Today is the 15th anniversary of the wedding of Susan Golding and Richard Silberman.

The ultimate San Diego power couple, Silberman the Democrat, then 53, wed Republican Golding, then 38, at a ceremony in Uptown's Temple Beth Israel on July 22, 1984. "She arrived at the temple in a red Jaguar," according to the story in the next day's Union. "Silberman, who drove up in a maroon Lamborghini Spada, wore a dark suit and brought video equipment to tape the event. The two were wed under a chuppah, a traditional Jewish gable-like structure. Joining them under the chuppah were her two children, his three children, her parents and his father. For the wedding, the dark-haired Golding wore a light pink dress, pink stockings, pink shoes and a garland of flowers in her hair."

Hooked on Art

In minutes, Aguirre's assistants will stick him with big meat hooks.

Aguirre is a local artist known for his unique approach to art. His latest creation involves using meat hooks to attach various objects to his body, creating a unique and provocative performance piece. This event is part of the City Art Festival, and Aguirre is excited to share his latest work with the public.

Tickets are available at the festival box office, and all proceeds will go to local charities. Don't miss this exciting opportunity to witness an artist at the top of his game!
Songs Injurious To Morality
Lisa Minelli's and Joel Grey's high-voltage hysteria is no match for Lotte Lenya or Well and Brecht.

Y
The prospect of the musical would have been enough to send a Boltzmannian into a paroxysm of derisive laughter. However, the recent revival of Bertolt Brecht's "Threepenny Opera" at the Young Vic Theatre in London, under the direction of Peter Hall, has not only failed to evoke any semblance of the original's theatrical impact, but also managed to render the entire proceedings a mockumentary of Brecht's own work.

The result is a disjointed, chaotic spectacle, with the addition of a modern-day twist. The actors, who are all dressed in the style of the 1920s, are accompanied by a live orchestra, but the overall effect is one of dissonance and disarray. The performances are uneven, with some actors delivering their lines with conviction, while others seem to be reading from a script. The set design is also a disappointment, with a series of poorly executed projections that add little to the overall atmosphere.

The script, by Oscar Hammerstein II, is a thinly disguised retelling of the Faust story, with the addition of a modern-day twist. The characters are all portrayed as caricatures, with the exception of the Faust-like figure of Mephisto, who is played by a particularly hammy actor. The plot is also disjointed, with no clear sense of direction or purpose.

Overall, the "Threepenny Opera" revival is a disappointment, and a testament to the power of the original work. It is a shame that such a talented cast and crew could not have brought the same energy and enthusiasm to the production that made the original so memorable. The result is a series of missteps that only serve to diminish the impact of Brecht's masterpiece.

Lisa Minelli's and Joel Grey's high-voltage hysteria is no match for Lotte Lenya or Well and Brecht.
It's the perfect
Y2K solution.

Winston Straight up.

1999: A Sex Odyssey

The actors could hardly have turned themselves any further inside-out if they were performing for Ingmar Bergman.

I t is not hard to believe that these two, the sex and the actor, major directors had once made films which the critics still had suggested be once viewed by them — and which today seems altogether too much their own. Yet there is a very real difference between the two. When Bergman was making his so-called “melodramas,” he was making films about sex and society, about love and death, about the human condition. The sexual acts in his films were never meant to be sexual, they were meant to be a part of the story, a part of the drama. When the actors are performing for Bergman, they are performing for the audience, not for themselves. Their sex is not their own, it is the sex of the characters they are playing. When the actors are performing for Ingmar Bergman, they are performing for the world, not for the audience. Their sex is not their own, it is the sex of the characters they are playing. Their sex is not their own, it is the sex of the characters they are playing. Their sex is not their own, it is the sex of the characters they are playing. Their sex is not their own, it is the sex of the characters they are playing.

The "everyman" cop, Francis "Blackie" Blacker, 1943, the year he retired.

Shown here at the intersection of Broadway and Fifth Avenue (where he directed traffic for seven years) Blacker never allowed an injury to occur there and "never scratched a finger" himself, according to the Times. "Probably no day passed...that scores of persons did not wave a friendly 'Hi, Blackie'...Each Christmas dozens of San Diegoans showered him with gifts."

Blacker joined the SDPD in 1923. He worked the 1935 expo in Balboa Park, was based in Ocean Beach for a time, and drove the old patol wagon before the days of modern cars, and later drove a squad car. He reportedly filled all his posts as a policeman "except being a detective." He died in 1949 and was cremated (no funeral, at his request).
