design copied off a men's-room toilet stall — was remotely clever.

It isn't a question, however, of simply figuring up the percentages of hits and misses, and counting our blessings. Bad jokes don't just tilt the balance. They tilt the entire axis. Nothing undermines trust and confidence like inconsistency. The Spy Who Shagged Me belongs to the quantity-over-quality school of screen comedy — an open-enrollment school — and it cannot be bothered with little niceties like setting up and maintaining an atmosphere, a mood, a tone, a style, a universe. (Compare The Big Lebowski: all of that, and phallic humor too.) It cannot be bothered, in sum, with the pain of creation. And how can you laugh at a movie you can't take seriously?

Tarzan marks a sharp improvement over recent Disney cartoons. We likely would have to go back to The Lion King to find its equal, back to The Little Mermaid for its superior. Though it may be hard to work up enthusiasm for the much-filmed subject, even for a pledge of fidelity to the original Edgar Rice Burroughs novel, it must be conceded that the tale is gotten off the dime with great speed and clarity: parallel family units, human and ape, each suffering losses at the claws of a jungle cat, and fusing their broken halves into a new and imperfect whole. (The mother gorilla's rescue of the infant human from the tiger's clutches is a tiptop action scene.) The ongoing power struggle between father and adopted son is psychologically quite thorny, though I thought that Tarzan could have shouldered a heavier load of guilt at its resolution. (Can it be a coincidence that Disney's live-action wing is currently offering up for our entertainment more gorilla killings in Instinct?) And the fundamental question of identity is pursued pretty close to the collegiate level of Existentialism 101. The hero's realization that he belongs to a different species — palm to palm with the female of that species — is deftly handled, even if his fluency in English must undergo a temporary setback to Me-Tarzan-You-Jane. Any lost ground is made up in the twinkling of a pop-song montage.

All of the songs, and they are kept to a small handful, are written and performed (in the capacity of a singing narrator, not that of an on-screen presence) by rock-and-roller Phil Collins, who puts the brakes on Disney's downhill slide into imitation-Broadway campiness. The story, too, is done more or less straight, with none of the warping pressures of PC sexual politics: this is Tarzan's turf, and Jane is decorously green. (Native African tribesmen, a PC powder keg, are banished from the continent for the duration.) Virility, to be blunt about it, no matter how much the hero's musculature may also appeal to fans of Michelangelo, stages a heartening comeback. And if the Original Swinger has been converted into a Copycat Skateboarder, it is only in the interests of reaching out to the young. On the other hand, the too familiar and too New York voice of Rosie O'Donnell, in the role of one of the de rigueur comic-relief sidekicks, is a disheartening vestige of Broadway. But the other sidekick, a Nervous Nellie elephant voiced by Wayne Knight ("It's all fun and games till someone loses an eye"), is worth putting up with for his glorious turnaround at the climactic moment of crisis. ■

MOVIE LISTINGS

All reviews are by Duncan Shepherd. Premieres are indicated by one to five stars and are partisan by the Big Easy Oracle. Omaha movies are for more interested.

Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me — Reviewed this issue. With Mike Myers, Heather Graham, Seth Green, and Michael York; directed by Jay Roach. ● CARMEL MOUNTAIN, CINEMA STAR GALAXY, CINEMA STAR 6, CINEMA STAR 10, CINEMA STAR 13, CINEMA 6, FASHION VALLEY 18, GROSSMONT CENTER, LA JOLLA 12, MISSION VALLEY 20, SANTEE DRIVE IN, SANTEE 10, UA JR. Besieged — Besides the prefix and suffix of its title, this shares with Beloved the spectacle of Thandie Newton peering on her own feet, poking, and behaving generally as if possessed by Linda Blair. Her character is that of a refugee from an African dictatorship, now a maid in Italy. Her master, a tortured British pianist played by David Thewlis, continues to make life oppressive for her by showering her with flowers, tamily jewels, and declarations of love, despite having never had a conversation longer than a dozen words with her. Director Bernardo Bertolucci, turning the clock back to the Sixties, stirs the pot with jump cuts and a jittery camera. Thandie, David, and Bernardo all settle down after a while, and testy annoyance eases into mild boredom. The photography, when the camera holds sufficiently steady, is of coffee-table caliber, and the storyline eventually backs up the pianist's declarations of love with some pretty persuasive evidence of it. At barely ninety minutes, the movie still feels like a stretched-out short story. 1999. ● (GASLAMP 15, LA JOLLA VILLAGE, SANTEE VILLAGE 8; THROUGH 6/24)

Big Daddy

Big Daddy — Parenting comedy starring Adam Sandler and Joey Lauren Adams, directed by Dennis Dugan. (CARMEL MOUNTAIN, CINEMA STAR GALAXY, CINEMA STAR 6, CINEMA STAR 10, CINEMA STAR 13, CINERAMA 6, FASHION VALLEY 18, GASLAMP 15, GROSSMONT CENTER, LA JOLLA 12, OCEANSIDE 8, RAMONA TWIN, SANTEE DRIVE IN, SANTEE VILLAGE 8, SOUTH BAY DRIVE IN, STUDIO 3 CINEMAS, SWEETWATER 9, TOWN SQUARE 14, UA GLASSHOUSE 9, VALLEY DRIVE IN, WIEGAND PLAZA; FROM 6/25)

Blast from the Past — A paranoid scientist takes his pregnant wife into a gymnasium-sized fallout shelter during the Cuban Missile Crisis and, under the impression the bombs have begun to drop, waits thirty-five years for the radiation to blow over. Boy, is the joke ever on them: there never was a bomb, only an errant fighter jet crashing conveniently on the front lawn. The bigger joke is that there turns out to be a bomb after all: the movie itself. Brendan Fraser, adding a redundant cuddle to his earlier Encino Man, as a wide-eyed naif in the decadent Nineties, acts as if applying for admission to the Claire Nelson clan. But that's not as painful as the spectacle of a truly gifted, natural, unaffected performer, Sissy Spacek, flattened and broadened into the part of a stir-crazy yuppie. With Alicia Silverstone, Christopher Walken, Dave Foley; directed by Hugh Wilson. 1999. ● (VALLEY DRIVE IN)

Buena Vista Social Club — By Conder, the eclectic Americano guitarist, singer, composer, and musicologue, rounds up some old lions (and a lioness) of Cuban popular music, for a series of live concerts, recording sessions, on-camera interviews, and ultimately a debut at Carnegie Hall. (Their sightseeing sidetrips on that occasion are a delight.) Directed by Wim Wenders, the film is not visually or intellectually up to his standards, even for his documentaries. But the music is satisfying, and the glimpses of life in Cuba leave you hungering for more. With Ibrahim Ferrer, Compay Segundo, Ruben Gonzalez, Omara Portuondo. 1999. ★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

A Bug's Life — Disney's second computer-animated feature, following Toy Story, and somewhat embarrassingly released two months after Antz, from archrival DreamWorks. There can be no question of outright copycattery. The movies were too close-to-neck-and-neck for that. But the mere coincidence of two computer-animated features set in an ant colony and centered around a klutzy worker and a feisty queen-to-be — and vertical ants in both cases — says a lot about a lack of imagination. To be completely fair about it, there is plenty of embarrassment to spread around retrospectively to the earlier arrival as well, although the view of the ant colony therein, the sociology in addition to the topography, is a good deal more complicated and detailed. It's true that the ants in A Bug's Life look less like space aliens, but then again they look less like ants, too, with bodies the color and the consistency of molded taffy, and big, googly Tickle-Me-Elmo eyeballs. More bluntly, they look terrible. The menacing grasshoppers, whose relation to the ant colony is precisely that of Eli Wallach's bandidos to the peaceful farming village in The Magnificent Seven (their stereotyped South-of-the-Border lair might raise a protest from Hispanic groups), are a bit better, though their edge owes less to their look than to Kevin Spacey's deprigningly contemptuous delivery of lines in the Eli Wallach part. The troupe of circus bugs (ranging from a well-done walkingstick to a ghastly Michelin Tire caterpillar), who through a misunderstanding are recruited to defend the colony against the marauders, introduce an element of effeminate campiness that has likewise marred the recent output from the traditional Disney cartoon factory. Directed by John Lasseter. 1998. ★ (VOGUE)

Cookie's Fortune — Robert Altman tarries a while longer in the Deep South, idly tracing the stereotypical loopiness of the natives. If the movie lacks the pervasive weather of The Gingerbread Man, it is thickly atmospheric all the same, settling into the locale as into an overstuffed easy chair: Holly Springs, Mississippi, at Eastertime, which explains the deposits of colored eggs in the backyard, if not the amateur theatrical production of Oscar Wilde's Salome at the red-brick First Presbyterian. When the title character, a cornsilk-pipe-smoking old widow, decides to follow her husband into the hereafter, the niece who discovers the body decides to eat the suicide note and to disguise the deed ("a disgrace") as the doing of an intruder. The finger of guilt then points to the departed's loyal retainer and sole companion, a well-cushioned black man who may filch a half-pint of Wild Turkey on occasion but is scrupulous about replacing it. The police investigation is of little interest. We know who knows the exculpatory fact, and we wait, with some impatience and no concern, for him to step forward. For all his laid-back air, Altman is always a little overobvious in his apportionment of approval and disapproval. At the top of the second list, Glenn Close as the meddling niece and Julianne Moore as her subjugated sister grow rapidly tiresome. Charles S. Dutton, on the other side, is most agreeable as the self-moderating bourbon nipper ("never before Tom Brokaw"). And it's nice to see Patricia Neal on the big screen for the only time in the Nineties, looking human, looking like herself, looking quite well, and acting well, too. We do not get to see her for long. Liv Tyler, Chris O'Donnell, Lyle Lovett. 1999. ★ (LA PALOMA, FROM 6/25) dirtiness in the national politics, or dirtiness in the national character, observes the time-tested satirical strategy of making a big deal out of a little deal, namely a campaign for the presidency of the student council. It manages to be modishly "dark" without a pileup of corpses (the unimaginative shortcut to darkness). And in a refreshing switch from the John Hughes pattern of youth films, the adults are more subtly and realistically drawn than the youths, and all the more funny for it. Most of the adult performers benefit from their relative unfamiliarity to us (Phil Reeves merits special mention as the archetypal Principal; "If you want to be treated like adults, you have to act like adults"), and Matthew Broderick, the chief exception, is a deft enough comic actor to overcome his overfamiliarity. His is the pivotal role, the dedicated American History and Civics teacher who cannot bear the thought of a student council run by the self-anointed "overachiever" named Tracy Flick (campaign slogan: "Pick Flick"), and who accordingly prods a popular but lame-brained football player, presently sidelined with a broken leg, to run against her. Chris Klein hits a high note of a kind in his delivery of his campaign speech in front of the student body, a tuneless comic aria, no inflection, no punctuation, no comprehension, a masterpiece of monotone. And Reese Witherspoon, as the go-getter whose hand is always raised fastest, highest, and flutteriest in a classroom discussion, "stretches" herself (as they say) to the broadness and flatness of the side of a barn. Alexander Payne, the director, is very nearly as democratic with his disdain as in his earlier Citizen Ruth, though it must be said by way of reservation that high-school politics is a safer subject than the abortion debate, and that Election does not seek out any "cool" kids to pick on (it's an MTV production, after all), but contents itself with the

Buena Vista Social Club

Dumb Jock and the Apple Polisher. And of course the grownups. A further reservation: the employment of multiple narrators, whether or not copied straight from Tom Perrotta's original novel, sounds bookish. And a final reservation: the blah-looking image is the rough visual equivalent of the jock's droning oration, and no less open to scorn. 1999.
★★ (GASLAMP 15; HAZARD CENTER 7)

Endurance — Not so treacly sports film from Disney, on the life of the Ethiopian distance runner Haile Gebrselassie (who plays himself in adulthood). A docudrama with better documentary values than dramatic: prettily photographed and mundanely observant, but thin in incident, spare in dialogue, stiff in performance. The opening (and reprised) musical theme by John Powell prepares you for an African Chariots of Fire, but it never really materializes. Written and directed by Leslie Woodhead. 1999.
★ (HILLCREST CINEMAS)

Entrapment — High-tech low-credibility caper thriller: a gentleman art thief ("Most people buy art just to show it off. I collect art for me") and a Mata Hari insurance agent assail the International Clearance Bank in Kuala Lumpur. Sean Connery, so obviously old for these hijinks that it must be addressed in the dialogue (his stated age of sixty shaves off nine years), still has tons of charm and presence, while Catherine Zeta-Jones has old-time movie-star looks, and little to back them up. The ending doesn't know when to quit: it gets worse and worse. And the only real point of intrigue is the question of why the epicene crime boss played by Maury Chaykin shares the same name with the fictitious Broadway producer of Ring Lardner's short story, "A Day with Conrad Green." Ving Rhames, Will Patton; directed by Jon Amiel. 1999.

The General's Daughter — Lurid whodunit, adapted from a Nelson DeMille potboiler, about a pulchritudinous Army psychologist who is found on the grounds of fictitious Fort McCallam, Ga., stripped bare, spread-eagled, lashed to four tent stakes, and apparently strangled. She happens also, if the foregoing is not inflammatory enough, to be the daughter of the base commander, who happens to have eyes for the White House. An ad hoc investigative team (John Travolta, Madeleine Stowe), who happen also to be ex-lovers, are given thirty-six hours to crack the case before the FBI moves in, a 24-hour time constraint considering their hourly allowance for acting smug, cute, flip, and flirty with one another, kind of like a Nick and Nora in uniform. (Without, however, the pet dog to provide a sympathetic figure.) Director Simon West faces severe constraints himself in pumping up the flatlooted action — examining evidence, questioning witnesses and suspects, etc. — to the heights of his Con Air, though there is nothing to deflect him from the same overheated style of photography, seemingly putting its subjects under a sunlamp or inside a rotisserie grill. Wherever he "succeeds" with such pumping, it's to the detriment of the movie. James Woods, James Cromwell, Clarence Williams III, Timothy Hutton. 1999.

Instinct — University of Miami psychologist looks into the case of a fellow faculty member, a primatologist who dropped out to live among the gorillas in Africa, becoming a sort of grown-up Mowgli, and who now is returned to the U.S. in chains, lugging a murder rap and important lessons for civilized man. Talky, preachy, predictable, and ultimately schmaltzy, but well acted, with Cuba Gooding, Jr., betraying Anthony Hopkins in unexpected turns and spins and flips. Donald Sutherland, Maura Tierney; directed by Jon Turteltaub. 1999.

Life Is Beautiful — Two movies in one. The mostly charming and inventive first half traces an unhurried courtship by funnyman Roberto Benigni (also the director) of his regular co-star and real-life wife, Nicoletta Braschi. In the second half, picking up the characters' lives several years after the birth of their son, Benigni tries to do something like Chaplin in The Great Dictator, something even more like Jerry Lewis in the unreleased (unreleasable?) The Day the Clown Cried, when the family gets shipped off to a Nazi concentration camp, and the father weaves an elaborate tissue of lies to protect the saucer-eyed tyke from the reality around them. One way or another — for schmaltz, for trivialization, for solipsistic narrowness, for improbability — the second half is in dubious taste. Both halves are radiantly photographed by the masterly Tonino Delli Colli. With Marisa Paredes, Horst Buchholz, Giorgio Cantarini. 1998.
★★ (GASLAMP 15; UA GLASSHOUSE 6)

Limbo — A John Sayles film, not to be confused with (much less to eclipse) the same-named Vietnam-era soup opera about POW wives, directed by Mark Robson. This one starts out with the standard Sayles pitch, strong on human interest, supported by sociological and geographical interest, and delivered with the familiar blend of warmth, liberalism, and narrative naiveté. The characters are credible, most centrally the laconic handyman (alias "Mr. Dark and Moody") in the employ of two prosperous lesbians in sparsest Alaska (alias "America's Last Frontier"), and a JuJy Collins-y saloon singer and single mom to an experimentally self-mutilating teenage girl. The developing relationships, especially that of handyman and singer, are no less credible. But the sharp turn, past the halfway point, into the territory of Deliverance and River Wild, with our central trio hiding out from murderous drug smugglers in the wilderness, loses almost all contact with credibility. Sayles, who tends to get by on goodwill, gambles his entire pile on it on the Lady-or-the-Tiger ending. You can just about see (or imagine) the point of it: withholding a conventional resolution in order to refocus attention on the bonding of the people, the forming of a family unit, the facing of the future together, come what may. But this point, if in fact it's the point, could have been made without a detour into the life-and-death rhetoric of an adventure-thriller. It could have been made, that is to say, more subtly and less bone-crackingly. Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, David Strathairn, Vanessa Martinez, Kris Kristofferson. 1999.

The Love Letter — Addressed to "Dearest," signed by "Yours," and found between the cushions of a bookstore sofa, the type-written billet-doux triggers an older-woman-younger-man affair, and other misunderstandings. The locale is called Lobbly-by-the-Sea, an accurate indicator of the general level of tweeness. Blythe Danner, without any old-age makeup, plays the mother of Kate Capshaw, the protagonist, to whom she would have given birth, by simple arithmetic, when she was ten. Tom Everett Scott, Tom Selleck, Ellen DeGeneres, Julianne Nicholson, Geraldine McEwan, and Gloria Stuart; directed by Peter Ho-Sun Chan. 1999.

The Matrix — Indecipherable cyberfiction postulating that what we accept as reality on the movies is actually a computer-dictated virtual reality a century later. (What is the matrix? "Unfortunately no one can be told what the matrix is. You have to see it for yourself." Unfortunately indeed.) The Wachowski Brothers, billing themselves as if they were trapezists rather than writers and directors, have dished up a chunk of comic-book Kafka, with a superhero savior (name of Neo, anagram of One, as in Chosen One) in place of an antihero victim. There's enough going on to occupy your mind (allusions to Alice in Wonderland and The Wizard of Oz, borrowings from Tim Burton and Terry Gilliam, colorless color, video-game violence, cartoony special effects, a mystical-mythical Wagnerian climax), but not enough to satisfy it. The total effect is not so much a big wow as a big huh. With Keanu Reeves, Laurence Fishburne, Carrie-Anne Moss, Hugo Weaving, Joe Pantoliano. 1999.

A Midsummer Night's Dream — Shakespeare's supernatural sex romp re-set in Tuscany in the age of the bicycle and the Victrola, with all attendant discord and discomfort. (Why would Tuscans have names like Theseus, Hermia, Demetrius, and Lysander? Why, pithier, would they still be talking like that?) It doesn't help that the major roles are split among the clashing tongues of Americans, Englishmen, one Frenchwoman, and no Italians. The discomfort perhaps should lessen once the action moves out of town and into the woods, but it increases anyway from sheer tedium. The rumbustious play-within-the-play comes too late to provide relief. With Kevin Kline, Calista Flockhart, Christian Bale, Anna Friel, Dominic West, David Strathairn, Sophie Marceau, Stanley Tucci, Rupert Everett, and Michelle Pfeiffer; directed by Michael Hoffman. 1999.
● (UA ESCONDIDO 8; UA GLASSHOUSE 6; UA HORTON PLAZA 14)

The Mummy — Gagged-up resurrection of the ancient Egyptian monster, mated here with Indiana Jones, renamed Rick (Y-Connell. (He announces his mission like so: "Rescue the damsel in distress, kill the bad guy, save the world.") So contemptuous of their material are the filmmakers, they felt compelled to spend a zillion dollars on computer-animated special effects and splashy production values. Self-worth comes steep. Director Stephen Sommers showed better sense with similar material in the remake of The Jungle Book. Brendan Fraser, Rachel Weisz, John Hannah. 1999.

Never Been Kissed — The youngest copy editor at the Chicago Sun-Times gets her big break as an undercover reporter on an up-to-date exposé of high school. Problem is, this mousy virgin, needlecrafter, and turtle-owner was a teenage geek, and immediately falls in now with the "wrong crowd" — an extracurricular calculus club called The Denominators. Drew Barrymore has fun with the part, more fun than we're apt to have, and she seems very pushy and phony next to the quiet naturalness of Leelee Sobieski (A Soldier's Daughter Never Cries) as one of the Good Girls. Luckily for Barrymore, unluckily for us, the heroine soon gravitates away from the Good toward the Bad. Even so, it's a better-than-average youth movie, extending an amicable bridge into the adult world, just not very far into it. Cute teacher (Michael Vartan); and cute closing-credits sequence incorporating childhood photos of cast and crew alike. With David Arquette, Molly Shannon, John C. Reilly; directed by Raja Gosnell. 1999.
★ (UA HORTON PLAZA 14)

Notting Hill — A reunion of the star and the writer of Four Weddings and a Funeral, Hugh Grant and Richard Curtis respectively, both very skillful in their differently frothy and frilly ways. But now Julia Roberts crashes the party, in a self-referential role ("It's taken two rather painful operations to get me to look like this.") as Hollywood's Biggest Star By Far, who deigns to take an interest in a humble bookshop proprietor while on a promotional tour in London. The script is burdened, as that of Four Weddings was not, by the requirement of equal time, or at least a fair share of the time, for the female lead. And even though she is short-changed on verbal pearls, she has vast stretches of simply being, or looking, sweet, sincere, vulnerable, needy, wary, wounded, wistful, in addition to beautiful, and of being, or looking, not very good at it. Despite the blizzard of flattery blowing her way (Grant, that deftest of line-readers, is called upon to pay undue tribute to her ability to "deliver a line"), there are continual indications that the movie means to reveal the normal human being, the "girl," behind the movie star. But Roberts, vain, self-protective, pampered as ever, reveals only the movie star behind the movie star. Director Roger Michell, moving up in economic bracket and down in cultural bracket from his late Austen adaptation (the BBC Persuasion), tries to stay in touch with the art house by interrupting his misty-eyed adoration of the stars for some Mike Leigh-type mockery of selected satellites, leaving out, however, the crucial Leigh ingredient of playing no favorites. It does not, in particular, help Roberts to be accepted as an ordinary person when the ordinary people are treated as poor unfortunates. The director, just to say something nice about him, oversees one graceful tracking shot of a stroll down a city block and through three changes of season. 1999.

October Sky — From the first images to the last — the opening series of beautiful blackout shots of a dark, dismal, backward coal-mining community as it absorbs the news of the ascent of Sputnik in the fall of 1957, and the closing clips from charming old home movies of the real people on whom the characters were based — this serves up a flavorful if sugary slice of small-town Americana. A novelty among youth movies in its valuation of brains over brawn and work over play, it tells the true story of the widening horizons of a bright but unmotivated West Virginia high-schooler called Homer Hickam, Jr., who takes to heart the prognostication of his pretty blond teacher ("Things'll never be the same again"), can hardly fathom the idea that a university might tender a scholarship to a science-fair champion and not just to a football star like his big brother, and gets down to work, with the assistance of an ostracized science geek, on a rocket of his own. Jake Gyllenhal makes a highly likable hero, exactly the kind of teenager who could inspire actual parents of teenagers to fantasize about a straight-up swap. And Chris Cooper, one of the most touching faces on the American screen, one of the most beat-up and careworn, has here a rare role that fully utilizes it: the boy's dutiful father and a real man's man (no irony intended), who has breathed coal dust his entire life, regards Wernher von Braun as an unsuitable role model for a youngster, and views this rocket business as a pretty silly diversion before the boy accepts his fate as a coal miner. The early disasters on the launching pad are genuinely funny, the larger setbacks (trouble with the law, sabotage at the science fair) are never too worrisome, and the plentiful pop songs of the period ("Let 'em have outer space," shrugs an average American adolescent, "We've got rock-and-roll!") continually transform the long hard grind into a breezy montage. It might all have amounted to too much niceness if the niceness didn't include a nice sense of pace and emphasis, a nice sense of where the nailheads are and of how large a hammer is called for. A pile driver would never have been the right implement. With Chris Owen, Lyra Dern; directed by Joe Johnston. 1999.
★★ (HAZARD CENTER 7)

The Red Violin

Payback — Brian Helgeland, who came to prominence as co-screenwriter of L.A. Confidential, has chosen for his directorial debut to do a rehash of John Boorman's Point Blank, though it is not so much warmed over as served straight from the freezer, with a thin decolorizing layer of frost on it. The distinctive, if somewhat overrated 1967 version was, among other things, an important prototype of what a film noir might look like in color, and on that score Helgeland's blanket of ice crystals makes a pale substitute. On other scores, also, the neophyte comes up short. One of the more unusual aspects of the Boorman film is that, as the lawless double-crossed hero bulls his way through the swanky offices and penthouses of the corporate crime syndicate in order to recover a chicken-feed debt, he incurs no first-hand, bloodied-hand responsibility for any of the resulting deaths. One way or another, the casualties all do themselves in. And while the audience may have been encouraged to enjoy the humiliation of the bigwigs, the avenger hipself can take no pleasure in it. Reincarnated in the person of Mel Gibson, by contrast, he racks up more kills than he has fingers to keep count, and he is sentimentalized both as a triumphant underdog and as an eternal torch-carrier for an unsullied call girl. More simply, Mel Gibson is no Lee Marvin. For all the creeping routineness, Helgeland's handling of the conventions of the genre is robotically efficient, and the S&M element, though faint-heartedly softened with comedy, is not old-hat. Maria Bello, Gregg Henry, David Paymer, Kris Kristofferson, James Coburn. 1999.
★ (VALLEY DRIVE 9)

The Red Violin — Omnibus film along the lines of Tales of Manhattan or The Yellow Rolls-Royce, only instead of a coat or a car, the linking thread is a 17th-century musical instrument, passing through many hands on its way to a present-day auction house. There is a degree of suspense about who will get it in the end, and at what cost; and there is even a touch of the caper film about it. But the individual episodes, in Italian, German, French, English, Chinese, and again English, are slender to wispy; and the treatment of the wildly romantic premise is standoffishly muted. The image is downright dull. John Corigliano, a minor figure in contemporary classical music, an imperceptible figure in the whole panorama of it, composed the lightweight music; Joshua Bell performs the violin solos. With Samuel L. Jackson, Greta Scacchi, Jason Flemyng, Jean-Luc Bideau, Sylvia Chang, and Colm Feore; directed by François Girard. 1999.
★ (COVE)

Run, Lola, Run — German action-thriller written and directed by Tom Tykwer.
(HILLCREST CINEMAS. FROM 6/25)

Shakespeare In Love — Wouldn't it be fun to think that the Bard suffered from writer's block, that he received a shove from "Kit" Marlowe to get the old plot-ball rolling, that he stole lines from soap-box orators, that he was rewriting his deathless dialogue daily during rehearsals, that one of the actors in the troupe could suggest off the top of his head a better title for the work in progress than Romeo and Ethel, the Pirate's Daughter, and that a barrier-bashing proto-feminist who infiltrates the cast disguised as a man would be just the muse and romance needed in order to complete the current play and to launch forthwith into the next one, Twelfth Night, with its all-important title motif of cross-dressing? Here we have an answer, Sir. It would not. Joseph Fiennes in the title role has approximately one expression (a sullen smolder), or one fewer than Gwyneth Paltrow (eye brows knitted, eyebrows smoldered) and Ben Affleck is a flounder out of water, especially conspicuous on the same shore as such happy ducks as Geoffrey Rush, Colin Firth, Tom Wilkinson, Simon Callow, and Judi Dench. Tom Stoppard had a hand in the script — a second hand after Marc Norman — which enables the long-ago author of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead to extend his high-brow knockabout beyond Shakespeare's characters to their creator himself. Extend it, and lower it. Stu-denty types, teachery types, and stagy types may be glad of a chance to show their erudition (the bloody Jacobean playwright John Webster is here a ghoulish guttersnipe feeding mice to cats for entertainment), but audible laughter would seem an unfitting, a forced, expression of it. Directed by John Madden. 1998.
★ (UA HORTON PLAZA 14)

Star Wars, Episode I: The Phantom Menace — The long-awaited (by some) prequel to the Star Wars trilogy, and such a letdown as to make you feel almost sorry for George Lucas, poor little rich boy. Even moviegoers who have never attended a foreign film in their lives are apt to be aware that Akira Kurosawa's The Hidden Fortress is cited by Lucas as one of the inspirations for the original Star Wars. (In this one, too, we have the female royal in commoner's disguise.) And it is slightly painful to think that any filmmaker who knows enough to mention and admire and emulate the, or a, work of that Japanese master, that most intrepid explorer of screen space, that virtuoso of rhythm and tempo, could have learned so little from the master's example, could have turned out something so flat and inflexible in its staging, so hasty and inept in its action, so ponderous and monotonous in its pace, so slapdash and seat-of-the-pants in its storytelling ("If we can't get the shield generator fixed, we'll be sitting ducks"), so sandy, dusty, drab, and dull in its image. Part of the problem may be that whatever Lucas once knew about directing, he has forgotten in the twenty-two years since he last tried his hand at it. But another, a larger, part of the problem may be that there is some technical reason for a director's hand to be tied behind his back when he depends so heavily on computer animation, when, in other words, what's in front of him on the set is only a fraction of what will eventually fill up the screen. Or if no technical reason, then maybe a mental reason. Maybe the mind-boggling possibilities of computer animation are too hu- e a distraction to leave room in conscious thought for any attention to little matters such as pacing, composition, color. And perhaps the best way to make sense of this movie — as anything other than a money-making machine — is to view it as the farthest point of decadence in the evolution of live action mixed with animation. The primitive "Out-of-the-Inkwell" series would be the seed; Who Framed Roger Rabbit would be the full flower; and the Star Wars series, or rather the first installment of the second Star Wars series, would be the overgrowth. Cluttered, choked, strangled. With Liam Neeson, Ewan McGregor, Natalie Portman, Jake Lloyd. 1999.

Tarzan

The Swindle — Beautifully simple in construction, the fiftieth (or so) film in the forty-year career of Claude Chabrol allots its first fifteen minutes to the smooth operation of a time-tested scam. We are placed in the situation without benefit of rehearsal, but we soon see where it is headed. We follow along. We learn how it's supposed to go: like clockwork. And though their relationship is at first ambiguous, and unsurprising when later clarified, we get to know the partners in crime, a mature vamp (Isabelle Huppert, with a wardrobe of wigs) and a much older man (Michel Serrault, with a bump on his nose), travelling companions in a mobile home on the road between gigs. Then, for most of the rest of the way, we watch a deviation from the perfect form, a wandering solo improvisation by the woman without the input and support of her teammate, a higher-stakes con game that takes our players out of their "league" (five million in Swiss francs in an armored briefcase) and ultimately into the ballpark of an emotionally unstable mobster with a weakness for Italian opera and a catch in his throat when talking of the lives he has snuffed. We don't know where we're going in this second scam (nor, always, do the scammers themselves), and the uncertainty works wonders for such basic ingredients of the genre as suspense and mystery. The two-part narrative structure — first convention, then deviation — amounts to a virtual synopsis, a virtual history, of genre fiction. In addition to a recipe for freshness, Chabrol's direction remains calm and unflashy throughout, letting the course of events speak for itself, and permitting no stylistic jostles or jiggles to spoil the cleanness of the line. 1997.

Tea with Mussolini — Decidedly weak tea (and not so hot, either), with filmmaker Franco Zeffirelli holding forth from the head of the table as a rambling raconteur, remembering the days of his youth among the artsy English ladies of pre-war and mid-war Florence ("I've warmed both hands before the fires of Botticelli and Michelangelo") as well as a couple of brassier American ladies. It soon gets away from personal-interest stuff to do with the development of an artist (young Franco is disguised behind the pseudonym of "Luca"), and gets instead into general-interest stuff on the rise of fascism and the slow uptake of decent people, especially dotty old ladies ("Mussolini is the gentleman who makes the trains run on time"). The drift of the thing is oddly and quite literally depersonalized. To gather together Maggie Smith, Joan Plowright, Judi Dench, Cher, and Lily Tomlin in the same cast perhaps constitutes a feat in itself, but to give them each enough to do would have been one worth talking about. Charlie Lucas, Baird Wallace. 1999.
★ (GASLAMP 15; HAZARD CENTER 7; LA JOLLA VILLAGE; UA ESCONDIDO 8)

The Thirteenth Floor — Respectable piece of science fiction, although coming so close on the heels of The Matrix and eXistenZ, it tends to show up the limits of the virtual-reality topic. The big ideas here, both of which can be found in one or the other of those predecessors, are that what we accept as reality in the present day may only be the virtual reality of some more advanced intelligence in the future (heavy, man), and that we never, ever, can trust the reality of what we see on the screen. The fact that the movie camera can lie is of course a fundamental axiom of the medium, and it has inevitably lost some of its power to stun and to startle in the eighty years since The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. (That artifact of German Expressionism seems perhaps a little less remote when the current filmmaking team features such a heavy concentration of transplanted Germans: director Josef Rusnak, producers Roland and Ute Emmerich, executive producers Michael and Helga Ballhaus, cinematographer Wedigo von Schultzendorff, composer Harald Kloser, not to forget cast member Armin Mueller-Stahl.) Virtual reality is just the latest-model vehicle to carry the message. The Thirteenth Floor, however, shores up its science-fictional interest with some staples of the classical detective story — the murder by person or persons unknown, the purloined letter, the imposter heir — and it sets these down in a virtual-reality arena near the Golden Age of murder mysteries, Los Angeles in 1937. The marriage of genres is a reasonably happy one. Place and period are lovingly re-created, even if one might have some misgivings about the tendency towards rusty monochrome. (One of the virtual-reality masterminds has some misgivings of his own: "Colorization needs a little work.") Craig Bierko, Gretchen Mol, Dennis Haysbert, and Vincent D'Onofrio can do little for any human interest. Only the last-named, in his more maniacal mode, does any real harm. 1999.

To Have and Have Not — The legend is that Howard Hawks wagered William Faulkner that he could make a good film out of Hemingway's worst novel (or some such wager), and this was the chosen project. Hawks lets himself be guided in his task by the tested formula of Casablanca. There's Bogart; there's some dutiful wartime patriotism; and there's a boxed-in, stage-bound look to the re-creation of exotic Mozambique. However, there's also some fresh and spontaneous — albeit adolescent — mischief, melodrama, and prurient interest (Lauren Bacall, straight from the pages of Vogue, shows in her movie debut a sophisticated understanding of the angles and planes of her face, shoulders, hips). And there are some eccentric secondary characters: Dan Seymour's obese, effeminate policeman and Walter Brennan's toothless, slap-happy lunatic (his acid test for anybody he meets is the question, "Was you ever bit by a dead bee?"). Screenplay by Faulkner and Jules Furthman. 1944.

Twice upon a Yesterday — Time-travel fantasy, with the bare minimum of snags and snarls in logic. A struggling London actor (Douglas Henshall), self-described as a "Marlon fucking Brando," sincerely regrets the infidelity and confession thereof — the confession perhaps a bit more than the infidelity — that came between him and his girlfriend of six years, who is now about to marry someone else. "If only I could go back," he muses aloud, a trite enough sentiment. But this expression of it conjures up, out of the fog, a pair of mystical junkmen who conduct the hero to his personal garbage dump of Things You Threw Away, and who send him back from there to a place in between the infidelity and the confession, with full memory of what happened last time. For all his resolve to straighten up and fly right, he is not at that point the most sympathetic of characters, and he becomes if anything even less so in his self-interested efforts to prevent his girlfriend from meeting and getting to know her future fiancé. The cleverness of the movie, slow to reveal itself, and nowhere hinted at in its twinkly Twilight Zone supernaturalism, now starts to assert itself. The girlfriend (Lena Headey) becomes less sympathetic herself, no longer an unaware victim but an active offender in her own right. And then another girl enters the equation, one with qualities the hero is slower to perceive than the viewer. (It's true that she wears glasses, but she is recognizable nevertheless as Penelope Cruz, and the hero perhaps loses a little more sympathy.) Each of the three principals, as well as a couple of lessers emerges as a distinct individual, with his or her own place in the Grand Scheme, and the unseen figure of Fate leaves up as a larger presence than all the others put together, and something resembling wisdom creeps into the picture. The cleverness of the movie, to say it succinctly, is that the element of magic never departs the element of life. With Mark Strong, Charlotte Coleman, and Elizabeth McGovern; written by Rita Russo; directed by Maria Ripoll. 1999.

The Waterboy — Adam Sandler. Poster boy, more like it, for the legions who just can't take movies seriously. In this one — a formula Disney sports story for the legions who just can't understand why Rudy wasn't in the starting lineup for Notre Dame — he goes from being the butt of jokes to being a whoop-ass linebacker, as soon as the filmmakers replace him with a stunt-double. Kathy Bates, Fairuza Balk, Henry Winkler, Jerry Reed; directed by Frank Coraci. 1998.

The Winslow Boy

The Winslow Boy — A well-made play, made, or rather remade, into a well-made movie. Beautifully "read," beautifully dressed and accoutered, beautifully carpentered and upholstered, beautifully photographed. It seems to be the standard critical response to raise an eyebrow of surprise over the incongruity of American dramatist and filmmaker David Mamet settling himself into the G-rated drawing rooms and parliamentary chambers of Edwardian London (King's English Spoken Here), as if Mamet is all about four-letter words and underworld scum. But Mamet, even in such a mercenary assignment as his screenplay for The Edge, first and foremost has always been "about" craftsmanship and construction and high polish. If there is a surprise here, it's not that he is able to refrain from cussing for a couple of hours, it's that he would take up a text written by anybody but himself for one of his own directing projects. That's a first, in his sixth such project. Seeing that he already had directed the screen version of his own Oleanna, it cannot be a surprise that he would choose to adapt a stage play rather than do something original, but it can still be a cause for mild regret. Like the adaptation of Oleanna, which likewise was beautifully "read" and beautifully photographed, The Winslow Boy must be counted as minor Mamet, though it has the bonus interest of pointing up his unexpected affinity for fellow playwright Terence Rattigan (The Browning Versions, Separate Tables, etc.), likewise a craftsman and a polisher. No matter how interesting this affinity might be — and it is interesting primarily to the degree that it was unexpected — few among us will be willing to go all the way with Mamet in his enthusiasm. The original play, based on a factual case, about a boat-rocking nationwide crusade to obtain a fair hearing for a thirteen-year-old lad drummed out of military school on a charge of petty theft, still seems a conventional and a stuffy and a, needless to add, stage piece of work. Mamet is reported to have entertained the idea at first of reviving the play on stage instead of on screen, and in view of his fidelity to the original, that might have been the more sensible course. With Nigel Hawthorne, Rebecca Pidgeon, Jeremy Northam. 1999.

Crustacean Surgeon

The all-you-can-eat concept is wasted on me.

REVIEW
ELEANOR WIDMER

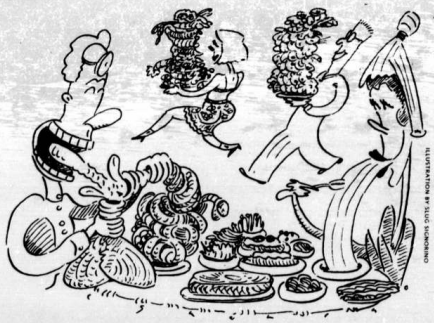

ILLUSTRATION BY DAVID SCHERMAN

For a short period, all-you-can-eat soup and salad bar restaurants were so popular that on weekends people waited in line to get a table. I was fond of the Soup Exchange on Fay Avenue in La Jolla because it was close to my house, appealing in its presentation and cleanliness, and so inexpensive that my young friends could afford it. The muffins were always fresh and warm, and before we left we were served newly baked chocolate chip cookies. But in the blink of an eye, the place that once had been jam-packed was almost deserted. Then it closed.

At present the now passé soup and salad bar has been replaced by the all-you-can-eat seafood bar. A few years ago I was sitting at the Civic Center downtown waiting for the Rosh Hashanah services to begin when a man I did not know pushed through several aisles to reach me. "Try Todai restaurant in Escondido. It's really something," he cried out. I was so startled that it took me a while before I could focus on the religious aspects of the evening.

A few weeks later I was on my way to the Japanese all-you-can-eat buffet, Todai, then located at the North County Fair shopping mall in Escondido. We left my house at 4:00 p.m. because my acquaintances told me that unless we got there early the restaurant, which seated at least 175, would be filled. He, too, was raving about the food and said that he and his wife ate there once every ten days, at the cost of $18.95 each. Most of the tables were taken by students of every stripe and ethnic background, and they filled their plates as if they hadn't eaten for a week. The sushi bar already had such a long line that I retreated from it in a hurry.

The number of items presented at Todai was impressive — at least 8 men and women did nothing but cut raw fish for sushi and sashimi — but the shrimp and snow crab legs were icy and tasteless. Sushi proved to be adequate but neither original nor memorable. Cooked fish fared better but the jostling, the noise, and the wait at each station made it more of an endurance test for me than a pleasure. I would prefer one fish entrée that's beautifully prepared or two or three items of sushi than vast displays where quantity rules over quality. Needless to say I am in the minority because when Todai closed in Escondido and opened at 2828 Camino del Rio South in Mission Valley, it began doing gangbuster business at $20.95 a head weekdays and $21.95 weekends. Children are charged by their height, so if your children are young but tall the price is increased.

I've been to as many seafood buffets as possible from Todai to the Shore at the Sea Lodge in La Jolla, to Lael's downtown, to the Four Seasons in Carlsbad, to the La Costa Spa. The California Bistro at the Four Seasons held the most promise, because the setting is so enchanting and the presentation of food wins high marks. Yet in spite of the beautiful room and the attentive service, the lobsters, which people were piling on their plates as if building a lobster tower, had as much flavor and texture as cotton socks. When I spoke to the chef, his excuse was that the kitchen might have used too much water to boil them.

The current best seafood bar is at Torreyana Grill at the Hilton La Jolla Torrey Pines (formerly the Sheraton), Friday nights only, 6:00 to 10:00 p.m. To assess a first-rate seafood bar you have to determine the ratio between fresh and frozen dishes and their presentation. Without counting the desserts, 21 items are presented at Torreyana Grill. Shrimp, regardless of the restaurant, are always frozen to start with. But when I walked through the buffet, I asked the server which ingredients were purchased fresh. These consisted of seared ahi slices, Alaskan halibut, fried shark, steamed clams, black mussels, snow crab in the corn chowder, scallops in pasta, and risotto dishes. The only frozen seafood in addition to the shrimp was the Dungeness crab legs, and these were steamed rather than placed over ice. When this article appears, Maine lobster will have been added to the menu. Deborah Schneider, the executive chef, described the lobsters. "They're coming in kicking and we will steam them to order." The cost of the seafood bar is $28.95 ($10.95 for children). If you want a one-and-a-quarter-pound fresh Maine lobster, add $10.00. Considering the excellence of the food, the basic seafood bar is a bargain at $28.95, and $10.00 for a lobster is virtually at cost.

My escort was a former surgeon, and I was dazzled to see how he handled the Dungeness crab. He didn't resort to either nutcracker or pick, but with his bare hands, in two or three movements, he cracked open the shells and extracted the sweet flesh. He ate two or three crabs and a whole school of fresh clams and mussels. He tried the shark. He then ate a vast slab of New York cut beef topped with porcini mushrooms.

I ate very small amounts of smoked salmon, romaine and mixed green salad, Dungeness crab, deep-fried crab with saffron mayonnaise (aioli), and half of a tasty seafood enchilada, a specialty that night. I am a sucker for risotto but had to forgo it, though I did enjoy angel hair pasta prepared to my specifications with fresh tomatoes and garlic. Would you believe that I couldn't handle crepes with fresh peaches, cakes, seasonal fruit, and cheeses? The all-you-can-eat concept is wasted on me.

For those of you who have been pining over the loss of the Golden Star restaurant in Hillcrest with its inexpensive Maine lobster, take heart. The same owners, who include Mei Ling, have opened Lucky Star Restaurant at 3893 54th Street (619-229-8228). A one-and-a-quarter-pound fresh Maine lobster that's steamed is $11.95, and if you want it with black bean or ginger sauce it's $12.95. They are still somewhat disorganized, so be sure to phone to find out whether lobsters are on hand that day. A full Mandarin Chinese menu also is available, but the crowds come for the lobsters.

In last week's review the shabu shabu at Tomiko's restaurant (87 Encinitas Boulevard, Encinitas, 760-633-3587) was listed as providing fish, meat, or chicken. In fact, it is the Jin Sang restaurant (7614 Fay Avenue, La Jolla, 619-456-4545) that gives diners these choices and serves the wonderful strawberry ice cream. The shabu shabu at Tomiko's offers beef only. ■

A Table Near the Red Goddess

It makes Lindbergh look like a crop duster's landing strip.

Her hair is hauled shining back into a French bun. Her lips are Paris red, like her fitted jacket. Her dark almond eyes stare straight down at her books.

She is the only person in the entire cafeteria studying.

The rest of the place is a sea of faces and babble. Everybody's talking. Not yelling. Nattering excitedly, like the first day back at school. The only thing is, it's all Spanish. Young, bright, confident kids, and Spanish is the language. This is the new campus cafeteria of the UABC. The Autonomous University of Baja California. To look at, it could be SDSU, the big hall, the food concessions. But just that one little thing, language, and you're, like, in a different reality.

TIN FORK
ED BEDFORD

It's 9:00 a.m. Students mill around, fresh out of class, forming lines in front of various food counters. Juice bars, pizza places, cookie concessions. We're milling around too. Victor and me. Trying to decide what to have for breakfast. "It's like this every day," he says. He's a teacher. "It's different than San Diego State. Nobody sits on the floor or reads their books against the wall like they do there. Actually you hardly see anyone studying in this cafeteria. People come here to eat and to be social. Listen to them. It's never quiet, like in your cafeterias."

Huh. That's food for thought. For some reason it gives me a ping of envy. "But everyone here's so well-dressed. Like to the nines," I say. "Perfect make-up, pressed shirts…These all rich kids, privileged families?"

"No way," says Victor. "This is a state college. These students are from working-class families. Blue collar, where every centavo counts. Dressing like this is just what's cool here. Because coming to UABC is the most important step in their lives."

"But all this talk…?"

"We Mexicans are a social people. We enjoy company. We are…skilled at social interaction."

In other words us Anglos are a grunting, socially unpolished bunch of spoiled brats? Okay, Victor didn't say that, but maybe he has a point. Like right now I'm feeling kind of grungy. Suddenly notice my shirt could do with a press. Got mud on my sneakers.

Victor coughs. "Hungry?"

Fact is, yes. Coming down to have breakfast with my old friend Victor meant getting up at 5:00 a.m. Four hours ago. I'm ravenous.

But what a choice: Giuseppe's Express Pizzas. Panaderia Diego. Mi Juguito. Armando's, Acá Las Tortas ("Here Are the Tortas"). Dulcería Goloso. They line one side of the hall. Hmm.

"Juice first," says Victor. We go to "Mi Juguito" — "My Little Juice," I guess. "Try the combo," says Victor. So I go for the naranja-piña. Orange-pineapple. Then I wish I'd taken Victor's choice: naranja-nopal. Orange-cactus. They're big, and they cost around $1.25 each. We could have sandwiches here. I notice they have a vegetarian "with yellow and white cheese, tomato, alfalfa, and jalapeño." Fifteen pesos. Around $1.50.

But the real breakfasts are next door at Armando's. A line of students tells you that. In the jostle I never quite get to see their selection, even though it's up on a board. I just ask for their desayuno, breakfast. It's scrambled eggs and tomatoes, refried beans, and chilaquiles (a comforting mix of tomato sauce, cut-up tortillas, and cheese). That costs 17 pesos. Around $1.70.

"Take a mollete too," says Victor. "We eat them all the time for breakfast here." Turns out molletes are bolillos — crisp bread rolls — sliced in half and topped with a cheesy, meaty mix and baked. About 40 cents each at Panaderia Diego. I get a coffee (50 cents) and weave my way behind Victor. Turns out he just got himself a bean burrito (60 cents).

We sit down at a table near the red goddess. Beside us, four girls meet, do the double-kiss hello, sit down all kind of excited. Jessica and Patricia, two of the girls, have brought tomato and ham tortas from the red and white Acá las Tortas stall ($1.10). "This is where we come after we finish classes," says Jessica. "We all do business administration. The cafeteria's only been open four months. Before that we had to go out and find a coffee shop."

The girl with the Paris-red lips is still there studying, alone, as I chomp into my mollete. She has a perfect beauty. She must have gotten up at 5 o'clock too, just to get all gussied up. "No no no," says Victor, as I absent-mindedly aim the mollete at my boca. He splashes some red chili sauce over it. "Now try it." G-aah! Mount Vesuvius erupts! Lava flows down my gullet.

I move on to the scrambled eggs and chilaquiles. They calm me down. It's strange. You feel this is the kind of university you see in '50s movies. Kids keen and happy to be preparing for their future. Parents somewhere in the background looking proud.

It all makes you realize, dumb gringo that you are, that things are happening down here. Beyond the campus you can see giant 747s with funny names on their tails parked at TJ's airport. That place is huge. It makes Lindbergh look like a crop duster's landing strip.

Now the beautiful girl in the red jacket closes her books and gathers her pads. We all follow her to the door with our eyes. Can't help it. For a moment, at least in this corner of the cafeteria, there's dead silence. ■

Crush
MATTHEW LICKONA

Andre Tchelistcheff, the man upon whom "the California wine world has silently and unanimously bestowed the title of 'dean,'" according to wine writer Hugh Johnson, died in 1994. A Russian educated in Czechoslovakia and working in an oenological and viticultural station in Paris, he was discovered and hired in 1938 by Georges de Latour, owner of Beaulieu Vineyards in Napa Valley. Latour was seeking to replace his recently retired winemaker, Leon Bonnet. Andre was 37 years old.

By 1939, Andre had already made significant changes to the winery, aging the Cabernets in small oak barrels and then in bottle, getting rid of copper and iron fittings on the equipment, and introducing cold fermentation for white wines. In 1940, Beaulieu released the first George de Latour Private Reserve Cabernet Sauvignon, which became the new standard of quality for California wine. Andre remained with Beaulieu until 1973, then retired to work as a consultant.

Andre's son Dmitri, born in 1930, is now the winemaker for Jarvis, a producer of high-end Cabernet and Chardonnay in Napa. Before Dmitri made it to such an exalted position, he spent some time in Baja California, where he worked as the winemaker for Bodega Santo Tomás in Ensenada.

Having the dean of the industry for a father might be cause for hesitation — that's an awfully big shadow to get out of — so I asked Dmitri why he decided to become a winemaker. "Well, my father was a winemaker," he replied. "Actually, I applied to USC for petroleum engineering, but then I got this girlfriend. I was living in St. Helena, and she was living in Napa.… I thought I better stay closer to home, so I went to Davis. That kind of screwed up my petroleum engineering, but [sex] will do that to you." Dmitri graduated from Davis in 1952, and after a stint in the military — "the Korean War was on" — he got a job with Schramsberg. After a year, he started making wine at Gallo. He worked there until 1962.

Years earlier, at Davis, Dmitri "had a friend…a Mexican guy from Tijuana, that put me in touch with the Santo Tomás people. Since he was a Davis grad also, they asked him if he knew of anybody [who would be interested]. So, they contacted me. It was just kind of an adventure, and there was a lot of [action] down there."

Dmitri started right in as winemaker and immediately began making changes to bring the winery up a notch. "They weren't making any varietals until after I got there. They were making dry red, dry white, blanco dulce, sherry, and port. They had some pretty good varietals [planted], like Barbera. When I got down there, I separated them out and started making varietal wines. I brought in varieties like Chenin Blanc, Tempranillo, Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay. I even had some Pinot Noir down there — it did pretty good.

"I got a lot of cooperation from the owners. We put in stainless steel tanks and stainless equipment. At the time, there was no stainless down there; all the wines carried a lot of metal contamination — copper and iron. They had to be blue-fined, which is pretty rough fining. You put cyanide in them to precipitate all the metal. I was able to eliminate that." Echoes of his father's work at Beaulieu.

His reputation spread north to Southern California. "We had a lot of aficionados, members of Friends of Wine [a now-defunct wine appreciation society] who came down. They were buying our red wines, mostly our Barbera, and cellaring it. Some people still have it. It was a great wine." Dmitri left in 1976, after "a disagreement with the management." He began consulting at wineries and in 1994 was offered the job at Jarvis. "They offered me this deal — half time for full pay — and I accepted it." He is now deep in Napa's heart, but he still keeps his eye on his old winery. "They've made a lot of progress since I've been there. They're making some great wines, using all-new French oak. They're able to get high prices for their wine. Mostly, they're selling in Mexico City."

One of those new, high-priced wines is the winery's Duetto, a Bordeaux-style blend that is the result of a joint effort between Santo Tomás and Wente Vineyards in Livermore, just east of San Francisco. I talked with Antonio Zecchco, Wente's vice president of operations, about the wine's origins. "We have a distribution company in Mexico, and we thought it would strengthen our position in the market if we had a joint-venture wine to offer. We had been in touch with Santo Tomás…and the idea just came up — 'Hey, why don't we put our best lots with your best lots and see what develops?' 'Ninety-eight is our third vintage, and it seems to be doing very well." The lots are crushed and fermented on location — Santo Tomás's in Mexico and Wente's in Livermore. Then, "somewhere in there between Christmas and New Year's, we'll go through our lots and sniff and swirl those we think are the best ones. We'll make some mock blends, [ship our half to Mexico] and assemble the two wines later, typically in the spring, for maturation in barrel."

Label of a joint-venture wine

Antonio thinks the combination has more virtue than mere novelty. "I would say that the [wines] we make here tend to have bigger fruit and more mid-palate. The [wines] from Northern Baja are perhaps a little more tannic. These are generalizations…but we said, 'What if we could combine the structure and tannin of Baja with the big body and roundness of Northern California?'"

The wine is available in some duty-free shops, and Delta airlines serves it in first class on some flights. I bought a bottle of the wine's first vintage — 1996 — for $25 on a recent visit to Ensenada, at the wine shop/art gallery that forms part of the winery's complex on Av. Miramar between 6th and 7th St. It was correct, elegant, and surprisingly soft for a wine so young. The California fruit triumphed over the Baja tannin, but I still enjoyed it. ■

VIVACE Four Seasons Resort Aviara, 7100 Four Seasons Point, Carlsbad, 760-603-6999. The well-prepared food is no more expensive than the offerings in any upscale San Diego restaurant, but it's an experience to dine in such luxurious surroundings. Menus change seasonally. The appetizer bar offers unique selections. For entrees try chicken in clay pot or daily fresh fish. The Four Seasons lounge is a great place to visit and listen to live music. Go see the hotel. It's worth the trip. Open nightly, 6:00 to 10:30 p.m., dinners only. Expensive.

WILD NOTE CAFE 142 South Cedros Avenue, Solana Beach, 619-259-7310. Located adjacent to the Belly Up Tavern, this antiquely decorated room offers excellent salads, pasta, fresh fish, and burgers. The new chef adds luster to the new menu. Loving and inventive service. Open daily. Low to low-moderate.

NORTH INLAND

ATHENS MARKET CAFE 11640 Carmel Mountain Road, between Pacific Theatres and Sportsman Central Mountain Plaza (close to Rancho Bernardo) off I-15, 619-675-2225. Excellent value and tasty product. Open daily. Low.

CANYON GRILL 9823 Carroll Canyon Road, Scripps Ranch, 619-271-4052. You'll be pleasantly surprised by this attractive setting, which includes a glassed-in patio that's open to the sky and a southwestern ambience. The food is delightful. Everyone seems to love the pastas, fresh fish, and "kick-ass ribs" as well as the fish steak platter. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner. Closed Sunday. Low to upper moderate.

FISH HOUSE VERA CRUZ 360 Via Vera Cruz, San Marcos, 760-744-7346. This family-style restaurant serves seafood and fresh fish that changes daily. Simple but honest preparation, good value. Open daily for lunch and dinner (dinner menu is served from opening to closing on Sunday). Low to expensive.

THE FORTUNE COOKIE 16425 Bernardo Center Drive, Rancho Bernardo, 619-451-8958. We are fortunate to have a Chinese restaurant of such quality in North County. The chef, Henry Yang, comes from a five-star restaurant, and his cooking may be characterized as Chinese with French influence. Lunch, Monday through Saturday; dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

MILLE FLEURS 6009 Paseo Delicias, Rancho Santa Fe, 619-756-3085. There's no doubt that in Rancho Santa Fe, this restaurant walks away with the prizes. The à la carte menu, which changes daily, provides exquisite appetizers, soup, and entrées. Five-star seafood dishes and a stunning wine list. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner nightly. Expensive.

ONAMI JAPANESE RESTAURANT 240 East Via Rancho Parkway, Escondido, North County Fair, 760-738-7522. One hundred sixty-foot Japanese seafood buffet, hot Japanese dishes, salads, desserts, all you can eat. Tons of fresh food. Seats 250. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Expensive.

THE QUAIL'S INN 1035 La Bonita Drive, San Marcos, 760-436-2645 or 760-744-3485. It's worth the ride to dine in this charming location on a picture-postcard man-made lake. Invariably crowded and for good reason, the Inn offers fresh American fare (fish, seafood, prime rib, steaks. Dinner entrées include an all-you-can-eat seafood salad bar. The copious champagne Sunday buffet includes the seafood bar. Dine here as early as possible for all meals, but especially for the Sunday brunch. Open: Daily. Lunch, low; dinner, moderate to expensive.

RANCHO VALENCIA 5921 Valencia Circle, Rancho Santa Fe, 619-756-1123. The dining room and surrounding grounds are gorgeous, the meals beautifully prepared. Great place to take a goal to lunch, best bets, fresh fish. All California cuisine dishes have Mediterranean influence. Open daily. Expensive.

SAN DIEGO ARTISAN BAKERS 1551 South Escondido Boulevard, Escondido, 760-740-5963. The grains are ground daily for this wonderful European-style bread. Every bread has dense consistency and an amazing crust. Among the best bets are the baguette, the sourdough with Greek olives, and the country sourdough. Recipes come from France, Italy, Germany. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday. Low.

WINESELLAR AND BRASSERIE 9550 Waples Street #115, 619-450-9557. This is the sister restaurant to Laurel, and the food is a delight to the palate. RESTAURANTS

LA JOLLA

BALI RESTAURANT 7660 Fay Avenue, 619-454-4540. If you've been searching for an Indonesian restaurant, here's the one and only. It offers good soups, salads, chicken kebabs, and beef stew, as well as rijsttafel, which means rice table. It's an Indonesian feast for $18.95 per person. Lovely surroundings. Lunch Tuesday through Sunday. Dinner nightly with Balinese dancing Saturday evening. Moderate.

BERNINI'S 7550 Fay Avenue, 619-454-5013. This cafe has full service and will provide you with breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Lunch and dinner menus are the same and offer four kinds of soup, several salads, including grilled chicken Caesar, and pasta dishes. A variety of desserts is available all day. Open daily to 11:00 p.m. Low.

THE BIRD ROCK CAFE 5656 La Jolla Boulevard, 619-551-4090. Don't miss this small cafe that serves delightful food prepared by the former chef of Jake's Del Mar. Dishes are divided into small, medium, and large plates. Try the free-range chicken, tuna, risotto, crab cakes, or salad. Unpretentious but worth seeking out. Patio available for outdoor dining. Dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

CAFE JAPENGO 8960 University Center Lane, Aventine complex, 619-450-3355. The decor is smashing and the Pacific Rim food — with influences from Japan, China, Hawaii, Thailand, and California — is beautiful to behold. Outstanding appetizers. For entrées, try roasted duck with crispy vegetables or shrimp and scallops with spicy peanut sauce. The sushi bar is one of the city's best. Please make note of the prices — if you get carried away you may be in for a large bill. Open daily. Expensive.

DAILY'S 8915 Towne Centre Drive, Renaissance Towne Centre, 619-453-1112. The restaurant is owned by a doctor who has devised a menu that's low-fat, low-calorie, low-sodium. The dishes look and taste wonderful, and the top price is $9.99. All items available for takeout. Same menu lunch and dinner. Open daily. Low to moderate.

DONOVAN'S STEAK AND CHOP HOUSE 1040 La Jolla Village Drive, La Jolla, 619-450-6666. Very noisy room and distracted service tend to make the experience more stressful than relaxing. Average steaks and chops, though nothing memorable. Popular "in" spot. Closed Sunday. Dinner, Monday through Saturday. Expensive.

HOPS! BISTRO AND BREWERY 4353 La Jolla Village Drive (north of the Broadway in University Towne Centre), 619-587-6677. Hops! serves the best food of any brewery in San Diego. The same menu is served continuously from lunch to closing. Best dishes are spit-roasted chicken and penne with salmon and shrimp. All beers are brewed on the premises. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Moderate.

MAITRE D' 5523 La Jolla Boulevard, 619-456-2111. Two separate dining rooms, an elegant ambiance, and the presence of the owner himself (formerly with the Plaza Hotel in New York) contribute to a fine dining experience with faultless service. The half-lobster appetizer is a house specialty, and the rack of lamb or fresh fish are always outstanding. Excellent place for large parties and fun-size specialties when available. Closed Sunday and Monday. Dinners only, Tuesday through Saturday. Expensive.

PANDA COUNTRY 4150 Regents Park Row #190, University Towne Centre, 619-552-1345. Gorgeous surroundings and stunning presentations carry the day here. The extensive menu does particularly well with its 11 appetizers and its 30 seafood and fish dishes prepared Macdarin or Szechuan style. Scallops and shrimp receive special treatment. Open daily. Low to expensive.

THE PANNIKIN CAFE 7467 Girard Avenue, 619-454-5453. The outdoor seating area is almost always crowded with tea and coffee drinkers who sun themselves, read, or chat. Light meals, including breakfast (steamed eggs, bagels, fruit plates) and sandwiches, soup, salads, as well as beverages and sweets are served. It is a well-known hangout and always crowded. Open daily. Low.

RISTORANTE PASQUALE 8980 University Center Lane, Aventine complex, La Jolla, 619-554-0459. Slick and sophisticated setting but old-fashioned Italian cooking with heavy sauces. Pricey. Open daily. Upper moderate to expensive.

THE SKY ROOM 1132 Prospect Street, La Valencia Hotel, 619-454-0771. The tenth-floor room with its stunning view remains as romantic as ever. Fixed-price four course meals are $75.00. Excellent service. Dinner only, nightly. Expensive.

STAR OF INDIA 1000 Prospect Street, 619-459-3355. The Indian food is good. The best bet is the all-you-can-eat buffet lunch or the Saturday and Sunday champagne brunch. The tandoori chicken and lamb dishes are outstanding, and vegetable specialties are recommended. Somewhat pricey. Open daily, lunch and dinner; brunch Saturday and Sunday. Moderate.

TUTTO MARE RISTORANTE 4363 Executive Drive, 619-597-1188. The new chef performs wonders at this fashionable restaurant which specializes in fish and seafood. Pasta, fowl, and meat are prepared as well. The nightly specials are a bit more costly than menu items but are worth it. A low-fat, low-calorie menu called Cucina Leggera offers 15 items: salads, pastas, pizza. Available at lunch or for takeout. Excellent flavor. Lunch, Monday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.; takeout for Cucina Leggera from 11:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. or later if requested in advance. Open daily. Moderate to expensive.

CLAIREMONT & KEARNY MESA

THE GOOD EGG 7947 Balboa Avenue, Kearny Mesa, 619-565-4244. The menu offers omelets, gourmet pancakes, waffles, and several different kinds of frittatas. Freshly squeezed fruit juices are available, and for lunch there are burgers, salads, and a long list of sandwiches. Good value here. Open approximately 6:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Low.

HIDEYOSHI JAPANESE RESTAURANT Hazard Village, 9340-B Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Kearny Mesa, 619-569-9595. A delightful restaurant tucked away at the far end of a small shopping center. Fine sushi bar, and unusual appetizers. A feast named "Taiso special," for two or more, is worth ordering. Visually and gastronomically a treat. Closed Sunday. Lunch, Monday through Friday; dinner, Monday through Saturday. Low to expensive.

KOREA HOUSE 4620 Convoy Street, Kearny Mesa, 619-560-0080. Korea House offers floor seating or a table if you want to barbecue your own food. The menu offers fine "down home" Korea-i food, such as traditional mandoo (beef) dumplings, gurjang hachkun, or raw crab, and yookhwe, a steak tartare worth risking. Make a meal from enormous appetizers like gul bosam (raw oysters, pork, and cabbage leaves). Open daily. Low to moderate. — Max Nash

NEW SHANGHAI 4681 Convoy Street, Clairemont Mesa, 619-569-4833. New Shanghai is busy, friendly, and draws a mostly Chinese clientele, because their Chinese food isn't "Americanized." Whatever your gastronomic politics, try the generous plateful of dry braised shrimp, the "de-fatted pork shoulder," the hot tripe, and the ingenious red bean pancake dessert. Low to moderate — Max Nash

SORRENTINO'S 6724 Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, Diane Shopping Center, 619-483-1811. Though the main restaurant has closed, Sorrentino's deli continues to offer superb pizzas and excellent pastas. Open daily. Low to moderate.

THAI HOUSE CUISINE 4225 Convoy Street, Kearny Mesa, 619-278-1800. Not to be confused with Thai House in Point Loma, this attractive and well-decorated Thai restaurant serves fine gourmet Thai specialties. Do try the Thai Boat filled with seafood. The appetizer prepared from ground shrimp and chicken is a delight. Closed Sunday. Open Monday through Saturday for lunch and dinner. Low to low moderate.

Costs can mount quickly if you abandon yourself. Open daily. Lunch Tuesday through Friday; dinner nightly. Low to expensive.

THE VENETIAN 3663 Voltaire Street, Loma Portal, 619-223-8197. For bargain hunters who like vast portions and home-style Italian cooking, try this family restaurant. The pizza is marvelous. EAST COUNTY & STATE COLLEGE

ALPINE INN 2995 Alpine Boulevard, Alpine, 619-445-5172. If you're a beef lover, try the Texas burger served on a kaiser roll with steak fries. Stay with beef here. Dark interior with large booths. Very crowded for both brunch and dinner on Sunday. Early bird dinner Monday through Saturday for $4.95. Call for hours. Open daily. Lunch Monday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Brunch Sunday. Low moderate to expensive.

ARIGATO 5575 Baltimore Drive, Suite 110, La Mesa, 619-469-3157. Here's a great bargain Japanese restaurant. Among the best are the combination plates which contain sesame chicken, tempura, and gyoza dumplings. The vegetable and shrimp tempura is outstanding. Closed Sunday. Lunch and dinner Monday through Saturday. Low.

CASA BLANCA 7856 La Mesa Boulevard, La Mesa, 619-466-9375. This contemporary Mexican restaurant with its low-fat saucen serves dishes that are prepared for you individually. Combination plates that include steak offer great value. You'll love the owner, the two fireplaces, the fresh food. Closed Monday. Lunch and dinner, Tuesday through Sunday. Low to low moderate.

CLAIM JUMPER 5500 Grossmont Center Drive (across from Montgomery Ward), La Mesa, 619-469-3927. The portions are so large they elicit gasps (the prime rib served weekends is 26 ounces). The food isn't memorable, just more than any one person can eat. Among the attractions every day are the huge salad bar, barbecued chicken, ribs, and turkey dinners. Open daily; call for hours. Count on wait on weekends. Low to expensive.

LA MESA OCEAN GRILLE AND SEAFOOD MARKET 5465 Lake Murray Boulevard, La Mesa, 619-463-1548. Fish and seafood of good quality served in large white room with huge TV. Food is served fast but it's not fast food. Fine for quick meal or takeout. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low.

THE LIVING ROOM 5900 El Cajon Boulevard, 619-286-8434. This café/coffeehouse, a favorite of university students, is a cottage painted yellow inside. Items featured are scrambled eggs, quiche, salads, and chicken in a cream sauce placed in a crust and served by the slice. Desserts and all other items are prepared on the premises. Open daily, 6:00 a.m. to 2:00 a.m. Branches in La Jolla, at 1063 Prospect Street, 459-1187, and Hillcrest, at 1417 University Avenue, 295-7911. Open daily.

JACK AND GIULIO'S ITALIAN RESTAURANT 2391 San Diego Avenue, Old Town, 619-294-2074. The former owners of Giulio's in Pacific Beach now operate Jack and Giulio's. Best bets are the two-person versions of carne asada and the sensuous, many-layered pastel Azteca. All vegetarian dishes filled with cheese. Very tasty food. Lunch and dinner, Monday through Saturday; Sunday, dinner only. Low to moderate.

VALLEY HOUSE RESTAURANT 10767 Woodside Avenue (Mission Gorge Road becomes Woodside after Magnolia), Santee, 619-562-7878. You'll find your dream "Iowa Porker" here — pork tenderloin that's pounded, placed in batter, deep fried and served on a bun. It's juicy and succulent. On Wednesday and Friday nights, all-you-can-eat fish and chips are $7.99. If you like biscuits and white gravy, this is the place for you. Colonial-style decor, friendly service. Open daily, breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low.

CENTRAL SAN DIEGO

LAO & CHINESE CUISINE 4210 Convoy Street Ave., Logan Heights, 619-263-0914. This restaurant is a simple place, large and spare around formica tables that serves uncomplicated, home-style Lao cuisine. I highly recommend the Larb, a spicy salad with poached minced beef, chicken, or pork and seasoned with lime juice, hot pepper, cilantro, onions, fresh mint, and ground toasted rice. This dish is earthy and wild, spectacular. Other tasty dishes include papaya pog pog salad (papaya, chilis, and tomato), tom yum soup, and phad si-ew noodle dishes. Low. — Max Nash

RED SEA RESTAURANT 4717 University Avenue, East San Diego, 619-285-9722. This Ethiopian restaurant offers a charming bar and authentic Ethiopian cooking. All preparations are served over injera, a sponge-like bread. Chicken fares better here than beef, which tends to be chewy. Chicken wat (stew) with hard-boiled egg and the vegetarian plates are among your best bets. On weekends students congregate here, so it's very lively. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low.

ZIA'S AFGHAN CAFE 4118 30th Street, 619-285-1635. This storefront café with only eight tables serves inexpensive but very authentic Afghan food. Try three-bean soup, stuffed pockets appetizers, banana squash with spicy yogurt sauce. Lunch and dinner, a buffet of basmati rice with six toppings for $6.49. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low.

UPTOWN

BANZAI CANTINA 3667 India Street, 619-298-6388. The menu offers Japanese specialties as well as Mexican dishes. Service is fast, the atmosphere is soothing, and you may dine here at affordable prices. This place is full of surprises. Open daily. Moderate.

BIG CITY BAGELS 1010 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 619-574-7878. The big attraction consists of about nine varieties of light cream cheese: vegetable, sun-dried tomato, strawberry, and cinnamon walnut raisin. Lunch specials available. Open daily.

BOMBAY EXOTIC CUISINE OF INDIA 3975 Fifth Avenue, Hillcrest Cinemas complex, 619-298-3155. Dismiss the elegant food, the lovely setting, the loving service. Owned by the former proprietors of Monsoon. You will find the food subtle and sophisticated. This Indian restaurant is a blessing to our community. All you can eat buffet lunch $6.95 daily. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Low to upper moderate.

EXTRAORDINARY DESSERTS 2929 Fifth Avenue, 619-294-7001. If you've been searching for a place to have dessert after a movie or other cultural event, keep this dessert café in mind. The baker-owner prepares sensuous cakes, tarts, cookies, and all manner of chocolate goodies. Teas and coffees are uniformly good. In the summer, the patio is especially charming. Please note the late hours: Sunday through Thursday 11:00 p.m. and Friday and Saturday to midnight.

FIFTH AND HAWTHORN 515 Hawthorn, 619-544-0940. Excellent, very fresh fish and seafood dinners are to be savored. The price of the entrée includes soup or salad. Best bet is the $39.90 per couple dinner, which consists of four courses plus full bottle of wine. This restaurant is often frequented by actors and writers, which adds cachet to the evening. Open daily. Lunch, Monday through Friday. Dinner nightly. Moderate to expensive.

MANDARIN DYNASTY 1458 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 619-298-8899. A splendid place to order a feast for a large party (give at least four hours' notice). Banquet dishes include casserole soup, scallops in pepper, General Tao's chicken, and shrimp in Chinese sauce. New vegetarian menu with over twenty items. Imitation chicken, beef, pork prepared from tofu. Entrées from the menu may be Americanized and of average competence. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Low.

THE MISSION NORTH PARK AND CITY BAKERY 2801-2805 University Avenue, 619-220-8992. The two winners are breakfasts and the adjoining bakery, especially for its Russian pecan bread and cinnamon rolls. Lunch and dinner offer California food with Asian and Latino influences. Lots of items under $10.00. Open daily. Low to moderate.

OSTERIA MANGIA MANGIA 523 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 619-297-7579. This Hillcrest entry features fine Italian food in a sophisticated, casual atmosphere. Outstanding dishes are fresh sautéed clams, medallions of beef in peppercorn sauce, and halibut. Osteria Mangia Mangia's promising location and inviting space provides brisk business and the possibility of greatness. Question is, will they aspire. Definitely worth finding out for yourself. Moderate. — Max Nash

THE PARKHOUSE EATERY 4574 Park Boulevard, Hillcrest, 619-295-7275. Small house provides charming setting for dining. Eclectic menu is prepared with average competence. You can make a meal from list of appetizers. Open daily breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Low to moderate.

WHOLE FOODS MARKET 711 University Avenue, Hillcrest, 619-294-2800. For vegetarians on the go, Whole Foods' prepared food section will feed you better, and faster, than any vegetarian restaurant in town. Outstanding selections include green chilli and cheese polenta; Emerald Mushrooms salad or Rapid Dragon greens, both with a sweet surprise of raspberry jam; and, especially, their farafa salad, like American stuffing, but it's couscous studded with almonds, fat raisins, thin strips of scrambled egg, and bits of carrot and bell pepper. Whole Foods' vegetarian meals will tempt any meat-eater with their delicious originality. La Jolla branch at 8825 Villa La Jolla Drive, 619-642-6700. Low to moderate. — Max Nash

DOWNTOWN

BELLA LUNA 748 Fifth Avenue, Gaslamp Quarter, 619-239-3222. The new chef brings expertise in Italian regional cooking. When available, try shrimp salad, crepe stuffed with salmon, and risotto dishes. All breads baked on premises. Best bets are grilled half chicken or daily fresh fish. Low to expensive.

BLUE POINT COASTAL CUISINE 565 Fifth Avenue (at Market), 619-233-6623. Very classy atmosphere and menu — mostly fish and seafood — to match. You can eat appetizers at the bar, but best bets are nightly fish entrées or steak and crab cakes served with lots of organic vegetables. A welcome addition to downtown. Dinner only, from 5:00 p.m. Expensive.

CROCE'S RESTAURANT AND JAZZ BAR 802 Fifth Avenue, 619-233-4355. If you enjoy premises with doors open to the street and nightly jazz in the adjoining room, try Croce's. The chef prepares excellent appetizers, pastas, salads, and entrées. Menus change seasonally. Outdoor as well as indoor seating. Nightly jazz. Dinner only. Moderate to expensive.

DE MEDICI 815 Fifth Avenue, downtown, 619-702-7228. Eighteen new fish and seafood dishes have been added to the menu. The seafood chef does excellent work, making this Italian restaurant one of the best fish houses in the city. Open dinners only. Moderate to expensive.

EL FARO MARISCOS 2349 Imperial Avenue, downtown, 619-231-1388. Tasty low-cost fish and seafood served in immaculate surroundings. Daily lunch specials served to 4:00 p.m. are best bets at $5.95. Try shrimp cocktail, lobster and shrimp combinations, whole fried fish. Open daily 10:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. (Friday and Saturday to 10:00 p.m.). Low to moderate.

FISH MARKET 750 North Harbor Drive, San Diego, downtown, 619-232-3474. The Fish Market's sushi bar is one of the best, and least known, in town. Despite its lack of popularity, it's tough to get a seat here. The place is small. But persevere and you can enjoy perfectly fresh, clean-tasting raw seafood, like yellowtail sashimi or highly reccomended oysters. This sushi bar is a place for sushi purists. Moderate. — Max Nash

KARL STRAUSS' OLD COLUMBIA BREWERY AND GRILL 1157 Columbia Street (between Ash C Streets), 619-234-2739. The star attractions here are the ales and beers brewed on the premises. Up to a dozen beers may be available. Food includes burgers, pastas, soup and salad, fish and chips, grilled sausage. During weekends the noise can be shattering, but it's fun. Lunch and dinner daily. Low to low moderate. Branch at 9675 Scranton Road, Sorrento Valley, 587-2739. Call for hours.

KIYO'S JAPANESE RESTAURANT 331 F Street (between Fifth and Sixth Avenues), 619-238-1726. Lovely, warm, personal service, wholesome fresh food, and low prices mean this delightful spot in bustling downtown. Lunch is especially good for its low cost dishes. You have a fairly wide choice of nicely prepared hot dinner entrées. Closed Sunday. Lunch Monday through Friday, dinner Monday through Saturday. Low to moderate.

LE FONTAINBLEAU Westgate Hotel, 1055 Second Avenue, Downtown, 619-238-1818. Executive chef René Herbeck offers French and Continental specialties in an evolving menu. Best bets wild salmon, beef tenderloin, rack of lamb, seared scallops and ravioli with wild mushrooms for appetizers. Dinners only. Closed Sunday night. LA GRAN TAPA 611 B Street, 619-234-8272. Here is a good spot for a light meal, especially before or after a cultural event. Tapas, Spanish appetizers, are prepared hot or cold, and the seafood, such as shrimp in sherry sauce and fresh octopus, is always fine. Try tortilla española (cold potato and egg "pie") and paella. Lively, casual atmosphere. Open Monday through Saturday. Low to expensive. — Max Nash

LA STRADA 702 Fifth Avenue (at Fifth and G), 619-239-3400. The setting is lovely, but the Northern Italian food preparation may be uneven. Stay with pasta dishes and low priced items. Open daily for lunch and dinner, continuous service. Late hours weekends. Moderate to expensive.

MORTON'S OF CHICAGO, THE STEAKHOUSE 285 J Street, Harbor Club, 619-696-1369. This stylish steak house offers a clubbish atmosphere, elegant appointments, and staggering portions. All vegetables are à la carte, and porterhouse (up to 48 ounces) is the signature steak. Very noisy, very expensive. Open nightly, dinners only. Expensive.

TAKA 555 Fifth Avenue, 619-338-0555. This restaurant is a knockout. Gorgeous food and beautiful setting. A full sushi bar is presided over by Fuji (formerly at Cafe Japengo). Entrées, which combine Asian and Continental elements, can be ordered in half portions. Don't miss linguine and seafood, filet mignon, salmon sauté. Highly satisfying food at prices you can afford. Open nightly for dinner. Low to expensive.

VICINO MARE 1702 India Street, 619-702-6181. This small, pleasantly decorated fish-and-seafood house serves food that's good though not remarkable. Share higher cost dishes. Open daily. Moderate to expensive.

SOUTH BAY & CORONADO

THE OLD BONITA STORE 4014 Bonita Road, Bonita, 619-479-3537. The menu is strongly influenced by Baja Californian/Mexican cooking. The signature dish is the bucket of Baja-style lobster for two. TIJUANA

(The prefix for all Tijuana numbers is 011-52-66. From the United States use the prefix 011-52-66 when calling Tijuana; when calling in Tijuana use only the restaurant's six-digit number.)

CIEN AÑOS 1407 José María Velazco, 34-72-62. Surely one of the best and most elegant restaurants in Tijuana. Gourmet food preparation includes superb entrées, salads, chicken, fish, seafood, steaks. Menus printed in Spanish but waiters will translate. Not to be missed. Take Zona Rio freeway to Paseo de los Héroes. At statue of President Lincoln, turn left. Drive one street. Turn right. LA ESCONDIDA Santa Monica #1 in Fraccionamiento Las Palmas, 81-44-58. "The Hidden One," located in a converted mansion, boasts two gardens and patio dining, and is especially beautiful at night. The roasted baby goat and roasted quail, and the Chateaubriand (for two) are all worthwhile. Very civilized experience, complete with piano player on Fridays and Saturdays. Take Revolución until it bends to the left to become Agua Caliente. Proceed on Agua Caliente past the racetrack, approximately one-half mile. Turn right at Las Palmas. Two short blocks up, turn left at the "Pescadería Pitiva" sign. The entryway to La Escondida is straight ahead. Open daily, 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 a.m. Moderate

LA ESPADANA 10813 Avenida Sanchez Taboada, Zona Rio, 34-14-88 or 34-14-89. Beautifully prepared meals that include appetizer, soup or salad, and entree are available in this structure whose name means bell tower and whose exterior resembles a mission. Best bets here are filet steak on a skewer (brocheta de filete), baby back ribs (costillar de puerco), shrimp and mushrooms in butter sauce (camarones con champiñones), and leg of lamb (pierna de borrego). The portions are mammoth, and the breakfast is excellent. Superb service, delightful atmosphere. Menus are printed in Spanish and English. Some English spoken. Open daily. Moderate.

OFF THE CUFF by Ernie Grimm

What roles did your parents play?

Prudy Delacruz
Network Services
South Bay

Well, we were a traditional Filipino family. The good wife, the father who is the head of the family. What the father goes and does, it's not questioned by the men. Even though the daily pass her off, she goes with it, though my mom did give him hell every once in a while. Dad was the one I feared. He had the belt and the slippers. It's a Filipino thing. You always have slippers so they make convenient paddles. Mom was pretty tough too. You could expect a little more compassion from Mom, but she was still tough. She'd get that broom out and...look out.

Linda de Iberri
Contract Administrator
Normal Heights

My parents were typical '50s parents. My father was the provider and the disciplinarian, although he never had to use anything but his voice, and he was sexist. My mother stayed at home, she entertained, she took care of the house and cooked the gourmet meals. My father was the honorable man. He was the role model, the stay-in-line, be-a-good-citizen type. He was the type of man you looked up to. He was intelligent and adventuresome, and he took my brother and me around the world, and we were never bad because we wanted to please him. We were good kids. I haven't a clue about how my parents relationship worked. My mother died when I was 21 or something like that, and I don't feel like I ever really knew her. They had an unusual marriage for those times because he was ten years younger than she was. If it tells you anything, I have a big fear of younger men.

Betty Jo McNeece

Well, my mother was an alcoholic and she taught me, by example, what not to do. I spent a lot of my life deciding I didn't want to be like her. So she was a good example in that regard. My father I used to call the "white knight" because I thought he was the good guy and my mom was the bad guy. But I found out as an adult that he wasn't that good a guy because he must have known what was going on.

Emilia Viquez

Well, my dad died when I was 18, but he was actually divorced from my mother, who raised me. We lived in different states, and he really didn't play any role. My stepfather didn't really play a role except the "white knight" because I thought he was the good guy and my mom was the bad guy. But I found out as an adult that he wasn't that good a guy because he must have known what was going on.

I would say both parents played a role. In other words, neither of them dominated the other in terms of my discipline. One parent, my father, was the provider and my mother was in the home. It was a normal Ozzie and Harriet situation. Things were equal among them. Neither one was the final say, both were. If my dad said no it was no, and if my mom said no it was no. There was never any appeal to a higher authority. Mom was around most of the time, whereas Dad was working so I was a little closer to Mom. She was the immediate source of comfort, guidance, etc. Because Dad worked, our relationship was a little more distant. They were very different people. My mom was more down to earth, and my father was more emotional and artistic. Mom was very security-oriented, where my father had an adventuresome spirit about him. I don't see myself as more like one or the other. I see myself as a little bit like both.

Picture Story

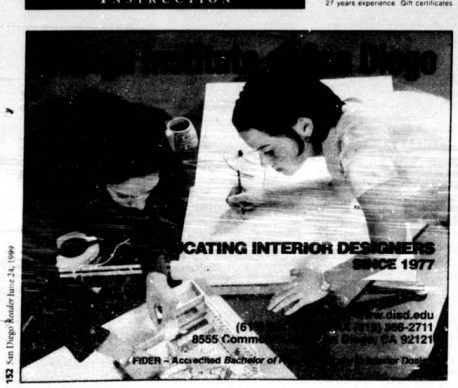

Photograph from the San Diego Historical Society

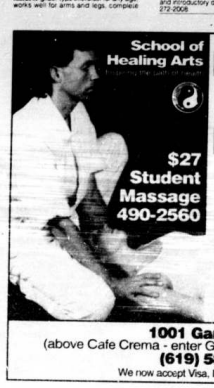

A monkey grooms a young sailor in Balboa Park, early 1920s. Was the monkey doing his job? I couldn't confirm this supposition, but he could've been. In 1922 the Naval Training Center opened its doors. A lot of strangers began living together in tight quarters. Lice could have been a problem. Who's better than a monkey at finding lice?

- Use of a 24-hour voice mailbox service
- Placement on the Roommate Hotline

Pay with Visa, MasterCard, Discover, check or cash. The cost is $16. No matter which payment option you choose, you must first call (619) 235-2415 to place your ad.

Write your 25-word Roommate ad on the following worksheet and be ready to dictate it when requested. You will have one minute of recording time. Begin with the neighborhood, then describe the property and list the rent. After dictating 25 words for your printed ad, continue to further describe your available roommate situation. When you are finished recording, press 2.

Your print ad may not describe you or the person you are seeking.
